1239. Manager's Partnership.—The law relating to trading families is akin to the general law of corporations. But while the former is subject to the personal law, the latter is subject to the memorandum and the articles of associations. In their dealings with an outsider, their relation is mainly contractual, only varied to the extent that the outsider is aware that he is dealing with a person acting under his delegated authority, and as such, he must inquire into his authority and be satisfied that his act is intra vires. As the outsider has no contractual relation with the junior coparceners, they cannot

Nls. (1)—(2).

(1) Sanyasi v. Krishnadhan, 49 C. 560 P.C.; (Dayabhag case), applied to Mitakshara cases in Tammireddi v. Gangi Reddi, 45 M. 281; Mahabir Prasad v. Amla Prasad, 46 A. 364 (consent presumed if family maintained out of the profits); Vithol v. Shivappa, 47 B. 637; Inspector Singh v. Kharak Singh, 50 A. 776; Jagat Narain v. Mathuradas, 50 A. 969; Biswanath Singh v. Kayastha Trading Corporation, 8 Pat. 450; c.f. Ramkrishna v. Ratan Chand, 53 A. 190 P.C., (non-committal as to the Mitakshara law).

(2) Sokhandha v. Sokhandha, 28 M. 344; Gangayya v. Venkataramiah, 41 M. 454.

(3) S. 5, Partnership Act (IX of 1932); Pichappa v. Chokalingam, (1934) P.C. 192 (195); Sokhandha v. Sokhandha, 28 M. 344; Ramnathan v. Yegappa, 32 I.C. (M.) 427; Gangayya v. Venkataramiah, 41 M. 454 (456); Vadilal v. Shah Khushal, 27 B. 157.

(4) S. 5, Partnership Act (IX of 1932); Ramlal v. Lakmichand, 1 B.H.C.R. (App.) 51.

(5) Ib., Ss. 35, 42 (c), Partnership Act (IX of 1932).

(6) Ib., Ss. 35, 45.

sue him for the dissolution of the partnership or call for an account. Nor can the outsider sue them on the basis of that relationship.

1240. The general principle stated in this section is the net result of numerous decisions given ad hoc. For example, it is now settled that a joint family, as such, cannot enter into a partnership with an outsider since its members fluctuate from time to time adding and decreasing its strength with each successive birth and death of members in the family. Such a fluctuating body cannot be designated a "person" with whom any partnership is possible within the meaning of S. 4 of the Partnership Act.[1] Where, therefore, the manager enters into a partnership with an outsider, his relation with his other coparceners is governed by the joint family law, but so far as the outside partner is concerned, he alone is entitled to the rights as he would be subject to the liabilities of a partner. It is true that if he professes to act on behalf of the family, he is entitled to pledge its credit and so long as there is no conflict between the general law and the Hindu Law, the rights and obligations flowing from each can be enforced; but on a conflict arising, the general law prevails, since business would become impossible if, in the course of day to day business men had to inquire into the credentials beyond a certain point of every person they had to deal with.

1241. The position of the junior members of a joint family, vis a vis the manager, is described to be no higher than of sub-partners,[2] which means that they are not entitled to any of the rights, nor are they subject to any of the disabilities as flow from the general law of partnership. But their position is at the most akin to, but not quite that of sub-partners, since a sub-partnership is a partnership within a partnership and the junior members cannot enforce their rights as sub-partners since their relationship is still subject to Hindu Law, which, as before observed, treats such partnerships as one heritable item of the joint property. As such, the coparceners are not liable to pay the debts of the firm by reason of their participation in the profits thereof.[3] But being members of a joint family, they cannot demand partition or separate account of the partnership, which they would have been entitled to demand, if they had been mere sub-partners and nothing more.[4] The fact is that Hindu Law regards a family business as one item of joint property, and there cannot be partition or accounting of a single item without a general partition and a general accounting of the whole.[5] On the other hand, the creditor of the partnership, being bound only by the provisions of the general law, is entitled to proceed against the assets of the joint family for the recovery of his debts, though he need not implead all its members as parties to his suit. In any case, if he does implead them, their liability is necessarily limited to the extent of their interest in the joint family, whatever might be the extent of the manager's liability to the creditor of the firm and to the other partner.[6]

Cl. (3).

(1) Act IX of 1932 (S. 4, S. 239 of Contract Act 1872); Sokhandha v. Sokhandha, 28 M. 344; Ramnathan v. Yeggappa, 32 I.C. (M.) 427, distinguishing Joopooday v. Pulavarti, 36 M. 185 (192) P.C.; Kharidar v. Dayakishan, 43 A. 116, contra Maharaj Kishen v. Hargobind, 27 I.C. (L.) 69; Narain Das v. Ram Ram, 31 I.C. (L.) 45 dissenting from in supra.

(2) Gangayya v. Venkatramiah, 41 M. 454 (456).

(3) Cox v. Hickman, 8 H.L.C. 268.

(4) Bray v. Fromont, 6 M. 5; Ex parte Dodgson, Mont and M. Ar. 446. Lindley, Partnership (9th Ed.), pp. 71, 72, 564.

(5) Gangayya v. Venkataramiah, 41 M. 454 (457); Ramlal v. Lakmichand, 1 B. H.C.R. (App.) 51.

(6) S. 144, Post.

1242. That the partnership between the manager and the outsider is merely contractual and subject to the general law of partnership[1] carries with it the two corollaries stated in clauses (4) and (5) of the section.

Cls. (4), (5).

141. (1) Where the manager enters into partnership with an outsider, the question whether he had entered into the partnership in his individual right or on behalf of the joint family is a question of fact dependent upon the acts and conduct of the manager and the other members, the use of the family funds or credit, or their participation in the profits and losses, and management of the business and other circumstances relevant to the decision of the question.[2]

Family interest matter of evidence.

(2) Save as above, there is no presumption that a business started or carried on by a member of a joint family is a joint family business.

1243. Proof of family partnership.—Since all members of a joint family are free to trade on their own account, whether singly or jointly with others, it follows that the manager is equally entitled to do the same, and the question whether his partnership with an outsider is in his individual capacity or on behalf of the joint family must depend not only upon his intention, but upon the contribution the family assets or credit have made to the firm. The question is in each case one of fact to be decided on consideration of all relevant facts taken together.[3] Amongst these the sharing of profits is a strong prima facie evidence of partnership[4] which is greatly strengthened by sharing in the lossess, though it is not necessary to constitute a partnership, since it is merely consequential.[5]

The subject is one of general law to which reference is invited.

142. (1) An ancestral business, continued or resumed by the manager will be presumed to be an ancestral joint family business, but the manager may show that he had continued or resumed the business as his own.[6]

No Presumption of Jointness.

(2) There is no presumption that a business started or carried on by members of a joint family is a joint family business; much less where they start or carry it on in partnership with an outsider.[7]

(3) Notwithstanding anything in Hindu Law to the contrary, any business started or carried on and any acquisition of property made by a member of a joint family, even though its manager, shall not be treated as joint property, merely by reason of—

(a) his learning having been, in whole or in part, imparted to him by any member, living or deceased, of his family; or with the aid of the joint funds of his family, or with the aid of the funds of any member thereof, or

---

(1) Act IX of 1932.
(2) S. 6, Partnership Act (IX of 1932); Abdul Majid Khan v. Saraswati Bai, (1934) P.C. 4.
(3) S. 6, Partnership Act (IX of 1932).
(4) S. 4, Partnership Act (IX of 1932); Cox v. Hickman, 8 H.L.C. 268, followed in Mollou v. Court of Wards, L. R. 3 P.C. 419.
(5) Ib.; Raghunandhan v. Hormasji, 51 B. 342.
(6) Ramkrishna v. Ramchand, 53 A. 190 P.C.; Damodaram v. Bansilal, 51 M. 711.
(7) Ss. 4, 5, 14, Partnership Act (IX of 1932); Abdul Majid Khan v. Saraswati Bai, (1934) P.C. 4; Sanyasi v. Krishnadhan, 49 C. 560 (567, 568) P.C.; Gangayya v. Venkataramiah, 41 M. 454; Vadilal v. Shah Khushal, 27 B. 157, contra Grey v. Walker, 40 C. 523 (529).

(b) himself or his family having, while he was acquiring his learning, been maintained or supported, wholly or in part, by the joint funds of his family, or by the funds of any member thereof.[1]

1244. Presumptions.—After some conflict due to the general presumption of jointness both in status and property, the cases have come round to the view, favoured by the Privy Council, that the presumption of jointness cannot extend to a business started or carried on by a member of the joint family.[2] Such a presumption, even if otherwise possible, would have exposed the joint family to risks which would have cut at the very root of its jointness and the authority of its manager. The Hindu Gains of Learning Act[3] was intended to strengthen this principle, and the Partnership Act[4] has made it clear that a contract and not mere status is necessary to create a partnership. Where a coparcener starts a new business, the presumption is obviously in favour of its being his own concern. Even where such business is started by two or more coparceners, it does not become impressed with the attribute of jointness within the meaning of Hindu Law. (S. 114 §§ 1005-1012). Where a coparcener starts a new business, the mere fact that the firm name included his brother's name as well does not suffice to show that the business was jointly owned by the two brothers. Especially when there is other evidence to show that their accounts were separate;[5] nor does the fact that the two brothers live together and have acquired property by a joint sale deed, unless it is also proved that they had thrown their acquisitions into a joint stock so as to constitute a joint family;[6] or that there was a nucleus of ancestral property;[7] or the blending of the two properties which cannot be presumed from the mere fact that one member had made regular remittances to meet the expenses of the family.[8] (This subject has already been exhaustively dealt with before. See S. 114, §§ 1005-1012.

143. Conflict of laws. In a conflict of rights and obligations arising under the law of the joint family and the general law, the general law shall prevail.[9]

144. Liability of coparcener for family business debts. (1) A debt incurred and an alienation of coparcenary property made by the manager of an ancestral joint family business in the ordinary course of that business is binding on a coparcener to the extent of the coparcener's interest in the coparcenary property.[10]

(1) S. 3, Hindu Gains of Learning Act (XXX of 1930); Pichappa v. Chockalingam, (1934) P.C. 192; Nanilal v. Nutbehari, 38 C.W.N. 861; Krishna v. Gopaldas, (1934) O. 475.

(2) Annamalai v. Subramanian, (1929) P.C. 1; Asutosh v. Tarapada, (1934) C. 308 (317).

(3) Cf. S. 3, Act XXX of 1930.

(4) Cf. Ss. 4, 5, 14, Act IX of 1932.

(5) Bansidhar v. Lalta Prasad, (1934) A. 543 (544), contra Kalu Singh v. Ram Lal, (1935) 36 P.L.R. 492 (joint names of father and son).

(6) Gaurishankar v. Gopaldas, (1934) A. 701.

(7) Nanilal v. Nutbehari, 38 C.W.N. 861.

(8) Ashutosh v. Tarapada, (1934) C. 308 (317).

(9) S. 5, Partnership Act (IX of 1932).

(10) Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal, 8 L. 597 (603, 604) P.C.; Kesarsingh v. Santansingh, 17 L. 824; Ramlal v. Lakmichand, 1 B.H.C.R. (App.) 51; Sumatbhai v. Someshvar, 5 B. 38; Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72 (minor coparceners equally liable); Morrison v. Verachoyle, 6 C.W.N. 429 (458); Bishambhar Nath v. Sheo Narain, 29 A. 166: Ramnath v. Chiranji Lal, 57 A. 605 F.B.; Sheo Pershad v. Saheb Lal, 20 C. 453 (de facto manager possesses the same powers): Bishen Singh v. Kidar Nath, 2 L. 159.

(2) A debt incurred and an alienation of coparcenary property made by the manager of a joint family business, which is not ancestral, in the ordinary cource of that business, is binding on an adult coparcener to the extent of the coparcener's interest in the coparcenary property, where the business has been undertaken or carried on with the express or implied consent of the coparcener.[1]

(3) Where any liability is incurred by the manager of a joint family business in the ordinary course of that business, the creditor or the alienee is not bound to inquire whether the liability is incurred for legal necessity or for the benefit of the family.[2]

Explanation.—In this section "an ancestral joint family business" means, in respect of any coparcener, a joint family business, an interest in which accrued to the coparcener by survivorship.[3]

1245. Analogous Law.—This section must be treated as explanatory of section 134, to which the ensuing commentary is merely supplementary. It is a well-known principle of equity that he who receives the benefit must also bear the burden. And under Hindu Law, the heir is expressly made liable for the debts of his predecessor[4] as declared in the following texts.[5]

1246. This section deals with the liability of coparceners in a business which is ancestral, and in that which, though a joint family business, is not ancestral. In the one case, the liability of all coparceners, whether adult or minors, is unqualified and limited only to the extent of their interest in the business. In this respect their liability is identical with that of the shareholders of a limited company. Where, however, the business is non-ancestral, the liability of the coparceners depends upon their express or implied consent, the rule being that while the manager is entitled to carry on an ancestral trade, he is not entitled to embark upon the hazards of a new one, unless he is duly authorised in that behalf by the coparceners whose credit he may have to hypothecate for its success.[6] But this is only as between the members of the coparcenary and those dealing with it with notice. Strangers dealing with it are subject to the protection of clause (3).[7]

---

(1) Sanyasicharan v. Krishnadhan, 49 C. 560 (567, 568) P.C.; Ramlal v. Lakhmichand, 1 B.H.C.R. (App.) 51; Sakhrabhai v. Maganlal, 26 B. 206; Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72 (86); Johurra v. Sree Gopal, 1 C. 470 (475); Bemola Dossee v. Mohun Dossee, 5 C. 792; Mahabir v. Ambika Prasad, 46 A. 364; Biswanath v. Kayasth Trading Co., 8 Pat. 450 (456, 457); Baba Din v. Bansraj, 27 I.C. (O.) 567.

(2) Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal, 8 L. 597 (603, 604) P.C.; Ramlal v. Lakhmichand, 1 B.H.C.R. (App.) 51 (71, 72); Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72 (85), followed in Guruswami v. Gopalasami, 42 M. 629 (631), dissenting from contra in Nagendra v. Amarchandra, 7 C.W.N. 725; Ganpat Rai v. Munnilal, 34 A. 135, now overruled by the first-cited case.

(3) Tammireddi v. Gangi Reddi, 45 M. 281.

(4) Karimuddin v. Gobind, 31 A. 497 (506) P.C.

(5) Narad, I-17; 33 S.B.E. 46, 47; Vishnu, VI-29; Yad. II-51 (Mandlik), p. 206, cited in Gour's Hindu Code (3rd. Ed.) at p. 779 § 1559.

(6) Tamireddi v. Gangi Reddi, 45 M. 281; Morrison v. Verachoyle, 6 C.W.N. 429 (458); Ramlal v. Lakhmichand, 1 B. H.C.R. (App.) 51; Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72.

(7) Ramlal v. Lakhmichand, 1 B. H. C. R. (App.) 51; Niamat Rai v. Din

1247. As survivorship is an integral incident of coparcenership, such business is here designated ancestral, though it may not answer the test prescribed in section 113.

1248. It has already been stated that a joint family trading partnership differs from partnerships in that it is not dissolved by the death of a member, that new members come in and go out not by agreement with the remaining members but by the operation of law, and those who go out of the partnership are not entitled to call for an account of back profits and losses but receive a share of the assets then available and are subject to the liability then existing.[1]

1249. The rights and liabilities of coparceners in a trading business are not those of partners of a firm or shareholders in a company, and they cannot be determined by exclusive reference to the Partnership Act, since the assets of a joint family may as much comprise a trading business as any other property.[2] In that case, the management of the two may not be in the same hands, since the manager by right may not possess successfully the special knowledge required to carry on a trade. The manager of such business possesses certain powers which are not those of the manager of a purely business firm, and his rights and liabilities cannot therefore, be determined by exclusive reference to the Partnership Act.[3] The correlative rights and liabilities of such manager depend upon whether the business is an ancient family business or one which is merely joint without being ancient; while the extent of the coparceners liability depends not only upon those facts, but also upon the fact whether the coparcener held liable is a major or minor.

1250. It will be observed that the first two clauses deal with two classes of trade—ancient and a new one. An ancestral joint family business is defined in the Explanation as a business in which the interest has accrued by survivorship. As such, an ancient trade is indistinguishable from any other ancestral property defined in section 113.

Clause (1).

It must be remembered that an ancestral trade does not lose its character by a change in the class of business. A firm dealing in country goods may alter its business to English piecegoods,[4] and indeed, if the business is large with several branches and managers, it may be that the goods handled by the firm may vary from time to time and in its several branches according to the exigency of the trade or the enterprise of the manager, but the firm would still retain its character of ancient family business, so long as it is not converted into an entirely new business.[5] It is possible that strangers are admitted into partnership, in which case the interest of the family would retain its character, though as between the family and the stranger, it would be treated as an ordinary trading partnership subject to the general law.

Dayal, 8 L. 597 (603, 604) P.C.; Ramnath v. Chiranji Lal, 57 A. 605 F.B.; Kesarsingh v. Santansingh, 17 L. 824.

(1) Samalbhai v. Someshvar, 5 B. 38 (40).

(2) S. 138.

(3) Samalbhai v. Someshvar, 5 B. 38.

(4) Rajagopala v. Raman, (1927) M. W.N. 879.

(5) Krishnadhan v. Sanyasi, 23 C.W. N. 500: 51 I.C. 597, overruled on a different point in Sanyasi v. Krishnadhan, 49 C. 560 P.C.

1251. In any case, so far as the members of the family are concerened, their rights and liabilities are subject to Hindu Law. And as regards their liability for debts contracted and alienations made by the manager the rule is stated in clause (1), viz., that all coparceners, whether major or minor,[1] become subject to the payment of such debts, their liability being, however, limited to the extent of their interest in the coparcenary property—not necessarily their interest in the firm but their interest in the ancestral joint property, of which the firm may be only an item.[2]

It is said that in the case of a minor the share liable for the debt is his share in the firm and not in the joint family property[3] but where the firm is only an item of the family property, the two are indistinguishable so long as its credit depends upon the credit of the family. Father's insolvency does not vest the son's interest, or deprive the son of his right of pre-emption under the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1913.[4]

1252. It is, of course, possible that the debt was borrowed on the credit of the business in which case it would be recoverable from the business. If the business was in partnership with a stranger, it would be subject to contribution. It is said that even in the case of ancestral business, if there be a minor member, the only share liable for the debt is his share in the firm and not in the joint property. It was so held on the analogy of S. 247 of the Contract Act, which while permitting the admission of a minor partner limits his liability to his share in the property of the firm.[5] But as remarked by the Madras court: "The position of a member of a joint family is not changed by the fact of the manager carrying on trade... In the case of a minor in whose behalf the borrowing is made by a person who, under the Hindu Law, is competent to pledge the credit of the family, the additional obligation which that law imposes is not rendered inefficacious by the fact that the debt was incurred in the course of the trade."[6] The fact is that the manager in the one case could only contract debts for necessity, while here his power is wider, but it is so because, otherwise, the carry-

(1) Ram Lal v. Lakshmichand, 1 B. H.C.R. (App.) 51; Samalbhai v. Someshvar, 5 B. 38; Thammanina v. Akarapu, 38 M.L.J. 55: 55 I.C. 64; Ratan Lal v. Jaideo, (1924) N. 123.

(2) Joharmal v. Chetram, 39 B. 715; Ram Lal v. Lakshmichand, 1 B.H.C.R. (App.) 51 (71, 72); Samalbhai v. Someshvar, 5 B. 38; Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72; Dhulipalla v. Nadipalli, 43 I.C. (M.) 76, following Ramachandra v. Kondayya, 24 M. 555, and distinguishing Krishnamurthi v. Bank of Burmah, 35 M. 692; Muthaya v. Tinnevelly S.I. Bank, 37 I.C. (M.) 230; Palaniappa v. Official Assignee, 36 I.C. (M.) 787; Chala Ram v. Kishen Chand, (1923) L. 462; Wadhawa Shah v. Rattan Chand, 30 I.C. (L.) 813; contra in Joy Kisto v. Nittyanand, 3 C. 738; Sanyasi v. Asutosh, 42 C. 225 (233); Khetra v. Aswini Kumar, 22 C.W.N. 488: 45 I.C. 667; Anath v. Bipin, 19 I.C. (C.) 6 O.A.; O. A. M. K. Chetty v. K. O. Chetty, 31 I.C. (R.) 271; Jwala Pershad v. Bhuda Ram, 10 Pat. 503.

(3) Ram Lal v. Lakshmichand, 1 B. H.C.R. (App.), 51 (71, 72); Thammanna v. Akarapu, 38 M.L.J. 55; Muthaya v. Tinnevelly S. I. Bank, 37 I.C. (M.) 230; Palaniappa v. Official Assignee, 36 I.C. (M.) 787; contra in O. A. M. K. Chetty v. K. P. Chetty, 31 I.C. (R.) 271; Khetra v. Aswini Kumar, 22 C.W.N. 488: 45 I.C. 667; Anath v. Bipin, 19 I.C. (C.) 6; Joy Kisto v. Nittyanund, 3 C. 738; Samalbhai v. Someshwar, 5 B. 38; Sakrabhai, v. Magan Lal, 26 B. 206; but in most of these cases the creditor did not press for the seizure of the joint property other than the joint business.

(4) Sat Narain v. Behari Lal, 6 L. 1 P.C.

(5) Joy Kisto v. Nittyanund, 3 C. 738 (740, 741); Sanyasi v. Asutosh, 42 C. 225 (233) (case of insolvency); Narain Das v. Ralli Brothers, (1915) P.R. 61: 31 I.C. 45 (point conceded).

(6) Dhulipalla v. Nadipalli, 43 I.C. (M.) 76, following Ramachandra v. Kondayya, 24 M. 555, distinguishing Krishnamurthi v. Bank of Burma, 35 M. 692.

ing on of the trade might become impossible, but it can have no effect upon the liability of the minor. It was so held by Sausse, C. J., in the leading case,[1] which has been invariably followed.

1253. This liability is the minimum, though it might be enlarged, by the adult coparceners, if they become or are liable to be treated as contracting parties by reason of their previous consent or subsequent ratification, and in the case of minor coparceners, if the contract has been ratified by them on attaining majority.[2]

The manager may be any member of the family, a male or a female,[3] though he must necessarily be an adult otherwise he is incapable of entering into a contract. And it is possible to have several managers who would, in the absence of notice of the limitations on their power, be deemed to wield equal authority, by whose acts the coparcenary would be equally bound.[4] A de facto manager has the same authority as a de jure manager. At any rate, strangers dealing with the one are protected if they have dealt with him on the assumption that he is the authorised manager.[5]

In fact, the authority of the manager is not so material as the fact that the debt was borrowed for the ordinary course of the business. As Pontifix, J., observed: "All persons carrying on a family business, in the profits of which all the members of the family would participate, must have authority to pledge the joint family property and credit for the ordinary purposes of the business, and, therefore, debts honestly incurred in carrying on such business must override the right of all members of the joint family in property acquired with funds derived from the joint business."[6]

1254. Since all coparceners are prima facie bound by the act of the manager it follows that a decree against him is sufficient to bind their interest though they may not have been impleaded in the suit.[7]

Where an ancestral business devolves on a sole-minor coparcener, or all the coparceners are minors, it must be managed by their guardian, who has no power to bind his wards by a personal covenant. In that case the creditors have no right of direct recourse against the minor, but as the guardian will be entitled to indemnity for liabilities properly incurred out of the assets of such business, creditors of the business can proceed directly against such assets for liabilities properly incurred by the guardian. A guardian may appoint an agent to carry on the business, but he cannot invest him with powers larger than are reasonably proper for carrying on the business; and where, as a consequence of giving such powers, the guardian has become involved in liability for the fraud of the agent, the guardian has no right of indemnity against the assets of the minor nor are the cretitors entitled to claim such right through the guardian.[8]

---

(1) Ram Lal v. Lakshmichand, 1 B. H.C.R. (App.) 51 (71, 72).

(2) S. 169; Bishen Singh v. Kidar Nath, 2 L. 159.

(3) Sakrabhai v. Magan Lal, 26 B. 206 (220) F.B.; S. I. Export Co., v. Subbier, 28 M.L.J. 696: 29 I.C. 957.

(4) Bissessur Lall v. Luchmessur, 5 C.L.R. 477 P.C.: 6 I.A. 233; Lutchmanen v. Siva Prokass, 26 C. 349 (355).

(5) Sheo Pershad v. Saheb Lal, 20 C. 453.

(6) Johurra Bibi v. Sreegopal, 1 C. 470, followed in Sheo Pershad v. Saheb Lal, 20 C. 453 (461).

(7) Kishen Prasad v. Har Narain, 33 A. 272 P.C.; Lalji v. Keshowji, 37 B. 340; Daulat Ram v. Mehrchand, 15 C. 70 P.C.; Bissessur Lall v. Luchmessur, 5 C. L.R. 477 P.C., 6 I.A. 233; Sheo Pershad v. Saheb Lal, 20 C. 453 (463).

(8) Sanka Krishnamurthi v. Bank of Burma, 35 M. 692 (696, 697), following Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72; Sanyasicharan v. Asutosh, 42 C. 225 (233).

1255. "In the ordinary course."—It is scarcely necessary to add that a creditor is entitled to the protection of the section only in respect of a debt incurred and an alienation made by the manager of an ancestral business in the ordinary course of that business. These words imply that the transaction must have been entered into in good faith and without negligence and under circumstances which do not afford a reasonable ground for believing that the manager was not entitled to enter into it. The same precautions are enjoined on one who pays a negotiable instrument in due course.[1] A transaction takes place in the ordinary course of business, where hundis are issued and paid or advances made against a consignment of goods for the business, while the sale of land obtained by foreclosure by a money-lending business would be such a transaction. The creditor has of course to give prima facie evidence to establish the ordinary course. He is not called upon to prove anything more. The fact that a sum borrowed for a business was misappropriated by the manager is nothing to him. The fact that the loan was secured by a misrepresentation does not affect the creditor, so long as he acts in good faith and without notice (§ 1324). Where, therefore, the manager had misappropriated a sum of money which he employed in his trade, both he and all his coparceners were held jointly and severally liable to make good the sum misappropriated, with interest.[2]

1256. Though, as stated in the clause, a minor member is not liable for the debt incurred or the alienation made by the manager of a new business, it must not be forgotten that this is the rule to which exceptions are furnished by the general Hindu Law, which makes the interest of a minor liable if the debt or the alienation is proved to be for legal necessity or benefit. In other words, the special rule here stated is still subject to the more general rule in which the family business may be regarded as the family property and the manager's act judged by the test applicable to a general manager.[3] In any case, in such a case the minor could not be permitted to repudiate the debt and retain the benefit.

1257. New Trade.—But the case of a non-ancestral business is different. As observed by the Privy Council: "The distinction between an ancestral business and one started like the present after the death of the ancestor as a source of partnership relations is patent. In the one case these relations result by operation of law from a succession on the death of an ancestor to an established business. In the other, they rest ultimately in contractual arrangement between the parties."[4] It is not competent to the karta, be he even the father,[5] to impose on a minor coparcener the risks and liabilities of a new business started by himself: consequently, a creditor of the new business cannot make the minor's share of the family properties or the ancestral business liable for the debts of the new business.[6] A minor whose interest is not liable for debts contracted

Clause (2).

(1) S. 10, Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881).

(2) Jai Narain v. Prag Narain, 85 I. C. 2: 29 C.W.N. 755: (1925) P.C. 11.

(3) Chalam Ram v. Kishen Chand, (1923) L. 462; Ram Dhan v. Ramji Das, 50 I.C. (L.) 215; Dhulipallah v. Nandipalli, 49 I.C. (M.) 76.

(4) Sanyasi Charan v. Krishnadhan, 49 C. 560 (567, 568) P.C. reversing O.A. Krishnadhan v. Sanyasi Charan, 23 C.W.N. 500: 51 I.C. 537; Chhoti Ram v. Narayan Das, 11 B. 605 (608).

(5) Official Assignee v. Palaniappa, 41 M. 824; contra, where the coparcener is a son; Annabhat v. Shivappa, 52 B. 376; and See Ss. 159-160, post.

(6) Krishnadhan v. Sanyasi, 23 C.W.N. 500: 51 I.C. 597.

in a newly started business is equally not entitled to a share of its profits. He is not a member of it, though he may become one on his attaining majority. But till then the business is owned by those who started it. But if they financed it out of the joint family funds then it is only fair that the minor should receive his share of the profits and if the business fails he will suffer to the extent of his share in the family estate.[1] In other words, a business, though not ancient may still become joint by its continuance for a length of time and the enjoyment of its profits by the family.[2]

The members of a joint family cannot profit from a concern started by the father without taking the risk incidental to that business. Where, therefore, the father had acquired a coal mine which he worked and which, on his death, his sons continued to do so, and while so doing, the mine subsided, the plaintiff, as owner of the surface, sued them for damages. It was proved that the subsidence was due to the negligence of the father in not providing proper support, though the subsidence occurred seven years after his death. The sons pleaded that they were not liable for their father's negligence, but the court decreed the claim on the ground that they had continued to work the mine, and were, therefore, liable to the plaintiff, though not personally, because the subsidence had occurred during their working it. The court further decreed by way of damages the cost of the building erected by the plaintiff, as it was not proved that their erection had contributed to the subsidence.[3]

1258. The manager of a joint Hindu family has no power to commence a new trade or business without the concurrence of the adult coparceners living at the time; and such trade or business is not binding on them in the absence of evidence of their acquiescence.[4]

Where an ancient business is converted into an entirely new business, the conversion, must, it is apprehended, be with the like consent.[5]

1259. It is an ordinary rule that he who deals with a limited owner must inquire into the circumstances which entitle him to pledge the credit which he professes to do: in dealings with the manager of a Hindu family such is the rule. There is no presumption that a debt contracted by a manager is contracted for legal necessity or benefit so as to be binding on the other coparceners.[6] But the case of a trade manager is different: the test to be applied here is rather the apparent authority of the manager than the actual necessity of the family.[7] The creditor or alienee is not bound to inquire into the necessity of the loan or alienation, nor is he liable to see that the transaction he enters into is in the interest

Clause (3).

---

(1) Lutchmanen v. Siva Prokasa, 26 C. 349 (353, 354); Bishambher v. Fateh Lal, 29 A. 176; Padamraj v. Gopikisan, 56 I.C. (N.) 129.

(2) Ram Nath v. Chiranji Lal, 57 A. 605, F.B.

(3) Ambalal v. Bihar Hosiery Mills, 16 Pat. 545.

(4) Tammireddi v. Gangi Reddi, 45 M. 281 (290, 291); Abdur Rahman v. Hussain, 37 M.L.J. 316.

(5) Krishnadhan v. Sanyasi, 23 C.W. N. 500: 51 I.C. 597.

(6) S. 130, Expl. 2.

(7) Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal, 8 L. 597 (603, 604) P.C.; Kesar Singh v. Santon Singh, 17 L. 824; Sadasiva v. Hajee Faker, 27 C.W.N. 677: (1922) P.C. 397; Raghunathjee v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72; Baba Din v. Hansraj, 18 O.C. 84: 27 I.C. 567; Ghanshyam Das v. Hardei, 2 O.L.J. 562: 32 I.C. 380; Ayyasawmi v. Guruswami, 32 I.C. (M.) 691; contra in Ganput Rai v. Munni Lal, 34 A. 135; Guruswami v. Gopalasami, 42 M. 629; Nagendra v. Amarchandra, 7 C.W.N. 725, must be deemed overruled by the first-cited case.

of the business. Such an inquiry if insisted upon would make the carrying on of many trades impossible. It is entirely at the discretion of the manager to see whether he would raise the funds necessary for his business by mortgage or sale and it is for him to decide whether sale would not be preferable to a mortgage at a high rate of interest. It was equally a question for the manager whether it would be better to raise more money or to close down the business; and the lender or purchaser cannot go into a question of this kind, and it is rarely that he would be in a position to form a sound opinion.[1] Where a person passes a promissory note in his own name, it is on the creditor to show that it was given qua manager of a joint family on which it was liable.[2]

1260. It has already been seen that this explanation accords with the general law stated in section 113. One test whether a business is ancestral or otherwise is whether it is subject to the law of survivorship. But before that test can be applied that given in section 113 should suffice. But it may happen that the business inherited was inconsiderable, but it was enlarged by the ability or enterprise of its manager, who may have invested in it his self-acquired property. In that case it would have to be considered whether it does not fall under any of the clauses of the next section for in that event the business may be only joint without being ancestral to which the second clause would apply. If the manager starts a new business, singly or in partnership with another, whether coparcener or a stranger, there is no presumption that all members become partners, therein. The fact that they do so must be proved like any other fact.[3] On the other hand, given an ancestral business, it does not cease to be so by reason of the fact that it was carried on by the manager singly, or in partnership with a stranger.[4]

Explanation.

It is a rule common to an ancient partnership governed by Hindu Law,[5] as one governed by the Partnership Act that no coparcener can sell his share, so as to introduce a stranger into the firm without the consent of his coparceners, though the purchaser at the execution sale acquires the interest sold, with the right to have the partnership accounts taken in order to ascertain and realize its value.[6] In this respect this rule supersedes that stated in section 126 (4).

---

(1) Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal, 8 L. 597 (603, 604) P.C.

(2) Abdul Majid v. Saraswati, (1934) P.C. 4.

(3) Pichppa v. Chockalingam, (1934) P.C. 192. Hemraj v. Topen, 86 I.C. 950: (1925) S. 300; Hamandas v. Mayadas, 87 I.C. 905: (1925) S. 310; Sheonarain v. Babulal, 85 I.C. 775: (1925) N. 268.

(4) Ram Lal v. Lakshmichand, 1 B. H.C.R. (App.) 51 (71), cited in Sakrabhai v. Magnilal, 26 B. 206 (211) F.B.

(5) Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Prasad, 5 C. 148 P.C.; Deen Dyal v. Jugdeep Narain, 3 C. 198 (209) P.C.; Shiva Nath v. Tulsi Ram, 48 A. 1 (3).

(6) Deen Dayal v. Jugdeep Narain, 3 C. 198 (209) P.C.

CHAPTER X.

DEBTS AND ALIENATIONS.

1261. Topical Introduction.—In a previous chapter, the right of the manager and of the father to contract debts and make alienations of joint property has been already set out. And in discussing the right of coparcener against the manager, his right to challenge the former's invalid transfers has also been alluded to. But the rights of the family against strangers and vice versa still remain. They are of sufficient importance to deserve a separate chapter. As will be presently seen, the equity in favour of the alienee is entirely a modern graft upon the archaic Hindu Law where it finds no place. The protection of the creditor or the alienee who advances a loan or receives a transfer for valuable consideration after due enquiry without notice, is an equitable rule of the civil law which has found a place in the jurisprudence of all nations. It has equally become embedded as an integral rule of Hindu Law. In some other respects also Hindu Law has been overshadowed by the statute law, the combined effect of which will be found set out in the ensuing sections, some of which deal with the burden of proof, a subject which occupies no inconspicuous a place in Hindu Law, where in the conflict of evidence, onus is often the determining factor. It is not, however, a subject which is easy of generalization. And it has created a considerable conflict of views, as noticed by the Privy Council, who said: "The conflict of authorities cited to the Board is a conflict which occurs, not merely between the courts of one district in India and another, but also between decisions pronounced in Calcutta itself, in Allahabad itself, and in Madras itself."[1] This was clearly apparent to the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court who had to consider the question of onus.[2] The ensuing sections enunciate a few leading principles on the subject, and they are practically all upon which the reports are more or less agreed. On other points they teem with conflicting cases, which have been relegated to the notes.

145. Unless there is anything repugnant in the subject of context—

"Debt" and other terms defined.

(a) "Debt" includes a liability arising out of contract, express or implied, or a breach of civil duty for which a suit would lie;[3]

(b) "Creditor" means any person in respect of whom a debt is incurred;[4]

(c) The terms "father" and "son," wherever they occur, are used in the sense defined in section 112;

---

(1) Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 39 A. 437 (448) P.C.

(2) Chandra Deo v. Mata Prasad, 31 A. 176 F.B.

(3) Chhakauri v. Ganga, 39 C. 862; Hanmant v. Ganesh, 43 B. 612; Chandrika Ram v. Narain Prasad, 46 A. 617.

(4) See 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), §§ 985, 986.

(d) A person is said to have "notice" of a fact when he actually knows that fact or when, but for wilful abstention from inquiry or search, which he ought to have made or gross negligence, he would have known it, or when information of the fact is given to or obtained by his agent in the circumstances mentioned in section 229 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872;[1]

(e) A person is said to "believe in good faith" when, after using reasonable care to ascertain the existence or non-existence of any circumstances, he believes in the existence or non-existence of such circumstances.[2]

1262. Analogous Law.—The term debt (rin) is used in Hindu Law in its primary sense as denoting a loan, that is, a liquidated money obligation arising out of contract and recoverable by suit. But the texts show that the contract might be express or implied: "What has been spent for the household by a pupil, apprentice, slave woman, menial, or agent, must be paid by the head of the household."[3] But modern law classes as debt other obligations ex contractu, though they are not strictly within the comprehension of the archaic law. It is not proposed to discuss these in detail in this work which is confined to Hindu Law, especially as they have been already so discussed elsewhere by the present writer.[4] It may, however, be added that the term no longer retains its primitive import and has begun to be used in the sense in which it is understood in the secular law, as comprising not only a debt properly so called, but also those pecuniary obligations which arise out of a breach of civil duty independent of a contract[5] even if their amount was not ascertained at the time of the obligee's death.[6] This is in accordance with the English Law where "although no action for a tort could be revived or commenced against the representative of the person who committed it; yet the case was different where the act was not a mere tort but was a breach of a quasi-contract, where the claim was founded on breach of a fiduciary relation or failure to perform a duty."[7]

Clauses (a), (b).

1263. Debt.—In its large sense, a debt means a sum of money due from one person to another. Under old English Law the term was used in a narrower sense as implying a monetary obligation resulting from a contract, express or implied. The term is here used in a wider sense as embracing not only a contractual debt, but a legal obligation resulting from a matter of fact independent of contract, e.g., a tort or a delict. In this sense, a sum of money for which a claim is compromised amounts to a debt;[8] and so a sum of money claimable by way of compensation or damages would fall

Clause (a).

---

(1) Cf. S. 3, Transfer of Property Act; S. 3, Trusts Act.
(2) 1 Gour's Law of Transfer, (6th Ed.), § 902.
(3) Narad Sut. 1; 33 S.B.E. 41 et seq.
(4) 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), §§ 104-107.
(5) Chhakauri v. Ganga Prasad, 39 C. 862 (871), following Pareman v. Bhattu, 24 C. 672 (676); Kuneda v. Asutosh, 17 C.W.N. 5.
(6) Venkatalakshmamma v. Mohan, 44 M. 214; Garuda v. Nerella, 35 M.L.J. 661.
(7) Per Cotton, C.J., in Coucha v. Coucha, 40 Ch. D. 543, followed in Venkatalakshmamma v. Mohan, 44 M. 214.
(8) Ram Kuber v. Ram Dasi, 35 A. 428.

into that category;[1] while all money decrees against a defendant convert him into a judgment-debtor, against whom execution might be had as for the recovery of a debt; while if the obligee gives a security for the discharge of his obligation, his liability takes the course provided in the terms of the security. An optional liability, such as is created by a pre-emption decree is not a debt.[2] A fine is not a debt but a penalty for which the son is not liable.[3] Such was held to be the amount of the deficiency due from the father who had failed to pay the price of the property which had to be resold for a smaller price.[4] A liability incurred by the father while his estate was under the Court of Wards and so incompetent to contract does not create a legal obligation amounting to a debt enforceable against the son.[5]

1264. A debt creates a present liability and must be distinguished from a mere agreement creating a future liability which is not a debt within the meaning of law. So where a creditor promised the father a sum of money to pay off a mortgage, which was otherwise discharged, after which the money was received and squandered by the father, the Privy Council held the promise to fall short of a debt and the subsequent payment of the money did not make it an antecedent debt.[6] Similarly, where the father had agreed to pay in perpetuity the sum of Rs. 10-8-0 to plaintiffs for use of a temple, the court held the contract not binding on the son; first, because it did not amount to a debt, and secondly, taken as a contract, the son is not bound by every contract of the father, certainly not such a contract which created a perpetual liability to pay.[7] So their Lordships held the son not bound by his father's contract to sell his property if it was imprudent and oppressive.[8] The distinction between a debt and a contract is, therefore, important, since while the son is bound by his father's debts, however imprudent, he is not bound by such agreement.

The terms "antecedent debt" and "an illegal and immoral debt" form the subject of the next chapter where they are fully explained.

1265. Creditor. The term creditor is here used in a generic sense, as including both secured and unsecured creditors by whatever name called. A Zur-e-Peshgi lessee, though nominally a lessee is in reality a creditor, and so is of course, the mortgagee, while a purchaser of property subject to resale may conceivably fall into the same class.[9]

Clause (b).

1266. The terms defined here call for no notice. Clause (c) is merely explanatory of S. 112, while Clause (d) is taken from S. 3 of the Trusts Act and the Transfer of Property Act, while the last clause is common to the general law and will be found explained in the writer's work on Transfer.[10]

Clauses (c), (d), (e).

---

(1) Chhakauri v. Ganga, 39 C. 862; Venugopala v. Ramanadhan, 37 M. 458.

(2) Chatarbhuj v. Govind Ram, 45 A. 407; contra in Nathu v. Kundan Lal, 33 A. 242, dissented from.

(3) Nhanee v. Hureeram, 1 Borr. 90 (101).

(4) Ratan Lal v. Birjbhukan, 61 I.C. (A.) 774.

(5) Chaubey v. Bindeshri, 20 A.L.J. 24: (1922) A. 215.

(6) Jawahir Singh v. Udai Parkash, 48 A. 152 P.C.

(7) Balkrishna v. Janardana, 6 Bom. L.R. 642.

(8) Ramcharan v. Bhagwan Das, 48 A. 443 P.C.

(9) 1 Gour's Law of Transfer, (6th Ed.), §§ 985-988.

(10) 1 Gour's Law of Transfer, (6th Ed.), §§ 112-902.

146. (1) Save as hereinafter provided, the debts of a person must be paid by himself, and on his death, out of his separate property in whosesoever hands it might be, whether of the executor, administrator or the heir, except that alienated for value.[1]

Liability for personal debt.

(2) No heir, executor, or administrator is bound to pay a debt of the deceased which, by reason of its illegality, immorality or otherwise, he would not have himself been bound to pay.[2]

(3) A coparcener is liable to pay his own debt personally and out of his separate property, or coparcenary interest so long as he is alive, but on his death, it cannot be recovered out of his coparcenary interest, unless it had been attached during his lifetime:[3]

Provided that where the debt was due from the father, and is not illegal or immoral, his son is liable to pay it, to the extent of the assets inherited by him as hereinafter provided.[4]

(4) The universal donee is personally liable to pay all debts of the donor due at the time of the gift, to the extent of the property comprised therein; while other donees are liable to pay his debts to the same extent if the said gift was made with intent to defeat or delay any creditor, or has resulted in defrauding, defeating or delaying him, or the debtor was adjudged an insolvent within two years of the said gift.[5]

Explanation 1.—The terms heir, executor, or administrator in this section include any person so claiming as also one who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased.[6]

Explanation 2.—The heir of an impartible estate is, upon succession, liable to pay all the lawful debts of his predecessor out of the estate.[7]

Explanation 3.—The liability to pay a debt does not cease merely because the remedy for its recovery is barred.[8]

Explanation 4.—A gift includes an alienation made for a grossly inadequate consideration.[9]

1267. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by the following texts:—

Narad.—"17. A sonless widow, and one who has been enjoined by her dying husband to pay his debts must pay it—or (it must be paid) by him who inherits the estate. (For) the liability for the debts goes together with the right of succession."[10]

Vishnu.—"A widowed woman who has no son is bound to pay the debt of her husband, if he has commissioned her to do so on his death-bed, or if his property has escheated to her. If she is unfit to take the estate, her husband's debt must be re-paid by those who have inherited the estate. The property and the liabilities go together."[11]

---

(1) Kanakamma v. Venkataratnam, 7 M. 586; Narayanasami v. Esa, 28 M. 351; Ram v. Lachman, 30 A. 460.

(2) S. 23, Contract Act.

(3) Deen Dyal v. Jugdeep Narain, 41 A. 247 P.C.; Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 P.C.; Jagannath v. Sita Ram, 11 A. 302; Subrao v. Mahadevi, 38 B. 105 (107).

(4) S. 160 and cases cited.

(5) Abdul Hye v. M. Muzaffar, 10 C. 616 P.C.; Guanabhai v. Srinivasa, 4 M.H. C.R. 84 (86, 87); Ss. 128, 53, Transfer of Property Act, S. 55, Presidency Town Insolvency Act 1903, Provincial Insolvency Act.

(6) Cf. S. 2 (ii), Civil Procedure Code.

(7) Ram Das v. Braja Behari, 6 C.W.N. 879 and cases post.

(8) Ganpat v. Munnilal, 34 A. 135; Mahesh Lal v. Busunt, 6 C. 340.

(9) S. 53, Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).

(10) Narad I-17; 33 S.B.E. 46, 47.

(11) Vishnu VI-29.

Yadnavalkya.—"He who has received the estate or the wife of the deceased should be made to pay his debts, or failing either, the son who has not received an inheritance. In the case of a sonless deceased those who take the heritage should be made to pay."[1]

1268. The liability of a person to repay his own debts is subject to the general law. That law would not lend its aid to the recovery of a debt which is illegal or immoral within the meaning of S. 23 of the Indian Contract Act. In this respect, the statutory provisions to a certain extent agree with those of Hindu Law, which exempts the son from his liability to pay his father's debt, if it is illegal or immoral.

Apart from the illegality or immorality of a debt, the debtor may be absolved from repayment if the suit for its recovery has become barred by time, or there is merger, waiver or release, all of which cases furnish sufficient grounds for exoneration from the liability.

Apart from the debtor himself whose liability is not subject to Hindu Law, there remains the liability of his heir and legal representative, who is bound to pay all his debts, which the deceased was himself liable to pay, when he died. Even if the debt be barred, the heir is entitled, though not bound to pay it. The liability of a person to pay for the debt of another follows from the fact that the debt is generally, though erroneously, spoken of as a first charge on the inheritance and "they who share the inheritance must be pay the debts.[2]

1269. Liability of Heirs.—It is the rule of Hindu Law that a man's property is liable for his debts, and property descends to an heir burdened with the debts of the ancestor which must be all satisfied before the heir can be said to have any interest in the property at all.[3] The debts of the deceased must be paid out of his estate in whosoever's hands it might be, whether the rightful heir or the wrongful interloper. The same duty of paying his debts is equally obligatory on the executor or administrator, whether rightful or de son tort. Any person charged with the administration of the estate of the deceased becomes liable for the payment of his debts. It does not matter whether he is the heir, legatee, or a mere claimant. The fact that he is in possession of the estate entitles him to discharge its monetary obligations.[4] So where two widows of a person's pre-deceased sons laid claim to his estate on the strength of an alleged will, they were held liable to pay the debt of the deceased whether the will be genuine or not. If it was genuine they were the heirs and legal representatives of the deceased, and therefore, liable for his debt. If on the other hand, the will was not genuine, then being persons in possession of the property left by the deceased, they became liable for his debts to the extent of the property in their possession.[5]

Clause (1).

1270. Such was also the case of the plaintiff who contested succession to the estate against his brother's widow and obtained possession. While his suit was pending, a creditor of the deceased sued both the plaintiff and the widow and obtained a decree for repayment of the debt out of

---

(1) Yad. II-51 (Mandlik), p. 206.

(2) Gautam XII-40; cited in Mit., II-XI. § 24: Narad I-17, 33 S.B.E. 46, 47; Bhala v. Parbhu, 2 B. 67 (73): Mallan v. Paramatma Das, 17 L. 588; Karimuddin v. Govind, 31 A. 497 (506) P.C.

(3) Gunga Narain v. Umesh Chunder, (1864) W.R. 277.

(4) Kanakamma v. Venkataratnam, 7 M. 586 (588).

(5) Gulabi v. Asaram, (1881) A.W.N. 50.

the estate. The plaintiff satisfied the decree out of his own monies before the widow obtained her decree. He sued her for recovery of the amount which the court decreed holding that since the property of a deceased person is, under Hindu Law, liable for his debts, in whosoever hands it may be found, the plaintiff, having the estate in his hands, was bound to pay the sum, and having done so, to save the estate he became entitled to recover it from the widow.[1] A person may be liable to pay the debt as an executor de son tort, with the possible right of its recovery from the estate, unless the debt he had paid off was his own for, otherwise the creditors of the deceased would be running a race to take possession of his goods without administration to him.[2]

1271. And of course, the debt which such person may discharge must be a debt legally recoverable from the estate of the deceased. In this respect the legal executor or administrator possesses larger powers than a mere intermeddler, since it has been held that both the executors[3] and administrator may pay a debt even though its recovery was barred by time.[4] A fortiori, the heir, whether the son,[5] the widow[6] or any other heir[7] may pay off such debt, and they must, where the debt is renewed, as for example, by an agreement made under S. 25 (3) of the Contract Act.[8] The son's liability to pay his father's debt, arises during the father's lifetime, as soon as the debt is contracted, it being immaterial whether he was or was not then born. But the liability of other relations, e.g., the wife, only arises on the death of the husband, so that if she makes any payment of the husband's debt during his lifetime, it will ordinarily be regarded as a voluntary payment, and will not support an alienation by her after her husband's death, of the estate which has descended to her from him.[9]

Clause (2).

1272. Though the debts of the deceased are not a charge on the inheritance, they have a priority over the widow's right of residence. It was so held in a case in which the creditor had himself purchased a house belonging to his deceased debtor in execution of his decree against his widow, whereupon she set up her right of residence against his claim for possession, but the court rejected it, holding that the debt bound the widow and defeated her right of maintenance including her right of residence.[10]

---

(1) Kanakamma v. Venkataratnam, 7 M. 586.

(2) Narayanasami v. Esa, 28 M. 351 (354).

(3) Alaimuri v. Raghava, 42 M.L.J. 559; 67 I.C. 104.

(4) Administrator-General v. Hawkins, 1 M. 267; Talakchand v. Jitammal, 10 B. H.C.R. 206; Rownson, (Re), 29 Ch. D. 362; Norton v. Frecker, 1 Atk. 526; Briggs v. Wilson, 5 De. G. M. & G. 12.

(5) Per Westropp, C.J., and West, J., in Bhala v. Parbhu, 2 B. 67 (73); Gajadhar v. Jagannath, 22 A.L.J. 601 F.B.; 80 I.C. 684 (689) (overruling contra in Indar Singh v. Sarju Singh, 8 A.L.J. 1099; 11 I.C. 737; Dalip Singh v. Kundan Lal, 35 A. 207); Dalip Singh Kar v. Sheonandan, 46 A. 384 (388).

(6) Bhala v. Parbhu, 2 B. 67 (73, 74); Chimnaji v. Dinkar, 11 B. 320; Bhau v. Gopala, ib. 325; (obiter in) Bhagwat v. Nivrutti, 39 B. 113; Konolappa v. Subha, 13 M. 189; Udai Chunder v. Ashutosh, 21 C. 190; Khojendra Narain v. Santo Lal, 22 I.C. (C.) 669 (672); Sheoram v. Sheoratan, 43 A. 604 (606); Ram Kisan v. Chedi Rai, 44 A. 628; Gajadhar v. Jagannath, 22 A.L.J. 601 F.B.: 80 I.C. 684 (689); Gauri Shankar v. Sheonandan, 46 A. 384 (388).

(7) Bhagwat v. Nivrutti, 39 B. 113; Chimnaji v. Dinkar, 11 B. 320; Udai Chundar v. Ashutosh, 21 C. 190; Tarini Prasad v. Bhola Nath, 21 C.W.N. 190 (191).

(8) Kandan v. Sree Narayan, 11 C.W. N. 135; Karamchund v. Baisant Kuar, (1911) P.R. 31; Ram Ratan v. Basant Bai, 2 L. 263 (268, 269).

(9) Himmat v. Bhawani, 30 A. 352.

(10) Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45.

1273. It seems that any intermeddling under a claim real or pretended exposes a person to the liability of an executor de son tort,[1] but it does not thence follow that he, who becomes liable to pay a debt, becomes necessarily entitled to reimbursement, since the liability to pay and the right of reimbursement, are not reciprocal; for while any one in possession of property may be called upon to pay a debt due therefrom, the right of reimbursement depends upon the fact, whether he was "interested" in the payment of that debt.[2] For as the Privy Council observed: "It is not in every case in which a man has benefited by the money of another, that an obligation to repay that money arises. The question is not to be determined by nice considerations of what may be fair or proper according to the highest morality. To support such a suit, there must be an obligation express or implied to pay. It is well settled that there is no such obligation in the case of a voluntary payment by A of B's debts. Still less will the action lie where the money has been paid as here, against the will of the party for whose use it is supposed to have been paid.[3] Nor cant the case of A be better, because he made the payment not ex mero motu,[4] but in the course of a transaction which in one event, would have turned out highly profitable to himself and extremely detrimental to the person, whose debts the money went to pay."[5] These observations were made in a case in which the plaintiffs had purchased the defendant's interest in the sale proceeds of a Zemindari sold for arrears of revenue for Rs. 8,000 which was paid to the defendant's creditors. The sale being set aside, the plaintiff sued the defendant for reimbursement, but the Privy Council dismissed his suit, holding that the plaintiff had purchased an interest subject to a contingency which reduced his interest to nil, and that as the payment to the defendant's creditors had been made without his consent and in a coercive proceeding against him, plaintiff had no equity to compel the defendant to reimbursement.[6] A wrong-doer cannot claim reimbursement if he pays the debt for his own purpose, as for the purpose of manufacturing evidence of title to the land.[7] In such cases, the payment being in furtherance of the plaintiff's own wrongful purpose, he has no right of reimbursement though the owner may have benefited by it.[8] Only a payment made by a person who has some interest in the property, or who in good faith believes that he has such interest, can be recovered from the real owner. Such is, for example, a payment by a reversioner to avert the confirmation of sale of property made in execution of a decree for arrears of rent against the widow.[9]

1274. Limit of Liability.—Though Hindu Law prescribes a debt which is in its view illegal or immoral, it contains no provision for extinguishing the right of recovery by efflux of time. Indeed, such a notion is foreign to a Hindu lawyer who regards a debt as a perpetual incubus upon one and all one's descendants, till it is discharged either here or hereafter. But in this respect the provisions of the statute law have modi-

(1) Mohamida v. Pitchey, (1894) A. C. 437.

(2) S. 69, Contract Act.

(3) Stokes v. Lewis, 1 Term R. 20 cited per P.C. in Ram Tuhul Singh v. Biseswar, 23 W.R. 305 P.C.: 2 I.A. 131.

(4) "Out of mere will: of his own accord; voluntarily."

(5) Ram Tuhul Singh v. Biseswar, 23 W.R. 305 (308, 309) P.C.: 2 I.A. 131, reversing O.A. 19 W.R. 351.

(6) Ibid., p. 309.

(7) Desai Himatsingji v. Bhavabhai, 4 B. 643; Nand Kishore v. Paraoo, 2 Pat. L.J. 676: 42 I.C. 839.

(8) Tilukchand v. Soudamini, 4 C. 566; Binda Kuar v. Bhonda Dass, 7 A. 660.

(9) Punkhlati v. Nanihal, 18 C.W.N. 778: 21 I.C. 207; Narayan v. Pechiammal, 35 M. 426; Acha Ranganaik v. Acha Ramanuja, 35 M. 728.

fied the rigour of that law, and its effect is that the debt which the heir, executor or the administrator is liable to pay, must be a debt legally recoverable from the debtor. As such, it must not be illegal or immoral within the meaning of S. 23 of the Contract Act, nor should its recovery be barred by time. But though the heir, executor or administrator is not bound to pay such debt, there is nothing to prevent their paying it. So it has been held that an executor or administrator may renew[1] or pay a barred debt, since a debt barred is still a debt, though its recovery is barred,[2] or as Westropp, C.J., said: "Limitation is a privilege of the debtor, which he is entitled to waive."[3] So far then the law of limitation does not preclude the son and the widow to discharge their pious obligation by paying off the barred debts of the father or the husband, as the case may be,[4] and the agent of the manager or the widow, as the case may be, may acknowledge a debt so as to bind the joint family or the reversioner.[5] The case of the father is different.[6] The son may then pay his father's barred debt, so as to support a suit for contribution.[7] Such payment must be treated as "lawful" within the meaning of S. 70 of the Contract Act, so as to support a claim for contribution. The case is, of course, stronger where the time-barred debt was renewed by the father, in which case, the new debt creates a fresh obligation equally binding on the son,[8] though it could not bind the other coparceners, because it is not for the family benefit.[9] In this respect the widow's liability seems to extend to paying even the barred debts of her husband. The subject will be found discussed in the sequel.[10]

1275. The trade debts properly incurred by a Hindu widow on the credit of the assets of the business to which she has succeeded as the heiress of her deceased husband are recoverable after her death out of the assets of the business as against the reversioners who succeed thereto, even in the absence of a specific charge.[11]

1276. A Hindu inheriting property from his mother is liable for debts to the extent of the property inherited.[12] But it is said that the mother inheriting to her son is not entitled to alienate a part of her estate in order to pay off her husband's debts not charged on the estate, the reason being that the pious obligation of the son is personal to him and does not descend to his heirs, and while the widow is liable to pay her husband's debts her liability does not enure when she does not inherit to her husband.[13] But Hindu Law regards all debts as burdened on the estate and it is the duty of the heir whoever he be to free the estate from that burden.[14]

---

(1) Alamuri v. Raghava, 42 M.L.J. 559: 67 I.C. 104.

(2) Administrator-General v. Hawkins, 1 M. 267 (276).

(3) Bhala v. Parbhu, 2 B. 67 (73).

(4) See "Widow's Estate".

(5) S. 21, Limitation Act (as amended by Act I of 1927).

(6) Gajadhar v. Jagannath, 22 A.L.J. 601 F.B.: 80 I.C. 684; Gouri Shankar v. Sheonandan, 46 A. 384; Shib Nath v. Alliance Bank, (1915) P.R. 3: 25 I.C. 480; Sitla Bux v. Jagat Pal, 86 I.C. (O.) 693.

(7) Bhala v. Parbhu, 2 B. 67 (73); Gajadhur v. Jagannath, 22 A.L.J. 601 F.B.: 80 I.C. 604 (689); Shankar v. Sheonandan, 46 A. 384 (388) and cases cited Supra.

(8) Narayanasami v. Samidas, 6 M. 293; Harihar Baksh v. Bharat, 16 O.C. 185: 20 I.C. 590; contra in Indar Singh v. Sarju Singh, 8 A.L.J. 1099: 11 I.C. 737; Girdhari Lal v. Gobind Ram, 19 A. L.J. 456: 63 I.C. 25.

(9) Hari Har Baksh v. Bharat, 16 O. C. 185: 20 I.C. 590.

(10) See "Widow's Estate".

(11) Sakrabhai v. Manganlal, 26 B. 206.

(12) Bishen Dass v. Sirdar Dial Singh, (1873) P.R. 9.

(13) Sheo Ram v. Sheoratan, 43 A. 604 (606).

(14) Bhala v. Parbhu, 2 B. 67 (71, 72);

1277. Coparcener's Debts.—The coparcener is personally liable for his own debts. The fact that he is a coparcener does not, of course, clothe him with any special immunity. His separate property is equally liable. It is only when the creditor is unable to recover out of his person and separate property that his right of recovery comes in conflict with the law of coparcenary. It is no hardship to him that his rights are then limited since he must be presumed to know the law to which coparcenary interests are subject. These were at one time the subject of much uncertainty. But the courts are now agreed what they are in each case. In a Mitakshara family subject to the courts in Calcutta, Patna, Allahabad, Lucknow and Lahore, a coparcenary interest is untransferable. In the Central Provinces, Bombay and Madras it is transferable for value, but cannot be transferred by gift or devise. In Bengal, which is subject to the Dayabhag law, a coparcener possesses unlimited right of transfer and devise.

Clause (3).

1278. Leaving Bengal out of consideration for the present, the coparcener in the rest of India possesses only a qualified right of transfer. In Bombay, Madras and the Central Provinces he can transfer for value. Consequently, he is competent to mortgage his undivided interest, and the mortgagee is entitled to foreclose or sell it on foot of his mortgage. But since neither foreclosure nor sale can place him in possession of any specific property, all that he can so obtain is the right, title and interest of his mortgagor, that is a right to enforce a partition.[1] But until partition, he has no greater rights than his mortgagor. He cannot claim profits,[2] or disturb the undivided status.[3] So far all the courts outside Bengal agree. But there the agreement ends. In Bombay, Madras and the Central Provinces, where the co-parcener has the right of transfer for value, the mortgage creates a right in rem, and as such, the mortgagee has a priority over a money creditor who subsequently attaches the same interest in execution of his decree.[4] But though the mortgagee acquires an interest in rem, in his mortgagor's interest, he does not acquire an interest in any specific property, though as to this, he has an equity to that property which he can press upon the court in a suit for partition.[5] Accordingly, it has been held that where the plaintiff, as manager, had granted a lease to the defendant, to whom the manager's son, subsequently, sold his undivided half share, who in a suit for the manager's rent claimed to deduct the moiety of the rent, the court decreed the full claim, holding that the defendant could not claim to be in possession of any particular land until partition.[6]

1279. But in Bihar, the the United Provinces, Oudh and the Punjab where a coparcener is incompetent to transfer his coparcenary interest, a mortgage by a coparcener conveys no right in rem, and as such, it is indistinguishable from a simple money bond. The creditor's remedy in such cases is to sue on the mortgage or on the bond, and attach the debtor's interest in the joint property. He then acquires an equity to Chimnaji v. Dinkar, 11 B. 320; Bhau v. Gopala, ib., 325; Kondappa v. Subba, 13 M. 189; Udai v. Ashutosh, 21 C. 190.

(1) Soman Koeri v. Goshain, (1917) Pat. 128: 38 I.C. 222; Mohan Lal v. Tekchand, 9 N.L.R. 18.

(2) Maharaja of Bobbili v. Venkataramanjulu, 39 M. 265.

(3) Venkata v. Tulja Ram, (1917) M. W.N. 30: 38 I.C. 270; Maharaja of Bobbili v. Venkataramanjulu, 39 M. 265.

(4) Joy Narain v. Girish Chander, 4 C. 437 P.C.; Chidambaram v. Gouri Nachiar, 2 M. 83 P.C.

(5) Nanjaya v. Shanmuga, 38 M. 684; Ramkishore v. Jainarayan, 40 C. 966 P.C.

(6) Padala v. Madavarapa, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 382, following Iburamsa v. Thiruvenkatasami, 20 M.L.J. 743 F.B.: 7 I.C. 559.

recover his debt out of his debtor's interest by bringing it to sale in execution of his decree.[1]

But if the debtor dies before the creditor succeeds in attaching his interest, then, except in the case of the son and the grandson, his interest passes to his other relations by survivorship, and the creditor has no interest of the debtor left, from which he may recover his debt.[2]

1280. Non-liability of Other Coparceners.—On the death of an undivided coparcener the estate vests in the survivors and there is no estate belonging to a deceased person. Consequently, on the death of a coparcener the surviving coparceners take the estate free from his personal debts and obligations.[3] The only exception to this rule is the son who is bound under a pious obligation to discharge his father's debts or where the debt is borrowed for family necessity or for a family trade,[4] in which case it is presumably a debt due from all coparceners. The fact that the debt due by the deceased was secured by a decree of the court is immaterial,[5] since a decree creates no charge and does not alter or enlarge the obligation so as to make it executable against the survivors.[6] Nor even an attachment before judgment is held to have that effect, since an attachment creates no charge but merely prevents an alienation of property by the defendant,[7] and since the death of the latter extinguishes his right there is then no property upon which the attachment could operate.[8]

1281. But it is said that the survivors would be liable if such attachment is followed up by a decree,[9] and a fortiori, if the decree precedes the attachment.[10] But though neither an attachment nor a decree can independently create a charge upon the coparcenary share still the two combined are held sufficient to create it. In a Privy Council case the creditor had attached his debtor's coparcenary interest in execution and an order for sale was made, but the actual sale was postponed on the application of the judgment-debtor who died before it could be held, whereupon the survivors repudiated the claim, but their Lordships held that "the execution proceedings under which the mouza had been attached and ordered to be sold had gone so far as to constitute, in favour of the judgment-creditor, a valid charge upon the land" which could not be defeated by the debtor's death before the actual sale.[11] There is, of course, no statutory support for this view, and there seems no reason why a charge should spring into existence in the course of an execution when it was non-existent when the attach-

(1) Balgobind v. Narain Lal, 15 A. 339 (351) P.C.; Deen Dayal v. Jugdeep Narain, 41 A. 247 P.C.

(2) Modho Prasad v. Mehrban, 18 C. 157 P.C.; Jagannath v. Shama Pandey, 18 I.C. 157 (C.) 819.

(3) Goor Persad v. Sheodeen, 4 N.W. P.H.C.R. 137; Pahalwan v. Janki, 40 A. 17; Krishna Ram v. Lakshmana, 4 M. 302 (307); Ramanayya v. Rangappayya, 17 M. 144; Ramaswami v. Veerappa, 33 M. 423; Muthusami v. Chanammal, 26 M. L.J. 517: 24 I.C. 320; Subrao v. Mahadevi, 38 B. 105.

(4) Pahalwan v. Janki, 40 A. 17.

(5) Raghunath v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72; Gokalchand v. Hukamchand, (1917) P.R. 71: 34 I.C. 714; Ayyasami v. Gurusami, 3 M.L.W. 463: 33 I.C. 691; Venkataramiah v. Subramaniam, 16 M.L.T. 489: 26 I.C. 393.

(6) Ramasami v. Veerappa, 33 M. 423.

(7) "An attachment prevents alienation, it does not confer title."—Per Lord Hobhouse in Motilal v. Karrabuddin, 25 C. 179 P.C.

(8) Bailur v. Lakshmana, 4 M. 302 (307); Sadayappa v. Ponnama, 8 M. 554; Ramanayya v. Rangappayya, 17 M. 145; Subrao v. Mahadevi, 38 B. 105.

(9) Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 P.C. explained in Subrao v. Mahadevi, 38 B. 105; Udaram v. Rama, 11 B.H.C.R. 76; Muthusami v. Chunammal, 26 M.L.J. 517: 24 I.C. 320.

(10) Muthusami v. Chunammal, 26 M. L.J. 517: 24 I.C. 320.

(11) Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 P.C.; Jagannath v. Sita Ram, 11 A. 302; Subrao v. Mahadevi, 38 B. 105 (107).

ment was made. Still such is the view of the cases. In one case the Calcutta High Court was, however, of opinion that the puchaser's equity is not lost even if his debtor dies after the institution of his suit but before attachment.[1]

1282. Father's Debts.—The liability of the son to pay his father's debts not illegal or immoral is now well established. (§ 159.) The liability was at one time held limited to the son and the grandson but the Privy Council have held even the great-grandson equally liable.[2] The nature and extent of the issues' liability for the debts and alienation of their ancestor is set out in S. 159.

Again the textual liability which was unlimited, is now limited to the property inherited by them from that ancestor. Neither the son nor the grandson or the great-grandson is liable to discharge the debt out of his separate property. If he was joint with the father, his liability is limited to the extent of his coparcenary interest which might be seized, even during the father's lifetime, for he is equally liable for the debt during his father's lifetime and he is equally liable after his death if he has inherited to him, in which case, his liability is limited to the extent of the property which he has so inherited. It was at one time held,[3] that the liability of the son to pay his father's debts only arose on the father's death but this view is no longer tenable since his liability is held to be unqualified by that contingency.[4] As the son, the grandson and the great-grandson are liable, they cannot object to the attachment of their ancestor's interest after his death. The only case in which they may object to the attachment is when they repudiate their liability on the ground that the debts were tainted with illegality or immorality. In any other case the creditor is at liberty to proceed not only against the father's interest but also against that of his son and grandson in the coparcenary property.[5]

1283. But as has been pointed out before, the liability of the son to pay his father's debt is not co-extensive with the father's right to alien the joint property.[6] In other words, the fact that the creditor may seize the coparcenary estate for the payment of the father's debts does not justify the father in alienating it for the same purpose.

The subject will be more fully discussed under S. 159.

Father's Illegal and Immoral Debt.

1284. But since a coparcener is entitled to transfer his interest for value and such transfer by a Mitakshara coparcener in the North, raises an equity in favour of the transferee, it follows that even if the debt of the father was illegal or immoral, the creditor is entitled to obtain satisfaction from the coparcenary interest of the father. It may

(1) Banwari v. Sheo Sankar, 13 C.W.N. 815: 1 I.C. 670; Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Prasad, 5 C. 148 P.C.; Vithal Das v. Nand Kishore, 23 A. 106; Udaram v. Rama, 11 B.H.C.R. 76.

(2) S. 112.

(3) Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 39 A. 437 P.C. overruled in Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, 46 A. 95 (103, 104); 1 Dig. 266; S. 107, Ev. A.; Karuppan v. Veriyal, 4 M.H.C.R. 1; Pannappa v. Pappuviengar, 4 M. 1 (18, 26); Gurusami v. Chinna, 5 M. 37 (46); Nowrat v. Trimbuk, Bom. L.R. 218.

(4) Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, 46 A. 95 (103, 104) P.C.; Sripat Singh v. Prodayat Kumar, 44 C. 524 P.C.; explained in Hanmant v. Ganesh, 43 B. 612 (619, 620) P.C.; Mohanlal v. Bala Prasad, 44 A. 649; Madhusudan v. Ishwari Dayi, 48 C. 341.

(5) Girdharee Lall v. Kanto Lall, 14 B.L.R. 187 P.C.; Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Prasad, 5 C. 148 P.C.; Muttayan v. Sangili, 6 M. 1 P.C.

(6) Jogi Das v. Ganga Ram, 21 C.W.N. 957 P.C.: 42 I.C. 791.

then be that where the character of the debt is determined after the sale, it will determine the quantum of interest available to the purchaser.[1] And similarly, where the father executes a mortgage of his right and share in certain villages, the quantum of interest available to the mortgagee must depend upon the character of the debt. If it was such as bound the joint family, all the interest which they possess in the property would pass, but the father's interest would pass in any case.[2]

1285. Position of the Assignee.—Assuming that the father's debt was irrecoverable out of the son by reason of its illegality or immorality the next question that arises is what is the position of the assignee of the debt or of the decree passed against the father. Has he any equity superior to that of the son? The question was considered by the Privy Council who have held that the assignee of the debt or of the money decree is bound to enquire as to the character of the father's liability and that he must be deemed to have had notice of the illegality or immorality of the debt if he could have ascertained it by enquiry.[3] Where however, the father mortgages the joint property for such debt whereupon a decree is passed, the purchaser stands upon surer ground, for he need not then enquire that the property sold to him was liable to satisfy the decree. But it is still open to the son to show that he had notice.[4] In other words, the question about the equity between the son and the father's assignee depends not so much upon the nature of the transaction, as upon his bona fides and notice. If the assignee is an assignee of the mere debt or decree and no property has passed out of the family to the purchaser, then, the assignee takes subject to the same equity to which his assignor was subject. But if on the other hand, in pursuance of such a decree or otherwise by contract or sale, the joint property had gone out of the family to a purchaser, then the son cannot recover it from him by mere proof that the consideration for the transfer was tainted with illegality or immorality unless he further shews that the purchaser had taken it not in good faith and with notice.[5]

1286. Limitation.—The limitation for a suit against the son for recovery of an unsecured debt of his father is six years from the date of the accrual of cause of action against the son, which was at one time held to be the father's death,[6] but it has been since pointed out that the cause of action against the son is not different from that against the father, and that the cause of action against one is consequently the cause of action against the other.[7] This may be the death of the father, but it is not invariably so, where for instance, the father as agent of his employer, withdrew money from the chest of his principal from time to time and placed in the chest of his own estate, doing so up to the day of his death and

(1) Sripat Singh v. Prodyut Kumar, 44 C. 524 (533) P.C.; Deodhari v. Bhup Narain, 3 Pat. L.W. 1: 42 I.C. 456.

(2) Deodhari v. Bhup Narain, 3 Pat. L. W. 1: 42 I.C. 456.

(3) Muddun Thakur v. Kantoo Lall, 40 C. 539 P.C.; Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B.L.R. 187 P.C.; Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 P.C., explained in Mahabir v. Basdeo, 6 A. 234 (239); Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh, 28 A. 508 (519, 528, 529).

(4) Jannuk v. Raghunandan, (1861) B. S.D.A. 213; Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Sing, 28 A. 508 (529).

(5) Mahabir v. Basdeo, 6 A. 234 (240, 241); Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh, 28 A. 508 (529).

(6) Narsingh v. Lalji, 23 A. 206; Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh, 28 A. 508 (616) (affirmed on a different point O.A. Balwant Singh v. Clancy, 34 A. 292 P.C.), following Natasayyan v. Ponnusami, 16 M. 99; Ramayya v. Venkataratnam, 17 M. 122.

(7) Ramasami v. Ulaganatha, 22 M. 49 F.B.; Mallesam v. Jugala, 23 M. 292 (297) F.B.

there was no adjustment of accounts. In a suit for the sums so withdrawn, by the principal against the son and grandson, limitation was held to start from the death of the father and the period of limitation was held to be 6 years as prescribed in Art. 120 of the Limitation Act.[1] The same view was taken by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court who had to decide the question whether a suit against the son on a mortgage effected by the father for a debt not binding on the family was governed by Art. 120 or Art. 132. It was held that as the mortgage was not binding on the son who was however only liable because of his pious obligation, the suit against him was subject to Art. 120 which allowed the creditor six years from the date when the cause of action accrues.[2] Now, this may accrue either (i) when the debt incurred by the father matures, or (ii) when the creditor, after exhausting his remedies against the father, finds that the debt or a portion thereof is still unsatisfied, or (iii) on the date of the death of the father. The Full Bench refused to decide the terminus a quo, but in an earlier case, li mitation was held to run from the first of these dates.[3]

1287. Donee's Liability.—The donee's liability to pay the donor's debt out of the property gifted to him is limited to the cases stated in the clause. A debt, as such, creates no charge on debtor's estate. Consequently, it creates no right in rem on any of his property which the debtor is free to transfer for or without consideration, passing to the transferee, whether donee or alienee for value all his interest therein,[4] subject only to this that he cannot be permitted to defraud his creditors by making an alienation so as to defraud, defeat or delay them in the recovery of their debt.[5] This has always been the law now enacted in S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. That section enacts that a gift (which term includes a transfer for a grossly inadequate consideration) may be presumed to be fraudulent if it has the effect of defeating or delaying the creditors. But this presumption is rebuttable and may be rebutted by the donee showing that at the time of his gift the donor was possessed of sufficient means for the discharge of his debts.

Clause (4).

1288. There is nothing in Hindu Law to conflict with this view. It contains general prohibitions against gifts so as to deprive a man of the means of fulfilling his sacred obligations to provide maintenance for the members of his family; but it only decrees such gifts void as are made in fraud of other claimants. So Manu says: "When the Judge discovers a fraudulent pledge or sale, a fraudulent gift and acceptance, or in whatever other case he detects fraud, let him annul the whole transaction."[6] The law regarding the liability of the donees to pay the donor's debt must then be found in the statute law, implemented by the rules of justice, equity and good conscience, the effect of which appears to be, "that a voluntary disposition of property may be valid although the person making it is, at the time, in debt, and that in each case the validity or

(1) Girraj Singh v. Raghubir, 3 I.A. 429, following Chand Mal v. Kalyan Mal, (1886) P.R. 96; Kalee Kishen v. Juggat Tara, 2 B.L.R. 189; Brindaban v. Jumna, 25 A. 55.

(2) Brijnandan v. Bidya Prasad, 42 C. 1068 (1093) F.B.

(3) Sarja Prasad v. Gulab Chand, 27 C. 762.

(4) S. 8, Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).

(5) Gnanabhai v. Srinivasa, 4 M.H.C. R. 84; Abdul Hye v. Mozaffar Hossein, 10 C. 616 P.C.; Hormusji v. Cowasji, 13 B. 297; Mohanlal v. Balmakund, 17 C.P. L.R. 24.

(6) Manu, VIII-165; To the same effect Mayukh, IV-X-6; Smriti Chandrika, IX-I-11, cited in Gnanabhai v. Srinivas, 4 M.H.C.R. 84 (86).

invalidity of the transaction depends upon the question, whether the circumstances connected with the debtor's state of indebtedness support the presumption that he had intent to deprive the objecting creditor of the means of recovering his debt—in effect the presumption of fraud."[1] In other words, while the donee, as such, is not charged with the liability of having to pay the donor's debt to the extent of the property gifted to him, he becomes so liable if the gift was not bona fide and that the real motive and intention of the transaction was to deprive the creditor of the means of obtaining payment of his debt from the debtor's property generally. If so, the disposition would be set aside to the extent of the debt due to the creditor by whom it is impeached.[2]

1289. The liability of the donee to pay the debt of his donor to the extent of the property gifted to him would then arise in a specific case where any creditor is defeated or delayed by the gift. That is a question of fact to be decided on a consideration of all the circumstances of each case. The case of a universal donee is exceptional, since, being in possession of all the property of the donor, he is naturally saddled with the liability of having to pay his donor's debts, then due. A donee may, again, have his gift cancelled under the provisions of the Insolvency Act, in which case there is no need of proving any intent to defeat or delay a creditor required by the Transfer Act, all that is necessary being that the gift is made within two years of the donor's insolvency, and the only gift excepted is that made in consideration of marriage. If the gift be older, it may still be set aside under the Transfer Act.[3]

1290. It is now settled that an impartible estate cannot be the subject of coparcenary rights of succession by survivorship.[4] The holder for the time being is its absolute owner, and in this respect he occupies the same position in regard to his estate as the Dayabhag father does in regard to his coparcenary estate. On the death of both, the heir becomes liable to pay all his debts irrespective of their origin and purpose if they are within time.[5] The successor of an impartible holder is his heir, and as such, he takes the estate subject to his pecuniary obligations. Between him and his successor there is the privity of estate, and as such the heir is liable to pay the holder's debts which could have been recovered out of his estate if he were alive.[6] As between the sons of a Zemindar, his impartible estate and his other property not being regalia, which is partible, should contribute in proportion to their value to the discharge of his debt.[7]

Explanations.

1291. Explanation 1 is supported by the definition of "legal representative" as given in S. 3 (11) of the Code of Civil Procedure, while Explanation 2 is supported by S. 195 (6) and is the subject of detailed discussion thereunder (§§ 1631-1642).

---

(1) Gnanabhai v. Srinivasa, 4 M.H.C. R. 84 (87).

(2) See the subject more fully discussed in 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), §§ 1003, 1009, 1015-1021.

(3) S. 55, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909); S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920).

(4) Rama Rao v. Rajah of Pittapur, 4 M. 778 P.C., approving Bachoo v. Mankore Bai, 20 B. 51 (58).

(5) Ram Das v. Vria Behari, 6 C.W. N. 879; Shyamlal v. Bijay Narain, (1917) Pat. 121; Kalappa v. Akkappa 8 M.L.T. 297; contra in Jugalal v. Audh Behari, 6 C.W.N. 223, and Kali Krishna v. Raghunath, 31 C. 224, proceed on the principle of survivorship, which is no longer correct.

(6) Kalappa v. Akkappa, 8 M.L.T. 297.

(7) Dinagarasami v. Rabatgasami, 24 M. 613.

Explanation 3 refers to the son's liability to pay his father's debt even though barred by time (§§ 1377, 1378), while Explanation 4 is drawn from S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act.

147. The husband and wife are not liable for the debts contracted by each other except in the following cases:—

Debts of Husband and Wife.

(a) Where they were contracted by one as the agent of the other.[1]

(b) Where they were contracted for household necessaries.[2]

1292. Analogous Law.—The sacred texts on the subject of this section are in harmony with the present law:—

Narad.—"16. The wife must not pay a debt contracted by her husband, nor one contracted by her son, except if it had been promised by her, or contracted in common with her husband.

"18. A debt contracted by the wife shall never bind the husband, unless it had been contracted at a time when the husband was in distress. Household expenses are indispensably necessary."[3]

Vishnu.—"A debt contracted by the wife, for the purpose of saving from distress her husband, son, daughter, or other family members, must be discharged by the family."[4]

It has already been stated that, as regards their property, both the husband and the wife are absolutely free. The husband cannot, except perhaps in a case of great distress, use his wife's stridhan. Equally the wife has no right to use her husband's property. But since in the management of the household, one must at times act for the other, it follows that each may incur debts in circumstances when the other would become legally liable to discharge them.

The liability depends upon agency. So where the wife alone executed a mortgage deed to secure a debt due from both husband and wife and the husband by his conduct ratified or acquiesced in the mortgage, the wife was deemed to have acted as her husband's agent.[5]

The husband is not liable for sums misappropriated by the wife, though he approved of her taking service.[6]

1293. Such agency would be implied in purchases made by the wife for household necessaries suitable to his situation in life and position. Where goods were purchased by the wife from the plaintiff's firm up to a limit fixed by the husband, he was entitled to repudiate his wife's purchases made in excess secretly and with the plaintiff's connivance.[7]

Clause (b).

148. (1) Notwithstanding any contract to the contrary, no debtor is liable to pay at the same time interest which exceeds the principal.[8]

Rule of Damdupat.

(2) This rule extends only to the areas within the original jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court, the Presidency of Bombay, Sindh and Berar.[9]

(1) Mg. Sin v. Mg. Po, 4 Bur.L.T. 212: 12 I.C. 28.
(2) Ram Charan v. Van Haltaru, 10 I.C. (A.) 9
(4) Narad I-16, 18; 33 S.B.E. 46 (47).
(4) Vishnu, VI-32.
(5) Mg. Sin v. Mg. Po, 4 Bur. L.T. 214: 12 I.C. 28.
(6) Simpson v. Bachman, 13 A.L.J. 55: 27 I.C. 622.
(7) Ram Charan v. Van Haltaru, 10 I.C. (A.) 9.
(8) 1 Dig. 63, Nobin Chunder v. Bomesh Chunder, 14 C. 781 F.B.
(9) Ramchandra v. Radha, 10 N.L.R. 96.

(3) It does not apply to the following cases:—

(a) Where the debtor is not a Hindu,[1]

(b) Where the Creditor is liable to account,[2]

(c) Where the debtor agrees to the capitalization of interest,

(d) Where the debt merges in a decree.[3]

1294. Analogous Law.—The rule of damdupat is thus stated:—

Manu.—"Interest on money recovered at once or month by month or day by day, as it ought, must never be more than enough to double the debt, that is, more than the amount of the principal paid at the same time. On gram, on fruit, on wool or hair, on beasts of burden, but to be paid in the same kind of equal value, it must not be more than enough to make the debt quintuple.

"Stipulated interest beyond the legal rate, and different from the preceding rule is invalid and the wise call it an usurious way of lending and the lender is entitled at most to five in hundred."[4]

Gautam.—"If the loan remains outstanding for a long time, the principal may be doubled, (after which interest ceases),[5] The interest on produce, on animals, on wool, on the produce of a field, and on beasts of burden shall not increase more than the five-fold value of the object lent."[6]

1295. Rule of Damdupat.—Damdupat is the Hindu Law against usury. At one time it appears to have had a wider vogue than it has now, being merely confined to the Maharatta Provinces of Bombay and Berar[7] and the area subject to the original jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court. It has been locally extended by the Ajmere Laws Act[8] only to cases where the mortgagee sues to enforce his mortgage being inapplicable when the mortgagor seeks to redeem.[9]

It is said that the rule is inapplicable to mortgages, having been abrogated by the Transfer of Property Act,[10] but there is no rule in that Act to repeal this rule of common law and the re-enactment of the Usurious Loans Act, 1917 leaves it intact.

1296. Hindu Law recognises no limitation for suits, but has imposed a restriction on the accumulation of interest.[11] As such, it equally served to correct the evils of usury, but has however, outlived its day except in the areas stated in the section.

1297. The rule as stated in the texts prescribed that the amount of interest shall not exceed that of the principal paid at the same time. It does not mean that the amount of interest shall never exceed the principal. All it means is that at the same time interest in amount greater than the principal cannot be recovered.[12] Hence, if the principal remain outstanding and the interest be paid in smaller sums than the amount of the principal money, there is no limit to the amount which may be received for interest.[13] All that the rule prohibits is that the creditor may not Rule Stated.

(1) Dawood v. Vallabhadas, 18 B. 227.
(2) Raja Ram v. Gopala, (1876) B.P.J. 229.
(3) Dhondshet v. Ravi, 22 B. 86.
(4) Manu, VIII-151, 152.
(5) Gautam, XII-31; 2 S.B.E. 229.
(6) Ibid., XII-36.
(7) Ramachandra v. Radha, 10 N.L.R. 96.
(8) Reg. III of 1877, S. 88.
(9) Nemichand v. Radha Ballabh, 26 A. 354.
(10) Madhwa v. Venkataramanjulu, 26 M. 662; Narayan v. Ganga Ram, 5 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 157 (rule inapplicable to mortgages); contra in Nathubhai v. Mulchand, 5 B.H.C.R. (A. C.) 196.
(11) Gajadhar v. Jagannath, 46 A. 775 (782).
(12) 1 Dig. 63; Nobin Chunder v. Romesh Chunder, 14 C. 781 F.B.
(13) Dhondu v. Narayan, 1 B.H.C.R. (A.C.), 47 (49).

recover more than double of the amount at any time remaining due, as on the last balance struck. He is not prevented from recovering more than the double of what he has actually lent.[1] The rule does not forbid the conversion of interest into capital by subsequent agreement. Nor does it preclude recovery of interest because the principal sum lent has been paid off.[2] The rule is applicable equally to cases whether the interest was to be paid in cash or grain[3] or whether the debt was or was not secured by a mortgage.[4]

1298. It is, however, inapplicable unless there is only one account to be taken of principal and interest due on the mortgage, and no account of rents and profits on the other side.[5] If, therefore, the mortgagee in possession has to account for the rents and profits, the rule would be inapplicable unless there was an express stipulation that the rents and profits are to be taken in lieu of a fixed portion of the interest.[6]

1299. The rule though equally applicable to secured or unsecured debts does not apply to judgment-debts, after which, in the words of the Privy Council, the matters pass out of the domain of contract into one of law.[7] So the interest which the court may award under the Civil Procedure Code is not subject to the rule,[8] nor is it applicable to the amount recoverable in execution of a decree.[9] But since in a mortgage, interest at the contractual rate is to be calculated up to the date of the dies datus fixed, as required by O. XXXIV, Rr. 2 and 4 of the Civil Procedure Code, it follows that the decree is equally subject to the Damdupat rule up to that date after which it ceases to be operative.[10]

Then again the rule is inapplicable to cases in which there is a liability to account, though no account is in fact maintained or taken.[11] If the mortgagee is put in possession, he becomes liable to account, and the moment his accountability begins the rule of Damdupat ceases to apply. In such a case, then, the rule can only be let in by an express provision in the mortgage deed or otherwise against his liability to account.[12]

1300. Only Applies to Hindu Debtor.—The rule is a rule of Hindu Law and applies only to a Hindu debtor, though it does not matter whether he is the plaintiff or the defendant. So where the mortgagor, a

---

(1) Suklal v. Bapu, 24 B. 305; Karamchand v. Bulchand, 2 S.L.R. 10.

(2) Nusserwanji v. Laxman, 30 B. 582.

(3) Anand Rao v. Durgabai, 22 B. 761.

(4) Ramconnoy v. Johu Lall, 5 C. 867; Ram Kanye v. Collychurn, 21 C. 840; Nandalal v. Dhirendra, 40 C. 710; Kunjalal v. Narsamba, 42 C. 826; Sundarabai v. Jayavant, 24 B. 113; Jeevanbhai v. Manordas, 35 B. 199 (203); Asanand v. Tulsanbai, 5 S.L.R. 245: 15 I.C. 824; contra in Madhwa v. Venkataramanjulu, 26 M. 662, in which S. 4 of the Transfer of Property Act, coupled with S. 37 of the Contract Act, was overlooked.

(5) Narayan v. Satyaji, 9 B.H.C.R. 83; Daji v. Daji, (1878) B.P.J. 74; Vasudev v. Bhagwan, (1878) B.P.J. 32.

(6) Sankar v. Babaji, (1881) B.P.J. 291; Ranga v. Balaji, (1886) B.P.J. 76.

(7) Lall Behary v. Thacomonee, 23 C. 899; Kanaye v. Anund Lall, 23 C. 903 n; Buggoban v. Prancoomaree, 23 C. 906 n.

(8) Balakrishna v. Gopal, 1 B. 73; Ramchandra v. Bhimrao, 1 B. 577; Asanand v. Tulsanbi, 5 S.L.R. 243.

(9) Dhondshet v. Ravi, 22 B. 86.

(10) Dhondshet v. Ravi, 22 B. 86; Harilal Mallick, (In re), 33 C. 1269; Shanakrahawa v. Babaji, (1881) B.P.J. 191; Rengo v. Balaji, (1886) B.P.J. 76; Shah Balidas v. Chudasama, (1891) B.P.J. 428; Krishnaji v. Balaji, (1895) B.P.J. 415; Lal Behary v. Thacomonee, 23 C. 899; Kanaye v. Anund Lall, 23 C. 903 n.; Buggoban v. Prancoomaree, 23 C. 906 n.

(11) Raja Ram v. Gopal, (1876) B.P.J. 229; Bapuji v. Gangadhar, (1877) B.P.J. 131.

(12) Hari Lall Mallick, (In re); 33 C. 1269.

Mahomedan sued his Hindu mortgagee for the redemption of his mortgage, and upon an account being taken, it was found that the amount of interest far exceeded the principal, whereupon the plaintiff claimed the benefit of damdupat but the court overruled his contention, holding that as the defendant was not a debtor, the rule was inapplicable to him.[1] A non-Hindu mortgagor cannot, by assigning his equity of redemption to a Hindu, let in the rule to the prejudice of the creditor,[2] nor can the Hindu debtor transfer his personal equity to a non-Hindu with his debt.[3] The rule of damdupat remains unaffected by the Transfer of Property[4] or the Interest Act,[5] or the provisions of the Usuary Act, their repeal[6] and re-enactment.[7]

---

(1) Dawood v. Vallubdas, 18 B. 227.

(2) Harilal v. Nagar, 21 B. 38; Abdul Gani v. Sheikh Nizam, 23 N.L.R. 104: 102 I.C. 41 (1927) N. 249.

(3) Jeewan Bai v. Manordas, 35 B. 199.

(4) S. 4, Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) read with S. 37, Contract Act (IX of 1872); Ambaidas v. Naraindas, (1888) B.P.J. 317; Ali Saheb v. Shabji, 21 B. 85; Sundarabai v. Jayavant, 24 B. 114; Jeevanbai v. Manordas, 35 B. 199 (203); Asanand v. Tulsan Bai, 5 S.L.R. 245: 15 I.C. 824; Janda Lal v. Dhirendra, 40 C. 710; Kunjlal v. Venkataramanjulu, 26 M. 662, in which the effect of S. 74 of Act IV of 1882, read with S. 37 of the Contract Act, was not considered.

(5) Hakma v. Meman, 7 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 19.

(6) Ramlal v. Haran Chandra, 12 W. R. 9 (11, 18); Kushal Chand v. Ibrahim, 3 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 23; Kedari v. Aimarambhat, 3 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 11.

(7) Act X of 1918.

CHAPTER X-A.

JOINT FAMILY DEBTS AND ALIENATIONS.

Joint family debts.

149. (1) All property of a joint family is liable for a debt incurred by the manager on its behalf for the legal necessity or benefit thereof or of any of its members in accordance with the rules hereinbefore provided.[1]

(2) Such property is liable even if the debt be incurred by a member other than the manager in the same circumstances in which a debt incurred by the manager would bind the family.[2]

(3) Save as above, the joint family property is not liable for a debt incurred by the manager or any of its members.

(4) A joint family debt is not payable otherwise than out of the joint family property.[3]

1301. Analogous Law.—The first two clauses declare that a joint family debt may be incurred by the manager, or even by a member other than the manager, but in order to be binding on the joint family, it must be supported by legal necessity or benefit. This is in accordance with an express text of the Mitakshara:—

Brihaspati.—(after defining the father's powers, proceeds).—"Even a single individual may conclude a donation, mortgage, or sale, of immovable property; during a season of distress, for the sake of the family and especially for pious purposes."[4]

Mitakshara.—"29. (Citing the last.) The meaning of that text is this: While the sons and grandsons are minors, and incapable of giving their consent to a gift and the like; or while brothers are so and continue unseparated; even one person, who is capable, may conclude a gift, hypothecation, or sale, of immoveable property, if a calamity affecting the whole family require it, or the support of the family render it necessary, or indispensable duties, such as the obsequies of the father, or the like, make it unavoidable."[5]

The third clause makes it clear that unless a debt is shewn to be incurred for the family and for its necessity, it will not bind the family merely because it was incurred by the manager. The only exception to this rule is the family trade whose manager possesses larger powers as stated in the next section.

Lastly, whatever may be the necessity of the family or any of its members, a family debt is a charge on the assets of the entire family and not upon the assets of any of its members none of whom is personally liable for it. This is so even where the debt was incurred for his personal benefit e.g., marriage or defence in a criminal prosecution. It does not matter if the member concerned had affluent means of his own and the family coffers were empty. But the fact that the debt is the debt of the family makes only its assets liable, since the members of a joint family are regarded, so far as concerns the dealings of the family with persons outside it as but one juristic person.[6]

(1) See S. 133; Mit. I-I §§ 28, 29.
(2) Ib.
(3) Himmat v. Bhawani, 30 A. 352 (359, 360).
(4) Brihaspati.
(5) Mit., I-I, §§ 28, 29.
(6) Himmat v. Bhawani, 30 A. 352 (359, 360).

1302. Hindu Law is less concerned with who takes the debt than the purpose for which it is taken. The borrowers must, in ordinary cases be all the members of the family, but where there are minors and the members numerous or scattered, it is not possible for all of them to consent to a loan. In that case, the authority of the manager is sufficient and even if the manager be unavailable, any member—may, even a servant or dependent, may take the loan and hold the family liable.[1]

Clauses (1), (2).

In the words of the Mitakshara: "Even a single member may conclude a donation, mortgage or sale of a whole family, during a season of distress for the sake of the family and specially for pious purposes."[2]

From this it is clear that though, ordinarily, the manager is the accredited agent of the family, and is, as such, empowered to raise a loan on behalf of the family, his authority is not even exclusive and may, in the case of necessity, be exercised even by a junior member of the family, and indeed, even by a stranger, if he is treated as a member of the family.[3] It may even be contracted by a servant or the dependent of the family and be still binding upon it, if it was supported by legal necessity.

1303. Members of a family have thus a dual capacity in relation to the family: (i) they may act on behalf of the family, and (ii) they may act on their own behalf. In the first case, their debts can only be recovered from the family property: in the second case, their coparcenary share is liable to be seized and sold in execution.[4] In this respect there is no difference between the practice of Mitakshara in Bengal and that in Madras and Bombay, since all are agreed that a coparcenary interest may be seized and sold in execution of a decree passed against a coparcener for his own debts, the only difference between the courts being on the question, whether the coparcener is entitled to voluntarily alienate his share in discharge of his debts or otherwise for value. (§ 126 (6).)

1304. The question whether a debt is incurred by a person for himself or for the family is a question of fact, the burden of proving which is on the creditor who has to establish that the debt was incurred by the manager or a member for a purpose binding upon the whole family. But in this respect, the question depends upon the fact whether the manager was the father or any other relation. If the former, the sons are bound to pay his debts, unless they can shew them to be illegal or immoral. But in order to bind other relations, the creditor has to prove legal necessity or benefit. It will thus be seen that in order to bind a coparcener two things are to be taken into consideration, the nature of the debt as also the relationship of the person bound to the debtor, and in the latter case, the burden would be on the son or on the creditor according to whether the debtor is the father or any other relation.

1305. The question whether the manager has power to revive a barred debt by acknowledgment, or pay it on behalf of the coparceners so as to make them liable therefor, is one upon which there are some conflicts. The courts are agreed that so far as the son and the widow are concerned, they are under a

Barred Debts.

(1) Baldeo v. Somessur, 7 W.R. 490 (492).
(2) Brihaspati, cited in Mit., I-28.
(3) Baldeo v. Somessur, 7 W.R. 490 (492).
(4) Deen Dyal v. Jugdeep Narain, 41 A. 247 P.C.

pious obligation to pay their predecessor's debts, whose estate they have inherited; but since the same pious obligation does not extend to the manager whose acts are judged by the touch-stone of necessity, it has been held that he lacks the power to revive a barred debt without special authority or pay it on behalf of the family[1] though, of course, he may acknowledge a debt before it is barred so as to give a fresh starting point to limitation.[2]

The guardian of a minor, though the mother, is similarly incompetent.[3] But of course the case of the father is exceptional, since he possesses the authority both to acknowledge and revive a barred debt against his son.[4]

Clauses (3), (4).

1306. It has already been stated that there is no presumption that a person taking a debt takes it for another. The fact that he is the manager makes no difference.[5] It is on the creditor who makes the family liable, to show that the debt was taken for its necessity or benefit, or at any rate, that the debtor had made representations to that effect which he, after due inquiry, believed. The liability thus created is vicarious and is, consequently, limited to the family property, leaving the members' separate property unaffected. In this respect, their position is not unlike that of a member of a limited corporation, in which they stand to lose their share in lieu of debts but nothing more. But though this is ordinarily the rule, it is not invariable, since the son, the manager or a coparcener may enlarge his own liability by his act or conduct, but in that case the question passes out of the domain of Hindu Law.

1307. Husband's Debts.—The widow is under the same pious obligation to pay her husband's debts as the son is to pay those of his father. But her liability is even greater since she is bound to pay his debts whether immoral or illegal, if the creditor was not an accessory, and she is entitled, though not bound, to pay them even if they be barred by time.[6] Unlike the case of the son, her obligation arises only on the death of her husband.[7] Any payment made by her during his lifetime would be a voluntary payment and will not support an alienation of her husband's estate which she inherits on his death.[8] The widow inherits her husband's estate after payment of her husband's debts. All debts which would bind the husband personally are necessarily binding upon the widow in respect of all the assets which have come to her hands as his legal representative. A debt incurred by a person as surety is binding as a family debt upon his undivided son, and a fortiori, his wife cannot impugn such debt. Where therefore, in execution of a decree obtained by the creditor against his debtor in respect of an obligation incurred by the latter as surety, the decree-holder attached a house and bought it himself in court auction and applied to be placed in possession and the debtor's representative, the widow claimed that she had a right of residence and that she should not be ejected,

(1) Gopalnarain v. Kuddomutty, 14 B. L.R. 21; Kumara Sami v. Pala, 1 M. 385; Chinnaya v. Gurunathan, 5 M. 169 F.B.; Dinkar v. Appaji, 20 B. 155; Naranji v. Bhagvandas, (1881) B.P.J. 238; contra per Westropp, C. J., in Bhala v. Parbhu, 2 B. 67 (72); Sanual Das v. Saiyid Ali, 22 A.L.J. 1018: (1925) A. 174.

(2) Bhaskar v. Vijalal, 17 B. 512.

(3) Chinnaya v. Gurunathan, 5 M. 169 F.B.; Sobhanadri v. Sriramulu, 17 M. 221 contra; Wajibun v. Kadir Buksh, 13 C. 292 (cannot acknowledge a debt even before it is barred—submitted unsound).

(4) S. 160, Comm.

(5) S. 133, Explanation 2.

(6) Bhagwat v. Nivratti, 39 B. 113.

(7) Himmat v. Bhawani, 30 A. 352.

(8) Ibid.

it was held that the widow had no right of residence, in priority to the right of her husband's creditors to be paid out of assets and to realize their dues out of the estate if not paid, and that the surety debt was a family debt which would bind the widow and defeat her right of maintenance including her right of residence.[1] The husband's debts recoverable from his widow may be set off against any debt due to her.[2]

150. (1) Save as provided in this section or in section 143, in an alienation made by the manager, he who relies upon the alienation must prove its validity.

(2) Provided that where the alienor was the father, his alienation will bind the son if the alienee can show that it was made for an antecedent debt;[3]

Bona fide transaction with the Manager.

(3) Provided further that where the manager or the heir contracts a debt or transfers property for consideration alleging the existence of justifying necessity or benefit, it will, as between the creditor or the transferee on the one part, and the manager or the heir and other persons (if any), affected by the debt or the transfer on the other part, be deemed to have existed, if the creditor or transferee, as the case may be, after using reasonable care to ascertain the existence of such circumstances, has acted in good faith;[4]

(4) The same rule extends to the father contracting a debt or transferring property in consideration of an antecedent debt.[5]

Illustrations.

(a) A, the manager, represents to B that the joint family property was proclaimed for sale for non-payment of revenue. B enquires and learns that it is so. He advances money to A, B sues A and the other members for his debt when it appeared that A had deceived B. B, however, shows that he had made independent enquiries which corroborated A's statement. B may recover, on the basis of A's statement which binds the family.

(b) A, a Hindu widow, whose husband has left collateral heirs alleging that the property held by her as such is insufficient for her maintenance, agrees, for purposes neither religious nor charitable, to sell a field, part of such property, to B. B satisfies himself by reasonable enquiry that the income of the property is insufficient for A's maintenance and that the sale of the field is necessary, and, acting in good faith, buys the field from A. As between B on the one part, A and the collateral heirs on the other part, a necessity for the sale shall be deemed to have existed.[6]

1308. Analogous Law.—This section is adapted from S. 38 of the Transfer of Property Act. Illustration (b) is the illustration appended to that section, which, however, by reason of S. 2, last clause, does not of its own force apply to Hindus though it enacts a rule which the Privy Council had enunciated as both equitable and as a part of Hindu Law.[7]

1309. Proof of Legal Necessity.—The question what constitutes legal necessity has already been considered. The question of its proof must

---

(1) Jayanti v. Mangamma, 27 M. 45; Bhagwanti v. MacDonald & Co., (1909) P.W.R. 152.

(2) Grish Chunder v. Dabea, 1 W.R. (Mis.) 24.

(3) Hanooman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393.

(4) Ib., Cf. S 38, T. P. Act.

(5) See S. 159.

(6) Cf. S. 38, T. P. Act; Anant Ram v. Collector, 40 A. 171 (175) P.C.

(7) Hunooman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (423, 424); Ramkrishna v. Ratan Chand, 53 A. 190 P.C.; Chintamani v. Satyabadi, 1 P. 715; Radha Ram v. Amar Chand, 4 L. 208; Abala Kondama v. Kandasamy, 51 I.A. 145.

largely depend upon the circumstanres of each case. But generally speaking, in considering this question regard must be had to the nature of the alienation made and the quantum of legal necessity by which it is supported. The nature of the alienation made has some bearing on the question, since if the alienation be a sale, the purchaser wants the property, or not all, whereas if it be a mortgage the mortgagee wants his money back and only failing that the property.

1310. Legal necessity may be proved by any evidence direct or indirect and it may, in certain cases, be even presumed. So where in an alienation for Rs. 5,000 the alienee had proved necessity for Rs. 4,400, but failed to prove it as regards the balance of Rs. 600, which the son equally failed to prove as contracted by the father for a purpose, either illegal or immoral, the court presumed it to have been equally supported by necessity.[1] So where the bulk of consideration of 3½ lacs was admitted, or proved, to be supported by legal necessity, it was presumed that the comparatively small sum of about Rs. 13,000, not specifically proved to be so supported was likewise so incurred.[2] Such presumption would be well justified where all adult members had joined in executing the sale, or where it was challenged after long lapse of time, e.g., 20 years after its execution.[3] In another case of sale by the father for Rs. 3,500, only the sum of Rs. 1,000 was proved as supported by necessity, but it appeared that the sale was made after due enquiry, and challenged after a long time, whereupon the Privy Council upheld the sale, and further held that the vendee was not even bound to refund the consideration found unsupported by necessity.[4]

Where legal necessity of numerous items in single accounts is to be proved, it does not appear to be either necessary, or in many cases possible, that the creditor should prove the necessity of each item in a long series of borrowings. "If it were, it would be impossible for a Hindu Saokar, keeping a running account with the manager of a family, to succeed in proving his account against the family. It will, we apprehend, be sufficient for the creditor to show that the family was in chronic need of money for the current outgoings of the family life or its trade necessities, and that the moneys were advanced on the representation of the manager that they were needed for such objects. And if the fair inference to be drawn from all circumstances of the case leaves no doubt in the mind of the court that the moneys were borrowed for family reasons, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed, although he is not able to indicate the particular purpose for which each sum has been borrowed."[5]

There may be legal necessity to borrow money, but no urgency to borrow it at an onerous rate of interest. The two pleas are not distinct and the latter is implied from a mere denial of the former.[6] So Lord Dunedin, delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, held that a plea in general terms denying necessity opens the defence that there was no necessity to borrow at the high rate of interest, and the onus of justifying the loan with the interest charged lies on the vendor, which, however, he may discharge

(1) Biswanath v. Jagdip, 40 C. 342 (351, 355).

(2) Hari Prasad v. Sourendra, 1 Pat. 506 (527, 528). But contra, Sallamat Khan v. Bhagwat, 52 A. 499.

(3) Hari Prasad v. Sourendra, 1 Pat. 506 (533).

(4) Sri Krishna Das v. Nathu Ram, 49 A. 149 P.C.; Balwant Singh v. Mt. Kesar Kuar, 15 L. 236.

(5) Hari Prasad v. Sourendra, 1 Pat. 506 (527, 528).

(6) Radhakishan v. Jug Shahu, 4 Pat. 19 P.C., overruling contra in Ainthu v. Khakhar, 1 Pat. 612 (616, 617).

by showing that the loan could not, in the circumstances, have been raised at less interest. But the mere evidence that once on a previous occasion a similar interest had been paid is not conclusive, though, of course, it is relevant.[1] Where the bulk of the consideration received by the sale of ancestral property is shown to be supported by legal necessity, the court is justified in presuming that the residue was not otherwise misspent. Thus where the father was shown to have discharged an antecedent debt by payment of all but Rs. 2,000 out of the consideration of Rs. 18,000, for which he sold an ancestral estate, the court dismissed the suit of the son holding the alienation justified, the more so because the father was colluding with the son in arranging his own sale.[2]

1311. Creditor's or Alienee's Title.—The creditor or alienee dealing with the manager of a joint family knows that he is dealing with its representative whose authority to charge the joint property is limited. Consequently, if he advances money without enquiry into the purpose of the loan he takes the risk. If his loan was in fact advanced for a purpose binding on the joint family, then he, of course, runs no risk. But if, on the other hand, the manager had falsely pledged the credit of the family, then the creditor can recover nothing beyond what represents the manager's interest in the joint property, for the manager, being the immediate party to the contract, cannot repudiate his own liability. For the same reason, where he chooses to deal with all the members of the joint family, then they are all bound and the question of enquiry is immaterial.

Necessity for Enquiry.

1312. Inquiry is only necessary when the creditor deals with the manager as such, and he is anxious to safeguard his interests against the manager's misrepresentation as to the necessity for the loan. It may be that the object of the loan is legal but it does not thence follow that the loan itself was necessary. For it is not thereby necessary that the loan should be for a lawful purpose. It is perhaps even more necessary that it should be necessary. This was emphasized by the Privy Council in the passage already cited from the leading case, in which they observed: "The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted, or the benefit to be conferred upon it in the particular instance, is the thing to be regarded."[3]. In other words, the manager is not entitled to borrow money for a lawful purpose, but only if it is necessary. In what circumstances it is so necessary must depend upon the circumstances of each case. The income received from the estate, its normal expenditure and the savings made are all matters which a prudent lender is bound to enquire about. If he does so enquire and finds that the manager has been mismanaging the estate, and that with better management the loan might have been wholly unnecessary, he is on that account to refuse the loan, even if it is justified by the pressure of the moment. It will thus be seen that as a measure of caution it is always prudent to enquire, and the lender who omits this precaution, hazards his money which he may never see again.

---

(1) Radhakishun v. Jug Shahu, 4 Pat. 19 (22, 23) P.C., following Nazir Begum v. Rao Raghunath, 41 A. 571 P.C.; Ram Bhagwan v. Nathu Ram, 2 Pat. 285 (292) P.C.; Mahadeo v. Bessesswar, 2 Pat. 488; Parmeshwar v. Rai Kishan, 3 Pat. 829; Raghunath v. Sri Narain, 45 A. 484; Durga Prasad v. Jewdhari, 62 C. 773.

(2) Masitullah v. Damodar, 48 A. 518 P.C.; Jagannath v. Shri Nath, 56 A. 123 P.C.

(3) Hunooman Persaud v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (423).

1313. Nature and Extent of Inquiry.—Assuming, however, that the lender does inquire, the next question that arises is what should be the nature and extent of that inquiry. It is obvious that such inquiry must be made from one who is in a position to know. It is equally obvious that it must be made from an independent source, and not from one who is interested in upholding the manager. The question must, of course, depend upon the facts of each case, the nature of the necessity, and the avenues of information available to the lender. He is not bound to sit in a star chamber but at the same time, he owes a duty to himself and to his absent obligors whose estate he seeks to bind, that he should conduct his inquiry in a prudent and business like way.

Where the joint family comprises adult members, common prudence dictates that he should consult them all, or at least such as are accessible to him. If some of them be minors, their guardian should be consulted. If the borrower is the widow, her reversioners are the persons to inquire from; if the father, the sons should be consulted. In short, the lender must take pains to consult those whose interest would be affected by his act. Where all coparceners advise the loan, the creditor need not do more. His difficulty only arises when any or some of them are minors. He has then to be more circumspect. He must inquire into the purpose of the loan. If, for instance, any amount is due from the joint family for purposes mentioned in Ss. 98, 99, 100 or from the father his antecedent loan, it is his duty to inquire from those best qualified to supply him with correct information.[1]

Notice Presumed.

1314. In this connection it is well to note that the lender is deemed to have notice of a fact not only when he actually knows that fact, but also "when but for wilful abstention from an inquiry or search which he ought to have made, or gross negligence, he would have known it, or when information of the fact is given to, or obtained by his agent under circumstances mentioned in the Indian Contract Act, 1878, S. 229."[2]

1315. Value of Recitals.—The results of the inquiry are often recited in the lender's security. The question arises what evidentiary value these recitals have. In the leading Privy Council case it was said: "that the representations by the manager accompanying the loan as part of the res gestae and as the contemporaneous declarations of an agent, though not actually selected by the principal, have been held to be evidence against the heir."[3] But though admissible, they are not of themselves without other independent evidence, when available, sufficient to constitute proof of their truth, though when other evidence has, through lapse of time, become unobtainable, then they would be sufficient proof of the fact they state.[4]

And the contrary might be proved by calling in the scribe or other attesting witnesses.

Attestation.

1316. Similarly, it is usual in this country to obtain the attestation of persons whom the obligee intends to bind by the deed. But a different rule has come into

(1) See the subject discussed in 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), §§ 691-703.

(2) S. 3, Transfer of Property Act, and ib., Trusts Act.

(3) Hunooman Persaud v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (419, 420); Dwarka Ram v. Bakshi Purnaw Prasad Singh, 14 Pat. 595.

(4) Banga Chandra v. Jagat Kishore, 44 C. 186 (195, 196) P.C.

vogue in accordance with the practice of the English courts, where an attesting witness is not presumed to know anything of the contents of the deed and is not consequently estopped by its recitals.[1] This is a natural presumption due to the habits of the people where the attesting witnesses ordinarily know nothing of the deed. But the very contrary should be presumed here when no one outside the Anglicized Indians, would ever dream of signing a deed without knowing all about it. In fact, no document is ever penned in this country which is not discussed by the scribe, the attesting witnesses and the junto of quidnuncs who surround such transactions. The presumption of law here should certainly be that the attesting witnesses knew its contents. But as it is, the contrary has been laid down by English Judges who have presumed their own social habits as equally applicable to the people of India. However, it is only a presumption.

Quantum of Evidence.

1317. It is, of course, on the creditor or the alienee to prove the factum and validity of his transaction affecting the joint family.[2] The quantum of evidence necessary to support the justifying necessity must, of course, vary according to the circumstances of each case. As the Privy Council observed: "It is obvious, however, that it might be unreasonable to require such proof from one not an original party, after a lapse of time and enjoyment and apparent acquiescence; consequently, if, as is the case here, as to part of the charge, it be created by substitution of a new security for an older one, where the consideration for the older one was an old precedent debt of ancestor not previously questioned, a presumption of the kind contended for by the appellant would be reasonable."[3]

1318. Excessive Alienation.—It has already been stated, (§ 1202) and is so held by the Privy Council that, granted the legal necessity for a loan, it is more advantageous to borrow money on a mortgage than on parol, since money on mortgage being better secured ordinarily carries a lower rate of interest. Again, even the raising of money on a mortgage might be an imprudent act if there is no prospect of its repayment. In that case a sale might be justified, though, since sale is the permanent alienation of the joint property, only so much of it should be sold as would suffice to meet the necessity. But this rule does not apply where the excess is small or where the money really required cannot otherwise be raised.[4]

Effect of invalid transfer.

151. Where an alienation by the manager is found to be void, its effect upon the interest of the alienor is subject to the following rules:—

(1) Where the alienation was voluntarily made by the manager subject to the Mitakshara law as applied in Behar, Bengal, the United Provinces, Oudh and the Punjab, it is wholly void, subject however to such restitution and compensation to the alienee as the requirements of equity may demand.[5]

(2) Where however, in the provinces last mentioned, the alienation is involuntary, and in all other provinces whether it is voluntary

(1) Hunooman Persaud v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (419, 420); Harikishun v. Kashi Pershad, 42 C. 876 (886, 887) P.C.; Banga Chandra v. Jagat Kishore, 44 C. 186 (199) P.C.

(2) Gurusami v. Gopalaswami, 36 M. L.J. 588: 50 I.C. 775; but the case of a trading family is different, ib.

(3) Hunooman Persaud v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (420).

(4) Luchmeedhar v. Eqbal Ali, 8 W.R. 75.

(5) See S. 126 (6), ante.

or otherwise, on the alienation being found void against the joint family, the alienee is entitled to obtain his alienor's interest therein.

(3) Without prejudice to the generality of the rule stated in Clause (1) due regard must be had to the following facts:—

(a) The representation made by the alienee as to the necessity of the alienation;

(b) The enquiries, if any, made by the alienee into the same;

(c) Improvements made by him;

(d) The fact that the unconditional rescission of the alienation will benefit the alienor;

(e) Collusion between the alienor and his coparceners;

(f) Acquiescence and delay in challenging the alienation.

1319. Analogous Law.—It has already been seen (§ 126 (6)) that the right of transfer of coparcenary interest is variously interpreted by the Indian courts, and this variation is now recognized as settling the principle applicable to various localities. Thus in the Mitakshara territory, subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of Calcutta, Patna, Allahabad, Lucknow and Lahore, a coparcenary interest is not transferable except with the consent of all the coparceners, or in case of necessity, while it may be transferred for consideration in the Central Provinces, Bombay and Madras, and in Bengal, in the area subject to the Dayabhag law, it may be transferred even without consideration. But even in the former provinces, though a coparcenary interest is not voluntarily transferable, the purchaser is entitled to an equity which is stronger if he is an auction purchaser,[1] who is entitled to realize his interest by partition to the same extent that the debtor was entitled to do.[2] But this right does not accrue to a mere voluntary alienee from a coparcener, nor to a creditor who had not acquired his equity by at least attachment of his debtor's interest during his lifetime.[3] But if the debtor was the father, then the pious obligation of the son to discharge his father's liability would give the creditor similar equity,[4] which he may enforce during the father's lifetime, or on his death, if the chance for its enforcement is not barred by time.[5] Again, the representation of legal necessity and bona fide belief therein by the creditor after due enquiry, protects the creditor in an alienation, whether voluntary or involuntary, even in the United Provinces where coparcenary interest is inalienable.[6] Again, where the alienor is the father, the rule against alienability would give way if the consideration for his alienation was an antecedent debt.[7]

Powers of other Managers.

152. The provisions relating to the power of the manager to contract debts and alienate or charge the joint estate generally apply to—

(1) A manager whether subject to the Mitakshara or the Dayabhag law.

---

(1) S. 126 (6), Comm.

(2) Deen Dyal v. Jugdeep, 3 C. 198 (209) P.C., (a case from Gaya).

(3) Madho Prashad v. Mehrban, 18 C. 157 (163) P.C. followed in Lachman v. Sarnam, 39 A. 500 (505) P.C.

(4) Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 39 A. 437 (444) P.C.

(5) S. 160.

(6) Mahabir v. Ramyad, 12 B.L.R. 90: 20 W.R. 192, explained in Lachman v. Sarnam Singh, 39 A. 500 (504) P.C.; Manna Lal v. Kaku Singh, 1 P.L.T. 6 P.C. 56 I.C. 766.

(7) Mahabir v. Maheswar, 17 C. 584 P.C.

(2) The widow managing property inherited by her minor son.
(3) The guardian of a minor's estate.
(4) The manager of a religious endowment.
(5) The manager of the estate of a lunatic.

1320. Analogous Law.—The powers set out in section 149 apply to a manager both of a Mitakshara and of a Dayabhag family.[1] They extend equally to the manager of an infant's estate, whether the infant be a real or a jurisdical person such as an idol or a shrine.[2] In each case the powers of the manager must necessarily vary according to the nature of the property and the incidents attaching to it. So again, while the manager of the Mitakshara family possesses the same powers as the manager of a Dayabhag family, his position approximates more closely to that of a trustee than in the case of a family governed by the Mitakshara law.[3]

1321. The manager of a lunatic is indistinguishable from the manager of a family of infant coparceners,[4] and so is the guardian of a minor or the manager of a religious endowment.[5] But though the powers of the joint family manager and of the other managers are analogous, they are not identical, as will be seen in the sequel where the powers of the latter are set out. That they are analogous arises from the fact that by whatever name they may be called they are managers. That their powers are not identical arises from the fact that while the father as manager has historically inherited much larger powers as a relic of his autocratic powers which he wielded as the pater familias, the other manager, being a coparcener and a close relation of the other coparceners is necessarily given a larger discretion than any other manager. But though the different managers may differ in their measure of authority, there is really no difference between them in principle and all are equally entitled to incur debts or to charge or alienate property which is the subject of their management for the sake of "necessity" or "benefit" as already defined.

Onus of Proof: Presumptions.

153. Onus of proof in certain suits by or against a coparcener.

(1) In a suit against a coparcener to recover a debt incurred or to enforce an alienation of coparcenary property made by the manager, the creditor or the alienee is bound to prove that the debt of the alienation is binding upon the coparcener.[6]

(2) In a suit by a coparcener for the recovery of coparcenary property sold by the manager, the coparcener is bound to prove that the sale is not binding on him and that the purchaser had notice thereof.[7]

---

(1) Hanuman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393; Ram Nath v. Kusum Kumari, 4 C.L.J. 56; Kunja Behari v. Nemi Chand, 2 I.C. (C.) 526 (529).

(2) Doorganath v. Ramchander, 2 C. 341 P.C.; Sheo Shanker v. Ram Shewak, 24 C. 77; Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 39 A. 437 (448) P.C.; Jogi Dass v. Ganga Ram, 21 C.W.N. 957 P.C.

(3) Balkrishna v. Muthusamy, 32 M. 371; Annamalai v. Murugesa, 26 M. 544 P.C.

(4) Annapurnabai v. Durgapa, (1896) B.P.J. 371.

(5) Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 39 A. 437 (443) P.C.

(6) Anant Ram v. Collector, 40 A. 171 (175) P.C.; Banga Chandra v. Jagat Kishore, 44 C. 186 P.C.; Dwarka Ram v. Bakshi Purnaw Prasad Singh, 14 Pat. 596; Abdul Majid v. Saraswati, (1934) P.C. 4; Narain v. Political Agent, 7 Bom.L.R. 172; Soiru v. Narayanarao, 18 B. 520; Krishna v. Vasudev, 21 B. 808. But the effect of long possession and acquiescence is different: Murugesam v. Manickavasaka, 40 M. 402 P.C.

(7) Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Persad, 5 C.

(3) In a suit by a coparcener for the recovery of property mortgaged by the manager, the mortgagee is bound to prove that the mortgage is binding on the coparcener.[1]

1322. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by decided cases. The authority of both the father and the manager being limited as regards the alienation of joint property, the burden of proving that a mortgage executed by them was within their power as representative of the family is necessarily on the mortgagee,[2] whether the mortgagor be the father or any other manager. As the Privy Council observed: "Responsibility to meet the father's debt is one thing, and the validity of a mortgage over the joint estate is quite another thing".[3]

1323. Proof of Pressure.—It has already been seen that necessity implies pressure; but pressure may be of varying strength. And in order to make out a case of legal necessity it must be shewn to be such as justified the alienation in question. Again, a pressure may be such as calls for a loan, but it may not be sufficient to justify a loan at the high interest stipulated. Initially it will suffice if the creditor or alienee proves the pressure impelling the transaction in question. If then the alienor questions its propriety on the ground of its excessiveness it will be on the alienee to justify it,[4] Legal necessity and pressure may often be inferred from the fact of repeated borrowings.

154. In a suit by a coparcener for the recovery of coparcenary property sold in execution of a decree against the manager, the coparcener is bound to prove that the debt, sale or mortgage on which the decree was passed is not binding on him, and that the purchaser had notice thereof:[5]

Suit by coparcener to recover property sold in execution of decree against Manager.

Provided that the purchaser (not being the judgment-creditor) shall not be bound to inquire into anything not appearing in the decree or in the execution proceedings.[6]

1324. Analogous Law.—This section is drawn from the decided cases. Joint property may pass out of the family by a voluntary or compulsory sale. Of these, the court is especially concerned in protecting

---

148 (178) P.C.; Nanomi v. Madun Mohun, 13 C. 21 P.C.; Bhagabut Pershad v. Girja Koer, 15 C. 717 P.C.; Minakshi v. Kanaka Ramayya, 12 M. 142 P.C.

(1) Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (171) P.C.

(2) Obala Kondama v. Kondasamy, 51 I.A. 145: 1924 P.C. 56; Sitaramasami v. Midatana, 6 M. 400; Sami v. Ponnammal, 21 M. 28; Venkataramanaya v. Venkataramna, 29 M. 200 F.B., overruling contra in Chidambara v. Kootha-perumal, 27 M. 326 P.C.; Guruswamy v. Gopalswamy, 42 M. 629; Bheknarain v. Januk Singh, 2 C. 438; Luchmun v. Girdur, 5 C. 855; Jamna v. Nain Sukh, 9 A. 493.

(3) Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 39 A. 437 (443, 444) P.C.; to the same effect, Hunooman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (421); Girdhari Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B.L.R. 187 P.C.; Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 P.C.; Mahabir v. Moheshwar, 17 C. 584 P.C.; Madho Pershad v. Mehrban, 18 C. 157 P.C.

(4) Jag Sahu v. Radha Kishen, 4 Pat. 19: (1920) Pat. 211: 56 I.C. 867.

(5) Bhanga Chandra v. Jagat Kishore, 44 C. 183 P.C.; Dwarka Ram v. Bakshi, 14 Pat. 595 (605, 606).

(6) Muddun Thakoor v. Kantoo Lal, 14 B.L.R. 187 P.C.; Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Persad, 5 C. 148 (172, 173) P.C.; Bhagbut Pershad v. Mt. Girja Koer, 15 C. 717 P.C.; Gajadhar v. Jadubir, 47 A. 122, followed in Jihan Singh v. Hardat Singh, 57 A. 357.

the title of the auction-purchaser, for without such protection no one will purchase at such sales.[1]

This protection is subject to the two following rules, namely:—

Firstly.—That where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debts, his sons by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts cannot recover that property, unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes, and that the purchasers had notice that they were so contracted; and

Secondly.—That the purchasers at an execution sale, being strangers to the suit, if they have no notice that the debts were so contracted, are not bound to make inquiry beyond what appears on the face of the proceedings.[2] These were all cases of the son challenging his father's alienation. But the same principle would apply to the sale by any other manager. The only difference between the two would be that on the sale being found to be void if the sale was a voluntary one, then the transferee could not claim even his transferor's interest.[3] This is, however, quite a different question and is the subject of another section.

Sale of coparcenary property not presumed to pass interest of coparcener.

155. A sale of co-parcenary property in execution of a decree passed against the manager, which may be executed against the interest of a co-parcener other than the manager in the co-parcenary property, shall not be deemed to include the right, title and interest of the coparcener unless that intention is proved.[4]

1325. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by case-law. It prescribes a rule of construction applicable to ambiguous decrees passed against the manager of a joint family, without express mention of the fact that it is passed against him in that capacity. In such case, the rule is that a decree against the manager shall not be presumed to be a decree against him in his representative capacity, thus entitling the decree-holder to seize all co-parcenary property of which he was the manager. The question whether the decree is against the manager personally or against him as representing the coparcenary is a question of fact, which the decree-holder has to prove and thus overcome the natural presumption that a decree against a person is presumably personal, though it may in reality involve the whole family. The rule is the same whether the decree be against the father or any other manager.[5] In such a case, the questions to consider are the nature of the debt and its binding character on the son and other co-parcener, the interest intended to be sold and the interest which the purchaser had bargained and paid for.

---

(1) Jinnuk Kishore (Mt.) v. Raghunandan, (1861) S.D.A.B. 213, followed in Girdharee Lal v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B.L.R. 87 P.C.; Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Persad, 5 C. 148 (170) P.C.

(2) Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 P.C.; Jamna v. Nain Sukh, 9 A. 493; Chandra Deo v. Mata Prasad, 31 A. 176; Sukhdeo v. Jhapat, (1920) Pat. 67 (71).

(3) Deen Dyal v. Jugdeep Narain, 3 C. 198 (209) P.C.

(4) Hurdey Narain v. Rooder Perkash, 10 C. 626 P.C.; Nanomi v. Modun, 13 C. 21 P.C.; Simbunath v. Golab Singh, 14 C. 572 P.C.; Maruti v. Babaji, 15 B. 87.

(5) Nanomi v. Modun Mohun, 13 C. 21 (36) P.C.

156. (1) A decree passed against the manager in respect of a liability incurred within the scope of his authority is enforceable against the other members of the joint family, though they may not have been parties to the suit;[1]

Decrees against the Manager when enforceable against Coparcener.

(2) But in such case the other members are not precluded from contesting the authority of the manager or the binding nature of the debt;[2]

(3) Where a decree directs sale of the right, title and interest of the defendant in any property, the question whether the sale so made suffices to pass the entire estate of which the defendant was the manager or only his own interest, is one of construction and intention to be gathered from the proceedings and other circumstances of the case;[3]

(4) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing principle, in determining this question the following facts are material:—

(a) The nature of the contract, if any;
(b) The character of the debt;
(c) The capacity in which the defendant is sued;
(d) The intention of the court;
(e) The price paid by the purchaser; and
(f) Any fact which shows what interest he intended to purchase.

Illustration.

A decree is passed against the father A, for sale of his interest in mouza B, which is his family property. C objects to the sale of anything beyond A's interest therein on the ground that the decree was obtained for A's immoral debt. He fails to prove it. The sale conveys the entirety of B.

1326. Analogous Law.—This rule follows from the last which recognizes the manager as the accredited representative of all members of the joint family in a suit, who are necessarily bound by any adjudication made therein and any decree passed thereon. It has now been so settled by the Privy Council[4] in which the manager was held to fully represent the other members and his failure to redeem the joint property was held to effectively destroy the right of redemption of the entire coparcenary.

It is immaterial whether the manager was the father or any other relation,[5] and whether he had sued or was sued as the representative of the family; though in such cases, it is open to the sons or other coparceners to to show, either in execution or in a suit of their own, that the decree does not affect their interests, either because the manager did not in fact represent them or that the nature of the liability was such as not to bind their interests,[6] as where the manager had acted in fraud of their rights, or that his interests were adverse to those of the other coparceners.

---

(1) Sheo Shankar v. Jaddo Kunwar, 36 A. 383 (386, 387) P.C.

(2) Nanomi v. Modun Mohun, 13 C. 21 P.C. and cases cited in Comm.

(3) Bhikaji v. Yeswantrav, 8 B. 489.

(4) Jaddo Kunwar v. Sheo Shankar, 33 A. 71, affirmed O.A.; Sheo Shankar v. Jaddo Kunwar, 36 A. 383 (386, 387) P.C.

(5) Jogendra v. Funindro, 14 M.I.A. 367 (376); Bissessur v. Luchmessur, 5 C.L.R. 477 P.C.; Narayan v. Pandurang, 5 B. 685; Gansavant v. Narayan, 7 B. 467; Ram Krishna v. Vinayak, 12 Bom.L.R. 219; Lal Singh v. Jagraj Singh, 50 A. 546 (558). (A decree against the father presumed to be against him qua manager).

(6) Nanomi v. Modun Mohun, 13 C. 21 P.C.; Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B.L.R. 187 P.C.; Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 P.C.; Bhagbat

Clause (3).

1327. An auction-purchaser purchases whatever right, title and interest his judgment-debtor may possess in the property at the date of attachment. He cannot set up the title of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice. Consequently, where the judgment-debtor's indeterminate interest is sold, the purchaser's title will depend upon determination of the question what interest his judgment-debtor had which the court could and did sell. If, for instance, the decree is against the father for his separate debt not binding on the son, the sale would convey to the purchaser only the father's interest.[1] An auction-purchaser who is a stranger to the suit is not presumed to have notice of the character of the debt, though the case is different when the purchaser is the execution-creditor himself.[2]

Clause (2).

1328. Where a decree is passed against a person, possessing a dual character, personal and representative, his later character may not appear on the fact of the decree, in which case, it is for the executing court to inquire to what extent the decree was intended to cover the interest of persons other than the designated judgment-debtor.[3] A son may show that the decree passed against his father does not warrant seizure of his interest, which would be a question relating to execution without affecting the decree. The question in such a case would be as to how far the terms of the decree precluded the trial of such questions. So where the father mortgaged "his right and interest" in a certain village which was decreed and sold and those words were used in the sale-certificate to define the interest sold to the purchaser, the question arose what interest those words conveyed, whether that of the father alone or that of the entire family, represented by himself and the four sons. The latter sued for a declaration that only the father's interest passed, but the Subordinate Judge dismissed their suit holding that, since two of the sons had consented to the mortgage, it referred to the entirety of the mortgaged property. The High Court reversed this decree, holding that prima facie the father conveyed his own interest and this decision the Privy Council upheld on the ground that the sons were not made parties to the execution proceedings, adding: "If Bichuk relied on assent by the sons, he should have taken care to make them parties to the execution proceedings. In Deen Dyal's case,[4] where the expressions used by the mortgagor were much more favourable to the conveyance of the entirely than they are here, the creditor's omission of the sons from the proceedings was made a material circumstance against him. And in Nanomi Babuasin's case,[5] where the decision was in favour of the purchaser, the same circumstance was recognized as being material when the expressions by which the estate is conveyed to the purchaser are susceptible of application either to the entirety or the father's co-parcenary interest alone."[6] Then they added: "That when a man conveys his right and interest and nothing more, he does not prima facie intend to convey

---

Pershad v. Girja Koer, 15 C. 717 (723, 724) P.C.; Mahabir v. Moheswar, 17 C. 584 P.C.

(1) Bhikaji v. Yeswantrav, 8 B. 489.

(2) Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Prasad, 5 C. 148 P.C., explained in Kumbali v. v. Keshava, 11 M. 64 (72, 73).

(3) Ss. 47 (3); 53 C.P.C. (settling judicial conflict.)

(4) Deen Dyal v. Jugdeep, 3 C. 198 P.C.

(5) Nanomi Babuasin v. Modun Mohan, 13 C. 21 P.C.

(6) Simbhu Nath v. Golapsingh, 14 C. 572 (578, 579) P.C.

also rights and interests presently vested in others, even though the law may give him the power to do so. Nor do they think that a purchaser who is bargaining for the entire family estate would be satisfied with a document purporting to convey only the right and interest of the father."[1]

1329. Their Lordships also adverted to the fact that the creditor had taken no steps to bind the sons and that the price obtained appeared to be nearer the value of the father's share than that of the entirety. This case is instructive. For it shows that the mere fact that the decree is obtained against the manager, would not necessarily carry with it the implication that it embraces the entire interest of the joint family. The question is one of construction and intention.[2] So in another case where the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor were sold, and his sons claimed exemption of their shares, the court examined the proceedings and found that since the defendant had been sued for arrears of land revenue which were a common liability of the family of which he was the manager, the decree must be taken to have intended to direct the sale of the entirety of the family property, which was held prima facie liable for the claim.[3] The fact that the junior members of the family are no parties to the proceedings is material but not conclusive, since the question still remains whether they were not represented by their manager.[4]

1330. In suits by or against the manager, the first question that the court has to examine is the capacity in which the manager sues or is sued. If it be found that he was not sued in his representative character, no further question would arise, but if on the other hand it is not certain in what capacity he was sued, then the court would have to examine the pleadings to determine the nature of the obligation and the extent to which it bound the family. If it appears that the manager was sued for a trade debt in respect of a business carried on for the benefit of the family, then the latter are unquestionably liable.[5] If the debt in respect of which the suit was filed was the father's debt, the fact that he was the holder of an impartible zemindari would not prevent the decree from being binding on the successor. So, in a case where the Zemindar had contracted several debts, unsecured and secured, on parts of the zemindari, and on the suit of a creditor the whole estate was attached, after which the Zemindar having died, his son was brought on the record and he objected to the sale of his interest, but the court ordered sale and sold "the right title and interest of the late Zemindar" to a stranger. On the question arising as to what interest passed to the purchaser, the court held that in view of the debt of the father and the small price paid by the purchaser, what was intended to be sold was the life-interest of the father and not the whole interest in the zemindari.[6] The fact that an execution sale took place under an erroneous view of the law that no more than the life-interest of the Zemindar could be sold, would not enlarge the interest of the purchaser, if it is afterwards held that it was competent to the court to dispose of the entire interest.[7] As Lord Watson observed in another case of a sale in

Cl. (3). Pleading Must Be Examined.

(1) Simbhu Nath v. Golapsingh, 14 C. 572 (578, 580).
(2) Mahabir v. Moheswar, 17 C. 584.
(3) Hitendra v. Rameshar, 18 C.W. N. 42 (49).
(4) Daulat Ram v. Meharchand, 15 C. 70 P.C.; Bhagbut v. Grija, 15 C. 717 P. C.
(5) Umbica Prasad v. Ram Sahay, 8 C. 898 (907, 908).
(6) Pettachi v. Sangili, 10 M. 241 (250, 251) P.C.
(7) Abdul Aziz v. Appayasami, 27 M. 131 (142) P.C.

execution of a money decree: "The questions are what did the court intend to sell, and what did the purchaser understand that he bought."[1] These are questions of mixed law and fact, and must be determined according to the evidence in the particular case.[2] In cases of this kind the substance and not the mere technicalities of the transaction should be regarded.[3]

1331. So where in execution of a mortgage decree against the father of a joint Mitakshara family who alone was a party to the mortgage decree and the execution proceedings, the son objected to the sale of the entire estate on the ground that the father's debt was illegal and immoral and the order for sale was amended by adding the words "right, title and interest" of the judgment-debtor, which, the court however added, was intended to define what was actually sold. The son sued for a declaration that his interest was exempt, but it was found that the father's debts were for legal and necessary purposes and the Privy Council held that as the sale was of an indeterminate interest, the definition of which depended upon the character of the debts, and that as these were found to be legal, the interest which the purchaser took was the entire estate including the share of the son.[4] The contrary was held in another case in which the son succeeded in proving that the father had contracted the debt by fraudulently mortgaging a certain mouza to which he was not entitled.[5] There is no necessity to inquire into the nature of the debt if it is found that no more than the father's interest was sold. Such enquiry is only necessary when it is doubtful as to what was sold.[6]

1332. The facts that the decree was a mere money decree and the defendant, the father, against whom it was passed are material but does not suffice to convey the son's interest in the joint property since it is not for every debt of the father that the son is liable. If, however, the debt is shown to be the antecedent or necessary debt of the father, or there appears in anything from the record that the father was sued as head of the family, then the entire estate would pass on sale.[7]

Clause (4).

1333. But the coparcener whose interest is put up for sale is entitled to show that it could not pass, either because the manager did not represent him or that the debt was not of such a nature as to convey his interest.[8] In the case of a money decree against the father, the presumption is that only the father's interest is sold. It is all that passes to the auction-purchaser.[9] But this presumption may be rebutted by special circumstances showing an intention to sell the entire interest of the family in the property.[10] Where

(1) Pettachi v. Sangili, 10 M. 241 (248) P.C.

(2) Abdul Aziz v. Appayasami, 27 M. 131 (142) P.C.

(3) Sripat Singh v. Tagore, 44 C. 524 P.C., following Mahabir v. Moheswar, 17 C. 584 P.C.

(4) Sripat Singh v. Tagore, 44 C. 524 (533) P.C.; Meenakshi* v. *Immudi, 12 M. 142 P.C.; Cooverji v. Dewsey, 17 B. 718.

(5) Ram Sahai v. Kewal Singh, 9 A. 672.

(6) Bika Singh v. Lachman Singh, 2 A. 800 (805).

(7) Kagal Ganpaya v. Munjappa, 12 B. 691; Kunhali v. Keshav, 11 M. 64.

(8) Bhagbut Pershad v. Girja Koer, 15 C. 777 P.C.; Mahabir v. Maheswar, 17 C. 584 P.C.; Nanomi v. Modun Mohan, 13 C. 21 P.C.; Beni Parshad v. Puranchand, 23 C. 262 (276, 277).

(9) Maruti v. Babaji, 15 B. 87 following Hurdey Narain v. Ruder, 10 C. 626 P.C.; Simbunath v. Golab Singh, 14 C. 572 P.C.

(10) Nanomi v. Modun Mohan, 13 C. 21 P.C.; Minakshi v. Immuddi, 12 M. 142 P.C.; Mahabir v. Moheshwar, 17 C. 589 P.C.; explained in Maruti v. Babaji, 15 B. 87 (89).

only the father's interest passes to the purchaser all that the purchaser can claim against a Mitakshara family is to enforce his vendor's right to partition.[1]

Mortgage Debt.

1334. There is a distinction between a money claim against the father and one made to enforce the father's mortgage of the family property. A decree in the one case, presumably affects only the father's interest; in the other case it relates presumably to the entire property mortgaged.[2] But the question is scarcely one for presumption, being rather one of fact as to what the father intended to mortgage.[3]

Father's Fraud.

1335. The sons are not bound by the father's illegal or immoral debt. And they may show it at any stage of the suit whenever their own interests are in jeopardy. So where the father professed to mortgage a certain zemindari in which he had no interest of any kind, whereupon the mortgagee sued him for recovery of the debt upon his personal covenant and in execution had his right, title and interest sold to an auction-purchaser who claimed the son's share on the ground that the decree was against the father, the court had no difficulty in exempting the son's claim on the ground that the debt was tainted with fraud and that the son's interest, therefore, could not and did not pass.[4]

Joinder of Parties.

157. In a suit instituted to enforce a mortgage executed by the manager, the other members are proper parties, but their non-joinder does not exempt them from liability, if it appears that they were sufficiently represented by the manager.[5]

1336. Analogous Law.—This section is explanatory of Or. XXXIV, R. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure which requires the joinder, in a mortgage suit, of all persons interested either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption. This rule was S. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, which had been the subject of much conflict of views discussed in another place.[6] But whatever conflict there may have been in the past, the view of the Privy Council supports this section, for they say: "There seems to be no doubt upon the Indian decisions (from which their Lordships see no reason to dissent) that there are occasions, including foreclosure actions when the manager of a joint Hindu family so effectively represents all other members of the family that the family as a whole is bound."[7] Their Lordships found that the case before them was one in which there was not the slightest ground for suggesting that the managers had failed to act in the interest of the family and this is the test. In that case the mortgagee had sued the mortgagor and his subsequent mortgagees who were members of a joint family. A decree was passed against them. But as they failed to redeem the prior mortgage, their interests were foreclosed, whereupon the minor members sued for redemption, claiming that right on the ground that they should have been impleaded by the prior

(1) Hurdey Narain v. Ruder, 10 C. 626 P.C., following Deen Dyal v. Jugdeep, 3 C. 198 P.C. To the same effect Collector v. Hurdai, 5 C. 425; Ram Sahai v. Kewal Singh, 9 A. 672.

(2) Hurdey Narain v. Ruder Perkash, 10 C. 626 P.C., explained in Kunbali v. Keshawa, 11 M. 64 (75).

(3) Kunbali v. Keshava, 11 M. 64 (76).

(4) Ram Sahai v. Kewal Singh, 9 A. 672.

(5) Sheo Shanker v. Jaddo Kunwar, 36 A. 383 P.C.

(6) See 2 Gour's Law of Transfer, (5th Ed.), §§ 2325-2330.

(7) Sheo Shanker v. Jaddo Kunwar, 36 A. 383 (386, 387) P.C., followed in Guran Ditta v. Pokhas Ram, 8 L. 693.

mortgagee and that his failure to implead them could not imperil their right. But the Privy Council rejected their claim, holding that they were sufficiently represented through their manager.

This case then settles the rule here stated. The manager has the authority to sue and be sued in respect of all transactions including mortgages, on behalf of the family of which he is the accredited representative, and all decrees obtained by or against him are decrees for or against the family.

At the same time, should any coparcener desire that he should be impleaded in a suit, it is always open to the court to join him, as direct representation is in every way preferable.

1337. The law reports teem with cases in which the courts have discussed the consequence of non-joinder of members of a joint family. They have now no practical value. But the question may sometimes be whether a person sued or was sued as a manager or as a member of the family. This is a question of fact, which must be decided with reference to the nature of the claim and the pleadings in each case.

CHAPTER XI.

THE FATHER'S DEBTS AND ALIENATIONS.

1338. Topical Introduction.—That the father is endowed with larger powers and greater discretion in the management of the coparcenary property is the survival of the ancient right he had as pater familias, in which capacity, he was at one time entitled to own not only all that the family possessed, but even the members of his family, namely, his wives and children. "Three persons," says Manu, "a wife, a son, and a slave, are declared by law to have, in general, no wealth exclusively their own: the wealth which they may earn is regularly acquired by the man to whom they belong."[1] But, in later years, this autocratic power was curtailed, and by the time the Mitakshara was composed, the son had acquired a vested right in his patrimony, but the father still retained some of the vestiges of his earlier privileges, which gave him a position of special eminence in the household. But all his special powers are, nevertheless, incidental to his management, and with special reference to his own issue. Indeed, as manager, he has no greater power than any other manager, though in point of practice, he is permitted a larger discretion. But as father, and even when he is no longer the manager, he is entitled to incur debts and make alienations, by which his issues are bound; for, when it is said that the sons are under a pious obligation to discharge their father's debts, the reference is to his personal debts, and not debts incurred as their managing representative. In this respect, when the father and the manager are not the same, the coparceners have a dual liability—first towards their manager, and secondly, towards their father. A further conflict is possible if the father and the manager of a joint family business are not the same. In such case, it is clear that the father's power to alienate property for his own debt, not illegal and immoral, may be in conflict with the manager's power of alienation for legal necessity or benefit. But no such conflict has yet arisen in practice, though it is quite conceivable. In this chapter, the debts and alienations of the father have reference to him as the father, and not as the manager of a joint family. When he is also the manager, his rights and duties are those of any other manager, which have already been set out in the previous chapter. The rights which he possesses and which are the subject of this chapter, are those which he still enjoys as the relics of his patriarchal days.

1339. In this chapter, the term "father" must be understood to include, also the grandfather and the great-grandfather, and the term "son" the grandson and the great grandson. That the son, the grandson, and the great-grandson are all equally liable for the acts, borrowings and alienations of their father, grandfather, and great grandfather is now settled by the Privy Council,[2] who must be deemed to have overruled the

---

(1) Manu, VIII-416.

(2) Masitullah v. Damodar, 48 A. 518 (526, 527) P.C.; contra in Ram Deo v. Gopal Koeri, 16 C.W.N. 383 : 13 I.C. 349.

contrary held in the earlier texts and cases. This will be obvious from the definition of "issue", "father" and "son" in section 112.

Illegal and immoral debt defined.

158. (1) An "illegal or immoral debt," with reference to the father's debt, means not only such debt as is tainted with illegality or immorality as commonly understood, but also a debt which is regarded as avyavaharik, that is to say, unusual or not customary:[1]

Explanation 1.—A debt is illegal or immoral if it results from an act ab initio criminal, and not only one which is merely wrongful or which merely involves a breach of civil duty;

Explanation 2.—A liability to indemnify an innocent person against the illegal or immoral act of the father is not necessarily illegal or immoral;

Explanation 3.—A debt is not illegal or immoral merely because it is recklessly or imprudently incurred.

Antecedent debt defined.

(2) An "antecedent debt" with reference to an alienation made by the father, means, a debt (not illegal or immoral) incurred, whether on the security of the coparcenary property or not, prior to such alienation in a transaction unconnected therewith, and includes a debt to pay off such a debt.[2]

Father's additional power to transfer.

159. (1) Where the father is the manager, he possesses, as regards his borrowings and alienation, the same powers as any other manager,[3] in addition to, and independently of which, the father, as such, possesses the following powers over his undivided son's interest in the coparcenary property:—

(2) He is entitled to alienate his son's interest in the coparcenary property in payment of his own antecedent debt;[4]

(3) His undivided son is liable to pay his debt, not illegal or immoral, out of his coparcenary interest, which is liable to be seized and sold in execution of a decree passed against the father, to which the son may or may not have been a party;[5]

(4) A bona fide purchaser in execution of such decree is, however, not bound to take notice of anything beyond what appears in the proceedings.[6]

Explanation 1.—The terms "antecedent dedbt" and "illegal and immoral debt" with reference to the father's debt and alienation mean a debt as defined in section 136.

---

(1) Chhokori v. Ganga, 39 C. 862.

(2) Chet Ram v. Ram Singh, 44 A 368 (374) P.C.; Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, 46 A. 95 P.C.

(3) Nanomi v. Modun Mohun, 13 C. 21 P.C.; Bhagbut v. Girja, 15 C. 717 P. C.; Minakshi v. Immudi, 12 M. 142 P C.; Mahabir v. Moheshwar, 17 C. 584 P.C.

(4) Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad. 46 A. 95 P.C.; Rameshra v. Kalpu Rai, ib., 264; Anantu v. Ram Prasad; ib.; 295. A fortiori in property which he inherited from his father; Muttyan v. Sangilivira, 6 M. 1 P.C. Chiranji Lal v. Bankey Lal, 57 A. 370 F.B.; Official Liquidator v. Jamna Prasad, 55 A. 417.

(5) Girdhari Lall v. Kantoo Lal, 14 B.L.R. 187 P.C.; Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 P.C.

(6) Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 P.C.; Sat Narain v. Bihari Lal, 5 L. 1 P.C.; Saligram v. Lulta Parshad, 6 N.W.P.H.C.R. 329; Anooragee v. Bhugobutty, 26 W.R. 148; Badree Lal v. Kantee Lal, 23 W.R. 260.

Explanation 2.—The liability of the son arises during the lifetime of the father and it continues after his death until the liability is discharged.[1]

Explanation 3.—The son's liability to pay his father's debt is limited to the assets received or inherited from his father. His separate property is exempt from the payment of such debt.[2]

1340. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by case-law and the following texts:—

Manu.—"158. The man, who becomes surety for the appearance of a debtor in this world, and produces him not, shall pay the debt out of his own property.

Brihaspati.—"47. If the father is no longer alive, the debt must be paid by his sons.

"48. The father's debt must be paid first of all, and after that a man's own debt; but a debt contracted by the paternal grandfather must always be paid before these two men.

"49. The father's debt, on being proved, must be paid by the sons, as if it were their own; the grandfather's debts must be paid (by his son's sons) without interest, but the son of grandson need not pay it at all.

"50. When a debt has been incurred for the benefit of the household by an uncle, brother, son, wife, slave, pupil or dependent, it must be paid by the head of the family."[3]

Vishnu.—"He (the father) throws his debt on him (the son); and the father obtains immortality, if he sees the face of a living son.

"The father's debt must be first paid, and next a debt contracted by the man himself; but the debt of the paternal grandfather must be paid before either of them. The sons must pay the debt of their father, when proved as if it were their own, or with interest; the son's son must pay the debt of his grandfather, but without interest, and his son shall not be compelled to discharge it."[4]

Narad.—"What is left (of the father's property), when the father's obligations have been discharged, and when the father's debts have been paid, shall be divided by the brothers, in order that the father may not continue a debtor."[5]

"When a devotee, or a man who maintained a sacrificial fire dies without discharging his debt, the whole merit of his devotions, of his perpetual fire belongs to his creditors."[6]

"A father must not pay the debt of his son, but a son must pay a debt contracted by his father, excepting those debts which have been contracted from love, anger, for spirituous liquor, games or bailments."[7]

Yadnyavalkya.—"A debt evidenced by writing is binding only on three generations. A pledge can be enjoyed as long as the debt is not returned."[8]

Usanas.—"A fine or the balance of a fine, likewise a bribe or a toll or the balance of it are not to be paid by the son; neither shall he discharge improper (Avyavharik) debts."[9]

---

(1) Brij Narayan v. Mungal Prasad, 46 A. 95 P.C.

(2) S. 160; Muttayan Chettiar v. Sangilivira, 6 M. 1 P.C.; Roop Singh v. Buldeo Singh, 2 W.R. 258; Zaburdust v. Udurmun, Agra; F.B. 71; Sukhdeo v. Madhu Sudan, 10 Pat. 305.

(3) XI-47-50; 33 S.B.E. 328 (329).

(4) XV-45; 7 S.B.E. 65.

(5) Narad, III-10.

(6) Narad, XVIII-32; 33 S.B.E. 197.

(7) I-10; 33 S.B.E. 45.

(8) II-90 (Mandlik), 210.

(9) Quoted in the Mitakshara, Ch. VI-II-48. The word "improper" is not a correct translation of the original "Avyavharik," which means "unusual, or not sanctioned by law (usage)." See, per curiam, in Durbar v. Khachar, 22 B. 348 (351); Hanmant v. Ganesh, 43 B. 612 (615); Prayag v. Kasi, 14 C.W.N. 659, 6 I.C. 258; Chhakaury v. Ganga, 39 C. 862; Venkatacharyulu v. Venkata, 44 M. 214.

1341. The section is supported by the authority of the Privy Council, who said: "The rights of the coparceners in an undivided Hindu family governed by the law of the Mitakshara which consists of a father and his sons, do not differ from those of the coparceners in a like family, which consists of undivided brethren, except so far as they are affected by the peculiar obligation of paying their father's debts which the Hindu Law imposes upon sons (a question to be hereafter considered), and the fact that the father is in all cases naturally, and in the case of infant sons, necessarily, the manager of the joint family estate."[1]

Then, as to the sons' liability to pay the father's debts, they formulated the two following propositions:—

Firstly, that where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family, either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree on the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts, cannot recover that property unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes, and that the purchasers had notice that they were so contracted; and

Secondly, that the purchasers at an execution sale, being strangers to suit, if they have not noticed that the debts were so contracted, are not bound to make inquiry beyond what appears on the face of the proceedings.[2]

1342. In another case, Lord Hobhouse said: "Destructive as it may be of the principle of independent coparcenary rights in the sons, the decisions have for some time established the principle that the sons cannot set up their rights against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt, or against his creditor's remedies for their debts, if not tainted with immorality. On this important question of the liability of the joint estate their Lordships think that there is now no conflict of authority."[3]

1343. It will be observed that this section merely deals with the father's power of transfer. It does not exhaust the son's liability to pay his father's debts, which are elsewhere defined. (S. 160.) Taking the two sections together, the son will be found liable for all debts of the father not immoral or illegal, whether antecedent or not, and whether they are secured on the joint estate or unsecured. But this does not imply that the father possesses unlimited power of transfer of the joint estate. His power of transfer is limited, as stated in this section. Hindu Law views the father's power of transfer of the joint family estate as a thing apart from the son's pious obligation to pay his father's debt. But the two subjects are co-related and cannot be considered apart. Taking them together, the son's position may be thus stated:—

---

(1) Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Persad, 5 C. 148 (165) P.C.
(2) Ib., p. 171.
(3) Nanomi v. Modhun Mohun, 13 C. 21 (35) P.C.; Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, 46 A. 95 P.C. overruling contra in Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 39 A. 437 P.C.

(1) He must pay all debts of his father secured or unsecured, not illegal or immoral.

(2) He may, therefore, have to redeem the security given by his father for such debts.

(3) But since the father's right to charge the estate is more limited than the son's liability to pay his father's debts, it follows that the son may set aside his father's alienation not made for legal necessity or for his own antecedent debt.

(4) But in the last case, his own liability to pay the debt may remain and the creditor may enforce it by attachment and sale of his inherited assets.

1344. Taking this sectien along with those that definite a coparcener's liability, it will be seen that while the latter is liable only for the debts incurred by the manager for legal necessity or benefit, the son's liability is threefold, since, while he is equally liable for necessity, he is, unlike the coparcener, bound by his father's alienation of his interest for an antecedent debt, and further liable to pay his father's debts, whether antecedent or otherwise, provided only that they are not illegal nor immoral.[1] This is in pursuance of his pious obligation to honour his father's debts. But his own liability is not co-extensive with his father's power of alienation which is limited; since he can only alienate so as to bind his son, grandson and great-grandson,[2] whether major or minor,[3] if the consideration therefor is his own antecedent debt, or, of course, if it is otherwise supported by necessity. But if the debt or the alienation is followed up by a decree, then the son's defences become further narrowed. Since he can then escape his larger liability, only by shewing that the consideration was illegal or immoral. It is not sufficient for him to show that the transaction was extravagant or reckless, or that the money might have been got at a cheaper rate of interest.[4]

1345. It will be thus seen that with a decree, the son's larger liability based on his pious obligations, springs into existence. So long as there is no decree that liability is dormant. It remains so even where there is a transfer. In this respect a decree has for the alienee a much higher value than a mere security or sale. But an execution sale in favour of a stranger further curtails his defence. He cannot then complain that the debt of the father resulting in the sale was unsupported by necessity,[5] nor does it determine his own liability, since if the decree remains unsatisfied he would be liable to satisfy it out of the assets inherited by him and the only defence then open to him is the illegality and immorality of the debt.[6] (§§ 1341-1343.) The fact that the father had contracted the debt conjointly with another member of the joint family does not exone-

(1) Kuldip Sahay v. Ram Bujhawan Mahto, 3 Pat. 425; Ladu Narain Singh v. Goberdhan, 4 Pat. 478; Madhu Prasad v. Nawab, (1925) O. 185.

(2) S. 112; Masitullah v. Damodar, 48 A. 518 P.C.

(3) Tikait v. Pandit Malkhiji, 90 I.C. 276; (1925) Pat. 588; Bansidhar v. Pandurang, (1925) N. 196; Ranjit Singh v. Ramman Singh, 87 I.C. 654 : (1925) A. 781; Sahsri Kishen v. Kanhaya Lal, 86 I.C. 877 : (1925) O. 559.

(4) Lal Singh v. Jagraj, 50 A. 546.

(5) Gajadhar v. Jadupi, 47 A. 122; Lal Singh v. Jugraj, 50 A. 546; Jahan Singh v. Hardat Singh, 57 A. 357.

(6) Maharji v. Raghoman, 89 I.C. (O.) 476; Ram Gulam Singh v. Nand Kishore, 4 Pat. 460.

rate a son's liability which remains coextensive with that of the father.[1] The resultant benefit to him is spiritual not temporal. He would then be liable to pay the debts, even though another (e.g., the daughter) inherits the residue of the estate after paying the debts.[2] His own share is a first charge on such debts,[3] though it does not vest in the Receiver equally with the father's upon the latter's bankruptcy,[4] since only the father's power of alienation of his share vests in the Receiver,[5] and is subject to the same qualification as when it is in the father's hands.[6]

1346. On this question two views are possible, first that Hindu Law limits the father's power of alienation with reference to the nature of the debt and not with reference to the nature of the estate; and secondly, that no man can be deemed to convey more than he has himself got; and that the son's coparcenary interest being distinct from his own estate, a sale of the father's estate cannot be presumed to convey his son's interest unless there is something to shew that it has that effect. The first rule was stated by Knight Bruce, L.J.,[7] as follows: "The freedom of the son from the obligation to discharge the father's debt has respect to the nature of the debt, and not to the nature of the estate, whether ancestral or acquired by the creator of the debt." In another case, Sir Barnes Peacock, C.J., cited this passage and added: "That is an authority to show that ancestral property which descends to a son under the Mitakshara law is not exempted from liability to pay his father's debts, and it being the pious duty of the son to pay his father's debts, the ancestral property, in which the son, as the son of his father acquires an interest by birth, is liable to the father's debts."[8] "Freedom on the part of the son as far as regards ancestral property from the obligation to discharge the father's debts under Hindu Law can be successfully pleaded only by a consideration of the invalid nature of the debts incurred."[9] This case has been since followed in numerous cases.[10]

1347. Son's Liability Limited.—It is now settled that the son's liability to pay his father's debt is limited to the estate inherited by him from his father or to his succeeding to the joint estate in which he and his father were coparceners. It is, however, immaterial whether the estate inherited from his father was the latter's ancestral or self-acquired property. As observed by the Privy Council: "The freedom of the son from the obligation to discharge the father's debt has respect not to the nature of the estate, whether ancestral or acquired, by the creator of the

(1) Sourendra Mohan v. Hari Prasad, 52 I.A. 418 : (1925) P.C. 280.

(2) Madhav Rao v. Amleabai, 85 I.C. 193 : (1925) B. 125.

(3) De Souza v. Waman Rao, 27 Bom. L.R. 1451.

(4) Sat Narain v. Behari Lal, 6 P.I. (23) P.C., overruling O.A. Behari Lal v. Sat Narain, 3 L. 329 F.B.; Narasimulu v. Basara, 47 M.L.J. 799 : (1925) M. 249; Siddheswar v. Deokali, 9 Luck. 304 (F.B.).

(5) Stripad v. Basappa, 49 B. 785; Gopalakrishnayya v. Gopalan, 51 M. 342.

(6) Allahabad Bank v. Bhagwan Das, 48 A. 343; Seetharama v. Official Receiver, 49 M. 849; Gopalakrishnayya v. Gopalan, 51 M. 342.

(7) Hanooman Pershad v. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (421).

(8) Girdhari Lal v. Kantoo Lal, 14 B.L.R. 187 (196, 197) P.C.

(9) Jumuk Kishori v. Raghunandan, (1861) B.S.D.A. 213, cited in Girdhari Lal v. Kantoo Lal, 14 B.L.R. 187 (198) P.C.

(10) Luchmi Dai Koori v. Asman Singh, 2 C. 213; Bheeknarain Singh v. Januk Singh, 2 C. 438; Luchman Das v. Giridhur Chowdhry, 5 C. 855 F.B.; Goburdhan Lal v. Singessur Dutt, 7 C. 52; Nonomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun, 13 C. 21 P.C.; Bhagbut Pershad v. Girja Koer 15 C. 717 P.C.; Beni Pershad v. Puran Chand, 23 C. 262; Amar Chandra Kundu v. Sebak Chand Chowdhury, 34 C. 642 F.B.; Ponnappa Pillai v. Pappu- debt."[1] Consequently, unless he can show that the debt for which he is made liable was incurred by the father for illegal or immoral purposes, he cannot escape liability from payment to the extent of the joint property he has received by survivorship, or of any other property which he may have inherited from his father. The same liability and to the same extent extends to the grandson and the great-grandson, who are both comprised in the term "issue" before defined.

1348. Inherited Assets.—The inherited assets in the hands of the son, which is the measure of the latter's liability, mean all the joint property including the son's interest therein[2] and not merely the father's interest or his separate or self-acquired property.

1349. Father's Additional Powers.—The liability of one person to pay the debt of another may be legal, or it may be moral or religious. In the primitive age when the divorce of law from religion had not taken place, religious obligation was indistinguishable from legal obligation, with the result that the son's obligation to pay his father's debt was absolute and independent of any assets of the father received by him by inheritance. This qualification was, however, taken as implied in determining his obligation by all the courts[3] except in Bombay, where the obligation was literally enforced,[4] till it was similarly limited by an Act passed in 1866.[5] The course of decisions in all the courts has since been uniform,[6] except that in Bombay, it appears to be still maintained that the creditor is entitled to obtain a decree against the son, without reference to the assets, though if the son had inherited no assets, the decree cannot be executed against him.[7] In other words, the want of assets is a good defence to recovery, but not to a decree. But if the son is only liable if he has assets, no decree seems justifiable without proof of assets.

Clause (2).

1350. The father as manager possesses all the powers of any other manager, added to which he possesses, as father, an additional power of transferring the estate for his own debt, so as to bind his sons. In fact for so doing he must be deemed to be dicharging his son's pious obli-vayyangar, 4 M. 1 F.B.; Sivasankara Mudali v. Parvati Anni, 4 M. 96 F.B.; Muttayyan v. Zamindar of Shivagiri, 6 M. 1 P.C.; Ramasamy v. Ulaganatha, 22 M. 49 F.B.; Trimbak v. Narayan, 8 B. 481; Chamaili Kuar v. Ram Prasad, 2 A. 267; Radha Kishen Man v. Bachhaman, 3 A. 118; Jamna v. Nain Sukh, 9 A. 493; Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad, 31 A. 176 F.B.; Baijnath v. Gokul Rai, 45 A. 718, dissenting from Sukhdeo v. Jhapt, 54 I.C. (Pat.) 946, in which the statement of law was held to be too wide.

---

(1) Hanooman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (421).

(2) Ponnappa v. Pappuvayangar, 4 M. 1; Sheo Prashad v. Jung Bahadur, 9 C. 189; the same rule applies to impartible estates, the heir being liable to pay the previous holder's debts; Muttayan v. Sangili, L.R. 9 I.A. 128, reversing 3 M. 670; Sivagiri v. Tiruvengada, 7 M. 339.

(3) Ponnappa v. Pappuvayyangar, 4 M. 9 (21, 45); Rayappa v. Ali Sahib, 2 M.H.C.R. 336; Karuppan v. Veriyal, 4 M.H.C.R. 1; Jamoonah v. Mubben, Montr. 227; Aga Hajee v. Jagget, Montr. 272; Dyamonee v. Brindabun, (1856) S. D. A. B. 97; Kunhya v. Bukhtawar, 1 S. D. A. N. W. P. 4; Unnopoorna v. Gunga, 2 W.R. 296.

(4) Pranbullubh v. Deocristian, (1824) B.S.R. 4; Narasimharav v. Ambaji, 2 B.H.C.R. 64.

(5) Hindus' Liability for Ancestor's Debts Act, (Bom. Act VII of 1866).

(6) Sakharam v. Govind, 10 B.H.C. R. 361; Udaram v. Ranu, 11 B.H.C.R. 76; Keval Bhagvan v. Ganpati, 8 B. 220; Girdhar Lal v. Shiv, ib., p. 309.

(7) Bapuji v. Umedbhai, 8 B.H.C. R. (A.C.) 245; Lallu v. Tribhuvan, 13 B. 653.

gation on their behalf.[1] Consequently, as he is entitled to dispose of his son's undivided share in payment of his own debts, the creditor is equally entitled to seize in execution of his decree against him his son's separated share.[2] This is the prevailing view and has been expressed[3] or implied,[4] in several cases, including those decided by the Privy Council,[5] though, in some cases, it has been held that the son had the right to set aside the father's alienation made for a debt, not illegal or immoral, and that, in such a case, the decree cannot be made conditional upon his paying up the amount of the debt.[6]

1351. In one case it appears to have been assumed that the power of alienation is personal to the father. There the uncle, as manager had alienated certain property in which his nephew had a share in consideration of his father's death, the nephew objected, and the courts upheld his objection holding that there was nothing in the principles laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case above quoted[7] to warrant the view that an uncle acting as manager of a joint family is entitled to sell the share of his nephew in the joint family property in order to discharge a debt incurred by his own father, even though the said father be also the grandfather of the nephew whose property is alienated.[8] It is submitted that in that case the nephew's interest would be rightly sold by the manager. Since, it was his pious obligation to pay the debt, and the sale was only a mode of discharge of his liability which, as manager, he was entitled to do. In this view it has been held that on the insolvency of a Hindu father the official assignee could sell the joint ancestral estate of the insolvent and his sons, to pay the debts of the insolvent not tainted with illegality or immorality.[9]

1352. Antecedent Debt.—This term has now become a term of art in Hindu Law and is used in a sense upon which the courts, including even the Privy Council, were, at one time, not agreed. Its meaning is, however, now more certain. In the first place, the term has bearing only in respect of the debt and obligation of the father, and is a judicial deduction from the two acknowledged principles of Hindu Law: First, that the son is liable to pay the debts of his father and paternal grandfather, whether he inherits any property from or through them or not, but the grandson is not liable at all, unless he inherits his property; Secondly, the father and the grandfather are not entitled to alienate

(1) Subraya v. Nagappa, 38 B. 264; Koer Hasmat Rai v. Sunder Das, 11 C. 396; Biswanath v. Jagdip Narain, 40 C. 342 (353).

(2) Atul Krishna v. Lala Nandaji, 14 Pat. 732 F.B.

(3) Chandra Deo v. Mata Prasad, 31 A. 176 F.B.; Anantoo v. Ram Prasad, 46 A. 295; Chiranji Lal v. Bankey Lal, 55 A. 370 F.B.; Official Liquidator v. Jamna Prasad, 55 A. 417. Bhim Singh v. Ram Singh, ib., 301. Mathura v. Rajkumar, (1921) Pat. 245 F.B.; Arumugham v. Muthu, 42 M. 711 F.B.; distinguishing Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 39 A. 437 P.C.; Purshottam v. Sheo Shanker, 6 I.C. (A.) 163; Dharjit v. Siria, 9 I.C. (A.) 484.

(4) Bissonath v. Bindesri, 40 C. 342; Bidya Prasad v. Bhup Narain, 42 C. 342.

(5) Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, 46 A. 95 P.C., overruling contra in Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 39 A. 437 P. C.; and the cases decided upon its authority.

(6) Srinivasa v. Kuppuswami, 44 M. 801; Badam v. Madho Ram, 2 L. 338; Daya Ram v. Har Charan, 82 I.C. 678 dissenting from contra in Amir Malik v. Kahan Chand, 73 I.C. (L.) 818; Koer Hasmat Rai v. Sundar Das, 11 C. 396.

(7) Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, 46 A. 95 P.C.

(8) Rameswara v. Kalpu Rai, 46 A. 264 (265).

(9) Baluswami, (In re), 47 M. 87; Varadarajan v. Srinivasa Rao, (1924) M. 792.

coparcenary property qua father, though qua manager their power to alienate such property is well defined and limited to what constitutes legal necessity. If, therefore, the father alienated such property for a price then received, the son could challenge the alienation as beyond his competency, but in such a case, the question would still remain whether the son is not bound by his pious obligation to pay to the alienee the price which the father had received and which, apart from the property alienated, would become a legal debt for which the son would be liable. After some conflict and much indecision, that question had to be settled, and has become settled, so as to reconcile the two conflicting principles by deducing a rule that, in the latter case, there was no legal obligation, because the price paid was a part of the transaction of alienation, but should an alienation be made for a debt previously due, then the son could not challenge the alienation because of his pious obligation to discharge all his father's debts. This ruled out the "antecedent" payment of the price or any antecedent obligation not amounting to a "debt".

1353. Now, since a debt is nonetheless a debt even though it is secured by a mortgage of a joint family property,[1] it follows that the liability of the son is not extinguished by that fact. But the Privy Council had lapsed into holding the contrary in a case decided by their Lordships, in 1917,[2] which they followed and which the Indian courts had to follow till it was in its turn overruled by a Full Bench of the same Board in 1924.[3]

1354. Eliminating this gap in which both the Privy Council and the Indian Courts had given contrary decisions, a debt would be treated as "antecedent" even where for the price of the father's previous alienation he renews his alienation,[4] provided that it is not a renewal made to circumvent the law. The question whether a renewal is bona fide or a device is a question of fact, the proof of which must depend upon the circumstances of each case. The term "debt" as used in this connection is not limited to money lent, since it includes also cases of money due or money payable but not yet due[5] or money due but not payable because it is timebarred (§§ 1377-1378) and all such moneys whether ascertained or unascertained,[6] e.g., a trade debt or balance of a partnership or other similar undertaking It has even been held that a decree passed against the father for illegally obstructing the plaintiff's watercourse is a debt, on the ground that it amounts to a "judgment debt,"[7] but a decree might be passed for a liability, however illegal or immoral, if the father failed to

"Meaning of "Debt."

(1) Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, 46 A. 95 (102) P.C.; overruling Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 39 A. 437 P.C.

(2) Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, (1917) 39 A. 437 P.C.; Lachman Prasad v. Sarnam Singh, 39 A. 500 P.C.; Jogidas v. Ganga Ram, (1917) 21 C.W.N. 957 P.C.; Chet Ram v. Ram Singh, (1922) 44 A. 368 P.C.; overruled in Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, (1923) 46 A. 95 P.C.

(3) Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, 46 A. 95 (102) P.C.; Lal Bahadur v. Ambika Prasad, 47 A. 795 P.C.; Arumagham v. Muthu, 42 M. 711 F.B.; Sheo Prasad v. Balwant Singh, (1927) A. 150; Sukdeo v. Jhapat, 5 Pat.L.J. 120; Gopaldas v. Topan Das, 16 L. 624; Ram Rekha Singh v. Ganga Prasad, 49 A. 123 (128) F.B.

(4) Lal Bahadur v. Ambika Prasad, 47 A. 795 P.C.; Jawahar Singh v. Udai Parkash, 48 A. 152 P.C.; Ram Rekha Singh v. Ganga Prasad, 49 A. 123 (126) F.B.; Kuldip Sahai v. Ram Bhujwan, 3 Pat. 425.

(5) Subbarayulu v. Ratnam, (1931) M. 615.

(6) Bal Rajaram v. Maneklal, 56 B. 36 (47, 48).

(7) Chakauri v. Ganga Prasad, 39 C. 862 (877), following Pareman v. Bratta, 24 C. 672 (676).

resist it on that ground, and since such debt must not be illegal or immoral, nor even avyavaharik, in all of which cases the son is not liable.

"Antecedent." Meaning of.

1355. As already observed, the term "antecedent" is only loosely used in the lexicon sense, since it embraces debts, which, though antecedent in their etymological sense, are not antecedent in point of law. Such are debts contracted as a subterfuge to evade the law. In its legal sense, the term is intended to mean a debt incurred by the father not only prior to his incurring the liability, upon which the son is to be liable, but such debt must also be unrelated to the latter transaction so as to be independent of it. It does not matter if the later transaction is, in itself, a debt being a mere renewal of a previous debt,[1] nor is the interval of time in itself of much consequence, since the father may incur a debt promising to pay it on receipt of money expected any minute, that failing, he may execute a mortgage of his family estate or another person pays off his debt, in either case it would be binding on the son.

1356. Though an antecedent debt must not be illegal or immoral it is not necessary that it should have been incurred for legal necessity or benefit of the family, or of the son or of the borrower. A neutral debt will be antecedent if it is prior in point of time, whatever be the purpose for which it was taken. Of course, if such debt be for necessity it is doubly binding on the son, but its absence does not make the son anytheless liable. The fact that the father was a spendthrift, wanton or reckless in his dealing with other men may be relevant for the purpose of proving that the debt in question was immoral, but his general character and habits do not otherwise reflect upon the liability of the son. So again the fact that the terms of the loan were oppressive or inequitable have no direct bearing on its antecedence, though they may be otherwise quite relevant.

1357. It is not necessary that such debt should be pressing or even due, for pressure is not a pre-requisite of "antecedence", though it is proof of necessity, nor is the fact that the debt might have been otherwise paid even relevant to such question.[2]

The question whether a debt is antecedent in the technical sense of the term may at times depend upon the intention of the parties, judged by the nature of the contract or upon its terms. Take for example, two cases as follows:—

In the one, A, the father borrows, say Rs. 1,000 from B, promissing to repay it in ten days' time, failing which he agrees to convey his ancestral land to B. In the other, the father agrees to sell his land to B for the same price, and receives Rs. 1,000 as its price. He stipulates for return of the money or sale of the house in ten days' time. It is clear that though the two transactions are similar, they are not identical, since in the first case the contract is one of loan, which it is not in the other case.[3]

---

(1) Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, 46 A. 95 (109) P.C.

(2) Purushottam v. Ram Rao, 52 M. 856 (860).

(3) Ram Rattan v. Ganga Prasad, 49 A. 123 F.B.; Babulal v. Kashmiro, 93 I. C. (A.) 1037.

A debt may be only partially antecedent, as where a subsequent transfer is made for a consideration which only partially includes such debt, in which case, of course, the sons would be liable to that extent on the ground of their pious obligation. But it may be that a transfer by the father manager is partially supported by legal necessity and partially by antecedent debt, in which case, the liability of the sons would be judged by two separate principles, one of which pays due regards to the quantum of alienation from which the other is free.

1358. The liability of the son to pay the father's antecedent debt is both declared by the texts and enforced by the authorities. It is a liability peculiar to those relations, but does not extend to collateral relations, such as nephews and grand-nephews.[1] And the question is, what is an antecedent debt. At one time, that term was understood at least in four senses, as meaning (i) debt merely anterior to the father's security though not necessarily independent of it,[2] (ii) a debt anterior merely to the suit in which it was sought to be recovered,[3] (iii) a debt due to some one other than the transferee[4] and (iv) lastly, as a debt which was both anterior to and independent of the father's security sought to be enforced.[5]

1359. The last view has now received the imprimatur of the Privy Council. Antecedent debt must then mean not only a debt which was incurred prior to the security sought to be enforced but which must also be quite apart from and independent of it. It may be secured or unsecured.[6] If, for instance, the father borrows Rs. 100 to-day and executes a bond therefor six months later, the question of its antecedency would depend upon the intention. If the father borrowed the sum agreeing to give the creditor a bond therefor six months later, the bond so

(1) Mathura v. Raj Kumar, (1921) Pat. 245 : 62 I.C. 132 F.B.

(2) Manbahalal v. Gopal, (1901) A. W.N. 57; Debi Dat v. Jadu Rai, 24 A. 459; Babu Singh v. Bihari Lall, 30 A. 156; Ram Dayal v. Ajudhia, 28 A. 328; Chinnayya v. Perumal, 13 M. 51; Sami Ayyangar v. Ponnammal, 21 M. 28; Chithambara v. Koothaperumal, 27 M. 326 followed in Sheopal Singh v. Basant Singh, 12 O.C. 248, overruled in Venkatramanaya v. Venkataramana, 29 M. 200 F.B.

(3) Luchmun v. Giridhur, 5 C. 855 F. B. (First question referred to the F.B.); Hanuman v. Daulat, 10 C. 528; Khalilal Rahman v. Gobind Pershad, 20 C. 328; Surja Prasad v. Gulabchand, 27 C. 762; Maheswar v. Kishun Singh, 34 C. 184; Kishen Prasad v. Tipan Pershad, 34 C. 735 (747); Jagannath v. Tulsi Das, (1898) P.R. 72.

(4) Harpal v. Haralal, 22 O.C. 16: 50 I.C. 795: in Pandurang v. Bhagwan Das, 44 B. 341 (345), it was contended that such debt must be the prior debt of the transferee himself but the contention was of course overruled; Ramman v. Ram Gopal, 21 O.C. 200: 47 I.C. 987; Kesho Dutt v. Ram Sundar, 22 O.C. 25 : 50 I. C. 880; Guru Sahai v. Girdhari Lal , 22 O.C. 84: 52 I.C. 75; Ram Dei v. Suraj Baksh, 23 O.C. 204: 60 I.C. 177; Pudai Ram v. Baijnath, 23 O.C. 264; Ram Saran v. Mangal Singh, 23 O.C. 327: 60 I.C. 219; Bagat Ali v. Hazari, 6 O.L. J. 297; 52 I.C. 108; Chandika v. Widow, 6 O.L.J. 381; 52 I.C. 449.

(5) Jamna v. Nain Sukh, 9 A. 493; Badri Prasad v. Madanlal, 15 A. 75 F.B. (in which however the term was not defined); Manbahal Rai v. Gopal, (1901) A.W.N. 57; Ram Dayal v. Ajudhia, 28 A. 328; Chandra Deo Singh v. Mata Prasad, 31 A. 176 F.B. approved in Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 39 A. 437 (449) P.C.; Lachman Prasad v. Sarnam Singh, 39 A. 500 P.C.; overruled in Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, 46 A. 95 P.C.; Sami Ayyangar v. Ponnammal, 21 M. 28; Hiraram v. Udharam, 9 N.L.R. 74 : 19 I.C. 861.

(6) Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, 46 A. 95 P.C.; Lal Bahadur v. Ambika Prasad, 47 A. 795 P.C.; Anantu v. Ram Prasad, ib., 295; Gauri Shankar v. Sheonandan, ib., 384; Chandu Lal v. Mukandi, 87 I.C. 40 : (1925) L. 503; Surendra Nath v. Brindavan, (1925) C. 545; Chotu Ram v. Narayan, 90 I.C. (N.) 210; Awadh Ram v. Mahbub Khan, (1924) O. 255.

given would not be for an antecedent debt, because the two form part of the same transaction. If, on the other hand, the father borrowed the money as a parol debt, promising to pay it six months later, and on his failure to pay it, he gave him the bond as a security, then it would be a bond given for an antecedent debt. Even a mere renewal of a debt may make the latter antecedent, especially where the renewal is a fresh contract, or is upon fresh terms.[1]

1360. Of course, a bond may be partially for an antecedent debt and partially for a debt presently advanced. In that case, the son's liability will be limited to the extent of the debt which is antecedent, or is supported by legal necessity, or benefit.

1361. An antecedent debt must, of course, be itself not tainted with illegality or immorality.[2] If A borrows money from B for an illegal purpose and he then borrows from C to pay off B, the fact that C has lent money to A to discharge his antecedent debt is not sufficient to validate his claim. He must further show either that he had made enquiry and was satisfied that the antecedent debt was legal or that it was in fact so.[3] A debt may be antecedent, though it may bear an excessive rate of interest or might have been recklessly or imprudently incurred. The defences open to a coparcener are not available to the son. His liability is as large as the father's powers are great. The only qualification upon his power is that the debt must not be tainted with illegality or immorality.[4]

1362. No Antecedent Debt.—In order that debt might be antecedent there must be a debt paid and not merely promised. The father mortgaged the family property, to redeem which he agreed to sell it, and a sale deed was drawn up, whereupon one Dalip Singh sued for pre-emption and obtained a decree for Rs. 13,000, which was paid to the father, which he appropriated to his own use. He had, during the pendency of the pre-emption suit, otherwise redeemed the mortgage. To sons sued to set aside the sale to the pre-emptor, Dalip Singh, as neither made for an antecedent debt nor supported by legal necessity. On appeal to the Privy Council, it was argued that the sum of Rs. 13,000 paid to the father to pay off the mortgage constituted an antecedent debt and that the fact that the father had not used it for that purpose was immaterial, to which their Lordships replied that "if the present contention is acceded to, it would mean that a contract for loan which never was completed, to pay off a previous debt otherwise discharged, would become an 'antecedent debt.' The contention is on the fact of it absurd."[5]

1363. Father's Illegal or Immoral Debts.—The son is not liable to pay off his father's debts incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. Consequently, where the father's transfer has been made for a consideration tainted with illegality or immorality[6] the son is entitled to impugn it

(1) Ram Rakha Singh v. Ganga Prasad, 49 A. 123 F.B.; Babu Lal v. Kashmiro, 93 I.C. (A.) 1037, contra in Babu Ram v. Mahadeo Ram, 98 I.C. (A.) 1012 : (1927) A. 127.

(2) Madan Gopal v. Sati Prasad, 39 A. 485; Sheo Prasad v. Balwant Singh, 98 I.C. (A.) 1023: (1927) A. 150.

(3) Baran Deo v. Rupnarain, 11 I.C. 654.

(4) Bansidhar v. Pandurang, (1925) N. 196.

(5) Jawahir Singh v. Udai Parkash, 48 A. 152 P.C.

(6) Sheo Dayal v. Jagannath, 8 A.L.J. 992; Pokhpal Singh v. Chhidu Singh, 9 A.L.J. 653; Kanhaiyalal v. Niranjan, 47 A. 351; Brij Narain v. Mangal Pra- on that ground, and in hat case the alienee may forfeit his property, unless he is able to protect his alienation by appealing to some equity in his favour.

But since the right of the son to impeach his father's unwarranted alienation rests on the ground that he was a coparcener on that date and that the father could not convey away his coparcenary interest for a consideration not binding upon him, it follows that such a plea is not open to a son not born[1] or at least begotton[2] at the the date of that transfer. (§ 162.) Where, however, the son was in existence at the date of the debt he is entitled to repudiate it if he can shew that it was incurred for a purpose which Hindu Law regards as "illegal or immoral," or avyavaharik in the sense of the following texts:—

Manu.—"Money due by a surety, or idly promised, or lost at play, or due for spirituous liquor, or what remains unpaid of a fine and a tax or duty, the son (of the party owing it) shall not be obliged to pay."[3]

Brihaspati.—"51. Sons shall not be made to pay (a debt incurred by their father) for spirituous liquor, for losses at pay, for idle gifts, for promises made under the influence of love or wrath, or for suretyship, nor the balance of a fine or toll (liquidated in part by their father)."[4]

Ushanas.—"A fine or the balance of a fine, likewise a bribe or a toll or the balance of it are not to be paid by the son, neither shall he discharge a debt which is not lawful—avyavaharik.[5] (अव्यावहारिक)."

Gautam.—"Money due by a surety, for a commercial debt, a fee due to the parents of a bride, debts contracted for spirituous liquor or for gambling and a fine shall not involve the sons of the debtor."[6]

1364. It will be thus seen that the textual authorities instance nine main heads of debts which the son need not pay. They are:—

(1) Debts due for spirituous liquor;[7]

(2) Debts due for lust;

---

sad, 46 A. 95 P.C.; Jokharmal v. Eknath, 24 B. 343.

(1) Raja Ram v. Luchmun, 8 W.R. 16; Bholanath v. Kartick, 34 C. 372; Hazarimal v. Abani Nath, 17 C.L.J. 38 (48); Fazulbhoy v. Sadanund, 5 Bom. L. R. 678; Sitaram v. Varihar, 12 Bom. L.R. 910; Naro v. Paragowda, 19 Bom. L. R. 59 (75); Chattarpal Singh v. Natha, 3 A.L.J. 38; Chuttan Lal v. Kallu, 33 A. 283; Suraj Prasad v. Makhan Lal, 44 A. 382 Partab Singh v. Bohra, 45 A. 49 (52); Mohesh v. Goswami Banwari Lal, 18 O.C. 162: 31 I. C. 717; Yekeyamian v. Agniswaran, 4 M. H.C.R. 307; Sabapathi v. Somasundaram, 16 M. 76; Chinnu v. Kalimurthi, 35 M. 47 F.B.; Soundara v. Saravana, 30 M.L.J. 592: 34 I.C. 794; Ganesh v. Tulja, 26 M.L.J. 460: 24 I.C. 696; Sardar Singh v. Ajit Singh, 2 C.P.L. R. 141; Moti v. Kanlya, 5 N. 181 (188); Narayan v. Dhudabai, 21 N.L. R. 33: (1925) N. 209; contra in Tulshi Ram v. Babu, 33 A. 654; Bhup Kunwar v. Balbir Sahai, 44 A. 190; Partab Singh v. Bapra, 45 A. 49.

(2) Deonarain v. Ganga Singh, 37 A. 162; Sabapathi v. Soma, 16 M. 76; Venkata v. Gatham, 27 M. L. J. 580; Dwarka Das v. Krishna, 2 L. 114: 61 I. C. 628; Sobbaram v. Makdu, 12 C.P. L.R. 63, contra in Gowra v. Chummun, (1864) W. R. 340; Bhup Kunwar v. Ballier Sahai, 44 A. 190.

(3) Manu, VIII-159; 25 S.B.E. 282.

(4) Brihaspati, XI-51; 33 S. B. E. 329.

(5) Cited in the Mitakshara, Bk. II, § 47, cited in Chhakauri v. Ganga Prasad, 39 C. 862 (867); Khagindra v. Nanak Chand, (1909) P.R. No. 24, 1 I. C. 13.

(6) XII-41.

(7) Son not liable—Khagindra v. Nanak Chand, (1909) P.R. No. 24 : 1 I.C. 13.

(3) Debts due for gambling;
(4) Unpaid fines;
(5) Unpaid tolls;
(6) Useless gifts; or promises without consideration, or made under the influence of lust or wrath;
(7) Suretyship debts;
(8) Commercial debts;
(9) Avyavharik debts.

Of these the first three would still be regarded as "immoral," while the fourth and fifth are non-obligatory on the son, because "they are ready money payments, for which credit will have been given at the risk of him by whom they ought to have been received,[1] while the sixth would not constitute even an enforceable contract against the father. The seventh and eighth clauses are now largely inoperative, since the son's liability to pay for his father's suretyship except for appearance and honesty is now established, while he is equally liable to pay his father's trade debts. Trade appears to have been despised in the olden days and the classical writers, therefore reprobated trade debts, but their prohibition is now obsolete.[2] There remain the avyavharik debts which have been loosely rendered as "illegal or immoral debts,"[3] but which only roughly convey the sense implied in that term. The word has been variously translated as "unusual," "unlawful," and "illegal and immoral," the last phrase being commonly used by the text writers to describe the debts which the son is not liable to pay. The word "avyavharik" is a loose expression and merely means what is not lawful, usual or customary, or which, according to Colebrooke, is repugnant to good morals. The illustrations given are in themselves diffuse, and they are, of course, not exhaustive. This has led to divergence of views reflected in the judicial decisions to be presently examined.

1365. The conflict in cases is due to the various meanings ascribed to the word "avyavharik." According to the Calcutta High Court, it means no more than a debt which is not lawful, usual or customary.[4] Even if it did so, its obscurity is scarcely relieved, since what is usual or customary in one locality or community may not be so elsewhere. In agreeing with this view, the Madras court defines the term to mean "a debt which is not supportable as valid by legal arguments, and on which no right could be established by the creditor in a court of Justice,"[5] but this is not the sense in which it was defined in Calcutta. Both the courts, however, reject its narrow interpretation accepted in Bombay, where, while admitting the meaning of the word, the court laid down the narrow

(1) Strange's Hindu Law, Ch. VIII, P. 167.
(2) Achutramayya v. Ratnajee, 49 M. 211.
(3) In Achutaramayya v. Ratnajee, 49 M. 211, it is said that this phrase was coined by the Privy Council in (1874) Girdhari Lal v. Kantoo Lal, 14 B. L.R. 187 (197) P.C.; but reference to that case does not support that view.
(4) Chhakauri v. Ganga, 39 C. 862 (868), followed in Venugopala v. Ramanadhan, 37 M. 458 (460); Gurusarn v. Mohan Lal, 4 L. 93; Ramakrishna v. Narayan, 40 B. 126 (130); Hanmant v. Ganesh, 43 B. 612.
(5) Venugopala v. Ramanadhan, 37 M. 458 (460).

rule, that the son was not liable for a debt which the father ought not, "as a decent and respectable man" to have incurred[1] This view has not found favour with the same[2] and other courts and is obviously too narrow even when taken in conjunction with Brihaspati's illustrations.

1366. The subject for discussion may be classified as under:—

(1) Debts which by reason of their illegality or immorality neither bind the father nor the son. (§ 1367.)

(2) Those, which, though illegal and immoral, still bind the father but not the son (§§ 1368, 1374-1380).

(3) Those, which, though illegal or immoral, still bind both the father and the son (§§ 1369-1373, 1380-1389).

Debts wholly void.

1367. Debts which are so illegal or immoral as to bind neither the father nor the son must be those which fall under the ban of S. 23 of the Contract Act. As such, they create no legal obligation of any kind, and fall into the domain of the general law of contracts. Such is an agreement to pay monthly allowance to the parents for giving their daughter in marriage,[3] or money advanced to assist the borrower in visiting brothels and bringing in prostitutes,[4] or for gambling,[5] drinking[6] or stifling a prosecution for a non-compoundable offence,[7] giving a bribe,[8] say, to a widow on condition that she would make no adoption[9] or that she would adopt the payer's nominee.[10] An agreement in the nature of a marriage brokage is illegal; consequently, an agreement between A and B, that B's daughter shall marry A's son, and that if she fails to do so, B shall pay a sum of Rs. 5,000 to A, is illegal, being opposed to public policy.[11] These cases, by no means exhaustive, are cited here merely to shew that in cases in which the object or consideration is illegal or immoral, the transaction itself becomes a nudum pactum, or destitute of any legal value, and neither party is entitled to enforce the agreement. The subject will be found discussed in greater detail elsewhere.[12]

1368. Leaving aside such debts and alienations, there remain those in which the father's liability is personal and such as need not be shared by the son. Such is the money borrowed to pay a fine[13] or a decree obtained against him for a purely criminal act, e.g., theft and misappro-

---

(1) Durbar v. Khachar, 32 B. 348.

(2) Ramakrishna v. Narayan, 40 B. 126 (130), dissenting from Durbar v. Khachar, 32 B. 348; Hanmant v. Ganesh, 43 B. 612.

(3) Baldeo v. Jumna, 23 A. 495.

(4) Rajendra v. Abdul Hakim, 39 I. C. (C.) 767.

(5) Subbaraya v. Devendra, 7 M. 301; Ramalinga v. Muthu, 29 I.C. (M.) 573.

(6) Khagindra v. Nanak Chand, (1909) P.R. No. 24 : 1 I.C. 13.

(7) Dal Sukhram v. De Breton, 28 B. 326.

(8) Attar Singh v. Haku, 24 I.C. (L.) 692.

(9) Jagannadha v. Kunja, 49 I.C. (M.) 929.

(10) Sita Ram v. Harihar, 12 Bom.L. R. 910.

(11) Deverayan v. Mutturaman, 37 M. 393; Venka v. Lakshmi, 32 M. 184 F.B.; Vaithyanatham v. Gangaraju, 17 M. 9; Pitambar v. Jagjiran, 13 B. 131-n; Baldeo v. Jamna, 23 A. 495; Mg Shwe v. Mg. Po, (1918) 2 U.B.R. 119 : 50 I.C. 551.

(12) Gour's Law of Transfer, 16th Ed., §§ 274-296.

(13) Garuda v. Narsila, 48 I.C. 740; 35 M.L.J. 661.

priation[1] or for malicious prosecution.[2] It is said that where a Hindu father becomes liable for money taken by him and misappropriated under circumstances which constitute the taking itself a criminal offence, it is not recoverable from the son.[3] But, between this and a mere dishonest misappropriation of money there is a dividing line, since the courts have held the son liable for the father's misappropriation in his character as agent,[4] or as trustee of a public charity,[5] A misappropriation of money, whether dishonest, and so criminal, or merely wrongful, always implies a civil liability to make good the amount misappropriated. There is nothing illegal or immoral in discharging this obligation, even though the act may also amount to a crime, in which case the only question is whether the payment made or promised was in discharge of the civil liability or amounted to the compounding of an uncompoundable offence. If the former, the son is liable, if the latter, there is no legal liability at all, as the transaction is illegal.[6] The fact that the father's misappropriation is criminal only shews that it is a misappropriation of a serious nature; but that fact aggravates the father's liability but it is no ground for exoneration of the son.

1363. A debt is neither illegal nor immoral, because the father subsequently misappropriated it. Such was the case of the Patwari who, being authorised to make collections for the plaintiff, received certain sums which he failed to bring into account. He mortgaged his family lands to the plaintiff. On his death his sons pleaded their non-liability on the ground that their father had misappropriated the money. But the court upheld the plaintiff's suit for the money holding that the plaintiff had taken security for the Patwari's debt, which was a debt when he received the money, and his subsequent misappropriation of it could not exonerate the sons, though they would be exempt if the taking itself were a criminal offence.[7] But in this case the Patwari would have been convicted under S. 403 of the Indian Penal Code. As Tyndall, C.J., observed: "We have no doubt that in all offences which involve damages to an injured party for which he may maintain an action, it is competent for him, notwithstanding they are also of a public nature, to compromise or settle his private damage in any way he may think fit."[8] A threat to prosecute does not necessarily vitiate a subsequent agreement by the debtor to give security for a debt which he justly owes to his creditor,[9] provided that in consideration of such security he does not agree to stifle a prosecution.

---

(1) Mahabir v. Basudev, 6 A. 234. Niddha Lal v. Collector, 14 A.L.J. 610: 25 I. C. 209; Sabhaddi Lal v. Gobind Singh, 46 A. 616; Jagannath v. Jugal Kishore, 48 A. 9 (10, 11); Pareman Dass v. Bhattu, 24 C. 672 (674); Chhakauri v. Ganga, 39 C. 862; Hanmant v. Ganesh, 43 B. 612 (615, 616).

(2) Sunder Lal v. Raghunandan, 3 Pat. 250 (254).

(3) McDowell v. Ragavan, 27 M. 71; Jagannath v. Jugal Kishore, 48 A. 9.

(4) Venkatacharyulu v. Mohana, 44 M. 214.

(5) Garuda v. Narella, 35 M.L.J. 661 : 48 I.C. 740.

(6) Jaikumar v. Gouri Nath, 28 A. 718.

(7) Rameshwar v. Durga, 90 I.C. 954: (1926) Pat. 14, following Chakouri v. Ganga Prosad, 39 C. 862; to the same effect, Jagannath v. Jugul Kishore, 23 A. L.J. 882: 89 I.C. 492: (1926) A. 89; Ganesh Prasad v. Jot Singh, 87 I.C. 1017: (1925) O. 719.

(8) Keir v. Leeman, L.R. 9 Q.B. 371 (392): 72 R. R. 398; cited in Jaikumar v. Gauri Nath, 28 A. 718 (721).

(9) Flower v. Sadler, 10 Q.B.D. 572; Kessowji v. Hurjiwan, 11 B. 566; Jaikumar v. Gauri Nath, 28 A. 718 (721).

1370. In all offences relating to property the act has a dual aspect. If it involves the deprivation of one's property, there is nothing wrong in obtaining its restitution or compensation in lieu thereof; the only proviso being that if the act amounts equally to the commission of a non-compoundable offence, then, while the owner is entitled to his reparation, he must not, at the same time, compound the offence. In this view, the court held the son liable on a promissory note passed by the father on his failure to account for the money entrusted to him as a servant,[1] agent,[2] or manager,[3] or which he received as trustee of another person,[4] or of a public charity. The courts are now agreed that the son is bound to discharge his father's liability for misappropriation or breach of trust,[5] and for damages caused by his wrongful act.[6] This was denied in some cases,[7] which have been distinguished on the ground that in them the father's misappropriation was from the first a criminal[8] offence. It is suggested that the determining factors in such cases are the nature and degree of the crime, which must depend upon the particular facts of each case.[9] If the element of criminality and its degree are such as render the act first and foremost criminal, then the liability, being essentially immoral, the son would be exempt from it.

1371. It would seem that the presence of dishonesty is not incompatible with the son's liability for restitution of the money. But where the father had dishonestly received money, it would be honest of the son to do so.[10] The mere fact that there was dishonesty at some stage of the transaction does not exempt the son from liability. Apart from the stage, there are degrees of dishonesty as there are degrees in crime, and the trend of modern cases would seem to incline to the view that while the son will escape his liability for the father's crime, he cannot escape it if it fell short of it, and was, say, a mere tort, or an actionable wrong.[11] (§ 1389.).

1372. But while the son is not liable for the father's criminal act he is liable for his release from conviction, as in that case another principle comes into play.[12] It was held in a case in which one Sheo Jagat committed dacoity of the plaintiff's property at the time of the mutiny. Such offenders were then liable to the sentence of death, or at least a long term of imprisonment, but Government permitted wrong-doers to

---

(1) Jaikumar v. Gaurinath, 28 A. 718; (2) Nidha v. Collector, 14 A. L. J. 610: 35 I.C. 209.

(3) Gurdaru Das v. Mohan Lal, 4 L. 93.

(4) Hanmant v. Ganesh, 43 B. 612; Toshanpal v. District Judge, 51 A. 386 O.A. 56 A. 548 P.C. (High Court decree varied on facts.)

(5) Toshanpal Singh v. District Judge, 56 A. 548 P.C.; Chhakauri v. Ganga, 39 C. 862; Krishna v. Radha, 16 I.C. (C.) 410; Peary Lal v. Chandi Charan, 11 C. W.N. 163 (169); Hanmant v. Ganesh, 43 B. 612; Natesayyan v. Ponnusami, 16 M. 99; Kanemar v. Krishna, 31 M. 161; Gurunathan v. Addepally, 31 M. 472; Venugopala v. Ramanadhan, 37 M. 458: 4 I.C. 1090; Medai v. Veerabudra, 19 M.L.J. 759; Hanumant v. Sonadhari, (1919) 4 Pat. L.J. 653; Gursarn v. Mohan Lal, 4 L. 93; Kartar Singh v. Harjimal, (1879) P.R. 728; Jagannath v. Jugal Kishore, 48 A. 9.

(6) Chakkauri v. Ganga, 39 C. 862.

(7) Pareman v. Bhattu, 24 C. 672; Mahabir v. Basdeo, 6 A. 234; McDowell v. Ragava, 27 M. 71.

(8) Chakkauri v. Ganga, 39 C. 862 (871, 872).

(9) Jagannath v. Jugal Kishore, 48 A. 9 (10).

(10) Natesayyan v. Ponnusami, 16 M. 99 (104), followed in Gursarn v. Mohan-lal, 4 L. 93.

(11) Chakkauri v. Ganga, 39 C. 862; contra in Deoba v. Babia, 23 N.L.R. 134: 103 I.C. 809: (1927) N. 337 (but pious obligation overlooked).

(12) S. 11 (i).

make restitution and thus escape trial and punishment. For this purpose Sheo Jagat sold his zemindari, subject to a previous mortgage, to the plaintiff for Rs. 2,000 in satisfaction of his claim. The plaintiff sued to redeem the mortgage, to which the three sons of Sheo Jagat were made parties. They challenged the plaintiff's sale as illegal and immoral, but the court upheld it, holding that it was perfectly lawful for the father to sell his ancestral property to effect his release from prison.[1] This case is indistinguishable from those in which law permits the compounding of an offence by the payment of compensation for the causing of civil injury as distinct for the commission of crime for which the offender and the offender alone is liable.

1373. But these cases lie on the borderland between crimes and delicts upon which there is room for a difference of opinion. And so it has been held that where the father is clearly guilty of embezzlement[2] or forfeits a bond for keeping the peace, or for his good behaviour[3] the son is not bound to discharge his father's obligation.

Son not liable.

1374. As such, the son has been held not liable on a decree for damages, being the price of grain stolen by the father,[4] or where the father has misappropriated under circumstances which constituted the taking itself a criminal offence.[5] Such was the case of the father, who, as agent of a Zamindar, committed criminal breach of trust in respect of certain monies belonging to his employer, for which he was convicted and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. His employer also sued him and obtained a decree in execution of which his occupancy land held at fixed rates of rent was sold, whereupon his two minor sons sued to recover two-thirds of the holding on the ground that the debt did not bind them. It was held that as the father had been convicted of the offence, and the embezzlement was initially a crime, the debt must be deemed to be tainted with such illegality or immorality as did not bind the issue. The same view prevailed where the father had forfeited his bond for keeping the peace, or for his good behaviour,[6] a fortiori where he had to pay a fine[7] which, at any rate, is not a "debt" and so irrecoverable from the son. The intention, in such cases, is a matter of substance, and therefore, the first motive, as showing the intention, must be principally regarded.

1375. Immoral Debts.—A debt may be immoral according to the old ideas, and yet it may not be immoral so as to be irrecoverable. One such plea was overruled in a case in which the plaintiff had lent money to the uncle and nephew, being two members of a joint family, for the latter's marriage, being the cost he had to pay for his bride which the Shastric law denounces as illegal, and the marriage so brought about is the asur marriage which it disapproves. It was pleaded for the defendants

(1) Duleep Singh v. Sree Kishoon, 4 N.W.P.H.C.R. 83, following Lachman Koer v. Madaree Lall, (1850) 5 S. D.A.N.W.P. 327; Beni Ram v. Man Singh, 34 A. 4 (7); earlier cases held to be no longer good law, but their principle was followed.

(2) Mahabir v. Basudeo, 6 A. 234.

(3) Hiralal v. Chandrabali, 13 C. W. N. 9: 1 I.C. 153.

(4) Pareman Dass v. Bhattu, 24 C. 672 (674).

(5) Toshanpal Singh v. District Judge, 56 A. 548 P.C. (varying O.A. 51 A. 386); McDowell v. Ragava, 27 M. 71 (75).

(6) Hiralal v. Chandrabali, 13 C. W. N. 9: 1 I.C. 153.

(7) Nhanee v. Hureeram, 1 Borr. 90 (101).

that the plaintiff had lent money for an illegal object and that, therefore, it could not be sued for. But the court held that the asur form of marriage, though disapproved, was not illegal, and was in fact quite customary, and that, therefore, the loan could not be repudiated as made for an illegal purpose. It may be a reprehensible conduct on the part of a Government servant to trade in contravention of the Government Servants' Conduct Rules, but the son cannot repudiate his father's trade debts on that account, since such contravention amounts to no more than a breach of duty and is neither illegal nor immoral.[1] such is the father's conduct in wrongfully cutting down certain trees and demolishing a house,[2] closing up a channel[3] or otherwise meddling with another's property.[4] So, the son was held liable to repay money borrowed by the father for subsidising wrestling matches, as distinct from betting on them[5] or for the prosecution of the abductor of his wife,[6] or accused of the murder of the father.[7]

The term "immoral," when used in connexion with the father's debt, then implies common immorality and not that of the textual or artificial kind. Even then the debt must be clearly connected with it.

1376. It is, of course, obvious that the father may borrow money for debauchery from A, and then borrow more money from B to pay off A. Here B's debt cannot be repudiated by the son as immoral because it was advanced to satisfy an antecedent debt. But in such a case it will still be a question whether the debt was an "antecedent debt" within the meaning of law, which the son is under the legal duty to repay. Reserving this question for future consideration, the question of immorality must be considered in the light of Brihaspati's texts already cited. According to him, if the father incurs debt for drink or debauchery or reckless display or for any improper purpose, it is immoral. "Neither sins nor the expiation of them are hereditary."[8] In order to be immoral, a debt must promote immorality. Any loan made to an immoral man does not become immoral. And regard must be had to the character of the loan. In one case, a somewhat novel contention was made that the son was not liable to pay for the cloth purchased by the father who was a habitual drunkard. It was pointed out that there was no connexion between the two and the son could not evade his liability on the ground of his father's general immorality.[9]

Father's promise to pay Barred Debt.

1377. It has been already stated that the coparceners are not bound to pay a debt acknowledged by the manager after it is barred by time. It is, however, said, that though this is the rule, the fact that the son is under a pious obligation to pay his father's debt renders him liable to pay his barred debts, if duly revived by an acknowledgment. It is conceded that without an acknowledgment the son would not be under any obligation to pay his father's barred debt.[10] But a barred debt is a good

(1) Ram Krishna v. Narayan, 40 B. 126 (129).
(2) Chandrika v. Narain, 46 A. 617.
(3) Chhakauri v. Ganga, 39 C. 862.
(4) Gursarn Das v. Mohan Lal, 4 L. 93; Matadin v. Maharaj, 12 O.L.J. 33: 85 I.C. 959: (1925) O. 325.
(5) Jai Ram v. Shankar, 9 I.C. (O.) 406.
(6) Anokh Singh v. Sapuran, (1923) L. 660.
(7) Maruthappan v. Niraikulathan, I. L.R. (1937) M. 943.
(8) Nhanee v. Hureeram, 1 Bor. 84 (90).
(9) Hurnarain v. Arur Singh, (1872) P.R. 44; Sri Narain v. Raghubans Rai, 17 C.W.N. 124 P.C.; 17 I.C. 729.
(10) Subramania v. Gopala, 33 M. 308, Srinivasa v. Municipal Council, 22 M. foundation for a written promise to pay signed by the party liable to be charged therewith.[1] The question then arises whether, if the father makes such promise, the son is bound to pay the debt? That he is, is now held in several cases, in one[2] of which the court observed: "The fact that the debt was barred by the Act of Limitation did not affect the existence of the debt and there was nothing illegal or immoral in the action of the father promising to pay it. The new note operated as a renewal of the obligation. It was a good debt and the son is bound to pay it from any assets of his father,"[3] and a fortiori, the father may alienate joint property therefor.[4] In another case the same view was justified on the ground that Hindu Law did not recognize any rule as to the extinction of claims by the efflux of time,[5] to which may be added, that Hindu Law regards the father, the son, the grandson and the great-grandson as a single entity, and strictly speaking, a promise by one is a promise by the other, but the fiction of this rule has of course its limits.

Barred Debts.

1378. The question whether the pious obligation of the son to pay his father's debt extends even to the debt after it has become barred by time, is now decided by the consensus of authorities in the affirmative, the view of the courts being that since Hindu Law contains no rule of limitation, but, on the other hand, provides for the payment of debt from generation to generation until it is fully discharged, and since the statute of limitation merely bars the remedy of the creditor but does not extinguish the debt, the son's liability is unaffected by any rule of law personal or statutory. Consequently, while the creditor cannot resort to the coercive process of law to realize his debt after it is time-barred, it does not put an end to the son's moral obligation to pay the debt if he is so minded. Such payment, though optional, is nonetheless morally obligatory, and, as such, it affords a good ground for contribution from others equally liable for it.[6] As will be seen in the sequel, the same rule extends to the widow who, with the son, is equally under a pious obligation to discharge her husband's debt—if necessary, by alienation of her inherited property, so as to bind the reversioner.[7] So far as regards the son, it has been held that he is liable to pay a debt acknowledged or renewed by the father even after it has become barred by time[8] and he is equally liable on his renewal of a debt incurred when he was a minor.[9]

242; Haro v. Paragauda, 41 B. 347; Chitnavis v. Nathu Sao, 20 N.L.R. 106.

(1) Ss. 25 (3) and 60, Contract Act, Subramania v. Gopala, 33 M. 308 (309).

(2) Narayanasami v. Samidas, 6 M. 293.

(3) Narayanasami v. Samidas, 6 M. 293; Ramkishan v. Chhedi Rai, 44 A. 628; Gauri Shankar v. Sheonandan, 46 A. 384; Gajadhar v. Jagannath, 46 A. 775 F.B. (overruling contra in Indar Singh v. Sarju Singh, 8 A.L.J. 1099: 11 I. C. 737; Dalip Singh v. Kundan Lal, 35 A. 207); Shib Nath v. Alliance Bank, (1915) P.R. No. 3: 25 I.C. 480; Har Hari Baksh v. Bharat, 16 O.C. 485: 20 I.C. 590; Sitla Bux v. Jagat Pal, 86 I. C. (O.) 693, contra Deo Narayan v. Lall Hari, 20 O.C. 1: 38 I.C. 821.

(4) Gajadhar v. Jagannath, 46 A. 775 F.B.

(5) Ram Kishan v. Chhedi Rai, 44 A. 628.

(6) Per Westropp, C.J., in Bhala v. Parbhu, 2 B. 67 (73); Gajadhar v. Jagannath, 46 A. 775 F.B.: 80 I. C. 684 (689) (overruling contra in Indar Singh v. Sarju Singh, 8 A.L.J. 1099: 11 I.C. 737; Dalip Singh v. Kundan Lal, 35 A. 207; Shankar v. Sheonandan, 46 A. 384 (388).

(7) S. 339 (5).

(8) See cases supra.

(9) Kundan Bibi v. Sree Narayan, 11 C. W. N. 135; Karam Chand v. Basant Kuar, (1911) P.R. No. 31: 11 I. C. 321; Ram Rattan v. Basant Rai, 2 L. 263 (268, 269).

Limitation.

1379. The limitation applicable to a suit against the son depends upon the nature of the claim laid. Such a claim may be instituted, (i) against the son as a member of the joint family, or (ii) by reason of his pious obligation, or (iii) because he is the heir and legal representative of the father. In the first case, if the suit is on a mortgage executed by the father and the suit is to enforce the mortgage then the limitation would be as prescribed by Article 132 and the starting point of limitation would be the accrual of the cause of action.[1] But if the suit be not on the mortgage, and if it is not binding on the son because the debt secured was neither antecedent nor supported by family necessity or benefit, then the courts hold the suit against him as still maintainable on the ground of his pious obligation to discharge his father's debt, and in that case, it has been held, that as regards limitation, the suit would be subject to Article 120,[2] from the date when the debt became payable.

A Father's Suretyship.

1380. But the courts are not agreed on the subject of the son's liability to pay for his father's suretyship. The question cannot be answered in a general way without reference to the nature of the security given by the father, which, though variously classed by other Smritikars, is thus classified by Brihaspati into four heads: (i) for paying the debts of another; (ii) for delivery of the debtor's effects; (iii) for appearance; iv) for honesty.[3] The son is expressly declared liable for the first two[4] and the only question is whether he is equally liable for the other two. The texts on the subject cannot all be reconciled, and the Bombay High Court holds the son actually bound also in respect of the latter two kinds of security, on the ground that, being an antecedent debt of the father, the son is prima facie bound, unless the son can shew it to be illegal or immoral![5] But if he shows this, he will be exonerated from all liability without reference to the fact whether the surety is of the former or of the latter kind. In a later case in which the son's liability to discharge his father's liability as a surety was reaffirmed, it is held to extend no further to his grandson, unless the grandfather had, in becoming a surety received some consideration for it.[6] But it is submitted, that there is no distinction in principle between the liability of the son and that of the grandson, and the other courts do not discriminate between the two.[7] In one case, the father had executed a surety bond stipulating that the mortgagee could realize his claim from his land, if he failed to realize it from the land of the debtor mortgaged to him. It was found that this bond was recklessly given without any necessity or benefit, and though it was one reason given for dismissing the claim, the other and more

(1) Brijnandan v. Bidya, 42 C. 1068 (1092) F.B.

(2) Surja Prasad v. Golap Chand, 27 C. 762.

(3) See texts collected in Mandlik's H.L., 107, 108; Kotapalli v. Kanuparli, 58 M. 375; Dwarka Das v. Kishen Das, 55 A. 675.

(4) Brihaspati, IX-40, 41; Gautam, II-41; Yadnavalkya, II-55; Vyas, cited in Virmitroday, I-100, p. 2; Tukaram Bhat v. Ganga Ram, 23 B. 454 (456); Moolchand v. Krishna, Bellasis, 54.

(5) Tukaram Bhat v. Ganga Ram, 23 B. 454 (459, 460).

(6) Narayan v. Venkatacharya, 28 B. 408 (411).

(7) Maharaja of Benares v. Ramkumar, 26 A. 611; Sitaramaiya v. Venkatramanna, 11 M. 373; Chetti Kulam v. Chetti Kulam, 28 M. 377; Raghunath v. Natesa, 17 M.L.J. 283; Kameswarma v. Venkata, 38 M. 1120; Basik Lal v. Singeswar, 39 C. 843; Gopal Rao v. Berar Manufacturing Co., 1 N.L.R. 173; Bhagwan Das v. Salig Ram, (1886) P.R. 60.

substantial reason was that the creditor's remedy had become barred by time.[1]

1381. Right of Receiver in Bankruptcy.—The question whether, on the father's insolvency, his son's coparcenary interest vests in the assignee or receiver with his own interest depends on the definition of "property" in S. 2 (e) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909,[2] which, in the absence of a corresponding definition in the Provincial Insolvency Act,[3] was held to extend equally to cases under it. The definition of "property" is expressed to "include any property over which, or the profits of which, any person has disposing power, which he may exercise for his own benefit."[4] It was held,[5] though reluctantly, in some cases, and, following the stare decisis,[6] that the term was sufficiently wide, prima facie to embrace the Mitakshara son's coparcenary interest in the joint family, though it was at the same time conceded that it was open to the son to show that his share was exempt by reason of the character of the father's debts. It is submitted that the principle of stare decisis should not stand in the way of a correct interpretation of the definition which does not prima facie include the son's coparcenary share over which the father cannot be said to possess an unqualified disposing power, without which the son's property is not his own. It has since been so held by the Privy Council.[7] The Indian courts have, moreover, held[8] that since the father possesses the right to dispose of his son's interest in ancestral immovable property for the payment of his own debts, not contracted for illegal and immoral purposes, a vesting order made whether under the Presidency[9] or the Provincial Insolvency Act,[10] would suffice to vest that right in the Receiver, who would become possessed of the father's right to alien the ancestral property even though the father should afterwards die, since the right once vested in the Receiver could not be divested from him and vested in the son by right of survivorship. In the legal aspect of the matter, the natural existence of the insolvent is for the purpose of dealing with his estate, artificially continued in the Receiver who can, after the insolvent's death, deal with the estate as he could have done with it were the insolvent still alive.[11] The same prin-

---

(1) Hiralal v. Chandrabali, 13 C.W. N. 9: 1 I.C. 153.

(2) III of 1909.

(3) V of 1920.

(4) The same words occur in S. 60 of the Code of Civil Procedure, S. 266 (XIV of 1882), now S. 60 (V of 1908) which have been similarly interpreted; Jagabhai v. Vijbhukhandas, 11 S. 37, following Nanomi Babuasin v. Madhun Mohun, 13 C. 21 P.C.; but contra in Harde Narain v. Ruder Perkash, 10 C. 626 P.C. Nunna v. Chidarboyama, 26 M. 214.

(5) Fakirchand v. Motichand, 7 B. 438: Sardarmal v. Aranvayal, 21 B. 205; Rangayya v. Thanikachalla, 19 M. 741, followed in Birhari Lal v. Sat Narain, 3 L. 329 F.B.

(6) Bihari Lal v. Sat Narain, 3 L. 329 (342) F. B.

(7) Sat Narain v. Bihari Lal, 6 L. 1 (25) P.C., overruling O.A. Bihari Lal v. Sat Narain, 3 L. 329 F.B.; Siddheshwar v. Devkali, 9 Luck. 304 F.B.

(8) Official Assignee v. Ramachandra, 46 M. 54; Venkatarayudu v. Shivaramakrishnayya, 58 M. 126; Sellamuthu Servai, (In re), 47 M. 57 F.B.; Sat Narain v. Srikishen, 7 L. 376 (387), affirmed O. A. 17 L. 644 P.C.

(9) Sat Narain v. Srikishen Das, 17 L. 644 P.C.

(10) S. 28 (2), Act V of 1920, Sat Narain v. Bihari Lal, 6 L. 1 P.C.; Bhiswanath Sao v. O. R., 16 Pat. 60; Venkatarayudu v. Sivaramakrishnayya, 58 M. 126.

(11) Fakirchand v. Motichand, 7 B. 438 (443, 444); Bawan Das v. Chiene, 44 A. 316 (318); Allahabad Bank v. Bhagwan Das, 48 A. 343; Om Prakash v. Moti Ram, Ib., 400, Ram Ghulam v. Kailash, 52 A. 493 F.B.; Bihari Lal v.

ciple would, of course, equally apply to a managing member, other than the father, but, in that case, the character of the debt must be such as to be recoverable from the joint family.[1]

1382. Avoidance of Illegal Transfer.—The son being entitled to set aside his father's illegal or immoral transfer, a question arises whether he is entitled to avoid the transfer as a whole or only to the extent of his own interest therein. In Bengal, Behar, the United Provinces and the Punjab, where coparcenary interest is inalienable even for value without the consent of the other coparceners, the father's alienation must stand or fall as a whole.[2] If it is illegal or immoral it must be wholly set aside not excepting even the father's interest, since such interest was incapable of alienation.[3] Where, however, such interest is alienable for value, as it is in Madras, Bombay and the Central Provinces, the transfer would, in such cases, take effect to the extent of the father's interest.[4] Even elsewhere, the court may refuse to disturb the alienee's possession if it has been acquiesced in by the son.[5]

The right of the son or of a coparcener to avoid an alienation passes to his own alienee, so that he becomes entitled to the remedies open to his alienor. A sale purporting to be made for an antecedent debt may be set aside at the instance of the son on proof that the debt was not antecedent. In that case the son, it is said, is not liable to refund the price paid by the purchaser since it cannot be regarded as a debt of the father until the sales have been set aside.[6] Even if so, there is nothing to preclude the court from making it a term of the decree.[7] Indeed, if the court is entitled to take all things into consideration before cancelling an alienation, it has to see what equities the alienee is entitled to,—refund of his money, cost of improvements or the like. It has to see whether the plaintiff has not by his long inaction,[8] latches, acquiescence or the like disabled himself from contesting the alienation.[9] An alienation only partially supported by antecedent debt may be set aside or upheld in accordance with the principle of section 135. Where the alienation is set aside, the plaintiff becomes ordinarily entitled to mesne profits at least from the date of the suit, since the institution of the suit is a repudiation of the sale:[10] of course, there is no question of mesne profits where the alienation is set aside on the son's paying a portion of the price held binding on him, since the alienee's possession cannot then be held to be wrongful.[11]

Sat Narain, 3 L. 329 (342) F.B.; Sat Narain v. Sri Kishen, 7 L. 376; Official Assignee v. Ramachandra, 46 M. 54; Sellamuthu Servai, (In re), 47 M. 87 F.B.; Seetharama v. Official Receiver, 49 M. 849 F.B.; Gopala Krishnayya v. Gopalan, 51 M. 342.

(1) Rangayya v. Thanikachella, 19 M. 74 (77, 78).

(2) Ballaram v. Atma Ram, (1933) 14 L. 584: Chiranji Lal v. Kartar Singh, (1925) L. 130; Luchman Prasad v. Sarnam Singh, 39 A. 500 P.C.

(3) Sadabart v. Foolbash, 3 B.L.R. 31 F.B., approved in Balgobind v. Narain Lal, 15 A. 339 P.C.; Lachman v. Sarnam Singh, 39 A. 500 P.C.; Chamaili v. Ram Prasad, 2 A. 267 F.B.

(4) Naro v. Paragauda, 41 B. 347; Marappa v. Rangasami, 23 M. 89; Shivanath v. Tulshi, 23 A.L.J. 865: 89 I.C. 480.

(5) S. 167; Darsu Pandey v. Bikramjit, 3 A. 125; Bankey Lal v. Durga Prasad, 53 A. 565 F.B.

(6) Madan Gopal v. Sati Prasad, 39 A. 485 (488); contra in Koer Hasmat Rai v. Sundar Das, 11 C. 396.

(7) Koer Hasmat Rai v. Sundar Das, 11 C. 396.

(8) Kamta Prasad v. Sidh Narain, 14 I.C. (A.) 251.

(9) S. 169.

(10) Bhirjee Nath v. Narsing, 39 A. 61; Subha Goundan v. Krishnan, 45 M. 419.

(11) Banwari Lal v. Mahesh, 41 A. 63 P.C.

1383. Limitation.—A suit by or against the son to avoid or enforce the father's debt or alienation is subject to varying periods of limitation according to the nature of the suit and the remedy sought. Taking first the creditor's suit, it is clear that, having the same right both against the father as well as the son, his limitation against the two must be the same. But he is not bound to sue both the father and the son, at the same time. He may sue the father and then the son, but that would not enlarge his limitation, since his cause of action against the two is the same.[1] But he may sue the father and then the son, if the former dies before attachment, though having sued the father the son would be prima facie liable unless he can shew that his own interest is exempt as the debt was illegal or immoral. It is held that in such a case, the creditor has the option of suing the son on the original cause of action against the father, or on the basis of the decree obtained against him, or of proceeding against him in execution,[2] and that in the former case if he sues on the decree obtained against the father, he is entitled to the limitation prescribed in Article 120. The liability of the son to pay his father's debt is not contractual but legal, and it has nothing to do with the fact that the creditor has obtained a decree against the father or is proceeding in execution against him. He can sue the son, and even if he wished to enforce his father's mortgage, the limitation would be subject to Article 120 and not Article 132 or Article 147, as there is no charge to enforce against the son.[3] This article equally applies to a claim made against the son for the father's defalcation, the terminus a quo being the death of the father or his failure to account when called upon to do so.[4]

The Limitation Act expressly prescribes 12 years for a suit by the son to set aside his father's alienation of ancestral property against the alienee who has taken possession of the property.[5] When, however, the son wishes to set aside nothing but merely seeks a declaration that the alienation does not affect the son's share his suit would be subject to Article 120;[6] of course, the son must sue for possession if it is with the alienee, though before he takes it, he may sue him for a mere declaration of his right.

It has already been seen that a son born after the alienation has no right to set it aside. (§ 162.) Consequently, such son cannot receive the benefit of sections 6-8 of the Limitation Act.[7] As regards limitation, the alienee from the son stands in the same position as the son. Consequently, where the plaintiff who had purchased the property from the son in 1912 sued to eject the defendant who had purchased it from the father in 1897, the court threw out the suit as barred by Article 126, though it might have been in time if Article 144 were applicable.[8]

---

(1) Ramasami v. Ulaganatha, 22 M. 49 F.B., Mallesam v. Jugala, 23 M. 292 (297) F.B.; Periasami v. Seetharama, 27 M. 243 (249) F.B.

(2) S. 53, C. P. C.; Periasami v. Seetharama, 27 M. 243 (251-254) F.B., Limitation 12 years under Art. 183—Sri Chandra v. Shyam Kumari, 11 Pat. 445 (454).

(3) Bidya Prosad v. Bhupnarain, 42 C. 1068 F.B.; contra in Ram Singh v. Sobha Ram, 29 A. 544; Dharam Singh v. Angan Lal, 21 A. 301; Ariabudra v. Dorasami, 11 M. 413.

(4) Rao Biraj Singh v. Rani Raghubir, 31 A. 429; Fakir Chand v. Dara Ram, 25 A. 67 (70); Narsingh v. Lalji, 23 A. 206.

(5) Art. 126; Art. 144 does not apply to such cases; Murajalli v. Ramasami, 41 M. 650.

(6) Devi Raj v. Shiv Ram, (1914) P. R. 70; 25 I.C. 463.

(7) Ranodip Singh v. Parameshwar, 47 A. 165 (169) P.C.

(8) Munia v. Ramasami, 41 M. 650.

Mesne Profits: Damages.

1384. The son's liability for mesne profits and for damage due from or awarded against the father has been asserted in several cases,[1] though there is a dissenting case in which the contrary was laid down. In this case the plaintiff had obtained a decree against the defendant's father for damages to the plaintiff's property caused by a dam erected by the latter, which obstructed the passage of water from a certain well to the plaintiff's land. The decree was sought to be executed against the son, but the court held the son not liable, holding that the father's act being wrongful, the son was not liable as there was nothing to show that the estate he had inherited had benefited from the act.[2] It was said that such a liability was avyavharik or one which no decent and respectable man should have incurred. This argument was answered by the Calcutta Court who had to decide a similar case in which they held the word avyavharik to mean no more than "lawful, usual or customary,"[3] and as such they held the son liable. But, in such case, the question would seem to be one of degree. If the tortious act of the father, however egregious, was intended to benefit the estate, the son would be liable to bear the burden of an act, the effect of which was miscarried.

Costs.

1385. According to Brihaspati, the son is exempt from payment of his father's "fine". And the question has arisen whether acting upon its analogy the son should not be held exempt from payment of costs decreed against the father as an unsuccessful litigant. In the view of the Calcutta High court, concurred in by the other courts, such costs would be payable by the son, however imprudent and speculative may have been the father's action.[4] It is pointed out that costs, as now awarded by the court, were no part of the ancient procedure under which an unsuccessful litigant had to pay a penalty to the king for making a false claim or a false defence;[5] and therefore, when the ancient law-giver exonerated the son from the "fine" they could not have intended to exempt him from the costs which had then no existence. There are, however, cases in which the courts draw a line if the suit instituted was false, in which case it is said that the son should not be saddled with the costs thrown on the father.[6] But there appears to be no ground for this distinction.

1386. It would seem, however, that while the son must pay all costs decreed against the father, a discrimination is made in costs otherwise incurred, the son being in that case liable to pay only such costs as the father incurs in defending himself in civil or criminal cases;[7] but it

---

(1) Chhakauri v. Ganga Prasad, 39 C. 862; Peari Lal v. Chandi Charan, 11 C. W.N. 163.

(2) Durbar v. Khachar, 32 B. 348 (351, 352).

(3) Chhakauri v. Ganga Prasad, 39 C. 862 (868).

(4) Prayag v. Kasi, 14 C.W.N. 659: 11 C.L.J. 599: 6 I.C. 258; Chakkauri v. Ganga, 39 C. 862; Venu Gopala v. Ramanadhan, 37 M. 458, distinguishing contra in Ramaiengar v. Secretary of State, 20 M.L.J. 89: 4 I.C. 105; Sumer v. Liladhar, 33 A. 472.

(5) Manu, VIII-59; Yadnyavalkya, II-11.

(6) Ramaiengar v. Secretary of State, 20 M.L.J. 89: 4 I.C. 105; Durbar v. Khachar, 32 B. 348; Mahomed Ali v. Jhao Lal, 4 O.W.N. 1069; Hariyappa v. Deputy Commissioner, (1927) 5 Mys. L. J. 173.

(7) Sumer Singh v. Liladhar, 33 A. 472; Beni Ram v. Man Singh, 34 A. 4; Premsukh v. Rambhejawan, (1920) 1 P. L.J. 34; Hanmant v. Sonadhari, 4 Pat. L.J. 653: 52 I.C. 734; Sundar Lal v. Raghunandan, 3 Pat. 250 (254); Rama- is otherwise if he incurs costs in launching a false and malicious prosecution.[1] The defence of title of members of the family is, indeed, a recognized head of legal necessity, for which not only the son but all coparceners are equally liable.[2]

The cost of a criminal prosecution alone is a charge on the joint family. The fact that the manager was, in execution of his own personal debt, committed to jail, would not entitle him to mortgage the family property to secure his liberation.[3]

1387. Liability to Indemnify.—That a liability to indemnify an innocent person against the illegal or immoral act of the father is not necessarily illegal or immoral follows from the fact that the cause is one thing and the effect another. If the father commit dacoity and with the booty so received purchase an estate, the right of the owner to indemnity cannot be regarded as illegal or immoral, nor can the son complain that he should not be mulcted for his father's criminal act. All he can complain, and justly, is that so long as the father's liability is no more than a claim, it is not a "debt", and so long as it is indeterminate and its amount uncertain, he should not be held liable. But once its measure is fixed and ascertained, by admission or adjudication, it becomes a certain sum recoverable from the father, and on that ground, recoverable from the son. But this rule has its limits being inapplicable to personal injuries, e.g., defamation of character,[4] malicious prosecution[5] malicious search[6] or obstruction to the right of way in no way benefit the estate of the wrong-doer.[7] Indeed, as observed by Bowen, L.J.: "The only cases in which, apart from questions of breach of contract, express or implied, a remedy for a wrongful act can be pursued against the estate of a deceased person who has done the act, appears to us to be those in which property, or the proceeds of value of property belonging to another, have been appropriated by the deceased person and added to his own estate or moneys."[8] But this does not appear to be the limit of the son's liability, who has to pay for paternal misfeasances though they may not have in the slightest degree benefited the estate.

Imprudent Debt not Illegal.

1388. A debt or an alienation is not illegal or immoral merely because it was imprudently or recklessly incurred or made, or that the money might have been got at a lower rate of interest.[9] The son's liability to pay for a debt borrowed to pre-empt a property depends upon qua the son, whether the debt was antecedent and qua other coparceners, whether it was supported by necessity or benefit.[10] The enlargelingam v. Muthayyan, 26 M.L.J. 528: 24 I.C. 356; Hari v. Sant Prasad, 32 I.C. (C.) 969.

---

(1) Sundar Lal v. Raghunandan, 3 Pat. 250.

(2) S. 118 (e) (i).

(3) Ram Ratan v. Lachman Das, 5 A. L.J. 417.

(4) Muzaffar v. Ghulam, (1915) P. R. 62: 28 I.C. 455.

(5) Murugappa v. Ponnuswami, 44 M. 828; Rustomji v. Nurse, ib., 357; Subramania v. Venkataramier, 31 I.C. (M.) 4; Punjab Singh v. Ramatar, 52 I.C. (L.) 348.

(6) Gadigi v. Vamajee, 21 M. L. J. 772: 38 I.C. 823.

(7) Haridas v. Ram Das, 13 B. 677; Ma Shwe v. Mg. Po, 65 I.C. (R.) 66.

(8) Phillips v. Homfray, 24 Ch. D. 439 (454).

(9) Khabhel Rahman v. Gobind, 20 C. 328 P.C.; Kuldip Sahai v. Rambhujhawan, 3 Pat. 425; Tikait v. Malhjyi, (1925) Pat. 588.

(10) Amrej Singh v. Shambhu, 55 A. 1 F.B.

ment of family estate is wise but it might be foolish in one who has to mortgage his ancestral estate to acquire it, for the chances are that he may lose both. But such a venture, though highly speculative, is not illegal or immoral, and if it results in a legacy of debt, the son has got to pay it.[1] But a pre-emption decree which gives the pre-emptor the option to acquire certain property at a certain price does not constitute an antecedent debt.[2] The father is entitled to embark on a new trade, howsoever speculative, and the son is liable for his trade debts. The texts of Gautam, exempting the son from the father's commercial debts is now obsolete, and the only rule which now limits the son's liability applies to debts which are illegal or immoral.[3] As such, the son is liable to pay his father's debts incurred in a new trade started by him, since such debt is not illegal or immoral.[4] It is said that the son is not bound by the father's mortgage of his ancestral property to save his self-acquired property, e.g., property inherited from a cousin, though the liability would spring into existence as soon as a mortgage decree is passed.[5]

1389. Non-liability After Separation.—The son's liability to pay his father's debts and the latter's power to alien the coparcenary estate cease on partition. But since an unequivocal declaration of his intention may amount to separation, the son would thenceforward cease to be liable for his father's debt. If, however, the creditor, in ignorance of this declaration, bona fide purchased from the father what he conceived to be his joint estate, the purchaser would be protected and the purchase treated as if the father and son were joint,[6] the reason being that as between two such persons, the one with a secret title must suffer because he had done nothing to disclose it to the other who had, therefore, acted to his prejudice, relying upon the ostensible title as the real title. Where, during the pendency of proceedings in insolvency against the father in a joint Hindu family, a partition takes place, it is competent to the receiver to take possession of the shares obtained on partition by the sons for the purpose of paying thereout such of the father's debts as the sons were legally liable to pay.[7] The mere fact that in a partition suit a personal decree was passed against the father does not shew that the debt for which the decree is passed is immoral or illegal.[8]

Non-liability of Separate Property.

1390. Of course, as previously remarked, the son's liability is now limited to the extent of his share in the coparcenary or the assets inherited by him. His separate property is not liable. Where, therefore, the son had purchased his father's property in execution of a decree passed against the latter, the decree remaining unsatisfied, that property could not be again seized in execution of the same decree, though it was in charged. (§§ 1377, 1378.)

---

(1) Tulram v. Tulshi Ram, 42 A. 559. This was overlooked in Shankar Sahai v. Bechu Ram, 47 A. 381; Pirthi Singh v. Mamchand, 16 L. 1077; Maulakchand v. Dayakishan, 106 I.C. (L.) 183.

(2) Amrej Singh v. Shambhu, 55 A. 1 F.B.; Chatarbhuj v. Govind Ram, 45 A. 407.

(3) Achutaramayya v. Ratnajee, 49 M. 211; Raja Gopal v. Veeraperumal, 53 M. L.J. 232: 102 I.C. 680: (1927) M. 792; Ramkrishna v. Narayan, 40 B. 126.

(4) Annabhat v. Shivappa, 52 B. 376.

(5) Nand Lall v. Umrai, 295 C. 260: 93 I.C. 655: (1926) O. 321.

(6) Vemi v. Nallappa, 11 M. L. W. 611: 57 I.C. 800; Bankey Lal v. Durga Prasad, 53 A. 868.

(7) Sita Ram v. Beni Prasad, 47 A. 263.

(8) Raghunath v. Basudeo, 3 Pat. L. J. 764: (1925) Pat. 823.

(9) Kanhaiya Lal v. Niranjan Lal, 47 A. 351.

160. Son's liability defined. (1) Save as provided in sections 146 and 149, the son's liability for his father's debt only arises in respect of a debt incurred during the state of his jointness with his father, but it may be enforced against the son even upon his separation, out of the share allotted to him, or otherwise inherited or obtained by him, but on his accounting for such share in the course of due administration in payment of the paramount charge of his father's debt, his liability will cease:[1]

Provided that if he fails to so account for it, his liability will not cease, but shall then extend to his person and other property.[2]

(2) Where there are more sons than one, all are jointly and severally liable to the extent of the assets received by them; though as between themselves, their liability is proportionate to the value of such assets.[3]

1391. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by the following authorities,[4] and the following texts:—

Narad.—"The father being dead, it is incumbent on the sons to pay his debts, each according to his share (of the inheritance), in case they are divided in interests, or, if they are not divided in interests, the debt must be discharged by that son who becomes manager of the family estate."[5]

The pious obligation of the son to pay his father's debt arises equally whether the debt was incurred in a state of his jointness with the father or after partition, but in the one case, it is limited to his coparcenary share, whether undivided or since divided, and in the other, to the assets of the father inherited by him. The liability only relates to a debt not illegal or immoral. The debt need not be antecedent, but if it is so, the father then possesses the additional power of alienation of his son's undivided share, in discharge of such debt. Taking this section along with sections 133 and 146 (4) the son may be liable (a) as coparcener, (b) as the heir and (c) as the son of his father. In the first case his liability does not go beyond that of any other coparcener, extended however, by his pious obligation, which equally attaches to him when he takes only as an heir. But even in such case, though all heirs are liable to pay the owner's debts, the son as heir is morally bound to pay them even when barred by time. But this liability is optional and if he takes his stand on the law of limitaton he is entitled to do so. But if, in spite of limitation, which merely bars the creditors' remedy but does not extinguish the debt, he chooses to pay the debt, he can compel others, equally liable with him, to pay their contribution to the debt which he has discharged. (§§ 1377-1378.)

---

(1) Muttayan Chettiar v. Sangilivira, 6 M. 1 P.C.; Roop Singh v. Buldeo Singh, 2 W.R. 258; Zuburdust v. Udurman, Agra F. B. 71; Ramchandra v. Kondayya, 24 M. 555; Kameswaramma v. Venkatasubba, 38 M. 1120; Muthu v. v. Chinnasawmy, 39 M.L.J. 486: 59 I.C. 685; Jagannath v. Viswesan, 47 M. 621; Subramania v. Sabapathi, 51 M. 361 F. B.; Muniswami v. Kutti Moopan, 56 M. 833.

(2) Raj Roop Singh v. Buldeo Singh, 2 W.R. 258; Unnopoorna v. Ganga, 2 W.R. 296; Mooktareshee v. Wooma Churn, 12 W.R. 233; Jamiyatram v. Parbhu Das, 9 B.H.C.R. 116.

(3) Manu, VIII-166; Vishnu, VI-27; Yad., II-45-50; Narad, I-2; 33 S. B. E. 41; Salem Town Bank v. Ramaswamy, 27 M.L.J. 256: 26 I.C. 362; Ramchandra v. Kondayya, 24 M. 555 (557); Bhagwan Singh v. Prem Singh, (1883) P.R. No. 79.

(4) Ib., foot-notes (1), (2) and (3).

(5) I-2; 33 S.B.E. 41, 42; 1 Dig. Bk. 1 Ch. V, § 169, cited in Udaram v. Ranu, 11 B.H.C.R. 76 (85).

1392. The liability arises as soon as the obligation is made; but "it is not joint liability, nor a joint and several liability, as ordinarily understood, in English Law; in fact, it is difficult to bring it under any particular legal category of the English Law."[1]

Though his liability arises in his father's lifetime, he cannot be sued alone without the father, though the father can be sued alone without the son. And though a decree might be obtained against the father, a suit might be instituted against the son on the original cause of action.[2] The fact that the son had since taken his share in a bona fide partition is immaterial, if only the debt was contracted when he was joint. The obligation which then came into being cannot be discharged by a subsequent partition.[3] But it has been said that if the debt contracted before the partition is renewed after the partition, the son ceases to be liable.[4] But the question depends upon whether the renewal amounts to a novation giving rise to a fresh obligation. Again, if the debt was not merely the father's debt but also a debt contracted by the father as manager and is supported by legal necessity or benefit, then it will be a family debt payable out of the family assets and not only from the son's share.[5]

The share of the son liable is the share of his ancestral property which the son obtains howsoever, whether in a partition or by survivorship or inheritance. So long as the son takes it as an heir he is liable. He may take it even as a devisee but then as a testamentary heir his liability remains.

1393. This liability is discharged as soon as the assets inherited or received by the son have become exhausted in due administration of the payment of a paramount charge of his father's debts. If he is guilty of fraud in concealing the property or maladministering the estate with intent to defraud, defeat or delay his father's creditors, his liability will extend to his own property. Such was the case of one Khema Singh who had purchased a certain landed estate in the name of his sons, which was attached by his father's (Hurdeb Roy's) creditors. Khema Singh resisted the attachment, alleging that he had inherited no property from his father, Hurdeb Roy, but the court found otherwise and held the attachment, till Khema Singh gave a full and true account of all moneys and property to which he had succeeded as heir to Hurdeb Roy.[6]

Clause (2).

1394. It has already been seen that the father, the son, the grandson and the great-grandson are regarded as one juridical person, and it follows that so far as the creditor is concerned, he is entitled to hold all and any of the sons liable, to the extent of their inherited assets.[7] He holds them liable because they are in possession of the father's assets, which he was entitled to sell in order to pay off his debt.[8] But it is the right of the creditor which

(1) Narayanan v. Veerappa, 40 M. 581 (584).
(2) Ib.
(3) Subramania v. Sabapathi, 51 M. 361 F. B.; Muniswami v. Kuthi Moopan, 56 M. 833; Mutyala v. Mahbub, 57 M. 190; Jawahar Singh v. Parduman Singh, 14 L. 399.
(4) Peda Venkanna v. Srinivasa, 41 M. 136.
(5) Ramachandra v. Kondayya, 24 M. 555.
(6) Raj Koop Singh v. Buldeo Singh, 2 W.R. 258.
(7) Salem Town Bank v. Ramaswamy, 27 M.L.J. 236: 26 I. C. 262; Bissessor Eam v. Ramakant, 13 Pat. 7; Devi Das v. Jadaram, 15 L. 50.
(8) Ramchandra v. Kondayya, 24 M. 555 (557), distinguishing Krishnasami v. Ramasami, 22 M. 519 (521).

he might waive by apportioning liability.[1] So, the case would be different where, after partition, the creditor sues the father alone for his debt incurred before partition, in which case the son's share cannot be seized in execution.[2] Where a son has to pay more than his quota of the father's debt, he is entitled to contribution from the other sons since, as between the sons, the liability is proportionate to the benefit received. This principle applies equally to all heir.[3]

Liability of divided son for debts and alienations of the father.

161. (1) A divided son is not liable for debts incurred, and is not bound by an alienation of the coparcenary property made by the father after partition,[4] unless the partition was made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the father,[5] or had failed to provide for such debts.[6]

(2) A divided son is liable for a debt incurred by the father on the death of the father,[7] and where the partition was made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the father, in the life-time of the father,[8] and is bound by an alienation of the coparcenary property made by the father before partition, in like manner as an undivided son in respect of a debt, or alienation incurred or made by the father, to the extent of the property taken by the divided son on partition.[9]

(3) The property taken by a divided son on partition shall not be attached or sold in execution of a decree passed against the father, unless:—

(a) the property had been attached before partition,[10] or

(b) the partition was made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the father.[11]

1395. Analogous Law.—On separation the son ceases to be a member of the joint family, and as his liability depends upon receipt of assets after the death, it follows that the son who has already received his heritage can no longer be compelled to discharge his pious obligations in respect of debts incurred by the father after his separation.[12] He is, however, liable for debts incurred before partition[13] and for debts after partition to the extent of the father's assets in his hands.[14]

The son will, of course, be liable if the partition was unreal,[15] or even if otherwise, it was made with intent to defeat the father's creditors,

(1) Durga Pershad v. Kesho Pershad, 8 C. 656 (664) P.C.

(2) Krishnasami v. Ramasami, 22 M. 519 (521), explained in Ramchandra v. Kondayya, 24 M. 555 (557).

(3) Karimuddin v. Gobind Krishna, 31 A. 497 (506) P.C.

(4) Kulada Prasad v. Haripada, 40 C. 407.

(5) Annabhat v. Shivappa, 52 B. 376 (380, 381).

(6) Bankey Lal v. Durga Prasad, 53 A. 868 F.B.; Lalta Prasad v. Gajadhar, 55 A. 283; Chottay Lal v. Ganpat, 57 A. 176; Devi Das v. Jada Ram, 15 L. 50.

(7) Ram Ghulam v. Nand Kishore, 4 Pat. 469.

(8) Krishnaswami v. Ramaswami, 22 M. 519; Annabhat v. Shivappa, 52 B. 376.

(9) See cases cited in foot-note (12) post.

(10) Krishnaswami v. Ramaswami, 22 M. 519.

(11) Ib.

(12) Kulada Prasad v. Haripada, 40 C. 407.

(13) Krishnasami v. Ramasami, 22 M. 519; Ramachandra v. Kandayya, 24 M. 555; Kameswaramma v. Venkata, 38 M. 1120; Muthu v. Chinasawmy, 39 M.L.J. 486: 59 I.C. 685; Vinjamampati v. Vadlamanti, 41 M. 136; Subramania v. Sabapathi, 51 M. 361 F.B.; Muniswami v. Kuthi Moopan, 56 M. 833; Annabhat v. Shivappa, 52 B. 376 (381, 382); Gayaprasad v. Murlidhar, 25 A.L.J. 829: (1927) A. 714; Hema Ram v. Chhatta, 2 L.L.J. 751; Jawahar Singh v. Parduman Singh, 14 L. 399.

(14) Ram Ghulam v. Nand Kishore, 4 Pat. 469.

(15) Krishnasami v. Ramasami, 22 M. 519; Gaya Prasad v. Murlidhar, 25 A.

or had resulted in defeating them,[1] as where the partition had ignored their debts.[2]

162. (1) The liability of the undivided son to discharge his father's obligation is independent of whether it was incurred before he himself was born.[3]

Liability of after-born son.

(2) A son cannot sue to set aside his father's alienation made before he was born.[4]

1396. Analogous Law.—This rule is supported by the undernoted cases.[5] It proceeds upon the assumption that the right to question an improper alienation belongs only to a coparcener then in existence. If after-born coparceners were permitted to canvas the property of an alienation made years before they were born, it would lead to uncertainty and confusion of titles derived from the father or the manager. Moreover, since all coparcenary property vests in the coparceners then in existence, who can by their consensus convey a valid title, it follows that an alienation so made or ratified cannot be permitted to be unravelled at the instance of a subsequent born coparcener. In this view, the same rule would appear to hold good whether the alienor is the father or any other manager. The same rule, of course, governs an adopted son,[6] who, however, possesses the power to challenge his adoptive mother's prior alienations.[7] Similarly, the reversioner may dispute the validity of the previous owner's alienation. The right to challenge an anti-natal disposition is thus a right which can only be asserted as against a female.

1397. In a mortgage executed by the father before the birth of a son, the latter becomes interested only in the equity of redemption.[8] He is not interested in the renewal of such mortgage, though the renewal be after he was born.[9]

163. Both the grandson and the great-grandson are liable for a debt incurred by their grandfather and great-grandfather, not being a debt incurred by standing as surety without consideration, and are bound by an alienation made by the grandfather and the great-grandfather, in the manner in, and to the extent to, which a son is liable for a debt incurred, or bound by an alienation made or executed by the father.[10]

Liability of grandson and great-grandson for debts of their ancestor.

1398. Analogous Law.—This section follows from the definition of "issue" given in section 107 and is now supported by a decision of the Privy Council.[11] Under Hindu Law, the son, the grandson and the

---

L.J. 829, (1927) A. 714; 1 Gour's Law of Transfer, (6th Ed.) §§ 1026-1035.

(1) Annabhat v. Shivappa, 52 B. 376 (380, 381).

(2) Bankey Lal v. Durga Prasad, 53 A. 868 F.B.

(3) Ramasami v. Virasami, 21 M. 222; Muthuramian v. Ettappasami, 22 M. 372.

(4) Rano Dip Singh v. Parmeshwar Prosad, 47 A. 165 P.C.; Visweshwar Rao v. Surya Rao, 59 M. 667; Udaya Muthier v. Shanmugham, (1935) M. 431; Jado Singh v. Ranee, 5 N. W. P. H. C. R. 113; Ram Deo v. Ram Rathi, (1935) A. 742; Doole Chand v. Wooma Sunkur, 7 C.L.J. 429; Chuttan v. Kallu, 5 I.C. 719; Sobharam v. Makdu, 12 C. P.L.R. 63; aliter, if then conceived.—Sabapathi v. Somasundaram, 16 M. 76; Minakshi v. Vikappa, 8 M. 89.

(5) See f.-n. (3) and (4).

(6) S. 55.

(7) S. 56.

(8) Bholanath v. Kartick Kissen, 34 C. 372 (379).

(9) Partab Singh v. Bohra, 45 A. 49.

(10) Masitullah v. Damodhar, 48 A. 518 P.C.

(11) Ib.

great-grandson are all members of the joint family and share equal rights and must, therefore, be necessarily subject to equal obligations. The texts on the subject are discrepant, though they all recognize the identity of the son, the grandson and the great-grandson.[1] Brihaspati however, ordains that while the son must pay the father's debt as his own (i.e., with interest) the grandson has to pay only the principal, while the great-grandson shall not be compelled to pay anything unless he has assets.[2] The liability to pay independently of the assets was relieved against by the courts, who have at the same time recognized the logical identity of the three descendants regarding the extent of their liability to pay their ancestor's debts.

Liability to pay interest.

1399. It has been held that this provision does not affect secured debts which are payable out of the property.[3] And the rule was no doubt literally enforced in a case decided in 1865 in which the grandson was held liable to pay his grandfather's debt without interest, independently of any inherited assets[4] but this unqualified liability was removed by a local Act passed in the following year.[5]

In another case a degree for mesne profits obtained against the father and the grandfather was sought to be executed against the grandson who claimed exemption from payment of interest on the strength of Hindu Law, but the court appears to have conceded the rule, though it held the grandson liable on the ground that the decree he had to satisfy was passed for the wrongful act of both.[6]

It may perhaps be added that the Hindu Law prescribes a rule of liability independent of the assets, and now that it has been limited to assets, there is no reason why a further limitation detached from the context should be sanctioned to limit the liability of the grandson.

1400. The question whether the pious obligations of the son, the grandson and the great-grandson made them equally and at the same time liable is now settled,[7] though the same Board had in a previous case laid down the contrary, their view then being that the creditor cannot proceed against the grandson in the lifetime of the son.[8]

Hindu Law declares the liability of the son as co-extensive with that of the father, though some texts differentiate between the liability of the son and the grandson, but in either case, the liability was made independent of the assets. Even as such, Narad,[9] Vishnu[10] and the other sages made no distinction between the son and the grandson which Brihaspati,[11] Katyayan[12] and Nilkanth[13] did, holding the grandson exempt

(1) Manu, IX-137; Vashisth, XVII-5; Dattak Mimansa, I-13 (Setlur), I-356; Dattak Chandrika, I-6; ib., I-423; Dayabhag, XI-34; ib., II-75; Viramitrodaya, III-I-11; ib., II-390; Smriti Chandrika, VIII-9-14 (Setlur), I-254; Daya Tattwa, XI-4; Ib., II-505.

(2) Brihaspati, XI-49; 33 S.B.E. 328, 329.

(3) Lachman v. Khunnulal, 19 A. 26 P.B.; 2 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), §§ 2208, 1426.

(4) Narasimharao v. Antai, 2 B.H.C.R. 61.

(5) Hindu Heir's Relief Act (Bom. Act VII of 1866), printed in 2 B.H.C.R. (App.) 413.

(6) Ram Deo v. Gopi, 16 C.W.N. 383: 13 I.C. 349.

(7) Masitullah v. Damodar Prasad, 48 A. 518 P.C.

(8) Chet Ram v. Ram Singh, 44 A. 368 (376) P.C.

(9) Narad; 33 S.B.E. 41 42.

(10) Vishnu, Ch. VI; 7 S.B.E. 44.

(11) Brihaspati, Ch. XI; 33 S. B. E. 319, 320.

(12) Katyayan, 1 Dig. 207.

(13) Mayuk (Mandlik's Tr.), 113.

from the payment of interest on a debt due from the grandfather. The courts have limited the liability of both the son and the grandson to the extent of the assets of their ancestor, but otherwise equalized their liability both for the principal and interest. The same principle would equally extend to the great-grandson in spite of Brihaspati's dictum that he is exempt from the payment of both the principal and the interest.

[For further information, see Commentaries on section 112.]

Onus of proof in certain suits by or against the son.

164. (1) In a suit against a son to recover a debt incurred by the father, the burden of proving that the debt was incurred for an illegal or immoral purpose is on the son.[1]

(2) In a suit against a son to enforce an alienation of coparcenary property made by the father, and in a suit by a son for the recovery of coparcenary property alienated by the father, the alienee is bound to prove in respect of the debt, to pay off which, or in consideration of which, the alienation was made, that the debt was, in good faith believed by him to be, an antecedent debt.[2]

(3) And where the son contends that the debt was incurred for an illegal or immoral purpose, the son is bound to prove that the debt was so incurred,[3] and, in a suit by a son for the recovery of coparcenary property alienated by the father; that the alienee had notice that the debt was so incurred.[4]

1401. Analogous Law.—This section deals with the burden of proof in a suit by or against the son. The section provides for four contingencies which may be thus restated:—

(1) Suit by the creditor or the alienee against the son for recovery of the debt;

(2) Suit by the alienee for enforcement of an alienation;

(3) Suit by the son for recovery of alienated property;

(4) Ditto: in which the son contends that the consideration was illegal or immoral.

1402. In the first and last cases, the burden lies on the son, while in the other two cases the burden lies on the alienee. In other words, the burden is on the son only when he challenges the legality of the consideration,[5] otherwise, the alienee must justify his alienation.[6] In the one case there is a presumption in the father's favour that his act is not illegal or immoral, though that presumption does not extend to his alienations. Consequently, where the alienation is purported to be made for an antecedent debt, it is on the alienee to shew that the debt was antecedent or

---

(1) Shyam Narain v. Suraj Narain, (1933) P.C. 38; Raj Kishore v. Madan Gopal, 13 L. 491; Somasundara v. Murugappa, 36 M. 325; Chandradeo v. Mata Prasad, 31 A. 176 F.B.; Babu Singh v. Behari Lal, 30 A. 156; Peare Lal v. Sunder, 20 A.L.J. 658: 68 I.C. 805.

(2) Hanooman Preshad v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393; Sitaramasami v. Midatana, 6 M. 400.

(3) Shyam Narain v. Suraj Narain, (1933) P.C. 38, and cases cited in footnote 5 post.

(4) Ib.

(5) Shyam Narain v. Suraj Narain, (1933) P.C. 38; Babu Singh v. Bihari Lal, 30 A. 156; Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh, 28 A. 508 (527, 528); Pem Singh v. Partab Singh, 14 A. 169; Bhawani v. Ram Dei, 13 A. 216; Beni Madhov v. Basdeo, 12 A. 99; Raj Kishore v. Madan Gopal, 13 L. 491.

(6) Sitaramasami v. Midatana, 6 M. 400; Hanuman v. Doulat, 10 C. 528.

that the alienee had made inquiries, and was in good faith led to believe it to be so.[1] In a suit by the son to contest his father's alienation, it is for the alienee to justify it. This rule would be clear if regard be had to the fact that (i) the son is bound to pay all his father's debts excepting only those that are shown to be illegal or immoral, (ii) though the father has no power to transfer the joint property for such debts, his power being limited to transfer made as provided in section 113, it will be seen that the burden of proof must necessarily vary according as the creditor is secured or unsecured. In the former case, the father having only a limited power of transfer, it is for the creditor to show that he had acted within that power. In the latter case, the father's debts being prima facie binding on the son, it is upon the latter to prove the exceptional cases of his immunity. If he does so prove, the creditor may then rebut the son's case by shewing that whatever might be the facts, he believed them to be true after due inquiry. In that case, law will give him the same benefit as if the facts had really existed. The view is supported by the principle that where of two persons one must suffer, it must be the one who is more liable.

1403. It is immaterial whether the property inherited by the son was the father's ancestral or self-acquired property, since "by the Hindu Law, the freedom of the son from the obligation to discharge the father's debt has respect to the nature of the debt and not to the estate, whether ancestral or acquired by the contractor of the debt."[2] As however, the filial duty is general and the exemption an exception to the rule, his liability may be established on proof of the debt and it will be then on the son to establish his exemption by showing that the debt was either not antecedent or that it was illegal or immoral.[3] The court presumes the debt to be binding because it presumes that the creditor would not have lent himself to an illegal or immoral transaction.[4] This question was referred to a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court, but its reply is not very illuminating,[5] and in other cases the distinction between the father's debt and his transfer appears to have been ignored.[6] For, while it is unquestionable that the son being under the duty to pay his father's debts, the creditor suing for money need not prove anything beyond a debt of the father, it by no means follows that the son is equally bound by an alienation of his interest made by the father, and that in a creditor's suit for enforcement of the alienation, he is as a matter of course entitled to a decree unless the son shews cause against it.

1404. It is apprehended that in a case of alienation the son is entitled to say, whatever may be his obligation for the payment of a debt, the father could not charge his interest except for limited purposes and that therefore, the transferee occupies no better position than the transferee

(1) Hunooman Pershad v. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393; Bhoorun v. Sahebzada, 6 W.R. 149; Sitaramsami v. Midatana, 6 M. 400; Subramania v. Sadasiva, 8 M. 75; Chandradeo v. Mata Prasad, 31 A. 176 F.B.

(2) Hunooman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393; Kurukundi v. Vanuapi, 46 M. 64.

(3) Shyam Narain v. Suraj Narain, (1933) P.C. 38.

(4) Rampardip v. Salig Rai, (1883) A.W.N. 107; Karansing v. Bhupsing, 27 A. 16 F.B.; Babusing v. Biharilal, 30 A. 156 (159); Abdul Karim v. Ram Kishore, 47 A. 421 (423).

(5) Luchmun v. Girdhur, 5 C. 855 F. B. The view of "antecedent debt" in this case has since been overruled by the Privy Council in Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, 46 A. 95 P.C.

(6) Maheswar v. Kishun Singh, 34 C. 184 (189); Kishun Pershad v. Tipan Pershad, ib., p. 735.

from any other manager. They must both prove the act to be intra vires of the transferor.

1405. The only exception that the rule admits of is that in favour of the purchaser who has already taken possession, and of the execution purchaser whether he has or has not taken possession. The reason why they are entitled to greater rights will be seen in the sequel.

1406. Burden of Proof.—Where the creditor proves that the debt was incurred by the father the son is prima facie liable by reason of his pious obligation to discharge his father's debts and it is then upon him to prove that the debt was such for which he could not be made legally liable.[1] In this respect a distinction is to be made between a suit to recover the father's debts and one to enforce a mortgage or any other transfer effected by him. The two cases stand on quite a different footing, since in an ordinary money suit instituted by the creditor to recover his debt avanced to the father, the creditor may rest his case on the pious obligation of the son. But the case is different where the father has charged or alienated the joint estate for a debt of his own. In such a case, as already seen, the question of burden of proof depends upon whether the property has or has not passed out of the family. If it has, then he who sues to recover it must impeach the transfer, otherwise he cannot recover. If it is still in the family and the creditor sues to enforce the charge, it is upon him to show that the debt was such as entitled the father to charge the interest of his son with his own.[2]

1407. It is also a well settled rule, that where it is alleged by the sons that a particular debt was contracted by the father for an illegal or immoral purpose, the burden lies upon them to show that it was contracted for such purpose. Such burden is not discharged by proof that the father lived an extravagant or immoral life. It must be proved that the debt in question had been contracted for such purpose.[3] A mere general evidence adduced to show that the father used to attend nautches, and that he occasionally gave nautches at his own expense is no proof of immorality at all, much less of any specific act of immorality upon which the son might claim freedom from the debt.[4] Where, however, the court found that the father was generally of dissolute habits and had squandered a large fortune thereon and commenced to borrow large sums, though his ordinary income was ample to meet his usual require-

(1) Ramasami v. Ulaganatha, 22 M. 49 F.B.; Nathumi v. Baijnath, (1917) Pat. L.J. 212: 39 I.C. 352.

(2) Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B.L.R. 187 (198) P.C.; Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (P.C.); Nanomi v. Madun Mohun, 13 C. 21 P.C.; Bhagbut v. Girja Koer, 15 C. 717 (724) P. C.; Jogi Das v. Ganga Ram, 21 C. W. N. 957 P.C.: 12 I. C. 791 P.C.

(3) Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B.L.R. 187 (198) P.C.; Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 P.C.; Bhagbut Pershad v. Girja Koer, 15 C. 717 P.C.; Sri Narain v. Raghubans, 17 C.W.N. 124 P.C.: 17 I.C. 729; Shyam Narain v. Suraj Narain, (1933) P.C. 38; Hanuman Singh v. Nanukchand, 6 A. 193; Sita Ram v. Zalim Singh, 8 A. 231; Kishan Lall v. Garurudwaj, 21 A. 238; Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh, 28 A. 508; Lal Singh v. Jograj Singh, 50 A. 546 (548, 558) Sadashiv v. Dinkar, 6B. 520: Chintaman Rao v. Kasinath, 14 B. 320; Vasudev v. Krishnaji, 20 B. 534; Dattatray v. Vishnu, 36 B. 68; Hazari Mal v. Abani Nath, 17 C.L.J. 38 (47); Subramania v. Sadashiva 8 M. 75; Sheopal Singh v. Basant Singh, 12 O.C. 248: 3 I.C. 911; Jawahir Singh v. Mohanlal, 6 C.P.L.R. 140; Babusingh v. Beharilal, 30 A. 156; Chail Behari v. Gulzarimal, 6 A.L.J. 133; Bhagat Mal v. Abdul Karim, 1 Pat. L.J. 86: 20 C.W.N. 797.

(4) Budree Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 23 W. R. 260 (262); Sri Narain v. Lala Raghubans, 17 C.W.N. 124 P.C.; Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh, 28 A. 508 (521, 525); Ram Nath v. Bulaqi, (1913) P.R. 50; Shib Nath v. Alliance Bank, (1915) P.R. 3; Kishen v. Bhagwan, (1915) P.R. 89; Indar Narain v. Nankchand, (1916) P. R. 58; Jaswanti v. Tej Narain, (1918) P. R. 10.

ments, the court held that the creditor advancing him loans was at least bound to enquire into their purpose, and his failure to make any enquiry, coupled with the general dissolute habits of the borrower, might be sufficient ground for the court to hold that the loans were made for an immoral purpose.[1] This was the line of ratiocination adopted in another case in which it was argued "that although the creditor would have been justified in advancing the money if he had made such inquiry as was open to him and had satisfied himself as well as he could as to the existence of the necessity, he did not, in this case, make such inquiry; or rather perhaps, his words may be taken to mean that the result of any inquiry must have shown him quite clearly that the only necessity of Adit Sahai was his own improper and immoral way of life, which caused the expenditure of funds not derivable from his regular income."[2] But these remarks were made with reference to one who had acted as the family banker for a long time previously and must necessarily have been acquainted with the debtor's circumstances and way of life. The illegality or the immorality of a debt cannot be proved by a general proof of immorality, e.g., that the father kept a mistress without establishing any connection between the act and the debt in question.[3] The son is liable to pay his father's debts, whether the father was or was not the manager of the joint family.[4]

165. In a suit by a son for the recovery of coparcenary property sold in execution of a decree against the father, the son is bound to prove that the debt for which the decree was passed is not binding upon him, and that the purchaser had notice thereof:[5]

Suit by son to recover coparcenary property sold in execution of decree against father.

Provided that the purchaser (not being the judgment-creditor) shall not be bound to inquire into anything not appearing in the decree or in the proceedings in execution.

1408. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by cases.[6] It is the replica of the rule applicable to a co-parcener.[7] In both cases, whether the plaintiff be the son or a coparcener, the initial burden is on him to shew why he is not bound by the execution sale. So far as the stranger purchaser is concerned, he is further protected by the proviso. Where the son attacks the father's sale as illegal or immoral, he cannot succeed by leading evidence of his father's general immorality. He has to prove that the transaction he appears to challenge is so tainted and

---

(1) Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh, 28 A. 508 (531); Jaswanti v. Tej Narain, (1918) P.R. 10; Narayan v. Jaganath, 4 C.P.L.R. 29 (30); Sheo Narayan v. Nathia, 19 N. 81 (87).

(2) Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (153, 162, 163) P.C.; Narayan v. Jaganath, 4 C.P.L.R. 29.

(3) Sadashiv v. Dinkar, 6 B. 520 (523).

(4) Kunbali v. Keshava, 11 M. 64 (71) explaining Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B.L.R. 187 P.C.

(5) Muddan Thakoor v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B.L.R. 187 P.C.; explained in Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (171) P.C., Bhagbut v. Girja Koer, 15 C. 717 P.C.; Gajadhar v. Jadubir, 47 A. 122; followed in Jihan Singh v. Hardat Singh, 57 A. 357.

(6) Ib.

(7) S. 152.

the purchaser had notice of it.[1] If this is prima facie established, the purchaser may rebut notice by shewing the price paid for the property,[2] representations made by the father[3] or proper inquiry.[4]

Decree against father when enforceable against Son.

166 A decree passed against the father for a debt for which his son is liable may be executed against the interest of the son in the coparcenary property, unless the son proves that he is not liable for the debt.[5]

1409. Analogous Law.—This section, which combines the rule as enacted in sections 50, 52 and 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure, affirms the view of the Calcutta and the Bombay High Courts,[6] overruling that taken by the other courts[7] in which the courts had held that the father's interest could not be seized in execution of such decree though the creditor might institute a separate suit against the son to enforce his decree like any other debt due from the father. The amended Code enables the decree-holder to follow his debtor's property in the hands of his son and grandson, any controversy arising as to the nature of the debt being determined in execution instead of a separate suit. In so far as the father's interest is seizable in execution even after his death, the rule creates an exception to the law of survivorship. This rule accords with section 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and is a necessary corollary to the dictum of the Privy Council quoted under section 160.[8] But as the same high tribunal pointed out in a later case, the fact that the son was no party to the decree is a circumstance which cannot be ignored, nor can it be overlooked that where a man conveys his right and interest and nothing more, he does not prima facie intend to convey away also rights and interests presumably vested in others, even though the law may give him the power to do so.[9] Finally, it was added that each case must depend upon its own circumstances. So it must, but the rule, as here formulated, favours a presumption which is in entire accord with the precedents and the general principle of Hindu Law. It has recently been held by the Privy Council that while the son is undoubtedly under the pious obligation to pay his father's debts, it does not thence follow, having regard to the provisions of the Insolvency Law that, on the insolvency of the father, the joint property of the family at once vests in the assignee. "It may be that under the provisions of section 52,[10] or in some other way that property may, in a proper case, be made available for payment of the father's just debts; but it is quite a different thing to say that by virtue of his insolvency alone, it vests in the assignee and no such provisions should be read into the Act."[11]

(1) Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (171) P.C.; Bhagabut v. Girja Koer, 15 C. 717 P.C.

(2) Sripal Singh v. Prodyot Kumar, 44 C. 524 P.C.

(3) Lachman Prasad v. Sarnam Singh, 39 A. 500 P.C.

(4) S. 211.

(5) Ss. 50, 52, 53, C.P.Code; Amar Chandra v. Sebak Chand, 34 C. 642; Umed v. Gomam, 20 B. 385.

(6) Amar Chandra v. Sebak Chand, 34 C. 642; Umed v. Goman, 20 B. 385.

(7) Venkatarama v. Senthivelu, 13 M. 265; Lachmi Narain v. Kanji, 16 A. 449.

(8) Hanooman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393; Mathura Prasad v. Ram Chandra, 25 A. 57.

(9) Simbhu Nath v. Golap Singh, 14 C. 572 P.C.

(10) Of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909).

(11) Sat Narain v. Behari Lal, 6 L. 1 (23) P.C., reversing O.A. Bihari Lal v. Sat Narain, 3 L. 329 F.B.; Siddheshwar v. Deokali, 9 Luck. 304 F. B.

167. A sale of coparcenary property in execution of a decree against the father which may be executed against the interest of the son in the coparcenary property shall not be deemed to include the right, title and interest of the son, unless that intention is proved.[1]

Sale of coparcenary property not presumed to pass the interest of the son.

1410. Analogous Law.—This section is analogous to section 152 which applies the same rule to the manager, with this difference that in practice the pious obligation of the son towards his father enhances his liability which does not extend to any other coparcener. In other respects the difference between the two is only one of degree. The question what was sold depends upon the nature of the debt and the interest expressly excluded from the sale. The mere fact that the title conveyed by the sale was made expressly stated to be the "right, title, and interest" of the father would not preclude an inquiry into the quantum of interest sold, which, of course, includes an inquiry whether the consideration of the sale affected the son's interest. It was so held in a case in which the son having obtained an ad interim injunction, restraining the execution court from selling his interest, it was subsequently agreed that without prejudice to the son's right the interest sold should be described as the "right, title, and interest" of the father which were held to leave the question of the quantum of the father's interest conveyed to the purchaser for an express decision.[2] As such, there are cases in which on a sale in execution of a decree against the father, the court held the son's interest equally conveyed to the purchaser, because the son had failed to attack the factum or the validity of the debt upon which ground alone he could obtain the exoneration of his share.[3] It is by no means necessary that he should have been a party to the suit, and even if he were the question might still remain—did the decree affect his interest? Even in a mortgage suit, in which there is the statutory compulsion to implead all persons interested in the subject matter, the father is held to sufficiently represent his sons who are constructively held bound by the decree unless they are able to avoid it as against themselves.[4] Nor it is necessary that in the proceedings the son's interest or the binding character of the debt be adverted to.[5] It is, of course, open to the son to intervene so long as the case is under inquiry, but if he fails to do so, he is not prejudiced beyond the fact that the decree against the father would be held to prima facie bind him unless he is able to shew that it does not.[6] His position is the same if the decree has culminated in a sale,[7] with this

(1) Gajadhar v. Jadubir, 47 A. 122; Abdul Karim v. Ram Kishore, ib., 421; Jahan Singh v. Hardat Singh, 57 A. 357; Maruti v. Babaji, 15 B. 87; Sripat Singh v. P. K. Tagore, 44 C. 524 (533, 534) P. C.; Jugul Kishore v. J. M. Tagore, 10 C. 985 (992) P.C.; Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun, 13 C. 21 (35) P.C.; Hitendra Singh v. Rameshwar, 18 C.W.N. 42; 22 I.C. 878; Abdul Karim v. Ram Kishore, 47 A. 421.

(2) Sripat Singh v. P. K. Tagore, 44 C. 524 (533, 534) P.C.

(3) Nanomi Babuasin v. Madhun Mohun, 13 C. 21 (35, 36) P.C.; Bhagbut Prasad v. Girja Koer, 15 C. 717 (723, 724) P.C.

(4) Sheo Shankar v. Jaddo Kunwar, 36 A. 383 P.C.; Khairajmal v. Daine, 32 C. 296 P.C.; Raghunandan v. Parmeshwar, (1917) Pat. 137: 39 I.C. 779; Jahan Singh v. Hardat Singh, 57 A 357.

(5) Gadadhar v. Ghanshyam Das, 47 I.C. (Pat.) 212.

(6) Ganesh Rai v. Deo Saran, 52 I. C. (Pat.) 271; Lal Singh v. Jagraj Singh, 50 A. 546 (548).

(7) Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Prasad, 5 C. 148 (164, 165) P.C.; Desouza v. Waman Rao, 27 Bom. L. R. 1451: 91 I.C. 984: (1926) 117.

difference that while in the one case he can intervene in execution,[1] he is driven to a suit if the sale has been followed up by delivery of possession to the auction purchaser.

But in such cases, the fact that the son was not a party and the price paid would naturally weigh with the court.[2]

[For further commentary on this section, see under sections 160 and 161.]

168. The title of a vendee of property from the father whether in a voluntary or involuntary sale is not affected by a defect in the sale if he had taken without notice of any defect in his title and after making in good faith reasonable inquiry into his title.[3]

Protection of bona fide transferee.

Provided that in the case of an execution sale the purchaser is not bound to make inquiry beyond what appears on the surface of the proceedings.[4]

1411. Analogous Law.—This is only an illustration of the general principle of equity which protects a bona fide transferee without notice; and which has been enunciated and recognized by the Privy Council in several cases and is now embodied in S. 33 of the Transfer of Property Act.[5] As Sir Barnes Peacock, in a leading case said: "A purchaser, under an execution is surely not bound to go back beyond the decree to ascertain whether the court was right in giving the decree, or, having given it, in putting up the property for sale under an execution upon it. It has already been shown that, if the decree was a proper one, the interest of the sons as well as the interest of the fathers in the property, although it was ancestral, were liable for the payment of the father's debts. The purchaser under that execution, it appears to their Lordships, was not bound to go further back than to see that there was decree against those two gentlemen; that the property was property liable to satisfy the decree, if the decree had been given properly against them; and having inquired into that, and having bona fide purchased the estate under the execution, and bona fide paid a valuable consideration for the property, the plaintiffs are not entitled to come in and to set aside all that has been done under the decree and execution and recover back the estate from the defendant."[6]

[For further commentary, see the Author's Law of Transfer, Vol. I, 6th Ed., §§ 681-690.]

169. Save as provided in this Code and saving any liability arising out of any express or implied ratification, or any liability attaching to the legal representative of a deceased person, or under any other law for the time being in force, a debt incurred or an alienation made by a manager, or the father, shall not be binding respectively on a coparcener or a son, and no decree passed against a manager or the father shall be executed against the interest respectively of a coparcener, or a son, in the coparcenary property.

Saving clause and bar of other claims.

(1) Mahabir Pershad v. Moheshwar, 17 C. 584 P.C.
(2) Simbhu Nath v. Golap Singh, 14 C. 572 (578, 579) P.C.
(3) S. 33, T. P. Act.
(4) Girdhari Lal v. Maddun Thakur, 14 B.L.R. 187 (199, 200) P.C.
(5) Act IV of 1882.
(6) Girdhari Lal v. Muddun Thakur, 14 B.L.R. 187 (199, 200) P.C.

1412. Analogous Law.—This section is taken from the official draft and is intended to define and limit the liability of the coparcener, son, grandson and great-grandson to circumstances mentioned in the chapter and in the section. In so limiting, it categorises their liability arising from any of the following sources, namely:—

(1) As provided in the Code;

(2) From their assent, acquiescence or ratification;

(3) As a legal representative of the deceased; or

(4) Under any other law for the time being in force.

It will thus be seen that apart from the personal law, their liability may spring from other sources, namely, the general law to which clauses (2) to (4) refer. These should not be ignored in determining their liability, since on this point, this Code is not exhaustive, setting out as it does merely the rules of vicarious liability implict in the Mitakshara joint family; apart from which there is the general law under which a coparcener and the son might be liable, as where he had profited by the act of the manager or the father which he cannot be permitted to repudiate without also making an adequate restitution for the benefit he had received.

CHAPTER XII.

DAYABHAG JOINT FAMILY.

1413. Topical Introduction.—The Mitakshara and the Dayabhag joint family systems in many respects present a contrast since there can be no comparison between them. And all the difference that exists between them arose from ascribing a different meaning to a single word "Daya," which the Mitakshara defines as "wealth which becomes the property of another solely by reason of the relation to the owner,"[1] whereas the Dayabhag holds it to mean "what is given" from the verb "da" to give, and hence the wealth which one acquires on another's death.[2] This turn in the expression has sufficed to alter the entire law of coparcenary in the two schools. Under the Mitakshara, the right arises by "reason of relation," that is, on birth, while under the Dayabhag, the right can only arise upon another's death; the position then being that while the issue under the one system acquires a vested right in their family property, no such right accrues to a Dayabhag son whose right can only arise on his father's death. The latter is then the absolute owner of his property and the sons have no right of partition. Indeed, their interest being in the nature of a possibility, there is nothing to partition.[3] But it is a right which only the father possesses against his sons, and on his death, the Dayabhag family is little distinguishable from a Mitakshara family, save that a Dayabhag coparcener possesses the larger power of disposal, being free to dispose of his share as if it were his separate or self-acquired property, and women are not disqualified from being admitted into the rank of coparceners. To this extent the Dayabhag takes a more modernized view of ownership, though in its law of inheritance, it gives greater prominence to the theory of spiritual benefit, the effect of which will have to be considered in the sequel. But so far as the law of joint property is concerned, the difference between the two systems is the difference between coparcenary and co-ownership with the consequential result that there can be no survivorship, but only inheritance, so that on the death of their father, the heirs take as tenants-in common and not as joint tenants.

1414. The Dayabhag joint family is thus the very antithesis of the Mitakshara family, as it recognizes no right by birth, no co-ownership, no fetter on female rights to coparcenership or succession. As regards all property, whether ancestral or self-acquired, divided or undivided, the father of a Dayabhag family is entitled to absolute right of enjoyment and alienation by an act inter vivos or by will. His sons and grandsons possess no vested right but merely a spes successionis, which they cannot dispose of. But on the father's death, the sons and the grandsons and the

(1) Mit. I-I-2.
(2) Dayabhag, I-I- 4, 5.
(3) Kumla v. Gooroo, (1829) B.S.D. A. 322 (410); Juggomohun v. Neemoo, Morton, 90; Motee Lal v. Mi Herjeet, 6 B. S. D. A. 73 (85); Ramkishore v. Bhoobunmoyee, (1859) B. S. D.A. 250. affirmed, on review, (1860) ib., I-489; Uddoy v. Jadublal, 5 C. 113; Narain v. Lokenath, 6 C. 461; Saradu v. Mohananda, 31 C. 448.

widows of those predeceased become entitled to dispose of their share, whether divided or undivided, and in all property, whether ancestral or self-acquired, both by an alienation inter vivos or by will, to any person whatsoever, even to the exclusion of their own offspring.

1415. The antithesis between the two schools may be set out thus:—

Joint Family.

Mitakshara.	Dayabhag.
(1) Right arises upon birth.	(1) No right arises upon birth. It arises upon the father's death.
(2) Only males are qualified to be co-parceners.	(2) Widows of co-parceners become co-parceners.
(3) No co-parcener can alien his interest.	(3) A co-parcener aliens it even by gift or will.
(4) Father can only alien joint property for legal necessity or for his own antecedent debt.	(4) He possesses absolute power of disposal and may alien it to any one.

170. In a family comprising the father and his sons and grandsons, the father is absolutely entitled to all property, whether ancestral, or his self-acquired property.[1]

Dayabhag family with father as head.

1416. Analogous Law.—The following texts support the section:—

Dayabhag.—"Sons have not a right of ownership in the wealth of the living parents, but in the estate of both when deceased."[2] "If sons have property in their father's wealth, partition would be demandable even against his consent, and there is no proof that property is vested by birth alone, nor is birth stated in the law as a means of acquisition."[3]

"Hence (that is, because property is not vested in sons, while the father lives, or because property is not by birth, but by survival or because the demise of the ancestor is a requisite condition) the passage cited beginning with the words "after the death of the father"[4] being intended to declare that property vested at that period (namely at the moment of the father's decease) recites partition which, of course, then awaits the right pleasure (of the successor.) For it cannot be a precept as the same result respecting the right of partition at (pleasure) was already obtained (as the necessary consequence of a right of property)."[5]

1417. Dayabhag Family.—A Dayabhag joint family may have the father as its head, or it may be a family comprising the brothers and nephews with a head other than the father. In the first case, so long as the father is the head of the family, he is the sole master of all its property, whether ancestral or self-acquired. His sons and grandsons possess no right over him. Nor is there the presumption of law that while a Hindu family remains joint, all property including acquisitions made in the name of individual members is joint property.[6] They cannot enforce a partition or exercise any of the rights of a Mitakshara coparcener. The father is not even bound to maintain his adult sons or grandsons, though he is bound to maintain his minor sons,[7] his unmarried daughters,[8] his wife[9] and his parents[10] Under the Mitakshara, the father is under a legal duty to maintain his son's widow, but under the Dayabhag, the son having no vested interest in his father's property, his

(1) Dayabhag, Ch. I-26, 49.
(2) Dayabhag, Ch. I Sec. II-§§ 11-31.
(3) Ch. I-19.
(4) From Manu, IX-104 : After the death of the father and the mother, the brethren being assembled, must divide equally the paternal estate: for they have not power over it, while their parents live."
(5) Ch. I-26.
(6) Jasoda v. Lal Mohan, 42 C.L.J. 486; Hemchandra v. Matilal, 60 C. 1203 (1257).
(7) Premchand v. Hulaschand, 12 W. R. 494; Nilmony v. Boneshur, 4 C. 91 (93).
(8) Dayabhag, Ch. II-34.
(9) Khetramani v. Cashinath, 10 W. R. F.B. 89.
(10) Kamini v. Chandra, 17 C. 373.

widow has equally no legal claim for her maintenance. Her claim upon her father-in-law for maintenance is merely moral and unenforceable in a court of law.[1] But she has a legal claim to be maintained by her husband's brother if he inherited property from his father, in which case the moral obligation of the father becomes a legal obligation of the son.[2] The mother is entitled to maintenance, and is allotted a share in lieu of maintenance.[3] With the exception of the "outcast and his son" all disqualified members of the family are entitled to maintenance.[4] the son of the outcast being entitled to a share of the inheritance.

No Estoppel.

1418. The absolute ownership of the Dayabhag father may be emphasized by the fact that the son does not acquire any right against him even by estoppel. So where the son constructed a house with money of his own on a plot of land belonging to the father, he could not claim even joint ownership thereon with the father,[5] and the father had the right of turning him out of the house, even though he had allowed and encouraged the son to spend large sums of money for that purpose.[6] In such cases, there can be no estoppel against the father, since the son is presumed to know the law, though the father would equitably be bound to pay for the improvements he had encouraged his son to make.[7]

Other Dayabhag families.

171. Except where the father is alive, the Dayabhag joint family is, as regards its management and the rights of members, subject to the same rules as the Mitakshara family, except that:—

(a) a co-parcener may alien his share by sale, mortgage, gift or devise.[8]

(b) women are not disqualified from becoming coparceners.[9]

1419. Analogous Law.—Except that the father under the Dayabhag school possesses absolute power over the family estate, whether ancestral or self-acquired, a Dayabhag family without the father is indistinguishable from a Mitakshara family with only two exceptions set out in the two clauses.

1420. In all other respects, the powers and duties of the manager of families subject to the two schools are identical. The manager may contract debts for the joint family for which its members would be liable, and a decree passed against the manager would bind them even though they were not parties to the suit.[10] The general principle of Hindu Law, in so far as it is based upon the principle of agency and as quite apart from any religious or moral duties, is that all members of a joint family, and therefore, all their properties, divided or undivided, are

---

(1) Janki v. Nand Ram, 11 A. 194 F. B.; Kamini v. Chandra, 17 C. 373; Ammakannu v. Appu, 11 M. 91; Siddessury v. Janadhan, 29 C. 557 (575).
(2) Kedarnath v. Hemangini, 13 C. 336 O.A. Hemangini v. Kedar Nath, 16 C. 758 P.C.
(3) Dayabhag, Ch. V-11.
(4) Ib., Ch. V-19.
(5) Bejoy Krishna v. Ashutosh, 13 C.W.N. 397.
(6) Dharma Das v. Amulyadhan, 33 C. 1119 (1127).
(7) Ib., p. 1129.
(8) See § 1421.
(9) Dayabhag, XI-I-8.
(10) Dwarka Nath v. Bungshi, 9 C.W.N. 879; Sukhadakanta v. Joginikanta, 60 C. 1197.

liable for debts contracted on behalf of the family by one authorized to contract them. But in a Dayabhaga family, though there is no joint family, strictly so called, nor can, therefore, be any manager, nor do the members share the special obligations of the sons as regards the debts contracted by the father, still if it appears that if any one of those members thereof are charged with the management of the family estate, it will be presumed that their management is with the presumed consent of the other members of the family,[1] and if such manager contracts a debt for a joint family purpose the joint family and not the managing member becomes liable for it,[2] a fortiori if all the members benefited by it.[3] But in such a case, if the manager has given security of a mortgage, the members must hold the creditor to his primary security, though the manager qua mortgagor would be personally liable, if he is so liable under law, e.g., section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act.[4] It has been held that the manager is accountable to the other members, and in this respect the Dayabhag manager is subject to an added liability[5] but this view is not supported by any special rule of the Dayabhag school, but maintains his liability to account which is inconsistent with the fundamental idea of coparcenership.[6]

Clause (a).

1421. It has already been seen that Jimut Vahan allows a coparcener an unfettered right of disposal over his coparcenary interest. In this respect the Bengal coparcener has greater rights than his confrere in the Bombay and Madras Presidencies, in that, while the latter can only transfer for value, the former can do so even by gift or devise. His transferee has not merely an equity to a partition but acquires a title to his coparcener's share of which he may enforce a partition by metes and bounds.

Again, while a Mitakshara minor coparcener can only claim partition upon special grounds, the Dayabhag minor may do so as of right. To borrow a term from the English Law, the Dayabhag coparceners are, as regards their rights, tenants-in-common.

Clause (b).

1422. As such, it follows that they have no rights of survivorship. Consequently, if of two brothers one should die, his widow becomes a coparcener with the other and is entitled to enforce all the rights of her deceased husband.[7]

The Dayabhag makes no distinction between movable and immovable property inherited by a female as the heiress of a male relative. She has the same powers and is subject to the same restrictions as regards management and alienation.[8]

Presumption of joint Acquisition.

1423. It is stated that the presumption of the Mitakshara law that acquisitions made in the names of the individual members, while the family remains joint, are joint property, is not applicable to

(1) Müller v. Ranga Nath, 12 C. 389.
(2) Dwarkanath v. Bungshi, 9 C.W.N. 879.
(3) Sukhada Kanta v. Jogini Kanta, 60 C. 1197 (1202).
(4) Ib., p. 1204, 1205.
(5) Abhay Chandra v. Pyari Mohan, 5 B. L. R. 347 F.B.; 13 W.R. 75 (F. B.), distinguished in Balakrishna v. Muthusami, 32 M. 271 (274); contra in Rungun v. Kassinath, 13 W.R. 76-note.
(6) Balakrishna v. Muthusami, 32 M. 271.
(7) Dayabhag, Ch. XI-i-8; Cossinaut v. Hurro Soondery, (1826) Clarke's Rules and Orders (App.) 91; Sudaminee v. Jogesh Chunder, 2 C. 262; Janoki, v. Mothara, 9 C. 580; Bepin Behari v. Lal Mohun, 12 C. 209; Durga Nath v. Chintamani, 31 C. 214 (218).
(8) Dayabhag, Ch. XI-1; Durga Nath v. Chintamani, 31 C. 214 (218).

a joint family under the Dayabhag school, under which it is incumbent upon a person alleging any property to be joint at least to prove the existence of an original nucleus with the aid of which the property, sought to be partitioned, has been increased and amplified.[1] But in a subsequent case it was explained that the Mitakshara rule equally applies to a Dayabhag family.[2] (§ 1425.)

172 Effect of individual acquisitions.

(1) All acquisitions are presumed to be made for the joint family, provided it had then a nucleus from which such acquisitions were possible;[3]

(2) Those made by a member without the aid of joint funds become exclusively his own;[4]

(3) But those acquired mainly by his own exertion with little assistance from the joint funds become accretions to the joint estate, the acquirer being entitled to a double share therein on partition;[5]

(4) Acquisitions made with the aid of joint funds fall into the joint estate in which the acquirer is entitled to no preference.

1424. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by the undernoted authorities, the substance of which is stated in the rule:—

Dayabhag.—"That which is acquired by a person, belongs exclusively to him so long as he lives, if there be no special rule (to the contrary): but, where the exertion of one is merely through the joint family, and the other contributes to the acquisition by his person and wealth, it is a rule suggested by reason, that the one shall have a single share, and the other two. Hence likewise it follows, that if the joint stock be used, shares should be assigned to each person in proportion to the amount of his allotment, be it little or much, which has been used."[2]

To this effect was the futwah of the Pandits in a case[8]: "Of several brothers living together in a family partnership, should one acquire property by means of funds common to the whole, the property so acquired belongs jointly to all the brothers. Should, however, the means of acquisition, drawn from the joint funds, be of little consideration and the personal exertions considerable, two shares belong to the acquirer and one to each of the other brothers."

1425. This section lays down a rule for the appointment of property acquired with the aid of nucleus of the joint family, and that acquired solely or mainly by a member's own exertions. In the first two clauses, the Dayabhag rule is not different from that of the Mitakshara, the only rule special to the Dayabhag being that stated in clause (3)[9] which gives the acquirer two portions in property acquired mainly by

---

(2) Saroda Prasad v. Mahananda, 31 C. 448, followed in Govind v. Radha Kristo, 31 A. 477 (480).

(2) Rama Nath v. Kusum Kamini, 4 C. L. J. 56 (62, 63) distinguishing Sarada Prasad v. Mahananda, 31 C. 448, following Tauck Chunder v. Joodhesser, 19 W.R. 178; Kanhia Lal v. Debi Das, 22 A. 141.

(3) Gobinda v. Radha, 31 A. 477 (480); Sarada Prosad v. Mahananda, 31 C.L.J. 56 (61); Hemchandra v. Matilal, 60 C. 1252 (1258).

(4) Dayabhag, VI-§§ 23-30; Lalchand v. Swarnamoyi, 13 C.W.N. 1133 : 3 I.C. 102.

(5) Dayabhag, VI-§ 23.

(6) Vide foot-notes (3), (4) & (5).

(7) Dayabhag, VI-1-23.

(8) Partap Bahadur v. Tilukdharee, 1 S.D.A.B. 179 (236), cited in Lalchand v. Surnomoyee, 13 C.W.N. 1133 : 3 I.C. 102 (104).

(9) See S. 109 (d); S. 110 (c).

his exertions.[1] Again, the presumption of the Mitakshara that acquisitions made in the name of individual members, while the family remains joint, are joint property, is not applicable to a Dayabhag joint family, it being incumbent upon a person governed by that school to prove the existence of an original nucleus with the aid of which the property sought to be partitioned has been increased and amplified.[2] The question what exertions entitle the acquirer to two shares must depend upon the value of the property, and the value of his own contribution to its acquisition or improvement.

It will be noticed that while clauses (1), (2) and (4) are in accord with the Mitakshara, clause (3) gives the acquirer an additional share to which a Mitakshara coparcener is not entitled. As such, the clause marks the growth of individual rights over the more indiscriminate collectivism of the orthodox school.

---

(1) Partab Bahadur v. Tilukdharee, 1 B.S.D.A. 179 (236); Lalchand v. Sarnamoyee, 13 C.W.N. 1133 : 3 I.C. 102.

(2) Govind Chandra v. Radha Kristo, 31 A. 477 (480); Sarada Prosad v. Mahanand Roy, 31 C. 448; contra in Rama Nath, v. Kusum Kamini, 4 C.L.J. 56 (62, 63).

CHAPTER XII-A.

FAMILY ARRANGEMENT.

Family arrangement.

173. A family arrangement is the bona fide settlement of a claim or dispute[1] by members of a family, made or acquiesced, in for the benefit; peace or security of the family generally or for preserving its property or honour.[2]

Explanation 1.—The term "family", as used in this connection, is a wide one and includes not only the members of the family, male and female, legitimate and illegitimate, natural and adopted, or to be adopted for the time being; but also those; yet unborn, including reversioners,[3] and all persons having some claim on the family for maintenance, residence, marriage portion or the like.[4]

Explanation 2.—It is not essential to a family arrangement that its benefit should be limited to the members of a family, since a stranger may equally benefit by it.[5]

Illustrations.

(a) Of three brothers A, B, and C, A died last, leaving him surviving his widow and a daughter. D claimed the whole estate as the adopted son of B's widow. The dispute was settled by an award, which divided the estate into four quarters giving a share each to the widow, her daughter and the two widows of B and C. Nothing was given to D who, however, acquired his adoptive mother's quarter by relinquishment. D cannot sue for the balance of the estate on the death of A's widow when the succession opened.6

(b) A, who had inherited her husband's estate, made a gift of some of the properties to one B who claimed to be her husband's sister's son, whereupon the presumtive reversioner C sued A for declaration of the invalidity of the gift beyond her lifetime. The suit was compromised by the parties who divided the estate between themselves. The compromise does not bind the next reversioner.7

(c) B and C enter into a family arrangement, by which, after settling about their own shares, they allot a village and some money out of B's share to A's illegitimate son D. D is entitled to realize his allotment from B.8

(d) In 1911, a daughter's daughter was not an heir to her maternal grandfather's estate. As such, there could be no family arrangement affecting her right as a member of the family. Consequently, if her maternal grandmother adopted A who simultaneously agreed to pay a sum of Rs. 5,000 to her daughter's daughter, the latter cannot sue for the amount, as the money was not payable under a family

---

(1) A claim or dispute arising or that may arise—Pakhar Singh v. Dulari, 52 A. 716; Ameer Hasan v. Mhd. Ejaz Husain, (1929) O. 134; Rai Bajrang v. Rameshar, (1937) O. 189; Sital Singh v. Kalka Singh, (1937) O. 433.

(2) Basant Kumar v. Lala Ram Sankar, 59 C. 859.

(3) Kanhai Lal v. Brij Lal, 40 A. 487 P.C.; Chunnilal v. Swami Prasad, (1935) A. 418.

(4) 15 Halsbury's Laws of England (2nd Ed.), p. 3; Jang Bahadur v. Ramnath, (1937) O. 99 (102).

(5) 15 Halsbury's Laws of England, p. 8; Kashibai v. Tatya, 40 B. 668; Subbu Chetti v. Arunachalam, 53 M. 270 F.B.; Jagadamba v. Bibbootibhooshan, 60 C. 767; Jang Bahadur v. Rana Umanath, 12 Luck. 639; (1937) O. 99.

(6) Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 40 A. 437 P.C.

(7) Rajpali v. Sarju Bai, (1936) A. 507 F.B., approving Mahadel v. Baldeo, 30 A. 75.

(8) Jung Bahadur v. Uma Nath, (1937) O. 99.

arrangement, nor was A to hold the amount in trust for her.[1] The case would have been different if, instead of the money, she had left land of the same value.[2]

(e) In the settlement of a family dispute between A and B, it is agreed that A should pay a sum of money to a stranger C. C can recover the money from A.[3]

(f) The widow adopted one A and at the same time made a will, bequeathing certain properties to her granddaughter B, which A, then a major, attested. The widow had no power to make a will, but her bequest was still held good as a family arrangement by which A was bound.[4]

1426. Analogous Law.—The law of family arrangement flows out of the law of conpromise and is a branch of the general law, being a rule of broad equity, equally applicable to all families, understood in their broadest sense as comprising all relations legitimate or illegitimate, both male and female as described in the explanation. In applying the doctrine to Hindu cases, the courts have as a rule followed the leading principles of English equity jurisprudence, which, embodying as it does, the rules of justice, equity and good conscience, become applicable in the absence of anything in Hindu Law to the contrary.[5] As such, reference to the English cases in this connection would furnish a useful guide in the decision of cases in this country, and they will be consequently referred to.

1427. Principle.—A family arrangement or settlement is a compromise, but being a compromise of a claim between relations in which sentiment has a place, it follows rules of its own, and once made is treated as final except that it may be unravelled on the grounds set out in the next section. Such compromise may bind even one not a party to it, if he has adopted or acquiesced in it. The fact of unfair advantage or bad bargain is foreign to such settlement which is upheld on the ground that it is conducive to the maintenance of peace and harmony in the family.

1428. Meaning of words : Claim or dispute.—Claim to property, dispute regarding status, adoption, marriage, legitimacy or the like.

"Members of the same family." Male and female, major or minor[6] legitimate or illegitimate[7] alive or yet to be born.[8] But there can be no family arrangement with a stranger though it may be made between two or more interrelated families in which a stranger is interested. "Made or acquiesced in." As where the members do not partition property out of respect to their ancestors' agreement.[9] "Preserving its property or honour." Honour would be preserved if any flaw in the marriage or legitimacy of a relation is not unravelled to strangers.

1429. Family Arrangement and compromise.—A family arrangement or settlement is a special branch of the law of compromise, but unlike compromise, it is supported upon grounds wider than those applicable to

(1) Vithal v. Yamunabai, 58 B. 234.
(2) Subbu Chetti v. Arunachalam, 53 M. 270 F.B.; followed in Jagadamba v. Bibhootibhooban, 60 C. 767.
(3) Subbu Chetti v. Arunachalam, 53 M. 270 F.B.
(4) Kashibai v. Tatya, 40 B. 668.
(5) Jang Bahadur v. Rana Uma Nath, (1937) O. 99.
(6) Dadasahib v. Gajraj Singh, (1925) M. 204; Keshava Rao v. Nathravati, (1928) M. 200; Dangal Ram v. Jaimangal, 5 Pat. 480.
(7) Stapilton v. Stapilton, 1 Atk. 2 (10): 26 E.R. 1 (6); Westley v. Westley, 2 Dr. & War. 502.
(8) New, In re, (1901) 2 Ch. 534.
(9) 1 Law of Transfer, (6th Ed.), 415-417; pp. 282-284; Sidh Gopal v. Behari Lal, 50 A. 284; Khanta Moyee v. Hridayanenda, (1929) C. 149; Jogeshwar v. Bhushan, (1921) O. 134.

dealings between strangers, since, as observed by Lord Cottenham, L.C., "The consideration in this, and in other such cases is compounded partly of value and partly of love and affection."[1]

So Cockburn, C.J., said: "The authorities clearly establish that if an agreement is made to compromise a disputed claim, forbearance to sue in respect of that claim is a good consideration, and whether proceedings to enforce the disputed claim have or have not been instituted makes no difference. If the defendant's contention were adopted, it would result that in no case of a doubtful claim could a compromise be enforced. Every day, a compromise is effected on the ground that the party making it has a chance of succeeding in it, and if he bona fide believes he has a fair chance of success, he has a reasonable ground for suing, and his forbearance to sue will constitute a good consideration. When such a person forbears to sue, he gives up what he believes to be a right of action, and the other party gets an advantage, and instead of being annoyed with an action, he escapes from the vexation incident to it."[2] The arrangement does not depend for its validity upon any right, for the plaintiff may have no right at all, and the defendant may know it, yet if the plaintiff believed that he had a right and the defendant preferred its settlement to trial by court, it is a good settlement binding on the parties.[3] It is not a nudum because the settlement of a dispute is in itself a good consideration, provided that there was some dispute to settle and the party making a claim bona fide believed in it.[4] In the case of family arrangements, the consideration is not the sacrifice of any right, but the settlement of a dispute and the court does not consider narrowly the quantum of consideration. Equity leads towards the maintenance of family arrangements and a fair settlement of the dispute is, as already stated, a sufficient consideration in such cases.[5]

1430. The question of consideration, which determines the validity of a compromise, is subordinated to other questions, such as the settlement of a dispute without recourse to publicity, the greater forbearance and less scrutiny into the justice of the claim, since the guiding motive in such arrangements is the benefit of the family generally, preservation of peace and good relations between its members, and it may be the saving of its honour. As such, such settlements are recognized in all systems of law, and the same rules guide them, whether they are made between members of the family who are British[6] Hindu[7] or Musalman;[8] in all of which the court is guided by the fact that what the family have decided must be treated as final and not open to re-examination of its fairness or finality, since it is of the very essence of a family arrangement that it should be private and kept out of court. The fact that one party was drunk at the time would be sufficient to avoid a compromise,

(1) Per Lord Cottenham L.C., in Persee v. Persee, 7 Cl. & F. 279 (318): 7 H.L.C. 1073 (1089).

(2) Callisher v. Bischofsheim, L.R. 5 Q.B. 449 (451, 452).

(3) Cook v. Wright, 1 B. & S. 559 (570); 30 L.J. (Q.B.) 321 (324), cited per Blackburn, J., in Callisher v. Bischofsheim, L.R. 5 Q.B. 449 (451-452), and per North, J., in Mile v. New Zealand Alford Estate Co., 32 Ch. D. 266 (273).

(4) Per Cotton, L.J. in Mile v. New Zealand Alford Estate Co., 32 Ch. D. 266 (283); Kamal Kumari v. Narendra, 9 C.L.J. 19: 1 I.C. 573.

(5) Kamal Kumari v. Narendra, 9 C.L.J. 19: 1 I.C. 573.

(6) Hals. L. Eng., Tit Family Arrangements: Jodrell v. Jodrell, 14 Beav. 397 (412): 51 E.R. 339 (345); Williams v. Williams, L.R. 2 Ch. 294; Mile v. New Zealand Alford Estate Co., 32 Ch. D. 266; Hoblyn v. Hoblyn, 41 Ch. D. 200 (204); Callisher v. Bischofsheim, L.R. 5 Q.B. 449.

(7) See cases post.

(8) Dada Sahib v. Gajraj Singh, (1925) M. 204.

but not so a family arrangement.[1] A family arrangement is good even though one of the parties thereto[2] or neither had a good title.[3] All that is required is a claim or a dispute to settle and bona fides is the essence of its validity.[4] (§ 1432.)

1431. It is not essential for its validity that a settlement should have been acted upon, though the fact that it has been acted upon adds to its binding force. It is a mistake to suppose that the doctrine of family arrangements extends no further than arrangements for the settlement of doubtful or disputed rights. The principle is applicable not merely to cases in which arrangements are not between members of a family for the preservation of its peace, but also to cases in which arrangements are made between them for the preservation of its property.[5]

1432. Family arrangements are governed by a special equity peculiar to themselves and will be enforced, if honestly made, although they have not been meant as a compromise but have proceeded from an error of all parties originating in mistake or ignorance of facts as to what their rights actually are on the points on which their rights actually depend.[6]

These principles have been given effect to by the Privy Council in several cases[7] to be presently considered.

These facts distinguish a settlement from what may be a colourable transaction which may bear the appearance of a settlement, but is in reality a fictitious transaction.

1433. Form immaterial.—The court will uphold an arrangement, though it may not be clothed in a legal form.[8] As aa matter of fact, a family arrangement requires no formal deed or contract in writing, and it does not necessarily involve the transfer of a right from one person to another, so as to require its registration, but if it is reduced to writing,[9] and even where it involves a transfer, and is, therefore, compulsorily registrable,[10] still the court may, it is said, admit into evidence in proof of not what the parties said therein, but of what they did thereon, calling in the aid of the doctrine of part performance, now given legislative sanction both in the Registration and the Transfer of Property Acts.[11] This question has been considered under another section. (S. 174.)

---

(1) Stockley v. Stockley, 18 Ves. 30; Cory v. Cory, 1 Ves. 19.

(2) Ockford v. Barelli, 25 L.T. 504; Miles v. New Zealand Alford Estate Co., 32 Ch. D. 266.

(3) Gordon v. Gordon, 3 Swans. 471; Vatsalabai v. Vasudev, 33 Bom. L.R. 1483.

(4) Basanta Kumar v. Lala Ram Sankar, 59 C. 859; Joges Chandra v. Prasana Kumar, 55 C. L.J. 283: (1932) C. 664.

(5) Stapilton v. Stapilton, 1 Atk. 2, cited in Helan Dasi v. Durga Das, 4 C.L.J. 323 (331, 332).

(6) Williams v. Williams, L.R. 2 Ch. 294, cited in Helan Dasi v. Durga Das, 4 C.L.J. 323 (331), followed in Sukhram v. Uderam, 3 I.C. (A.) 85 (compromise by a widow binds the reversioner).

(7) Rajunder v. Bajai Govind, 2 M.I.A. 181 (249) Hetnarain v. Madnarain, 7 M.I.A. 311 (322); Mantappa v. Baswanirao, 14 M.I.A. 24 (36); Greender v. Troyluck, 20 C. 373 (377, 378) P.C.; Bishenchand v. Asmaida, 5 A. 560 (574, 575) P.C.; Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh, 32 A. 415 (426) P.C.; Khunilal v. Gobind, 33 A. 356 P.C.; Kanhai Lal v. Brijlal, 40 A. 487 P.C.

(8) Choudhuri Monohar Lal v. Amano, (1924) N. 14.

(9) Baldeo v. Udal Singh, 43 A. 1 (6).

(10) Ram Gopal v. Tulsai Ram, 51 A. 79 F.B. Contra Mahadevi v. Padranath, (1937) A. 817.

(11) S. 49 of the Registration Act as amended by Act XXI of 1929; S. 53-A of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882, added by S. 16, Act XX of 1929. See 1 Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), 1077, 1082; Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar, 42 C. 801 (817) P.C.; Ram Lal v. Sita Bai, 14 L. 635.

1434. A family arrangement may at times take the form of the aid of arbitration resulting in an award, in which case, the court will have regard not to the form but to the substance of the transaction.[1] Apart from a transfer or other writing, such a trnsaction may be inferred from a course of conduct or dealings,[2] which will support a suit for specific performance[3] Inadequacy of consideration is immaterial, unless it furnishes evidence of fraud. Its adequacy, when entering into calculation, rather shows that the transaction was a transfer and not a mere family arrangement in which consideration is subordinate to other motives.[4] A time-expired debt is a good consideration for a family arrangement[5] which will be upheld even though, taken as a transfer, it would be void on the ground of public policy.[6]

1435. So is the fact that there were no rights in dispute.[7] A family arrangement is supported because the impelling motive therefor is the avoidance or settlement of a family dispute, and not that the parties have an actionable right. In such cases, the compromise of a disputed claim, made bona fide is a good consideration for a promise, even though it ultimately appears that the claim was wholly unfounded.[8] In such a case if two parties were strangers, and one enters into an arrangement in ignorance of his rights, the agreement would not in general be binding upon him.[9] A mistake of fact is a good ground for avoiding a compromise, though it cannot affect a family arrangement.[10] But neither can it be set aside merely because the right then in doubt had been subsequently decided to be non-existent.[11] So while a compromise might be set aside,[12] if it is the result of a mutual mistake, as where A conveys the moiety of his estate to B, both believing him to be so entitled, whereas B was not entitled to anything at all, it is no ground for setting aside a family arrangement.[13]

174. A family arrangement is not required to be in writing, but if it is reduced to writing and affects immovable property of the value of one hundred rupees or upwards, it must be registered.[14]

Form.

1436. Analogous Law.—A family arrangement, like a partition, requires no writing, but if it is reduced to writing and affects immovable property of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards, then it must be registered,[15] But it is said that where such document is not registered but has been acted upon for several years, it would become admissible even if unregistered on the strength of part performance.[16] But this view is questioned

(1) Ram Bahadur v. Mahant Ganesh, 2 Pat. 554.

(2) Per Lord Chelmsford, L.C., in Williams v. Williams, L.R. 2 Ch. A. 294 (300).

(3) Wycherley v. Wycherley, 2 Eden. 175.

(4) Dimesdale v. Dimesdale, 25 L.J. Ch. 806 (in which the same case showed a family arrangement, and no family arrangement).

(5) Penhall v. Elwin, 1 Sm. & G. 258.

(6) Jadrell v. Jadrell, 9 Beav. 45.

(7) Ib., Per Turner, L.J., p. 304.

(8) Ockford v. Barelli, 25 L.T. 504 approved in Callisher v. Bischofsheim, L.R. 5 Q.B. 449.

(9) Badding v. Oliver, 2 L.J., Ex. 76.

(10) Trigge v. Lavallee, 15 Moore, P. C. 271.

(11) Lawton v. Campion, 23 L.J. Ch. 505.

(12) S. 20, Contract Act.

(13) Heald v. Walls, 39 L.J. Ch. 217.

(14) S. 17 (1) (b) Reg. Act; Ram Gopal v. Tulsi Ram, 51 A. 79 F.B.

(15) S. 17 (1) (b) Registration Act, (XVI of 1908) Ram Gopal v. Tulsi Ram, 51 A. 79 F.B.; Ram Lal v. Sita Bai, 14 L. 635 (639).

(16) Ram Lal v. Sita Bai, 14 L. 635 (639) (but submitted the case being decided on 28-3-33, the doctrine was limited as embodied in S. 49 of the Registration Act.).

on the ground that a family arrangement is not a transfer or covered by the exception to S. 49 of the Registration Act.[1] In one such case, where the arrangement was reduced to writing and rejected for want of registration, the parties relied on it as a settlement or a will, the Privy Council held that it was bound to give effect to the real character of the instrument which they held to be a family settlement. As such, it was inoperative as regards immovable property, but was otherwise valid and could be given effect to. But inasmuch as both parties had made inconsistent pleas anent thereto the court deprived the successful appellant of his costs.[2] It is not necessary that a family arrangement should be entered into as such. All that law requires is that whatever its form, it must have that effect. Consequently, the combined effect of a will and an adoption deed may result in a family arrangement as in the following case. The widow adopted A, who, being major, attested her contemporaneous will, bequeathing some property to her grand-daughter. The court upheld it as a family arrangement binding on the adopted son.[3]

1437. A deed of release whereby the releasor simply undertakes to vacate the house may be operative as a bona fide settlement of a family dispute, even though it contains no words of conveyance.[4]

175. When a family arrangement may be set aside.

(1) A family arrangement cannot be set aside except for coercion, undue influence, fraud, misrepresentation, or mutual mistake.[5]

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing rule, it may not be set aside upon any of the following grounds:—

(a) That it was illegal;[6]

(b) That there was no consideration to support;[7]

(c) That it has transferred property to a person without any right;[8]

(d) That it was unfair and such as no court would support upon its merits;[9]

(e) That it was made by mistake of either party.[10]

(3) It may, however, be set aside on the ground that it was not bona fide or that there was no dispute.

(4) But before giving weight to these considerations due regard must be had to the time during which the arrangement has been acted upon or has remained unchallenged.[11]

---

(1) Mahadevi v. Padarath, I.L.R. (1937) A. 817.

(2) Umrao Singh v. Lachman Singh, 33 A. 344 P.C.

(3) Kashibai v. Tatta, 40 B. 669; Venkoba v. Rangánayaki, (1936) M. 967.

(4) Muthusami v. Govindasami, 9 M.L.T. 342: 9 I.C. 267.

(5) Bishamber v. Amar Nath, (1937) (P.C.) 105; Bhowani v. Juggernath, 13 C.W.N. 309: 3 I.C. 241; Yetchuri v. Yetchuri, 30 M.L.J. 308: 33 I.C. 961; Satya Kumar v. Satya Kumar, 10 C.L.J. 503: 3 I.C. 247.

(6) Jati Lal v. Beni Madho, (1931) Pat. 280.

(7) Kamalkumari v. Narendra, 9 C.L.J. 19; Satya Kumar v. Satya Kripal, 10 C.L.J. 503.

(8) Cook v. Wright, 1 B. & S. 559 (570); Jamna Prasad v. Durga Devi, (1933) A. 138.

(9) Rajunder v. Bijai Govind, 2 M.I.A. 181 (204); Bishambar v. Amar Nath, (1937) P.C. 105.

(10) Gordon v. Gordon, 3 Swan. 400: 19 R.R. 230: 36 E.R. 910, explained in Satya Kumar v. Satya Kripal, 10 C.L.J. 503 (511).

(11) Mantappa v. Baswantrao, 14 M.I.A. 24 (37); Helan Dasi v. Durga Das, 4 C.L.J. 323; Satya Kumar v. Satya Kripal, 10 C.L.J. 503 (511).

Illustrations.

(a) A disputes B's legitimacy. He afterwards compromises his claim with B on the basis of legitimacy. A cannot afterwards repudiate the compromise on proof of B's illegitimacy.[1]

(b) A, B and C are three brothers. On a distribution of the family estate C receives an allotment of land in lieu of maintenance. He did not claim nor was allowed any share. C is bound by the arrangement.[2]

(c) A transfers to B property by mistake. B accepts it innocently. The transfer is valid.[3]

(d) A and B partitioned their property in mutual ignorance of their respective legal rights. The partition is binding.[4]

1438. Analogous Law.—Both a family arrangement and a partition are matters of contract. As such, they are liable to be set aside for the same reason as a contract.[5]

1439. Family Arrangement: Valid and Void.—The compromise in settlement of a family dispute, and an acceptance of a given distribution, instead of a general partition, are upheld by the courts as necessary to check litigation[6] and to preserve the peace of families. The only condition required to support it is that it must be a bona fide settlement of a family dispute, or in other words, there must be a dispute or the possibility of one and its settlement. If this is conceded, the court will not scan too closely the rights of the contending parties affected thereby. The fact that one party had yielded to claim in honest error is no ground for repudiating it when the error is discovered, unless the other party was an accessory. This is settled by Lord Eldon, L.C., who ruled that family arrangements without fraud must be established, though founded in mistake; but they would not be supported if founded on mistake of either party to which the opposite party was an accessory. A family arrangement, concluded in honest error is binding unless either party has been misled by the concealment of material things, for the family agreement requires communication of all material circumstances. So he said: "Where family agreements have been fairly entered into without concealment of or imposition upon either side, with no suppression of what is true, or suggestion of what is false, then although the parties may have greatly misunderstood their situation and mistaken their rights, a court of equity will not disturb the quiet, which is the consequence of that agreement; but when the transaction has been unfair and founded upon falsehood and misrepresentation, a court of equity would have a very great difficulty in permitting such a contract to bind the parties."[7]

1440. In a settlement of a doubtful right, truth may be on either side but it is of the essence of a settlement that investigation is stopped and a settlement concluded to restore harmony. So where three sons, one of whom being a minor was represented by his father, effected a partition on the basis of which a suit was filed. It was, however, opposed on the ground that there was no partition but merely a working arrangement, in which no account was taken of the joint property, that it was partial and

(1) Gajapathi v. Gajapathi, 13 M.I.A. 497 (512, 513).

(2) Mantappa v. Baswantrao, 13 M.I.A. 24 (36).

(3) Gordon v. Gordon, 3 Swan. 400: 19 R.R. 230 explained in Satya Kumar v. Satya Kripal, 10 C.L.J. 503 (511).

(4) Rajunder v. Bijai Govind, 2 M.I.A. 181.

(5) S. 14, Contract Act (IX of 1872).

(6) Hetnarain v. Modnarain, 7 M.I.A. 311 (322).

(7) Gordon v. Gordon, 3 Swan. 400 (483): 36 E.R. 910 (917); followed in Satya Kumar v. Satya Kripal, 10 C.L.J. 503 (511).

incomplete and that there was a mistake in the scheme of division adopted at the private partition. The court, however, overruled all these objections holding that a family arrangement could not be set aside on any of the grounds urged.[1] So where the coparceners had agreed to admit the adopted son of a widow, who, under the Mithila law, was only entitled to the lady's stridhan, in the mistaken belief of law that he was a coparcener, the Privy Council refused to dissolve the settlement, holding that it was a mistake which could not prejudice the adopted son who was not an accessory.[2] So in another case, in which the plaintiff sued to set aside a partition on the ground of coercion, fraud, undue haste and gross inequality, the Privy Council found the first two facts not proved, and the other two sufficient to annul it.[3] So where the question was whether certain persons were entitled to the properties in dispute, their predecessors-in-title, being themselves illegitimate sons of their father, to whom they could not inherit, the Privy Council held the question immaterial on the finding that they had obtained their estate in a compromise or family arrangement, which proceeded on the basis of their legitimacy.[4]

1441. In another case, three brothers had entered into an agreement on the assumption that their family estate was impartible and subject to the rule of primogeniture. As such, the two junior widows, merely received land in lieu of maintenance. Later on, the estate being held partible, one of them sued for partition, but the Privy Council threw out his suit on the ground that he was bound by the family arrangement.[5] The same view was taken in another case in which one brother gave another a share out of his self-acquisition believing it to be joint.[6]

1442. Fraud: Misrepresentation.—Coercion, undue influence fraud and misrepresentation are sufficient to vitiate all transactions, however, solemn and formal or informal; since equity which upholds a settlement cannot make itself a privy to fraud by legalizing such a transaction, which is, however, not void but only voidable at the option of the defrauded party who is entitled to condone it.[7] The right enures to his legal representative,[8] but not to a stranger.[9] A party is not entitled to set aside an arrangement if he was let into it by the fraud of a third party, since no party can protect another against the fraud of a third party unknown to him. But where a family agreement was consented to, because the family solicitor wantonly withheld, from the party aggrieved, knowledge of her rights, but for which she would not have given her consent, the court cancelled it on the ground that the common solicitor had acted for both parties[10] a fortiori where such consent is obtained by misrepresentation

Clause (1).

(1) Satya Kumar v. Satya Kripal, 10 C.L.J. 503.

(2) Rajunder v. Bijai Govind, 2 M.I. A. 181.

(3) Hetnarain v. Modnarain, 7 M. I. A. 283 (321, 322).

(4) Gajapathi v. Gajapathi, 13 M.I.A. 497 (512).

(5) Mantappa v. Baswantrao, 14 M.I. A. 24 (36, 37). In Greender v. Troyluckho, 20 C. 373 P.C., the decision was given on the construction of the agreement.

(6) Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh, 32 A. 415 (426) P.C.

(7) Ss. 19, 19-A, 20, Contract Act; Ss. 86, 88, 89, Trusts Act.

(8) Govind v. Savitri, 43 B. 173; Sravan v. Kashiram, 51 B. 133.

(9) Ss. 19, 19-A, Contract Act; Mangaldas Shallesh v. Bechal, 40 C.L.J. 67.

(10) Ss. 21, 22, Contract Act: Roberts v. Roberts, (1905) 1 Ch. 704 (710, 711), head-note inaccurate, Stewart v. Stewart, 6 Cl. & Fin. 911 (970); 7 E.R. 940 (964).

of one of the parties to the agreement.[1] But even where fraud or undue influence of the other party is wanting, cases do arise where the court would unhesitatingly set aside a deed, as it did in case in which it was clear from the face of the deed that the parties did not understand their rights, or the nature of the transaction, and that the plaintiff had surrendered an unimpeachable title without consideration, there being evidence of his gross ignorance, habitual intoxication, liability to imposition and want of professional advice. In this case, though the plaintiff had acquiesced in the settlement for five years and there was no direct evidence of fraud or undue influence, still the court set it aside holding "that the parties knew not what they were doing."[2] But the mere fact that the plaintiff had agreed to a family arrangement being then drunk and paternal authority was exercised was held no ground for avoiding it.[3] But this was a reasonable settlement, and it does not imply that cases may not occur in which the court will set aside an arrangement if it is found to be so inequitable that it could not in the name of equity do otherwise than set it aside.[4] Such is the case where there is no bona fide dispute, but the transfer is given the guise of a family arrangement.[5]

Mistake.

1443. But this is ignorane of one's rights as distinct from mistake as to which a family arrangement is a departure from the ordinary rule which avoids an agreement made by mutual mistake on a question of fact on a material circumstance though not one of law.[6] But a mistake of one to which the other party was accessory is little distinguishable from fraud and its resultant effect.[7] But a family arrangement entered into under a common belief of all parties that A was entitled to one moiety and B to the other moiety of property, whereas B was entitled to the whole, was upheld as to the moiety allotted to A.[8]

1444. Avoidance of Family Arrangement.—Since a family arrangement is upheld on the ground that it enures to the peace of the family that doubtful claims should be amicably settled, it follows that a transaction cannot be considered as a family arrangement where the doubts existing as to the rights alleged to be compromised are not presented to the mind of the party interested.[9]

Clause (a).

1445. An illegal act cannot be legalized by giving it the guise of a family settlement. As such, one reversioner cannot dispose of his pes successionis to another in consideration of a price; or otherwise as such right is untransferable in law.[10] Nor can a family arrangement be used as a shield to defeat or defraud a third party or otherwise disguise an act that is illegal.[11].

---

(1) Leonard v. Leonard, 2 Ball & B. 171.

(2) Dunnage v. White, 1 Swans. 137 (152): 36 E.R. 329 (335).

(3) Cory v. Cory, 1 Ves. S. 19: 27 E.R. 864; Cook v. Clayworth, 18 Ves. 12: 34 E.R. 222.

(4) Dangal Ram v. Jaimangal, 5 Pat. 480.

(5) Joga v. Salleyya, (1923) M. 168.

(6) Ss. 20, 21, 22, Contract Act.

(7) Gordon v. Gordon, 3 Swan. 400 (473): 36 E.R. 910 (920, 921).

(8) Heald v. Walls, 39 L.J. Ch. 217.

(9) Harvey v. Cooke, 6 L.J. (O.S.) Ch. 84.

(10) S. 6 (a), Transfer of Property Act; Sham Sundar Lal v. Achan Kunwar, 21 A. 71; Amrit Narayan v. Gaya Singh, 45 C. 590 P.C.; Joti Lal v. Beni Madho, (1937) Pat. 280.

(11) Ib., S. 53.

1446. Consideration.—A family arrangement cannot be supported on the ground that it is a valid contract. As such, it requires consideration to support it.[1] But as every promise and every set of promises form the consideration for eaach other[2] and reciprocal promises are considerations for each other[3] it follows that a family arrangement would be supported by consideration if it is the result of mutual promises or relinquishments.[4]

Clause (b).

No extraneous consideration is then required to support a family arrangement. As observed in a case approved by the Privy Council: "The true character of the transaction appears to us to have been a settlement between the several members of the family of their disputes, each relinquishing all claim in respect of all property in dispute other than that falling to his share, and recognizing the right of the others as they had previously asserted it to the portion allotted to them respectively. It was in this light rather than as conferring a new and distinct title on each other, that the parties themselves seem to have regarded the arrangement, and we think that it is the duty of the courts to uphold and give effect to such an arrangement."[5]

1447. The settlement of mutual dispute and the purchase of peace is in itself a sufficient consideration required to validate such an agreement.[6] The relinquishment by one is consideration for the relinquishment by the other,[7] or as Parke, B., said: "The agreement by each individual to give up part of his claim is a sufficient consideration."[8] The court will not consider the quantum of consideration too nicely in a family settlement even when there were no rights in dispute, if sufficient motive for the arrangement is proved.[9]

1448. Right Immaterial.—So it is immaterial that the arrangement has transferred property to one who had no legal right to it. As previously remarked, the difficulty of ascertaining the rights is a justification for the settlement. Even where the rights are plain, its proof or acknowledgment might be difficult. If a family settlement could be set aside on proof of legal title, no settlement would be made since the proof of legal title would entitle the parties to their legal remedies, and there would be no occasion for a private settlement which law encourages as being in the interest of peace and concord.

Clause (c).

1449. But there is nothing in a party giving up his exceptance in a family arrangement in which two joint brothers having no male issue executed a will, in which they provided that on their dying sonless, their widows and daughters should take their shares instead of the other taking it by Rights given up.

(1) S. 10, Contract Act.
(2) Ib., S. 2 (e), (f).
(3) Mahammadinissa v. Bachelor, 29 B. 428; Ashidbai v. Abdulla, 31 B. 271 (277).
(4) Krishendra v. Debendra, 12 C.W.N. 793; Bejoy v. Girindra, 13 C.W.N. 201: 8 C.L.J. 458; Mahammadinissa v. Bachelor, 29 B. 428; Ashidbai v. Abdulla, 31 B. 271.
(5) Beharee Lall v. Mewa Koonwar, 3 Agra 82 (84) cited and approved in Khunni Lall v. Gobind, 33 A. 356 (367) P.C.
(6) Bejoy v. Girindra, 8 C.L.J. 458: Kamal Kumari v. Devi Narendra, 9 C.L.J. 19: 1 I.C. 573.
(7) Ashidbai v. Abdulla, 31 B. 271 following Mahammadinissa v. Bachelor, 29 B. 428; Norman v. Thompson, 4 Ex. 755 (760).
(8) Norman v. Thompson, 4 Ex. 755 (760).
(9) Krishnendra v. Debendra, 12 C.W.N. 793; Satya Kumar v. Satya Kripal, 10 C.L.J. 503.

survivorship.[1] But this was an arrangement in which the course of devolution was altered because they themselves had renounced their own right which they were fully competent to do. But if they had, for example, provided that even should a son be born to either of them he would be bound by their arrangement and claim no right in his heritage, then the arrangement would have fallen through on the ground of its illegality. Such was the case of an arrangement entered into by the father and his two sons providing for the succession by survivorship inter se to certain property allotted to their shares, whereupon on the death of one of the sons the other claimed his share to the exclusion of his daughter, but the court held the provision for survivorship void as contravening the ordinary Hindu Law of inheritance.[2]

A reversioner whose father was a party to an arrangement with the widow from whom he had taken a benefit cannot repudiate it upon the reversion opening up when he became entitled to the whole estate.[3]

An arrangement between the widow and her husband's brother whereby the widow was given an absolute right over a definite portion of the estate and her brother-in-law was given the remainder could not be challenged as a transfer of a mere expectancy.[4]

1450. Unfair Arrangement.—Family arrangements are governed by a special equity peculiar to themselves and will be enforced, if honestly made, although they have not been meant as a compromise, but have proceeded from an error of all parties originating in mistake or ignorance of fact as to what their rights actually are, or of the points on which their rights actually depend. When the responsible members of a family agree to the arrangement, which is per se not unfair and has been arrived at without undue advantage being taken, the courts will be slow to interfere when subsequently, one of the parties wishes to have that arrangement set aside.[5] Such was held to be the case where one party received property twice as valuable as the other.[6]

Clause (d).

1451. Though unfairness per se is no blot upon an agreement, it is evidence of fraud, and where an arrangement is shown to be so unfair that one could not have accedded to it without the exercise of undue advantage or coercion, the court may cancel the arrangement, not because it was unfair but because it was fraudulent. So where there is inequality of position, mutual mistake or any of those elements which dissolve the most solemn acts of parties, the court will not be slow to give effect to its conclusions. But the inclination of the court is always against it, even though a minr be concerned.[7]

---

(1) Lakshmichand v. Mt. Anandi, 45 A. 245 (250); Sureshwar Miser v. Mt. Maheshram, 48 C. 100 P.C.

(2) Bageshar v. Mahadei, 46 A. 525 (530) following Tagore v. Tagore, 18 W. R. 359; Purna Shashi v. Kalidhan, 38 C. 603 P.C.; Kanti Chandra v. Ali-i-Nabi, 33 A. 4.

(3) Kanhailal v. Brijlal, 40 A. 487 P.C.; Hardei (Mt.) v. Bhagwan, 24 C.W. N. 105 P.C.; followed in Bahadur v. Ram Bahadur, 45 A. 277 (280, 281).

(4) Guljar v. Mohanlal, 108 I.C. (N.) 440; Chinta Ram v. Ram Samujh, 99 I.C. (O.) 500.

(5) Kermatulla v. Kermatulla, 23 C. W.N. 118; Hassan Bibi v. Fazal Kadi, (1909) P.L.R. 139.

(6) Bishambar Nath v. Amar Nath, (1937) P.C. 105.

(7) Kermatulla v. Kermatullah, 23 C. W.N. 118.

1452. Unilateral Mistake.—So, again, the fact that the arrangement was due to a mistake of either side is no ground for rescinding a settlement any more than it is a ground for rescinding a contract.[1] So, where A believes B to be entitled to coparcenary right, which he, as the adopted son of a widow subject to the Mithila law, was not, his mistake being in no way induced by B cannot prejudice the latter and a settlement made with him cannot be set aside on that ground.[2]

Clause (e).

1453. Mistake in law is not a ground for setting aside a compromise, if the parties to the transaction were in difficulty and doubt, and wished to put an end to the disputes and to determine or avoid litigation.[3] If one or more parties having, or supposing they have, claims upon a given subject-matter or claims against each other, agree to compromise these claims, and the knowledge, or means of knowledge, of each of them with respect to the mode in which, and the circumstances under which, his claim arises, stand upon an equal footing and there is an absence of fraud or misrepresentation, the transaction is binding, although the conclusion at which the parties may have arrieved is not that which a court of justice would have arrived at had its decision been sought. The real consideration which each party receives under a compromise being, not the sacrifice of the right, but the settlement of the dispute and the abandonment of the claim, it is no objection to the validity of the transaction that the right was really in one of the parties only, and that the others had no right whatever. If, for instance, two parties claim adversely to each other the inheritance of a deceased person, and, in order to avoid litigation, agree to divide the inheritance, it is no ground for setting aside the agreement that only one was heir, and that the other gave up the right which he really possessed. The fact that the one may have had no claim is immaterial, if he was honestly mistaken as to his claim. It is enough, if, at the time of the compromise, he may have believed he had a claim, and that the parties have, by the transaction, avoided the necessity of going to law. To render valid the compromise of a litigation, it is not even necessary that the question in dispute should really be doubtful, if the parties bona fide consider it to be so. It is enough to render a compromise valid, that there is a question to be decided between them. A compromise of doubtful rights will not be set aside on any other ground than fraud.[4] This is the rule of law regarding compromises generally. But the courts go still further in favour of upholding compromises by which family disputes are settled, as appears from the following passage in the same treatise: "The principles which apply to the case of ordinary compromises between strangers, do not equally apply to the case of compromises in the nature of family arrangements. Family arrangements are governed by a special equity peculiar to themselves, and will be enforced if honestly made, but have proceeded from an error of all parties originating in mistake or ignorance of facts as to what their rights actually are, or of the points on which their rights actually depend."[5]

Mistake of Law.

1454. Arrangement When Set Aside.—A family arrangement may, however, be set aside if it was not bona fide or if there was no dispute, present or future, or

Clause (3).

(1) S. 20, Contract Act. Martin Cashin v. P. J. Cashin, (1938) P.C. 103.

(2) Rajunder v. Bijai Govind, 2 M. I.A. 181; Martin Cashin v. P. J. Cashin, (1938) P.C. 103.

(3) Dal Bhanjan v. Kariman, 16 Pat. L.J. 465: 57 I.C. 413.

(4) Kerr's fraud, 335 cited in Ram Niranjun v. Prayag, 8 C. 138 (141, 142).

(5) Ib., p. 364.

on the ground of mutual mistake, inequality of position, undue influence, coercion, fraud or any similar ground, provided it is clearly established by evidence.[1] Where, for instance, two persons collude to the prejudice of a third, the latter may set aside the transaction as compassed to his prejudice. So where one party has taken advantage of the other, the court will not permit him to retain it even though it had received the sanctity of a family arrangement. Such was the case of the defendant who had made a settlement with his brother, plaintiff in the case, who believed that he was the illegitimate son of his parents, but which the defendant knew he was not, as he was aware of the private marriage of their parents before the plaintiff's birth, which fact he did not communicate to the plaintiff, whereupon the court set aside the settlement holding that it was the duty of the defendant to undeceive the plaintiff as to the fact of the marriage, and that if, thereafter, the plaintiff had decided for himself that the ceremony was not valid, and treating it as not a marriage de jure, had chosen to enter into the contract, there would have been no ground for the suggestion of the imposition.[2] In another case, a compromise was set aside at the instance of a minor because the court had sanctioned it under a misapprehension or mistake as to material facts.[3] There is nothing illegal in an agreement between expectant heirs to divide their expectancies and such agreements are not obnoxious to the rule against the transfer of a mere spes successionis.[4] Of course, parties cannot alter the incidents of a property by any agreement between them. They cannot, for instance, render partible property impartible by any family arrangement conferring the estate on the eldest son. An arrangement so made is said to be void as opposed to public policy, but there appears nothing illegal in such an arrangement.[5]

1455. When Acted Upon.—An arrangement materially gains in strength if it is acted upon by the party interested in challenging it. Such was the case of a brother who had received a maintenance allowance under a settlement made under the mistaken belief that he was not entitled to partition the family estate, which he erroneously believed to be impartible for about ten years, on which the Privy Council observed: "If this be a valid document and not open to challenge on the ground of fraud or upon any other ground, their Lordships would be slow to fail to give effect to a family arrangement of the kind thus expressed, followed as it has been by enjoyment and possession for a period of ten years."[6]

In this connection it would not be amiss to mention that relief on the ground of fraud or mistake can only be given if it is claimed within three years from when the fraud or mistake is known to the plaintiff.[7]

Whom it Binds.

176. A family arrangement binds both the parties and their representatives.[8]

Illustration.

A sets a claim as an adopted son of B, whereupon the widow in possession and two predeceased brothers of her husband B and C referred the dispute

(1) Satya Kumar v. Satya Kripal, 10 C.L.J. 503; Lachmi v. Durga, 40 A. 619; Krishna v. Hemaja, 22 C.W.N. 463.

(2) Gordon v. Gordon, 3 Swan. 400: 36 E.R. 910 (917).

(3) Solomon v. Abdool, 6 C. 687.

(4) Ram Niranjun v. Prayag, 8 C. 138 (145). As to Khojas, see Jan Mahomed v. Datiu, 38 B. 449.

(5) Muthusami v. Muthusami, 27 I.C. (M.) 3.

(6) Mantappa v. Baswant Rao, 14 M. I.A. 24 (37); Hasan Bibi v. Fazal Kadir, (1909) P.L.R. 139: 4 I.C. 954.

(7) Articles 95, 96, Limitation Act.

(8) Kanhai Lal v. Brij Lal, 40 A. 487 F.B.; Chunna Lal v. Swami Prasad, (1935) R. 418.

to arbitration, who awarded A nothing but divided the estate into four parts, one of which was allowed to the widows of B and C respectively. B's widow transferred her share to A. On the widow's death, when the succession opened, A claimed the remaining three shares as reversioner. But the previous family arrangement to which he was a party disentitled him to make the claim.[1]

1456. Analogous Law.—It has already been stated that in making a compromise it is competent to the father to represent his minor sons,[2] the manager the joint family, the guardian his ward,[3] and it is equally competent to the widow in possession of her husband's estate to make a settlement binding on the reversioners[4] and their representatives.[5] But where, of course, the effect of an arrangement creates a perpetuity or contravenes any other rule of law, as where it alters the law of inheritance by setting up an artificial rule of devolution of property, the court cannot ignore the law and uphold the agreement. So where the members of a joint family agreed to a partition, providing for survivorship inter se, they cannot validly contract that on the death of the last survivor, his brother should take the estate to the exclusion of his daughter who would be his natural heir.[6]

1457. Stranger's Rights.—It is a well-known principle of law that a stranger not a party to a contract acquires no rights to enforce it from a mere fact that the parties contracting have agreed to meet his claim. So if in a contract between A and B, B agrees to pay a sum of money to C, C cannot recover the money from B because there is no privity of contract between him and B. But this rule is subject to four exceptions, namely, (i) where the contract charges the money to be paid out of immovable property; (ii) when the contract between A and B creates a trust in favour of C; (iii) where the money is due to C under a marriage settlement, partition or other family arrangement; (iv) where B afterwards agrees to pay the money to C direct, or becomes estopped from denying his liability to pay him personally.[7]

---

(1) Kanhai Lal v. Brij Lal, 40 A. 487 P.B.

(2) Ram Das v. Chabildas, 12 Bom.L.R. 621; Bishen Singh v. Jawala Singh, (1911) P.W.R. 3: 8 I.C. 776.

(3) Natesa v. Rama, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 154: 10 I.C. 221.

(4) Kunnilal v. Govind, 33 A. 356 P.C.; Ram Naresh v. Sadhu Saran, 28 I.C. (A.) 585.

(5) Sumera v. Mormuket, (1935) A. 632.

(6) Bageshar Rai v. (Mt.) Mahadei, 46 A. 525 (529) following Kanti Chandra v. Ali-i-Nabi, 33 A. 414.

(7) Subbu Chetti v. Arunachalam, 53 M. 70 F.B.; followed in Jagadamba v. Bibhootibhooshan, 60 C. 767; Jang Bahadur v. Rana Uma Nath, (1937) O. 99.

CHAPTER XIII.

PARTITION.

1458. Topical Introduction.—The right of partition postulates a later development of archaic law. As stated before, the primal society was tribal and all that the tribe acquired was held in common without any right of alienation or division. The disruption of tribes into family groups marked a distinct advance in social evolution, but the incidents of tribal ownership continued and so Usanas declares that land was "indivisible among kinsmen even to the thousandth degree."[1] As the families grew and became unwieldy and social conditions brought about greater security, the necessity of partition became inevitable. We have then the text: "Land passes by six formalities; by consent of townsmen, of kinsmen or neighbours and of heirs, and by gift of gold and water." "In regard to the immovable estate, sale is not allowed; it may be mortgaged by consent of parties interested,"[2] that is to say, townsmen, neighbours, kinsmen and heirs were all interested in its disposal, for they were all, at one time, joint owners of the tribal domain. As time advanced their hold on the land relaxed, and the kinsmen alone formed a group who jointly held and enjoyed the common land. Yet another stage separated even the kinsmen but the separation in possession was not recognized as any separation of titles. So Brihaspati ordains: "Separated kinsmen as those who are unseparated are equal in respect of immovables, for one has not power over the whole to make a gift, sale or mortgage."[3] But the same process which had put the townsmen and the neighbours out of account equally sufficed to place the separated kinsmen out of the family and expanded the individual rights of property, but the same texts which still recorded the history of the past had to be reconciled with the growing rights of property. As the communities became more scattered, the law of convenience dictated the recognition of family rights. Individual effort began to be prized and a distinction became perceptible between individual acquisition and communal wealth. This is recognized in the following text of Brihaspati: "He among them who has made an acquisition, may take a double portion of it."[4] This was the first recognition of the incentive to individual enterprise, but it was half-hearted and eaten up by the exception. "But if the common stock be improved, an equal division is ordained."[5] But the march of economic laws may be slowed, it cannot be thwarted. As the value of property grew and a keener competition for existence stimulated industry, the right of each member to separate his share could no longer be resisted. But this was not universally acknowledged. For instance, in Malabar a coparcener has even now no right of partition, though the coparcener is entitled to his self-acquired movable property during his lifetime, which, on his death, lapses to the tarwad.[6]

(1) Cited in Mit., I-IV-26.
(2) Anon., cited in Mit., I-I-31, 32.
(3) Cited in Mit., I-I-30.
(4) Brihaspati, XVII-42, cited in Mit., I-IV-29.
(5) Yad. II-121, cited in Mit., I-IV-30.
(6) Govindan v. Sankaran, 32 M. 252 (360) F.B., following Kallati v. Palat, 1 M.H.C.R. 162.

In places, however, where the communal rights yielded to familial rights, the community did not loose its hold upon such property. There then arose the right of pre-emption. Such is the right of pre-emption in the Punjab where the right was too well established to be shaken by the smaller families. But in more advanced sections of society, both the communal and the familial rights have yielded to individual ownership. Such is the law of the Dayabhag in Bengal, where a coparcener enjoys rights in quasi-severalty even when he is a member of a coparcenary. But under the Mitakshara his rights are more medieval though, here again, the presidencies of Bombay and Madras have adopted a view which recognizes the right of a coparcener to alien his share for value. But the right of alienation, though closely linked to the right of partition, is yet distinct. The right of partition was the first to be forced for recognition. The right of alienation came in later. But they were both rights of property and have reacted upon one another. Take, for instance, the case of Bengal where male and female coparceners have alike the right to demand partition. And here the coparceners enjoy the largest latitude of alienation.

1459. With the first concession of the right of partition, the shares were unequally divided. "The portion deducted for the eldest is the twentieth part of the heritage, with the best of all the chattels; for the middlemost, half of that; for the youngest, a quarter of it."[1] But this practice was not uniform, since Manu declares that in a partition after the death of the father and mother, "the eldest brother may take the patrimony entire, and the rest may live under him as under his father,"[2] thus foreshadowing the rule of primoneniture which still survives in custom and is ordinarily applied to Jagirs, Rajas, Zemindaris, chieftainships and principalities. When the right of unequal division could no longer be tolerated, the custom changed but the written law could not be altered. This is how equality of partition became established. An unequal partition is admissible in every period. How then is a restriction introduced, requiring that sons should divide only equal shares? The question is thus answered: True this unequal portion is found in the sacred ordinances; but it must not be practised, because it is abhorred by the world; since that is forbidden by the maxim 'practise not which is legal, but is abhorred by the world, (for) it secures not celestial bliss;[3] as the practice of offering bulls is shunned on account of popular prejudice, notwithstanding the injunction 'offer to venerable priest a bull or a large goat'; and as the laying of a cow is for the same reason disused, notwithstanding the precept[4] 'slay a barren cow as a vistim consecrated to Mitra and Varun.' Therefore, unequal partition, though noticed in the codes of law, should not be practiced, since it is disapproved by the world and is contrary to scripture. For this reason, a restriction is ordained, that brothers should divide only in equal shares."[5]

1460. The history of the Mitakshara law of partition is thus an innovation on the ancient law. At first the right to divide rested with the father. It could not be enforced against his will. But later on it was recognized that what was right for the father to do was equally right for the son to demand. The only objection that could be taken to such

(1) Manu, IX-112.
(2) Manu, IX-105.
(3) Yad., according to Mitra Misra in the Virmitrodaya, but ascribed to Manu in Balam Bhatt's commentary. It has not, however, been found either in Manu or Yadnavalkya's Institutes; Celebrooke's Note to Mit., I-III-4.
(4) Veda—Subodhini and Balambhutt—Code. Note to Mit., I-III-4.
(5) Mit., I-IV-7.

enforced partition is prejudice to the father's after-born issue. As to this the Mitakshara said: "While the mother is capable of bearing more sons and the father retains his worldly affections and does not desire partition, a distribution of the grandfather's estate does, nevertheless, take place by the will of the son."[1] But the son's right against the father is conditioned by the Mitakshara on the following facts: (i) It might be made by the father; (ii) against the father, if the father is addicted to vice and the mother is past child bearing. But after the father's death, partition could be had as a matter of course.[2] This text is now explained away as referring to the father's self-acquisitions.

Partition defined.

177. (1) Partition is the intentional severance of coparcenary interests by members of a joint family,[3] or by the widow when entitled thereto.[4]

(2) An unequivocal expression of an intention to separate such interest may amount to partition.[5]

(3) Partition may be effected by the definition of rights or by the division of property by metes and bounds.[6]

Explanation 1.—An unequivocal expression of an intention to separate referred to in clause (1) may be either explicit or implied by conduct.[7]

Explanation 2.—Partition being the severance of joint status is distinct from a transfer and a family arrangement as defined in section 173.

Illustration.

A files a suit for partition against B, a joint member of his family. It operates as a separation.[8]

1461. Analogous Law.—The following text bear on the subject of partition:—

Narad.—"Where a division of the paternal estate is instituted by sons that becomes a topic of litigation called by the wise partition of heritage."[9]

Mitakshara.—"Partition[10] is the adjustment of divers rights regarding the whole by distributing them on particular portions of the aggregate."[11]

Virmitrodaya.—"Partition is the adjustment of the proprietary right into specific shares."[12]

Dayabhag.—"Partition is the allotment of separate portions of the family property to the co-sharers corresponding to the shares already owned by each. By partition an allotment is made in respect of the share of a coparcener."[13]

Raghunandan.—"Partition is a distributive adjustment by lot or otherwise of the property of relatives vested in them, over the whole wealth, in right of the same relation, upon the extinction of the former owner's property."[14]

Mayukh.—"Even where there is a total absence of common property a partition is effected by the mere declaration, 'I am separate from thee,' for partition is a particular condition of the mind and the declaration is indicative of the same."[15]

Saraswati Vilas.—"Without any formality partition can be effected by mere intention."[16]

---

(1) Mit., I-V-8; Krishna v. Sami, 9 M. 64.
(2) Mit., I-II-7.
(3) Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain, 35 A. 80 (87) P.C.
(4) See Hindu Women's Right to Property Act, 1937.
(5) Girjabai v. Sadashiv, 43 C. 1031 (1045) P.C.
(6) Appovier v. Rama, 11 M.I.A. 75 (91, 92).
(7) Girjabai v. Sadashiv, 43 C. 1031.
(8) Kawal Nani v. Prabhu, 39 A. 496 P.C.
(9) Narad, XIII-1.
(10) Vibhag.
(11) Mit., I-I-4.
(12) Mitra Misar's Virmitrodaya, I-36.
(13) Cited in Mitra's Joint Family and Partition (2nd Ed.), 303.
(14) Dayatatwa, cited in Col. Dayabhag, I-I-8.
(15) Ch. IV, S. 3 (Mandlik), 38.
(16) Setlur's Tr., 122.

1462. The Hindu Law of Partition has been materially altered by the statute law which prescribes a special procedure for the partition of revenue-paying estates by the Collector.[1] And the Partition Act of 1893[2] generally empowers the court to sell the whole or any portion in order to prevent inconvenient divisions.

Partition of Revenue-paying Estate.

The effect of these statutes is to modify the procedure, leaving the rights to be determined by Hindu Law.

1463. Gautam treats partition as one of the sources of property[3] and this view is echoed by the Mitakshara. This does not mean that before partition property does not vest in any one, nor does it mean that before partition none of the coparceners have any interest in the joint property. All that Gautam means is that, before partition, the right of a coparcener was indeterminate and that partition defines and perfects it.

1464. What is Partition.—The term "partition" involves the severance of undivided interests in common property. The very word "coparcener" implies a right to the division of property. Cunningham defines partition as the process by which members of a joint family become separate, and cease to be coparceners.[4] But this definition is too narrow, since it is now settled that "a definite and unambiguous indication by one member of his intention to separate himself and to enjoy his share in severalty may amount to separation. But to have that effect, the intention must be unequivocal and clearly expressed."[5] This was pointed out by the same Board as far back as 1866 when referring to an argument that a partition deed was ineffectual to convert the undivided property until it has been completed by an actual partition by metes and bounds, Lord Westbury observed: "That the contention confounded the division of title with the division of the subject to which the title is applied." He then added: "When the members of an undivided family agree among themselves with regard to particular property, that it shall thenceforth be the subject of ownership in certain defined shares, then the character of undivided property and joint enjoyment is taken away from the subject-matter so agreed to be dealt with; and in the estate each member has thenceforth a definite and certain share which he may claim, the right to receive and to enjoy in severalty, although the property itself has not been actually severed and divided."[6] This view has been since reiterated by the same Board in other cases[7] in one of which they said: "Separation from the joint family involving the severance of joint status so far as the separating member is concerned, with all the legal consequences resulting therefrom, is quite distinct Cl. (1); Expl. 2. Meaning of Severance.

(1) Bengal Act V of 1897, supplemented by rules framed by the Board of Revenue U.P. Act III of 1901; C. P. Act II of 1917, Ch. XI (Ss. 161-186); Punjab Act XVII of 1887, Ch. IX; Bom. Acts VI of 1888 and V of 1879 (Ss. 113, 117), subject to the provisions of Bom. Act V of 1862; Mad. Act II of 1864 (Ss. 45, 46); Mad. Act I of 1866; Assam Reg. 1, 1886, Ch. VI.

(2) Act IV of 1893, cited in the Appendix.

(3) Gautam, X-39; 2 S. B. E. 228, cited with approval in Mit., I-I-18.

(4) Hindu Law, p. 136.

(5) Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain, 35 A. 80 (87) P.C.; Balkrishna v. Ramkrishna, 53 A. 300 P.C.

(6) Appovier v. Rama, 11 M.I.A. 75 (89, 90).

(7) Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain, 35 A. 80 (87) P.C.; Balkrishna v. Ramkrishna, 53 A. 300 P.C.; Girja Bai v. Sadashiv, 43 C. 1031 P.C.

from the de facto division into specific shares of the property held until then jointly. One is a matter of individual decision, the desire on the part of any one member to sever himself from the joint family and to enjoy his hitherto undefined or unspecified shares separately from the others without being subject to the obligations which arise from the joint status, whilst the other is the natural resultant from his decision, the division and separation of his share which may be arrived at either by private agreement amongst the parties or on failure of that by the intervention of the court. Once the decision has been unequivocally expressed and clearly intimated to his co-sharers, his right to obtain and possess the share to which he admittedly has a title is unimpeachable; neither the co-sharer can question it nor the court examine his conscience to find out whether his reasons for separation were well founded or sufficient; the court has simply to given effect to his right to have his share allocated separately from the others."[1]

The first essential condition of partition then is that it must be intended. The intention may be inferred from conduct, act, or declaration showing a determination to effect severance from the joint family.

Severance.

1465. Such severance must be to determine the joint status, thus distinguishing partition from a mere family arrangement for convenience of management or possession. The severance may be of title, status, or possession but it must be with the intention to effect a severance.

The fact that a mere severance of interest does not constitute partition, if such severance was not expressly or impliedly intended to, have that effect, is the ratio decidendi of many cases. Such a case arose where the plaintiffs sued the defendants for partition. The parties had long been separate in mess and residence, and as to estate, the plaintiff's ancestors received some land from the ancestors of the defendants by way of sir upon the income of which they maintained themselves. This sir did not correspond to the extent of the share which the plaintiff's branch would have received if there had been a partition. It was proved that there was a family custom according to which different members of the family, on living separate, received similar allotments of sir for maintenance which were increased according to exigencies. There was such an increase at one time to the lands given to the plaintiff's branch, whereupon the Privy Council held that there had been no partition, and as to the bar of limitation by the defendants the court held that the proceeds of the sir were payments by the defendants which kept alive the plaintiff's claim.[2]

Clause (2).

1466. Declaration of Intention.—It was at one time held that two things were at least necessary to constitute partition, namely, the shares must be defined, and there must be distinct and independent enjoyment of those shares.[3]

---

(1) Girja Bai v. Sadashiv, 43 C. 1031 (1047, 1048) P.C.

(2) Ranjit Singh v. Koer Gujraj Singh, L.R. 1 I.A. 9: 3 Sar. P. C. C. 304.

(3) Sheo Dyal v. Judoonath, 9 W.R. 61; Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149 (156), in which Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., held that a mere declaration was insufficient and that what was required was some further overt act, namely, the giving him "some trifle" out of the family property.—Ib., p. 156, citing Mit., I-II-11, 12; Manu, IX-207; Yad., II-117. So Yadnavalkya says: "The separation of one who is able to support himself and is not desirous of participation may be completed by giving him some trifle" (II-117). But the contrary stated in the text is now too well established to admit of any controversy. These and the follow-

But as already stated, the Privy Council have in a series of cases laid down that neither the first[1] nor the second condition is by any means a pre-requisite of a completed partition[2] and that even an unequivocal expression of intention clearly expressed may amount to partition.[3] But the expression of such intention must be to presently appropriate and enjoy in a manner inconsistent with the ordinary state of enjoyment of an undivided family, that is, the expression must unequivocally create a present separation and not merely a contemplated separation.[4] "The intention to separate may be evinced in different ways, either by explicit declaration or by conduct. If it is an inference derivable from conduct it will be for the court to determine whether it was unequivocal and explicit."[5] Such was held to be the case where one of the two co-sharers who constituted the joint family "left the joint residence and withdrew himself from commensality as indicating a fixed determination henceforward to live separately from his cousin" and the court treated "the fact of his borrowing money for his maintenance, as well as making a will as indicating at all events that he himself considered that a separation had taken place."[6]

1467. The same view has been taken by the Privy Council,[7] with the result that their Lordships have committed themselves to two somewhat opposing views. In the first place, they have affirmed that the mere institution of a partition suit may effect severance, if it amounts to an unequivocal and unmistakable intention to become separate;[8] yet if the suit is afterwards withdrawn, it has not the same effect. These views suggest the following queries. If the mere institution of a suit is equivalent to the unequivocal declaration of intention, which must be presumed, then how does its subsequent withdrawal affect that intention, since the only logical outcome of withdrawal must be to leave the parties separate. There can be no reunion because reunion needs an agreement to reunite. Nor can the unequivocal intention be construed to be revocable. If the institution should suffice to determine jointness, it should do so equally even if the plaintiff is a minor. but in his case unquestionably it cannot have that effect[9] (§ 1716). Again, if the severance is complete with the institution, what happens if the suit is dismissed, and what is to become of the manager's authority, and who is to manage the estate without an accredited manager? Lastly, if it is the date of severance, there should be no vari-ing cases must then be taken as overruled by the Privy Council; Ambika Dat v. Sukhmani, 1 A. 437; Debee Pershad v. Phool Kuari, 12 W.R. 510 (institution of suit insufficient); contra in Joy Narain v. Girish Chunder, 4 C. 434 P.C.; Girja Bai v. Sadashiv, 43 C. 1031 (1045) P.C.

(1) Palani Ammal v. Muthuvenkata, 48 M. 254 (257) P.C.

(2) Appovier v. Rama, 11 M.I.A. 75; Doorga Pershad v. Kundun, 21 W.R. 214 P.C.; Ranjit Singh v. Koer Gujraj Singh, L.R. 1 I.A. 9; Chidambaram v. Gauri, 2 M. 83 P.C.; Joy Narain v. Girish Chunder, 4 C. 434 P.C.; Ram Pershad v. Lakhpati, 30 C. 231 (253) P.C.; Bal Kishen v. Ram Narain, 30 C. 738 P.C.; Parbati v. Naunihal, 31 A. 412 P.C.; Suraj Narain v. Iqbal, 35 A. 80 (87) P.C.; Girja Bai v. Sadashiv, 43 C. 1031 (1045) P.C.; to the same effect, Tej Protap v. Champo, 12 C. 96; Radhachurn v. Kripa Sindhu, 5 C. 474 (477); Phul Kauri, (In re), 8 B.L.R. 388-note; Sundra v. Arunachalam, 39 M. 159.

(3) Girja Bai v. Sadashiv, 43 C. 1031 (1045) P.C.; Girdhar v. Sri Krishna, 39 M.L.J. 18: 56 I.C. 293 P.C.; Kasem v. Jorawar Singh, 31 M.L.T. 46: 18 N.L.R. 127 P.C.; Bal Krishna v. Ram Krishna, 53 A. 300.

(4) Babaji v. Kashi Bai, 4 B. 157.

(5) Girja Bai v. Sadashiv, 43 C. 1031 (1050) P.C.

(6) Jag Narain v. Girish Chunder, 4 C. 434 P.C.

(7) Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh, 32 A. 415 P.C., followed in Palani Ammal v. Muthuvencata, 48 M. 254 (258) P.C.

(8) Girja Bai v. Sadashiv, 43 C. 1031 (1051) P.C., approving Vato Koer v. Rawshun Singh, 8 W.R. 52.

(9) Jethanand v. Kewal Ram, 79 I.C. 505: (1926) S. 216.

ation of shares consequent upon subsequent births and deaths in the family. The true rule would seem to be that the institution of a suit is only a manifestation of an intention to separate; but so long as its withdrawal is possible, it is not irrevocable, and therefore, not necessarily destructive of jointness.[1]

1468. Of course, it is a question in each case whether the act and conduct of a co-parcener was so unequivocal as to manifest clearly the intention to become separate. Such act and conduct must be the expression of his own volition. It must not be a submission to the judgment of another. It must in effect say "I separate," and not that "I will separate if you so will it." Consequently, while the mere institution of a suit, coupled with a declaration of the plaintiff's determination to become separate, may amount to a partition, there can be no partition where the plaintiff, being in doubt as to his legal status, the matter is left to the judgment of the court, as where he applies for insolvency.[2] Where, for example, the plaintiff sued the defendant, his adoptive father, for a declaration of the invalidity of a mortgage executed by the latter on the ground that in a previous partition between him and the defendant the mortgaged property had fallen to his share. He then filed a petition asking for partition, should the court hold the parties still joint. He withdrew this prayer and applied for the withdrawal of his suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit for partition which was allowed. He then claimed to be separate on the strength of his amended claim; but the court held that his conduct did not constitute such an unambiguous expression of intention as to effect a severance of status between him and his father.[3]

1469. But where two brothers, being members of a joint Mitakshara family, executed an agreement whereby, after reciting that the declaraants had remained joint and undivided and in commensality up to a certain date, and that portions of their properties, both movable and immovable, had been partitioned between them, they provided for the partition of the remaining joint properties by certain arbitrators appointed in that behalf, the court held the agreement of itself to amount to a separation of the brothers as a joint family and extinguished all rights of survivorship between them.[4] And so it has been held by the Privy Council that, although a suit by a member of a joint Hindu family against his co-sharers for a separate share of the joint estate be not in terms a suit for partition, yet if it appears that the intention of the plaintiff was to obtain partition in the right of a coparcener it does not require the consent of the other coparceners to complete it. Severance of interest may be effected by an indirect act, such as the sale of one's coparcenary interest to another.[5] But in Northern India, where a sale of undivided interest is not permitted, partition cannot be presumed from a mere sale, though it is evidence from which partition might be inferred. Where the members of a joint family agreed in writing that all the movable and immovable properties were to be divided as from the date of the agreement and that from that time forward separate accounts were to be kept by the coparceners, and the profit or loss, subsequent thereto,

(1) Raghunandan v. Mahabir, 96 I.C. 448: (1926) Pat. 545.

(2) Venkatarayudu v. Sivaramakrishnayya, 58 M. 126 (135).

(3) Veni v. Nellappa, 11 M.L.W. 611: 67 I.C. 800, explaining Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain, 35 A. 80 (87) P.C.: Kawal Narain v. Budh Singh, 39 A. 496 (499) P.C.

(4) Tej Protap v. Champa, 12 C. 96.

(5) Soundra v. Arunachellam, 29 M. L.J. 816.

was on no account to be binding on the other coparceners, the agreement was held to have effected a division in status, though there was no actual division of property by metes and bounds.[1] The giving of notice or the institution of a suit would amount to such partition. So where a coparcener sent a notice to the manager demanding that his share be partitioned for which he instituted a suit, pending which he died, and the question arose whether he died joint or separated in estate, the Privy Council said: "It would probably be enough for the determination of this appeal to say that nothing could be more unequivocal or more clearly expressed than the conduct of Harihar in indicating his intention to separate himself and enjoy his share in severalty by the notice of the 1st October, 1908, coupled with this suit, and that the acts amounted to a separation with all its legal consequences."[2] So partition is complete where the coparceners enter into an agreement in which they declare each member entitled to a definite fractional part of the whole estate.[3]

Intention Material.

1470. Partition by metes and bounds is not then necessary to complete partition.[4] What is necessary is intention. So whether an agreement for the division of profits is merely an arrangement for convenience or a partition must depend upon the intention of parties to be gathered from the language of the instrument, though in construing instruments, undue stress should not be laid on the words actually employed. As was said in a case: "Looking at the state of knowledge among even fairly educated Hindus, as to the exact principles of their own law (a point on which I do not mean to draw a comparison between them and the people of any European country at all to the disadvantage of the Hindus) looking to this fact, and to the inveterate habit of the natives to have accounts of the most important kinds drawn up by mere scribes, neither acquainted with law nor trained to precision of language, I have a strong repugnance to hold parties bound to a legal consequence arising from the use of particular terms, where surrounding circumstances appear to show that the parties had no such intention as that consequence would indicate, and that, in truth, the consequence was unforeseen."[5] The decision in this case was upheld on appeal by the Privy Council who, referring to the agreement, observed that the statement that the four cosharers were in possession of equal shares of which they appropriated and enjoyed the profits in proportion to their respective shares pointed to an appropriation and enjoyment of the profits inconsistent with that which is the normal state of enjoyment of a joint and undivided Hindu Family, and that their resolve to have the shares mutated in accordance with their actual possession and enjoyment "appeared to their Lordships to be strong prima facie evidence of the intention to hold the undivided shares as the separate property of each coparcener. It may not be conclusive but at all events, it is strong prima facie evidence of such intention." They then added that, though the deed did not declare that after the agreement the family was to be divided, at the same time, there was a statement consistent with their continued indivision and that, therefore, it must be

(1) Umayorupagam v. Palanarayana, 28 I.C. (M.) 908; Appovier v. Rama, 11 M.I.A. 75 (91).

(2) Girja Bai v. Sadashiv, 43 C. 1031 (1045) P.C., following Vato v. Rowshun, 8 W.R. 82.

(3) Phuljhari Kooer, (In re), 17 W. R. 102.

(4) Mahabeer v. Kundun, 8 W.R. 116, affirmed O.A. Doorga Pershad v. Kundun, 21 W.R. 214 P.C.

(5) Mahabeer v. Kundun, 8 W.R. 116 (123) affirmed O.A. Doorga Pershad v. Kundun, 21 W.R. 214 P.C.

presumed that the agreement was only consistent with partition and inconsistent with continued jointness.[1]

It is thus clear that a mere definition of interest with the intention to separate would constitute partition. "Partition does not give him a title or create a title in him, it only enables him to obtain what is his own in a definite and specific form for purposes of disposition independent of the wishes of his former co-sharers."[2]

1471. Division of Rights.—It is seen that an intentional severance of joint interests amounts to partition. It has also been seen that such severance may be effected by a mere verbal declaration unaccompanied by any overt act, from which it follows that partition may be effected by a mere division of rights without definement of shares[3] and any physical division by metes and bounds. So Lord Westbury said: It is necessary to bear in mind the twofold application of the word 'division'. There may be a division of right and there may be a division of property. And thus after the execution of this instrument, there was a division of right in the whole property, although in some portions that division of right was not intended to be followed up by actual partition by metes and bounds, that being postponed till some future time when it would be convenient to make that partition.[4] And later on he said: "Then if there be conversion of the joint tenancy of an undivided family, into a tenancy-in-common of the members of that undivided family, the undivided family becomes a divided family with reference to the property that is the subject of that agreement, and that is a separation in interest and in right, although not immediately followed by a de facto actual division of the subject-matter. This may, at any time, be claimed by virtue of the separate right."[5]

Clause (3).

So an agreement that the joint property shall thenceforth be enjoyed by the various members of the family in certain defined shares, specified in their application to the Collector for mutation of names, was held to amount to a partition.[6]

1472. The mere institution of a suit for partition may be regarded as an unequivocal expression of such intention[7] and has been held to amount to partition.[8] But such intention cannot be inferred from a suit for a mere declaration of the plaintiff's right to a share in the estate of his father, since such a suit would not be inconsistent with an intention on his part

Institution of Suit.

(1) Doorga Pershad v. Kundun, 21 W. R. 214 (216) P.C.; following Appovier v. Rama, 11 M.I.A. 75; to the same effect, Ranjit Singh v. Koer Gujraj Singh, L.R. 1 I.A. 9.

(2) Appovier v. Rama, 11 M.I.A. 75; Doorga Pershad v. Kundun, 21 W.R. 214 P.C.; Ram Pershad v. Lakhpati, 30 C. 213 (253) P.C.; Suraj Narain v. Iqbal, 35 A. 80 (87) P.C.; Girja Bai v. Sadashiv, 43 C. 1031 (1045, 1048) P.C.; Deo v. Dwarkanath, 10 W.R. 273; Kailash v. Kashi, 24 C. 339; Kedar v. Romoni, 7 I.C (C.) 884 (886).

(3) Venkatapathi v. Venkatanarasimha, (1936) P.C. 964 (967).

(4) Appovier v. Rama, 11 M.I.A. 75 (91, 92); Parbati v. Naunihal Singh, 31 A. 412 (422) P.C.

(5) Appovier v. Rama, 11 M.I.A. 75 (92).

(6) Parbati v. Naunihal Singh, 31 A. 412 P.C.; Suraj Narain v. Iqbal, 35 A. 80 P.C.; Girja Bai v. Sadashiv, 43 C. 1031 P.C.; Anurago v. Darshan, (1938) P.C. 65; Ramdhin v. Bisheshar, 3 O. L.J. 508: 37 I.C. 114; Sikhamani v. Ammani, 40 I.C. (M.) 36.

(7) Joy Narain v. Joy Narain, 4 C. 434 (437) P.C.; Tandayuthapani v. Raghunath, 35 M. 339; Kawal Nain v. Budh Singh, 39 A. 496 (498) P.C.; Girja Bai v. Sadashiv, 43 C. 1031 (1045) P.C.; Ramalinga v. Narayana, 45 M. 489 P.C.

(8) Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain, 35 A. 80 P.C.; Kawal Nain v. Budh Singh, 39 A. 496 (498) P.C.; following Girja Bai v. Sadashiv, 43 C. 1031 (1045) P.C.

to obtain a declaration of his being entitled to a joint interest in a joint estate.[1]

1473. But if the intention to separate is clearly averred in the plaint, the fact that the suit was dismissed on the erroneous ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove that his father had ill-treated and refused to maintain him would not pervent the separation coming into effect.[2] The case would, of course, be different if the plaintiff had withdrawn his suit, the withdrawal of which would have prima facie amounted to the withdrawal of his declaration that he was separate[3] (§ 1466). A question may arise whether the institution of a suit for partition by one member has necessarily the effect of dissolving the joint family, not only as to the member suing, but also as to the members sued. That it could not have that effect if a member went out of the family after taking his share on terms, is obvious and it is now so held.[4] But then it is said that the case is otherwise where a coparcener files a suit for a general partition which has necessarily that effect.[5] But it is difficult to see why it should have that effect without the other coparceners intending to divide inter se. The case would of course, be different if the other coparceners agree to a general partition, or that at least they acquiesce in it. In one case the Privy Council said: "There is no presumption, when one coparcener separates from the others, that the latter remain united. In many cases, it may be necessary, in order to ascertain the share of the outgoing member, to fix the shares which the other coparceners are or would be entitled to, and in this sense the separation of one is said to be a virtual separation of all."[6] But the mere incidental fixation of any coparcener's share is not partition, and there can be no partition nobus vobus of all, merely because one member goes out of the family. But this does not mean and it does not imply that the partition of one creates any presumption as to the separation of the rest. All it does is to destroy the presumption of their jointness so that the question whether they had also separated or continued to remain joint can no longer be the subject of presumption, and must depend upon proof.[7]

1474. Since intellectual partition is completed on a mere expression of an intention to separate, the fact that the parties thereafter continued to live together and enjoy their share in common might affect the mode of enjoyment, but apart from re-union, it cannot restore the previous status of jointness.[8] It has been held that where there has been a separation but not a division by metes and bounds, a member may sue for joint possession on the basis of his divided status.[9] But it may be doubted whether the court would decree joint possession to a plaintiff who on his own showing was entitled to separate possession.

A had three sons—one by his first wife, and two by his second wife. He executed a will by which he authorized his executors to effect a partition among his sons when the eldest of them attained the age of

(1) Debee Pershad v. Phool Koeree, 12 W.R. 510, explained in Joy Narain v. Joy Narain, 4 C. 434 (437, 438) P.C.

(2) Kawal Nain v. Budh Singh, 39 A. 496 (499) P.C.

(3) Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh, 32 A. 415 (426) P.C.; Palaniammal v. Muthuvenkatachala, 33 M.L.J. 759: 43 I.C. 833.

(4) Parsotam v. Jagannath, 41 A. 361.

(5) Rupan Rai v. Subh Karan, 41 A. 207 (210).

(6) Bala Bux v. Rukmabai, 30 C. 725 (736) P.C.; Jatti v. Banwari Lall, 4 L. 350 P.C. Balkrishna v. Ram Krishna, 53 A. 300 P.C.

(7) Balkrishna v. Ramkrishna, 53 A. 300 P.C.; following Palani v. Muthuvenkatachalla, 48 M. 254 P.C.

(8) Ram Pershad v. Lakhpati, 30 C. 231.

(9) Sheodan v. Bal Karan, 43 A. 193.

majority. The executors did as they were directed. Properties were divided into three shares—one of which was allotted to the eldest son and two to the other two sons. The deed of separation provided that if any property was left undivided it should be divided into three shares by the three parties, and that in future the parties should have no connection in respect of property except relationship by blood. It was held that these provisions effected a severance in interest as between the sons of the second wife also, though their property was kept together without any division.[1] It is quite competent to the members of a joint family to have a completely divided status even though the division of the properties by metes and bounds is actually effected only in respect of certain items of property.[2]

Effect of Minor's Suit.

1475. It being now settled that the mere filing of a suit for partition amounts to the unequivocal declaration of intention which law regards as a sufficient partition in law,[3] the question arises whether the same rule would hold good where the plaintiff is a minor. On this subject two views are possible and both have received support. One is that the minor is no exception to the rule since he makes his declaration through his next friend[4] and the other is that since the partition of his share is discretionary with the court, there can be no partition till the court uses its discretion in his favour.[5] But this view ignores the fact that partition may be effected out of court, and the minor suffers from no impediment of procedure if he exercises his election through his qualified mouth-piece.

The fact that a coparcener is a minor does not prevent the rest of the major coparceners from effecting a partition.[6] And even as regards a declaration, it has been held that where the other coparcener is a minor, it may be communicated to his natural guardian, and in his absence, to his de facto guardian,[7] who would represent him in a partition suit.[8]

1476. Effect of an Award.—An award is equivalent to a judgment whether it has passed into a decree or not. It is binding upon the parties.[9] In cases where it directs partition to be effected it dissolves the joint family and from the moment of its date, it severs their joint interests.[10] Of course, where the award directs a repartition, parties are entitled to it.[11]

1477. Dayabhag Law Distinguished.—The rule of law stated in the clause is stated to be inapplicable to a Dayabhag family, "because although

(1) Komalambal v. Krishnasamy, 2 M.W.N. 310: 10 I.C. 385.

(2) Segu v. Segu, 2 M.W.N. 467: 12 I.C. 704.

(3) Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain, 35 A. 80 P.C.; Sundararajam v. Arunachalam, 39 M. 136 (159) F.B.; Venjapuri v. Panchamuthu, 35 M.L.J. 609: 45 I.C. 621.

(4) Krishnaswami v. Pulukarappa, 48 M. 465 followed in Sri Ranga v. Srinivasa, 50 M. 866; Ram Narain v. Makhna, (1935) A. 875; Atul Krishna v. Nandanji, (1935) Pat. 275 (Per Agarwala, J., pp. 287, 288) F.B. Krishna Lal v. Nandeshwar, (1918) Pat. 91: 4 Pat. L.J. 381: 44 I.C. 146.

(5) Ganapathy v. Subramanyam, 52 M. 845; Chelimi v. Subhamma, 41 M. 442 (445), followed in Lalta Prasad v. Mahadeoji, 42 A. 461 F.B.; Ram Narain v. Makhna, (1935) A. 875; Chhota Bhai v. Dadabhai, 36 B.L.R. 738; Hari Singh v. Pritam Singh, (1936) L. 504.

(6) Parbati v. Nannihal Singh, 31 A. 412 P.C.; Bhagwati v. Bhagwati, 35 A. 126; Bali v. Girji, 9 N.L.R. 111: 20 I.C. 563.

(7) Kali Prasad v. Ram Ratan, 5 O.L.J. 747: 49 I.C. 67.

(8) Kamepella v. Venkataswamy, 33 M. L.J. 746: 43 I.C. 130.

(9) Newaz Khan v. Alam Khan, 18 C. 414; Lal Das v. Lala, 11 Bom. L.R. 20; Bhaurao v. Radhabai, 33 B. 401 (403); Shantilal v. Munshilal, 56 B. 595.

(10) Bhaurao v. Radhabai, 33 B. 401 (403, 404).

(11) Duri v. Jadpatri, 33 M. 246.

as regards the enjoyment of the family property there is no difference between a Dayabhag joint family and a Mitakshara joint family, there is this substantial difference between the two, that in the latter case, the coparceners hold as joint tenants, while in the former, they hold as tenants-in-common. The ascertainment of the shares in the one case affords no indication of an intention to destroy the unity of the family, because such shares are already determined by the law. In the other case, however, the definition of such shares would afford a very strong indication of partition, and would ordinarily amount to partition, unless the strongest proof was afforded of an intention to remain united in estate or to become reunited. It may be further pointed out that in the case of a Dayabhag family, even the division of income for the convenience of the different members would not, in the absence of intention, amount to the division of the family."[1] There is, however, no distinction in principle between the two schools. The question is one of intention in both cases and it is for the court to decide whether conduct in a given case is a sufficiently unequivocal expression of an intention to separate.

178. No writing is required to effect partition,[2] which may be orally made provided that if it relates to immovable property[3] it must be accompanied by change of possession,[4] and if it is reduced to writing, which purports or operates to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title, or interest, whether vested or contingent, of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards, to or in immovable property, it must be stamped and registered.[5]

Form.

Illustrations.

(a) A and B divide their property in 1918. Next year A desiring to mortgage his share to C, C demands evidence of his separation. A and B reduce it to writing. The writing, though it relates to immovable property over Rs. 100 in value, is not compulsorily registrable because it is a written memorandum of a past partition.

(b) A and B having a valuable estate agree to divide it by exchanging lists of the properties which fall to the share of each party. The lists require registration, if they were intended to evidence partition.[6]

(c) A and B appoint an arbitrator who delivers an award detailing the division of property. A and B both sign it in token of their acceptance. The award is converted into partition deed and must be registered if it affects land over Rs. 100 in value.

1478. Analogous Law.—The Transfer of Property Act provides that certain transfers therein mentioned should be in writing, but partition is not a transfer of any rights but is merely a change in the enjoyment of property. It is not an exchange,[7] and as such, the Transfer of Property Act does not affect a partition and there is no other statute which prescribes the necessity of writing. The Registration Act, however, provides for the compulsory registration of all documents which purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish any right, title or interest, whether vested or contingent, of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards to or in immovable property.[8] As a deed of partition is one such

(1) Bata Krishna v. Gopal, 5 C.L.J. 417 (422).

(2) Sumera v. Mormuket, (1935) A. 632.

(3) As distinct from partition of rights as to which see S. 177 (2).

(4) Kishan Lal v. Lachmichand, (1937) A. 456 (460).

(5) S. 17, Registration Act, XVI of 1908.

(6) Ganpat v. Supdu, 32 B. 509; Sundaramma v. Kamakatiah. 26 I.C. (M.) 514. In Nihalchand v. Sasson, (1912) P. L.R. 229: 15 I.C. 28: Mahomed v. Mahomed, (1917) P.R. 33: 38 I.C. 387, the lists were memoranda of a previously completed partition, and so their registration was considered unnecessary.

(7) Satya v. Satya, 10 C.L.J. 503: 31 C. 247.

(8) S. 17, Registration Act XVI of 1908.

document, it follows that if it purports or operates as such, it must be registered.[1]

"Purport" to be a Partition-Deed.

1479. The question then arises: what documents purport or operate to be a deed of partition? A document "purporting" to be a partition-deed must be executed as such. Its formality and language must conform to such deed, though it may fail of its effect. Such a document may recite an accomplished fact and be a mere written memorial of the past. It would not then require registration.[2] Then, again, a deed may operate as a partition, though in form it may be a will, agreement or award or a mere receipt, in all of which cases, if it creates a definite change of legal relation to the property of the person executing it, then it would be compulsorily registrable."[3] So where two coparceners by agreement appointed a sole arbitrator to effect partition of their joint ancestral property, and consented that the partition be effected by the arbitrator, by taking the bids of the parties for the property that would be accepted, and the award was thereon made and written upon the back of the said agreement, which was not registered, it was held that the document was intended to be and was regarded by the parties as an instrument, declaring rights over immovable property, and was consequently, compulsorily registrable.[4]

1480. A document may declare a right, though it may not be final, and parties may contemplate the reduction of its terms into another document.[5] So again, it is immaterial that the document is an award if it is countersigned by the parties in token of their acceptance of its terms which makes it their own contract.[6] So a document which, after reciting the allotment of lands, contained an agreement to act accordingly was held to be compulsorily registrable because it related to a partition transaction completed by the agreement contained therein.[7]

1481. Where a document recites a past partition and completes it by partitioning the remaining property, it would be compulsorily registrable if the property presently partitioned under it is of Rs. 100 or more in value.[8]

1482. Where a partition deed deals with property both movable and immovable, the fact that it is not registered cannot affect any immovable property comprised therein nor can the deed be received as evidence "of any transaction affecting such property."[9] This phrase is ambiguous and might either mean that it shall not be evidence of the partition so as to affect the immovable property therein mentioned which seems to be the meaning,[10] or that it is not evidence of the partition at all, because the deed affects immovable property even as regards the movable property,[11] or because the deed cannot be held partially admissible. The

(1) The contrary held in Nem Roy v. Laimun, 25 W.R. 376, is not good law. But a mere draft deed of partition is not compulsorily registrable—Ib., 378.

(2) Sakharam v. Madan, 5 B. 232; Vishnu v. Govind, (1895) 3 B.P.J. 257; Gangod v. Sham Gir, (1905) P.L.R. 33; Badhawa v. Hira, (1884) P.R. 30.

(3) Sakharam v. Madan, 5 B. 232; Anandrao v. Joti, 24 B. 615.

(4) Azimat Singh v. Kalwant Singh, (1906) P.R. 71.

(5) Lakshmamma v. Kameswara, 13 M. 281.

(6) Amarsi v. Dayal, 9 B. 50; Rattanchand v. Ghasita, (1900) P.L.R. 459.

(7) Ramachandra v. Dinkar, 2 Bom L. R. 800.

(8) Kachubai v. Krishnabai, 2 B. 635.

(9) S. 49, Registration Act.

(10) Thandavan v. Valliamma, 15 M. 235.

(11) Bua v. Gunga, (1906) P.L.R. 119; Sarbachand v. Chandsingh, (1877) P.R. 84.

transaction being one and indivisible, it must stand or fall together, it being presumed that the division of the movables was not made without division of the immovables.[1] But it is submitted that a document may be admissible without being operative.

The documents executed in consequence of partition such as mutual releases would, of course, require to be registered.[2]

1483. Effect of Non-registration.—It is provided in S. 49 of the Registration Act that "no document required by S. 17 to be registered shall, if not registered, affect any immovable property comprised therein or be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property."

Now, since the fact of separation is something different from the allotment of shares, it follows that the existence of an unregistered partition-deed is no impediment to the proof of the existence of a particular status. So where the question was whether a particular property claimed by the plaintiff to be joint family property was, at the date of suit, joint or separate and there was evidence that there was a partition in the family, which was recorded in an unregistered partition-deed, it was held that, though the terms of the partition could not be proved by parol, there was nothing to prevent the parties from proving aliunde the fact of separation.[3]

179. (1) The father of a joint family has the power to divide the family and its property, whether ancestral or self acquired, at any time during his life without the consent of his sons, and if he makes a division, it has the effect not only of separating him from his sons, but also the sons inter se[4] provided the partition was bona fide and not unfair.[5]

(2) The father's right of division of ancestral property is personal and cannot be exercised by will.[6]

1484. Analogous Law.—The relevant texts on the subject of this section are set out below :—

Manu.—"Either let them thus live together, or if they desire separately to perform religious rites, let them live apart; since religious duties are multiplied in separate houses, their separation is therefore legal and even laudable."[7]

Yadnavalkya.—"When the father makes a partition, let him separate his sons from himself at his pleasure and either dismiss the eldest with the best share, or if he chooses, all may be given equal shares."[8]

Mitakshara.—"If the father be alive, and separate from the grandfather, or if he have no brothers, a partition of the grandfather's estate with the grandson would not take place; since it has been directed, that shares shall be allotted in right of the father, if he be deceased: or admitting partition to take place, it would be made according to the pleasure of the father, like a distribution of his own acquisitions; to obviate this doubt the author[8] says: 'For the ownership of the father and son is the same in land, which was acquired by the grandfather, or in a corrody, or in chattels (which belonged to him).' "[9]

Ib.—"Supposing the father to be divided (from his coparceners) or to have no brothers, shall the estate, which has been inherited from the grandfather, not be divided at all with the grandson in that case, because it has been directed that shares shall be allotted in right of the father if he is deceased (and not otherwise); or, admitting partitions to take place (in that case), shall it be instituted by the choice of the father alone? In order to remove the two doubts, which might thus be enter-

(1) Dhondo v. Gopala, (1876) B.P. J. 123; Pool v. Secretary of State, (1886) P.R. 68; Deoki v. Kala, (1887) P.R. 76; Lakshmamma v. Kameshwara, 13 M. 281.

(2) Latchumammal v. Gangammal, 34 M. 72.

(3) Chhotalal v. Mahakore, 41 B. 466.

(4) Venkatapathi v. Venkata Narasimha, (1936) P.C. 264 (266).

(5) Shiv Dyal v. Ram Jiwaya, 12 L. 574; Kandasami v. Doraisami, 2 M. 317; Aiyavier v. Subramania, 40 I.C. (M.) 205; Nirman v. Fateh Bahadur, (1929) A. 963.

(6) Brijraj Singh v. Sheodan Singh, 35 A. 337 P.C.

(7) Manu, IX-111.

(8) Yad., II-122.

(9) Mit., I-V, § 5.

tained, the author says: 'For the ownership of father and son is the same in land, which was acquired by the grandfather, or in corrody, or in chattels (which belonged to him).' "[1]

Ib.—In such property, which was acquired by the paternal grandfather, through acceptance of gifts, or by conquest or other means (as commerce, agriculture, or service) the ownership of father and son is notorious; and therefore, partition does take place. For or because, the right is equal or alike, therefore, partition is not restricted to be made by the father's choice, nor has he a double share."[2]

Dayabhag (citing Manu).—"This text is an answer to the question, why partition among sons is not authorized, while their parents are living: namely, because they have not ownership at that time."[3]

Ib.—"Hence the text of Manu and the rest must be taken as showing that sons have not a right of ownership in the wealth of the living parents but in the estate of both when deceased."[4]

Ib.—"Thus there are two periods of partition: one, when the father's property ceases; the other by his choice while his right of property endures."[5]

Father's right to partition property at his pleasure.

1485. The right of partition originally belonged to the father. He could make a partition if he chose, but the sons had no right to demand partition. Such is the present law of Bengal which follows the Dayabhag in which the right of the son in the ancestral estate in the possession of his father is denied, his right to partition being admitted as arising only on his death.[6] On this subject, the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag are diametrically divergent, since the coparcenary interest of the Mitakshara son in his ancestral estate arises with his birth, while that of the Dayabhag son only arises on his father's death. It then follows that in Bengal while the father is alive, the son has no interest in the family property. Till then he is not its coparcener,[7] but is a mere dependent in his father's family and cannot claim a partition, or even maintenance out of the estate in his father's possession. But as soon as the father dies intestate, his right to partition against his brothers and nephews springs into being which he may enforce by partition. But so long as his father is alive, even the ascertainment and definement of his share would not amount to partition.[8]

1486. The father is vested under Hindu law with a power to make a partition of ancestral property without the consent of his sons,[9] though he cannot do so by a will[10] unless the disposition so made is accepted by the sons, in which case, it operates as a partition destroying their right of survivorship.[11] Where the father effects a general partition, it has not only the effect of separating him from the sons, but also the sons inter se.[12] Even where the actual allotment fails, the severance of

(1) Dr. Jolly's Tr. of Mit., I-V-5, correcting Colebrooke's Tr. as cited last, accepted as more accurate; per Sergeant, C.J., in Apaji v. Ramchandra, 16 B. 29 (35) F.B.

(2) Mit., I-V-§ 5.

(3) Dayabhag, I-I, § 15.

(4) Ib., I-I, § 18.

(5) Ib., I-I, § 38.

(6) Ib., I-I, 1, §§ 1-26.

(7) Ib., I-I, §§ 14, 18.

(8) Bata Krishna v. Gopal Krishna, (1906) 5 C.L.J. 417.

(9) Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain, 30 C. 738 P.C.; Kedar Nath v. Jai Narain, 40 C. 966 P.C.; 1 Str., H.L. 179; Kandasami v. Doraisami, 2 M. 317; Karuppannan v. Bulokam, 23 M. 16; Vishalakshi v. Sivaramien, 27 M. 577 F. B.; Rooplal v. Lakshmi, 29 M. 1; Marugappa v. Palaniyandi, 31 M.L.J. 147: 36 I.C. 507; Rangaswami v. Sundararajulu, 31 M.L.J. 472: 35 I.C. 52; Singa v. Venkataramanna, (1913) M.W.N. 1016: 23 I.C. 6; Ganpat v. Gopal, 23 B. 636.

(10) Ibid., Mit., I-II-7, applies both to ancestral and self-acquired property of the father; Nagalinga v. Subramania, 1 M.H.C.R. 77; Laljeet v. Rajcoomar, 20 W.R. 336.

(11) Jadunath v. Bhabuti, 33 I.C. (O.) 785 and cases cited in ft.-note (6) of p. 598.

(12) Venkatapathi v. Venkata Narasimha, (1936) P.C. 264 (266).

status may still remain.[1] As to the effect of a devise when it comes into competition with an adoption, the Bombay High Court has held that the father's will prevails and cannot be set aside by a son adopted by his widow.[2]

Persons entitled to partition.

180. The following persons are entitled to claim partition of joint property:—

(1) Adult coparceners not disqualified from inheritance.[3]

(2) Issue of disqualified coparceners who are not themselves disqualified from inheritance.[4]

(3) A Hindu widow, inheriting her husband's estate under the provisions of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937,[5] her widowed daughter-in-law and her widowed grand daughter-in-law.

(4) Minor coparcener, if the partition of his share would advance or protect his interest.[6]

(5) Coparcener's transferee acquiring a partible interest in the joint property.[7]

1487. Analogous Law.—Theoretically, every coparcener is entitled to demand a separation of his share, which is commended by the text-writers, though a text of the Mitakshara,[8] has been the subject of a narrow construction by the Bombay High Court.[9]

1488. Who May Claim Partition?—Generally speaking, all coparceners are entitled to claim partition. But this rule is subject to three exceptions, two of which are textual and the third is due to cases. The texts declare a person who is disqualified to inherit, as equally incompetent to take a share. Such persons were those born deaf, dumb, or blind[10] or without limb or organ, such as those born idiots,[11] and eunuchs, or without leg, nose or tongue.[12] But most of these disabilities have now been removed by the legislature.[13]

Cl. (1). Adult coparceners.

1489. An heir disqualified from inheritance is equally disqualified to enforce or take a share in a partition, but the disqualification is personal while it lasts. If then a coparcener was excluded from participation by reason of his disqualification, its subsequent removal would entitle him to his share which he may claim from his

Cl. (2). Disqualified heir and his issue.

---

(1) Venkateshwara v. Mankayammal, (1935) M. 775.
(2) Shivappa v. Rudrava, 57 B. 1 (17, 18, 37-39).
(3) See §§ 1488, 1489.
(4) See S. 307.
(5) Act XVIII of 1937, printed in the App.
(6) Damodar v. Senabutty, 8 C. 537, (540, 541); Swamiyar v. Chhokalingam, 1 M. H.C.R. 105; Kamakshi v. Chidambara, 3 M.H.C.R. 94; Thangam v. Suppa, 12 M. 401 (404); Govind v. Moro, (1875) B.P.J. 261; Mahadev v. Lakshman, 19 B. 99 (104).
(7) See S. 1497 Post.
(8) Mit. I-V-5, cited under S. 179 § 1484.
(9) Apaji v. Ramachandra, 16 B. 29 F.B. Jivabhai v. Vadilal, 7 Bom. L.R. 232; Bhupal v. Tavanappa, 46 B. 435 (437).
(10) Mohesh Chunder v. Chunder Mohun, 14 B.L.R. 273; Charu Chunder v. Nobo Sundari, 18 C. 327; Murarji v. Parbati Bai, 1 B. 177; Hirasingh v. Gunga, 6 A. 332 P.C.
(11) Surti v. Narsindas, 12 A. 530; Ranbijai v. Jagat Pal, 18 C. 111; Hotchand v. Manganmal, 8 S.L.R. 279: 29 I.C. 42.
(12) Venkata v. Purushottam, 26 M. 133.
(13) Act XII of 1928.

quondam coparceners.[1] On the other hand, if his disability was not congenital, then his interest which became vested in him on his birth could not be divested by his subsequent disability. So a coparcener who became a lunatic subsequent to his birth can, during his lunacy, maintain a suit for partition of his share in the joint property. He has vested rights in such property by birth, which are not divested by his subsequent lunacy.[2] It will be seen when discussing the laws of inheritance (S. 307), that a disqualification from inheritance is a personal disqualification which only affects the person disqualified and not his heirs; from which it follows that the son, grandson or great-grandson of such person if not disqualified, is competent to claim partition. It is immaterial if he was born after the death of his disqualified ancestor.[3] Even if he was born after partition, he will divest those in whom the estate has vested before his birth.

The question whether a person can enforce a partition against his grandfather during his father's lifetime was at one time a subject of judicial conflcit,[4] now settled by the Privy Council, who have upheld the inherent right of the son, the grandson and the great grandson to partition.[5]

Illegitimate Son.

1490. Since only coparceners are entitled to enforce partition the question whether an illegitimate son possesses that right depends upon his right in the family. It is settled that the illegitimate sons of the three regenerate castes are entitled to nothing beyond maintenance "if they be docile."[6] And in the case of a Shudra, it is now settled that an illegitimate son has the status of a son and is a member of the family and that the share ance.[7] He can, therefore, enforce partition as against his brothers,[8] though he has no right of partition against his father.

Adopted Son.

1491. It has already been stated that an adopted son is as regards his rights indistinguishable from an auras son though the quantum of interest is reduced in competition with him (S. 63).

The adopted son of a son, when an exclusive heir, succeeds to his grandfather's estate like a natural grandson. But in competition between the son and the adopted son of a predeceased natural son, the grandson by

(1) Deo Kishen v. Budh Prakash, 5 A. 509 F.B.; Tirbeni v. Mhd. Umar, 28 A. 247; Moolchand v. Chata Devi, I.L.R. (1937) A. 605 F.B.; Hotchand v. Manghanmal, 8 S.L.R. 279: 29 I.C. 42; contra in Ram Sahyee v. Laljee, 8 C. 149; Ram Soonder v. Ram Sahyee, 8 C. 919 dissented from.

(2) Gautam, XXVIII-42-43; 2 S.B.E. 301: "The male offspring of an idiot receives his father's share." To the same effect, Narad, XIII-22; Vishnu, XV-32-35; 7 S.B.E. 64; Yad. II-140-142 (Mandlik), 223; Smiriti—Ch. V-3; Saraswati Vilas, V-148 (Foulkes' Tr.) 31; Dilraj Kuari v. Rikheswar, 13 Pat. 712.

(3) Ibid.

(4) See Hindu Code (3rd Ed.), §§ 1757, 1760, pp. 879-881.

(5) Masitullah v. Damodar, 48 A. 518 P.C.

(6) Mit., I-XII-3; Dayabhag, IX-28; Mayukh, IV-29-31; Chouturya v. Sabub Purhalad, 7 M.I.A. 18; Gajapathi v. Gajapathi, 2 M.H.C.R. 369, reversed on a different point 13 M.I.A. 497; Roshan v. Balwant Singh, 22 A. 191 P.C.; Packiriswami v. Doraswamy, 9 R. 266.

(7) Vellaiyappa v. Natarajan, 55 M. 1 (15) P.C.

(8) Sadu v. Baiza, 4 B. 37 (44, 45), followed in Jogendro v. Nityanund, 11 C. 702 (714); Jogendra v. Nityanund, 18 C. 151 (155) P.C.; Ramasaran v. Tekchand, 28 C. 104 (204); Parash Ram v. Sobha Ram, (1878) C.P.S.C. Pt. No. 32; Shcoraj v. Rambax, (1883) C.P.S.C. No. 8.

adoption does not take the share of his father, but only the share which his father would have taken if he had himself been an adopted son [1] that is to say, on a partition between an adopted and a subsequently born auras son, the former takes a reduced share; otherwise they possess equal rights.[2] And even on partition the rule only applies to the twice born, and not to a Shudra in whose case the two share equally[3] (S. 63). Where a coparcener dies and his widow makes an adoption after partition of the property by the surviving coparceners the adopted son would be entitled to call upon them to make over to him a portion of the wealth equal to that which would have been taken by his father.[4] It was held by the Privy Council in a case decided upon the following facts: An impartible zamindari, the property of two undivided brothers, was in the possession of the elder brother. On his death, leaving a widow and no male issue, the younger brother became entitled by survivorship to the entire estate. The widow made a valid adoption to her husband and it was held that the adopted son was entitled to possession of the zamindari.[5]

Clause (4).

1492. Again, a minor coparcener is not, as of right, entitled to claim partition. This rule is based on no text, but is entirely the outcome of cases. His right to demand partition is conditional upon its being to his advantage, the view of law being that his interests are safe in a joint family and it is only when that presumption is rebutted by any special reason assigned to the contrary that he is allowed to sue for partition as of right. The rule is as previously observed, the outcome of decided cases in which it is laid down that a minor cannot leave his family unless it will be to his own advantage,[6] either by protecting or advancing his interest. But once such a suit is instituted it does not abate on the plaintiff's death.[7]

1493. His right to partition then depends upon the questions of necessity and benefit to him and his estate. Necessity for partition may arise if the manager is guilty or malversation,[8] or waste, or is hostile to the minor, denies his title or declares himself as holding adversely to him. Such was the case of the illegitimate son of a Shudra father who sued his father's son for a partition of his share, which the court decreed because the defendants has denied his title to any property.[9] It may be that though jointness may not prejudice the minor and yet partition may benefit him. In that case, partition cannot be refused.[10] On the other hand, it cannot be decreed upon grounds apprehended but not proved.[11]

---

(1) Dat. Ch., V-25.

(2) Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 P.C.; Pratap Singh v. Agar Singh, 43 B. 778 (792) P.C.

(3) Arumilli v. Arumilli, 44 M. 656 P.C.

(4) Sri Raghunadha v. Sri Brozo, 1 M. 69 P.C.; explained in Krishna v. Sami, 9 M. 64 (78) F.B.

(5) Sri Raghunadha v. Sri Brozo, 1 M. 69 P.C.

(6) Damodar v. Senabutty, 8 C. 537 (540, 541); Swamiyar v. Chhokalingam, 1 M.H.C.R. 105; Kamakshi v. Chidambara, 3 M.H.C.R. 94; Thangam v. Suppa, 12 M. 401 (404); Govind v. Moro, (1875) B.P.J. 261; Mahadev v. Lakshman, 19 B. 99 (104).

(7) Rangasayi v. Nagarathnamma, 57 M. 95 F.B.

(8) Swamiyar v. Chhokalingam, 1 M. H.C.R. 105; Mahadev v. Lakshman, 19 B. 99 (104); Bhola Nath v. Ghasi Ram, 29 A. 373.

(9) Thangam v. Suppa, 12 M. 401 (404).

(10) Bhola Nath v. Ghasi Ram, 29 A. 373.

(11) Bachoo v. Mankorebai, 21 B. 51 (60); O.A. 31 B. 373 (379) P.C.

1494. The fact that the coparcenary comprises some minors is no obstacle to a partition.[1] The interest of the minor would, of course, be protected by his natural guardian, and in his absence, by his de facto guardian.[2] But though a minor is not represented in the suit, he would be bound by a partition if it does not prejudice his interest.[3] On coming of age, the partition of his non-age binds him, unless he can show that it was a fraud upon his rights, or that it was made to his conscious prejudice. The mere fact that it was unequal would not by itself vitiate the partition arrangement.

The minor's claim for partition must be distinguished from a partition in which a minor's share is involved.

1495. After-born Son.—Under Hindu Law, a child is presumed to come into existence from the moment of its conception. Consequently, where partition is effected while a co-parcener was in the womb, on his birth he becomes entitled to a share which he may claim by reopening the partition.[4] (S. 197.) But if the partition was completed before his conception he has no right against his separated brothers. So where the father of three sons, two of whom were minors made a partition giving his eldest son a third of the estate, retaining the other two-third himself on behalf of his two younger sons by his younger wife and five years after, another son was born to him by her, who sued the father and his three sons by the senior wife for a general partition claiming a fourth share of the entire estate, the court rejected his claim against the separated son adding: "The general rule of Hindu Law, as expounded by the Mitakshara, Mayuk and the Smriti-Chandrika is that a son born after partition has no claim on the wealth of his separated brothers. He has a preferential claim on the wealth of his parents. He can have a share of it with those brothers who lived in union with the father or were reunited with him. The separated brothers have no claim over this distributed parental share. A partition is limited to the interests of the person demanding it, and has no enforced general operation against those who desire to live in union."

"The somewhat vague texts of Vishnu and Yadnyavalkya which direct separated brothers to give a share to an after-born son, apply to sons who have no provision made for them and have further been explained by commentators as applicable only to the case of posthumous sons. In the present case, there has been no partition between the brothers. The father only cut off one of his sons with a separate provision, and retained the rest of the property in his own charge and management for the sons of his younger wife. All branches of the family gave effect to this understanding for twelve years. His claim can only be made against respondents Nos. 2 and 3 who lived with their father in union and with whom he himself has been all along living as a member of a joint family."[5]

1496. This case then establishes the rule that where the father separates only some of his sons, remaining joint with the rest of his family, an after-born son must look to this family for his share. He cannot make any claim against his separated kinsmen, unless his separa-

(1) Balkishen v. Ram Narain, 30 C. 738 (752) P.C.; Kawal Nain v. Budh Singh, 39 A. 496 P.C.; Balkrishna v. Ram Krishna, 53 A. 300 P.C.; Dnyaneshwar v. Anant, 60 B. 736.

(2) Nallappa v. Balammal, 2 M.H.C.R. 182.

(3) Ajoodhya v. Manohar, 3 Pat. L.W. 366: 40 I.C. 131.

(4) Shivaji v. Vasant Rao, 33 B. 267.

(5) Per Ranade, J., in Ganpat v. Gopal Rao, 23 B. 636 (643).

tion was a fraud on his right. The case is again not different even where there has been a general partition between the father and his sons, provided the father takes his legitimate share. The after-born son cannot then enforce a re-partition of the whole estate but must take his share from his father's allotment. But he is entitled to reopen partition if his father has reserved no share for himself. S. 197 (2).

Clause (5).

1497. Coparcener's Transferee.—The right of the coparcener's transferee to call for a general partition has already been the subject of extended discussion (§§ 1116-1119). The purchaser of a coparcenary interest in the joint property is entitled to sue the other coparceners for partition, in which he is entitled to demand that the property which he had purchased as belonging to his vendor should, if possible, be given to him as his share.[1] (S. 127). But since a stranger cannot be permitted to reside in a portion of the family dwelling house, the purchaser is not entitled to a division in specie, but may be compelled to sell his share to the other coparceners.[2] And he cannot recover past profits before the suit any more than his assignor could have, if he had joined in the suit for partition.[3]

Clause 2.

1498. The widow's right of partition is statutory and will be found discussed in the Appendix where the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937 will be found printed and commented upon.

1499. Dayabhag Family.—It has already been seen that the sons and grandsons in a Dayabhag family are not coparceners, but mere dependents with no right to partition or even maintenance against their father and grandfather, in whom the estate vests absolutely, and with full power of disposal by an alienation inter vivos or devise, from which it follows that it is open to the father to partition his property equally or unequally among his sons and he is then enjoined to allot to each of his childless wives a share equal to a son.[4] But she cannot initiate a partition among the sons,[5] and must make allowance for any property she may have received from her husband.[6] She is only entitled to a share on a general partition, and not when a partition of only one item of property takes place at the instance of a stranger,[7] and then only when it is completed.[8] Where two or more widows jointly succeed to their husband they possess a right of partition inter se.[9] (See S. 181.)

Co-widow's right to partition.

181. (1) A co-widow is entitled to the partition of her life-interest in her husband's estate.[10]

---

(1) Pandurang v. Bhaskar, 11 B.H.C. R. 72; Udaram v. Ramu, ib., 76; Mahabalaya v. Timaya, 12 B.H.C.R. 138; Dhulabhai v. Lala, 23 Bom. L.R. 777; Raghoonath v. Luckhun, 18 W.R. 23: Lochun v. Nemdharee, 20 W.R. 170; Bahoo Lall v. Juma, 22 W.R. 116; Annad v. Prankishto, 3 B.L.R. (O.C.) 14; Janoki v. Mothuranath, 9 C. 580; Bepin Bihari v. Lall Mohun, 12 C. 209; Vanjapuri, v. Panchamuthu, 35 M.L.J. 609: 45 I.C. 62; Panon v. Goma, 43 B. 472. If of course, the transfer is not colourable—Ramkrishna v. Parmeshwar, (1935) P.C. 92.

(2) S. 4, Partition Act (IV of 1893); (See app.); Vaman v. Vasudev, 23 B. 73; Trimbak v. Pandurang, 44 B. 621.

(3) Trimbak v. Pandurang, 44 B. 621.

(4) Dayabhag, III-II, § 32.

(5) Sorolab v. Bhoobun Mohun, 15 C. 292.

(6) Jodoonath v. Briji Nath, 12 B.L.R. 385; Jugomohun v. Saroda Moyee, 3 C. 149.

(7) Barahi v. Dekhamini, 20 C. 682.

(8) Sheo Dayal v. Judoonath, 9 W.R. 61; Tej Pratap v. Champa, 12 C. 296.

(9) Janoki Nath v. Mothura Nath, 9 C. 580 (581) F.B.

(10) Bhagwan Deen v. Myna Bai, 11 M.I.A. 487.

(2) But such partition is not absolute and does not, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, determine her coparcenary right of survivorship.[1]

1500. Analogous Law.—This section deals with the interest which the co-widows acquire in their husband's estate by inheritance. As such, they are, in the strict sense, coparceners[2] possessing the right of survivorship to each other (See S. 288). As such, partition being an incident of the coparcenary right of co-widows they should prima facie be entitled to claim the right of partition which they do. But since their interest in their husband's property is limited, it follows that partition in their case must be necessarily modified by the nature of their interest in their husband's inheritance and the reversionary rights of others who are entitled to see that their interest is not prejudiced by the destruction or waste committed by the life-holders or their transferees. Again, since the partition of the interest of co-widows is not allowable, it follows that partition can only affect their mode of possession and enjoyment and cannot alter their title. In other words, the partition to which the co-widows are entitled is the partition merely of their life-estate which is their right to possession and enjoyment,[3] and this right belongs to all female heirs such as daughters[4] inheriting to their father.[5] Neither co-widows nor daughters can by their alienation alter the character of their qualified estate so far as concerns the right of survivorship or the rights of reversioners, but they may alienate their interests in the property or have that interest taken and sold in execution of a decree against them. They may also, subject to the same condition, demand a partition of the property. When their interests are transferred, it is obviously desirable that the transferees should be able to partition their transferor's interest.

1501. Widows have the right to demand partition of their husband's inheritance. The wife has no right of partition against her husband.[6] But as his heir she is entitled to the separation of her share in her inheritance against her co-widow.[7] Even as against her husband's co-parceners she is entitled to demand partition if his share was ascertained during his lifetime though he died before it could be served in specie.[8] Now she is entitled to demand partition under the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937.

1502. Under the Mitakshara, as well as both under Mayukh and the Dayabhag,[9] it is the right of each of the co-widows to enjoy her deceased husband's property by partition inter se. She can assign her right to any one she chooses. If he has already obtained the share by partition, she can alienate her interest in that share. But the assignment or alienation cannot take effect or have validity beyond her life-time. It

---

(1) Gajapathy v. Gajapathy, 1 M. 290 (299, 300) P.C.

(2) Bhagwan Deen v. Myna Bai, 11 M. I.A. 487; Gajapathi v. Gajapathi, 1 M. 290 (299) P.C.; Kola v. Muthayammal, 21 M.L.J. 977: 12 I.C. 766; contra in Sellam v. Chinnamal, 24 M. 441 (443) is erroneous.

(3) Bhagwan Deen v. Myna Bai, 11 M. I.A. 487; Gajapathi v. Gajapathi, 1 M. 291 P.C., Sundar v. Parbati, 12 A. 51 P.C.; Durga Dat v. Gita, 33 A. 443; Chittar Kunwar v. Gaura, 34 A. 189.

(4) Kanni Ammal v. Ammakannu, 23 M. 504.

(5) Ibid., p. 504.

(6) Sunder Bahu v. Monhur, 10 C.L.R. 79.

(7) Mahadeo v. Daokoer, 9 C. 53; Diltor Koer v. Harku, (1917) Pat. 225: 41 I.C. 631; Govind v. Chandra, 12 N.L.R. 100: 34 I.C. 675, distinguishing Chander v. Murat Singh, 7 C.P.L.R. 153.

(8) Ram Joshi v. Lakshmi Bai, 1 B. H.C.R. 189.

(9) Padmamani v. Jagadamba, 6 B.L.R. 134; Janki Nath v. Mothura, 9 C. 580.

is good so long as she lives. On her death, her interest in property ceases and the share goes to the surviving co-widow or co-widows as the case may be.[1] A co-widow is entitled to partition even if she has no more than a possessory title. So where on the death of their husband, his two co-widows took possession of the estate left by him, the deceased had before his death, adopted a boy, to whom also he bequeathed his property by will. The boy, however, died soon after the testator. The High Court dismissed the suit, holding that the widows could not enforce partition of their possessory title, but on appeal the Privy Council held that possessory title was sufficient to support a claim for partition.[2] The fact that after the death of her husband the widow was leading an immoral life is no ground for refusing her partition. As a matter of fact the court has no discretion in the matter.[3]

1503. But the partition to which co-widows are entitled is not an absolute partition destroying their right of survivorship to each other. As the Privy Council observed: "Two or more lawfully married wives take a joint estate for life in the husband's property, with rights of survivorship and equal beneficial enjoyment.[4] As to the mode of enjoyment, it has no doubt been decided,[5] that widows taking a joint interest in the inheritance of their husbands have no right to enforce an absolute partition of the joint estate between them."[6] Their Lordships then went to cite cases to shew that though they could not enforce an absolute partition, they could, nevertheless, obtain separate possession and enjoyment of their shares leaving the title to each share unaffected and that such qualified partition did not destroy their coparcenary right of survivorship.

The principle applicable to co-widows would apply equally to two or more sisters inheriting to their father.[7]

The donee of a co-widow may equally enforce the same right of partition which belonged to his donor.[8] But since this partition is only of the life estate, it should not be made so as to prejudice the rights of the reversioners who are entitled to inheritance, if the partition is prejudicial to their rights, as where it would lead to waste or otherwise be injurious to the corpus.

1504. While the quasi-partition to which co-widow's, daughters and other limited owners[9] are entitled does not destroy the coparcenary, there is nothing to prevent them by express agreement between themselves to put an end to their

Clause (2).

(1) Hari v. Vital, 31 B. 360.

(2) Sundar v. Parbati, 8 A. 1, reversed O.A. 12 A. 51 (56), following Armory v. Delamirie, 1 S.L.C. (6th Ed.) 313 (in which the finder of a jewel was held to possess such property as will enable him to keep it against all but the rightful owner and therefore to maintain an action of trover) and Asher v. Whitlock, L.R. 1 Q.B. 1 (in which possessory interest was held to be devisable).

(3) Sellam v. Chinnammal, 24 M. 441 (443). In this case it has been erroneously held that co-widows inherit as tenants-in-common. That they do not do so is clear from Gajapathi v. Gajapathi, 1 M. 290 (299) P.C.; Jijoyiamba v. Kamalakshi, 3 M.H.C.R. 424; Padmamani Jagadamba, 6 B.L.R. 134; Dalkoor v. Panbas, 8 C.W.N. 658.

(4) Jijoyiamba v. Kamalakshi, (the Tanjore cases), 3 M.H.C.R. 424 (452); Gajapathi v. Gajapathi, 1 M. 290 (299, 300) P.C.

(5) Jijoyiamba v. Kamalakshi, 3 M.H.C.R. 424 (452); Bhugwandeen v. Myna Bayi, 11 M.I.A. 487.

(6) Gajapathi v. Gajapathi, 1 M. 290 (299, 300) P.C.

(7) Balubai v. Tanu Bai, 10 N.L.R. 51: 24 I.C. 808; Kenni Ammal v. Ammakannu, 23 M. 504. See S. 288.

(8) Durga Dat v. Gita, 33 A. 443; Kailash v. Bitto, 15 O.C. 223: 16 I.C. 471.

(9) Kadungoth v. Kadungoth, 12 M.L.J. 301: 16 I.C. 433; Balubai v. Tanu, 10 N.L.R. 51: 24 I.C. 808.

right of survivorship.[1] But this again cannot prejudice the reversioner, who may intervene in a suit of the co-widows to safeguard his interest against the possible acts of waste by the widow, provided he can show reasonable grounds for apprehending it.[2] This may result in a relief to the reversioner by the grant of an injunction or an appointment of a Receiver.[3] And if after the partition, a Hindu widow abuses her estate, she may be similarly restrained by a bill quia timet or a suit for injunction.[4] Where two daughters, jointly succeeding to their father's estate, effect an absolute partition and one of them dies, the reversioner cannot defeat survivorship by suing for possession of the share of the deceased. In such case, the partition has the effect of relinquishment of her estate, and all that the reversioner may claim is a declaration of the alienation as affecting his interest.[5]

1505. If two widows or two daughters, taking jointly the estate of their husband or father, made an agreement for separate possession and enjoyment, the arrangement cannot ordinarily deprive the survivor of the right to the whole estate or enable the ladies to confer a title on a third party which will not terminate at the latest with the life of that survivor. There can be no relinquishment by a Hindu female heiress of anything less than the entire interest.[6] Alinees from a co-widow may likewise obtain a decree for partition which will have effect during the lifetime of their alienor.[7]

As to the right of a co-widow to charge her interest, and its effect upon the survivor, see S. 335, post.

Female shares on partition.

182. Subject to any local law or usage to the contrary, and in cases arising before the 14th April, 1937 when the Hindu Wowen's Right to Property Act came into force, the following female relations are each entitled to a share on partition:—

(1) On a partition between the father and his sons, or between the sons, their mother and their grandmother are, between them, entitled to a share which, with the stridhan received from their husband or the father-in-law, must equal a son's share.[8]

(2) And unmarried daughters and sisters are entitled to a quarter of the son's or the brother's share.[9]

---

(1) Ramakkal v. Ramasami, 22 M. 522; Sudalai v. Gomati, 23 M.L.J. 355: 16 I.C. 428; contra in Durga Dat v. Gita, 33 A. 443 (446); Chittab v. Goura, 34 A. 189; Baldeo v. Bhagawanti, 33 I.C. (A.) 259; Shyamadas v. Radhika, 22 C.W.N. 846: 47 I.C. 853; Dulhin Parbati v. Baij Nath, 14 Pat. 518.

(2) Durga Nath v. Chintamoni, 31 C. 214 (220); Soudaminey v. Jogeta Chunder, 2 C. 262; Janoki Nath v. Mothura, 9 C. 580; Bepin Bihari v. Lal Mohan, 12 C. 209; Kailasha v. Bitto, 15 O.C. 223: 16 I. C. 471.

(3) Soudamoney v. Jogesh Chunder, 2 C. 262; Janoki Nath v. Mothura, 9 C. 580, explained in Durga Nath v. Chintamoni, 31 C. 214 (221).

(4) Hurry Doss v. Rungunmoney, 2 Sevest 657; Hurry Nath v. Upoornath, 6 M.I.A. 433; Durga Nath v. Chintamoni, 31 C. 214 (221).

(5) Ammaniammal v. Periasami, 45 M. L.J. 2: 74 I.C. 58: (1924) M. 75.

(6) Shyamadas v. Radhika, 22 C.W.N. 846: 47 I.C. 853; Dulhin Parbati v. Baij Nath, 14 Pat. 518.

(7) Durga Dat v. Gita, 33 A. 443; Baldeo v. Bhagawanti, 33 I.C. (A.) 259.

(8) Yad., II-116, cited in Mit., I-II-8; Jodoonath v. Brojonath, 12 B.L.R. 385; Sumrun Thakoor v. Chunder, 8 C. 17 (19); Kishori Mohan v. Moni Mohan, 12 C. 165; Purna Chandra v. Sarojini, 31 C. 1065; Poorendra v. Hemangini, 36 C. 75 (84); Kanhaiya Lal v. Gaura, 47 A. 127; Radhakishan v. Harkishan, 98 I.C. (N.) 37: (1924) N. 55; Hashem Sab v. Basappa, 34 Bom.L.R. 1325.

(9) Manu, IX-V-118.

(3) On a partition between her sons, grandsons or great-grandsons, a widow is entitled to a share equal to that of her son.[1]

Exception.—The wife or the widow in Southern India is allotted no share.[2]

1506. Analogous Law.—The last section deals with persons who are entitled to claim, and, if necessary, enforce a partition of their share by suit. This section deals with the female members who are allotted a share on a partition being made, though they have no right to demand or enforce a partition and in cases, arising before the 14th April, 1937, since when the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, has come into force.

Their right is subject to local law and usage.

1507. The relevant texts on the subject[3] have since been superseded by the case-law on the subject.

The mother and grandmother is ordinarily entitled to a share equal to that of a son; but if she has received any stridhan or any other gift from her husband or father-in-law, it will reduce her share to that extent. This is in accordance with the texts[4] and is equally supported by judicial authority.[5] But no other property in her possession, as for example, the property she inherits as heir to her son, affects her right.[6]

On a partition between the sons, the mother is entitled to a share; but if she has received insurance money due on her husband's policy assigned to it, it must be credited against her claim for a share.[7]

1508. Female Sharers.—The share allotted to a female on partition is not in recognition of her inherent right, in which case she would have been a coparcener, but she is allotted a share from necessity arising from her marriage or maintenance. As such, neither the daughter, sister, wife or the mother can claim partition, though upon a coparcener claiming it, that right comes into existence and may be enforced like any other claim to partition, though it must await an actual partition by metes and bounds as distinct from a mere severance of status;[8] if, therefore, she dies bounds such partition, her heirs have no right to claim a share on her behalf, even if she dies after the peliminary decree but before it is made final.[9]

1509. Quantum of Share.—In order to determine the wife's or the mother's share, regard must be had to the right of unmarried daughters and sisters who are both entitled to one-fourth of the son's share.[10] Out

---

(1) Damoodar v. Senabutty, 8 C. 537.

(2) Subramania v. Arunachalam, 28 M. 1 (8).

(3) Cited in extenso in Hindu Code (3rd Ed.), § 1780, pp. 890, 891.

(4) Ib.

(5) Jodoonath v. Brojonath, 12 B.L.R. 385; Sumrun Thakoor v. Chunder, 8 C. 17 (19); Kishori Mohan v. Moni Mohan, 12 C. 165; Purna Chandra v. Sarojini, 31 C. 1065; Poorendra v. Hemangini, 36 C. 75 (84); Kanhaiya Lal v. Gaura, 47 A. 127; Radhakishan v. Harkishan, 98 I.C. (N.) 37: (1924) N. 55; Hushein Sab v. Basappa, 34 Bom. L.R. 1325.

(6) Jagomohan v. Sarodamayee, 3 C. 149 (based on the text in the Dayabhag, Ch. III, S. II, § 31, followed in Poorendra v. Hemangini, 36 C. 75 (84); Sarup Chand v. Pani, 19 O.C. 240: 37 I.C. 198.

(7) Shamdas v. Savitribai, (1937) S. 181.

(8) Pratapmull v. Dhanabati, 63 C. 691 (700, 701) P.C. overruling O.A., Dhanabati v. Pratapmull, 61 C. 1056, approving Sheo Dayal v. Jadoonath, 9 W. R. 61 (62, 63); Beti Kunwar v. Janki Kunwar, 33 A. 118; Raoji v. Anant, 42 B. 535; Jagabandh v. Rajendra, 34 C.L.J. 29; Bilaso v. Dina Nath, 3 A. 88 (90) F.B.

(9) Raoji v. Anant, 42 B. 535.

(10) Manu IX-118; 25 S.B.E. 733, Vishnu XVIII-34, 35; 48 S.B.E. 73; Yad. II-124 (Mandlik), p. 217 Brahspati XXV-64; 33 S.B.E. 379; Katyayan, cited in Vyavastha Dharpan (2nd Ed.) 498; Virmitrodaya I-II-21 (Golap Shastri's Tr.). (81-85) Dig. p. 109; Lochan v. Babai, 5 N.L.R. 161.

of the residue the son's share can only be ascertained by deducting therefrom his mother's share which must be equal to his own.

On a partition between sons by different mothers, when more than one mother is alive, the property has first to be divided into as many shares as there are sons, and then to allot each surviving mother equal to that of each of her sons out of the aggregate allotted to them,[1] where a man has more than one wife, say wives A and B, a son (c) by A and four sons by B. On a suit by A each of the eight persons would take an equal share including A and B.[2] Similarly, where a man has two sons by one wife (A) and a son (B) by a predeceased wife who sues him for partition, each of the five persons is entitled to a one-fifth share including the wife A.[3] In a partition between a son and a grandson, being the son of a deceased son, the mother is entitled to a share equal to that of each of her husband's son.[4] But in a partition between a woman's son's sons, her own sons being dead, she is entitled to a share equal to that of a son's son.[5]

1510. The term mother includes a step-mother[6] and the term "grandmother" and "great-grandmother" includes step relations of the same degree.[7]

The share to females is allotted by way of maintenance[8] and is consequently, liable to reduction to the extent of any stridhan or any other gift from their husbands or fathers-in-law[9] but no other property in their possession, as for example, the property they may have inherited as heir to their sons affects their right.[10]

The shares allotted to the female heirs, being in lieu of maintenance it follows that the property so obtained is not their stridhan, but on their death reverts to their sons or their heirs.[11]

The mother is entitled to her share on a partition between the sons and the purchaser of the interest of one or more of them[12] but in a parti-

(1) Kristo Bhabiney v. Asutosh, 13 C. 39.

(2) Dular Keori v. Dwarkanath, 32 C. 234.

(3) Jairam v. Nathu, 31 B. 54.

(4) Ram Peari v. Hari Dutt, (1933) A. 562; Babana v. Jagat Narain, 50 A. 532.

(5) Kanhaiya Lal v. Gaura, 47 A. 127; Vithal v. Prahlad, 39 B. 373.

(6) Vithal v. Prahlad, 39 B. 372, (381); Damodar v. Senabutt, 8 C. 537; Thakur Prasad v. Bhagabati, 1 C.L.J. 142 (144); Purna Chandra v. Sarojini, 31 C. 1065; Pratapsingh v. Dalip Singh, 52 A. 596; Mari v. Chinnammal, 8 M. 107 (123) F.B.; Subba v. Maula, 47 I.C. (Pat.) 204; Tegh Indar Singh v. Harnam Singh, 64 L. 457; Padamsing v. Sambransai, 22 N.L.R. 28: 94 I.C. 791: (1926) N. 291; Jairam v. Nathu, 31 Bom. 54 (59); Hosbanna v. Devanna, 48 B. 468; Damodar v. Uttamam, 17 B. 271 (286, 287); Har Narain v. Bishambhar, 38 A. 83; Sri Ram v. Harisharan, 9 Pat. 338; Suba Raut v. Maula, 47 I.C. (Pat.) 204; Bhashist v. Bindeswari, 97 I.C. 289: (1926) Pat. 537; Bhanrao v. Gangi, 9 N.L.R. 170: 95 I.C. 734: (1926) N. 453.

(7) Ib.; Peari v. Hari Dutt, (1933) A. 562; Sriram v. Hari Charan, 9 Pat. 338.

(8) Pratapmull v. Dhanabati, 63 C. 691 (700) P.C.; Jadoonath v. Brojonath, 12 B. L.R. 385; Sumru Thokoor v. Chunder, 8 C. 17 (19); Kishori Mohan v. Moni Mohan, 12 C. 165; Purna Chundra v. Sarojini, 31 C. 1065; Poorendra v. Hemangini, 36 C. 75 (84); Kanhaiya Lal v. Gaura, 47 A. 127; Radhakishan v. Harkishan, 98 I.C. (N.) 37: (1924) N. 55; Bilaso v. Dina Nath, 3 A. 88 F.B.; Beti Kuar v. Janki Kuar, 33 A. 118; per Macpherson, J., in Jodoonath v. Brojonath, 12 B.L.R. 386 (389, 390); Jugomohan v. Sarodamoyee, 3 C. 149; Kishori Mohan v. Moni Mohan, 12 C. 165; Jairam v. Nathu, 31 B. 54.

(9) Jugmohan v. Surdamayee, 3 A. 149, based on the text in the Dayabhag, Ch. III S. II, § 31, followed in Poorendra v. Hemangini, 36 C. 75 (84); Sarup Chand v. Pani, 19 O.C. 240: 37 I.C. 198.

(10) Sarola Dassi v. Bhuban Mohak, 15 C. 292; Sashi Bhusan v. Hari Narain, 48 C. 1059 (1066); Beti Kuar v. Janki Kuar, 33 A. 118; Raoji v. Anant, 42 B. 535; Manchharam v. Dattu, 44 B. 166.

(11) Gaya Prasad v. Girja Shankar, (1924) O. 360.

(12) Bilaso v. Dina Nath, 3 A. 88 (90) F.B.; Amrita Lall v. Manik Lall, 27 C. 551: Jogendra v. Fulkumari, 27 C. 77.

tion between her son and his sons, she is not entitled to any share under the Mitakshara law as administered both in Bombay[1] and Allahabad,[2] though under the Dayabhag[3] and the Mithila laws[4] she is.

1511. The mother under the Bengal law is entitled to the same share,[5] which on her death goes back to the sons or their heirs.[6] This is also the Mitakshara law.[7]

The term "son" in the case of Shudras includes both legitimate as well as illegitimate sons since they are both entitled to shares. And so amongst them a mother is entitled to a share when the property is divided between the legitimate as well as the illegitimate sons of the deceased.[8] and in a partition between brothers who are the sons of different mothers, the step-mother, even if she is sonless, gets a share equal to the brother;[9] but the mother's share is, as already observed, subject to dimunition to the extent of the stridhan received, from her husband or father-in-law (§ 1506). Of course, the share allotted to the mother and the step-mother is in lieu of maintenance so that on the death of one it does not enlarge the share of the other but devolves on the sons.[10]

1512. Grandmother.—The grandmother's right to the same share as the mother, in a partition between her sons and grandsons, has been admitted in several cases,[11] but the contrary has been held in Allahabad in a case of partition between the father and his sons,[12] the court refraining from expressing any opinion as to what would be her right on a partition between her grandsons on the death of the son, though it was inclined to the view that she would be entitled to a share. It was, however, said that during her son's own lifetime, the mother of the father should look to her own son for support and maintenance.[13] The view proceeds upon the literal reading of the Mitakshara text before cited[14] in which on a partition between the father and his sons only his "wives" are allotted a share.

1513. The Unmarried Daughter or Sister.—The texts all favour the rights of the daughter and the sister to share at partition and this has been recogniz-

Clause (2).

(1) Jamnabai v. Vasudeo, 54 B. 417.
(2) Sheo Narain v. Janki Prasad, 34 A. 505.
(3) Sibbosoondary v. Bussoomutty, 7 C. 191.
(4) Krishnalal v. Nandeshwar, 44 I.C. (Pat.) 146.
(5) Ganesh v. Jewesh, 31 C. 262 (271, 272) P.C.
(6) Sarola Dassi v. Bhuban Mobak, 15 C. 292; Sashi Bhushan v. Hari Narain, 48 C. 1059 (1066).
(7) Beti Kuar v. Janki Kuar, 33 A. 118; Raoji v. Anant, 42 B. 535; Manchharam v. Dattu, 44 B. 166.
(8) Manchharam v. Dattu, 44 B. 166.
(9) Dhanabati v. Protapmull, 61 C. 1056 P.C.; Padam Singh v. Subransai, 22 N.L. R. 28: 94 I.C. 791: (1926) N. 291.
(10) Gaya Prasad v. Girja Shanker, (1924) O. 360.
(11) Sibbosoondery v. Sussomuty, 7 C. 191, followed per Mitter, J., in Badri v. Bhugwat, 8 C. 649 (652); Purna Chandra v. Sarojini, 31 C. 1065; Mari v. Chinnammal, 8 M. 107 (123) F.B.; Vithal v. Prahalad, 39 B. 372; Kanhaiya v. Gaura, 47 A. 127.
(12) Sheo Narain v. Janaki Prasad, 34 A. 505 F.B.; following Radha v. Bachchaman, 3 A. 118. To the same effect Jamnabai v. Vasudeo, (1930) B. 302.
(13) Sheo Narain v. Janki Prasad, 34 A. 505 (509, 510) F.B.; Chummun v. Pranpat, 29 I.C. (A.) 166, following Radha v. Bachhaman, 3 A. 118, dissenting from Shibhsoondery v. Bussomutty, 7 C. 191, on the ground that it was a Dayabhag case; followed in Badri v. Bhagwat, 8 C. 649. To the same effect, Sheo Dayal v. Juddo Nath, 9 W.R. 61.
(14) I-ii-8.

ed in several cases,[1] and is the view of the text writers.[2] A Hindu Judge referring to the subject said: "The texts I have referred to all prescribe the rule in the case of a partition among brothers. They do not deal specially with a case where there is only one brother and one or more sisters. But looking to the spirit pervading them and the object they are meant to conserve, it is clear that what holds good in the former case must hold good in the latter as well. To hold the contrary would be to make the undoubted and well-recognized right of sisters depend on an accidental circumstance entirely lacking in relevancy to the question of her right as a member of a joint family.[3] But Viramitroday says that the one-fourth share allotted to the daughter relates only to a partition made on the death of the father; should the partition be made during the father's life-time, the daughters "get whatever the father gives, for there is no particular text on the point."[4]

1514. Local Usage.—It is said that the widow or mother in Southern India is in practice never allotted her share in a partition.[5] This view is maintained in the Smriti-Chandrika[6] the correctness of which is, however, disputed in the Madhaviya.[7] It has been held that the view of Nand Pandit that the right of a mother to a share is not a right of heritage but a right to a provision has become established law in the Madras Presidency.[8] In this view, account is to be taken of property which she has already received and if it is insufficient for her maintenance, an allotment is to be made to her so as to provide her with a sufficiency for her wants which allotment could never be in excess of a son's share, but which would be less than a son's share if the property was so large that a son's share would more than suffice for her need.[9]

Southern India.

Partial partition.

183. (1) Partition may be general or partial.[10]

(2) Partition is general where all members join in partitioning their joint property.

(3) It is partial when some of them separate, leaving the rest joint, or where all divide only some of their joint property.[11]

---

(1) Lalljeet v. Raj Coomar, 20 W.R. 336 (340); Damoodur v. Senabutty, 8 C. 537 (541), in which Mitter, J., allowed Rs. 1,124 of the estate valued at Rs. 3,000. As the members of the family were two widows, three son and a maiden daughter, the latter got one-fourth of what she would have received had she been a son; Lochan v. Babai, 5 N.L.R. 161 (168, 169), in which court allowed the fourth, following the text.

(2) 2 Strange H.L. 367, citing Sutherland and Colebrook, ib., p. 313; Jolly's Tagore Lectures, 103, 104.

(3) Lochan v. Babai, 5 N.L.R. 161 (169); Pagalia v. Vettor, 22 M.L.J. 321: 13 I.C. 475. In Ramasami v. Vengidusami, 22 M. 113 (114), the court noticed the conflict of views, but was inclined to support Vidnyaneshwar's text.

(4) Viramitrodaya, (Setlur) II-338.

(5) Mayne H. L., 478.

(6) Ch. IV, Ss. 9-17.

(7) Daya Vibhag, S. 22; cited in Mari v. Chinnammal, 8 M. 107 (123) F.B.

(8) Mari v. Chinnammal, 8 M. 107 (123) F.B.

(9) Smriti Ch., IV-9, 17; cited, with approval, in Mari v. Chinnammal, 8 M. 107 (123) F.B.

(10) Rewun Peirshad v. Radha, 4 M.I.A. 137 (168); Katama v. Raja of Shivaganga, 9 M.I.A. 543 (614); Chintaman v. Nowlukho, I.C. 153 (161) P.C.

(11) Aodjhya v. Mahadee, 14 C.W.N. 221: 3 I.C. 9.

(4) Partial partition cannot be made otherwise than by the agreement of parties, except where it is otherwise indispensable or would be equitable or convenient to the parties without prejudice to the rights of the coparcenary.[1]

(5) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing general provision, such partition may be permitted in the following cases:—

(i) Where partial partition is permitted by any other law;

(ii) Where different portions of the family property are situate in different districts;[2]

(iii) Where the portion excluded is impartible;[3]

(iv) Where the portion excluded has already been partitioned or is the subject of a family arrangement;

(v) Where the portion excluded is not in the possession of coparceners;[4]

(vi) Where the portion excluded is held jointly with a stranger who has no interest in the family partition;[5]

(vii) Where the defendant has no interest in the portion excluded;[6]

(viii) Where the property was omitted or excluded from a previous partition.[7]

Illustrations.

(a) A, B and C are three joint brothers. A decides to separate. He cannot compel both B and C to separate from each other.

(b) A, B and C jointly own properties, D and E. A claims partition of D. He cannot do so unless B and C agree.

1515. Analogous Law.—The several clauses in this section are supported by case law. Hindu Law does not contemplate a partial partition. It contemplates either a complete jointless or a complete severance of joint interest.[8] It has no place for an intermediate stage in which some

---

(1) E.g., at the instance of an alienee —Purushottam v. Atmaram, 23 A. 216; Iburamsa v. Thirunmalai, 34 M. 259 F. B.; Subba v. Aunatha, 23 M.L.J. 64: 14 I.C. 524; or by agreement—Appovier v. Rama, 11 M.I.A. 75; Ramalinga v. Narayana, 39 M. 587, O.A.: 45 M. 489 P.C.; Jogendra v. Jugobundhu, 14 C. 122; Venkayya v. Lakshmayya, 16 M. 98; Shiv v. Virappa, 24 B. 128; other circumstances justifying partial partition—Rajendra v. Brojendra, 37 C.L.J. 191: 77 I.C. 790: (1923) C. 501.

(2) Panchanun v. Shib Chunder, 14 C. 835; Ramacharya v. Anantcharya, 18 B. 389; Balaram v. Ramachandra, 22 B. 922; Abdul Karim v. Badruddeen, 28 M. 316.

(3) Parvathi v. Thirumalai, 10 M. 334; Mallikarjuna v. Durga Prasad, 24 M. 147 P.C.

(4) Narayan v. Pandurang, 12 B.H. C.R. 148; Krisayya v. Narasimham, 23 M. 608.

(5) Purshottam v. Atmaram, 23 B. 597; Jogendra v. Srish Chandra, 1 I.C. 110; Kailas v. Nityanand, 3 I.C. 21.

(6) Iburamsa v. Thiruvenkatasami, 34 M. 269 (276, 277), F.B.

(7) Jogendra v. Baladeb, 35 C. 961; Mukunda v. Jogesh Chandra, 20 C.W. N. 1276: 1 Pat.L.J. 393.

(8) Per curiam in Iburamsa v. Thiruvenkatasami, 24 M. 269 (270) F.B.; Subba Reddi v. Alagammal, 18 M.L.T. 545: 31 I.C. 674; Amrut v. Mukund, 5 N.L.R. 152: 4 I.C. 238; W. and B.H. L. 700; Sm. Chan., XIV-10.

persons and property remain joint while the rest separate.[1] But such a state is both practical and possible though it cannot be demanded as of right.[2] As West and Buhler observe: "Though partial division is of very frequent occurrence in practice, the law books do not contain any special rules on the subject."[3] The law of partial partition is then based upon general principles and actual decisions which will be presently considered.

Partial partition may, it is said, be demanded as of right by the alienee of a coparcenary interest who may either sue for the separation of his share in a general partition or only take proceedings to have it ascertained in partition.[4]

1516. Partial Partition.—It has already been stated that Hindu Law contemplates a complete partition. It does not contain any rules for a partial partition, which owes its recognition to general principles and the decided cases, which have always refused to make a partial partition at the instance of one coparcener against others; nor is the rule confined to coparcenary property. Even where the parties are only co-sharers or tenants-in-common, partition of certain of the items only has been ordinarily refused,[5] though if it could be effected without much inconvenience to other sharers, a partial partition has not been held to be absolutely barred.[6] But it is an exception and not the rule. As was observed in a case: "A member of a joint family cannot, any more than a partner, introduce a stranger into the community; he cannot for his own benefit alienate or deliver to a stranger a particular portion of the common property without winding up the concern; and his interest is, therefore, a right to a share of the general assets after the common liabilities have been discharged, and not a right to a share of any specific property of the family. It has, accordingly, been frequently held, that his remedy is a suit for the partition of the whole family property, and not of specific property."[7] But in such partition, the court will endeavour to marshal the property as, if possible, to ensure delivery to the alienee of the specific property acquired by him.[8]

When refused.

1517. The other view has been maintained by a Full Bench of the same court which while refusing a partial partition to a coparcener, permits it to a stranger alienee.[9] In so holding the court followed the

---

(1) Hari Das v. Pran Nath, 12 C. 566; Jogendra v. Jagabandhu, 14 C. 122.

(2) Iburamsa v. Thiruvenkatasami, 34 M. 269 (276, 277) F.B., following and explaining Hardi Narain v. Ruder Perkash, 10 C. 626 (637) P.C.; Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (174) P.C.; Amrit Rao v. Govind, 9 N.L.R. 145; contra in Parvati v. Ainuddeen, 7 C. 577; Ramasami v. Alagirisami, 27 M. 361.

(3) W. & B. Hindu Law, p. 700.

(4) Iburamsa v. Thiruvenkatasami, 34 M. 269 (276, 277) F.B., following and explaining Hardi Narain v. Ruder Perkash, 10 C. 626 (637) P.C.; Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Prasad, 5 C. 148 (174) P.C.; Amrit Rao v. Gobind, 9 N.L.R. 145; contra in Parbati v. Ainuddeen, 7 C. 577; Ramasami v. Alagirisami, 27 M. 361.

(5) Parbati v. Ainuddin, 7 C. 577; Ramasami v. Alagirisami, 27 M. 361.

(6) Radha Kanta v. Bipro Das, 1 C.L.J. 40; Syed Habibur Rasul v. Ashita, 12 C.W.N. 640; Uma Sundari v. Benode Lal, 34 C. 1026.

(7) Manaya v. Shanmuga, 38 M. 684 (691); Narayanaswami v. Tirumal, 24 M.L.J. 79 (80); Iburamsa v. Thiruvenkatasami, 34 M. 269 F.B.; Padata v. Madavarapu, 2 M.W.N. 382: 12 I.C. (M.) 408.

(8) Manjaya v. Shanmuga, 38 M. 684 (692, 693); Udaram v. Rama, 11 B.H.C.R. 76 (82).

(9) Iburamsa v. Thiruvenkatasami, 34 M. 269 (276, 277) F.B.; to the same effect, Hanumandas v. Valabhdas, 43 B. 17; Amrit Rao v. Govind, 9 N.L.R. 145: 21 I.C. 590.

dicta of the Privy Council in which their Lordships held the alienee of a share "entitled to take proceedings to have it ascertained in partition."[1] But in all these cases, their Lordships were merely indicating the alienee's right and were not prescribing the procedure. In any case, as pointed out by the same court in another case, the alienee being clearly entitled to the equity, the fact that he sues for a partial partition should not be fatal to his suit. The other coparceners might be given notice and if they should prefer a general partition it should be decreed. The question is not one of principle but of procedure which would yield to convenience.[2] The rule applicable to such cases is that which governs partition between tenants-in-common and not that which regulates partition between members of an undivided family.[3]

1518. The true rule appears to be that while the purchaser has no right to maintain a partial partition, as held in some cases[4] his right is to have his share ascertained and he is entitled to sue for no more than the ascertainment of his share. If it then appears that this cannot be done without a general partition, the court should order it without driving the purchaser to another suit.[5] This course may be necessary if there are equities which the other coparceners have against the alienor, which can only be worked out in a general suit for partition and in working out those equities, the plaintiff's vendor, and hence the plaintiff, may be assigned a different item from the item he purported to buy or even a smaller share than what those items represented.[6]

There are no doubt cases in which the court has dismissed a suit for partial partition holding it untenable[7] there are those in which such suit was allowed,[8] while there are others in which the court is guided by equity and convenience.[9]

1519. Partial Partition Between Coparceners.—It has already been stated that coparceners cannot claim a partition partial as to the persons or the property as of right, though such partitions are sanctioned

---

(1) Hardi Narain v. Ruder Perkash, 10 C. 626 (637) P.C.; Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (174) P.C.; Deen Dayal v. Jugdeep Narain, 3 C. 198 (209) P.C.

(2) Kali Charan v. Kiranbala, 29 C. L.J. 404: 51 I.C. 948; Srish Chandra v. Mania Chandra, 23 C.L.J. 231: 33 I.C. 17; Hari v. Venkata, 34 M. 402.

(3) Subba Row v. Ananthanarayana, 23 M.L.J. 64: 14 I.C. 524; Ram Mohanlal v. Mulchand, 28 A. 39; Padmamani v. Jagadamba, 6 B.L.R. 134.

(4) Iburamsa v. Thirwenkatasami, 34 M. 269 F.B.

(5) Ranku v. Hukmi, (1916) P.W.R. 15: 35 I.C. 545.

(6) Padala v. Madavarapu, 2 M.W. N. 382: 12 I.C. 408; Venkatarama v. Meera, 13 M. 275; Venkayya v. Lakshmayya, 16 M. 98; Radha Churn v. Kripa Sindhu, 5 C. 474; Parbati v. Ainuddeen, 7 C. 577; Haridas v. Pran Nath, 12 C. 566; Jogendra v. Jugabundhu, 14 C. 122; Palani v. Masakonan, 20 M. 243.

(7) Laljeet v. Ramcoomar, 25 W.R. 353; Chunder Nath v. Har Narain, 7 C. 153; Haridas v. Pran Nath, 12 C. 566; Jogendra v. Jugobundhu, 14 C. 122; Satyakumdr v. Satya Kripal, 10 C.L. J. 503; Doman v. Prokash Lal, 18 I.C. (C.) 866; Nanabhai v. Nathab Bai, 7 B. H.C.R. (A.C.) 46; Hari v. Ganapatrav, 7 B. 272; Vamanji v. Atmaram, (1883) B.P.J. 337; Barabi v. Deb Kamini, 20 C. 682; Hemadri v. Ramanikanta, 24 C. 575; Radha Kanta v. Bipro Das, 1 C.L.J. 40; Hobibur v. Ashita, 12 C.W.N. 640; Ram Mohanlal v. Mulchand, 28 A. 39; Shib Suhaye v. Nursingh, 22 W.R. 352 explaining contra in Nanabhai v. Nathubhai, 7 B. H.C.R. (A.C.) 46.

(8) Padmamani v. Jagadamba, 6 B.L. R. 134; Subba Row v. Ananthanarayana, 23 M.L.J. 64: 14 I.C. 524.

(9) Udaram v. Ranu, 11 B.H.C.R. 76; Shib Sahay v. Nursing, 22 W.R. 352; Hari v. Lakshmi, 34 M. 402; Subba Row v. Ananthanarayana, 23 M.L.J. 64: 14 I.C. 524.

by usage and may be decreed by consent.[1] Apart from suit, it may be made by an agreement.[2] Where the members appointed arbitrators to effect a general partition but they effected only a partial partition, it was open to the parties to accept it, on which they would be bound.[3]

1520. But apart from consent or compromise, the court will not entertain a suit for a partial partition[4] unless some properties being previously partitioned, the suit relates only to those which remained undivided[5] or where some of the property is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or where some of it is in the possession of a mortgagee or some other party and is, therefore, not available for partition.[6] In one case, the plaintiff sued for a partial partition which was not objected to, either in the courts below or in the grounds of appeal to the High Court; but the court permitted it to be argued, and dismissed the suit as incompetent giving, however, the plaintiff liberty to institute a fresh suit on the same cause of action.[7]

1521. The rule on the subject of partial partition between coparceners has been thus stated: "Though there can be no compulsory partial partition either in respect of the joint property belonging to the family, or in respect of the persons constituting the undivided family, yet by mutual agreement of parties, the partition can be partial either in respect of the property or of the persons constituting the family. And according to the usage and custom, the remaining members of an undivided family, from which one or more alone have become divided, continue as an undivided family in its normal state and not as members, who after partition, have become reunited."[8]

1522. The separation of some members from the joint family has not necessarily the effect of operating as a general partition, though for the purpose of ascertaining the share of the outgoing member, it is necessary, to ascertain the share of every coparcener and in fact to effect a general imaginary partition.[9]

Presumptions.

1523. This fact supports the presumption that a partition is general both as to the person and the property.[10] But it is merely a presumption and may be disproved by proving the contrary.

---

(1) Chandar Shekhar v. Kundan Lal, 31 A. 3; Manjanatha v. Narayana, 5 M. 362.

(2) Rewun Prasad v. Radha, 4 M.I. A. 137 (168); Katama Nachiar v. Raja of Shivganga, 9 M.I.A. 539 (614); Chintaman v. Nowlakho, 1 C. 153 (161); Bhawani v. Juggernath, 13 C.W.N. 309: 3 I.C. 241; Satya Kumar v. Satya Kirpal, 10 C.L.J. 503: 3 I.C. 247; Gaurishankar v. Atmaram, 18 B. 611; Barugapalli v. Nandigam, 10 M.L.T. 313: 10 I.C. 57; Amrut v. Mukand, 5 N.L.R. 152: 4 I.C. 236; Gokal Das v. Chandi Bai, 4 S.L.R. 225: 10 I.C. 967.

(3) Kuppuswami v. Husala, (1918) M.W.N. 683: 49 I.C. 89.

(4) Laljeet v. Rajcoomar, 25 W.R. 353; Haridas v. Pran Nath, 12 C. 566; Jogendra v. Jugobundhu, 14 C. 122; Satya Kumar v. Satya Kripal, 10 C.L. J. 503; Doman v. Prakash Lal, 18 I.C. (C.) 866; Nanabhai v. Nathabai, 7 B. H.C.R. (A.C.) 46; Hari v. Ganpatrao, 7 B. 227.

(5) Gaurishankar v. Atmaram, 18 B. 611; Purushottam v. Atmaram, 23 B. 597; Ajodhya v. Mahadeo, 14 C.W. N. 221: 3 I.C. (C.) 9.

(6) Gorachand v. Basanta, 15 C.L. J. 258: 12 I.C. 684.

(7) Doman Lal v. Prokash Lal, 18 I.C. (C.) 866.

(8) Hoolas Kunwar v. Man Singh, 3 Agra 37.

(9) Palani Ammal v. Muthuvenkata, 48 M. 254 (257) P.C.; Hari Baksh v. Babulal, 5 L. 92 P.C.; Babanna v. Parawa, 50 B. 815 (825), dissenting from Ramchandra v. Tukaram, 45 B. 914; Singa Iyer v. Venkataramana, 14 M.L.T. 555: 23 I.C. 6; Sashi Bhusan v. Hari, 25 C.W.N. 990.

(10) Anandibai v. Hari, 35 B. 293; Parbati v. Maharaj, 6 I.C. (A.) 795.

1524. There is no presumption that where some only of the members separate, the rest remain joint. An agreement among the remaining coparceners to remain united or to reunite must be proved like any other fact.[1] As their Lordships said: "It appears to their Lordships that there is no presumption when one coparcener separates from the others, that the latter remain united. In many cases it may be necessary, in order to ascertain the share of the outgoing member, to fix the shares which the other coparceners are or would be entitled to, and in this sense, the separation of one is said to be a virtual separation of all. And their Lordships think that an agreement amongst the remaining members of a joint family to remain united or to reunite must be proved like any other fact."[2] It must be noted that this case is no authority for the proposition that the separation of one member leads to a separation of all. All it says and means is that the separation of a single member destroys the presumption that the family is joint and that the remaining members cannot be presumed to remain joint. Whether they do so in fact must be proved like any other fact.[3]

Clause (4).

1525. Case for Partial Partition.—A case for partial partition arises where all the coparceners have alienated their interests, in which case, the alienee from one may sue the alienees from the rest for the severance of his share without a general partition.[4] Similarly, where one of several co-owners, who were in possession of different parcels of land, by mutual arrangement, transferred his share in a parcel which was in the possession of his co-sharers, the transferee was held entitled to sue for partition of that parcel as against them.[5] In another case, the court permitted the partition of a dwelling-house on the ground of convenience.[6]

Clause (5) (i).

1526. Partial Partition Allowed by Other Law.—The rule against partial partition is now a mere processual law. It is dictated by considerations of convenience and has not been adhered to in certain classes of cases in which, apparently, it was considered to lead to inconvenience.[7] But this does not mean that partial partition should be permitted as a matter of course. All it means is that the rule is not inflexible, but is subject to well-defined exceptions, the scope of which should not be enlarged except upon grounds of manifest convenience.[8]

1527. The rule of Hindu Law against a partial partition has been in several respects modified by the statute law relating to the partition of

---

(1) Balabux v. Rukhmabai, 30 C. 725 P.C.; Balkrishna v. Ramkrishna, 53 A. 300 (306, 307) P.C.

(2) Balabux v. Rukhmabai, 30 C. 725 (736) P.C.; Jatti v. Banwari Lal, 4 L. 350 P.C.; Balkrishna v. Ramkrishna, 53 A. 300 (306, 307) P.C.; Chidambaram v. Muthu, 7 M.L.T. 95: 5 I.C. 764; Nihal Devi v. Kishore Chand, (1910) P. R. 97: 8 I.C. 999; Surajpal v. Gajraj, 10 C.L.J. 698: 26 I.C. 600; Gadian v. Gadian, 1 M.L.W. 799: 26 I.C. 43; Balakrishna v. Raju, (1915) M.W.N. 17: 27 I.C. 736.

(3) Hari Baksh v. Babu Lal, 5 L. 92 (102) P.C.; Balkrishna v. Ramkrishna, 53 A. 300 P.C.

(4) Iburamsa v. Thiruvenkatasami, 34 M. 269 F.B., followed in Amrit Rao v. Govind, 9 N.L.R. 145: 21 I.C. 590; Kistna v. Venkata Lakshmi, 20 M.L.J. 323.

(5) Srish Chandra v. Maima Chandra, 23 C.L.J. 231, 33 I.C. 17.

(6) Kali Charan v. Kiran Bala, 29 C. L.J. 494: 51 I.C. 948.

(7) Manjaya v. Shanmuga, 38 M. 684; Sundara v. Krishnamurthi, 31 M.L.J. 317: 35 I.C. 577.

(8) Sundara v. Krishnamurthi, 31 M.L.J. 317: 35 I.C. 577.

property. For instance, special provision is made in the various Land Revenue Acts, for the partition of revenue paying estates, of which partition can only be made as therein provided.[1] Ordinarily, these Acts recognize a mahal as a unit for partition and it may then be partitioned, though the family may own several mahals of which piecemeal partition is reprobated by Hindu Law.[2] Then again, partial partition may be rendered necessary by the limited local jurisdiction of the court. Where, therefore, only some of the property is situate within the local jurisdiction of the court, it would entertain a suit for partition of it, though it may not comprise the entire estate. Such a case may arise whether some property is situate outside British India, or outside the local jurisdiction of a District Court.[3] The same rule extends to the High Courts, which are, however, empowered, on leave being obtained, to entertain a suit in respect of all properties situate within and without their ordinary original jurisdiction[4] provided that some property is situate within the jurisdiction of the court.[5] Where a suit related to the partition of both movable and immovable property, the latter being situate wholly beyond the jurisdiction of the High Court, the court would refuse partition as to the immovable estate which lay beyond it.[6]

1528. If it is, however, necessary for the purpose of doing complete justice between the parties that a suit should be stayed pending the institution of a suit in the Court, within whose jurisdiction the immovable property is situate, it would adopt that course.[7] The court has no jurisdiction to grant leave for trial of a partition suit where all immovable property is situate beyond its jurisdiction. So where the plaintiff sued for partition of his share in the family property comprising both movables and immovables, of which the former were situate within, and the latter without the jurisdiction of the court, and the Registrar granted leave for trial of the whole suit, in the High Court, it was held that the High Court had no jurisdiction as to the lands, and that the leave to sue had been improperly granted by the Registrar. The suit as to the lands was accordingly dismissed.[8]

1529. Where It is Indispensable.—Again, partial partition is the only course possible where the rest of the property is in the possession of the mortgagee and is, therefore, not available for present division.[9] In one case it was suggested that where it is so it is still open to the plaintiff to sue for a

Clause (5) (ii).

(1) Bengal Act V of 1897; U.P. Act III of 1901; C.P. Act II of 1917; Punjab Act XVII of 1887; Bombay Act V of 1879 (Ss. 113, 117); Madras Reg. XXV of 1802 (Ss. 8, 9); Mad. Reg. II of 1803 (Ss. 17, 18, 20-24); Madras Act II of 1864 (Ss. 44, 46); Mad. Act I of 1876; Assam Reg. I of 1886 (Ch. 6).

(2) Chunder Nath v. Hur Narain, 7 C. 153; Parbati v. Ainuddin, 7 C. 577; Mukunda v. Lehuraux, 20 C. 379; Barati v. Deb Kamini, 24 C. 575, explained in Radakanta v. Bipro, 1 C.L.J. 40 (42); Habibur v. Ashita, 12 C.W.N. 640.

(3) Punchanun v. Shib Chunder, 14 C. 835; Balaram v. Ramachandra, 22 B. 922 (925).

(4) Sarat Chandra v. Mahapet, 37 C. 907 (911); Matgaru Coal Co. v. Shragers, Ltd., 33 C. 824.

(5) Seshagiri v. Rama Rau, 19 M. 448.

(6) Jairam v. Atmaram, 4 B. 482; Balaram v. Ramachandra, 22 B. 922; Seshagiri v. Rama, 19 M. 448; Abdul Karim v. Badruddeen, 28 M. 216 (222).

(7) Subha Rau v. Rama Rau, 3 M.H.C.R. 376; Pottaravy v. Audimula, 5 M.H.C.R. 419; Abdul Karim v. Badruddeen, 28 M. 216 (223).

(8) Seshagiri v. Rama Rau, 19 M. 448; Jairam v. Atmaram, 4 B. 482.

(9) Kristayya v. Narasimham, 23 M. 608; Balkrishna v. Hari, 8 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 64; Narayan v. Pandurang, 12 B.H.C.R. 148 (155); Shivmurtappa v. Virappa, 1 Bom.L.R. 620.

division of right, though he could not obtain its partition by metes and bounds. But the court held that the plaintiff being entitled to possession on partition cannot be compelled to sue for only a portion of the relief to which he is entitled.[1] Again, partial partition is inevitable where some of the property is situate in foreign territory.[2]

1530. Where Coparcener Affirms Alienation.—Where the right, title and interest of a member of a joint Hindu family in specific family property is sold in execution of a decree not binding on the remaining coparcener, it is competent to such other coparcener, if he chooses, to affirm the court-sale in respect of that portion of the property, and thus become divided in respect of such portion only of the family property, in which case, the purchaser is not driven to the necessity of enforcing his purchase by bringing a suit for a general partition of the whole of the family property. A joint family consisted of a father A, a son B, and the latter's son C. In execution of a decree against B, for purposes not binding on A, B's interest in a specific portion of the joint property was sold. Subsequently, A gifted his moiety in such portion in favour of C who sued the purchaser to recover such specific moiety. It was held that the father by making a gift of his moiety had in effect ratified the court-sale as effecting a partition of the property to which the sale related, between himself and his son under whom the purchaser claimed. The gift was really one made by a member of an undivided family who had become divided in respect of a portion of the family property, a moiety of which was the subject of the gift. Such a gift was valid. As regards C, he was entitled not merely to joint possession with the purchaser, but to the sole possession of the specific half claimed, if the specific half claimed was in excess of the fair half.[3]

Clause (5) (iii).

1531. The same view has been taken in other cases, which proceed upon the principle that though a coparcener is entitled to enforce a general partition, still it is only his right and he may choose to forego the advantage. Where, therefore, a stranger has acquired a coparcener's interest in a specific property it is for the other coparceners to affirm or interdict the act and claim by partition to recover from the stranger the property to which the alienation cannot extend.[4]

1532. Such a course is inevitable, since the stranger is not interested in a general partition and the coparcener does not want it either. So where one of two brothers sold his interest in a house and three shops to the defendant, whereupon the other brother sued him for their partition, but the purchaser resisted the suit on the ground that a suit for partial partition was untenable, the court overruled the contention, holding that the purchaser was not interested in the rest of the property and the vendor was entitled to the separation of his moiety from that sold off by his brother.[5]

1533. But this is the right of a coparcener against a stranger purchaser but not vice versa, unless necessitated by the circumstances of purchase. It is not a right which any coparcener can enforce against another: "At first sight it may seem strange that the purchaser may

(1) Pattaravy v. Audimula, 5 M.H.C.R. 419; Narayan v. Pandurang, 12 B.H.C.R. 148 (155), followed in Shivmurtappa v. Virappa, 1 Bom.L.R. 620 (625).

(2) Moti Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal, 2 L.L.J. 514.

(3) Kedegan v. Periyan, 13 M.L.J. 477, followed in Iburamsa v. Thiruvenkatasami, 34 M. 269 F.B.

(4) Chinna v. Suriya, 5 M. 196.

(5) Ramcharan v. Jasodha, 28 A. 50; Luchmi Narain v. Janki Das, 23 A. 216; Subramanya v. Padmanabha, 19 M. 267.

not bring a suit for partition in circumstances in which a member of the family other than the vendor may bring such suit. There are reasons, however, why the one suit for partial partition should be allowed and the other not. To allow the purchaser from one member of a family to bring a suit for partition of the particular property purchased might facilitate members of an undivided family in dealing with the property in fraud of the rights of the family. It is not unreasonable that the purchaser should have no greater powers against the family than his vendor. On the other hand, it is to the advantage of the family to be able to ascertain by partition the particular property which the purchaser may retain and to be freed from all relations with a stranger to the family. Nor is the ability to sue for a partition of the particular property altogether disadvantageous to the purchaser, for if all the family property were brought into the suit, it might turn out that the purchaser took nothing."[1] Of course, where the coparcener does not affirm the alienation, it is open to him to turn out the purchaser in a suit for ejectment[2]

Clause (5) (iv).

1534. Suit Between Stranger Alienees.—The same principle justifies a suit for partial partition between two stranger alienees of coparcenary interests, who, being each interested only in the specific item of property acquired by him, cannot create disruption of the joint family.[3] In such a case, each purchaser is only entitled to work out the rights, which he has acquired by his purchase. "The purchase of either vendee does not give him an equitable right if it was merely colourable to a marshalling of all the parts of the estate in his favour."[4]

The same rule extends to the partition of a property held by a joint family in partnership with a stranger who has no interest in a general partition of the family estate and who could not, therefore, be made a party in the family partition suit.[5]

1535. A suit for partial partition will lie where it is the only property left undivided. Such suit cannot be defeated by a plea that a partial partition cannot be claimed and that the entire property must be again thrown into the hotchpot.[6] "A whole village or a particular community may have a joint property in a right of common pasturage or a forest, and such common enjoyment may continue even after there has been a private partition among the members of any one or more of the component families. No intention to relinquish a part of the claim can be inferred by the mere non-inclusion of such a common claim in a family partition suit."[7] In such a case, it is clear that a coparcener may sue for the partition of his right against the other coparceners and strangers who may be jointly interested in partition. A Vritti was owned jointly by the two families of A and B. In 1881, the Vritti of A was partitioned among its members at the instance of one of its members C, who sued the other parceners of the family A and all members of the family B for partition of their joint Vritti. The

(1) Subramanya v. Padmanabha, 19 M. 267 (268), following Venkatachella v. Chinnaiya, 5 M.H.C.R. 166.

(2) Venkayya v. Lakshmayya, 16 M. 98.

(3) Subharazu v. Venkataratnam, 15 M. 234; Iburamsa v. Thiruvenkatasami, 34 M. 269 F.B.; Hanuman Das v. Valabhdas, 43 B. 17; Srish Chandra v. Maima Chandra, 23 C.L.J. 231: 33 I. C. 17.

(4) Gadadhur v. Balvant, (1883) B. P.J. 679, (680).

(5) Purushottam v. Atmaram, 23 B. 597 (601).

(6) Gavri Shankar v. Atmaram, 18 B. 611.

(7) Purushottam v. Atmaram, 23 B. 597 (601).

court held that the first partition did not bar the second and that the latter was not obnoxious to the rule against partial partition.[1]

1536. Other cases may be conceived where a partial partition might be maintained even as between coparceners. So, where some of the property had been previously partitioned, the rest being kept joint, there can be no objection to a suit for the partition of the latter. Nor can such suit be resisted on the ground that the entire estate should be re-partitioned.

1537. Partition of Omitted Items.—Partial partition is inevitable where it is necessary to complete a general partition. Such a case may arise where some items were omitted or excluded from partition. The same rule would hold good where by inadvertance, mistake, or fraud of any of the parties, some item was not brought to partition.[2] Of course, even where the family has in fact become divided, there is nothing to preclude a suit for partition, since every co-sharer, or co-owner of property is entitled to the severance of his share by partition.[3] But where once a partition is completed, properties, such as a common way, or roads for ingress and egress reserved as a common property cannot be made the subject of a fresh partition. The expression common way includes not only the ways so existing prior to partition, but also those created at the time of partition.[4]

Clause (5) (viii).

Since partial partition is an exception and not the rule, one result of such partition is to destroy the presumption of jointness, and he who avers that a partition was only partial and not complete has to prove it.[5]

1538. Legal Effect of Partial Partition.—The legal effect of a partial partition is not to break up the coparcenary altogether, since the members continue to remain coparceners as regards the undivided property with the right of survivorship inter se as before, the result being that on death of any member the property kept joint would descend not to his own representatives but would survive to the other members.[6]

So, where the husband died a separated member, leaving some property undivided, his widow was held to have no right to inherit to the latter.[7] But the case would have been different if the title being divided, such property was kept joint for enjoyment.[8]

184. In the absence of any contract to the contrary, coparceners are entitled to shares at partition according to the following rules:—

Distribution of Shares.

(1) Each member is presumed to represent himself and his sons whose share is included in the share allotted to him:[9]

(2) Brothers take equal shares; and the share of a brother who has died is represented by his sons; grandsons and great-grandsons:[10]

(1) Purushottam v. Atmaram, 23 B. 597 (598).

(2) Jogendra v. Baladeb, 35 C. 961; Mukunda v. Jogesh Chandra, 20 C.W.N. 1276: 1 Pat.L.J. 393.

(3) Hazarilal v. Ram Lal, 47 A. 746 (749).

(4) Shantaram v. Waman, 47 B. 389; Sheo Ram v. Man Raj, 99 I.C. (L.) 592: (1927) L. 107.

(5) Beni Parshad v. Gur Devi, 4 L. 252; Sheo Ram v. Manraj, 99 I.C. (L.) 592: (1927) L. 107.

(6) Wm. Macnaughten's Hindu Law, p. 53: followed in Katama Natchiar v. Raja of Shivganga, 9 M.I.A. 539 (608, 609); Phoolbas v. Lalla Jogeshur, 1 C. 226 P.C.; Vaidyanath v. Aiyasami, 32 M. 191.

(7) Ram Bai v. Jogan, (1871) B.P.J. 260: (1873) B.P.J. 35.

(8) Raghubir Singh v. Moti, 35 A. 41 P.C.; Vaidyanath v. Aiyasami, 32 M. 191; Rakhmabai v. Joterao, (1872) B.P.J. 296; Timama v. Amchimani, (1875) B.P.J. 257; Saraj v. Desa, (1881) B.P.J. 123.

(9) Yad. II-120.

(10) Mit. I-II-6 and texts and cases cited post.

(3) As between different branches of a family, shares are given per stirpes, and as between the sons of the same father, per capita. But this rule does not apply to a partial partition:[1]

(4) As between an adopted and an afterborn auras son of the Dwijas; the former takes a fourth of the latter's share;[2] in a like competition amongst Shudras, they share equally.

(5) As between a legitimate and illegitimate son of a Shudra; the letter takes half share of what he would take if were legitimate:[3]

(6) Provided that if the owner has died without a legitimate son, but left him surviving his widow, a daughter or a danghter's son, then his illegitimate son is entitled to a half share of the estate the other half being taken by the other relations.[4]

(7) Provided further that if he has left no such relations, then the illegitimate son inherits the whole estate.[5]

(8) The foregoing rules equally apply on a competition between an adopted and afterborn auras son and an illegitimate son of a Shudra.

(9) The shares of women and the lineal descendants of the owner entitled thereto under the provisions of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937 will be in accordance with the provisions of that Act as described in section 315.

1539. Analogous Law.—The mode of distribution stated in the section is supported by the following texts:—

Clause (1). Yadnavalkya.—"Among sons by different fathers the allotment of shares is according to the fathers."[6]

Mayukh (Quoting the last).—"The meaning is that supposing one father to have one son, another two, or third three, the division takes place by the number of the fathers only, not by the number of the shares."[7]

Katyayan.—"If an undivided younger brother dies, they should make his son a sharer of the inheritance if he has not obtained a livelihood from his grandfather. He should obtain the share of his father from his paternal uncle, or his (i.e., uncle's) son. That very share would, indeed, be the legal share of all the brothers, or, even his son would receive a share; beyond such a son succession ceases."[8]

Mayukh (Quoting the last).—"The word Anuj ('younger brother') is intended to include even the elder brother."

Parasar.—"(Beyond) means the great-grandson, the sons, etc., of the grandson do not obtain wealth of the great-great-grandfather, if the father, grandfather, and great--grandfather have predeceased such great-great-grandfather who at his decease has left other sons or other nearer heirs alive. The meaning is that, in the absence of sons, grandsons, and great-grandsons and the like of the deceased, even he (the great-grandson) takes. And this does not refer to the undivided but to the reunited, as there is a text of Devala which says: 'Among family members who having been divided live together the second partition of the heritage takes place (even) up to the fourth in descent. This is the rule.'"[9]

---

(1) Per Muttusamy Ayyar, J., in Manjanatha v. Narayana, 5 M. 362 (364, 365), to the same effect Bhimul Dass v. Choonee Lal, 2 C. 79; Raj Narain v. Heeralal, 5 C. 142.

(2) Datt. Chandrika (Suth.) V-17, 19, p. 139.

(3) Mit. I-XII-2 relied upon in Kamalammal v. Visvanathaswami, 46 M. 167 P.C.

(4) Shesgiri v. Girewa, 14 B. 282; Meenakshi v. Appakutti, 33 M. 226.

(5) Mit. I-XII-1, Saraswati v. Mannu, 2 A. 134.

(6) II-120.

(7) Cited and explained in Umed v. Khushalbhai, 11 Bom.L.R. 396.

(8) Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen, 34 C. 150 (161) P.C.; Brij Raj Singh v. Sheo Dan Singh, 35 A. 337 P.C.; Umed Baber v. Khushalbhai, 11 Bom.L.R. 396; 2 I.C. 426; Alur v. Venkata, 52 I.C. (M.) 614.

(9) Mandlik, H.L., pp. 44, 45. The construction of Devala is forced; see Mandlik, H.L., p. 45; W. & B., H.L. (2nd Bk.), p. 4.

Mitakshara.—"This unequal distribution[1] supposes property by himself acquired. But of the wealth descended to him from his father an unequal partition at his pleasure is not proper, for equal ownership will be declared."[2]

Clause (2).

"The author next propounds another period of partition for other persons making it, and a rule respecting the mode. 'Let sons divide equally both the effects and the debts after (the demise of) their two parents.'"[3]

"Therefore, unequal partition though noticed in codes of law, should not be practised, since it is disapproved by the world and is contrary to scripture."

"For this reason a restriction is obtained, that brethren should divide only in equal shares."[4]

Dayabhag.—"26. It might be argued, that the practice of equal partition is indispensable as the only mode authorized by law. For the brethren may consent to the deductions by reason of great veneration (for the eldest). An option exists like that of making or omitting partition."

"27. Accordingly, since persons of the present day (who are younger brothers) entertain no great veneration (for their elders) equal distribution is alone seen in the world; as also because elder brothers deserving of deducted allotments are now rare."[5]

1540. This rule is based upon the text of Vasisth as explained in the Dattak Chandrika,[6] in which, however, the Shudras are expressly ecxluded.[7] On a construction of these texts the Privy Council have held that amongst Shudras there is no distinction between an adopted and an auras son or sons and all share equally on partition.[8]

Clause (4).

But as regards the Dwijas, the rule propounded by Vasisth remains and on a partition between an adopted and an auras son, the former is only entitled to one-fourth of the latter's share. What this means has already been explained in Chapter V (see the commentary under section 63).

1541. Partition Per Stirpes.—In a partition, the shares are allotted per stirpes and not per capita, that is to say, each person represents not only himself but also his sons, and so the son takes his share through the father as being included in the share allotted to the father. But the parties may agree to depart from this rule by allotting a share to a member without incuding his son or sons in the allotment.[9] Consent by the members to a partition binds not

Clause (1).

---

(1) Referring to Manu, IX-112: "The portion deducted for the eldest is the twentieth part of the heritage with the best of all the chattels; for the middlemost half of that; for the youngest a quarter of it."

(2) Mit., I-II-6, cited and explained in Lakshman v. Ramchandra, 1 B. 561 (568).

(3) Yad., II-118; Mit., I-III-7.

(4) Mit., I-IV-7.

(5) Dayabhag, III-II-26, 27.

(6) Dattak Chandrika (Suth.), V-17, 19, p. 139.

(7) Ib., V-29, p. 142.

(8) Shudra Sons, both legitimate and illegitimate share equally. Arumilli v. Arumilli, 44 M. 656, approving Raja v. Subbaraya, 7 M. 253; Baramanund v. Chowdhury, 14 C.L.J. 182; Asita v. Nirode, 20 C.W.N. 901, overruling contra in Gopalam v. Venkataraghavulu, 40 M. 632.

(9) Umed v. Khushalbhai, 11 Bom. L. R. 396: 2 I.C. 426.

only the consenting members but also their sons, as they represent their respective branches of the family.[1]

Clause (2).

1542. Partition Between Brothers.—The simplest case of partition is that by the father among his sons, or by the sons among themselves. In each case, all share equally, the archaic law as to the greater share of the eldest son on the ground of primogeniture being now obsolete. It is declared in the texts and has been so held in several cases.[2] The father has no right to make an unequal distribution of his ancestral property,[3] whether movable[4] or immovable. It may be that in some localities or families the ancient custom of the right of primogeniture called Jesthabhag still lingers. In one case it was pleaded, but the court held the custom not proved,[5] and in anothr case it was held to be obsolete.[6]

1543. Now, suppose that before the partition some of the brothers were dead. If they left no issue then their shares would naturally devolve on the other coparceners by survivorship. But if they died leaving issue, the latter would take the same share which their father or grandfather would have taken if he were alive. In short, they do not take per capita but per stirpes. But if in the same case the family was subject to the Dayabhag law, then the deceased brother's share would be taken by his heir, devisee or assignee.

1544. In a Mitakshara family, the share of the deceased is not affected by his death if he left a male issue. "The rule is designed to ensure equality of partition in cases of vested interests held in coparcenary, and to carry out in those cases the principle that those who have capacity to confer equal spiritual benefits on the common ancestor ought to take equal shares. In its simplest form, a joint family consists of a father and his sons, and it obtains a further development by each son becoming a father, and by each of the male descendants of that son having male issue in this turn. When, therefore, a joint family in an advanced stage of development is broken up by partition, regard is had to the successive vested interests of each branch; and on the division by the stock at each stage, a new branch intervenes, secures equal shares to those who were the sons of the same father and had capacity to confer an equal amount of spiritual benefit upon him."[7] If, for instance, A and B, two brothers, have each two and three sons C and D, and E, F and G, respectively, the fact whether C and D separate from their father A and uncle B or whether A, C and D separate from B and his sons would make no difference in the allotment, if at the time of parti-

(1) Brij Raj Singh v. Sheo Dan Singh, 35 A. 337 P.C.

(2) Mit. I-II-6; I-III-1-7; Dayabhag, III-II-26, 27; Mayukh, IV-II-11-17; Smriti Chandika, II-2, II-III-16-24; Dayakram Sangrah, VII-13; Viramitroday, II-I-11-14; Madan Ratna Pradip, cited in Taliwar Singh v. Phulwan Singh, 3 B.S.R. 402: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 974, F.N. (a), ib., p. 976; Bhyroochund v. Russomunee, 1 B.S.R. 36: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 27, Neelkaunt v. Mune, ib., p. 77; 6 I.D. (O.S.) 58; Lakshman v. Ramchandra, 1 B. 561.

(3) Lakshman v. Ramchandra, 1 B. 561: (566), contra in Sudanund v. Bonomalee, 1 Marsh 317 (320), dissented from in Sudanund v. Soorjoo, 11 W.R. 436.

(4) Lakshman v. Ramchandra, 1 B. 561 (567).

(5) Sheo Buksh v. Putteh Singh (Heirs of) 2 B.S.R. 340: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 616.

(6) Rajangam v. Rajangam, 39 M.L.J. 382: 57 I.C. 18.

(7) Per Muttusami Ayyar, J., in Thangathanni v. Rama, 5 M. 358 (364).

tion either or both the brothers die, since the share of each branch is a moiety and it must be distributed amongst the sons of A and B, with the result that while the two sons of A will each get one-fourth, the three sons of B will only get one-sixth each. If B died and with him two of his three sons, then the survivor will get a moiety of his own branch, but if B and his three sons were then alive, then they would all get the same moiety. This is division per stirpes, that is, a division according to the stocks.[1] If, after living separate from A, B wishes to effect a partition amongst his three sons, E, F and G, each of them will receive a fourth of the half, allotted to B's branch, i.e., one-eighth per head. This is division per capita, i.e., according to the number of the sons, the father being entitled to receive one equal share for himself.

The same rule will extend to the sons and grandsons and greater-grandsons of E, F and G. But since that is the limit of coparcenary right, if a person dies leaving him surviving his only great-great-grandson, the latter will take no interest in his ancestor's interest which will pass to his coparceners by survivorship.

1545. Such a case may be imagined in the following illustration: A dies leaving a son B, two grandsons F and G, and a great-great-grandson O. Here A's four sons constitute four different branches represented by their descendants but still E's branch takes nothing, since O being more than three degrees remote from the common ancestor is not his coparcener and therefore, E's one-fourth share in A's estate passes to B, C and D, the two latter being represented by their descendants. A's estate would then be divided into three parts, one-third being taken by B, one-third by F and G, i.e., one-sixth each by F and G and the remaining third by J, K, L and M (i.e., one-twelfth by each); that is to say, while each branch takes per stirpes, the individuals of each branch take per capita.

Now, in the same case, if the partition were made while C and D were both alive, then C and D's share would have been the same, but on a fourth division inter se, the shares of their descendants would have been correspondingly reduced.

1546. Again, suppose in the last case that A had made a division amongst his two sons B and C, and D was born after the partition, what is then D's share? It is now settled that he can receive nothing from his separated brothers B and C[2] if his father had received a share; but if he had reserved nothing for himself, then D can claim a repartition from his elder brothers B and C, in which case their shares are liable to reduction[3] as previously stated.

After born son.

Since each father becomes the head of his own branch, it follows that there may be branches and sub-branches and while a person may take per stirpes in relation to his own ascendants, he may take per capita in relation to the members of his own branch.

(1) Mit., I-V-2; Pragnarain v. Heeralal, 5 C. 142.
(2) Ganpat v. Gopal Rao, 23 B. 636.
(3) Krishna v. Sami, 9 M. 64; Chengama v. Munisami, 20 M. 75; Bishenchand v. Asmaida, 6 A. 560 P.C.; Ganpat v. Gopal Rao, 23 B. 636; Shivajirao v. Vasantrao, 33 B. 267 (272).

1547. Such a case is imagined in the next illustration. Here suppose all the coparceners are desirous of effecting a general partition of the estate of A. Now, since A left two sons B and C, his estate is divisible into two moieties, one moiety falling to each branch. Then out of B's moiety his sons and grandsons will each receive 1|4 of 1|2=1|8th. And as to C's branch his three sons will each take per stirpes 1|3rd of 1|2=1|6th, which will again be subdivided amongst their sons, H and K taking 1|12th each, while I's two sons will each receive 1|3rd of 1|6th=1|18th, and J's sons, each 1|4th of 1|6th=1|24th.

It may, however, be that some of the members prefer to continue joint while the rest desire to separate. In that case division follows the same principle. That is to say, an imaginary partition of all the members is made and the share of each coparcener ascertained, and the shares of those claiming partition are separated from those continuing to remain joint.

1548. Such a case arose in Madras,[1] where the court had to decide upon the following tree:—

In 1867 two of C's sons (say G and H) the two sons of E (K and L) and M the son of F sued the rest for partition. For the purpose of that suit the property was divided into twelve shares. Of the six shares due to A's branch, three were allotted to G and H. Of the six shares due to B's branch, two were allotted to the sons of (viz., K and L) and two to M. The remaining five shares were enjoyed in common by the rest of the family, viz., C, I and J, who remained in union.

In 1872 C died. In 1879, I sued J to recover his share of the family property claiming three-fifths of the whole. The Subordinate Judge had awarded him only a moiety on the ground that the present state of the family alone was to be considered in ascertaining the shares. But the High Court held that I was entitled to the three-fifths he had claimed, since the rule that as between different branches, division should be per stirpes, and as between sons of the same father, per capita, applied only to cases of general partition, and had no application to partial partition. Where a joint family in an advanced state of development is broken up by partition, regard must be had to the successive vested interests of each branch, and in order to secure equality of shares, division per stirpes at each stage when a new branch intervenes, is necessary. In other words, in such a state of family, the members held their shares in quasi-severalty so that on the death of C, I alone succeeded to his father's share to the exclusion of J whose interest was not enlarged by reason of his jointness with I.

(1) Manjanatha v. Narayana, 5 M. 362, followed in Narayana v. Sankar Sah.

185. Acts occasioning separation. The following acts shall be deemed to effect the separation of a member from the coparcenary, namely:—

(a) his conversion to an alien faith, such as Christianity or Muhammadanism;[1]

(b) his contracting a marriage under the provisions of the Special Marriage (Amendment) Act, 1923.

1549. Analogous Law.—The two clauses of this section correspond to Clauses (iv) and (v) of Section 124.

186. Proof of separation. (1) Separation may be proved by any declaration, act or conduct of a party entitled to partition showing an intention inconsistent with jointness.[2]

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing rule, separation may be presumed from the following facts:—

(a) Cesser of commensality and joint worship;[3]

(b) Separate enjoyment of portions of the property, or of their income;[4]

(c) Division of income:[5]

(d) Agreement to divide the income in definite shares;[6]

(e) Separate definement of shares;[7]

(f) Separate transactions of the coparceners between themselves and with others.[8]

Explanation.—An act of a stranger such as attachment and sale of a coparcenary interest does not suffice to effect separation.[9]

1550. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by case law. Separation is distinct from partition in that it implies merely the determination of coparcenership which is, as stated in section 124, equally possible without partition. Separation is in fact the severance of coparcenary interest which may be voluntary or involuntary, and may or may not be accompanied by the allotment of a share, while partition is the voluntary severance of interest by the allotment of specific property in lieu of the share. There may be separation without partition, but there cannot be partition without complete, or at least, partial separation. As a rule separation refers to the severance of status, while partition to the division of property by metes and bounds.[10] There may be a complete separation and yet no partition, but if once there is a partition, separation would be presumed. This section deals with separation as distinct from partition. But there may be a notional partition or a real one. In the one case the partition is little distinguishable from separation.

(1) Khunnila v. Govind, 33 A. 556 P.C.; Karimuddin v. Govind, 31 A. 497 P.C.

(2) Mit., II-XII; Dayabhag, Ch. XIV; Appovier v. Rama, 11 M.I.A. 75; Syed Kasam v. Jorawar Singh, 49 I.A. 458: (1922) P.C. 353; Ramalinga v. Narayana, 45 M. 489; Gurdhar Das v. Sri Krishna, 18 A.L.J. 545: 56 I.C. 293 P.C.; Girja Bai v. Sadasiva, 34 C. (1031) P.C.; Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain, 35 A. 80 P.C.

(3) Tara Kumari v. Chuturbhuj, 42 C. 1179 P.C.

(4) Abdul Wahab v. Tilakdhari, 46 C. L.J. 237 P.C.: (1927) P.C. 208.

(5) Mohroo v. Ghanaoo, 8 W.B. 385; Malika Sahoy v. Gouree Sunkur, 12 W.R. 287; Cheyt Narayan v. Bunwaree, 33 W. R. 395; Raghunand v. Bunwaree, 33 W. C. 425; Murari v. Mukand, 15 B. 201.

(6) Ib.

(7) It is inconclusive; Ram Pershad v. Lakhpati, 30 C. 231: (253) P.C.; Ram Singh v. Tursa, 17 C.W.N. 1085 P.C.

(8) Ram Singh v. Tursa, 17 C.W.N. 1085 P.C.

(9) Secretary of State v. Rangasamy, 39 M. 831: (834) F.B.

(10) Makund v. Bala Krishna, 54 I.A. 413: (1927) P.C. 224.

1551. It has already been stated that an unequivocal expression of an intention to separate may amount to partition.[1] In that connection cases have been cited illustrative of the rule stated in clause (1). "The true test of partition of the property, according to Hindu Law is the intention of the family to become separate owners."[2] If the parties intended to separate but in fact continued to live joint, it will be a legal separation. Such was the case of the four joint sharers who drew up a deed by which each was declared entitled to one-fourth share of the profits of a business, and each was thenceforward to contribute one-fourth to the payment of the revenue of the land which each was to possess to the extent of his share, and it was held that though the co-sharers continued to carry on the business jointly, the execution of the deed defining their shares had effected a legal partition.[3] The question in such cases is one of construction: What was the intention of those who submitted to the agreement? Did it merely alter the mode of enjoyment for convenience of management, or was it intended to sever the status? Not only the deed but the surrounding circumstances should be taken into consideration. If, for instance, there was no immediate necessity for the deed, but, nevertheless, the parties chose to define their rights it would be strong prima facie evidence to hold the undivided shares as the separate property of each coparcener.[4] The father possesses an absolute right to make a partition and a partition so made binds his sons, not because the sons are consenting parties to it, but because it is the result of a power conferred on him, though subject to certain restrictions in the interests of his family. A document which purported to be a parikhat (deed of partition) made by a father, by which he reserved a share to himself and said: "There shall hereafter exist between you (sons of the first wife on the one side and those of the second on the other) only a connection of friendship and no connection whatever in respect of property," it was held to be both in form and substance a partition effected by the father in the exercise of his power, though made in his last illness.[5]

1552. In another case, the father had three sons, one son by his first wife, two sons by his second wife. He executed a will by which he authorized his executors to effect a partition among his sons when the eldest of them attained the age of majority. The executors did so as directed. Properties were divided into shares, one of which was allotted to the eldest son, and the two shares to the other two sons. The words used in the deed were: "If any property had been left undivided, it would be divided into three shares by the three parties, and in future, the parties shall have no connection in respect of property except relationship by blood." It was held that these words effected a severance in interest as between the sons of the second wife also, though their property was kept together without any division.[6] Their Lordships have decided other cases the same way, even though some of the coparceners were then minors which they held to offer no impediment to a partition.[7]

---

(1) S. 133.

(2) Ram Pershad v. Lakhpati, 30 C. 231 (253) P.C.

(3) Mahabeer v. Kundun, 8 W.R. 116, affirmed O.A. Doorga Pershad v. v. Kundun, 21 W.R. 214 P.C.

(4) Doorga Pershad v. Kundun, 21 W. R. 214 P.C. To the same effect, Kulponath v. Mewah Lal, 8 W.R. 302.

(5) Kandasami v. Doraiswami, 2 M. 317.

(6) Komalambal v. Krishnasamy, (1911) M.W.N. 3: 10 I.C. 385.

(7) Balkishen v. Ram Narain, 30 C.

A father executed a document which he called a will, whereby he allotted certain shares of the joint property to his sons, keeping no share for himself. He, however, added that if he found the sons mismanaging the property, he would cancel his deed to make a family arrangement which operated from its date. There was nothing in the deed, though it was called a will, to postpone its operations, and then the threat to cancel the shares was inoperative, being in terrorem, and did not suffice to prevent the partition operating in praesenti.[1]

1553. This view accords with that taken in numerous cases in this country and by the Privy Council. The underlying principle of all these is that if there is an intention to separate, separation may be effected by any overt act, even a declaration or a paper partition, without any change in the mode of living or a division by metes and bounds. On the other hand, there may be a division by metes and bounds and no intention to separate; such division, though it may be evidence of a family arrangement, falls short of a partition. So, again, a mere declaration to the effect that a certain member is the owner of a particular share, not accompanied by an intention to separate, would not constitute a separation of the joint property.[2]

1554. The question then arises how is such an intention to be proved. It is clear that where there is a document, the question of intention is one of construction which may be supported by the evidence of surrounding circumstances and conduct. But if the intention is clear, no evidence of conduct is even admissible. Moreover, such evidence is only relevant where the deed states that something remains to be done, as where it contemplates the mutation of names, the change of names of the different shops or other consequential acts which the parties treat as essential to complete a partition. Apart, however, from deeds, separation may be inferred from acts and conduct enumerated in clause (2).

1555. Cesser of Commensality.—Of these, the cessor of commensality and joint worship is important. As the Privy Council said: "Cesser of commensality is an element which may properly be considered in determining the question whether there was partition of joint family property, but it is not conclusive."[3] The evidentiary value of cesser of commensality must, naturally, depend upon the previous mode of life and occupation of the joint family. In a family possessing properties within a limited area, commensality is the rule and cesser an exception. But in a family with numerous members or with scattered possessions, it is usual for different members to assume management of different parcels of land which necessitates the cesser of commensality. When a family is large, and is scattered about in different places, it is natural that several members of the family should remain in possession of separate portions of the property for the sake of convenience. Mere separate management cannot give rise to the presumption that the family was divided.[4] So in the trading firms not only is there such

Clause (2) (a).

738. (751, 752) P.C. To the same effect, Ram Pershad v. Lakhpati, 30 C. 231 P.C.; Raghubir Singh v. Moti, 35 A. 41 P.C.

(1) Mrijraj v. Sheodan, 35 A. 337 (352) P.C.

(2) Hoolash Kooer v. Kuasee Prashad, 7 C. 369.

(3) Anundee v. Khedoolall, 14 M.I. A. 412; Ganesh Dutt v. Jewach Thakurain, 31 C. 262 (269) P.C.; Jivubai v. Krishnaji, 6 Bom.L.R. 351 (355); Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain, 35 A. 80 P.C.

(4) Chabhila v. Jadabai, 3 B.H.C.R. 87, followed in Murari v. Mukund, 15 B. 201 (204).

cesser, but branch firms carry on independent transactions to all outward appearances and the several branches are even mutually accountable to one another. But they remain still joint, as there is no intention to separate. Whether the cesser was or was not due to separation must then depend upon the circumstances of each case. Even in non-trading families, such differences are attributable to the incompatibility of female temperaments. In any case, separation cannot be inferred from the mere fact that various members of the family were living in separate houses all of which belonged to the family.[1]

Cesser of Joint Worship.

1556. The cesser of joint worship follows the cesser of commensality. In the unsophisticated orthodox families, joint worship is yet an index of jointness, though such families are fast disappearing with the advance of Western education, the result of which, however, is to loosen the tie of jointness both in commensality and in estate. In an orthodox household, the family deity is worshipped by all members of a joint family. Even if they separate in mess and residence, some arrangement is agreed upon for the joint worship of the household gods. But where this is not the case, it must be regarded as yet another circumstance in favour of the disruption of jointness.[2]

1557. Such was the case of two brothers, by name Gannu and Lalji, who first separated in mess owing to quarrels between their wives, and then gradually drifted away from each other till they became separate in mess, residence and business. On his separation from his brother, Lalji acquired a house site in exchange for his land and built thereon a house of his own, upon which the court said: "This separate acquisition of land for a house in lieu of a specific portion of the paternal land is an indication of an intention on the part of Lalji to separate himself and his family from his brother Gannu and the paternal house."[3] Lalji got his name separately recorded in the land records and began to make separate collections of his revenue, all of which facts strengthened the presumption in favour of separation which the court held proved by the conduct of the parties.

Relationship and Time Material.

1558. But another material element in considering the evidentiary value of such cesser is the relationship of the parties and the duration of their separation in mess and worship.[4] Upon these points no general rule can be laid down, but if it is clear that if the tie of relationship is distant and the parties have lived and acted for a long time as separated members, it cannot be held that their obvious conduct was inconsistent with their natural intention.[5]

An agreement between coparceners that their property was to be divided and that thenceforward they were to maintain separate accounts and were not accountable for the profits and losses of each other, is in itself a complete partition.[6]

Clause (2) (b).

1559. Separate enjoyment.—Long continued separation in mess and worship can seldom exist without separation in enjoyment of property or income. In

(1) Sital Prasad v. Bansidhar, (1882) A.W.N. 168.

(2) Cannu v. Bhagwati, 3 I.C. (C.) 234 (238).

(3) Ib.

(4) Moro v. Ganesh, 10 B.H.C.R. 444 (454).

(5) Appovier v. Rama, 11 M.I.A. 75 (90); followed in Murari v. Mukund, 15 B. 201 (204, 205); Surbessur v. Gossain Dass, 17 W.R. 210.

(6) Umatorupagam v. Palanarayana, 28 I.C. (M.) 908.

order to show separation, it may not be necessary to prove a formal partition, for it may be that a formal partition was never made, and if made it cannot be proved. In such case the only means of proving partition is by proof of separate enjoyment for a sufficiently long time so as to rebut the presumption of jointness. So where the parties were found to have been in possession of separate lands, enjoying their produce or collecting their rents, the court felt justified in presuming a separation.[1] Such presumption will gain in strength if the person in possession has no right to it, as for instance, she was a female who could only be suffered in possession if there was a separation[2] for it is only after separation that members realize their quota of rent from the same property.[3] In such and similar cases, separate appropriation would be very good evidence of a tacit agreement amongst the members to hold their property according to their separate shares.[4] So where four coparceners entered into an agreement to have their shares separately recorded in the Collector's registers, and to divide the income of their banking business in equal shares, which was done, the court held it to amount to a clear partition and this view was on appeal affirmed by the Privy Council.[5] Where the parties exercised ownership over the property in certain defined shares, of which the collections and management were separate, the court held the joint tenancy severed, though not immediately followed by a de facto actual division of the subject-matter.[6]

1560. The presumption arising from separate enjoyment would be considerably strengthened if it is found that one of the parties in possession of his lot had considerably improved it or had alienated it to other members of the family or to a stranger.[7] Separation may at times be an inference from conduct. It may be presumed that where a father, resident in India, having two sons by two wives, emigrated with one of them to Burmah, where he had settled down 32 years and acquired the bulk of his fortune, paying only occasional visits to his home where he saw his other wife and her son, whom he had not seen for 10 years before his death in Burmah, the court felt justified in presuming his separation from this son, with the result that, on his death, his estate would be inherited by his joint son, to the exclusion of other son.[8]

1561. Appropriation of Profits.—Separate appropriation of profits is good evidence of a tacit agreement amongst the members to hold their property according to their separate shares.[9] So where members of a family were shown to collect their quota of rent separately, it was held to be good proof of separation[10] being the very reverse of a common chest which is the one index of a normal joint family.[11] Where it is found as a fact that the collections

Clause (2) (c).

(1) Abdul Wahab Khan v. Tilakdhari, 44 C.L.J. 237: (1927) P.C. 208; Adi Deo v. Dukharan, 5 A. 532 (541).

(2) Narayana v. Krishna, 8 M. 214 (218).

(3) Kalika Sahoy v. Gouree Sunkur, 12 W.R. 287.

(4) Cheyt Narain v. Bunwaree, 23 W. R. 395 (397).

(5) Mahabeer v. Kundun, 8 W.R. 117, affirmed O.A. Doorga Pershad v. Kundun, 21 W.R. 214 P.C.

(6) Mohroo v. Gunsoo, 8 W.R. 385.

(7) Anand Kishore v. Daiji, 21 C.L.J. 296: 28 I.C. 280.

(8) Raghubar Dayal v. Ramdularee, 6 R. 367 (373).

(9) Cheyt Narain v. Bunwaree, 23 W.R. 395; Mohroo v. Ghunsoo, 8 W.R. 385; Raghubanand v. Sadhu Churn, 4 C. 425; Murari v. Mukand, 15 B. 201.

(10) Kalika Sahoy v. Gouree Sunkur, 12 W.R. 287.

(11) Appovier v. Rama Subba, 8 W.R. 1 P.C.; Mahabeer v. Kundun, 8 W.R. 116 (120).

and management are separate, only two inferences are possible, either that there had been a separation or that it was an arrangement for convenience of management. The latter would be presumed if the profits received by different members were unequal and there was a blending of the funds at times. But if the profits were in set order and received by members without mutual accountability it would be treated as a prima facie case of separation.[1]

1562. Agreement to Divide.—It has already been stated before that an agreement to divide has the effect of partition. Such agreement may be express or implied. When it is express, the question is one of construction. When implied, it is one for inference from the proved and admitted facts and circumstances of each case. The question whether a mere agreement to divide operates as partition was first settled in Appovier's case[2] in accordance with the current of existing decisions[3] and has been since followed in numerous cases.[4] The contrary laid down in some cases[5] can no longer be maintained. Where a party pleads separation but no express agreement to separate, the latter, if proved, cannot be put out of account.[6]

Clause (2) (d).

1563. Definement of Shares.—"A definition of shares in revenue and village papers affords by itself but a very slight indication of an actual separation in a Hindu family" and is by itself insufficient to rebut the natural presumption in favour of its jointness.[7] "The Collector's book is kept for purposes of revenue, not for purposes of title. The fact of a person's name being entered in Collector's book as occupant of land does not necessarily of itself establish that person's title or defeat the title of any other person,"[8] But such entries may follow, indeed, they ordinarily do, the definement of Clause (2) (e).

---

(1) Adi v. Dukharan, 5 A. 532.

(2) Appovier v. Rama, (1866) 11 M. I.A. 75.

(3) Prawn Kissen v. Ram Sundaree, (1842) Fulton 110; Bulakee v. Indurputtee, 3 W.R. 41; Badamoo v. Wazer Singh, 5 W.R. 78; Mahabeer v. Kundun, 8 W.R. 116 (Jackson, J., dubitante), affirmed O.A. Doorga Pershad v. Kundun, 21 W.R. 214, (held that Jackson, J.'s doubt unjustified).

(4) Kulponath v. Mewah Lall, 8 W. R. 302; Debee Pershad v. Phool Koeree, 12 W.R. 510; Bikramjeet v. Phoolhas, 14 W.R. 340: (345); Suraneni v. Suraneni, 3 B.L.R. 41 P.C.; Doorga Pershad v. Kundun, 21 W.R. 214 P.C.; Jog Narain v. Girish Chunder, 4 C. 434 P.C.; Raghubanundi v. Sadhu Churn, 4 C. 425; Madho v. Mehrban, 18 C. 157 P. C.; Budha Mal v. Bhagwan Das, 18 C. 302 P.C.; Ram Pershad v. Lakhpati, 30 C. 231 P.C.; Balkishen v. Ram Narain, 30 C. 738 P.C.; Parbati v. Naunihal Singh, 31 C. 412 P.C.; Girja Bai v. Sadashiv, 43 C. 1031 P.C.; Girdhar v. Krishna Dutt, 39 M.L.J. 18: 56 I.C. 293 P.C.; Amrit Rao v. Mukund Rao, 15 N.L.R. 165 P.C.: 53 I.C. 866; Ranjit Singh v. Gujraj, L.R. 1 I.A. 9; Kandasami v. Dorasami, 2 M. 317; Komalambal v. Krishnaswamy, (1911) M.W.N. 310: 10 I.C. 385; Adi v. Dhukaran, 5 A. 532; Ramlal v. Debi Dat, 10 A. 490; Chidambaram v. Nachiar, 2 M. 83 P.C.; Ananta v. Damodhar, 13 B. 25; Ramadhuri v. Bisheshar, 37 I.C. (O.) 111.

(5) Sheodyal v. Judoonath, 9 W.R. 61, but see it explained by Wilson, J., in Tej Protab v. Champa, 12 C. 96; Phuljhari (In re), 17 W.R. 102; Ambika v. Sukhmani, 1 A. 437; Babaji v. Kashi Bai, 4 B. 157; Sakharam v. Hari, 6 B. 113 (decree insufficient); Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149 (150) (Mere declaration insufficient, giving of "some trifle" necessary).

(6) Kasan v. Jarawar, (1922) 18 N. 127 P.C.

(7) Gajendar v. Sardar, 18 A. 176, cited with approval in Nageshar v. Ganesha, 42 A. 368 (381) P.C.

(8) Bhagoji v. Bapuji, 10 B.H.C.R. 187, cited with approval in Nageshar v. Ganesha, 42 A. 368: (380, 381) P.C.; Kanha Lal v. Paul Sahu, (1920) Pat. 305: 57 I.C. 353.

shares, which if unexplained, would be evidence of partition[1] and it will be strong if it is followed up by entries of separate interests in the revenue records.[2] The question in such cases is one of intention. Was the definement of shares made on the hypothetical basis of an assumed partition to define the interest of each coparcener, or did it follow an actual partition or an intention to hold the estate in severalty.[3]

1564. The rule was thus stated in Appovier's case:[4] "But when the members of the undivided family agree among themselves with regard to particular property that it shall thenceforth be the subject of ownership in certain defined shares, then the character of undivided property and joint enjoyment is taken away from the subject-matter so agreed to be dealt with, and in the estate each member has thenceforth a definite and certain share which he may claim to receive and to enjoy in severalty, although the property itself has not become actually severed and divided." So, where two brothers Gannu and Lalji who were originally joint, owing to dispute between their wives, began to drift away from each other till finally they became separate in mess, worship and business. Lalji had built for himself a separate dwelling-house on a site acquired by him. He got his name separately entered in the land records and commenced to make separate realization of his income from which the court presumed separation[5] (§ 1557).

1565. Of course, all these facts may be explained away as consistent with continued jointness. As the Privy Council observed: "It was contended on behalf of the appellants in the present suit that, although the decree in the suit of 1868, may have effected a separation quoad Tundan and Tukan, it left the plaintiffs united inter se: and that this might have been the legal effect of the decree is undeniable. But here again the conduct of the parties must be looked at, in order to arrive at what constitutes the true test of partition of property according to Hindu Law, namely, the intention of the members of the family to become separate owners."[6] This may be illustrated by the converse case. One Baijnath died leaving four sons, two by each of his two wives. His two sons by his junior wife were minors and she applied for a certificate for managing the property of her minor sons. A son by the other wife opposed the application on the ground that the family was joint. On the death of the father the names of all the four sons had been registered with specification of their respective shares and it was contended that this, coupled with the application for management, amounted to partition. But the court found that the shares of the brother had to be specified in compliance with provisions of the Land Registration Act and that the application for management had been made under an erroneous impression that such application was maintainable even as regards a member of a joint family. There was then a division of rights, without any intention to divide and the family was, therefore, held to be joint in spite of the definement of shares.[7]

1566. But, of course, the definement of shares would be sufficient to constitute partition if it is made with that intention. The Settlement and

(1) Ram Pershad v. Lakhpati, 30 C. 231 (253) P.C.; Ram Singh v. Tursa, 17 C.W.N. 1085 P.C.
(2) Ram Lal v. Debi Dat, 10 A. 490.
(3) Sri Gobind v. Birj Kumar, 6 I.C. (Pat.) 639 (669); Sadananda v. Bailunth, 2 Pat.L.J. 299.
(4) Appovier v. Rama, 11 M.I.A. 75.
(5) Gannu v. Bhagwati, 3 I.C. (C.) 234 (239).
(6) Ram Pershad v. Lakhpati, 30 C. 231 (253) P.C.
(7) Hollash Kooer v. Kassee, 7 C. 369.

other Revenue Officers sometimes allot shares of their own motion to the different members of the family with a view to maintain a record of all possible sharers. If this is not a voluntary act at the instance of the coparceners, it cannot constitute separation. But if the sharers get their separate shares recorded in the revenue papers, then it would clearly be evidence from which separation might be inferred.[1] But the mere mention of shares in the record of rights or in the mutation register[2] is not sufficient.[3] But in a case where half-brothers claimed a deceased brother's share in certain villages and lands against his widow, whose name, as also those of his half-brothers, had been separately recorded in the revenue records, and it was in evidence that the half-brothers had executed separate mortgages in respect of their respective shares, and they did not go into the witness box to explain how these transactions, though separate, were consistent with jointness, the Privy Council held that their acts were only consistent with the hypothesis of separation.[4] So, where, following up a quarrel, a coparcener applied to have his name separately recorded in respect of his defined share in the Khewat, the court held his conduct to amount to separation from the joint family[5] (§ 1532).

1567. Purchase in Individual Names.—It is quite common in joint families to make purchases in the names of individual members, either for luck or in recognition of their coparcenery rights, and at times, it is to be feared, from a desire to provide against the rainy day in case the family debts should outgrow its assets. In any case, that circumstance alone raises no presumption of separation, though it is evidence which, when taken with other facts, may suffice to establish it. But of itself it is insufficient[6] (§ 1553).

1568. These observations were, however, made in a case in which all members of the family were converts to Christianity. In that case it is clear that all may renounce the religion but continue to preserve their joint status.[7] The case would, however, be different, where while the family remains Hindu, only some of its members renounce Hinduism. In that case, it is possible that, by common consent of all the members, the family may still continue joint, but in the absence of such consent, conversion will be presumes to effect a severance.[8] (S. 4.)

---

(1) Heonee v. Dhurum, 3 N.W.P.H. C.R. 108.

(2) Ram Singh v. Thursa, 17 C.W. N. 1085 P.C.

(3) Jowar Dhari v. Narsingh, 1 I.C. 899; Gajendar v. Sardar, 18 A. 176, cited with approval in Nageshar v. Ganesha, 42 A. 368 (381) P.C.

(4) Ram Singh v. Tursa, 17 C.W. N. 1085 P.C.

(5) Sheo Deyal v. Lalta Prasad, 23 O.C. 184; 58 I.C. 608.

(6) Prankishen v. Mothoramohan, 10 M.I.A. 403; Gopee Krist v. Ganga Persaud, 6 M.I.A. 53; Luximan v. Mullar, 5 W.R. 67 P.C.; Cheetha v. Miheen, 11 M.I.A. 369; Amrit v. Gauri; 13 M.I.A. 542; Pran Nath v. Kashi Nath, (1864) W.R. 169; Kishen v. Janoke, W.R. (F.B.) 3; Deela v. Toofanee, 1 W.R. 306; Nilmoney v. Gunga, 1 W.R. 334; Gopee v. Bhagwan, 12 W.R. 7; Heera v. Bidyadhur, 21 W. R. 343; Jugodumba v. Rohinee, 23 W.R. 422; Ramphul v. Degnarain, 8 C. 517; Narayan v. Anaji, 5 B. 130; Cassumbhoy v. Ahmedbhoy, 12 B. 280 (309); Balaram v. Ramachandra, 22 B. 922; Subhayya v. Chellama, 9 M. 477; Subhayya v. Surayya, 10 M. 251; Gajender v. Sardar, 18 A. 176.

(7) Ghosal v. Ghosal, 31 B. 25; dissenting from contra in Tellis v. Saldhana, 10 M. 69; following Gajapathi v. Gajapathi, 14 W.R. (P.C.) 33; Lopez v. Lopez, 12 C. 702 (706).

(8) Kulada v. Haripada, 40 C. 407 (418, 419); Gobin v. Abdul Qayyan, 25 A. 546 (573), reversed O.A. on a different point; Karimuddin v. Gobind, 31 A. 497 P.C.; Khunnilal v. Gobind, 33 A. 356 P.C., reversing O.A. Gobind v. Khunnilal, 29 A. 487.

Clause (2).

1569. Independent Dealings.—Independent dealings by a member with a stranger, and what is more, with another member of the family, showing mutual credits and debits, is a very strong index of separation.[1]

This may, however, be for the facility of accounting, as in the case of banking families with several shops who trade with one another on independent footing though at the close of the year their profits and losses are amalgamated with those of the head shop which prepares a consolidated balance sheet to indicate the progress of business. It is, however, against the rules of coparcenership that the widow should succeed to her husband. Where it is so, and the other coparceners have dealings with her as the heir of the husband, it raises a strong prima facie case of separation.[2] The mutual dealings between quondam coparceners are, of course, far more conclusive than coparceners' dealings with outsiders. But even in this case, it is evidence, which must vary in degree according to circumstances. Suppose, for instance, that a family banker opens independent accounts with different coparceners who deal with him taking advances and making payments independently of each other, it would be evidence that each had a separate chest which would destroy one symbol of jointness. So again, the longer such dealings continue the stronger would be the presumption against jointness. On the other hand, it may be that such dealings are merely resorted to for convenience and in the interest of the joint family. But this must be proved. It cannot be presumed.

Explanation.

1570. Stranger's Seizure Ineffectual.—The last clause states a rule which is a necessary corollary of the main principle that intention is the sole test of partition. Where therefore, there is no intention to separate, an act of the stranger in seizing and selling the undivided interest of a coparcener in execution of a decree against him has not the effect of legal partition.[3] The case would, however, be different where the coparcener voluntarily sells away his share in all the coparcenary property, in which case, the joint tenancy in respect of the share alienated is put an end to, and the alienee becomes a tenant-in-common with the remaining coparceners.[4]

1571. No Separation.—It is, of course, obvious that a mere intention to separate cannot have the effect of a separation, unless such intention is expressed so as to disclose an unequivocal intention of separation. This is a question of fact dependent upon the circumstances of each case. The mere separation from commensality does not, as a necessary consequence, effect a division of the joint undivided property,[5] though it is a circumstance which is prima facie evidence of separation. Even a formal division between some members would not operate as separation of the rest inter se, unless they had intended to separate. By an award, the property of a joint family consisting of an uncle and two nephews was partitioned, one share

(1) Ram Singh v. Turasa, 17 C.W.N. 1085 (1088) P.C.; Gangabai v. Fakirgowda, 54 B. 336 P.C.; Munshi Ram v. Govinda, (1915) P.R. 123: 26 I.C. 390; Sukh Dial v. Mani Ram, 27 I.C. 489: (1915) P.R. 29; Jay Narain v. Kishun Dutt, 3 Pat. 575.

(2) Ram Singh v. Turasa, 17 C.W.N. 1085 P.C.; Sumundra v. Kale Charn, 13 W.R. 199.

(3) Secretary of State v. Rangasamy, 39 M. 831 (834) F.B., overruling Chinniyan, Re, 2 Weir's Cr.R. 43; and following Umay, Re, 2 Weir's Cr.R. 43.

(4) Soundra v. Arunchellam, 29 M. L.J. 816; Chinnu v. Kalimuthu, 35 M. 47; Srinivasa v. Krishnasamy, 11 M.L. T. 312: 15 I.C. 354.

(5) Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain, 35 A. 380 P.C.

being allotted to the uncle and one to the nephews, but nothing was said as to the shares to be taken by the nephews individually, nor did they express any desire to separate. It was held that the partition did not effect any separation between the nephews inter se.[1] A converse case was that in which there was a partition but the separated member availed himself of the services of his near agnatic relations in the administration of his property, and at the same time, he gave them maintenance and paid the expenses of their marriage and other ceremonies all of which facts were natural and probable but could not prove jointness in estate.[2] Where members have been in joint enjoyment of the estate for several generations, the mere fact that the estate has never been partitioned, is no proof of its impartibility, nor can such a plea deprive a member of his vested right of partition.[3]

1572. Limitation.—Closely allied to the question of separation is that of exclusion. Though in a normal family the possession of one is the possession of all,[4] this presumption cannot be availed of by one against whom exclusion is proved. As exclusion for twelve years suffices to quiet a claim, otherwise good, for partition, the question whether separation amounted to exclusion cannot be ignored, though what fact converts one into the other cannot be generally stated in the form of an abstract proposition. It may, however, be premised that there can be no exclusion without denial of coparcenary right. Such denial may be express or implied as if the coparcener should demand maintenance and it is refused; or that the coparcener is expelled from the joint family.[5] Such a plea was taken in a suit for partition by the plaintiff whose claim was alleged to be barred by time on the ground that his father was alleged to have been expelled from the family for his misconduct. Both parties adduced voluminous evidence which the Privy Council rejected as equally untrustworthy. There remained the fact that for five years before the suit, the plaintiff had reappeared in the village and was recognized as a member of the family, which was held to be sufficient to support his claim to partition.[6]

1573. Where the title is clear, the court is loath to presume exclusion from a mere non-participation in profits of the joint property. The rule of the English common law that the entry and possession of one of several owners having a joint title enures for the benefit of all and is tantamount to a possession of them all[7] has been modified in England by statute,[8] but since there is no similar statutory modification of the common law applicable to this country, the English common law rule still obtains here,[9] the result being that while in England, possession is prima facie

(1) Durga Dei v. Balmukund, 29 A. 93.

(2) Deoki Singh v. Anupa, 10 C.W. N. 338 P.C.: 16 M.L.J. 109.

(3) Durryao Singh v. Dari Singh, 13 B.L.R. 165 (168) P.C.

(4) Parmanand v. Krishna, 14 C.L. J. 183: 12 I.C. 6.

(5) Jeolal v. Loke Narayan, 16 C.W. N. 466 P.C.: 15 I.C. 184.

(6) Jeolal v. Loke Narayan, 16 C. W. N. 466 P.C.: 15 I.C. 184.

(7) Per Wood, V.C., in Thomas v. Thomas, 2 K. & J. 79, 69 E.R. 70 (83), followed in Codea v. Appuhamy, (1912) A.C. 230 (236).

(8) 3 & 4 Wm., IV, C. 27, S. 12, under which the entry of one does no longer vest the possession in all. On the contrary, the statute makes the title of such person separate from the date of entry; per West, J., in Dadoba v. Krishna, 7 B. 34 (39); per Lord Macnaghten in Corea v. Appuhamy, (1912) A. C. 230 (236).

(9) Per Lord Macnaghten in Corea v. Appuhamy, (1912) A.C. 230 (236) (a case from Ceylon).

exclusive and adverse, possession here is never so treated if it can be traced to any lawful title. Even as between tenants-in-common, the possession of one is not necessarily adverse to the rest unless there is ouster.[1]

1574. This was settled by the Privy Council in an appeal from Ceylon in which a coparcener had set his possession as adverse to the rest upon which the Privy Council observed: "Entering into possession and having a lawful title to enter, he could not divest himself of that title by pretending that he had no title at all. His title must have enured for the benefit of his coproprietors....His possession was in law the possession of his co-owners. It was not possible for him to put an end to that possession by any secret intention in his mind. Nothing short of ouster or something equivalent to ouster could bring about that result."[2]

Parties to partition.

187 (1) Any person entitled to claim partition may sue for it.[3]

(2) All persons entitled to a share therein are necessary parties.[4]

(3) But a person in possession of any property under the joint family is not a necessary party.[5]

Inclusion of property.

(4) Except as otherwise provided in this behalf, a suit for partition must relate to all property, partible at the time and subject to the jurisdiction of the court, in which the suit is instituted.[6]

(5) Where, however, such property is situate within the jurisdiction of more than one court, suits may be brought in the several courts possessing the requisite jurisdiction.[7]

Illustrations.

(a) A, B and C are coparceners. D is their mother who is also entitled to a share. A wishes to separate from B and C. He must sue both B and C impleading his mother D.[8]

(b) A, B and C are coparceners. D, the wife of a predeceased brother, is in possession of a village given to her out of the family estate in lieu of her maintenance. A sues for a general partition. D is not a necessary party as she has no right to a share.

---

(1) Gangadhar v. Parashram, 14 B. 236; Daudkhan v. Govinda, 5 N.L. R. 41.

(2) Corea v. Appuhamy, (1912) A.C. 230 (236), followed in Faizuddin v. Reju, 21 C.L.J. 192; Biseswar v. Bhagabati, 24 C.L.J. 38: 35 I.C. 26; Jogendra v. Baladeb, 35 C. 961; Ram Parson v. Kalab Husain, 36 I.C. (A.) 100; Ahmad v. Ramlal, 37 A. 203; Asghar v. Akbar Husain, 36 I.C. (O.) 743; Marian v. Kadir, 29 I.C. (M.) 275.

(3) Sheo Dayal v. Jadunath, 9 W.R. 61; Raoji v. Anant, 42 B. 535.

(4) See Ss. 168, 170.

(5) See §§ 1864-1866.

(6) S. 16 (b) and Or. II, rr. 1, 2, C.P. Code; Jogendra Nath Mukerji v. Jugobandhu Mukerji, 14 C. 122, followed in Doman Lal v. Prokash Lal, 18 I.C. 866; Rajendra v. Bojendra, 37 C.L.J. 191: 77 I.C. 790: (1923) C. 501; Venkayya v. Lakshmayya, 16 M. 98; Mukunda v. Jogesh, 1 Pat.L.J. 393: 35 I.C. 370: 20 C.W.N. 1276; Subramania v. Ramchandra, 85 I.C. 503: (1925) M. 333; Haridas Sanyal v. Pran Nath Sanyal, 12 C. 566, followed in Gourishankar Parbhuram v. Atmaram Rajaram, 18 B. 611 (613); Punchanun Mullick v. Shib Chunder Mullick, 14 C. 835; Balaram Bhaskarji v. Ramchandra Bhaskarji, 22 B. 922; Abdul Karim v. Badrudeen, 28 M. 216; Ramacharya v. Anantacharya, 18 B. 389.

(7) Ss. 16 (b), 17, ib. Punchanun Mullick v. Shib Chunder Mullick, 14 C. 835; Balaram Bhaskarji v. Ramchandra Bhaskarji, 22 B. 922; Abdul Karim v. Badrudeen, 28 M. 216; Ramacharya v. Anantacharya, 18 B. 389.

(8) Torit Bhoosun v. Tara Prosonno, 4 C. 756.

1575. Analogous Law.—Partition suits are subject to the modern statutory procedure which has abrogated the Hindu processual law on the subject. "The ordinary rule is that if persons are entitled beneficially to shares in an estate, they may have a partition."[1] Section 179 enumerates those persons who are all entitled to sue for partition. It is not necessary that they should all jointly claim partition. Every member is individually entitled to the partition of his share, which he may put in suit. But persons merely entitled to a share at partition, are not entitled to sue for it. Nor are minors, who may, however, be allowed partition in certain cases already started (§§ 1492, 1493).

1576. Every person interested in a partition suit must be impleaded either as a co-plaintiff or as a co-defendant, because a partition suit is not a suit in rem and will bind only those who are so impleaded, or whom they represent. Clause (4) follows the provisions of section 16 (b) and Order II, Rules 1 and 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and clause (5) follows those of Sections 16 (b) and 17 of the Code; and both the clauses are supported by the decided cases. If any co-sharer applies for a partition of a property he must make the other co-sharers defendants, because the partition which is made in his favour is a partition against his co-sharers. That which gives him a portion of the property takes all rights which they would otherwise have to that portion, and, therefore, it is a decree against them, and in favour of himself."[2] This necessity for impleading all persons entitled to a share is obvious, since in a suit for partition by a person, a share cannot be ascertained without hearing the other sharers. The quantum of the plaintiff's share can only be determined with reference to the number of sharers and their respective shares.[3]

1577. Only sharers and not all possible claimants should be arrayed in a partition suit. For instance, in a partition between the father and his sons, the sons who have separated from their father have no shares.[4] They need not then be joined. The persons entitled to claim partition are set out in Section 179. They are necessary parties. So are the persons entitled to a share, such as the wife, mother[5] or grandmother, the unmarried sister[6] enunciated in Section 182. They are equally necessary parties.

Purchaser of undivided shares should also be impleaded.[7]

But a mere maintenance grantee is not a necessary or a proper party.[8] The case of mortgagees and lessees will be presently considered (§§ 1581-1582).

1578. Necessary Parties.—In a partition between two or more branches of a family, the sons and grandsons of the several branches are not necessary parties, since they are sufficiently represented by the heads of each branch.[9] It is a general rule that all persons interested ought to be made parties to a suit, however numerous they may be, so that the court

(1) Per Lord Hobhouse in Shankar v. Hardeo, 16 C. 397 (405) P.C.

(2) Nalini Kanta v. Sarnamoyi, 19 C. W.N. 531 P.C.: 24 I.C. 294.

(3) Ashidbai v. Abdulla, 8 Bom.L. R. 758; Pahaladi v. Luchmunbutty, 12 W.R. 256.

(4) Ganesh v. Gobind Rao, (1898) B.P.J. 288.

(5) Torit v. Taraprosonno, 4 C. 756; Laljeet v. Raj Coomar, 20 W.R. 336 (340).

(6) Laljeet v. Raj Coomar, 20 W.R. 336 (340).

(7) Pahaladhi v. Luchmunbutty, 12 W.R. 256; Laljeet v. Raj Coomar, 20 W. R. 336 (340); Nalini Kanta v. Sarnamoyi, 19 C.W.N. 531; Sadu v. Ram, 16 B. 608; Lakshman v. Gopal, 23 B. 385 (393); Vinayak v. Ramkrishna, (1880) B.P.J. 180 (purchasers of coparcenary interest must be made parties to a family partition).

(8) Sabta Prasad v. Dharmi Kurti, 35 A. 107 (108).

(9) Bishambhar v. Kanshi Parshad, 13 L. 483.

may be enabled to do complete justice by deciding upon and settling the rights of all persons interested and that the orders of the court may be safely executed by those who are compelled to obey them and future litigation may be prevented.[1] It is in obedience to this rule that in partition suits all known co-sharers must be before the court.[2] The term "known co-sharers" covers all who are known to have an interest in the property, and it is not limited to those whose names may have been recorded under any Act.[3] Where it cannot be ascertained with precision that any coparcener is alive, then both the unascertained coparcener and his legal representatives should be impleaded as defendants.[4] The owner of twelve annas share in a joint zemindari granted to the plaintiff a mukarari lease of his share in a small portion of land within the zemindari. The owner of the remaining four annas share granted patni of his share in the whole zemindari to the defendant. The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant for partition of the small plot of land. It was held that such a suit was not maintainable without the Zemindars as parties, for if such a claim were allowed, the defendants might in respect of the same estate be subjected to many claims for partition at the suit of persons in the plaintiff's position.[5] So, where the plaintiff sued for the partition of certain jamas, to a half-share of which they were entitled as tenants under the owner M of a share of the proprietary title. The title to possession of the remaining half-share of the jamas was in S, the owner of the remaining half-share of the proprietary title. The proprietors as between themselves were undivided in respect of the jamas. The suit had been brought against S alone. The first court decreed the suit, but the lower appellate court set aside the decree and remanded the suit for the purpose of giving the plaintiff an opportunity to bring M on the record. It was held that M was, if not a necessary party, at least a proper party to the suit as his presence was necessary in order to enable the court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in it.[6]

1579. It has already been stated that all persons entitled to a share in the property must be impleaded in a suit for its partition; since the separation of the plaintiff's share takes away all the right which they would have to that portion, and that a decree obtained by the plaintiff is thus necessarily a decree against them. If, therefore, a person was made a defendant and his share ascertained, though not partitioned off, he could not maintain another suit for recovery of a larger share on the ground that the previous suit did not allot him any share. If the apportionment of shares in the previous suit was wrong it was open to him to move for the correction of that error. But he could not ignore the decision of that suit which is res judicata against him.[7]

1580. Unnecessary Parties.—A widow in possession of properties in lieu of maintenance may or may not be a necessary party to a suit for

(1) Mitford on Pleading, p. 190, cited, per Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J., in Chudasama v. Parbat Singh, 28 B. 209 (213, 214); Amrut v. Mukund, 5 N. L.R. 152: 4 I.C. 236.

(2) Pahaladh v. Luchmunbutty, 12 W.R. 256 (259); Kali Kanta v. Gouri Prasad, 17 C. 906, followed in Chudasama v. Partap Singh, 28 B. 209 (214).

(3) Chudasama v. Partab Singh, 28 B. 209 (214) (a case under the Gujrat Taluqdar's Act, Bom. Act VI of 1888, S. 12 set out in 28 B. 209—note); Uchhap v. Lakhan, 9 C.P.L.R. 93.

(4) Srinath v. Probadh, 11 C.L.J. 580: 6 I.C. 244.

(5) Parbati v. Ainuddin, 7 C. 577 (580, 581).

(6) Indu Bhushan v. Sailaja, 7 I.C. (C.) 382.

(7) Nalini Kanta v. Sharnamayi, 19 C.W.N. 531 P.C.: 24 I.C. 294.

partition. She is not a necessary party if the partition does not affect her right, and no question of her right is to be determined in the suit.[1] But in an ordinary family partition when her right may have to be determined and a share allotted to her in lieu of maintenance, she is a necessary party and cannot be ignored. In a partition of tenancy rights, the landlord is not a necessary party.[2] But a permanent lease-holder, is a necessary party to a partition suit between two grantees[3] the decision being made on the ground that any other course would lead to multifariousness. In a partition of proprietary rights, the mortgagee of a share is not a necessary party since such mortgagee is on partition entitled to the share allotted to his co-sharer in lieu of that mortgaged to him.[4] In a suit for partition by patnidars against dar-patnidars under his co-patnidar, the co-patnidars must be made parties; but a dar-patnidar is not a necessary party.[5]

1581. Mortgagee.—It has already been stated that a "mortgagee is not a necessary party to a partition suit, but he may, and frequently, does obtain leave to attend the proceedings as a quasi-party."[6] In Bombay, it has been held that both the purchaser of a share and a mortgagee are proper and even necessary parties to a partition suit since their right may have to be decided and, if necessary, marshalled.[7] But the necessity for that joinder must depend upon something more than a mere possibility. For instance, if the mortgage is admitted, the joinder of the mortgagee would be wholly unnecessary.[8] On the other hand, where the factum or validity of the mortgage is disputed, the mortgagee may well be joined to support his title. So again, where the alienee from a coparcener claims his coparcener's share, he would be a necessary party,[9] and, e converso, where a co-sharer disputes his alienation.[10] The rule as to joinder is not inflexible but depends upon the quantum of interest possessed by the alienee and how far it is likely to be jeopardized by his absence from the suit.

1582. Lessee.—An ordinary lessee is not a necessary party to a partition suit between his lessors. But a permanent lessee may be regarded as a purchaser and will be entitled to similar privileges and subject to similar liabilities.[11] Such is a mukarari[12] or a putni lease in Bengal.[13]

1583. Partition Must Be Exhaustive.—"Once is a partition made."[14] Consequently, the plaintiff is ordinarily bound to bring his suit for a general

Clause (4).

(1) Sabba Prasad v. Dharam Kirti, 35 A. 107 (108); Brojendra Nath v. Lalit Mohan, 45 C.L.J. 41; (1927) C. 262. (Similarly, an idol is not a necessary party if there is no dispute about its rights).

(2) Indu Bhushan v. Sailaja, 7 I.C. (C.) 382.

(3) Parbati v. Ainuddin, 7 C. 577.

(4) Narendra v. Saroda Kanto, 6 I. C. 829.

(5) Upendra v. Mhd. Faiz, 12 C.W. N. 670.

(6) Per Sale, J., in Khetterpal v. Khelal, 21 C. 904 (909).

(7) Sadu v. Ram, 16 B. 608 (612): followed in Ikbal Narain v. Suraj Narain, 10 O.C. 33; Mahadeo v. Bhawani, 5 O.L.J. 193: 46 I.C. 281.

(8) Ram Samugh v. Bikramajit, 6 O. L.J. 142: 50 I.C. 876.

(9) Dularam v. Badal Das, 10 S.L.R. 34: 35 I.C. 478.

(10) Mahadeo v. Bhawani, 5 O.L.J. 193: 46 I.C. 281.

(11) Dildar v. Bhowani, 34 C. 878.

(12) Bhagwat Sahai v. Bepin Behari, 37 C. 918, P.C.

(13) Uma Sundari v. Beande Lal, 34 C. 1026; Hemadri v. Ramani, 24 C. 575 (581) F.B. (dissenting from Mukundo v. Leurans, 20 C. 379), followed in Kishore v. Girdhari, 1 Pat.L.J. 441: 20 C.W.N. 1306: 35 I.C. 861.

(14) Manu, X-47; Dadajee v. Wittal, Bom.L.R. 151; Nanabhai v. Nathabhai, 7 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 46; Narayan v.

partition which should include all property then available for partition. The only exceptions to this rule are those enumerated in section 183.

1584 A member of an undivided family cannot sue his co-sharers for his share in a single item of joint property such as a house[1] or an undivided field. He must sue for a general partition.[2] But this does not mean that a person is bound to join in one suit a prayer for partition of all property held by him jointly with the other members of his family as well as with them and a stranger. The two causes of action are distinct for "it cannot be said that the claim of the plaintiffs to obtain their share of property owned jointly by them and B is founded on the same cause of action as their claim to obtain the share of property owned jointly by them and B and C. If the cause of action is founded on a refusal on the part of the defendants to divide, then the refusal in each case is that of different persons owning differnt rights. If it is founded on the right to claim a partition of what is joint, then that subject-matter is different, for the joint property of A and B is not the joint property of A, B and C."[3] Two other exceptions to the rule are furnished by (a) the properties being situate in different jurisdictions, and (b) where a portion of the property is not immediately available for partition by reason of its being in possession of a mortgagee, or because it was inam, the partition of which required the sanction of Government.[4] It follows that a coparcener cannot require another to account to him for the income of the joint property so long as the family continues joint. But if the family has become separate, there is, then, of course, no objection to a suit instituted by one for unauthorized receipts by the other. A formal partition is not necessary.[5]

1585. In such cases, the plaintiff may, but is not, bound to it institute several suits at the same time in order to bring all the family property into a single partition.[6] But as will be presently seen, all such properties must necessarily be taken into account in a satisfactory division of shares.[7] If, therefore, some of the property is situate beyond the jurisdiction of the court it may stay proceedings till the other property is satisfactorily disposed of, or in the case of the High Court, it may grant leave to include it in the same suit.[8]

Clause (5).

1586. Procedure in Partition Suits.—The plaintiff entitled to partition cannot sue for a mere declaration of his title[9] or for accounts of

---

Nana, ib., p. 178; Trimbak v. Narayani, 11 B.H.C.R. 71; Shivmurtappa v. Virappa, 24 B. 128; Anundi Bai v. Hari, 35 B. 293; Padmamani v. Jagadamba, 6 B.L.R. 140; Haridas v. Pran Nath, 12 C. 566; Jogendro v. Jugobundhu, 14 C. 122.

(1) Venkayya v. Lakshmayya, 16 M. 98.

(2) Nanabhai v. Nathubhai, 7 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 46; Chyet Narain v. Bunwari, 23 W.R. 395; Haridass v. Pran Nath, 12 C. 566.

(3) Per Parsons, J., in Purushottam v. Atmaram, 23 B. 597 (598, 599); Kailash Chandra v. Nityanand, 11 C.L.J. 384; Jogendra v. Sirishchandra, 1 I.C. 110; Ram Dayal v. Uttim Matho, 5 Pat.L.W. 122: 46 I.C. 255 (263); Gangaya v. Venkatarayaliah, 41 M. 454.

(4) Purushottam v. Atmaram, 23 B. 597, (600).

(5) Penta v. Mudiya, 19 M.L.J. 399: 4 I.C. 34 (head-note misleading).

(6) Ramacharya v. Anantacharya, 7 B. 272; Purushottam v. Atmaram, 23 B. 597 (600); Mahalingam v. Natasen, (1916) 1 M.W.N. 146: 32 I.C. 423.

(7) Hari v. Ganpatrav, 7 B. 272 922 (928); Subbiah v. Thulasi, 4 M.L.T. 527: 22 I.C. 44.

(8) Padmamani v. Jagadamba, 6 B. L.R. 134.

(9) Shashi Bhushan v. Jotindra, 38 C. 681; Nalini Kanta v. Samamoya, 19 C. W.N. 531 P.C.: 24 I.C. 294.

any or all of the properties,[1] though he may sue for joint possession,[2] or restoration of his previous khas possession.[3]

The first thing that the court has to see is that the suit is properly laid. In an ordinary suit for division of rights or enjoyment, when there is no question of exclusion from joint possession the court-fee of Rs. 10 should suffice.[4] The value for the purpose of the court's jurisdiction is the value of the plaintiff's share in the estate.[5]

1587. It is the duty of the plaintiff to sue and of the court to see that he has sued for a complete partition. If he has omitted to sue for it, it is his duty to explain. All coparceners must be impleaded in the suit whether they admit or object to partition. The plaintiff's right to partition depends upon his title and not upon the defendant's refusal to give him his share. He need not, therefore, state more than that he has a share and that he wishes for its separation.[6] But if the plaintiff is a minor, then he must show cause why his share should be partitioned; for he cannot obtain a partition as a matter of course (§§ 1492, 1493). In addition to the coparceners, all persons claiming a right to a share, e.g., the mother, the coparcener's alienee, or the idol to whom a share has to be allotted, would have to be impleaded—unless their right is admitted, in which case they need not be impleaded.[7]

1588. If the defendants admit the claim, and there is nothing to go before the Commissioner or the Collector, the Court may at once pass a final decree. It is not bound to decree the claim in two stages in every case. If the defendants contest the suit, it must be tried like any other suit. If the defence is that the plaintiff is suing for partition, while he is keeping back the property in his possession which must have been put into the hotchpot, the court may compel him to do so, or throw out his claim.[8] If the defendants wish their own shares to be ascertained and partitioned off they will be permitted to do so on payment of the requisite court-fee.[9] In such a case, the parties are in the position of cross claimants and each will have to prove his case and will be allotted his share.[10] Where the plaintiff's title is denied, the first thing he must do is to prove it. If he is found to have no share at all, there is no suit for partition and consequently, no necessity to determine the defendant's share.[11] But it is open to the plaintiff to claim partition or in the alternative, possession of the property bequeathed to him in his father's will. If the partition fails because he

(1) Pirthu Rai v. Jowahir Singh 14 C. 493 P.C.; Gavri Shankar v. Atmaram, 18 B. 611; Ganpat v. Annaji, 23 B. 144; but see Penta v. Mudiya, 19 M.L.J. 399: 4 I.C. 34.

(2) Huloodhur v. Gooroo, 20 W.R. 126. See cases cited in 1 Gour's Law of Transfer, (6th Ed.), §§ 822-830.

(3) Watson & Co. v. Ramchand, 18 C. 10 (21) P.C.; Luchemeswar v. Manowar, 19 C. 253 P.C. and cases cited in 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), §§ 826-828.

(4) Kirti Churn v. Aunath, 8 C. 757; Mohendro v. Ashutosh, 20 C. 702; Nandalal v. Kalipada, 59 C. 315; Bidhata v. Ramcharibat, 12 C.W.N. 37; Gill v. Naradarashavayya, 43 M. 396; Tarachand v. Afzal Beg, 34 A. 184; Asa Ram v. Jagannath, 15 L. 531 F.B.; Nana Nyun v. Mg. Uya, I.L.R. (1937) R. 447.

(5) Velu v. Kumaravelu, 20 M. 289.

(6) Mitta v. Neerunjun, 22 W.R. 437; Shama Soonderee v. Jardine Skinner & Co., 12 W.R. 160.

(7) Brojendra Nath v. Lalit Mohan, 45 C.L.J. 41: (1927) C. 262.

(8) Mahbub v. Abdul, (1912) P.L.R. 84: 13 I.C. 819.

(9) Abu v. Amin, (1875) B.P.J. 218; Sadruddin v. Nooruddin, 29 B. 79.

(10) Khoorshed v. Nubee Fatma, 3 C. 551; Shivmurtappa v. Virappa, 24 B. 128.

(11) Ashid Bai v. Abdulla, 8 Bom.L.R. 758; Mewa Singh v. Basant Singh, 28 C.L.J. 530 P.C.: 48 I.C. 540.

has failed to bring the property in his possession into hotchpot it is no reason for not investigating his alternative claim.[1] Where the plaintiff denies the existence of other properties the Court should direct an enquiry into the existence,[2] and if the plaintiff expresses his willingness to bring it into hotchpot, his suit should not be dismissed.[3] A suit for partition may be dismissed because the plaintiff was governed by the Aliyasantan Law which does not admit of the right to partition[4] though it admits of a family arrangement for the separate enjoyment of property.[5] Prima facie, however, all joint property is subject to partition and the onus of proof is on the party seeking to except any property from the general rule.[6]

1589. Even though the land is in the possession of tenants entitled to be in possession under subsisting leases, that would not be a bar to a partition of the property among the members of the family.[7] Where a coparcener's interest in coparcenary property is sold at the instance of his creditor, the balance of the sale proceeds does not cease to be coparcenary property and is, therefore, partible.[8]

The dismissal of a suit for partial partition does not bar another suit for a general partition of the property.[9]

A partition is limited to the interest of the person demanding it and has no enforced general operation against those who desire to live in union.[10]

Defences to a partition Suit.

188. A suit for partition may be defended on any of the following grounds, namely:—

(1) That the property in suit is not partible—

(a) because it is impartible; or

(b) because the parties are bound by a personal contract not to partition;[11]

(2) That the parties have made a family arrangement in lieu of the partition;[12]

(3) That there has already been a private partition which is final and exhaustive;[13]

(4) That the plaintiff's right of partition has become barred by time.

(5) That the plaintiff is disqualified to sue for partition because of his minority[14] or personal disqualification that precludes him from enforcing that right;[15]

---

(1) Ganshom v. Saraswati Bai, (1892) B.P.J. 415.

(2) Sri Mohan v. Mac Gregor, 28 C. 769 (789).

(3) Venkata v. Bhashya Karlu, 25 M. 367 P.C.

(4) Munda v. Timmaju, 1 M.H.C.R. 380; Timmappa v. Mahalinga, 4 M.H. C.R. 28.

(5) Sanku v. Puttamma, 14 M. 289.

(6) Luximon v. Mullar, 5 W.R. 67 P.C.

(7) Suryanarayana v. Sammana, 25 M. 504.

(8) Krishnaswami v. Rajagopala, 18 M. 73.

(9) Jogendra v. Jugobundha, 14 C. 122.

(10) Ganpat v. Gopal Rao, 1 Bom.L. R. 123.

(11) Rup Singh v. Bhubhuti, 42 A. 30; Anandchandra v. Pran Kisto, 3 Beng.L. R. (O.C.) 14; Jotish Chandra v. Rathika, 60 C. 1078, contra Ramalinga v. Ranganatham, 57 M. 405.

(12) See Ss. 185-187.

(13) See S. 195 and comm.

(14) See § 1492.

(15) See § 1489.

(6) That the plaintiff has renounced or surrendered his coparcenary right or transferred or parted with his interest therein.[1]

1590. Analogous Law.—It has already been stated that Manu and other law-givers commend partition as multiplying religious duties.[2] They do not encourage jointness. Nor does the modern law. It is therefore manifest that the father cannot refuse partition to his adult son on the ground that it would be unfair to his future issue.[3] But, of course, if the property is itself impartible, it is another matter.[4]

A partition may, however, be postponed, though it cannot be prevented by an agreement inter partes. Such agreement does not bind any but those entering into it. It may also be more effectively prevented by a family arrangement or an implied partition. The subject of family arrangement has already been considered.[5]

1591. Agreement Against Partition.—There is some conflict between the decided cases, more apparent than real, as to the validity of an agreement against partition. There can be no doubt that the parties cannot by agreement make a partible estate impartible, since impartibility must arise out of a special tenure or a general family or local custom.[6] Moreover, an agreement never to divide certain property would be invalid on the ground that it alters the ordinary incident of property and tends to create a perpetuity,[7] though it may bind the actual contracts, if it is an agreement for specified time and made for a definite purpose.[8] As was observed in a case: "The right of a co-owner to have partition of his share is incident to the right of ownership, and an agreement not to partition for an indefinite period would be contrary to that right, and, therefore, not enforceable."[9] "It may be that at one time the decree for partition may cease, circumstances may again occur which made it desirable and necessary that partition should take place."[10] The fact that the agreement against partition was the subject of an award makes no difference.[11] As the Privy Council put it: "The arbitrator had no power to make property which was divisible by law indivisible for ever."[12]

Clause (3).

1592. In other words, an agreement against partition is unenforceable even as between the immediate parties to it, unless it is supported by consideration and is otherwise reasonable and proper and intended for the beneficial enjoyment of the joint property. Even then the agree-

(1) Rangasami v. Sundararamanjulu, 31 M.L.J. 472.

(2) Manu, IX-111.

(3) Kawal Nani v. Budh Singh, 39 A. 496 P.C.

(4) Ekradeshwar v. Janeshwari, 42 C. 582 P.C.; Sethuramaswami v. Meruswami, 34 M. 470: O.A. 41 M. 296 P.C.

(5) S. 206.

(6) S. 206; Ramalinga v. Virupakshi, 7 B. 598; Vinayag v. Gopal, 21 B. 458: O.A. 27 B. 353 P.C.; Pirojshah v. Mani Bhai, 36 B. 53 (56).

(7) Jafri Begam v. Ali Raza, 23 A. 383 (392) P.C.; Mukerji v. Afzool Beg, 37 A. 155; Sakhawab Ali v. Abu Said, 22 O. C. 100: 52 I.C. 73; Ramalinga v. Virupakshi, 7 B. 538; Piroj Shah v. Mani Bhai, 36 B. 53; Anand v. Prankisto, 3 B. L.R. (O.C.) 14; Rajendar v. Sham Chunder, 6 C. 106; Shookmoy v. Manohari, 7 C. 269.

(8) Ramalinga v. Pakshi Khanapure, 7 B. 538; Radhanath v. Taruknath, (1874) 3 C.W.N. 126 (128); Jotish Chandra Narain v. Radhika Chandra, 60 C. 1078; Arumugha v. Ranganathan, 57 M. 405 (410).

(9) Chandar v. Kundanlal, 31 A. 3 (4).

(10) Mukarji v. Afzal Beg, 37 A. 155 (158) following Nasartullah v. Majibullah, 13 A. 309; Bisheshar v. Ram Prasad, 28 A. 627; Madan Mohan v. Bai Kanta, 10 C.W.N. 839; contra in Gulkandi v. Munni Lal, 23 A. 219, dissented from. The statement in Rup Singh v. Bhabuti, 42 A. 30, is too wide.

(11) Rup Singh v. Bhabuti, 42 A. 30.

(12) Jafri Begam v. Ali Raza, 23 A. 383 (392) P.C.

ment does not bind the heirs and assignees of the parties,[1] not will it bind their minor sons, if it is found unfair and injurious to their interest.[2] This appears to be the dominant note of several cases.[3]

1593. Family Arrangement.—This has already been the subject of previous discussion (Ss. 164-166). A family arrangement as distinguished from a partition is an amicable settlement made by members of a joint family to avert the costliness and bitterness of a formal partition. Where, for instance, the sons desire to separate from their father and there is a dispute as to whether certain parcels of property are self-acquired or ancestral and there is no other means of settling the dispute otherwise than by the arbitrament of law, parties may give and take and execute mutual releases agreeing to hold what they have got thenceforward in severalty. It is a family arrangement and not a partition, because parties have agreed to a course without advertence to their legal rights. The motive of the settlement is the purchase of peace, and where there is a motive, the courts do not enquire into the sufficiency of consideration,[4] or disturb the arrangement on the ground of its inequality,[5] unless there was fraud or some other ground to vitiate it in law.[6] The arrangement binds both the parties and their issue.[7] This arrangement may extend to treating self-acquired property as joint or vice versa,[8] or it may be the culmination of a suit for partition in which the parties arrive at the settlement of a dispute which they desire to close.[9] Such settlement cannot be set aside upon the ground that it was accepted under a misconception of facts or an erroneous view of one's rights or that it has given to one party more than he was legally entitled to, which he would have recovered if he had taken the judgment of the court upon it.[10]

Partition Distinguished.

1594. Though a partition is confined to only specified relations, a family arrangement is not similarly limited. So the Privy Council said: "There can be no partition directly between grandfather and grandson while the father is alive. But it is a family arrangement, partaking so far of the nature of a partition that Udai Narayan receives a portion and is thenceforth totally excluded, and quoad ultra, Matadyal surrenders his interest to his grandson, who, on a complete partition among the whole family, would be entitled to one-fourth. Now, in such an arrangement, it would be quite consistent with Hindu ideas of ancestral property to express a desire that the whole generation to which the property was transferred should benefit by it. . . . The notions present to the mind of the head of joint Hindu family who is making a family arrangement are something very different from the notions present to the mind of an English testator when he makes

(1) Rajendar v. Sham Chunder, 6 C. 106; Anand v. Prankisto, 3 P.L.R. (O.C.) 14; Anath Nath v. Mackintosh, 8 B.L.R. 60; Rup Singh v. Bhabuti, 42 A. 30; Duri v. Jadpatri, 33 M. 246; Arumugha v. Ranganathan, (1933) M. 847.

(2) Kishan Lal v. Lachmichand, (1937) A. 456 (462).

(3) Ramalinga v. Virupakshi, 7 B. 538; Subharaya v. Rajaram, 25 M. 585; Chundar v. Kundanlal, 31 A. 3; Srimohan v. Macgregor, 28 C. 769 (786); Muthuraman v. Ponnuswamy, 29 M.L.J. 214: 29 I.C. (M.) 549.

(4) Lakshmi Bai v. Ganpat, 5 B.H.C. R. (O.C.) 128; Upendranath v. Bindeshri, 20 C.W.N. 210: 32 I.C. 468.

(5) Rajuader v. Bijai, 2 M.I.A. 181.

(6) Ram Das v. Chabildas, 12 Bom.L. R. 621 (624), S. 175.

(7) Anand Rao v. Administrator-General, 20 B. 450; Ram Das v. Chabildas, 12 Bom. L.R. 621 (627).

(8) Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh, 32 A. 415 (426) P.C.

(9) Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh, 32 A. 415 (426) P.C.; Khunilal v. Govind, 33 A. 356 P.C.

(10) Birbhadra v. Kalpataru, 1 C.L.J. 388 (405); Helan v. Durga Das, 4 C.L.J. 323 (331).

a gift to a class."[1] A family arrangement must, however, be distinguished from a division in status from which it may at times be indistinguishable. But it may be safely predicated that while a family arrangement carries with it no allotment of shares, an agreement for the continuance of jointness after the definement of shares is unmistakably a partition and not merely a family arrangement how-little-so-ever a change there might be in the external mode of living of the family.[2] So the partition remains a partition even though the document by which it is made should recite that in case of mismanagement or bad character of the sons, among whom the property was divided, the document would be cancelled. The clause in favour of cancellation is merely a threat and is, therefore, invalid.[3]

1595. It has already been seen that a family arrangement may be made without reference to or determination of the legal rights of the parties. The fact that a person has obtained, by a family arrangement, what he could never have obtained by partition is not blot upon its validity. Such, for instance, would be the grant of land by the holder of an impartible estate to the members of his family in the shape of maintenance or other grants. It may be that the grantee has no legal claim to maintenance, but the grant once made cannot be resumed on that account.

1956. Relinquishment.—It is open to a coparcener to relinquish his interest in the joint property. This he may do if he finds it overburdened with debts or otherwise subject to obligations which he may not care to face. So where the father of three sons had incurred considerable expense for the marriage of two of his sons for which he sold some of his properties gave them some cash and jewels and separated them from the family. The sons thereafter lived separately while the father and one son lived together. It was held that the transaction was a relinquishment by the separated sons of their interest in the remaining family properties.[4]

Clause (d).

Apart from direct relinquishment, the same result would follow from a coparcener renouncing his interest, if his renunciation is real and not merely nominal.[5]

1957. Release.—A party may relinquish his right, or execute a release which may be supported as a family arrangement.[6] But where a coparcener released his share in favour of the rest who were to pay the debts, it was held that the release was void though registered and that even S. 25 of the Contract Act could not save it. But the judgment appears to be unsound and proceeds upon the view that because the creditors could still hold him liable for the debt, the relinquishment failed for want of consideration.[7] But if the creditors could hold the coparcener liable they had their remedy against those who had taken his estate and undertaken to pay his debts.

---

(1) Bishenchand v. Asmaida, 6 A. 560 (574, 575) P.C.

(2) Raghubir Singh v. Moti, 35 A. 41 (46) P.C.; Jwala Prasad v. Janki, 7 A. L.J. 975: 7 I.C. 905.

(3) Brij Rai v. Sheo Den, 35 A. 337 (352) P.C.

(4) Rangasami v. Sundararajulu, 31 M.L.J. 472: 35 I.C. 52.

(5) Ramakrishna v. Parameshwara, (1935) P.C. 92.

(6) Sadashiv v. Trimbak, 23 B. 146 (173) (the portion laying down that a minor's contract is merely voidable and not void is unsound); contra in Appa v. Ranga, 6 M. 71 (73) (release held void as made without consideration.)

(7) Appa v. Ranga, 6 M. 71 (73).

189. (1) Every person entitled to a share may demand the partition of his share in specie and such partition may be made[1] except in the circumstances next following:—

Mode of partition.

(2) Where the thing is by its nature indivisible,[2]

(3) Where its partition in specie will destroy its intrinsic value or be otherwise inconvenient,[3] or

(4) Where its sale is demanded and justified by the Partition Act, 1893.[4]

1598. Analogous Law.—Prima facie all property is partible in specie and must be so partitioned. "It is an elementary principle that in case of partition where several persons are co-owners or co-sharers of immovable property, partition should be effected between them by giving to each his share in specie as far as practicable."[5] "The right of each sharer is to his slice of the property, not merely its money value, and it is a matter of common experience that great importance is attached in this country to the possession of a share in specie by a co-sharer of property which has belonged to the family of which he is a member, or which has descended to him from an ancestor. The law gives effect to this sentiment as far as possible."[6] This rule is, however, subject to several exceptions, which may be stated: (1) If a property can be partitioned without destroying the intrinsic value of the whole property or of the shares, such partition ought to be made; if on the contrary no partition can be made without destroying the instrinsic value, then a money compensation should be given instead of the share which would fall to a party by partition.[7] (2) if one of the coparceners wishes to keep the property entire, an opportunity should be afforded to him to do so, if he can agree on the subject with his coparceners.[8] If they cannot agree it may be sold under the Partition Act.

1599. From S. 4 of the Partition Act, the court will enforce the principle of equity in all partition cases, that when it is convenient to divide a property, it must be left in possession of the person in occupation, and the other person, who cannot conveniently get actual possession, compensated. So, where the defendants in a suit for partition were found to have built a dwelling house on a plot of 7 cottahs of land without opposition from the plaintiff, who was a stranger and owned only a one-tenth share in it and in an adjoining plot of 1 bigha 6 cottahs, the court disallowed the partition of the plots by metes and bounds, but gave the defendant option to buy up the plaintiff's shares at a proper valuation.[9] But convenience must raise a special equity against partition in specie.[10] A partition may be effected, in

Clause (4).

---

(1) Mahamed v. Haji, 7 Bom.L.R. 482.

(2) Mancharam v. Pranshankar, 6 B. 298; Sethurama v. Meruswamier, 41 M. 296 P.C.

(3) Ashanullah v. Kalikinkur, 10 C. 675.

(4) Cf. S. 4, Partition Act (IV of 1893). See Appendix.

(5) Mahamed v. Haji, 7 Bom.L.R. 482.

(6) Debindra v. Hari Das, 7 I.C. (C.) 844; Mahomed v. Haji, 7 Bom.L.R. 482.

(7) Ashanullah v. Kali Kinkur, 10 C. 675.

(8) Raj Coomaree v. Gopal Chander, 3 C. 514.

(9) Basunta v. Moti Lal, 15 C.W.N. 555; Debendra v. Haridas, 7 I.C. 844.

(10) Baja Khan v. Birju, (1878) P.R. 15.

respect of each property, by metes and bounds as also by an interchange of separate or distinct properties, and it may similarly be effected by an auction sale of any of the properties, with the right of purchase restricted to those members of the family who have a joint interest therein, to be followed by a distribution of the sale proceeds realized from the same.[1]

1600. Religious Office.—The sacred texts treat hereditary offices, whether religious or secular, as naturally indivisible, but modern custom has sanctioned their partition such as can be had of such property, by means of performance of the duties of the office and the enjoyment of the emoluments by the different coparceners in rotation.[2] A deligious office such as that of a family priest is both inalienable and indivisible both because it includes a right of personal service as also on the ground of public policy. But a distribution of duties by rotation is, nevertheless, recognized as permissible as also the relinquishment of duties by one member in favour of other members of the same family, and, if so permitted by custom, even in favour of other persons of the priestly caste.[3]

1601. Such are also Muths which are associations of Sanyasis or celibates devoted to Divine worship who impart upadesh or religious instructions to deserving candidates. The house in which they live are also called Muths. They are in the nature of colleges for the performance of religious exercise and instruction and are by their very nature impartible and inalienable.[4] The pattam or office of dignity in a family governed by the Aliyasantan Law is indivisible and whether the family be divided or not, when no special arrangement has been made about it, the pattam descends to the eldest male of the surviving members of the family.[5] Priestly offerings are indivisible though members of a family may agree among themselves to throw their individual earnings into the common chest in which case the family earnings become their joint property and are as such partible.[6] Where a joint family consisting of three members asked for partition of their properties, consisting amongst others, of family books in which the names of pilgrims were recorded, it was held that the first step was actually to divide the books into three portions. In making such division, the guiding principle should be to ascertain the number of entries in each book, and it may be possible to give to each party a number of leaves containing as nearly as possible the same number of entries as to any other coparcener. The second step to be taken was to have certified copies prepared of the entries of these books and to give them to each of the parties. The result would be that each party would have one-third of the entries in original and two-thirds in certified copies.[7] There may still be things which are incapable of division; e.g., flag, which each party should be held entitled to use,[8] or the family idol which its joint owners are entitled to worship by turns.[9]

---

(1) Jagmohan v. Kunwar Singh, 75 I.C. 135: (1926) A. 70.

(2) Mancharan v. Pranshankar, 6 B. 298; Trimbak v. Lakshman, 20 B. 495 (501).

(3) Rajaram v. Ganesh, 23 B. 131; Manghirmal v. Vithalram, 5 S.L.R. 107; Ramachand v. Utamchand, (1937) S. 147.

(4) Sethurama v. Meruswamier, 41 M. 296 (305, 306) P.C.

(5) Timappa v. Mahalinga, 4 M.H. C.R. 28.

(6) Narayan v. Chulban, 15 C.L. J. 376.

(7) Ibid; Ramachunder v. Chhabbu Lal, 45 A. 445.

(8) Ramachunder v. Chhabbu Lal, 45 A. 445.

(9) Pramatha Nath v. Pradhyamna, 52 C. 809 P.C.; Damodar v. Uttamram, 17 B. 271 (288).

1602. Service Inam.—Inam villages granted by Government to the grantee and his male heirs for services rendered to the State, are not, by the Hindu Law in force in the Southern Mahratta country, distinguishable from other ancestral real estates and are divisible among the heirs of the grantee.[1] The enfranchisement of village service Inams does not alter its incidents since the enfranchisment has merely the effect of separating the land from the office and imposing thereon a quit-rent instead of the full assessment. The effect of enfranchisement on the issue of a title is to exonerate the inam from the conditions of service and convert it into ordinary property subject to the payment of quit-rent and not to resume the same from the family or person entitled to the hereditary office and to make a fresh grant of the same.[2]

1603. Costs.—As the plaintiff in a partition suit commences it for his own advantage, convenience and security and as the defendant, as joint owner, holds, his undivided share always subject to the right of the plaintiff to demand partition, the parties' costs of the suit up to the stage of the preliminary decree, and the costs of the partition should be divided between the parties in proportion to their respective shares in the estate.[3] If, however, there has been a frivolous contest, the party, by reason of whose opposition unnecessary costs are incurred, may be made liable.[4]

1604. Partition Act.—In making a partition, the court may resort instead of partition by metes and bounds. This Act will be found printed and annotated in the Appendix.

Mutual non-liability of account.

190. (1) On partition accounts must be made only of such a property as is available at the date of demand,[5] or division of status.[6]

(2) In the absence of fraud or misappropriation, the manager is not liable to account to the co-parceners for past transactions[7] or to pay them mesne profits in respect of property in his possession.[8]

(3) Provided that if partition is demanded and refused or a co-parcener is excluded from joint or separate possession to which he was entitled under an arrangement, he may be allowed mesne profits from the date of such refusal or exclusion.[9]

(4) Nor are the other members entitled to the cost of improvement or are accountable for the profits made from property in their separate possession.

1605. Analogous Law.—It is a general rule that partition must be made rebus sic standibus—as on the date of demand or the suit for partition, and that no claimant can demand an account of back profits of the properties pur-

Clause (1).

(1) Bodhrao v. Nursingh, 6 M.I.A. 426.
(2) Gunaiyan v. Kamakchi, 26 M. 339.
(3) Shama Soondaree v. Jardine Skinner & Co., 12 W.R. 161 (163).
(4) Dildar v. Bhowani, 34 C. 878; Shanmugam v. Mira, 21 I.C. (M.) 746.
(5) Pirthi Pal v. Jowahir Singh, 14 C. 493, P.C.
(6) Sri Ranga v. Srinivasa, 50 M. 866; Venkatarayudu v. Sivaramakrishnayya, 58 M. 126; Sarvothamma v. Govinda, (1937) M. 11; Sukhdeo v. Basdeo, 57 A. 949.
(7) Parmeshwar v. Govind, 44 C. 459 and cases cited post.
(8) Pirthi Pal v. Jowahir Singh, 14 C. 493 P.C.
(9) Shankar v. Hardeo, 16 C. 397 P.C.

chased and sold by the manager prior to the date of claim,[1] it being assumed that all past transactions were consented to or acquiesced in, by the other co-parceners. As observed in a case: "The broad and general rule is that while there is a manager of a Hindu family, he and he alone is responsible, and that those who seek partition must take the estate as they find it when partition is asked for. That general rule has its exceptions engrafted upon it in favour of the minor, for it is said that the rule rests upon the acquiescence or presumed acquiescence of all adult members of the family in the management, and no such acquiescence can be presumed in the case of minors."[2]

1606. But this does not imply that a minor is entitled to call for account. The only occasion for accounts arises when the manager is shewn to have been guilty of fraud or misappropriation. Otherwise there is no liability to account for past transactions, though the court is justified in decreeing mesne profits as from the date of the suit up to the date of possession.[3] But this does not mean that there should be no accounts at all, that the coparceners are bound to accept the ipse dixit of the manager. The coparceners are entitled to challenge the manager's statement as to the existence of assets, but the inquiry must be confined to the existing assets[4] in the hands of the manager and of the other members. The parties have no right to look back and claim relief against past inequality and enjoyment of the members or other matters. All that they are entitled to shew is that the expenditure which the manager says has been incurred, has not been incurred or that the savings of the joint family funds have not been entered in the accounts.[5]

Clause (2).

1607. The manager is not a trustee accountable to the other co-parceners for his management and liable to them for his negligence and mismanagement. He is a coparcener himself and his position as a senior member of the coparcenership places him in a position of trust, but to whom the analogy of the trustee and cestui que trust cannot apply.[6] This does not mean that the manager is in no case liable to account for past profits made by him, or exempt him from making good any misappropriations proved against him. Where the manager is

(1) Davitaram v. Narayanarav, (1877) B. P. J. 175; Narayan v. Nathaji, 28 B. 201; Pranjivan Das v. Ichharam, 39 B. 734; Balkrishna v. Muthusami, 32 M. 271; Chuckun v. Poram Chunder, 9 W.R. 483; Obhoy Chunder v. Paree Mohun, 13 W.R. 75 F.B.; Bhowani Prasad v. Jugger Nath, 13 C.W.N. 309: 3 I.C. 241; Parmeshwar v. Gobind, 43 C. 459 (464, 465).

(2) Haridas v. Narotam, 14 Bom.L.R. 237 (247).

(3) Shankar Baksh v. Hardeo, 16 C. 397 P.C.; Kanekrav v. Gurrav, 5 B. 589 (595); Ranganmani v. Kashi Nath, 3 B. L.R. (O.C.) 1; Lakshman v. Ramchandra, 1 B. 561 (569), affirmed O.A. 5 B. 48 P.C.; Sarothana v. Govinda, (1937) M. 1.

(4) Bhawani Prasad v. Juggernath, 13 C.W.N. 309: 3 I.C. 241; Parmeshwar v. Gobind, 43 C. 459; Balakrishna v. Muthuswamy, 32 M. 271; Tammi Reddi v. Gangireddi, 45 M. 281 (287): Lakshman v. Ramchandra, 1 B. 561 P.C.; Konerrav v. Gurrav, 5 B. 589; Nanabhai v. Nathubhai, (1880) B. P. J. 154; Vithoba v. Govind, (1890) B.P.J. 322; Narayan v. Nabaji, 28 B. 201.

(5) Tammireddi v. Gangireddi, 45 M. 281 (287).

(6) Arumilli v. Subbharayadu, 44 M. 656 (663) P.C.; Shivji v. Datu, 12 B. H.C.R. 281; Damooder Das v. Uttamram, 17 B. 271 (277); Ramnath v. Gothuram, 44 B. 179; Hari Das v. Narotam, 14 Bom.L.R. 237: 14 I.C. 769 (minor may obtain back profits sed quere, see Srinivasa v. Thiruvengadatha, 38 M. 556); Parmeshwar v. Gobind, 43 C. 459; Bhowani v. Jaggernath, 13 C.W.N. 309: 3 I.C. 241; Ajodhya v. Mahadeo, 14 C. W.N. 221: 3 I.C. 9; Balkrishna v. Muthusamy, 32 M. 271; Lachman Das v. Nanakchand, 70 I.C. (L.) 810: (1923) L. 20.

found guilty of fraud, the court may pass a personal decree against him for the amount defrauded by him.[1] And even apart from fraud, the Privy Council upheld a decree in which the High Court had debited the manager with certain items in his account with interest at 6 per cent., on the ground that he had "misapplied" them.[2] But this does not imply that the manager is in an ordinary case liable to pay interest on the sums received by him, though he had failed to invest them which he might and ought to have done. In other words, no back profits or interest can be charged for his nonfeasance as distinct from his misfeasance.[3] Where the manager is found guilty of fraud, the court may pass a personal decree against him for the amount defrauded by him.[4]

1608. Again, though the manager is not accountable for past profits except where he has been guilty of fraud, misappropriation, or gross reckless waste,[5] still where he is charged with suppression of assets, he may have to account for them, and evidence will be admitted against him of what were the properties and their value to be debited against him on the severance of shares.[6]

1609. Past Profits from Exclusion or Demand.—Since the possession of one is the possession of all, no coparcener can claim mesne profits from the manager for a period preceding the date of partition, even if a part of the assets consists of a joint family trade.[7] The only exception allowed are when a coparcener was disturbed in his possession of any specific share of property to which he was entitled under a family arrangement, when he becomes entitled both to profits and partition.[8] Mesne profits would be allowed as a matter of course where the members hold their property in quasi-severalty. Such are coparceners in Bengal,[9] But even under the Mitakshara, the position of the manager might be reduced to that of an agent, in which case, he would clearly be accountable to the other members. But such a case is only conceivable in a quasi-coparcenary, which is a creature of contract and not one of law.[10] Even in a normal family, accounts might be ordered where one member of the family has been entirely excluded from the enjoyment of the property.[11] So again, it is a case for account where a member has demanded his share and it has been improperly refused, since such demand is sufficient to constitute partition, the members refusing being taken to hold adversely to the claimant from the date of refusal. Since the institution of a suit for partition is such a demand, the plaintiff would be entitled to an account of mesne profits from that date[12] or from the date of refusal or exclusion, if not earlier.[13]

Clause (3) Mesne Profits.

(1) Rama v. Raja Gopal, (1913) M. W.N. 982: 21 I.C. 598.

(2) Arumilli v. Subharayadu, 44 M. 656 (663) P.C.

(3) Yasobdra v. Samanthabadran, 59 M. 154.

(4) Rama v. Rajagopaul, (1913) M. W.N. 982: 21 I.C. 598.

(5) Tada Bulli v. Tada Bulli, 42 B. L.J. 570.

(6) Parmeshwar v. Gobind, 43 C. 459; Krishnayya v. Gnoravayya, 41 M.L. J. 503 (509); Sitaram v. Hanuman, 8 Pat.L.T. 145: 100 I.C. 632.

(7) Lingamuthu v. Ramanayya, 13 M. L.W. 262.

(8) Shankar Baksh v. Hardeo, 16 C. 397 P.C.

(9) Abhaychandra v. Pyari Mohan, 5 B.L.R. 347; explained in Balakrishna v. Muthusami, 32 M. 271 (274).

(10) Setrucherla v. Satrucherla, 22 M. 470 (475) P.C.

(11) Konekrav v. Gurrav, 5 B. 589 ((595).

(12) Krishna v. Subbanna, 7 M. 564; Balakrishna v. Muthusami, 32 M. 271 (274).

(13) Gangaram v. Sitaram, 6 C.W. N. 698 P.C.; Krishna v. Subbanna, 7 M. 564; Balakrishna v. Muthusami, 32 M. 271 (274); Ramasami v. Subramania, 46 M. 47.

1610. But exclusion from mess and worship is not necessarily exclusion from the estate; since it may arise from personal differences. As the Privy Council observed: "Separation from commensality.... does not, as a necessary consequence, effect a division of the joint undivided property. A separation in mess and worship may be due to various causes, yet the family may continue joint in estate."[1] In this case, a joint brother had applied to the Collector for the mutation of names in respect of the joint estate, to which the plaintiff Suraj Narain had objected; but afterwards, in consequence of a compromise, he agreed that the mutation be effected in the name of Bakht Narain alone "as the head of a joint family, and the status of the family has continued joint up to date and shall remain so long as any dispute does not arise among the heirs." Owing to disputes, Suraj Narain withdrew from the joint family and went away to live at another place. He was offered an allowance which he rejected. He sued for partition and mesne profits; but the court disallowed the latter, holding that there had been no exclusion from the joint estate. This was a case of discontinuation of possession without exclusion. "In my view," said Fry, L.J., "difference between dispossession and the discontinuance of possession might be expressed in this way, the one is where a person comes in and drives out the other from possession; the other case is where the person in possession goes out and is followed into possession by other persons."[2] It need scarcely be added that any claim in respect of the revenue of a village or the like for a period anterior to the suit for partition must be included therein. It cannot be the subject of a separate suit.[3]

1611. Accounts of Private Dealings.—Where one coparcener had agreed to pay his debt due to another coparcener by setting it off against his share, it is a claim which may be adjusted in a suit for partition.[4] A member is not liable to bring to partition or to account for the profits of any property acquired by him with his own money since the preliminary decree for partition, unless it is shown that such acquisition was made from joint funds or is such as to impress upon it the character of joint property.[5]

191. In every partition provision should first be made for—

Provisions for debts, maintenance and ceremonies.

(a) the payment of all family debts;[6]

(b) The payments of the father's debts by his son;[7]

(c) the maintenance of members entitled to it;[8]

(d) the thread and the marriage expenses of members payable by the joint family;[9]

(e) and such religious and other ceremonies for which the joint property is liable.[10]

1612. Analogous Law.—At the threshold of partition stand certain family charges which must be first met before the coparcenership is

(1) Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain, 35 A. 80 (88) P.C., following Rewan Persad v. Radha, 4 M.I.A. 137.
(2) Rains v. Buxton, 14 Ch. D. 537.
(3) Vishnu v. Gangadhar, 46 B. 823.
(4) Khandubhai v. Balwant Rao, (1898) B.P.J. 367.
(5) Lachman Das v. Nanakchand, 70 I.C. (L.) 810: (1923) L. 20.
(6) Dwarka Nath v. Bungeshi, 9 C.W. N. 879; Bankeylal v. Durga Prasad, 53 A. 868 F.B.
(7) Satnarain v. Srikishen, (1936) P. C. 277.
(8) Srinivasa v. Tiruvengada, 38 M. 556.
(9) Narad, IV-40; Mit. I-VII, 6; Srinivasa v. Tiruvengada, 38 M. 556.
(10) Mit., I-VII 3, 4.

broken up by partition. Of these the family debts, that is to say, such debts as are legally and properly payable out of the joint funds must be first met.[1]

Clauses (a), (b) Family debts by the father or manager.

1613. Shortly stated, there are debts incurred by the father[2] or by the manager for family necessity or benefit, and those incurred by the father and such as are not illegal or immoral. In a composite family consisting of sons and collaterals, it is manifest that while some debts might be binding on the joint family as a whole, there might be others which would be only binding on the sons. These would have to be apportioned in accordance with the liability of members, and the equity of each case. Where, for instance, the other co-parceners had agreed to pay the manager half the sum due on certain bonds, executed by the manager for family necessity, or for the purpose stated in the agreement, but it afterwards appeared that some of the bonds were executed for the personal benefit of the manager or for a purpose outside the agreement, it was held that it would be unjust and inequitable to give the manager a decree for half the amount in accordance with the agreement and that he should be treated as having forfeited his claim to the extent of the sum misapplied; and that his relief should be confined to his legitimate share of the balance outstanding.[3]

An account will also have to be taken of debts due to the family which will have to be partitioned as actionable claims.[4]

1614. The institution of a partition suit does not put an end to the management of the manager. He has to carry on the joint business till the decree effects the severance of interest. If, for example, after a partition suit is instituted, the managing member discharges certain debts and renews others even though time-barred on behalf of the family, the other members would be equitably liable to contribute to their discharge; since the manager, being liable for their repayment, has the right of contribution which he can enforce against the other members who have benefited by his management.[5]

Clause (c) Maintenance of members.

1615. Since certain female members of the family possess the right of residence and maintenance against the general estate, provision should be made for them out of the general assets before partition. For instance, the maintenance of the mother is chargeable on the general funds and not only on the share of her sons. Consequently, adequate provision should be made for it before the estate is partitioned.[6] And if it is partitioned without any provision being made, the claimant can ignore the partition and claim her right against the whole family.[7]

Clause (d) Provision for Thread and Marriage.

1616. The rule stated is in accordance with the following texts:—

(1) Dwarka Nath v. Bungeshi, 9 C. W.N. 879; Tarachand v. Reeb Ram, 3 M.H.C.R. 177 (181); Bankey Lal v. Durga Prasad, 53 A. 568 F.B.; Krishnamurti v. Sundarmurthi, 55 M. 558.

(2) Atul Krishna v. Lala Nandanji, 14 Pat. 732 F.B.

(3) Premdai Koer v. Jagu, (1921) M. W.N. 66.

(4) Lakshman v. Ramchandra, 1 B. 561.

(5) Abraham Servai v. R. Muthirian, 39 M. 288 (291); Ramnath v. Goturam, 44 B. 179 (183, 184); Visvasankar v. Kasi, 86 I.C. 225: (1925) M. 453.

(6) Srinivasa v. Thiruvengada, 38 M. 556.

(7) Subrayudu v. Kamalavalli, 35 M. 147.

Narad.—"40. For those whose intitiatory ceremonies have not been regularly performed by the father, those ceremonies must be completed by the brethren out of the patrimony.[1]

"41. If no wealth of the father exists the ceremonies of brethren must, without fail, be defrayed by the brethren already initiated contributing funds out of their own portion."[2]

To the same effect are the placita in Yadnavalkya,[3] the Mitakshara[4] and the Dayabhag.[5]

The text bearing on the subject of the sister's marriage expenses runs as follows:—

Mitakshara.—"5. In regard to unmarried sisters, the author states a different rule. 'But sisters should be disposed of in marriage, giving them as an allotment, the fourth part of a brother's own share.'"[6]

"6. The purport of the passage is this: Sisters also, who are not already married, must be disposed of in marriage, by the brethren contributing a fourth part out of their own allotments."[7]

1617. In a partition provision must be made for the expenses of the upanayan and marriage of male coparceners as well as for the expenses of the marriage of the unmarried sisters out of the family property, whether it is ancestral or separate, or self-acquired property of the father of the parties. A brother who has had his own marriage performed at the family expense is not entitled to object to a similar provision being made for the other brothers,[8] though after technical severance and before actual division, this obligation cannot be thrown on the joint family, but must be borne by the separated member.[9]

1618. The quantum of cost must depend upon the wealth and social position of the family. While the Upanayan and marriage of every coparcener is a necessary religious rite, and as such, a charge on the family estate, the same cannot be predicated of every female member of the family. For instance, while in a family comprising collaterals the marriage of sisters is a necessary charge on the joint estate, that of the coparcener's daughter is a charge upon his own individual share and cannot be deducted out of the joint fund.[10]

See this subject discussed in Chapter VII.

Clause (e) Ceremonial Expenses.

1619. The religious or other ceremonial expenses chargeable on the joint property must be arranged for before the partition of the corpus. Such are the expenses for the performance of the funeral and obsequial rites of the father,[11] and the mother,[12] the initiation ceremony of the brothers,[13] though not of their sons,[14] and indeed, any charities in accordance with the practice of the family. Where the father makes a partition

(1) Narad, IV-40, cited per curiam in Srinivasa v. Thiruvengada, 38 M. 556 (578), dissenting from contra in Smriti Chandrika, ib., p. 579; and Govindarazulu v. Davara, 27 M. 206, following Kameswara v. Veeracharlu, 34 M. 422 F. B.; Gopala Krishnamaraju v. Venkatanarasuraju, (1912) M.W.N. 903.

(2) Narad, IV-41.

(3) Yad., II-125, cited in Mit., I-VII-3.

(4) Mit., 1-7-3, 4.

(5) Dayabhag, III-II-41; 3 Dig. 96, 97.

(6) Yad., II-125.

(7) Mit., I-VII-6.

(8) Srinivasa v. Thiruvengada, 38 M. 556 (576).

(9) Venkatarayudu v. Sivaramakrishnayya, 58 M. 126 (138, 139).

(10) Jairam v. Nathu, 31 B. 54.

(11) Vappuluri v. Garinalla, 34 M. 288.

(12) Vaidyanatha v. Aiyasami, 32 M. 191 (200).

(13) Mit., I-VII-3, 4: Dayabhag, III-II-41; 3 Dig. 96, 97.

(14) Jairam v. Nathu, 31 B. 54.

among his sons, he possesses the right to make such provision for charities as he may in his discretion consider necessary to a reasonable extent.[1]

1620. It was at one time held that the marriage expenses of a member incurred after the institution of a partition suit, but before the actual division, must be debited to the joint account and not to the individual coparcener concerned.[2] But this view has since been overruled by the Privy Council on the ground that the institution of a suit suffices to effect partition.[3]

192. In a partition by metes and bounds, the allotment of shares should be made as far as possible in conformity with the following rules:—

Equities on distribution of shares.

(1) The separate possession of coparceners of any property or which they have improved at their own expense should not be disturbed;[4]

(2) The predilection of coparceners to any property should be respected;[5]

(3) Shares should be made as compact and convenient as the nature of the property would allow;[6]

(4) The bona fide transferee of a defined portion of coparcenary property should be protected in his right as far as possible;[7]

(5) Inequalities of shares may be removed by the payment of owelty.[8]

1621. Analogous Law.—The rules here set out are condensed from the several Partition Acts relating to revenue paying estates and the cases in which they have been recognized. They are all rules conformable to natural equity which supplements all law, sacred and secular.

1622. Maintenance of the Status Quo.—It is a cardinal rule of all partitions that it should follow the line of least resistance, maintaining the status quo ante as far as possible and only deviating therefrom wherever it is necessary to equalize the shares. Where, therefore, a coparcener has been in separate possession of any portion of the joint property and has improved it at his own cost, it is both just and natural that he should claim to retain the status quo so far as the property in his possession is concerned.[9] This is in accordance with Hindu Law, under which, if one builds a house on ancestral land with separate funds of his own, the other members of the family have only a claim on him for other similar land equal to their respective shares.[10] Where a coparcener had been in previous possession of a certain piece of land it should be allotted to him as a whole if possible. But it should not be sub-divided.[11] It is a well-known principle

Clause (1).

(1) Murugayya v. Palaniyandi, 31 M. L.J. 147: 36 I.C. 507.

(2) Ram Nath v. Gotu Ram, 44 B. 179 (183, 184).

(3) Ramalinga v. Narayana, 45 M. 489 (495) P.C.; Lekhraj v. Vishindas, (1933) S. 260; Venkatarayudu v. Sivaramakrishnayya, 58 M. 126.

(4) Ram Jowaya v. Amrit Ram,(1885) P.R. 9 Rev.

(5) Narayan v. Challan, 15 C. L. J. 376.

(6) Story's Equity Juris., (2nd Eng. Ed.) p. 634.

(7) Pandurang v. Bhaskar, 11 B. H. C.R. 72.

(8) Or. XXVI, r. 14 (1), C.P.C.

(9) Ram Jowaya v. Amrit Ram, (1885) P.R. 9 Rev.

(10) 2 Mac. H. L., 152 followed in Vithoba v. Hariba, 6 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 54.

(11) Pudo Monee v. Dwarka Nath, 25 W.R. 335 (342).

of equity which must be adopted in all partition cases, that, when it is inconvenient to divide a property, it must be left in the possession of the person in occupation, and the other persons who cannot conveniently get actual possession compensated.[1]

1623. Compensation for Improvements.—Where for any cause a coparcener is not able to secure possession of the property which he had improved at his own cost, he would be allowed compensation, for improvements according to the general principle thus enunciated: "Where one tenant in common lays out money in improvements on the estate, although the money so paid does not in strictness, constitute a lien on the estate, yet a court of equity will not grant a partition without first directing an account and a suitable compensation. To entitle the tenant in common to an allowance on a partition, in equity, for the improvements made on the premises, it does not appear to be necessary for him to show the assent of his co-tenants to such improvements, or a promise on their part; nor is it necessary for him to show a previous request to join in the improvements and their refusal."[2]

Meaning of "Improvements."

1624. "A tenant-in-common in possession will be allowed for substantial and useful improvements but not for such improvements as are merely ornamental. The reason why a tenant-in-common will be allowed for improvements that are necessary and substantial improvements is because the possession of one tenant-in-common is the possession of that of his co-tenants. The court can properly render a judgment declaring that partition should be made; and also providing for an account between the parties in respect of the matters pertaining to the estate and in respect to the rents and profits already received. If there is inequality of value between one portion that cannot be divided, and another portion that can be, the Commissioner may make such allotment of parcels as will produce equality by awarding proper compensation in money."[3] It has been held in the Punjab that a sharer cannot be allotted a greater share on account of his improvements.[4] But if he is entitled to compensation, a larger share may be only a measure of it.

Clause (2).

1625. Choice of Property.—It is equally just that each coparcener should be given the choice to choose his own share. But this, again, is an equity and not his right.[5] Consequently, where parties cannot agree amongst themselves as to any item of property, the court may order the sale instead of division of the property in accordance with the provisions of the Partition Act.[6]

Clause (3).

1626. Compact and Convenient Shares.—It goes without saying that the very object of partition is to ensure the better enjoyment of the property, which requires that the property should be divided into compact and convenient shares. As Story says: "A court of equity will assign to the parties

(1) Basunta v. Moti Lal, 15 C.W.N. 555 n.: 11 C. 370.
(2) Freeman's Partition, § 510.
(3) Knapp on Partition, p. 375.
(4) Ameerchand v. Mayasingh, (1866) P.R. 16.
(5) Narayan v. Challan, 15 C.L.J. 376, following Durfendra v. Purnenda, 11 C. L.J. 189 (196); Leigh v. Dickson, 15 Q. B. D. 60; Brickwood v. Young, 2 Com.L.R. 387.
(6) S. 2, Act IV of 1893. See the Act printed in the Appendix.

respectively such parts of the estate as would best accommodate them, and be of most value to them with reference to their respective situations, in relation to the property before the partition. For, in all cases of partition, a court of equity does not act merely in a ministerial character and in obedience to the call of parties, who have a right to the partition; but it founds itself upon its general jurisdiction as a court of equity, and administers its relief ex equo et bono according to its own notions of general justice and equity between the parties. It will, therefore, by its decree adjust all the equitable rights of the parties interested in the estate; and will, if necessary, for the purpose, give special instructions to the Commissioners, and nominate the Commissioners instead of allowing them to be nominated by the parties."[1] Partition must study the general convenience of all co-sharers and the special convenience of the sharer who has a special equity to any property. Where therefore, on half the land the defendant had constructed a costly building from the joint funds of the family, the court directed that the land be treated as joint family land, but that the price of one-third of half the land was made payable to the other co-sharers.[2] Here there was some equity apart from individual convenience which is no sufficient answer to a claim for partition of land by metes and bounds.[3] Where, at the time of the partition of a dwelling house, the brothers were found to have entered into an arrangement under which each was allowed an equal use of a single latrine in the house, the arrangement was held to amount to a partition which could not be interfered with except by reopening the entire partition. It was further held that the Partition Act did not apply to such a case.[4]

Good Faith Essential.

1627. But of course such improvements should have been made in good faith. But "the only good faith required in such improvements is that they should be made honestly for the purpose of improving the property and not for embarrassing his co-tenants or encumbering their estate, or hindering partition."[5]

But "if one joint tenant, or tenant-in-common, covers the whole of the estate with valuable improvements, so that it is impossible for his co-tenant to obtain his share of the estate without including a part of the improvement so made, the tenant making the improvements would not be entitled to compensation therefor, notwithstanding, they may have added greatly to the value of the land; because it would be the improver's own folly to extend his own improvements over the whole estate, and because it would be unjust to permit a co-tenant at his pleasure to charge another co-tenant with improvements he may not have desired. In such a case, the improver stands as a mere volunteer and cannot, without the consent of his co-tenant, lay the foundation for charging him with improvements."[6]

---

(1) Eq. Juris. (2nd Eng. Ed.), p. 634.

(2) Narayan v. Challan, 15 C. L. J. 376 (379).

(3) Ram Pershad v. Court of Wards, 21 W.R. 152 (partition of a compound); Murlidhar v. Ramnath, 1 Hay 71; Thuboo v. Khoob Lall, 22 W.R. 294 (partition of a dwelling house).

(4) Jadia v. Baldeo, 17 C.P.L.R. 45.

(5) Freeman's Partition, § 510; cited in Mitra's Joint Property and Partition (2nd Ed.), 417.

(6) Ib.

1628. Transferee Protected.—When a coparcener has affected to transfer any specific item of coparcenary property it is but equitable to the bona fide transferee that he should not suffer by any distribution of shares. Consequently, it has been held that where a stranger has acquired any interest in coparcenary property, it is but equitable that in the distribution of shares such property should, as far as possible, be allotted to the transferor, so as to enable his transferee to retain or obtain possession of it.[1] But this is the transferee's equity and not his right.[2] This transferee is not before partition entitled to insist upon the possession of any portion of the undivided property as representing the share of his transferor,[3] though as already observed, the court will in a partition suit secure it to him if possible. (§ 1516.)

Clause (4).

This is taken to be the settled law governing decrees for partition.[4] Where, however, the transferee cannot be allotted his transferor's share, he is entitled to take the share that he may have got on the principle of substituted security[5] or obtain compensation from his transferor personally.[6] But he cannot recover mesne profits before the suit.[7]

1629. Owelty.—Sums directed to be paid for the purpose of equalizing the values of the shares, are in legal language, called "Owelty."[8] It cannot be awarded without an express direction of the court,[9] which is usually inserted in the preliminary decree.

Clause (5).

193. (1) In the absence of a contract to the contrary the parties to a partition shall be deemed to contract with each other as follows:—

Implied covenants on partition.

(a) That the interest in the property which each cosharer received on partition as his share subsists;[10]

(b) that there was no fraud or error in the allotment of shares,[11]

(2) Save as above, a partition once made cannot be re-opened.

(3) Provided that a party otherwise entitled to a relief on the ground of fraud, error or defect of title, may waive it by his acquiescence.[12]

Waiver of right.

1630. Analogous Law.—As previously observed, a partition may be general or partial. Where it is the latter, a fresh partition may be made of the property left undivided. But where it is complete, a fresh suit may still be necessary to rectify or amend it by making a fresh distribution of the property, if it was left out of account by mistake, inadvertence or fraud, or because it was not then available for distribu-

(1) Pandurang v. Bhashkar, 11 B.H. C. R. 72.

(2) Narayan v. Gamnaji, 5 Bom. L. R. 945.

(3) Appovier v. Rama, 11 M.I.A. 75 (85, 90).

(4) Narayan v. Gamnaji, 5 Bom.L.R. 945.

(5) Byjnath v. Ramoodin, 21 W.R. 233 P.C. See this rule discussed in 2 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), § 831.

(6) Byjnath v. Ramoodeen, 21 W.R. 233 P.C.; Bhup Singh v. Chedda Singh, 42 A. 596; Aiyyagari v. Aiyyagari, 25 M. 690 (718, 719); Saiyid Mahammad v. Jamad Husain, 6 O.L.J. 495: 53 I. C. 659; Kifayatullah v. Mahabir Prasad, 1 O.L.J. 175: 24 I.C. 2.

(7) Trimbak v. Pandurang, 44 B. 621.

(8) O. Fr. Oelte, equality.

(9) Or. XXVI, R. 14 (1), C.P.C.

(10) Maruti v. Rama, 21 B. 333; Ganashilal v. Babu Lal, 40 A. 374.

(11) Moro v. Ganesh, 10 B. H. C. R. 444.

(12) Rango v. Chinto, (1876) B.P.J. 58.

tion, or conversely, where the parties have made division of property which did not belong to the family. It is, therefore, obvious that notwithstanding the Hindu maxim "once is partition of the inheritance made", there may be cases when it has to be reopened for correcting its inequality or remedying its defects. Moreover, it is now settled that there is a mutual implied covenant of the title in a partition, each co-sharer warranting the title of the rest. This covenant is implied even if the partition was made by court and has been the subject of a decree.[1] The relief to which the party aggrieved is entitled must depend upon other circumstances to be presently considered (§§ 1635-1636). And he might be deprived of the relief to which he is legally entitled by his laches, waiver or acquiescence.

1631. A partition may also be set aside on the ground of fraud.[2] or error, which of course, implies mutual mistake.[3] It cannot be set aside on the mere ground of inequity or unilateral mistake, or subsequent discovery of inequality of shares due to appreciation or latent intrinsic value then unknown to the parties. If, for example, a valuable coal mine is discovered in a parcel of land allotted to a co-sharer on partition, the other co-sharer cannot claim a share in his good luck any more than he would have been liable to re-partition if his share had been submerged by flood or destroyed by fire.

1632. Mutual Covenants of Title.—From the fact that partition implies no transfer but merely a change in the mode of enjoyment, it follows that each co-sharer is entitled to the quantum of interest in the property allotted to him in lieu of his share in the joint property and of his joint enjoyment thereof.

Clause (1) (a).

1633. There is generally in cases of partition an implied warranty both as to title and soundness, and if either from the defect of title or unsoundness as to a part of the property divided, a loss is caused to either party, that loss should be borne by the parties equally, unless the loss was due to the laches of the former or to any act or omission on his part done or made after the partition. The loss may be due either to ignorance of both the parties to the partition as to the nature of their rights in any of the properties which are the subject of division, or to a misunderstanding or fraud by one party or another.[4]

1634. So where a co-sharer had mortgaged his share before the partition in which the incumbered property was allotted to another co-sharer, who had no notice of the mortgage till he was obstructed by the mortgagee, whereupon he sued the mortgagor for repartition he was held entitled to a general repartition which the court decreed.[5] Such was the case of the parties to a partition, who, under a bona fide mistake, included, in the division of property, an orchard which did not belong to the family but was held in mortgage from a third person who subsequently brought a suit for redemption and recovered it from the party to whom

(1) Ganeshilal v. Babu Lal, 40 A. 374; following Maruti v. Rama, 21 B. 333.

(2) Moro v. Ganesa, 10 B. H. C. R. 444 (451, 452); Rango v. Chinto, (1875) B.P.J. 74.

(3) Davloba v. Rayagavda, (1883) B. P.J. 227; followed in Maruti v. Rama, 21 B. 333 (335).

(4) Sheo Singh v. Lakha Singh, 20 O. C. 79: 39 I.C. 392.

(5) Lakshman v. Gopal, 23 B. 385 (393, 394) following Ooma Dutt v. Hunooman, 22 W. R. 453.

it had been allotted at the partition. The latter sued for a repartition of the family orchard and the court held him equitably so entitled.[1] In another case, where two coparceners divided their estate in moieties under an equal partition, and some 15 years later, some one claiming by a title paramount ejected one of them from his share, he was held equitably entitled to obtain a repartition of the other moiety allotted to the other coparcener, because "they had divided under such misapprehension of the true state of the case that the Hindu Law, like common equity, would correct the error by distributing the existing but unknown burden evenly where it was placed on one only of the shares. In the case of an unknown charge, this would be at once obvious; in the case of a deduction in specie, it is not less true."[2] These are cases of a mutual mistake.

Cl. (1) (b). Fraud or Error.

1635. But when there is a fraudulent suppression of property the case for repartition or compensation is even clearer. For the sufferer has then not only the moral but also the legal claim for compensation. And the court has gone the length of holding such partition a nullity so far as regards the minor co-sharer defrauded by the manager. "Once it is established that whether by his own fraud, or by neglect, amounting to recklessness or wilfulness on the part of the guardian, the managing member of a joint Hindu family has robbed the infant members of the family, no question of procedure or technical requirement can be allowed to stand in the way of the civil court before which the matter is brought, compelling him to disgorge the proceeds of his robberry."[3] The facts of the case in which these observations occur were these. A stepbrother sued his two minor stepbrothers aged 13 and 11 for a revenue partition. Their mother, an illiterate woman, formally acted as their guardian in the suit who objected to the partition, but her objection was ruled out as filed out of time. She unsuccessfully appealed against the order and then sued for a declaration that the revenue partition was a nullity. The defence was res judicata but the court held that the minor's defence had been prejudiced by their stepbrothers's fraud in impleading a guardian who was under his thumb and who suppressed the true facts as to partible property from the court. The partition suit was in effect ex parte and the court held it to be subject to the rule that fraud vacates all judgments.[4] But apart from fraud, parties who were minors when their father effected a partition, may, upon their attaining majority, sue for re-partition, if they feel aggrieved by the shares as actually effected by the father. Error, without fraud is equally sufficient to entitle a party to relief. But as already stated such error must be one on the part of the court or of both parties to the partition. It must be such error as entitled a party to equitable relief. In one case, the court had passed a decree for partition which was transferred to the Collector for execution. The latter effected the partition but overlooked some of the directions of the decree and made unfair allotments of which the party aggrieved complained by

(1) Maruti v. Rama, 21 B. 333.
(2) Devloba v. Regauda, (1883) B.P. J. 227.
(3) Raghunandan v. Sheo Nandan, 17 A.L.J. 97: 49 I.C. 306 (310).
(4) Raghunandan v. Sheo Nandan, 17 A.L.J. 97 : 49 I.C. 306, following the effect of fraud on res judicata; Bijai Miser v. Kali Prasad, 39 A. 469; Mohammad Sadiq v. Lamte Ram, 23 A. 291 F.B. See on this point, S. 44, Evidence Act (I of 1872).

petition before the final decree of the civil court. The court held that it would not allow mistake of one of its agents in carrying out its directions to work permanent injustice, and directed the Collector to rectify his mistake.[1]

Where fraud acquiesced in.

1636. But there is a limit beyond which even fraud and error will not suffice to unravel a partition once closed. Such would be the case where it would act to the prejudice of an innocent third party or where a party has acquiesced in the violation of his right after full knowledge. And in this case, lapse of time is a strong governing factor.[2] It may deprive a person of his just right, or it may alter his remedy to one for a mere money compensation.[3]

1637. Re-partition or Compensation.—The question whether a party suffering from unequal partition is entitled to a re-distribution of the shares or to merely money compensation must depend upon a variety of circumstances. If he is alert and no other equity has intervened, he would no doubt be entitled to the equalization of his share by reallotment or rectification as the justice of the case may require. In one case, it was said to be the practice of the Calcutta High Court "that where a property has been divided and one of the parties affected by the division complains of what has been done, he is not at liberty to ask the court to order the rectification of a small portion of the property so divided. If the arrangement is not to be carried out as it stands, it must be entirely revised, that is, the whole of the property divided must be again brought before the court, and there must be division de novo of the property in its entirety."[4] This is certainly still the rule; and based on the reason that a partial partition is unfair to the defendant and otherwise impracticable, since one cannot always divide a part without looking at the whole, though this might at times be possible and acceptable to the defendant[5] in which case, it is manifest that the court will not order a general re-partition: In a case of this kind the only principle that can be adopted is that the court should ascertain the relative value of the lands originally made over by the defendant to the entire lands of the defendants; and that it should assign, out of the present share of the defendants, lands bearing the same relative value to the whole that the former lands bore, without prejudice to the general partition.[6] In other words, the sufferer should be compensated with the least disturbance of the completed partition. So it has been held that the mere proof of fraud or mistake does not entitle the party to reopen the whole partition "except in so far as is necessary to apportion the loss which arises out of the new fact,[7] with the result that the share originally allotted is not liable to variation in consequence of the new births or deaths, since.[8]

1638. The right is based simply upon this principle that when parties arrive at a partition either by agreement or by a decree, which

(1) Ramchandra v. Krishnaji, 40 B. 118 (125).

(2) Samangouda v. Bharmangouda, 1 B.H.C.R. 41; Moro v. Ganesh, 10 B.H. C.R. 444 (451, 452).

(3) Rango v. Chinto, (1876) B. P. J. 58.

(4) Tripoora v. Gopal Nath, 25 W.R. 358 (360, 361).

(5) Burugapalli v. Nandigam, 10 I.C. 57.

(6) Ooma Dutt v. Hunooman, 22 W. R. 453 (455); Ganesh Lal v. Babulal, 16 A.L.J. 339.

(7) Ganeshilal v. Babulal, 40 A. 374 (381).

(8) Partap Singh v. Dalip Singh, 52 A. 596 (603, 604).

after all is only a more solemn and binding form of agreement, there is an implied and mutual right of indemnity or contribution in respect of any paramount claim by a third person which throws the burden of a loss, not contemplated in the partition proceedings, unfairly upon one of the parties. If the original decision has been arrived at by a common mistake, which, of course, in the case of a decree, is adopted by the court making the decree, the mistake can be set right pro tanto.[1] But though it is certainly the rule, it is based on the reason that a partial re-partition is unfair to the defendant. If, therefore, he does not object, the court may rectify the partition without unravelling it.[2] But it is for the court to see whether this is possible. The plaintiff must sue for a general re-partition.

All property placed into hotchpot.

194. In a suit for a general partition every member of the co-parcenary is liable to bring into hotchpot all partible joint property.[3]

1639. Analogous Law.—It is a cardinal rule of partition that all parceners must throw all joint property into the "hotchpot"[4] for the purpose of equalizing shares.[5] This does not mean that all property is to be individually partitioned. All it means is that it is all to be taken into account in measuring the share of each coparcener. If some property is in the hands of members, not parties to the suit, the court should implead them so that all property may be brought into the hotchpot.[6]

Property which has been the subject of a previous arrangement or partition between the parties is no longer available for re-partition and should be left out of account. The shares taken by some of the coparceners who separated before the partition cannot be taken into account.[7] Nor is impartible property to be taken into consideration.

Only joint property should be so brought.

1640. Besides joint property, the manager may be called upon to account for property which he has improperly alienated. So where the father had gifted away some property to one son out of spite towards the other and with a view to punish and disinherit him, the gift was held to be beyond the competency of the father and the property so gifted was held liable to partition.[8] But gifts which the father or the manager is entitled to make to junior members at the time of marriage[9] or other ceremonious occasions, though made out of the common fund, are not liable to thrown into the hotchpot.[10]

(1) Ganeshilal v. Babulal, 40 A. 374.

(2) Burugapalli v. Nandigam, 10 I. C. 57.

(3) From Fr. Hochepot—hocher, to shake and pot, a pot or dish; a dish of mixed ingredients—thence, in law, a commixture of property for equality of division. Rajendra v. Brojendra, 37 C.L. J. 191; Tarini Charan v. Debendralal, 60 C. 655.

(4) Rajendra v. Brojendra, 37 C.L.J. 191; Tarini Charan v. Debendralal, 60 C. 655.

(5) Ram Lochun v. Raghoobur, 15 W. R. 111; Laljeet v. Rajcoomar, 25 W.R. 353; Lakshman v. Ramchandra, 1 B. 561; Koonerrav v. Gurrav, 5 B. 589 (595).

(6) Lakshman v. Ramchandra, 1 B. 561 (570); Hari v. Ganpet Rav, 7 B. 272; Ali Hossein v. Ali Hossein, 2 Agra 96; Ghansham v. Saraswati Bai, (1892) B. P. J. 415; Wamanji v. Atmaram, (1883) B.P.J. 337; Mahbub v. Abdul Rahman, (1912) P.L.R. 84: 13 I.C. 816.

(7) Pranjivandas v. Ichharam, 39 B. 734; Gauri Shankar v. Atmaram, 18 B. 611.

(8) Nand Ram v. Mangalsi, 31 A. 359.

(9) Sheo Gobind v. Sham Narain, 7 N. W. P. H. C. R. 75.

(10) Shivmurtappa v. Virappa, 1 Bom. L.R. 620.

1641. A partition suit is in the nature of a cross-suit in which it is open to the defendants to have their own shares divided off and given to them, and the fact that the partition suit has been brought by the purchaser cannot alter or annul that right. A defendant claiming a share on partition is, qua that claim, in the position of a plaintiff and could be called on to pay court-fee on the value of his claim.[1] Where a suit instituted by a member of a joint family for partition is dismissed on the ground that all the property had not been brought into the hotch-pot, and there was no subsequent division of the property by metes and bounds, it was held that the family continued joint and had never been divided.[2]

Presumption of complete partition.

195. (1) Every partition is presumed to be complete both as to the parties and the property then liable to partition:[3]

Limits of the presumption.

(2) Provided that on a partition made between two or more branches of a family, such presumption does not extend to the severance of interest of all the branches thereof inter se;[4] and in a partition between coparceners such presumption does not extend to the severance of interest of their descendants.[5]

Illustrations.

(a) A and B are two branches of a joint family possessed of property both partible and impartible. The partible property has been the subject of frequent partitions, between the two branches, but the impartible property continued to remain in possession of the junior branch. There is no presumption that it ceased to be joint property.[6]

(b) A, B and C form a joint-family. A separates from B and C. On A's separation, the presumption that B and C continue joint disappears. The fact that they continue joint must be proved.

(c) A, B and C form a joint-family. They effect a general partition. Such a partition raises a presumption that all the three separate from each other, but it does not raise a presumption that all the three separate also from their own descendants.[7]

(d) A, B and C form a joint family. They effect a general partition, after which C is found in sole possession of the family dwelling-house. There is no presumption that he holds it for the joint family.

1642. Analogous Law.—This rule is supported by the following:—

Manu.—"Once is the partition of an inheritance made; once is damsel given in marriage; and once does a man say: 'I give'; these three are, by good men, done once for all and irrevocably."[8]

It is natural that when persons wish to divide, they should do so once for all, and leave no dispute for future settlement. All property immediately available for partition is, therefore, presumed to have been made the subject of partition. But there may still remain property which, though partible, is not immediately liable to, or made available

(1) Nand Ram v. Mangalsin, 31 A. 359.
(2) Hazari Lal v. Ram Lal, 47 A. 746.
(3) Manu, X-47; Vaidyanath v. Ayyasamy, 32 M. 191.
(4) cf. Hari Baksh v. Babu Lal, 5 L. 92 P.C.
(5) Ib.
(6) Konammal v. Annadana, 51 M. 189 (204, 205) P.C.
(7) Jai Narain v. Prag Narain, 29 C.W.N. 775 P.C.: 85 I.C. 2 P.C., explaining Hari Baksh v. Babu Lal, 5 L. 92 P.C.; Bala Bux v. Rukhmabai, 30 C. 725 P.C.
(8) Manu X-47 (Jone's Tr.)

for partition. Such, for instance, is the share allotted to the mother,[1] and the property allotted to other relations for maintenance. Property subject to an incumbrance may for convenience be left joint, and other reasons may operate to prevent the completion of partition, e.g., some property may be concealed. But such cases are exceptional and rare, and law, therefore, presumes the completeness of partition both in respect to the parties and property.

This section enunciates three propositions, the first of which is supported both by the text and cases, while the second and third are necessary deductions arising therefrom and are supported by judicial authority. They are: (1) That a partition is presumably exhaustive both as to the parties and property.[2] (2) That the patition between some coparceners does not necessarily imply a severance of interest of all coparceners, though it would have that effect if their shares are also intended to be ascertained and defined; in other words, there is, with the actual partition of some, presumed the intellectual partition of the rest.[3] But, of course, this is only a presumption which is capable of rebuttal by proof that, on separation of some of the members, the rest continued to be joint.[4] (3) Thirdly, while this would be necessary in a partition between brothers, where, if one or more should separate from the rest, the shares of each has to be ascertained; it is not necessary to ascertain the shares of a separating brother's descendants since he takes per stirpes, that is to say, for himself and his sons and grandsons. There can, therefore, be no presumption that, on his partition from his brothers, he and his descendants become presumably divided.[5] As will be seen all the three propositions are covered by the authority of decided cases.

1643. Presumption on Partition.—"Once is a partition made," says Manu[6] consequently, the fact that there has been a partition raises certain presumptions, namely, that all that was partible had been partitioned and all persons who had a share have received their share. But the fact that the family had partitioned all partible property raises no presumption that the impartible estate had become separate. An impartible estate once shown to be joint will be presumed to so continue until the right of survivorship is given up. It cannot be inferred from the mere fact of separate possession and enjoyment, for this is the incident of impartibility.[7]

---

(1) Manu, IX-192.

(2) Vaidyanatha v. Aiyasamy, 32 M. 191; Kumarappa v. Vanangamudi, 55 M. 483; Anandi Bai v. Subba Bai, 35 B. 293; Sundaramma v. Kamakotiah, 26 I.C. (M.) 514; Subba v. Alagammal, 31 I.C. (M.) 674; Narayan v. Nana, 7 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 153; Shah Dev Singh v. Lajwanti, (1932) L. 479.

(3) Hari Baksh v. Babu Lal, 5 L. 92 P.C.; Ranganatha v. Narayanasamy, 31 M. 482, explaining Balabux v. Rukmabai, 30 C. 725 (736) P.C.; Rajarathnasami v. Anji, 10 I.C. (M.) 103; Parbati v. Maharaji Singh, 6 I.C. (A.) 795; Ramaswamy v. Mumandy, 20 M.L.J. 709: 5 I.C. 343; Nand Kishore v. Bohra, 14 I.C. (A.) 237; Ghose Lal v. Badri Singh, 22 I.C. (O.) 129; Suraj Pal v. Gajraj, 1 O.L.J. 698: 26 I. C. 600; Nihal v. Kishore Chand, (1910) P. R. 97: 8 I.C. 999.

(4) Jatti v. Banwari Lal, 4 L. 350 P.C. : (1923) P.C. 136, explained in Hari Baksh v. Babu Lal, 5 L. 92 P.C.; Parsotam v. Jagannath, 41 A. 361; Gadian v. Gadian, 1 M.L.W. 799: 26 I. C. 43; Bal Krishna v. Raju, (1915) M. W.N. 17: 27 I.C. 736.

(5) Hari Baksh v. Babu Lal, 5 L. 92 P.C.: (1924) P.C. 126 (132, 133), explaining Bala Bux v. Rukmabai, 30 C. 725 P.C.; Balkishen v. Ram Narain, ib., 738 P.C.; Jatti v. Banwari Lal, 4 L. 350 P.C.: (1923) P.C. 136.

(6) Manu, X-47.

(7) Konammal v. Annadana, 51 M. 189 (204, 205) P.C.; Collector of Gorakhpur v. Ram Sunder, 56 A. 468 P.C.

1644. Limits of the Rule.—It should, however, be added that the "parties" presumed to have partitioned mean only such persons as with reference to the evidence given would necessarily take a share. For instance, on proof of partition between two branches, a general partition between all the branches may be presumed, but it does not imply a separation of the members of each branch inter se.[1] Even as regards the several branches it is merely a legal presumption capable of rebuttal by proof that on separation of some of the members the rest continued to remain joint.[2] But even that presumption is not warranted in the case of a person and his own descendants.[3]

When Sons only Separate.

1645. It has been seen that Hindu law contemplates a complete and exhaustive partition both as to the person and the property. But this is not always possible. It sometimes happens that only a portion of the joint property is divided, or that only a single member may choose to separate from the family. In that case, he alone will go out but the others will still continue to remain joint as before. In either case, the presumption of their jointness disappears.[4] It does not necessarily dissolve their union. (§§ 1642-1643.) Nor does it preclude proof of the fact that the partition was partial as to the persons or the property (S. 205), while, on a partition being made, there is the presumption that it is complete there is no presumption as to time, though partition is admitted.[5]

Where Property is kept Joint.

1646. Where on a partition some of the joint property remains undivided, the question whether the co-owners thereof will still continue to enjoy the status of coparceners depends upon their intention. If the intention was to divide the entire estate, but some items of property were nevertheless left whether designedly or through inadvertence, its quondam coparceners will retain it only as co-owners[6] unless the partition being partial, the residue of the estate is kept joint, in which case the status of jointness would enure beyond the partial partition and the pro-

(1) Jai Narain v. Prag Narain, 29 C. W.N. 775 P.C. : 85 I.C. 2; Hari Baksh v. Babu Lal, 5 L. 92 P.C.; Ranganatha v. Narayanasami, 31 M. 482 explaining Balabux v. Rukhmabai, 30 C. 725 (736) P. C.; Rajarathnasami v. Anji, 10 I. C. (M.) 103; Parbati v. Maharaji Singh, 6 I.C. (A.) 795; Ramaswamy v. Mumandy, 20 M.L.J. 709: 5 I.C. 343; Nand Kishore v. Bohra, 14 I.C. (A.) 237; Jagmohan Das v. Kunwar Singh, 95 I.C. 135 : (1926) A. 532; Ghose Lal v. Badri Singh, 22 I. C. (O.) 129; Suraj Pal v. Gajraj, 1 O.L.J. 698 : 26 I.C. 600; De v. Sheonath, 2 Luck. 459: (1927) O. 149; Raghunandan v. Mahabir, 96 I.C. 448: (1926) Pat. 545; Nihal v. Kishore Chand, (1910) P.R. 97 : 8 I.C. 999.

(2) Jatti v. Banwari Lal, 4 L. 350 P. C.: (1923) P.C. 136, explained in Hari Baksh v. Babulal, 5 L. 92 P.C.; Parsotam v. Jagannatha, 41 A. 361; Gadian v. Gadian, 1 M.L.W. 799: 26 I.C. 43; Bala Krishna v. Raju, (1915) M.W.N. 17: 27 I.C. 736.

(3) Jai Narain v. Prag Narain, 29 C. W.N. 775 P.C. : 85 I.C. 21; Hari Baksh v. Babulal, 54 C. 92 P.C. : (1924) P.C. 126 (132, 133), explaining Balu Bux v. Rukmabai, 30 C. 725 P. C.; Balkishen v. Ramnarain, ib., 738 P.C.; Jatti v. Banwari Lal, 4 L. 350 P.C.: (1923) P.C. 136.

(4) Anandi v. Hari, 35 B. 293; Dagadu v. Sakhubai, 47 B. 773; Beni Prashad v. Gurdevi, 4 L. 252; contra dissented from in the last two cases; Gauri Shankar v. Atmaram, 18 B. 611 held overruled by Girja Bai v. Sadashiv, 43 C. 1081 P.C.

(5) Rukhman v. Kirpa, (1913) P.L.R. 338: 22 I.C. 134; Tika v. Mahabir, 19 O.C. 92 : 36 I.C. 629; Mendava v. Jagannath, 17 O.C. 235: 25 I.C. 689.

(6) Appovier v. Rama Subba Ayyar, 11 M.I.A. 75 (92); Yerukola v. Yerukola, 45 M. 648 F.B.; Guru Lal v. Gajasa, (1932) N. 92.

perty so held would on the death of any member be subject to survivorship.[1]

Re-opening of Partition.

196. The following persons are entitled to claim their share of the property even after its partition:—

Right of absent and disqualified coparceners to re-partition.

(1) A coparcener who being conceived at the date of partition is subsequently born;[2]

(2) Any other son born after the partition if the father had reserved no share for himself;[3]

(3) Absent coparcener;[4]

(4) Disqualified coparcener on the removal of his disqualification for which he was excluded from partition;[5]

(5) A son of such disqualified coparcener born after the partition.[6]

1647. Analogous Law.—The following texts bear on the subject of clause (1):—

Yadnavalkya.—"When after the sons, etc., have become separated, a son is born of a wife of the same class, he becomes a partner of a share, or his allotment should be made out of the visible estate, corrected by the necessary adjustment of profit or loss."[7]

Mitakshara. (Explaining the last).—"9. A share allotted for one who is born after a separation of the brethren, which took place subsequently to the death of the father, at a time when the mother's pregnancy was not manifest is 'his allotment.' But whence shall it be taken? The author replies: 'from the visible estate' received by the brethren, 'corrected for income and expenditure.' Income is the daily, monthly or annual produce. Liquidation of debts contracted by the father is expenditure out of the amount of property, corrected by allowing for both income and expenditure, a share should be taken and allotted to the posthumous son.

"10. The meaning here expressed is this: "Including in the several shares, the income thence arisen and substracting the father's debts, a small part should be taken from the remainder of the shares respectively, and an allotment equal to their own portion should be thus formed for the posthumous son born after partition.

"11. This must be understood to be likewise applicable in the case of a nephew, who is born after the separation of the brethren, the pregnancy of the brother's widow, who was yet childless, not having been manifest at the time of the partition.

"12. But if she were evidently pregnant, the distribution should be made after awaiting her delivery, as Brihaspati directs: Partition of heritage takes place among his brothers having waited until the delivery of such of the women, as are childless but pregnant.[8] This text should be interpreted 'having waited until the delivery of the women who are pregnant'.

Subodhini (Commenting on Mit. § 9, supra).—"If agriculture or the like have been practised by the brethren with their several shares after separation, the gain is 'income". The payment of the father's debts, the support of their own families and similar distributions constitute 'expenditure.' Counting the income in the shares, and deducting the expenditure from the allotments as much as may be in each instance, an allotment be thus adjusted for a son born of a pregnancy which existed at the moment of the father's decease as well as at the time of the partition though not then manifest."

---

(1) Phoolbas Kuar v. Lala Jogeshar, 1 C. 226 P.C.; Konammal v. Annadana, 51 M. 189 (204, 205) P.C.

(2) Yad. II-122 (Mandlik), p. 216; Mit., VII-12. § 1647.

(3) Manu, IX-216 cited in Mit. I-VI-4; Ganpat v. Gopal Rao, 23 B. 636.

(4) Krishna v. Somi, 9 M. 64 (78) F.B.

(5) Mit. II-X-7; Mayukh, IV II-2.

(6) Krishna v. Somi, 9 M. 64 (69) F.B.

(7) Yad., II-122 (Mandlik), p. 216.

(8) The first part of this passage corresponds with a text of Vashisth's Institutes (XVII-36) : but the sequel of it is not to be found in that work—Code., to Mit. I-VII-12.

1648. The Mitakshara devotes a whole section[1] to consideration of the case of a son in the womb and the after-born son, distinguishing their rights and placing the former in the category of living persons at the date of partition.

1649. This solicitude for the unborn son is consistent with the general policy of Hindu Law which counts birth as from the moment of conception.[2] So in the Smiriti Chandrika it is said: "The venerable teachers direct that ownership of wealth is acquired by birth alone." "By birth alone" is meant "by the very formation of the foetus in the mother's womb."[3] So in the Tagore case[4] the Privy Council observed: "By a rule now generally adopted in jurisprudence, this class would include children in embryo who afterwards came into separate existence."[5] So in a Madras case it was held that the rights of a son in the womb to ancestral property cannot be defeated by a will or a gift.[6] This case was however, distinguished in Bombay on the ground that it did not involve any question as to the binding character of any partition already made.[7] In this view it was laid down that the right of the after-born son depends upon whether the father had or had not reserved any share for himself. If he had, the after-born son can only share with his father but has no claim against his divided brothers. But if he had reserved no share, then he is entitled to claim a share from his separate brothers not only in the property divided, but also in the accumulations made with the help of the divided property.[8]

1650. But, of course, the case of the subsequently begotten son is different to that of the son begotten at the date of partition. The case of the former is directly covered by the following texts:—

Clause (2).

Manu.—"A son born after a division shall alone take the paternal wealth."[9]

Brihaspati.—"A son born before the partition has no claim on the wealth of his parents, nor one begotten after it on that of his brother."[10]

Mitakshara. (Citing the last text).—"The meaning of the text is this. One born previously to the distribution of the estate, has no property in the share allotted to his father and mother who are separated from their elder children nor is one born of parents separated from their children a proprietor of his brother's allotment."[11]

As regards the after-born son it is settled that he cannot claim any share from his separated kinsmen[12] if his father was allotted a share and that his only right is to partition his father's share. But where the father has received no share and is unable to provide for him, then he is entitled to claim a share from his separated brothers.[13] This view is in some measure supported by the dictum of the Privy Council, who said:

---

(1) II-S. VI.
(2) Sm. Ch. I-27.
(3) Ib.
(4) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 P.C.
(5) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (397) P.C.
(6) Minakshi v. Virappa, 8 M. 89.
(7) Ganpat v. Gopalrao, 1 Bom. L. R. 123 (125, 126).
(8) Ganpat v. Gopal Rao, 1 Bom. L. R. 123 (126), following Chengamma v. Munisami, 20 M. 75.
(9) Manu, IX-216, cited in Mit., I-VI-4.
(10) Brihaspati, cited in Mit., I-VI-4.
(11) Mit., I-VI-5.
(12) Shivaji Rao v. Vasant Rao, 33 Bom. 267 (271).
(13) Ganpat v. Gopal Rao, 23 B. 636; Shivaji Rao v. Vasant Rao, 33 B. 267 (272); Chengama v. Munisami, 20 M. 75.

"In the case of a partition between father and sons it is laid down in the books that if a son born after the partition of ancestral estate get a share equal to what his brothers had obtained, the other brothers must contribute to a share out of their portions. The rule is to be found in the Dayabhag, Ch. VII, Ss. 10, 11 and 12, which is a Bengal authority, but it refers to Vishnu and Yadnavalkya, authorities on which the Mitakshara is founded. Indeed, the principle of the joint family is not less closely insisted on by the Benares school than by the Bengal school of law. But their Lordships are not now affirming the law on this point nor are they deciding or prejudicing any question which may arise hereinafter."[1]

1651. Absent Coparcener.—The absence of a coparcener cannot delay partition but it must preserve his share, which may be made over to his wife or other heir[2] and if partition is by suit, they should be equally made parties thereto.[3] The absent coparcener cannot be in a worse position than a minor or a lunatic whose share cannot be ignored because he is not able to claim it for himself. Where a definite share has been allotted to the absent coparcener the latter may reopen the partition on the ground of fraud and in his case the fact of inequality would be evidence of it. But apart from fraud, he can obtain no redress. Where, however, the absent coparcener is taken up for dead, his return would necessarily reopen the partition to the extent necessary for his share.

Clause (3).

The position of an absent coparcener is like that of minors, idiots and other disqualified persons. (§ 1652.)

1652. Disqualified Coparcener.—Where a coparcener is excluded from participation in the family partition by reason of his disqualification, a question may arise whether his disqualification is absolute (§§ 1596-1597; S. 304 q. v. since in the latter case the subsequent removal of his disqualifications would entitle him to compel his kinsmen to cede to him his legitimate share. His right to a share is declared by the following text:—

Clause (4).

Mitakshara.—"7. If the defect be removed by medicaments or other means as penance and atonement at a period subsequent to a partition, the right of participation takes effect by analogy to the case of a son born after separation."[4]

1653. The analogy of a son born after separation is merely intended to strengthen the argument. It does not qualify his right. Of course, where a disqualified son has already received some share, though not proportionate to his right, it will not be possible to reopen the partition. But, otherwise, a disqualified coparcener may perhaps be more closely compared to an absent coparcener believed to be dead, who afterwards turns up to claim his share, which will have to be made up out of the other coparceners' allotments.[5]

1654. The right of an after-born son to a share, if necessary, by reopening the whole partition, is subject to clause (1), i.e., he must be present in germio matrix at the time of the partition. But when he was not so present, his right to a

Cl. (5). Son of Disqualified Coparcener.

(1) Bishenchand v. Asmaida, 6 A. 560 (574, 575) P.C.
(2) Srinath v. Probhatchandra, 11 C. L.J. 580 : 6 I.C. 244.
(3) Ib.
(4) Mit. II-X- 7; Mayukh, IV-II-12.
(5) St., H.L., 207; Krishna v. Sami, 9 M. 64 (78) F.B.

share cannot be defeated if his father received no share, whether because he was disqualified,[1] or for any other reason. As such, this clause is only a branch of a more general rule enunciated in the next section.

[See the subject further discussed under the next section.]

Right of after-born son.

197. (1) In a partition between the father and his sons, an after-born son becomes entitled to his share on a re-partition, if he was begotten before partition, but not otherwise;[2]

(2) Where, however, in a partition, the father had been allotted no share for himself, a son after-born, even though not then begotten, is entitled to his share out of the property already partitioned, if necessary, by demanding a re-partition.[3]

1655. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by the undernoted cases. The fiction of considering an unborn child was actually born is not limited to Hindu Law, since it is a wider rule which found a place in the Civil Law and is a part of the English Law.[4]

Manu.—"A son born after a division shall alone take the paternal wealth.[5]

Brihaspati.—"A son, born before partition, has no claim on the wealth of his parents; not one, begotten after it, on that of his brother."[6]

Mitakshara.—"The sons being separated from their father, one, who shall be afterwards born of a wife equal in class, shall share the distribution. What is distributed, is distribution, meaning the allotment of the father and the mother; he shares that; in other words, he obtains after (the demise of) parents, both their portions his mother's portion, however, only if there be no daughter; for it is declared that "Daughters share the residue of the mother's property, after payment of her debts."[7]

1656. Posthumous Son.—The Mitakshara devotes a whole section to the rights of a posthumous and an after-born son. Taking the case of a posthumous son first, the Mitakshara provides that where the "brothers have made a partition subsequently to their father's demise, how shall a share be allotted to a son, born afterwards?" to which the author replies, "His allotment must absolutely be made out of the visible estate 'corrected for income and expenditure.'"[8] These words are explained to mean that "out of the amount of property corrected by allowing for both income and expenditure a share should be taken and allotted to the posthumous son. In other words, a posthumous son is entitled to a share out of the partitioned estate, if necessary, by its repartition.

The case of an after-born son is next taken up; but here the Mitakshara merely provides that if the brothers know that their mother is enciente, they must defer partition until her delivery;[9] but if they proceed to partition, the son would take his share as if he were then alive.

---

(1) Krishna v. Sami, 9 M. 64 (69), distinguishing contra in Pareshmani v. Dinanath, 1 B.L.R. (A.C.) 117; Kalidas v. Krishan, 2 B.L.R. 102 F.B., on the ground that they were presumably cases under the Dayabhag law.

(2) Dig. I-V-7; Blasson v. Blasson, 2 De. G. J. & S. 665 : 46 E.R. 334, cited in Kusum Kumari v. Dasrathi, 34 C.L.J. 323 : 67 I.C. 210.

(3) Krishna v. Sami, 9 M. 64 (77, 78) F.B.; Chengama v. Munisami, 20 M. 75.

(4) Blasson v. Blasson, 2 De. G.J. & S. 665 : 46 E.R. 534, cited in Kusum Kumari v. Dasrathi, 34 C.L.J. 323 : 67 I.C. 210.

(5) Manu, IX-216.

(6) Brihaspati, cited in Mit. I-VI-4.

(7) Mit., I-VI-2.

(8) Mit., I-VI-8.

(9) Ib., I-V-12.

1657. After-born Son.—Under Hindu Law a child is presumed to come into existence from the moment of its conception. Consequently, where partition is effected while a coparcener was in the womb, on his birth he becomes entitled to a share which he may claim by reopening the partition.[1] But if the partition was completed before his conception he has no right against his separated brothers though he may seek a partition of his father's allotment, including the allotments of those who are then in union with him.[2]

1658. Position of Heirs of the Excluded Coparcener.—The position of the heirs of the excluded person has occasioned some conflict in the judicial decisions of the country. For while it is conceded that the position of a child in germio matrix is exceptional, the indulgence which permits the fiction to treat a child in the womb as a child already born cannot be extended to one subsequently begotten. In that case if the father was excluded from participation on the ground of his disqualification, the estate vesting in the other coparceners, whether on partition or succession, cannot be divested so as to let in the heirs of the excluded person. It has been so held both in Calcutta and in Bombay,[3] the only exception being that such a son may reopen a partition, if the father, though not disqualified, had reserved no share to himself.[4] In some cases it is suggested that while there can be no divesting in the case of obstructed succession, the same rule cannot be applied to where the succession is unobstructed or where the estate is taken by survivorship and not by inheritance.[5] In such cases, the after-born son becomes entitled to his share if at a partition, the father, whether qualified or not, takes no share, in which case his after-born son would on the analogy of an absent coparcener be entitled to take a share, and may for that purpose, demand a re-partition.[6] But where the father was excluded for a disqualification involving moral turpitude, e.g., the murder of his predecessor, it is in accordance with the rule of justice, equity and good conscience that both he and his issue and all relations claiming through him should be excluded from their share.[7] Apart, however, from such exclusion there remain the cases in which the father's exclusion was due to no fault of his own, in which case the two rules of law are in conflict: (i) that an estate once vested cannot be divested by an event subsequent thereto; and (ii) that the disqualification being merely personal the right of the son should not be prejudiced. On this point, the Calcutta[8] and the Madras Courts[9] are at variance, the one would exclude the son altogether, while the other would hold the son as entitled to a share. In so holding the Madras Full Bench distinguished the Bengal case on the ground that it was presum-

---

(1) Shivaji v. Vasantrao, 33 B. 267.

(2) Per Ranade, J., in Ganpat v. Gopal Rao, 23 B. 636 (643).

(3) Pareshmani v. Dinanath, 1 B.L.R. 117; Kali Das v. Krishna Chandra, 2 B.L.R. 103 F.B.; Bapuji v. Pandurang, 6 B. 616; Ganpat v. Gopal Rao, 23 B. 636; Pandewa v. Venkatesh, 32 B. 455; Narsinha v. Veerabhadra, 17 M. 287 (292).

(4) Krishna v. Sami, 9 M. 64 F.B.; Chengama v. Munisami, 25 M. 75, explained in Ganpat v. Gopal Rao, 23 B. 636 (646).

(5) Madan Mohan v. Purushotham, 38 M. 1105 (1117, 1118).

(6) Krishna v. Sami, 9 M. 64 (77, 78) F.B.; Chengama v. Munisami, 20 M. 75.

(7) Kenchava v. Girimallappa, 48 B. 569 (574, 575) P.C. See S. 307, post.

(8) Kali Das v. Krishna Chandra, 2 B.L.R. 103 F.B.

(9) Krishna v. Sami, 9 M. 64 (77, 78) F.B.

ably a Dayabhag case and that the principle that an estate once vested cannot be divested is not a rule of Hindu Law, nor indeed, is it one of universal applicability, as witness the divestiture of the estate of all co-widows by an adoption by one of them.[1] This view is justified by the texts which limit the exclusion only to the disqualified coparcener but safeguards the rights of his issue.[2] By parity of reasoning, the same principle should hold good where on demise of the father, there has been a division amongst the brothers in which case the issue of an excluded coparcener should possess a similar right. But it is said that the principle cannot be so extended,[3] at any rate beyond the posthumous son.[4] The son is not bound by the father's release of his share for a nominal consideration: but as soon as he takes a share, the coparcenary claim is satisfied and another son since born cannot claim a share out of his brother's allotment.[5]

Decree for partition.

198. (1) A decree for partition may be preliminary or final.

(2) A preliminary decree must determine and declare the shares of the several parties and order the same to be partitioned by a Commissioner, or in the case of a revenue-paying estate, by the Collector or his gazetted subordinate.

(3) The final decree must be confirmatory of the distribution made by the Commissioner or the Collector with such variations as the court may be competent and think fit to make.

1659. Analogous Law.—There are ordinarily, but not necessarily,[6] two decrees in a partition suit. The first which is the preliminary decree for partition which merely determines and declares the shares of the respective claimants and directs their partition by a Commissioner to be appointed as provided in Or. XXVI, R. 13, or if the property is assessed to revenue, by the Collector or his gazetted subordinate as provided in S. 54 and Or. XX, R. 18 of the Code of Civil Procedure.[7]

Clause (1).

The procedure of the Commissioner must be that prescribed by Or. XXVI, Rr. 14-18 of the same Code.

It has been held that partition through the Collector is unnecessary where no separate allotment of revenue is asked for.[8]

When the partition has to be made by the Collector, the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to examine his work.[9]

1660. Ordinarily, the parties are to bear their own costs up to the stage of the preliminary decree,[10] unless the defendant has contested the plaintiff's right to Costs.

(1) Krishna v. Sami, 9 M. 64 (79) F. B., citing Rakmabai v. Radhabai, 1 M. 69 P.C.

(2) Yadnavalkya, Ss. 140-142 (Mandlik's Tr.) 223, cited in Krishna v. Sami, 9 M. 64 (74) F.B.

(3) Shivaji Rao v. Vasant Rao, 33 B. 267 (272).

(4) Ganpat v. Gopal Rao, 23 B. 636; Shivaji Rao v. Vasant Rao, 33 B. 267 (272).

(5) Shivaji Rao v. Vasant Rao, 33 B. 267.

(6) Sultan Singh v. Bahadur Singh, (1912) P.L.R. 246 : 17 I.C. 390.

(7) Chidambaram v. Gouri Nachiar, 2 M. 83 P.C.

(8) Jogodishuri v. Kailash Chandra, 24 C. 725.

(9) Dev Gopal v. Vasudev, 12 B. 371; Shrinivashabmant v. Gurunath, 15 B. 527.

(10) Shama Soonduree v. Jardine Skinner, 12 W.R. 160; Dildar Khan v. Bhowani, 5 C.L.J. 642; Satya Kumar v. Satya Kirpal, 10 C.L.J. 503 : 39 C. 247.

partition in which case, he will saddled with the cost of his unfounded opposition.[1]

1661. Effect of the Preliminary Decree.—A decree for partition is a joint declaration of the rights of persons interested in the property sought to be partitioned, and is, if properly drawn up, in favour of each shareholder or set of shareholders having a distinct share.[2]

Clause (2).

1662. It is a definite act effecting a severance of the joint family and the divided status is not effected by the institution of an appeal against it.[3] Subsequent births and deaths cannot deprive any of the parties or their representatives of the shares allotted to them by such decree. Such a decree, like other decrees, if right at the time it was passed, cannot be varied by reason of events subsequently happening.[4] Hence where after the preliminary decree, one of the parties died, his share was held to go to his widow and did not enlarge the shares of his other quondam coparceners.[5] Indeed, it would seem that this would be the effect even of the filing of a partition suit which has been held to effect a severance.[6] (§§ 1707, 1708.)

There is, of course, nothing illegal in the coparceners agreeing that on their death their right should devolve by survivorship, in which case the agreement would be given effect to.[7]

But this can only be till a partition is finally closed. After it is once complete no party can continue coparcenership by agreement. As the Privy Council observed: "A separation between members of a joint Hindu family followed by a partition between them of the ancestral property which would not put an end to their coparcenary rights in the property is unknown to the law."[8]

1663. Mother's Case Exceptional.—The rule that the institution of the suit effects a severance does not apply to the mother who is entitled to a share only on completion of the partition, which has been construed to mean when the decree is made final. So where one B died leaving him surviving his widow Y, a son R, and a grandson A, who sued R for partition and possession joining Y as a co-defendant and the court passed a decree declaring each A and Y as entitled to one-third share in the estate. Before any final decree could be passed however, Y died and the question arising whether her share would enlarge A's share or

---

(1) Porter v. Lopes, 7 Ch. D. 358 (367); followed in Satya Kumar v. Satya Kirpal, 10 C.L.J. 503 : 31 I.C. 247; Matilal v. Giris Chandra, 12 C. L.J. 346; Dildar v. Bhawani, 34 C. 878.

(2) Khooshed v. Nubee Fetima, 3 C. 551.

(3) Thandayuthapani v. Raghunatha, 35 M. 239.

(4) Subharaya v. Manika, 19 M. 345; Thandayuthapani v. Raghunatha, 35 M. 239; Sheo Dyal v. Lalta Prasad, 23 O.C. 184 : 58 I.C. 608; contra in Sangili v. Mookan, 16 M. 350 (353); Sakharam v. Hari, 6 B. 113, which is, in view of the Privy Council ruling, no longer law.

(5) Rustam v. Dinkar, 55 I.C. (N.) 38; Mamma v. Mamma, 2 M.L.W. 325 : 28 I.C. 543; Sigu v. Segu, (1911) M.W. N. 467 : 12 I.C. 704.

(6) Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain, 35 A. 80 P.C.; Kaval Nain v. Budh Singh, 39 A. 496 (499) P.C.; Girja Bai v. Sada Shiv, 43 C. 1031 (1045) P.C.; Ramdin v. Bisheshar, 3 O.L.J. 508: 37 I.C. 111; Syed Kasam v. Jorawar Singh, 31 M. L.J. 46 P.C.

(7) Muthu v. Ponnusawmy, 29 M.L. J. 214 : 29 I.C. 549.

(8) Ekradeshwar v. Janeshwari, 42 C. 582 (599) P.C.

go to her own legal representatives, the court held that as Y had died before the final decree, her inchoate right to allotment of a share on partition in lieu of maintenance never ripened into a tangible right and that, therefore, her death had the effect of merely extinguishing her right, and enlarging the shares of the plaintiff and the other co-parcener.[1]

1664. Final Decree.—The final decree must be passed as provided in Or. XXVI, R. 14 (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Clause (3).

The final decree is not a decree in execution of the preliminary decree but, is a decree in the suit, which continues, till the final decree is made, which it is the duty of the court to make without any formal application by the parties.[2]

1665. Where revenue-paying estates are subject to partition by revenue officers, a partition so made is equally conclusive as between the parties and their representatives. Such partition against the father binds his sons.[3]

---

(1) Raoji v. Anant, 42 B. 535.
(2) Dwarka Nath v. Barinda, 22 C. 416.
(3) Gajadhar v. Hari Singh, 47 A. 425 (433).

CHAPTER XIV.

RE-UNION.

Re-union.

199. (1) Re-union of persons, subject to the Mitakshara[1] and the Dayabhaga[2] schools of law, can take place only between a person and his father, brother, and paternal uncle, and amongst them only who were parties to the original partition.[3]

(2) Provided that of persons subject to the Mayukh[4] and the Mithila[5] branches of law, any late coparceners may unite if they were parties to the original partition.

Explanation.—Though the father or other guardian may represent a minor coparcener at a partition, he cannot effect his re-union.[6]

1666. Analogous Law.—The law of re-union is founded on the text of Brihaspati,[7] and is explained in the following texts:—

Yadnavalkya.—"Effect which had been divided and which are again mixed together are termed re-united. He to whom such appertain is a re-united parcener."[8]

Mitakshara.—"2. Effects which had been divided and which are again mixed together are termed re-united. He to whom such appertain is a re-united parcener.

"3. That cannot take place with any person indifferently but with a father, a brother or a paternal uncle, as Brihaspati declares: 'He who being once separated dwells again through affection with his father, brother or paternal uncle is termed re-united'."[9]

Vivad Chintamani.—"The first principle of re-union is common consent of both the parties, and it may be either with the co-heirs or with a stranger after the partition of wealth."[10]

Mayukh[11] (After citing the Mitakshara and Brihaspati).—"Union may take place even with a wife, a paternal grandfather, a brother's grandson, and the rest, according to the rule that the subject and the predicate should inhere in the same object observable in the text: 'He who having been separated again dwells together is re-united'."[12]

Dayabhag (After quoting Brihaspati).—"A special association among persons other than the relations here enumerated, is not to be acknowledged as a re-union of parceners; for the enumeration would be unmeaning."[13]

Dayakram Sangrah.—"3. Therefore, where a person has once become disunited from his father and the rest, afterwards, the former partition is annulled by mutual consent of the separated parties, and in consequence of an agreement being

(1) Ram Narain v. Pan Kuar, 14 Pat. 268 P.C.

(2) Abhai Churn v. Mangal, 19 C. 634 (638).

(3) Ram Narain v. Pan Kuar, 14 Pat. 268 P.C.; approving Basanta v. Jogendra, 33 C. 371 (374); Balabux v. Rukhmabai, 30 C. 725 P.C.

(4) Viswanath v. Krishnaji, 3 B.H. C.R. (A.C.) 69; Lakshmibai v. Ganpat, 4 B. H. C. R. (O. C.) 150 (166).

(5) Dayakrama Sangraha, cited in § 1666.

(6) Balabux v. Rukhmabai, 30 C. 725 (734, 735).

(7) Vishvanath v. Krishnaji, 3 B. H. C.R. (A.C.) 69 (75).

(8) Yad., II-9.

(9) Mit., I-IX-2, 3, cited and followed in Balabux v. Rukhmabai, 30 C. 725 (734) P. C.; Jatti v. Banwari Lal, 4 L. 350 P.C.; Ram Narain v. Pan Kuar, 14 Pat. 268 P.C.

(10) Vachaspathi Misra's Vivad Chintamani (Tagore's Tr.), 30.

(11) Sanskrit, put together, re-united (hence the term Sanskrit, put together).

(12) Mayukh, IV-9-1.

(13) Dayabhag, XII-4.

concluded to the following effect, 'the wealth which is thine is mine—that which is mine is thine,' they resolve on dwelling in the same abode. This is considered re-union.

"4. Here since the father and the others are particularly specified re-union takes place with those who are alone described, and not with nephew and the rest, who are not named. Otherwise the specific mention of father and the others would be unmeaning. Such is the opinion according to the Dayabhag.

"5. The followers of the Mithila school are of opionion that the use of the term father and the rest is illustrative and that re-union takes place when those whose right to a share of the common property is established by their birth re-associate after having once separated. Consequently, that re-union can occur with nephews and the rest."[1]

1667. It will be thus seen that both under the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag or the Bengal school of law, re-union is only possible with the father, brother or the paternal uncle,[2] and it is so settled by the Privy Council.[3] It is not possible even between first cousin.[4] But there may be re-union between brothers whether of the whole blood or of the half blood. The only exception is the Mithila school and the Mayukh which allows re-union between any coparceners.

1668. Principle.—As might be supposed; re-union does not amount to the cancellation of partition, though the parties to a partition may cancel it, in which case, they would remain as united as if the partition had never taken place. On the other hand, where there is a mere re-union, it cannot re-unite all those who had separated, and the new status cannot be created except by an intention and an agreement to do so. Nor does such re-union restore the old coparcenary with its devolution by survivorship. Being a new status, limited by Brihaspati's text, it creates anomalous coparcenary, in that its most essential incident is lacking.

1669. Who May Re-unite?—As regards the Mayukh; since it yields to the Mitakshara, it cannot sanction a departure at variance with the latter. The texts before cited contemplate a limited and an unlimited re-union. In the first case, re-union is only possible with the father, brother or paternal uncle, in the latter case all coparceners who divided could re-unite. The latter view has been abandoned everywhere outside the Mithila country where such unlimited re-union is still conceivable.

1670. Even as regards the former, there can be no re-union, unless there had been a previous union and separation.[5] If, therefore, the father and son were separate from the rest of the family, re-union is not possible with them and the family.[6] It is not necessary that the separation should be by a formal partition nor need the re-union be in a formal manner or by a formal deed or by any deed at all.[7] What is however necessary is, that there must be an intention to re-unite.[8] Re-union cannot be presumed from the fact that the relations had postponed an apportionment of lands in severalty from motives of convenience. In order to constitute re-union four things are essential: (1) a previous

(1) Dayabhag, Ch. V, 3-5.
(2) Ram Narain v. Pan Kuar, 14 Pat. 268 P.C.; Basanta v. Jogendra, 33 C. 371.
(3) Ram Narain v. Pan Kuar, 14 Pat. 268 P.C.
(4) Ib.
(5) Ram Narain v. Pan Kuar, 14 Pat. 268 P.C.; Balabux v. Rukhmabai, 30 C. 725 P.C., explained in Akshay v. Hari Das, 35 C. 721 (723); Jatti v. Banwari Lal, 4 L. 350 P.C.
(6) Akshay v. Hari Das, 35 C. 721 (723).
(7) Mahalakshmamma v. Surya Narayana, 51 M. 977.
(8) Prankishen v. Mothooramohun, 11 M.I.A. 403 (406); Lakshmi Bai v. Ganpat, 4 B.H.C.R. 150 (166), O.A. 5 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 128.

state of union; (2) re-union, by those who have made a partition; (3) an intention to re-unite; and (4) the requisite relationship. Where, therefore, the sons take under their father's bequest, the sons cannot re-unite because the first two conditions in their case are wanting.[1] Again since re-union must be made by the very persons who made the partition, it follows that their descendants cannot re-unite.[2] They may of course re-unite in fact, but their re-union will not be a re-union in law reconstituting a coparcenary with a right of survivorship.

1671. The question whether there has been a re-union is thus a question of fact,[3] to be proved by him who asserts it and it is a fact which depends upon the proof of the intention to constitute re-union.[4] The mere fact that two relations continue to live jointly after a partition is merely evidence which may establish re-union, but it has not necessarily that result.[5] For instance, where after partition in distinct shares amongst brothers, some of whom were minors, the minor brothers continued to live jointly with one of the adult brothers, that fact would not constitute a re-union since the minors were incapable of exercising any volition in favour of a re-union.[6] Even if the minors had been adults, the mere fact of commensality would not prove re-union. For instance, where after a partition three brothers agreed that their separate shares should be kept joint and that the eldest should manage the same, the true effect of the agreement was held not to leave the family as a joint family but to render the eldest brother accountable for receipts and expenditure on the footing of ordinary agency and not of joint family management.[7] What was wanting in this case, it may be asked, to constitute a re-union? Only this, that the brothers did not amalgamate their shares, but merely kept them joint. In other words they agreed to be partners but not coparceners. In order to constitute a re-union after partition, there should be a junction of estate and a re-union of property: "The property which is mine is thine, and that which is thine is mine."[8]

Minor cannot re-unite.

1672. While the minority of a coparcener is no obstacle to a valid partition, it is an obstacle to a subsequent re-union, since in order to constitute a re-union there must be an agreement which the minor cannot enter into nor can any one on his behalf. As the Privy Council remarked of a re-union pleaded with a minor: "It is difficult also to see how an agreement for that purpose could have been made by or on behalf of the appellant during his minority."[9] Re-union is brought about through "affection" and it is not to the minor's benefit that his share should be placed in jeopardy in an affectionate compact.

---

(1) Lakshmibai v. Ganpat, 4 B. H. C. R. 150 (166).

(2) Vishvanath v. Krishnaji, 3 B. H. C.R. 69.

(3) Raghubir Singh v. Moti Kunwar, 35 A. 41 (47) P.C.; Balabux v. Rukhmabai, 30 C. 725 (726) P.C. It is a matter of law; Narain v. Mahanga, 59 I.C. 706.

(4) Babu v. Official Assignee, 57 M. 931 (940) P.C.

(5) Kuta v. Kuta, 2 M.H. C. R. 235 (237); Ram Huree v. Vrihee Ram, 15 W. R. 442.

(6) Kuta v. Kuta, 2 M.H.C.R. 235; Gopal v. Kenaram, 7 W.R. 35; Rusi Mendli v. Sundar, 37 C. 703 (707).

(7) Satrucherla v. Satrucherla, 22 M. 470 P.C.

(8) Dayabhag, XI-I-30, cited in Gopal v. Kenaram, 7 W.R. 35; Prankishen v. Mothooramohun, 10 M.I.A. 403 (406); Ram Huree v. Vrihee Ram, 15 W.R. 442; Jatti v. Banwari Lal, 4 L. 350 P.C.

(9) Balabax v. Rukmabai, 30 C. 725 (734, 735) P.C.; Jatti v. Banwari Lal, 4 L. 350 P.C. Rusi Mendli v. Sundar Mendli, 6 I.C. 441.

Partition after re-union.

200. The shares of re-united members on a partition may be equal[1] or proportionate to the extent of the contribution made by them at the time of re-union.[2]

Illustrations.

Two brothers A and B re-unite; the value of A's share being double that of B's On partition between the two branches, in Madras, A's branch will be allotted double the amount of B's share, while in Bombay they will share equally.

1673. Analogous Law.—The two views stated in the section are conflicting and each is supported by the texts, the Madras view by the Smriti Chandrika quoted below,[3] and the Bombay view by the Mayukh which bases its view on usage.[4] The following texts bear on the rule:

Manu.—"If brothers once divided and living again together as parceners make a second partition, the shares must in that case be equal. There is not in this instance, any right of primogeniture. (Jeshthyam.)."[5]

Smrithi Chandrika.—(Citing the last) "The subject of this is to show that, in the distribution, the shares may be even unequal where the wealth at the time of re-union, had been made up of disproportionate contributions. Therefore, the inequality of shares must be proportionate to the extent of the contribution which each parcener had made at the time of re-union."[6]

1674. Principle.—The whole law relating to re-united families is anomalous and illogical. It is agreed that the re-union does not obliterate the effect of the previous partition, and consequently, the quantum of each coparcener's share is unaffected by the re-union. But if so, on the death of a coparcener, his share should descend to his wife; but it does not, since another text[7] diverts it to the surviving brother. Then as regards the effect of the re-union, the cases are in conflict on the point whether the re-united members share equally as if they had never separated, as is held in Bombay,[8] or whether their share is proportionate to their contribution at the time of the re-union, as is held in Madras.[9]

No writing necessary.

201. No writing is necessary to effect a reunion, but if it is reduced to writing such writing must be registered if its provision falls within the terms of S. 17 of the Registration Act.[10]

1675. Analogous Law.—No writing is required to effect either a partition or re-union thereafter but as in the case of a partition, so a fortiori in the case of a re-union, if the transaction is once reduced to writing, then it must be registered, since a re-union is only possible if there is an agreement declaratory of the new status.[11] But

(1) Pranjivandas v. Ichharam, 39 B. 734 (742) followed in Krishnayya v. Guravayya, (1921) M. 443, contra Narayana v. Sankar Sah, 51 M. L. J. 621, O A. 53 M. 1 (20) F.B.

(2) Manu, IX-210, Sm. Ch. XII-4 (Setlur) pp. 300, 301.

(3) Smriti Chandrika, Ch. XII-4 (Setlur); Narayan v. Shankar Sah, 53 M. (10) F.B.

(4) Mayukh (Mandlik, p. 85); followed in Pranjivandas v. Ichharam, 39 B. 734 (742).

(5) Manu, IX-210; commented on in Mayukh (Mandlik), p. 85 in support of equal division as also supported by usage.

(6) Ch. XII-4; (Setlur) pp. 300, 301.

(7) Narad, XIII-25; Yad. II-138; cited in Smriti Chandrica, XII-10 (Setlur) pp. 301, 302.

(8) Pranjivandas v. Ichharam, 39 B. 734 (742), followed in Krishnayya v. Guravayya, (1921) M. 443. Contra Narayana v. Sankar Sah, 51 M.L.J. 621, O.A. 53 M. 1 (20) F.B.

(9) Manjanatha v. Narayana, 5 M. 362; approved in Narayana v. Sankar Sah, 53 M. 1 (20) F.B.

(10) S. 17 (1) (b) Registration Act; Mahalakshmamma v. Suryanarayana, 51 M. 977 cf. Pratab Singh v. Keshav Lal, 59 B. 180 P.C.; Rangu v. Lakshman, (1930) B. 438; Mg Po v. Mg Shwe, 1 R. 405.

(11) Ib.

since both an intention and an agreement may be inferentially deduced from other writings, e.g., recitals in a mortgage deed, it must be proved by those relying upon such recitals that they were made with the knowledge of the parties concerned and that they were not inconsistent with other recitals.[1]

Succession amongst re-united relations.

202. (1) Subject to the following modifications, a re-united family is, for the purpose of succession, treated as a joint family.[2]

(2) As between relations of equal degree, those joint or re-united exclude those who were separate when the succession opened.

(3) In a re-union between brothers of the whole blood and those of half blood, the former succeed to each other in preference to the latter.[3]

(4) Where brothers of the whole blood remain separate, and only those of the half blood re-unite, brothers of the whole blood and those of the half blood and their descendants inherit together.

(5) Where only some brothers of the half blood re-unite, those not re-united do not inherit.

(6) Brothers of the whole blood, though separate, take in preference to the father though re-united.[4]

(7) In default of the uterine brother, or reunited half-brother, the estate devolves on the following heirs, namely:—

(1) Reunited mother,
(2) Reunited father,
(3) Any other reunited coparcener,
(4) Separate half-brother,
(5) Separate mother,
(6) Separate father,
(7) The widow,
(8) The daughter,
(9) The daughter's son,
(10) The sister.

(8) Subject as above, succession follows the general law.

1676. Analogous Law.—In strict logic, a re-united family should be on the same footing as one which never separated. But that it is not so is proved by the following texts:—

Manu.—"If re-united coparceners make a fresh partition, the shares must be equal. The right of the law of primogeniture does not then apply."[5]

Yadnavalkya.—138. "A re-united brother shall keep the share of his re-united co-heir who is deceased; or shall deliver it to a son subsequently born. But an uterine or whole brother shall thus retain or deliver the allotment of his uterine relation.

"139. A half-brother being again associated may take the succession, not a half-brother though not re-united; but one united by blood though not by coparcenary may obtain the property and not exclusively to the son of a different mother."[6]

Mitakshara.—"6. The allotment of a re-united brother of the whole blood, who is deceased, shall be delivered by the surviving re-united brothers of the whole blood to a son born subsequently. But on the failure of such issue he shall retain it. Thus if there be brothers of the whole blood, an uterine or whole brother being a re-united parcener, not a half-brother who is so, takes the estate of the re-united uterine brother. This is an exception to what has been said before."[7]

(1) Govindoss v. Official Assignee, 57 M. 931 (942) P.C.
(2) Prankishen v. Mothoora Mohun, [illegible] Venkataramayya, 19 M.L.J. 723.
(3) Mit. II-IX-16.
(4) Ramasami v. Venkatesan, 16 M. 440.
(5) Manu, IX-210.
(6) Yad. II-138, 139.
(7) i.e., by Yad. II-39. See supra Mit., II-IX-1, 6.

Dayabhag.—"39. If there be competition between claimants of equal degree whether brothers of the whole blood or brothers of the half-blood, or sons of such brothers, or uncles, or the like, the re-united parcener shall take the heritage, for the text does not specify the particular relation and all these relations were premised in the preceding text and a question arises regarding all of them; therefore, the text must be considered as not relating expressly to brothers."[1]

1677. Succession in Re-united Families.—According to the Smriti-Chandrika, a coparcenary once determined by partition can never be restored by re-union, the reason given being that a share once ascertained remains distinct in spite of the re-union, with the result that re-united members are not coparceners but merely co-owners, following a rule of succession.[2] But this is an extreme view and has not been followed in courts. Re-united members and their issue are coparceners in a re-united family,[3] and however remote, succeed to the property of one another by survivorship.[4] This mode of succession is not confined to members who actually re-united, since the son of a re-united member born after the re-union becomes re-united and takes by survivorship.[5] In other words, on a re-union taking place, not only the parties re-uniting but their descendants and representatives, however remote, will remain joint and succeed to one another on that footing of jointness until a fresh partition takes place, exactly in the same manner, as in the ordinary case of a joint family of which the members remain joint until partition.[6] Consequently it has been held that the shares of the re-united members are the same as they would be at the original partition irrespective of the amount of capital contributed by each coparcener, and even notwithstanding that the portions brought in on re-union were unequal.[7] And in a competition for the succession to the estate of a deceased relative among those who stand in an equal degree of relationship to him, those descended from a re-united parcener are to be preferred to those who are descended from an unassociated parcener.[8] In such cases, re-union is a ground for preference.[9] In other words, a re-united coparcener takes the heritage in preference to and in utter exclusion of the separated claimant, but of an equal degree, whether brothers of the whole or half-blood or sons of such brothers or uncles.[10]

1678. But in a competition between uterine and non-uterine brothers another idea influences the decision, namely, the superior efficacy

(1) Dayabhag, XI-VI-39. There is a long disquisition in Dayabhag on the rights of re-united kinsmen. See XI, Sec. I-1-20-30.

(2) Smriti Chandrika, (Setlur) Ch. XII-IX, p. 301; Ramaswami v. Venkataswami, 16 M. 440.

(3) Kristraya v. Venkataramayya, 19 M.L.J. 723.

(4) Samudrala v. Samudrala, 33 M. 165, distinguishing Ramasami v. Venkatasami, 16 M. 440, following Prankishen v. Mothooramohun, 17 C. 33 (35); Sadananda v. Baikuntha, 2 Pat. L. T. 259; 63 I.C. 833.

(5) Samudrala v. Samudrala, 33 M. 165.

(6) Mit., II-IX; 2 Mac. H. L. 172, 173; Mayukh, IV-IX; Dayabhag, XI-VI 39; Dayakramasangrah, V-8; Viv. Ch., p. 304; 2 Dig. 561, 562; Tarachand v. Pudum, 5 W.R. 249 (250); Abhaicharan v. Mangal, 19 C. 634; Amritrav v. Abaji, (1878) B. P. J. 293.

(7) Amrit Rao v. Abaji, (1878) B.P. J. 293; Krishnayya v. Guravayya, 41 M. L.J. 503: (1921) M. 443. As to conflict of views on partition see S. 200.

(8) Jadub v. Benadbehary, 1 Hyde, 214; Kesahram v. Nandkishor, 3 B.L.R. (A.C.) 7; Abhaicharan v. Mangal, 19 C. 634 (637).

(9) Ramasami v. Venkatesan, 16 M. 440.

(10) Prankishen v. Mothoora, 10 M.I. A. 403 (406); Ramkuri v. Trikiram, 15 W.R. 442; Abhaichurn v. Mangal, 19 C. 634; Sadananda v. Baikuntha, 2 Pat. L. J. 299: 63 I.C. 833.

of the funeral obligations offered by the uterine brother. That furnishes a ground of preference in his favour. If the re-united parcener is a brother of the whole blood both cases of succession concur. They conflict where there is a competition between a re-united brother of the half-blood and a separated brother of the whole blood. The rule of equal division is the outcome of the desire to give effect to both principles.

In a case the adopted son of a re-united half-brother was held to succeed equally with two unassociated full brothers.[1] In a competition between the separated brother and a re-united father, the Oudh court favour the former, though their decision proceeds upon no certain ground.[2] Again a pothumous son excludes a separated son on the ground that his existence dates from the moment of his conception and not of his delivery.[3]

1679. There is no reason why a separated brother should oust the the re-united father, though it has been so held[4] on the authority of the Vir-Mitrodaya and Smriti-Chandrika, which, however, regards the whole law of inheritance to a re-united member good, because it is supported by the text of Sankh and not because it is founded on reason as the general law of inheritance.[5]

According to the Vir-Mitrodaya,[6] and the Smriti Chandrika,[7] the relations enumerated in this clause are next entitled to succeed.

Burden of proving re-union.

203. He who relies upon re-union must prove it.[8]

1680. Analogous Law.—It has already been stated that re-unions are nowadays rare, though not obsolete,[9] since the causes which lead to partition are not easy to eliminate nor is the state of independence born of partition easily forsaken. As the crux of partition is the intention, so is that of re-union.[10] After a partition is once completed, the presumption in favour of jointness vanishes.[11] Consequently, he who relies upon a re-union must prove it like any other fact.[12] It is said that after partition there is a presumption against a re-union.[13] At any rate, there is no presumption that when some separate the rest remain united, and in the absence of a presumption either way, the fact of jointness must be clearly proved.[14]

---

(1) Mayuk, IV-IX-13; Ramasami v. Venkatesan, 16 M. 440.

(2) Bindra v. Mathura, (1931) O. 17 F.B.; see Vir-Mitrodaya, Ch. IV-§ 9 (Setlur, pp. 433, 434).

(3) Khushaldas v. Mulibai, (1936) S. 199; disting. Trayan Kesar v. Basant Kumar, 5 Luck. 248: (1930) O. 36 on the ground that that case dealt with self acquired property. It really dealt with the appreciation of S. 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

(4) Bindra v. Mathura, (1931) O. 17 F.B.

(5) Smrithi-Chandrika (Setlur) Ch. XII-31, pp. 305, 306.

(6) Ch. IV, (Setlur) pp. 427-428.

(7) Ch. XII, (Setlur) pp. 300-307.

(8) Babu v. Official Assignee, 57 M. 931 P.C.

(9) Sir F. Mac. Considerations on H. L., 107; Tarachand v. Pudum, 5 W.R. 249; in Gopal v. Kenaram, 7 W.R. 35 (re-union was proved).

(10) Ram Hari v. Trihi Ram, 7 B.L.R. 336; Rusi Mendli v. Sundar, 37 C. 703; Parbu v. Jwala, 2 A.L.J. 467.

(11) Anandibai v. Hari, 35 B. 293.

(12) Babu v. Official Assignee, 57 M. 931 P.C.; Gopal v. Kenaram, 7 W.R. 35; Balabux v. Rukhmabai, 30 C. 725 (736) P. C.; Rusi Mandli v. Sundar Mendli, 6 I.C. (C.) 441; Parbati v. Maharaj Singh, 6 I.C. (A.) 795; Maharaj Sai v. Kedar Nath, (1933) N. 130.

(13) Amam Singai v. Chaitulal, (1879) C.P.S.C., Pt. VIII, No. 12.

(14) Balakrishen v. Bamnarain, 30 C. 738 P.C.; Balabux v. Rukhmabai, 30 C. 725 P.C.; Jatti v. Banwari Lal, 4 L. 350 P.C. Parbati v. Maharaj Singh, 6 I.C. (A.) 795.

CHAPTER XV.

IMPARTIBLE ESTATES.

1681. Topical Introduction.—The law relating to impartible estates has been casually referred to in the preceding discussion whenever it became necessary to contrast and compare it with other species of property and rights. Impartible estates, in their inception, owe their existence to royal grants made for reasons which might have been political, military, religious or personal. Political grants were made from state policy to allies, servants and dependents for support and service. Military grants were made to vassal chiefs on condition of military service. Religious endowments were prompted by piety. They form an important branch of Hindu Law and form the subject of a separate chapter. Personal grants were service grants made to friends, servants and dependents, their duration depending on their nature and terms. Latterly, such grants have been made, confirmed or continued by the Indian Government, while grants are, however, subject to the provisions of the Crown Grants Act,[1] the provisions of which supersede those of Hindu Law, if in conflict. This Act has been the subject of discussion in the author's other work to which reference is invited in case of necessity.[2]

Impartible estates may owe their origin to any of the five causes enumerated in section 206.

Hindu text books are silent on the subject of impartible estates, though they contain faint traces of that right out of which has evolved the present law on the subject. Manu alludes to such a right in the following texts:—

Manu.—"106. By the eldest, at the moment of his birth, the father, having begotten a son, discharges his debt to his own progenitors; the eldest son, therefore, ought before partition, to manage the whole patrimony.

"119. Let them never divide the value of a single goat or sheep, or a single beast with uncloven hoofs; a single goat or sheep remaining after an equal distribution, belongs to the first born.

"125. As between sons, born of wives equal in their class and without any other distinction, there can be no seniority, in right of the mother; but the seniority ordained by the law, is according to the birth."[3]

1682. Quoting the last text, the Privy Council said: "Now, when it is said, that the single goat or sheep is to belong to one son, it is apparently for the same that a zamindari so descends, viz., that the subject is in its nature impartible, and therefore, the rule that is laid down with reference to one impartible subject, viz., that it belongs to the first-born, appears by reasonable and just implication, to be the rule applicable to all such subjects. And which of several sons is to be deemed to be the first-born is declared by Manu in his S. 125 above cited. There can be no seniority in right of the mother, but the seniority ordained by law is according to birth."[4]

---

(1) Act XV of 1895.
(2) 1 Gour's Law of Transfer, 6th Ed.,) §§ 50-54.
(3) Manu, IX-106, 119, 125.
(4) Ramalakshmi v. Shivnath, 14 M. I.A. 570 (593).

1683. Impartible estates existed before the advent of British rule in India, but both in their inception and incidents they widely differed from those evolved out of what were in effect tenancies at will under the indigenous rule whose theocratic sway left no room for thwarting after their will by having recourse to an independent constituted judicial authority. In the early ages, the lord paramount did carve out smaller estates by grant or recognition, but they were estates of a feudal character held on a military tenure, revenue farms or clearance leases, the tenure of which was as uncertain as their incidents were variable. But whatever their origin or their character, they were held by sufferance of the ruling power and were liable to resumption on his demise. As such estates multiplied and grew in strength and power, the sovereign considered it inexpedient to disturb their possession, and so slowly and by degrees the holders of the estates acquired therein rights akin to quasi ownership which were in later years made more concrete and fixed by the grant of sanads or patents and the overt bestowal of some mark of the royal favour upon each succession. A sword, a turban or a shawl presented to heir upon his succession was intended to serve the dual purpose of recognizing and confirming the claim of the heir.

1684. But if the sovereign capriciously resumed his grant, there was no redress open to the grantee since the sovereign was the ultimate court of appeal and it had not conceded to its subjects the right of suing it in a court of law. Nevertheless, the two great impulses of fear and favour sufficed to maintain the holders upon their gaddi and so, in course of time, there arose the continuity of tenure and its customary incidents, one of which was the rule of primogeniture, the existence of which was recognized and legalized by the Bengal Regulation XI of 1793 (1) which, however, declared that all newly formed estates shall be both partible and descendible according to the Hindu or Mahomedan law of inheritance. An inquiry was set on foot and whenever an estate was found to possess the necessary incidents of impartibility, that fact was noted or reaffirmed in the settlements, commenced long before but made on the close of the Mutiny. But there still remained several estates on the border line to whom such privilege was not accorded. They were left free to carry on as before but without the hall-mark of official recognition.

Impartible estate defined.

204. An estate is impartible if it is incapable of division into two or more parts so as to confer upon the holders thereof rights equal to those possessed by the holder of the undivided whole.

1685. Analogous Law.—In popular parlance, an impartible estate is one of which there can be no partition. This term has been defined before with reference to Hindu Law. (§ 177.) But an impartible estate may be owned by a Mahomedan or other Non-Hindu, and since its incidents are identical, the subject is not exclusively one of Hindu Law.

---

(1) Act XV of 1895.

(2) Ramalakshmi v. Shivnatha, 14 M. I.A. 570 (593).
86

1686. It will be observed that the essence of impartibility comprises in its incapacity for sub-division. This does not mean that the estate may not be split up into parts creating several independent estates. But what it means is that on any division no two part holders can possess co-ordinate rights with those possessed by the original owner who remains its overlord. It thence follows that the latter may carve out, by making perpetual grants, other estates, which may themselves be impartible.[1] But they, nevertheless, remain subordinate to the parent estate, the holder of which may possess only the shadowy right of escheat,[2] but it is a right which singles it out as an estate of which the others are subordinate offshoots. In course of time, these latter may receive an independent legal recognition and they then become independent impartible estates whose connection with the parent stock is but a memory. This process of gradual disruption is accelerated by the claims of junior members to whom maintenance grants have to be made. That the holder of an impartible estate can make such perpetual grants out of his estate, if it is not inalienable, is now settled.[3]

It has been said that impartibility is an incident attached not to the property of a family but to the law governing that particular family,[4] that is to say, it is a personal and not a territorial law. But impartibility is ordinarily the quality of an estate and it is with reference only to an estate that the custom defines its tenure, though the rule of primogeniture may become established as Kulachar or a family custom, as it was found to be the rule in the case of properties of the Darbhanga Raj.[5]

1687. Properties allotted by the State to a person in consideration of the discharge of certain duties or as emoluments of an office are prima facie impartible, even though the duties or office may be hereditary in a particular family.[6] This principle was put to test in a case in which the Raja of Tanjore had made certain grants of land to his Guru (or religious preceptor) some of which were made without assigning any purpose, while others were made to him for the purpose of perpetually conducting a food chatram near the tomb of a holy man, and in one case of making an agrahar by building houses round a holy place. The holy place referred to was a math which the Guru had established. The Privy Council held that while the former grants were partible, the latter were not, because they were intended to be religious charities to be made to him as the head of the math and were to be administered by the head thereof, and as that office was impartible, so were also the grants.[7]

---

(1) Narain v. Loknath, 7 C. 461; Udaya v. Jadabal, 8 C. 199 P.C.

(2) Durga Dat v. Rameshwar, 36 C. 943 P.C.

(3) Annund Lal v. Guru Narain, 5 M.I.A. 82, explained in Udaya v. Jadab Lal, 8 C. 199 (206) P.C. affirming O. A. Uddoy v. Jadublal, 5 C. 113.

(4) Venkata v. Uddagiri, 21 M.L.J. 351 : 41 I.C. 208; Zemindar v. Subbaya, (1918) M.W.N. 146: 43 I. C. 871.

(5) Ekradeshwar v. Janeshwar, 42 C. 582 P.C.

(6) Jaffar v. Aji, 2 M.H.C.R. 19; Trimbak v. Lakshman, 20 B. 495, approved in Sethuramaswamiar, v. Meruswamiar, 41 M. 296 (306) P.C.

(7) Sethuramaswamiar v. Meruswamiar, 41 M. 296 (305, 306) P.C.

205. An estate is inalienable if the holder thereof, for the time being, is incompetent to alienate the whole or any part thereof to another so as to confer upon him the same right as he himself possessed therein.

Inalienable estate defined.

1688. Analogous Law.—The impartibility of an estate implies that it cannot be sub-divided into co-ordinate parts: its inalienability means that it cannot be transferred so as to confer on the transferee any right beyond the lifetime of the holder. The inalienability of an estate may not preclude the carving of a subordinate tenure. It depends upon its terms. An estate customarily inalienable may be alienated for necessity,[1] and may be sold in execution of a decree upon such debt.[2] It may be disposed of by will.[3] And it does not prevent the holder from surrendering it by an act inter vivos to the next heir.

1689. It will be presently seen that the impartibility of an estate prima facie implies its alienability,[4] though this is only a presumption which may be rebutted by proof of a contrary custom. In order to prove the inalienability of an estate, it is not enough merely to show that there has been no alienation for a long time past; what is required to be proved is that there were occasions for an alienation which was not made. As the Privy Council observed: "The absence of evidence of an alienation without any evidence of facts which would make it probable that an alienation would have been made cannot be accepted as proof of a custom of inalienability."[5] (§§ 1737-1739.) Babuana or maintenance grants are not by their nature inalienable,[6] though they may so become by custom.

1690. Inalienable Estate.—Impartibility leads logically to the existence of a power of alienability, and not to a rule of inalienability.[7] But it is an incident which is often associated with impartibility, and estates which were granted for personal service were, as a rule, made both impartible and inalienable. Such are the estates in the nature of a Raj which were by their very nature both impartible as well as inalienable. And it would be against public policy to alter their incidents now. They are even now held in quasi-sovereignty, and though their holders have been released from the obligation to perform military services, yet their other incidents remain and have become the integral part of their tenure. In many cases they have been the subject of regrants, in which case the law re-affirms them as both impartible and inalienable. But where it fails to do so, they may still be impartible, or inalienable, or both, by reason of their very nature or custom.

1691. It is obvious that where an estate is held on condition of service, the tenure becomes necessarily subject to two incidents:—

(i) The tenure is resumable upon the holder refusing to render service; and,

---

(1) Gopal v. Raghunath, 32 C. 158, contra Raja Madhusudan v. Khestrabasi, 8 Pat. 932 (936), cf., amended Ss. 2 (d) and 6, Transfer of Property Act.

(2) Veerasurappa v. Errappa, 29 M. 484.

(3) Muthusawmy v. Bangarammal, 9 M.L.J. 59 : 8 I.C. 332.

(4) Durga Dat v. Rameshwar, 36 C. 943 P.C.; Venkata v. Uddagiri, 21 M.L. J. 351 : 41 I.C. 208.

(5) Saraj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari, 10 A. 272 (289) P.C., cited with approval in Durga Dat v. Rameshwar, 36 C. 943 (954) P.C.

(6) Durga Dat v. Rameshwar, 36 C. 943 (954) P.C.

(7) Venkata v. Uddagiri, 21 M.L.J. 351: 41 I.C. 208.

(ii) The estate is by its nature inalienable beyond the life-time of the holder, since if it were alienable for a longer period, the successor would be deprived of the means to discharge his duties.

But the condition in the sanad rendering them inalienable must be peculiar to the estate. As the Privy Council observed: "The conditions in those sanads by which the Palayagar was bound to protect the inhabitants by preventing, as far as might be in the power of the Palayagar, robberies, depredations, etc., in their properties, to deliver up persons guilty of murder, and not to give shelter to deserters, and to apprehend and deliver them to the Collector are similar to the duties which all landholders and Zemindars in British India have to perform."[1] As such, they do not qualify the alienability of the estate.

Origin of impartible and inalienable estate.

206. An estate may owe its character of impartibility or inalienability to—

(a) any law for the time being in force;
(b) a grant of the sovereign power;
(c) its nature;
(d) custom; or
(e) an accretion thereto.

1692. Analogous Law.—All property is the creature of law, and law is the primordial source of all its incidents. As law itself is the breath of Kings, it follows that the King could create anomalous estates and define their incidents. As such, many estates owe their impartibility to the sovereign grant. And as custom is a part of the common law of the land, custom is another source of such estates, some of which become impartible by the very nature of their tenure. Such were the estates in the nature of a Raj which both the Hindu and Mahomedan rulers created in this country and whose impartibility has since been recognized by the British power either by a fresh conferral, confirmation or statutory recognition. It has already been remarked that various motives prompted these grants. (§ 1681.)

Origin of Impartible Estate.

1693. Clause (2) states that an impartible estate cannot be created by contract, though the parties making it would be ordinarily bound by it.[2] But such contract creates only a personal right and is not binding upon an assignee or the heir.[3] It cannot directly affect the property or alter its incidents, unless it is continued so long that impartibility becomes an incident of the estate, not as a matter of contract, but as one of custom, though the custom itself may owe its origin to a contract.[4]

1694. Another means of imparting the incident of impartibility to an estate, by the volition of a person, exists where the holder of such

(1) Bahadur Singh v. Balchand,(1922) P.C. 623.

(2) Rup Singh v. Bhabuti, 42 A. 30; Piroj Shah v. Mani Bhai, 36 B. 53; Chaita v. Madan, 33 I.C. (C.) 33; Krishendra v. Debendra, 12 C. W. N. 793.

(3) Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.) § 415; Rajender v. Shamchand, 6 C. 106 (116); Venkataramana v. Brammanna, 4 M.H.C.R. 345.

(4) Kishore Singh v. Gahena Bai, 15 N.L.R. 176: 53 I.C. 630 (637, 638) P. C., followed in Mahtab Singh v. Badan Singh, 48 C. 997 (1006, 1007) P.C.

estate incorporates his self-acquisition in the impartible estate upon which the acquisition becomes a graft upon the parent estate and becomes merged in its incidents.[1]

1695. Impartible Estate.—Impartible estates owe their origin to the feudal tenures which conquerors in the East and the West created, by distributing and settling the conquered lands amongst their allies and dependants either as a reward for past support or on condition of future service or of both. These subordinate chieftainships were in the nature of personal grants held during the pleasure of the sovereign and were naturally impartible. As the grants multiplied and the occasion for service disappeared, the grantees became released from the condition of military service, but the chieftains naturally kept up the dignity of their Raj by copying in its Government and devolution the example of their sovereign. When on discontinuance of the native rule, the country passed to the East India Company, the latter scrupulously maintained the old tradition, and on the Government being directly taken over by the British Crown, an inquiry was set on foot and the status quo ante maintained and assured by the issue of Patents or Sanads under the hand of the Settlement and other responsible officers.

Their History.

1696. Now, as there is a distinction between the public and the private property of a Hindu sovereign, his Raj and the public property going to the succeeding Rajah, while his personal and private property going to another set of heirs, the same distinction was observed in the case of the smaller chieftainships.[2] Impartible estates are variously called; they are known as "Raj" in the North and "Polliam" in the South. But an estate may be impartible though it is neither.[3] Some of these are called Jagirs or Inams, others Taluqs or Tahuts, while in some parts, they pass by the title of Zemindaris.

1697. Jagirs: Their History and Incident.—Of these the Jagirs[4] occupy an important place in the land tenures of India. "The Moghul Empire recognized a definite portion of its own dominions as that which was directly managed by the Emperor's officers, and another area as that available for the assignment of the revenue spoken of. And when certain offices or titles were conferred, a fixed grant went with them as an appanage. Such grants were called "Jagirs." They were at first always for life, and resumable with the office. Nearly all later Governments have adopted the Jagir, but chiefly to support troops, or to reward a service of some kind. They are still granted by our own Government, but as a reward for services in the past, and not burdened with the obligation of military service. In time, it was thought beneath the dignity of the ruler to resume, and so the grant became permanent and hereditary. Possibly, this stage was hastened by the fact that the Government—both Hindu and Mahomedan—had always been accustomed to grant smaller holdings of land, free of revenue, to pious purposes, to support temples, mosques, schools, or bridges and tanks, and these were called 'inam' or 'muafi,' and were usually hereditary and permanent as long as the object was fulfilled.

(1) Guruswamy v. Senabatti, 39 M.L. J. 529.

(2) Secretary of State v. Kamachee, 7 M.I.A. 476.

(3) Chintamun v. Nowlukho, 1 C. 153 P.C., reversing O.A. Natukhee v. Chowdhry, 20 W.R. 247.

(4) Contracted from Jai, land and Gir, holder, i.e., landholder.

As the inam was permanent, so the Jagir grew to be so in many cases. Possibly, also, it was the decline of power which caused jagirs to be irregularly granted, and thus to become permanent. When a disorganized Government desires to reward a worthy (or an unworthy) servant, it generally has its treasury empty, and the easiest plan (though true policy would suggest a cash pension for life or lives) would be to give a man a grant by way of assignment, and allow him to collect what revenue he could off the area."[1]

Jagirs were at times also clearance leases with the express object that the grantees should settle the waste.

Where, however, the Jagirs were granted as a reward for military or other service, they were naturally personal and impartible in their character but the fact whether they retained or lost their impartibility, depended upon their subsequent history.

1698. Ordinarily, a Jagir is the grant of the royal share of the revenue and not of the soil,[2] and is presumed to enure only for the life of the grantee.[3] Unless it is a grant to the grantee "and his heirs" there is nothing to control the ordinary meaning of words, in which case he takes an absolute interest. And the words "putra poutradi" in the grant of Jagir do not, at all events outside Bengal, necessarily import an estate of inheritance descending to collaterals.[4] The principle that Jagirs are to be considered life tenures only "unless otherwise expressed in the grant" was expressly laid down in the Bengal Regulations[5] and is the law in the other parts of India.[6] So Melvill, J., had held in an earlier case that "the grant in Jagir or Saranjam was very rarely a grant of the soil, and the burden of proving that it was in any particular case a grant of the soil lay very heavily upon the party alleging it."[7]

1699. In this respect a Jagir and a Saranjam differ from an Inam which is a grant of the soil and is generally alienable at the pleasure of the holder.[8] Where the Jagir is merely a life estate, it follows that it is not liable in the hands of a successor in title for the mortgage debts of his predecessor.[9] And being of personal tenure, it is not partible.

Where a Jagir is granted in perpetuity and partakes of the nature of a Raj, it retains its incident of impartibility, unless there is anything in the grant to make it partible.

---

(1) Baden-Powell's Land Systems of British India, pp. 189, 190.

(2) Guru Rao v. Secretary of State, 41 B. 408.

(3) Raghoji v. Laxman, 36 B. 639 P. C.; Ram Narayan v. Ram Saran, 46 C. 683 (692) P.C.; reversing O. A. Ram Saran v. Ram Narayan, 42 C. 305.

(4) Ram Narayan v. Ram Saran, 46 C. 683 P.C., reversing O.A. Ram Saran v. Ram Narayan, 42 C. 305.

(5) Beng. Reg. XXXVI of 1793, S. 15.

(6) Per Lord Hobhouse in Dasi Bai v. Ishvardas, 15 B. 222 (227, 228) P.C., affirming O.A. 9 B. 561; Raghoji v. Laxman, 36 B. 639 P.C.; Ram Narayan v. Ram Saran, 46 C. 683 (692) P.C. To the same effect, Ramchand v. Venkatrav, 6 B. 598; Gulabdas v. Collector, 3 B. 186 P.C.; Narain Krishna v. Rangrav, 4 B. H.C.R. (A.C.) 1 (24).

(7) Ramchund v. Venkatrav, 6 B. 598.

(8) Krishnarav v. Ramrav, 4 B.H.C. R. (A.C.) 1; Suryanarayana v. Patanna, 41 M. 1012 (1021) P.C.; followed in Upadrastha v. Divi, 43 M. 166 P.C.

(9) Gulab Das v. Collector, 3 B. 186 P.C.

Partible on re-grant.

1700. An impartible estate does not retain its incidents of impartibility or inalienability by the mere fact of its restoration or re-grant after its confiscation by Government. But a change in the nature of the tenure may suffice to remove its anomalies. As the Privy Council observed: "If the Government had intended to make the estate impartible and to limit the succession to a single heir according to the rule of primogeniture, instead of to the heirs of the grantee according to the rule of Hindu Law, there is no doubt they would have expressed their intention in unambiguous language."[1] The fact that the estate was at one time subject to military or feudal service and was consequently both impartible and inalienable does not make the estate subject to those incidents for all time.

1701. Ghatwal.—The Ghatwals[2] were originally keepers of the ghats or passes in the hilly tracts of Chota Nagpur, Monghyr, Birbhum and the Santal Parganas, latterly recognized as chiefs of the areas over which they had become established. For a time they served as a frontier police. Their tenure is in part regulated by the statutory law and varies so much that it is not possible to generalize upon their modern incidents. Ordinarily, however, they are perpetual holdings subject to the condition of service.[3] They are in the nature of Jagirs, which, though hereditary, are not subject to the ordinary rules of inheritance accordance to Hindu or the Mahomedan Law, but are subject to the condition of recognition by the Government. As such, they are incapable of partition, upon the death of the holder, and alienation during his life.[4]

Where the Ghatwal is unable to render service, a deputy might be appointed on his behalf, but his incapacity to render service does not render his estate liable to forfeiture.[5] But where he is dismissed for misconduct, it has the effect of the forfeiture of his tenure, since the right to possess the land depends upon the tenure of the office.[6] Succession to Ghatwalis is regulated solely by the nature of the Ghatwali tenure which descends undivided to the party who succeeds to and holds the tenure as Ghatwal. A woman is not incapable of holding a Ghatwal tenure.[7] And although in custom it descends from father to son, no succession is legal or valid till confirmed by the Zemindar and reported by him to the Government authorities. Where Government has dispensed with the service of the Ghatwals, the Zamindar is under no obligation to continue to appoint, and may, on a vacancy occurring, settle the tenure as he pleases.[8]

Succession to a Ghatwal is by primogeniture.[9]

A Ghatwal tenure is, as regards its alienability, subject to variable incidents. For instance, such a tenure in Kharagpur is not inalienable, and may be transferred by the Ghatwal or sold in execution of a decree against him, if such transfer or sale is assented to

(1) Venkata v. Narayana, 6 C.L.R. 153 (159) P.C.; Mallikarjun v. Durga, 13 M. 406 (422) P.C.

(2) Lit. Ghat, a mountain pass, and wal, belonging to—keeper of a pass.

(3) Leelanund v. Monorunjan, 5 W. R. 101.

(4) Nilmoni v. Bukronath, 9 C. 187 P. C.; Kali Pershad v. Anand Roy, 15 C. 471 P.C.

(5) Jogendra v. Kalicharan, 9 C.W. N. 663.

(6) Debee v. Sree Kishen, 1 W.R. 321; Secretary of State v. Puran Singh, 5 C. 740.

(7) Kustoora v. Monohur, (1864) W. R. 39; Doorga v. Doorga, 20 W.R. 154.

(8) Mahbub v. Patasu, 10 W.R. 179.

(9) Kali Pershad v. Anand Roy, 15 C. 471 P.C.

by the Zemindar. And when once it is established that the Ghatwal had the power of alienation, that power forms an integral portion of his right and interest in the Ghatwali, and must not, in the absence of evidence, be limited to an alienation for his own life and no longer.[1]

1702. Saranjams.—Saranjams[2] are jagirs, and as such may include the grant of the royal share of the revenue or of the soil.[3] They were originally grants of jagirs granted for the support of troops. They were confined to the Nasik and Khandesh districts in the North and to the Southern Maratha country. No condition of service being required, they have been commuted to a money payment; and the grant is a personal distinction for life or lives, or in perpetuity as the case may be.[4] A Saranjam given for the support of a distinguished family is generally by its nature impartible, and inalienable,[5] but all rights acquired by the Saranjamdar, including rights of occupancy in lands unoccupied at the time of the grant, are on his death liable to resumption by Government.[6]

1703. Vatans.—A Vatan was a grant of land made by the sovereign in lieu of service. As such, it was a service-grant, and was both impartible and subject to the law of primogeniture. A vatan was a public office. As in the case of the other service tenures, the vatan tenure became hereditary without retaining its initial association with service. So where it was found that in a Deshpande vatan, for over 150 years, the performance of the services of the vatan and the bulk of the property was confined to the elder branch, the younger branch being provided only with maintenance, it was held that such practice being more probably due in its origin to a family or local usage, than a mere arrangement determinable at the will of any members of the family, ought to be recognized and acted upon as a legal and valid custom.[7]

1704. Polliam.—An impartible estate is known as a Raj in Northern India, while it is called a Polliam in the Southern Peninsula.[8] This term was thus defined by the Privy Council: "A Polliam is in the nature of a Raj; it may belong to an undivided family; but it is not the subject of partition; it can be held by only one member of the family at a time, who is styled the polligar, the other members of the family being entitled to a maintenance or allowance out of the estate."[9] The polligars were originally petty chieftains occupying hilly or forest tracts and nominally owing allegiance and paying tribute and service to the paramount power, but really free of outside control. On the transfer of the Government of the country to the British, the Polliams were settled, but though naturally impartible, their other incidents do not appear to have been clearly defin-

(1) Kali Pershad v. Anand Roy, 15 C. 471 P.C.

(2) Persian word, meaning "Supply of provisions" for troops, or the performance of particular duty. Mukasa has much the same meaning.

(3) Secretary of State v. Girjabai, 51 B. 957 (967) P.C.; Secretary of State v. Laxmi Bai, 47 B. 327 P.C.; reversing O.A. Gururao v. Secretary of State, 41 B. 408.

(4) 3 Baden-Powell's Land Tenures of British India, p. 300.

(5) Ramchandra v. Sakharam, 2 B. 346.

(6) Secretary of State v. Girja Bai, 51 B. 957 (971) P.C.

(7) Ramrao v. Yeshvantrao, 10 B. 327.

(8) Chintamun v. Nowlukho, 1 C. 153 P.C. This history of the Polliams of Southern India will be found given in the Fifth Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons presented to Parliament in 1812 (reprinted Cambray) and in the Madura Manual. The account given in the Fifth Report was adopted by Lord Kingsdown in Kooldeep Narain v. Government, 14 M.I.A. 247.

(9) Narayunty v. Vengama, 9 M.I.A. 66 (86).

ed. So, quoting the High Court, the Privy Council said: "The existence of a proprietary estate in polliams or other lands not permanently assessed, and the tenure by which it has been held, are in our opinion, matters judicially determinable on legal evidence, just as the right to any other property."[1].

1705. Impartible Rights.—Personal rights are naturally impartible. Such is the right of a priest to serve his Yajamans,[2] though the acquisitions made by him might be partible.[3] The Pattam or office of dignity in a family governed by the Aliysantan Law is indivisible and whether the family be divided or not, in the absence of any arrangement made for its devolution, the Pattam descends to the eldest male of the surviving members of the family.[4] It was so held of the shebaitship of a sacred shrine attached to the Tanjore Raj, which after confiscation was restored, whereupon the widows of the grantee continued to manage it one by one. There was no trust-deed and the court held that as the shrine was attached to an impartible Raj, and as by usage the management vested in the occupant of the Raj, the trusteeship was equally impartible and could not be divided among all the heirs to the estate, or the management directed to be held by rotation.[5] But a sacerdotal office is by its nature impartible.[6] Such was held to be the effect of a regrant made after the estate had been seized and purchased by Government for arrears of revenue.[7]

1706. Impartible by Law.—On the termination of the Moghul rule, when the country passed into the hands of the British, it was found that both the titles and the incidents of several large estates held by their proprietors for generations were by no means clear; while in other cases, the terms upon which the estates were held required revision. Such was especially the case with the holders of military tenure. Two courses were taken to place them on a more satisfactory footing. Where several estates of the same class were found to be held on a similar tenure, their status was determined and made the subject of special legislation. This policy gave rise to the Oudh Estates Act[8] and more recently, to the Madras Impartible Estates Act.[9] In other cases the Government sanctioned the issue of sanads, defining the status of holders and the rules of succession applicable to them. In each case, the policy of the Government was to protect and preserve these large estates and prevent their disintegration, which would have followed their relegation to the ordinary law. To ensure this result, the old sanads were in some cases renewed; while in other cases, fresh grants were made and the grantee started with a new muniment of title. This was found necessary in cases in which several estates were confiscated in consequence of the mutiny and regranted upon its close. Some doubt was cast on the power of the Gvernment to create by sanads an anomalous estate and regulating its succession. This resulted in the passing of the Crown Grants Act[10] which legalized "provisions, restrictions,

Clause (a).

(1) Collector v. Lekamani, 14 B. L. R. 115 (137) P.C.

(2) Cf., Bechram v. Thakoormonee, 10 W.R. 114; Ghelabai v. Hargowan, 36 B. 94; Manghernlal v. Vithal Ram, 5 S. L.R. 107 : 13 I.C. 225.

(3) Khedroo v. Deo Rance, 5 W.R. 222.

(4) Timmappa v. Mahalinga, 4 M.H. C.R. 28.

(5) Ayiswarya v. Sivaji, 49 M.L.J. 568 : (1925) M. 84.

(6) Gobinda v. Ramcharan, 52 C. 748.

(7) Hargovind v. Collector, (1937) A. 377.

(8) I of 1869.

(9) Mad. Act II of 1904.

(10) XV of 1895. For the history and scope of this Act, see 1 Gour's Law of Tranfer (6th Ed.).

conditions and limitations over" contained in any grant of transfer made by Government.

1707. The four primary sources of impartible estates are those stated in the section. Of these, the law declaring or creating them is entirely of British origin. Most of such estates owe their origin to the grants of the Hindu and Mahomedan Kings. The next most important source of their creation is custom; while some estate have become impartible by their very nature. Where impartibility is created by law the question is simply reduced to one of construction. The Madras Impartible Estates Act[1] and the Oudh Estates Act[2] are instances of such law declaring the estate therein mentioned as impartible.

1708. Of these, the Madras Act declares certain estates to be impartible, as to which it provides as follows: "The proprietor of an impartible estate shall be incapable of alienating or binding by his debts such estate or any part thereof beyond his own lifetime unless the alienation shall be made, or the debt incurred, under circumstances which would entitle the managing member of a joint Hindu family, not being the father or grandfather of the other coparceners, to make an alienation of the joint property, or incur a debt binding on the shares of the other coparceners independent of their consent."[3]

It will be noted that this section enacts a view of law which has since been definitely overruled by the Privy Council according to whose view there is no coparcenary in an impartible estate, the holder of which may alienate to any one at his discretion. But this contingency was present in the minds of the legislature who have added the following saving clause: "The Act shall not affect alienations made or debts incurred before the coming into force of this Act and shall cease to apply to estates or parts of estates which may hereafter be lawfully alienated otherwise than by temporary transfer."

The Oudh Estates Act was intended to safeguard the impartibility of the Oudh Taluqdars to whom their previous estates had been regranted after the re-occupation of Oudh by the British Government after the mutiny in 1858. The estates are impartible and only alienable within limits, while succession to them is subject to the rule of primogeniture.[4]

The Taluqdars of Oudh, like the Subedars of the South, were at first officials and afterwards lessees of the tracts or taluqs from which they were authorized to collect land revenue for payment into the royal treasury.[5] They are now subject to statutory control.[6]

1709. It has been held in Patna that there is a custom which has attained the status of a lex loci in Chota Nagpur that grants made by the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur are themselves impartible, and as regards succession, subject to the rule of primogeniture. This is the more so if the grantee is a relation.[7]

1710. Of the same kind though not belonging to the same class is the impartible tenure created by statute. Such is the tenure of a "protected Thekadar" under the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act[8]

(1) Mad. Act II of 1904.
(2) I of 1869.
(3) S. 7, Mad. Act II of 1904.
(4) S. 22, Act I of 1869.
(5) 2 Baden-Powell's Land Systems of British India, p. 214.
(6) Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869) amended by (X of 1885).
(7) Kopilnath v. Govenmrment, 22 W.R. 17; Gajendranath v. Mathuranath, 20 C. W.N. 876; 1 Pat.L.J. 109 : 35 I.C. 383.
(8) S. 65 (a), C. P. Land Rev. Act, (XVIII of 1881), re-enacted as S.

which constitutes it both impartible and inalienable. These subordinate estates are the creatures of contract, though their indivisibility is a creature of law. And so is their succession. In so far as they are impartible they will possess the same incidents except in so far as they are varied by the statute creating them or the custom, if any, modifying them.

Clause (b).

1711. Impartible by Grant.—In countries with unlimited monarchies, such as India was under its Hindu and Mahomedan rulers, the sovereign is the fountain head of law, and as such, the voice of the sovereign is the voice of Law. This power has been assured to the Government of India by the passage of the Crown Grants Act.[1] But as successors of the Moghul Emperors, the East India Company possessed the power to reaffirm their grants and these were in turn confirmed by the Government of India in temporarily settled areas with the completion of the first settlement in 1864-5. The effect of these confirmatory grants was to leave the old incidents intact with the result that if the estate regranted were originally impartible, they did not cease to be so with the issue of a fresh sanad.[2] Such was held to be the effect of a regrant made after the estate had been ceased and purchased by Government for arrears of revenue.[3]

The Civil Courts have confirmed these grants in several cases[4] in which they have held that where an estate was granted as an impartible raj, the withdrawal from the holder of judicial powers or a few instances of allotments of villages to junior cadets of the family, not shown to be in lieu of the share which they would have received on partition, had not the effect of altering the incident of impartibility. Such was the view taken in the Kunjpura Estate case.[5]

In the Karvetinagar Zemindari case, the court found that though it was originally a semi-independent polligar under the Mahomedan rule, yet on assumption of the Government of the country by the British, the latter regranted it free from military service and removing the restraint on alienation.[6]

1712. The question whether an estate is made impartible by the terms or the nature of the grant is one of construction of the deed, if any, in the light of surrounding circumstances. It has already been stated that a person cannot alter the ordinary incidents of impartibility by transferring it to another on that condition. The subject has no such right.[7] Where therefore, the estate was partible, the mere fact that the other members of the family treated it as impartible does not convert it into an impartible estate,[8] which, being an anomalous estate, must be proved by evidence which is both clear and unambiguous. Where such

---

109, C.P. Act II of 1917. The view that co-parcenary rights exist in such tenure, taken in Fagwa v. Budhram, 10 N.L.R. 64, is inconsistent with the view of the Privy Council in Ramrao v. Raja of Pittapur, 41 M. 778 P.C. and the provisions of the statute.

(1) Ibrahim v. Ihsham, 39 C. 711 P. C., affirming O.A. (1908) P.R. 47.

(2) Afzalkhan v. Ghulam Kasim, 30 C. 843 (863) P.C.

(3) Har Govind v. Collector, (1937) A. 377.

(4) Zemindar v. Subbaraya, (1918) M. W.N. 146 : 43 I.C. 871.

(5) Ibrahim v. Ihsham, 39 C. 711 P. C.

(6) Perumal v. Udagiri, 21 M.L.J. 351 : 41 I.C. 208.

(7) S. 1, Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895); Sheo Singh v. Raghubans, 27 A. 634 (653) P.C.; Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 P.C.

(8) Rajalakshmi v. Suryanarayan, 3 M.L.J. 100; Shanker v. Hardeo, 16 C. 397 P.C.; Piroz shah v. Manibhai, 36 B. 53 (56).

estate was granted by a sanad, the question is reduced to the examination of its terms.

Clause (c).

1713. Impartible by Nature.—An estate may become impartible by the very nature of its constitution. Such is an estate in the nature of a Raj or chieftainship. So where land originally granted as Jagir was subsequently treated as an appanage to the title of "Raja" it was held that the incidents of impartibility and primogeniture became attached to the grant.[1] Such is the character of all jagirs of which it was said: "The grants were manifestly grants in Jagir of the ordinary character, that is to say, they were personal and not hereditary, and were resumable at pleasure, Being personal and temporary, they were necessarily impartible."[2] Grants made to religious charity to be administered by the head of a muth were likewise held to be necessarily as impartible as the headship of the muth[3] or the holder of any similar office.[4] Apart from the estates which are impartible by nature, there exist properties which are by their nature equally so, such as, for instance, a pension[5] a Yajman-vriti[6] a common way,[7] a well, an idol or a flag. (§ 1601.)

1714. The question whether an estate, impartible by the nature of its grant, retains its incident of impartibility even after the conditions of the grant are released, must depend upon the proof of custom, since custom may perpetuate an incident even after its purpose has ceased. Grants made for military service and those partaking of a feudal character were necessarily impartible; but whether after their release from feudal obligation or service, they continued to remain impartible depends, not so much upon the history of their origin, as upon the character of their continuance. The fact that the Government had re-settled the estate with a sanad in the common form, does not necessarily affect its impartibility,[8] unless it does so expressly or by necessary implication. Even then the sanad would be merely evidence of the fact that so far as the grantor was concerned, the estate had ceased to be anomalous, but it does not prevent the incident surviving the grant. The custom regarding them would then assume the rank of a territorial custom, and as lex loci, it will support the tenure in spite of the conduct of those who stood to profit by its disintegration. But where the custom is merely a Kulachar or a family usage, the family that makes it can equally unmake it. Where an estate is by law, grant or by its nature impartible, the mere fact that it has been partitioned does not make it partible.[9] Impartibility is the usual rule amongst large Rajput land-owners, who belonging as they do to the ruling race, carry with them that relic of feudalism and

(1) Sarabjit v. Indrajit, 27 A. 203 (258).

(2) Sethuramaswamier v. Meruswamier, 41 M. 296 P.C., affirming O.A. 34 M. 470.

(3) Gobinda v. Ram Charan, 29 C.W.N. 931: (1925) C. 1107; Shivram v. Sheridhar, 43 I.C. (N.) 137.

(4) Rameshwar v. Jibendar, 32 C. 683, affirmed O.A. Durga Dut v. Rameshwar, 36 C. 943 (952) P.C.

(5) Ss. 11, 12, Pensions Act, (XXIII of 1871).

(6) Raja Ram v. Ganesh, 23 B. 131; Ramchand v. Utamchand, (1937) S. 147.

(7) Shantaram v. Waman, 47 B. 389 where several estates in a locality bearing a similar history were held to retain their pristine incident of impartibility.

(8) Raj Kishen Singh v. Ramjoy, 1 C. 186 (191) P.C.; The Udayarpalayam case, 24 M. 562, O.A. 28 M. 508 P.C.; Mhd. Afzal Khan v. Ghulam Kasim, 30 C. 843 (862) P.C.; Martand Rao v. Malhar Rao, (1928) P.C. 10; Zamindar of Karvatnagar v. Subbaraya, 43 I.C. 871 (872, 873) : (1918) M.W.N. 146.

(9) Dwarka Prasad v. Jai Bahram, 67 I.C. 686 : (1922) P. 322.

transplant it even upon new estates, which they may have acquired in the course of their adventures.[1]

Maintenance Grants.

1715. This raises the question whether maintenance grants carved out of impartible estate are also impartible. The question is again one of intention. If the subject of the grant was to remain with the grantor, the grantee only getting the benefit of the usufruct for maintenance, it is clear that neither is the incident of the property altered nor are the grantees even entitled to partition inter se.[2] But it does not thence follow that the grant is by reason of this fact inalienable,[3] unless, of course, the grant was limited to the grantee personally. But where the grant is intended to or has the effect of conveying an estate in land, a separate and independent estate comes into existence and as all property is prima facie partible, it becomes equally partible, since the incident of impartibility which attached to the parent estate does not persist in all derivative estates carved out therefrom.[4] But as will be presently seen such estate may also be customarily impartible. Such are the Jagirs granted by the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur where such custom has attained the notoriety of a lex loci.[5]

Clause (d).

1716. Impartible by Custom.—Custom accounts for impartibility in a large number of cases and it is also responsible for the rule of primogeniture which, ordinarily, governs succession to such estates. It is said that both the custom of impartibility and succession by, a single owner are incidents attached not so much to the property held by a family as to the law governing the family.[6] But though the custom may be limited to a family, it must necessarily refer to some specific property, otherwise it would be too wide.[7] Such customs have been known to exist in the families of large land-holders, such as the Maharajas of Chota Nagpur[8] and of Darbhanga.[9] Where custom defines the incidents as to impartibility and succession, it also determines the right of the relations to maintenance.[10]

1717. The custom which creates such an anomalous estate may be custom of any of the kinds described before (§§269-274). It may be an incident of an estate or may be a mere rule of succession. The question whether it is the one or the other depends upon its history. One thing is certain that impartibility never attaches to small estates, although the estate need not be a Raj or a Polliam,[11] and it cannot survive as a family custom independently of some particular estate. A family cus-

(1) Rana Mahatab Singh v. Badan Singh, 48 C. 997 (1008, 1009) P.C.

(2) Udaya v. Jadablal, 8 C. 199 P. C. Sartajkuari v. Deoraj, 10 A. 272 (288, 289) P.C.; Venkata v. Court of Wards, 22 M. 383 P.C.; followed in Durga Dut v. Rameshwar, 36 C. 943 (952) P.C.; Ramchandra v. Muheshwar, 33 C. 158.

(3) Poteswari v. Rudra Narain, 1 A. L.J. 543.

(4) Gajendra v. Mathura Nath, 20 C.W.N. 876 : 1 Pat. L.J. 109 : 35 I.C. 383.

(5) Ram Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 41 M. 778 P.C.; Raj Kumar v. Janki Koer, 24 C.W.N. 857: 62 I.C. 289 P.C.

(6) Ramcharan v. Harihar, 35 I.C. (Pat.) 392.

(7) Rudra Pratap v. Nirman Pratap, 74 I.C. 225 : (1923) O. 61.

(8) Ekradeshwar v. Janeshwari, 42 C. 582 P.C.

(9) Maharaja of Jeypore v. Vikrama Deo, 24 C.W.N. 226 P.C. : 52 I.C. 333; Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 41 M. 778 (785, 786) P.C.

(10) Parbati v. Jagdis, 29 C. 433 (453) P.C.; Secretary of State v. Kamachee, 7 M.I.A. 476 (537); Jagadamba v. Wazir, 2 Pat. 319.

(11) Beer Pertab v. Rajendra Pertab, 12 M.I.A. 1; Chintamun v. Nowlukha, 1 C. 153 P.C.; Shyamanand v. Rama Kanta, 32 C. 6.

tom of succession to an estate not absolutely owned by the family never exist.[1] (§ 1728.)

Gaddinashin.

1718. The custom is the survival of the great sovereignties which existed in this country both under the Hindu and the Mohammadan kings. The evidence is the evidence of gaddinashin[2] and it must be shown that the estate is of the nature of a Raj in which one person alone is the gaddinashin. This was pointed out by the Privy Council in two cases, in one of which Lord Hobhouse said: "The other remark is a suggestion that there is no necessary connection between gaddinashin and primogeniture. That may be so; but it is impossible to read the evidence without seeing that witnesses on both sides treat the two as identical or the former as proving the latter. Not a single question is put to any witness who has affirmed or denied gaddinashin for the purpose of disconnecting it from promogeniture...Their Lordships think that when the witnesses affirm or deny gaddinashin they mean to affirm or deny primogeniture; and their constant identification of the two things shows how closely they are connected in the minds of the families of that part of the country. The custom of gaddinashin has clearly an important bearing on that of primogeniture though the connection between them may not be a necessary one."[3] In another case, their Lordships quoted this passage and the following from the judgment of the Allahabad High Court over which they were sitting in appeal: "In order to constitute a valid argument it ought to have shown not only that gaddinashin and the presentations of nazars was the ordinary concomitant of the possession of an impartible Raj, but also that it was an exclusive attribute of families in whom the custom of primogeniture prevails."[4] The nature of the evidence necessary to establish a custom has already been discussed. (§§ 304-328.)

1719. Proof of Custom.—The proof of impartibility by custom is no exception to the rules that govern the proof of any other custom. (S. 11.) But as regards impartibility and primogeniture, such proof is easier where the estate to which it relates and in respect of which it is claimed is in the nature of a Raj or quasi-principality, or an estate in which the successor is clothed with the emblem of authority by his being ceremoniously placed on a masnad or gaddi, or being given the title of Rana, Raja, or the performance of the ceremony of tilak or the like affording ocular proof of his sole succession, but those are all trappings of the custom and not its prerequisite, since custom may equally be proved aliter. It will suffice if some cases are here passed in review to indicate generally the evidence which the court treats as sufficient and that which it rejects as insufficient.

1720. The following case illustrates the difficulty which besets the proof of custom. The plaintiff sued his brother for partition of the family estate. The defendant pleaded a privilegium in his family of inheritance by primogeniture. The Subordinate Judge who tried the case found such custom proved. The High court held it not proved. The evidence adduced to prove it comprised an entry in the Wajib-ul-arz, the early history of the family contained in an official publication and oral

(1) Thakur Rudra Pratap v. Nirman Prasad, 74 I.C. 225: (1923) O. 61.

(2) "Sitting upon the throne."

(3) Nitri Pal v. Jai Pal, 19 A. 1 P. C.; Mahtab Singh v. Badan Singh, 48 C. 997 (1015) P.C.

(4) Garuradhwaja v. Superandhwaj, 23 A. 37 (50) P.C., reversing O.A. Superandhwaj v. Garuradhwaj, 15 A. 147.

evidence of witnesses who gave it as their opinion that the estate was impartible. The High court dismissed them with the remark that they were either interested or depended upon the Wajib-ul-arz. Accordingly, they decreed the claim; but on appeal the Privy Council reversed them holding the custom proved by the following facts:—

(1) That for a period of nearly 80 years from the time of the British occupation, the enjoyment had been consistent with the alleged custom.

(2) That as such, for three generations, there had been successive descents of the estate to an eldest son.

(3) There had been a persistent tradition of impartibility of the estate.

(4) The evidence of 56 witnesses who gave it as their independent opinion based on hearsay but not mere repetition of hearsay.

Though the oral evidence without the other facts would not have sufficed to establish custom, it corroborated these facts which went far to prove it. In the result, they held the custom proved and dismissed the suit with costs.[1]

1721. In another case, the same high tribunal upheld the custom on proof of the existence of a gaddi for four generations, and the title of Rana borne by the holder of the estate for the time being[2] from a very early period. In this case the family was one of Rajputs who had migrated from their original home into the Central Provinces. Citing Todol's Rajasthan, their Lordships pointed out that the rule amongst the Rajput states favoured primogeniture and the custom of primogeniture was carried by the Rajput settlers to their new home where on acquisition of new estates they continued to observe it.[3] In yet another case, they upheld a similar custom in favour of lineal primogeniture on the following evidence: (i) judgments in three cases in which the custom was held proved; (ii) oral evidence on both sides which declared that there was such a tradition in the family; (iii) a procedure marked by the titles of honour given to the sons of the holder; (iv) opinions of defendant's witnesses who supported his plea of impartibility by an expression of their opinion as to his family and the families belonging to the same group. On the other hand, there was the record of heirs stated in an official document by a late holder on the requisition of the authorities of that time. The High court upheld the custom and the Privy Council upheld the High court mainly relying upon the judgments and the special marks of respect shown to the sons of the holder. Referring to the judgments, their Lordships said: "These decrees do not, of course, bind the parties to the present suit, but they go a long way to show the prevalence of the custom among families having a common origin and settled in the same part of the country."[4] The appellant pressed the declaration of heirs made in the official record; but their Lordships admitted its importance but declined to accept it as laying down any positive rule of succession in the family.

1722. The court is justified in inferring custom from a uniform practice lasting for a considerable period. So, where it was found that the practice in a Deshpande Vatan had been, for a century and a half without interruption or dispute of any kind whatever, to have the per-

(1) Garuradhwaj v. Superandhwaj, 23 A. 37 (52) P.C.
(2) Mahtab Singh v. Badan Singh, 48 C. 997 P.C.
(3) Ib., p. 1009.
(4) Mohesh Chunder v. Satrughan, 29 C. 343 (354) P.C.

formance of the services of the vatan and the bulk of the property in the hands of the elder branch, the younger branches being provided only with maintenance, the court held the practice as more probably due in its origin to a family or local usage, than a mere arrangement determinable at the will of any member of the family.[1]

1723. It is held by the Privy Council[2] and it is enacted in S. 110 of the Evidence Act, that where a person is found in possession of land receiving rent and paying revenue, he is presumed to be its owner and as such entitled to exercise all the rights incident to the ownership.[3]

Where all the lines of evidence, of differing degrees of value, converged towards the same result, viz., the existence of a custom of impartibility and of primogeniture, the Privy Council held the custom established, adding: "Perhaps no one of them would, if standing alone, be conclusive in favour of the defendant's case; but taken as a whole, they are conclusive."[4]

1724. Family Custom.—The nature of evidence required to establish family custom is not different to that required to establish any other form of custom, for example, territorial or local custom. But the fact that such custom is limited to a single family or group of families entitles the court to require even a higher standard of proof than what would satisfy it in the case of a wider custom. Where the custom belongs to a group of families, it is not so difficult to establish it as where it is limited to a single family. But in this case it is for the party setting up such custom to establish the closest possible analogy between the various families constituting the group. Courts are reluctant to hold a family custom proved from only three or four examples of a comparatively recent time.[5] But these instances will suffice if the custom is sufficiently widely distributed over a group of families: in one such case the court accepted the evidence of its existence for about 80 years as sufficient.[6] But it is not always possible to furnish instances of the application of family custom, since there may never have been an occasion for the growth of instances. In that case, the well-established family tradition would theoretically suffice, though it must be supported by other antecedant probabilities such as the nature of the estate, its character and magnitude and other circumstances rendering it probable that the family had been from time immemorial treated as one subject to such custom.[7] Where the custom is established as existing in two branches of a family, it will be deemed to exist in another branch of the same family.[8]

1725. Where custom is sought to be proved by the establishment of a family tradition, regard must be had to the fact that only such evidence is admitted as is relevant for that purpose. The statements of the deceased, relatives, servants or dependents of the family would be relevant if they are shown to have possessed special means of knowledge respecting the usage of the family to which

(1) Ramarao v. Yesvantrao, 10 B. 327.

(2) Oolagappa v. Arbuthnot, 14 B.L.R. 115 (139) P.C.

(3) Collector v. Lakamani, 14 B.L.R. 115 (139) P.C.

(4) Nitra Pal v. Jai Pal, 19 A. 1 (16) P.C.

(5) Chandika Baksh v. Muna Kunwar, 24 A. 273 P.C.

(6) Garuradhwaja v. Superundhwaja, 23 A. 37 P.C.

(7) Rana Mahatab Singh v. Badan Singh, 48 C. 997 (1018) P.C.; Maharanee Heeranath v. Baboo Burn Narain Singh, 9 B.L.R. 274 : 17 W.R. 360; Mahamaya v. Haridas, 42 C. 455 (470 471); Garuadhwaja v. Superundhwaja, 23 A. 37 (50, 51) P.C.

(8) Garuradhwaja v. Superundhwaja, 23 A. 37 P.C., overruling 15 A. 147; Sarabjit v. Indarjit, 27 A. 203.

they depose. Where oral evidence refers to an opinion on the grounds of which that opinion is held, it must be the evidence of the persons who hold that opinion on those grounds. "Their Lordships think it is admissible evidence for a living witness to state his opinion on the existence of a family custom and to state as the grounds of that opinion information derived from deceased persons and the weight of the evidence would depend on the position and character of the witness and of the persons on whose statements he has formed his opinion. But it must be the expression of independent opinion based on hearsay and not mere repetition of hearsay."[1] It is said that a family custom regarding impartibility and primogeniture must relate to some estate possessed by the family. In other words, there must be a particular estate to which the custom must be attached. Ordinarily, it must be so. But it is not a condition precedent to the existence of such custom since where impartibility is a part of family law of succession it is as much a part of personal law as survivorship or adoption, marriage and the limited rights of females, independent of the property which it may at any time possess. A scion of a noble house may acquire property in a distant land which, from its extent and character, partakes of the nature of a Raj, the acquirer would immediately treat it as an impartible estate because it is the custom in his family to treat such estates as impartible. It may be, that the estate acquired was never impartible before, though if it were so, it would strengthen its claim to remain impartible.

1726. It need scarcely be added that where it is sought to prove a custom in one family by proof of custom in another family, the two families must be shown to belong to one group, or otherwise connected by relationship or territorial affinity.[2]

1727. No Custom.—The proof of custom must conform to the test already set out.[3] But so far as regards the proof of the custom of impartibility law now recognizes not only a local custom, but one limited to a single family. In the one case, the custom becomes a lex loci, while in the other case, it is a mere family usage or kulachar at variance with the general law and usage in the vicinity.[4] Such a departure from the ordinary rule must naturally disclose some exceptional ground for its foundation. It may be found in the important nature of the estate partaking of the nature of a petty Raj or principality, the antecedents of its holders, whether they belong to those who have for generations followed the rule of feudalism, such as members of the Rajput clan who, as the Privy Council have observed, as a rule follow the rule of impartibility if it was the rule of their ancestral home.[5] In its inception such custom may originate in a contract expressed or implied; and its continuance may equally be sustained by it (§§ 1731-1734). But in order to become a kulachar, such custom must possess the prime quality of antiquity. In other words, it must be an immemorial custom and not only one of a recent date.[6] An estate, impartible only for 67 years,

(1) Ss. 32 (5), 49 60, Ev. Act; Garuradhwaja v. Superundhwaja, 23 A. 37 (52) P.C.

(2) Rup Singh v. Rani Baishni, 7 A. 1 (19) P.C.

(3) See Chapter II, ante, and the Commentary thereon.

(4) Abraham v. Abraham, 9 M.I.A. 243 P.C.; Rajkishen v. Ramjoy, 1 C. 186 P.C.

(5) Mahabat Singh v. Badan Singh, 48 C. 997 P.C.

(6) Martand Rao v. Malhar Rao, 55 C. 403 (413) P.C., following Umrithnath v. Goureenath, 13 M.I.A. 542; but see contra, § 279.

could not, it was said, be held to be so by an ancient and invariable custom. But in this case, the Privy Council had calculated its duration from the date of the grant in 1796 only up to the date of the first settlement in 1863, whereas the estate had remained impartible till 1917, i.e., no less than 121 years, when the last zamindar died, on whose death the plaintiff sued his younger brother for a declaration that the zamindari was impartible, which more than sufficed to prove the antiquity of its custom. But this was the estate of a Kunbi. In the case of a Rajput, the same Board presumed a custom proved as existing thirty years ago to be ancient.[1]

(For other cases, see §§ 279-291.)

1728. Limits of the Rule.—Impartibility never attaches to small estates, and it cannot survive as a family custom independently of some particular estate. A family custom of succession to an estate not absolutely owned by the family can never exist.[2] It cannot, for instance, become an incident of a maintenance grant though carved out of an admittedly impartible estate[3] (§ 1716); further, though an impartible estate is ordinarily in the nature of a Raj, it does not follow that all Rajs are nceeesarily impartible.[4]

1729. Adverse Possession.—The incident of impartibility cannot be imparted to an estate by adverse possession, since adverse possession merely hushes hostile claims but cannot add a new attribute to property. It is, however, possible that the holder of an estate may by resisting successive claims remain the sole owner thereof. But such estate in his hands, though for the moment unpartitioned, does not on that account become impartible. It is, however, conceivable that adverse possession may assist in the acquisition of an impartible right, as where such claims were made to the knowledge of those prejudicially affected by it, and still the lawful claimant did not challenge it for any length of time.[5] In this connection what is to be proved is not merely that a branch of the family of persons were excluded but that their exclusion was in derogation of a claim made and denied by the party setting up adverse possession. The holder of an impartible estate cannot, by giving notice to the junior members that he intends to be divided in status as regards all partible and impartible properties, put an end to the rights of the junior members over the impartible estate. Such a notice has the effect of destroying the undivided status of the partible properties only.[6] Where a junior branch was let in to inherit an impartible estate in consequence of a family arrangement, it does not destroy the rights of the senior branch to inherit by survivorship.[7]

1730. Impartible by Accretion.—Accretion is yet another source of impartibility. Its relation to impartibility will be found discussed in the sequel.[8]

Clause 1 (e).

(1) Basant Singh v. Brij Raj Saran, 57 A. 494 (508) P.C.

(2) Rudra Pratap v. Nirman Prasad, 74 I.C. 225: (1923) O. 61.

(3) Maharaja Udai Pratab v. Maharaja Kumar Jagat Mohan, 6 Pat. 638.

(4) Martand Rao v. Malhar Rao, 55 C. 403 (411) P.C.

(5) Art. 127, Limitation Act, read with ib., s. 28; cf. Sri Raja Viravara v. Sri Raja Viravara, 20 M. 256 (264) P. C.; Vishnu v. Ganesh, 21 B. 325 (327, 328).

(6) Annadana v. Kona Ammal, 71 I. C. 533: (1923) M. 402.

(7) Ib.

(8) S. 211 post.

No impartibility by contract.

207. (1) A partible estate cannot be made impartible by contract.[1]

(2) Such contract may bind the persons making it, but it cannot create any right in rem.[2]

1731. Analogous Law.—It is not for the subject to alter the legal course of devolution of property,[3] the utmost he can do is to bind another by his personal contract. And the question is whether such contract, even though personal, is not illegal. This question has been the subject of judicial examination, the result of which has led to the conclusion that such contract would be illegal if it lends to create a perpetuity,[4] but that if it is limited as to time and made for a definite purpose, it will bind them personally, but not their transferees, heirs and legal representatives.[5] But such contract, if acted upon by the family for a sufficiently long time, may become the origin of a family custom, but not because it is a contract, but rather because the family and their descendants have foregone their rights and have adopted it as Kulachar, in which case, the maxim communis error facit jus[6] applies. Many customs have grown of a conduct, the origin of which is a contract. But such custom would require several generations to develop and single departure would be sufficient to disturb its continuity, which, if the origin were not traceable would be treated as an individual abberration not sufficient to affect its even continuance.

A will dedicating property to a religious or charitable object must be distinguished from a mere contract, since in that case the testator transfer his interest to a juridical person or institution in which, from its very nature, there can be no co-sharers and consequently, no right of partition. But even here, if a partition is possible, the will will fail of its purpose.[7]

1732. No Impartibility by Contract.—Law favours free trade in property and discourages all attempts to fetter its free disposal with conditions. The creation of an impartible estate is, however, dictated by public policy, which cannot be enlarged by contract. A contract amongst the members of a joint family that they will live jointly and not go to partition will. however, bind them as a personal contract.[8] But it does not bind their assignees and heirs.[9] And even as regards the actual parties thereto, it desirable or necessary that partition should take place. The fact that it desirable or necesary that partition should take place. The fact that such an agreement exists does not necessarily negative the right to partition if it is otherwise found to be necessary or convenient. A fortiori it cannot make property impartible for ever. Where a claimant obtained

Clause (1).

(1) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (409) P.C.

(2) Ramlinga v. Virupakshi, 7 B. 538. (409) P.C.

(3) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377

(4) Ramalinga v. Virupakshi, 7 B. 538,

(5) Radha Nath v. Taruck Nath, 3 C.W.N. 126 (128) P.C.

(6) Jagdish Bahadur v. Sheo Partab Singh, 23 A. 369 (381).

(7) See 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), pp. 282, 283; Ashutosh v. Doorga Churn, 5 C. 438 (444) P.C.; Ramalinga v. Virupakshi, 7 B. 538; Chander v. Kundan Lal, 31 A. 3; Radhanath v. Taruk Nath, 3 C.W.N. 126 (128); Mallan v. Purushothama, 12 M. 287.

(8) Rajendra v. Sham Chand, 6 C. 106; Pirojshah v. Kanibhai, 36 B. 53; Jafri Begum v. Ali Raza, 23 A. 383 (392) P.C.; Mukerji v. Afzal Beg, 37 A. 155; Sakhawat v. Abu Said, 22 O.C. 100: 52 I. C. 73.

(9) Nasratullah v. Mujibullah, 13 A. 309; Bisheshar v. Ram Prasad, 28 A. 627; Mukerji v. Afzal Beg, 37 A. 155; contra in Gulbandi v. Manni Lal, 23 A. 219.

possession of the estate under compromise with the widow of the last holder, it was held that its impartible character was not lost.[1] But though neither contract nor compromise can directly invest an estate with the incident of impartibility, still they may indirectly originate such estate, as where, acting upon the contract, the parties have for long treated the estate as impartible.[2]

1733. The process of evolution of an impartible estate from a contract would then be as follows: A contract express or implied against partition is made. It is acquiesced in by the members of the family who, for convenience or from a sense of pride or respect to the senior members of the family, abstain from forcing a partition. The contract gives birth to a conduct. This conduct, if long continued, develops into a custom which then becomes enforceable as a kulachar, independently of the volition of those who by their conduct have brought it into existence. Contrariwise, the incidence of impartibility, when based on such custom, may be destroyed by an act or conduct, conscious or unconscious, of the parties who may, by repeated partitions, destroy the invariability of the custom.[3]

A contract may originate custom, it may sustain it during its formative period; but it is a contract or conduct which may any moment put an end to it before it has taken root as a custom. Even after it has taken root, the same process may suffice to dissolve it; since it is open to the members of a family to partition an estate which owes its impartibility only to a kulachar, though they could not by that means circumvent a local custom which, being a lex loci, cannot be defeated by any action of the parties.

1734. Apart, however, from its effect upon the foundation and destruction of a family custom, a contract cannot bring into existence an impartible estate. For instance, it is not open to a group of men, a company or a corporation to acquire landed property and by their own volition impress upon it the character of impartibility. In their case, no lapse of time and no conduct, how-long-soever continued, would suffice to make a partible estate impartible. As their Lordships observed: "Their Lordships cannot find any principle or authority for holding that in point of law a manner of descent of an ordinary estate, depending solely on family usage, may not be discontinued, so as to let in the ordinary law of succession. Such family usages are in their nature different from a territorial custom, which is the lex loci binding all persons within the local limits in which it prevails."[4] In other words, while no party can alter the incident of a tenure imparted to it by law, or custom having the force of law, there is nothing to prevent a family from putting an end to a custom which had sprung into existence by their own consentient act.

Relation of an inalienable estate to impartible estate.

208. (1) An estate may be impartible without being inalienable, and it may be inalienable without being impartible.[5]

(2) An impartible estate is prima facie alienable, though it may be made inalienable in the same way as it is made impartible.[6]

(1) Lakhraj v. Harpal, 34 A. 65 (70).
(2) Kishore Singh v. Gahena Bai, 35 I.C. 630 (637, 638) P.C.
(3) Rajkishen v. Ramjoy, 1 C. 186 (195) P.C.
(4) Rajkishen v. Ramjoy, 1 C. 186 (195) P.C.
(5) Durga Dat v. Rameshwar Singh, 36 C. 943 (952) P.C.
(6) Ib.; Udaya v. Jadabal, 8 C. 199. P.C.

(3) Where an estate is inalienable, the extent of its inalienability must be determined by the nature and source of its origin.[1]

1735. Analogous Law.—Since impartibility and inalienability are two things apart, the fact that an estate is impartible does not warrant the inference that it must also be inalienable. This is settled by the Privy Council.[2] But since the causes which operate to make an estate impartible also extend to make them inalienable, it follows that estates which are impartible are also at times inalienable, still inalienability is not a necessary adjunct of impartibility and it cannot be inferred from the mere absence of alienation without any evidence of facts which would make it probable that an alienation would have been made.[3] Inalienability may be inferred from some speciality in the tenure.[4]

An estate inalienable by custom may be alienated for necessity.[5] It had been held in a long series of decisions that the Zemindaris in the Madras Presidency are inalienable as well as impartible. As such, the court will presume alienability without proof of a custom to that effect.[6] The Ghatwali tenures are impartible, but while those in the Khargpur district are alienable[7] those elsewhere are inalienable.[8]

Clause (2).

1736. There is no logical necessity that an impartible estate should also be inalienable. As a matter of fact law presumes the contrary, and this presumption is justified by the fact that all estates are prima facie both alienable and partible. Impartibility is an anomalous incident, which becomes atttached to certain estates in the manner previously indicated (S. 206). But when an estate ceases to be impartible, it does not necessarily cease to be inalienable.[9] Such is a religious office which has been held to be alienable only to the next heir. An instance of a grant, which though impartible, is yet inalienable is furnished by the Babuana grant of the Darbhanga Raj, which was held to descend to the eldest male heirs of the grantee to be held by the heir for the time being for the maintenance of the family, the lands granted reverting to the grantor on failure of male descendants.[10] An Inam, also called Saranjam.[11] is similar in character. The right to succession is in the family of the holder subject to regulation by Government. The holder has no power of alienation by will, and he cannot alienate beyond his lifetime except for necessity. But a right to a permanent tenancy may be acquired by

(1) Durga Dut v. Rameshwar Singh, 36 C. 943 (952) P.C.; Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari, 10 A. 272 (289) P.C.

(2) Durga Dat v. Rameshwar Singh, 36 C. 943 (952) P.C., affirming O.A. Rameshwar Singh v. Jibendar Singh, 32 C. 683, following Udaya v. Jadablal, 8 C. 199 P.C.; Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari, 10 A. 272 (288, 289) P.C.; Krishna Rao v. Court of Wards, 22 M. 383 P.C.

(3) Durga Dat v. Rameshwar, 36 C. 943 P.C.; Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj, 10 A. 272 P.C.; Venkata Surya v. Court of Wards, 22 M. 383 P.C.

(4) Rupsingh v. Pirbhoo, 21 A. 557.

(5) Gopal v. Raghunatha, 32 C. 158, contra Raja Madhusudan v. Khesta Basi, 8 Pat. 932 (936); cf. Ss. 2 (d) and 6, Transfer of Property Act.

(6) Venkata Surya v. Court of Wards, 22 M. 383 (397) P.C.

(7) Kali Prashad v. Anand, 15 C. 471 P.C.

(8) Nilmoni v. Bakranath, 3 C. 187 P.C.

(9) Udaya v. Jadablal, 8 C. 199 P.C.; Durga Dat v. Rameshwar, 36 C. 943 (952) P.C.; Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari, 10 A. 272 (282, 289) P.C.; Krishna Rao v. Court of Wards, 22 M. 383 P.C.

(10) Durga Dut v. Rameshwar Singh, 36 C. 943 P.C., affirming O.A. Rameshwar Singh v. Jibender Singh, 32 C. 683.

(11) Gurarao v. Secretary of State, 41 B. 408.

prescription against the holder for the time being so as to bind his successors.[1]

1737. Proof of Inalienability.—Since law favours free transfer of property, there is no presumption in favour of the impartibility of an estate, nor can that presumption be made from the fact that an estate that has remained partible and inalienable for several generations is necessarily so, though it is a circumstance to be taken into account in judging of its impartibility, or inalienability, either or both according to the circumstances of each case. Many estates declared both impartible and inalienable, and settled on a favoured land revenue assessment are not unconditionally impartible and inalienable, since the reduced revenue may depend upon the two incidents remaining attached to the estates. If, therefore, the holder partitions or aliens the estates, the State becomes entitled to withdraw its favoured assessment, but the partition or alienation is not necessarily void. To be void the terms of the grant or the law governing it must expressly or by necessary implication, declare it unconditionally impartible or inalienable. Such a condition cannot be implied in an estate only customarily impartible or inalienable.

1738. No contract can make an estate impartible beyond the lifetime of the contracting parties. (S. 207.) The same rule applies to inalienability. (§ 1735). It may be that an estate in its inception may owe these incidents to a contract; but in order to vest the estate with these incidents, that contract must develop into a custom: error communis facit jus. (§ 1731.) In other words, the estate can only become impartible and inalienable by custom and not by contract, though contract may date the origin of the custom. The sources of inalienability and those of impartibility are identical. But the two incidents, though allied, are distinct; and as already observed, an estate may be impartible though it is not inalienable, and vice versa. (S. 208.) Inalienability in this connection must be understood as the quality of an estate unconnected with the disability of its holder. This quality may owe its existence to any of the five causes set out in section 206. But inalienability admits of degree. An estate personal in character is inalienable though it may become alienable within limits. Such is also property with constitutes an endowment for religious or charitable purposes.[2] Such are service grants which are usually inalienable.[3] Such is also "Pension" which means periodical payment by government to the pensioner.[4] Inams Saranjams fall into the same class. The subject concerns the domain of general law, and has been discussed at length in another connection to which reference is invited for more particular information.[5]

1739. It follows as a matter of necessity that where an anomalous estate is created, the extent of its anomalous character must be determined by the terms and purpose of its creation. On this point it has been held that "the absence of an alienation, without any evidence of facts which would make it probable that an alienation would have been made, cannot be accepted as proof of a custom of inalienability."[6]

(1) Trimbak v. Sheik Gulam, 34 B. 329, (341, 342).

(2) Shri Ganesh v. Keshavram, 15 B. 625.

(3) Forbes v. Meer Mahomed, 13 M. I.A. 438; Brendon v. Sunderabai, 28 B. 272; Yamuna Bai v. Lagmanna, 21 Bom. L.R. 820: 52 I.C. 770; Girdhar v. Gaya Prasad, 3 O.L.J. 235; 34 I.C. 672.

(4) Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Karanani Industrial Bank, Ltd., 59 C. 1 P.C.

(5) 1 Gowr's Law of Transfer, (6th Ed.) §§ 219, 224, 231, 233.

(6) Srtraj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari, 10 A. 272 (289) P.CC., cited per curium in Durga Dut v. Rameshwar Singh, 36 C. 943 (954) P.C.

Incidents of an Impartible Estate.

209. An impartible estate is subject to the following incidents:—

(1) The estate is held by one person at a time, but he may hold it as a coparcener or as his separate property;[1]

(2) If the estate is not inalienable, the holder, for the time being, is its sole owner and may relinquish, transfer or devise it at his discretion;[2]

(3) The sons and brothers of the holder are entitled to maintenance, the right of other relations to maintenance being determined by custom;[3]

(4) If the holder is a coparcener, all rights of other coparceners merge in him except their right of survivorship adapted to its anomalous character;[4]

(5) The heir-apparent has merely a spes successionis which he may renounce or surrender, but which he cannot partition, transfer or devise; nor is it liable to be sold in execution of a decree against him;[5]

(6) The succession to the estate is ordinarily by primogeniture, determined by the rule of survivorship or inheritance according as the estate is joint or separate property of the holder;[6]

(7) The successor takes the estate subject to such burdens created, and the debts payable, by his predecessor as provided under the next section;[7]

(8) The estate does not lose its incidents of impartibility by the mere discontinuance of service attaching thereto, or by the fact that it is re-granted after confiscation.[8]

Illustrations.

(a) A, B and C are three members of a joint family. An impartible estate is granted to A. It is A's joint property though B and C have no rights of a coparcener other than the right of survivorship.

(b) In the last case, A has sons D and E. On A's death his eldest son D will succeed to A's impartible estate and will be a coparcener with B, C and E in the joint estate.

(c) A, B and C are members of a coparcenary. A is the holder of an impartible estate. On his death the estate will devolve on his nearest survivor to the exclusion of the widow.

(d) A is the holder of an impartible estate. He becomes a rebel whereupon his estate is confiscated by Government who regrants it to his brother C. It remains an impartible estate in the hands of C.[9]

(e) But if, in the last case, the regrant is to "C and his heir," then the estate loses its impartibility, for the "heirs" of C cannot come in if the estate remains impartible.

(f) A obtains a service grant which is impartible. A discontinues the service It does not affect the impartibility of his estate.

1740. Analogous Law.—There is no textual authority on the factum and incidents of impartible estates. (§ 1681.. They have grown out of the royal grants made for civil and military services, and their incidents are defined in the terms of the grant clarified and modified by several Acts of the local legislatures, where they are so dealt with, the holders are, of course, bound by them. In other cases and on points

(1) Shibaprasad v. Prayagkumari, 59 C. 1399. P.C.

(2) Sartaj Kuwari v. Deoraj, 10 A. 272 P.C.

(3) Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 41 M. 778 (785).

(4) Shibaprasad v. Prayagkumari, 59 C. 1399. P.C.

(5) S. 6 (a), Transfer of Property Act, S. 64 (m) C.P. Code; contra Shibaprasad v. Prayagkumari, 59 C. 1399 P. C.

(6) See S. 214.

(7) See S. 210.

(8) Rajkishen Singh v. Ramjoy, 1 C. 186 P.C.

(9) Hargovind v. Collector, (1937) A. 377.

not dealt with by law or the royal grants, the estates are subject to the several incidents set out in the clauses of the section, the authority of which will be found set out in the sequel under the clauses concerned.

1741. Personal Property of Impartible Holder.—The rule of impartibility applicable to zemindaris does not extend to the personal property of the zemindar left at his death, which is divisible amongst his coparceners in accordance with the ordinary law.[1]

The question whether an estate is partible or impartible is a mixed question of law and fact.[2]

1742. Coparcenary in Impartible Estate.—The question whether an impartible estate can be held in coparcenary or in absolute ownership has often been considered in connection with the question of succession, and the Privy Council, after expressing themselves on either side;[3] have in a recent case held it to be no exception to the general law of coparcenership,[4] but with the utmost deference it is submitted that, apart from the rule of devolution, which was the very question to be considered, it is difficult to reconcile that pronouncement with the general law and the incidents of coparcenary property. It is said that the heir to such estate has not a mere spes successionis, but reasons have been given elsewhere why his interest is nothing more. (§ 1750.)

Clause (1).

As it is, the latest view of the Privy Council is that an impartible estate may as much be held in coparcenary as any other property, and that, on death of its owner, its succession would be subject to survivorship or inheritance according to whether it was joint or separate property of the last holder; the result being that, on the death of the holder, if the estate is found subject to primogeniture and survivorship, it will devolve, not on the member nearest in blood, but on the eldest member of the senior branch of the family.[5]

1743. It is of the essence of an impartible estate that it must be held by a single person. Such person may be real or juridical, e.g., a corporation or an idol, but in each case, the holder can have no partners or sharers, since the partners or sharers possess the right of enforcing partition. The question whether an estate is partible or impartible is a mixed question of law and fact.[6]

1744. Holder's Right of Ownership.—Subject as above, the holder of an impartible estate is entitled to exercise all rights of an absolute owner. He is entitled to spend his receipts therefrom in any way he pleases, and if out of his savings he acquires other estate, he is entitled to treat it as his self-acquisition, since even where the estate is coparcenary, the coparceners have no claim thereon, not even the claim to personal maintenance.[7] An impartible estate is not necessarily inalienable, even where

Clause 1 (e).

(1) Maharajulangaru v. Puntilu, 5 M. H.C.R. 31.

(2) Muthu v. Dora Singha, 3 M. 290 P.C.

(3) Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari, 10 A. 272 P.C.; Venkata Surya v. Court of Wards, 22 M. 383 P.C.; Ram Rao v. Rajah of Pitapur, 41 M. 778 P.C.; Sripat Chunder v. Rajah Jagadesh, 55 I.A. 282 : (1927) P.C. 159; Pratap Chunder v. Jagadish, 54 C. 955.

(4) Shibaprasad v. Prayagkumari, 59 C. 1399 P.C.; Baijnath v. Tej Bali Singh, 43 A. 228 P.C.; Ram Jagadamba v. Wazir Narain, 2 Pat. 319 P.C.; explained in Fulbati v. Maheshwari, 2 Pat. 685 (700, 704).

(5) Hurgovind v. Collector, (1937) A. 377.

(6) Muthu v. Dora Singa, 3 M. 290 P.C.

(7) Shibaprasad v. Prayagkumari, 59 C. 1399 (1413) P.C., following Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 41 M. 778 P.C.

it is so, the holder's right of enjoyment is in no way qualified, though in that case he cannot alien any part of the estate beyond his own lifetime, provided such alienation carves out an estate equal to his own. It does not debar him from making grants or giving leases for any term, the validity of which cannot be challenged by his successors on the mere ground of their predecessor's incompetency, though they may be set aside if found to be outside the scope of his prudent management or made in fraud of his successor.

1745. Relation's Right to Maintenance.—The Privy Council admit that even where an impartible estate is joint property, the junior members have no right of maintenance in lieu of their coparcenary right[1] or otherwise than by custom[2] which distinctly favours the maintenance of the holder's son[3] and brothers,[4] but there is no invariable or certain custom to maintain any below the first generation from the last holder. If the rule were otherwise, in a few generations the estate itself would cease to exist.[5]

Clause (3).

1746. Maintenance Grants.—The question of maintenance suggests another question that of maintenance grants. Though the estate be inalienable, the holder of an impartible estate is not precluded from making maintenance grants in perpetuity of subordinate tenures which may be both alienable and heritable.[6]

1747. The question whether such grant is personal to the grantee or will survive his death is one of construction and intention. Prima facie maintenance grant is intended even if the deed described the grantee as "proprietor" and as holding "for ever".[7]

1748. Custom sometimes modifies the terms of a grant by superadding to it incidents of its own. So when the proprietor of the Chota Nagpur Raj granted a village to a priest by a sanad which provided that the grantee and his "al-aulad" (descendants) were to possess and enjoy the property, it was held that though the term "al-aulad" would etymologically include both the female as well as the male descendants, yet according to the custom proved to have prevailed at the time of the grant and subsequently in that part of the country, the words must be interpreted to mean lineal male descendants only.[8] In some cases, as in the cases of grants by the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur,[9] or the Maharaja of of Darbhanga,[10] the grants are themselves impartible.

1749. In the absence of family usage or custom, a maintenance grant is alienable.[11] A maintenance grant to the grantor's son and his descendants in ancestral property in the hands of the grantee, so that

(1) Shibaprasad v. Prayagkumari, 59 C. 1399 (1413) P. C., following Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 41 M. 778 (785) P.C., followed in Commissioner v. Zemindar of Chemudu, 57 M. 1023 (1026).

(2) Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 41 M. 778 (785) P.C.

(3) Ib., p. 786; citing Yarlagadda v. Yarlagadda, 24 M. 147 (155) P.C.

(4) Ib.

(5) Nilmony Singh v. Hingoo Lal, 5 C. 256 (259), approved in Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 41 M. 778 (786) P.C.

(6) Narayan v. Lokenath, 7 C. 461.

(7) Rameshwar v. Arjun Singh, 23 A. 194 P.C.; Bunia Hussain v. Haji Unisa, 35 I.C. (O.) 764.

(8) Perkash v. Rameshwar, 31 C. 561 (570).

(9) Gajendra v. Mathuranath, 20 C. W.N. 876: 1 Pat. L.J. 109: 35 I.C. 383; Ramacharan v. Harihar, 35 I. C. (Pat.) 392.

(10) Durga Dut v. Rameshwar, 36 C. 943 P.C., in which, however, the impartibility was admitted.

(11) Sashi v. Jagoti, 44 C. 585 P.C.

the latter cannot alienate it to the detriment of his descendants except as allowed by law.[1]

The word "grant", as used in legal transactions in India, is not to be understood in its technical English meaning of a conveyance at common law of remainders, reversions and incorporeal hereditaments, which do not lie in livery or of which livery could not be given.[2]

[For further information on the subject of maintenance, see Chapter VII.]

1750. Successor's Spes successionis.—Though the Privy Council have in a recent case[3] described the coparcenary heir's chance of succession to an impartible estate as not a mere spes successionis, similar to that of a reversioner succeeding on the death of a Hindu widow to her husband's estate, but an interest that may be renounced or surrendered, it is submitted that even in a so-called impartible coparcenary estate, the chance of the heir to succeed to the holder is no more than a chance dependent upon future adoptions, births and deaths in the family, and so long as the holder is alive, no junior coparcener has anything but a chance to succeed to him. It is so described in the Acts of the Legislature to which their Lordships did not advert.[4]

Clause (4).

1751. As such chance it is not property that can be transferred or seized or sold in execution of a decree against the coparcener. And though it may be renounced and surrendered, that right might even be exercised in respect of a mere contingency. Further, unless the estate is also inalienable, the holder possesses the absolute right of transfer and bequest which he may exercise and thereby defeat his coparcener's expectancy.

1752. Succession by Primogeniture.—The succession to an impartible estate, ordinarily, follows the rule of primogeniture modifying the law of coparcenary, survivorship and inheritance. The former would govern succession to a joint estate, the latter to an estate that was never joint, and being joint has since been partitioned. As to this the Privy Council have held that in the case of joint ancestral property a general partition and the presumption flowing from it that it is both final and complete cannot and does not apply to property which is impartible. This does not mean that the coparcener's right to such property can never be the subject of partition. All it means that such right can only be renounced or surrendered to another branch of the family by the senior line, by expressly or impliedly renouncing or surrendering it, which is a question of fact dependent upon the circumstances of each case.[5] The fact of a general partition between all members of the family does not warrant such presumption. As in a family, subject to the Dayabhaga law, there is no survivorship, succession thereto will follow the general law of inheritance adapted to the rule of primogenture.[6] Though the rule of primogeniture generally

Clause (5).

(1) Durga Dut v. Rameshwar, 36 C. 943 (952) P.C.

(2) Hazarimal v. Aliani, 18 I.C. 625.

(3) Shibaprasad v. Prayagkumari, 59 C. 1399 P.C.; Sellappa v. Sellappa, I. L.R. (1937) M. 906 (other coparceners have a right of ownership, but what are its active incidents?).

(4) S. 61 (a); Transfer of Property Act; S. 64 (m), C. P. Code; Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj, 10 A. 272 P.C.

(5) Collector v. Ram Sundar, 56 A. 468 (484, 485) P.C., following Shibaprasad v. Prayagkumari, 59 C. 1399 (1414) P. C., approving Konammal v. Annadana, 51 M. 169.

(6) Baij Noth v. Tej Bali, 43 A. 228 (235) P.C.

governs the descent of impartible estate, yet a family usage of selection may vary that rule.[1]

1753. For the purpose of determining the heir, it is necessary to ascertain whether the estate is the self-acquisition or the ancestral joint property of the holder. On his death his eldest son, and if he dies without male issue, the eldest of his undivided coparceners, and in their absence his widow and not his collateral, will succeed to his estate.[2] Women are not precluded by any rule of descent from succeeding to an impartible estate,[3] though they may be excluded by custom. But whoever relies upon such custom must prove it.[4] The holder is entitled to adopt a son but the adopted son acquires no greater right in the estate than the natural son.[5]

1754. Where an impartible estate becomes vested in the daughter's son of the original holder, it will devolve on his death on his own son and not on another daughter's son of the original holder. There is no authority for the contention that when an impartible estate becomes obstructed by being vested in a female heir, it becomes always obstructed heritage, so that on the death of each succeeding holder (whether male or female), the true successor is the heir of the original unobstructed owner.[6] So in a competition between the direct lineal descendant of a common ancestor and a person one degree nearer to him, the court preferred the former holding him entitled, because in a joint family he would, being the eldest of the senior branch, be the head of the family, and as such, entitled to inherit the impartible Raj.[7]

[See this subject cintinued in commentary to Section 214 (3), (5).]

1755. Successor Pays Debts.—The subject will be found discussed in the next section.

Clause (6).

1756. Discontinuance of Service.—A service estate does not cease to be impartible by discontinuance of the service attaching thereto. In fact a large number of existing impartible estates were at one time held on service tenures; but their release from service does not alter their established incident of impartibility.[8] Nor does the fact that the estate was re-granted, after its confiscation by Government suffice to alter its impartibility unless that incident was altered expressly or by necessary implication.[9]

Clause (7).

1757. Though the execution of a promissory note by the previous holder might suggest prima facie that the creditor looked to his personal credit, it is still competent to him to show that the estate was intended to be equally bound.[10]

---

(1) Achal Ram v. Udai Partap, 10 C. 511 (518) P.C.; Ishri Singh v. Baldeo Singh, 10 C. 792 P.C.; Mhd. Afzal Khan v. Ghulam Kasim, 30 C. 843 (862) P.C.

(2) Periasami v. Periasami, 1 M. 312 (321) P.C.; Doorga v. Doorga, 4 C. 190 (202) P.C.

(3) Katama v. Raja of Shivgunga, 9 M. I. A. 543; Collector of Madura v. Veeracanu, 9 M.I.A. 446.

(4) Ramanandan v. Janki, 29 C. 828 P.C.

(5) Venkatasuria v. Court of Wards, 22 M. 383 P.C.

(6) Muthu v. Udayana, 6 M.L.J. 149.

(7) Baijnath v. Tej Bali, 43 A. 228 P.C.

(8) Rajkishen Singh v. Ramjoy, 1 C. 186 P.C.; Beer Partab v. Rajendra, 12 M.I.A. 1; Savitri Bai v. Anandrao, 12 B.H.C.R. 224 (226); Radha Bai v. Anant Rao, 9 B. 198; Ram Rao v. Yeshwant Rao, 10 B. 327.

(9) Haurgovind v. Collector, (1937) A. 377.

(10) Harpal v. Bishan, 6 A.L.J. 753; Indar v. Harpal, 34 A. 79 (84); Durga

210. In an impartible estate, not governed by any law or the terms of the Crown Grant the right of the holder to incur debts and charge the estate so as to be binding upon his heir is subject to the following rules, namely:—

Holder's debts.

(1) Where the estate is not inalienable, the holder may charge it for any debts he may have incurred, which will be recoverable from the estate in the hands of the heir;

(2) Where such estate is inalienable, his debts, charged and uncharged, may be recovered from the heir if they were incurred for legal necessity[1] or benefit[2] as hereinbefore defined in sections 118 and 119 respectively;

(3) Provided that where the debt is uncharged, the heir other than the son, takes the estate by survivorship, he takes it free from the debt incurred by his predecessor;[3]

(4) Provided further that where the heir is the son, he is liable to pay his father's debts, irrespective of the mode of his succession to the estate.

1758. Successor's Liability to pay Holder's Debts.—The question to which, if any, the heir is liable to pay debts, charged or uncharged, of his predecessor must, subject to the terms and conditions of the grant, depend upon their character, and the character of the estate. If there is nothing in the grant of an estate or law governing it, and the estate is not inalienable, the holder, being entitled to alien his estate, is equally entitled to charge it, and his heir who takes the estate must pay the debt whatever their character. But where the debt is not charged on the estate and the estate is alienable, the liability of the heir must depend upon whether he is the son or any other relation of the holder, and whether he succeeds to the estate by the rule of survivorship or inheritance. If he is the son, he is under the pious obligation to pay his father's debt and his obligation continues whether the estate he has taken is partible or impartible. If, in this case, the debts were charged on the estate, he would still be liable for the debt, though entitled to challenge his father's alienation upon any of the grounds open to him if the estate he had taken were partible. (§ 159.) Where the heir is any other relation, e.g., the brother, he would take the estate free of his liability for the unsecured debts on the grounds that the estate in his hands is not the assets of the previous holder.[4] E converso the successor in such case is entitled to recover all debts due to his predecessor without obtaining a succession certificate because the debts accrued to him by survivorship.[5]

In a succession otherwise than by survivorship, the position of the heir, other than the son, seems akin to that of the reversioner succeeding to the estate on the death of a Hindu widow who is entitled to appropriate all receipts from her estate without being accountable to any

---

v. Chintamani, 31 C. 214. In Kesho Prasad v. Siv Saran, 48 I.A. 329 P.C., the gaddinashin zemindarin had executed an agreement promising to pay the manager a certain pension. The Privy Council threw out the manager's suit, holding, on the construction of the deed, that it fell short of a contract but contained merely a recommendation which could not be legally enforced against her successor.

(1) Gopal v. Raghunath, 32 C. 158.

(2) Immudipattam v. Subramania, (1924) M. 707.

(3) Nachiappa v. Chinnayasami, 29 M. 453.

(4) Nachiappa v. Chinnayasami, 29 M. 453; Raja of Kalahasti v. Achigadulu, 30 M. 454; Mandelswara v. Prayag, 32 M. 429; Maharaja of Bobbili v. Kaminiayani, 35 M. 108; Varagana v. Murugappa, 36 M. 375; Indarsen v. Harpal Singh, 34 A. 79.

(5) Gur Pershad v. Dhani Bai, 38 C. 192.

one, apart from which she is entitled to incur debts for legal necessity for which the reversioner is liable. The heir of an impartible estate is similarly liable for all debts of his predecessor if supported by legal necessity,[1] or benefit.[2] This principle of the general law has found legislative expression in section 4 (1) of the Madras Impartible Estates Act[3] which, prohibits all alienations to inure beyond his own lifetime, unless the alienation is made, on the debt incurred, "under circumstances which would entitle the managing member of a joint Hindu family, not being the father or the other coparceners so to do independently of their consent." As such, the Privy Council set aside a sale executed by the holder of a portion of his impartible estate at the instance of his heir on the ground that it was unsupported by legal necessity or any benefit of the estate.[4]

1759. The Madras Act is, of course, conclusive of the holder's power to charge his heir with the debts, but the analogy of the manager of a joint family does not appear to be apposite, since the receipts of the joint estate in the hands of the manager do not belong to him exclusively and he is, therefore, bound to apply them upon the maintenance and repairs of his estate and spend the surplus on the joint family. But the holder of an impartible estate does not suffer from the same liability, since all the receipts are his own, and though he is morally bound to keep his estate in good repair, he cannot be compelled to do so. It seems that the analogy of the Hindu widow is closer, though here again, while the reversioner may restrain waste, the heir apparent of an impartible estate has not that right, for if the holder is devastating the estate to ruin his successor, it is a greater injury to him than if he cut him out altogether by his gift or devise. Even if the estate be inalienable, he is the owner and not the trustee for his heir. And as owner his powers are limited only by such acts as even the owner cannot do. Spoliation and waste are certainly not such acts, though there are means for restraining them by taking over the management, say, by the Court of Wards. And since the receipts belong to the holder it is not open to the heir to repudiate his liability on the ground that the holder had discharged legal necessity with borrowed money when he could have met it out of his ample receipts.

1760. The liability of the heir for payment of his predecessor's debt does not extend to the appropriation of his receipts from such estate to this purpose, since such receipts are not assets of the last holder, nor is a creditor, therefore, entitled to recover his debt by attaching them.[5]

Acquisitions and accretion.

211. (1) An estate created impartible by law or by a grant from the Crown cannot be enlarged by accretion, by custom or otherwise,[6] unless such accretion is permitted by the law or grant creating it.[7]

(1) Gopal v. Raghunath, 32 C. 158; Madhusudan v. Khestabasi, 8 Pat. 932 (940).

(2) Immudipattam v. Subramania, (1924) M. 707; Sellappa v. Suppian, (1937) 1 M.L.J. 422.

(3) Mad. Act II of 1904, quoted in Nagappa v. Brahadambal, 58 M. 350 (353) P.C.

(4) Nagappa v. Brahadambal, 58 M. 350 (353) P.C.

(5) See S. 146.

(6) Shibaprasad v. Prayag Kumari, 59 C. 1399 (1420-1422) P.C., approving Gurusami v. Pandia Chinna, 44 M. 1.

(7) Ss. 2, 3, Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895); Jagadamba v. Wazir Narain, 2 Pat. 319 (326) P.C.; Someshwari v. Maheswari, 10 Pat. 630; Shibaprasad v. Prayag Kumari, 59 C. 1399 (1422) P.

(2) No income of an impartible estate howsoever created and no movable property possessed by its holder can form an accretion to such estate, even though they be furnishings and equipment, necessary for the support of the dignity of the holder and the gadi, unless they are shown to follow the corpus by custom which must be pleaded and proved.[1]

(3) In an estate made impartible by custom, the question whether the immovable property purchased out of its income, and other self-acquisitions of the owner become an accretion to the estate depends upon his intention to incorporate them therewith.[2]

(4) But such intention cannot be presumed from the mere fact that the holder had blended the income of the two estates.[3]

Illustrations.

(a) A, the holder of an impartible Raj acquires mouzas, B, C and D out of its income. B, C, and D are managed by the same staff and their collection papers are kept with those of the Raj. This is insufficient to show A's intention to treat B, C and D as part of the Raj.[4]

(b) A inherits a Raj as a Crown grant. Out of its income he purchases, mouzas B, C and D which he wishes to incorporate in his Raj. He cannot do so, as by so doing he would alter the ordinary course of devolution of ordinary property.[5]

(c) In the last case, if the Raj be impartible by custom, then A has the inherent right of incorporating his self-acquisitions with his joint property, whether partible or impartible. A, can, therefore, incorporate the mouzas in his Raj, if he intends to do so unless such exclusion is excluded by law or custom to the contrary.[6]

(d) A owns an impartible Raj, also three mouzas B, C and D of which mouza B is his ancestral joint property, and C and D are both his self-acquisitions. A blends the income of C with that of B, and that of D with that of the Raj. The mere blending, in the former case, will raise the presumption of A's intention to treat B and C as joint propetry; but no such presumption arises in the latter case by treating D as part of the Raj, since the question depends upon the nature of the Raj and A's intention to incorporate D with it.[7]

1761. Analogous Law.—All acquisitions made by the holder of an impartible estate do not necessarily become part of his impartible estate. Prima facie they are his self-acquisitions and as such follow the rule appliable to self-acquired property.[8] In order to constitute accretions to the impartible estate, they must be intentionally incorporated with it. Such intention would not necessarily be ascribed to one who left the acquisitions undisposed of in his lifetime.[9] But as the holder may incorporate his acquisitions with the parent estate at any time at his discretion, it follows that while he is alive, he is entitled to treat them

---

C.—the movables included the furniture and equipment of the Raj, see item (6) on p. 1404.

(1) Shiba Prasad v. Prayag Kumari, 59 C. pp. 1432, 1433.

(2) Shibaprasad v. Prayag Kumari, 59 C. 1399 P.C.

(3) Ib., p. 1416.

(4) Ib., p. 1415.

(5) Shiba Prasad v. Prayag Kumari, ib., pp. 1421, 1422.

(6) Ib.

(7) Ib., pp. 1418, 1419.

(8) Secretary of State v. Kamachee, 7 M.I.A. 476 (537); Parbati v. Jagadis, 29 C. 433 (453) P.C.; Jagadamba v. Wazit Narain, 2 Pat. L.J. 239: 38 I. C. 255: O.A. 2 Pat. 319 P.C.; Aparna Debi v. Shiva Prasad, 3 Pat. 367; Harihar Prasad v. Kesho Prasad, (1925) Pat. 68; Sri Partab Chandra Deo v. Sri Raja Jagadish Chandra, 40 C.L.J. 331: 82 I.C. 886 : Harbaksh v. Dal Bahadur, 22 A.L.J. 1079: (1925) A. 155; Raghuraj Singh v. Debi Sing, 97 I.C. (N.) 721 : (1927) N. 15.

(9) Jagadamba v. Wazit Narain, 2 Pat. 319 (325) P.C.; Janki Parshad v. Dwarka Prashad, 35 A. 391 P.C.; Murtaza Husain v. Yasin Ali, 38 A. 552 P.C.; Rajeswara v. Viraprat'apali, 5 M.H.C. R. 31; Kotta v. Bangari, 3 M. 145; Sarabjit v. Indrajit, 27 A. 203.

as one or the other. But there is a presumption that he intends to keep his acquisitions separate and the mere fact that he managed them through his Raj servants or had the account papers of the one maintained with the other does not shew his intention to incorporate them;[1] but he may at any time treat them as indistinguishable from his Raj when they would become accretions to the Raj and acquire all its incidents.

1762. Where, however, they remain unincorporated, they will descend to the heirs of the holders in accordance with the normal personal law to which he is subject. As the Privy Council remarked: "Unless there be a custom by which self-acquired properties of a Mitakshara family become part of the ancestral estate, or unless it be shown that the person acquiring the same intended to incorporate such acquisitions with the estate, they descend by the ordinary law of inheritance. For example, where the owner of an ancestral impartible estate, possessed also of self-acquired properties, dies leaving lineal male descendants, as the inheritance is 'unobstructed,' both classes of property go to them; supposing, however, he were to die leaving no male progeny in the direct line, but a widow and a divided agnatic relation, in the absence of a custom the self-acquired property would go to the widow, while the estate would devolve on the agnatic heir."[2]

1763. Mahomedan Law.—But since the Mahomedan Law makes no distinction between ancestral and self-acquired property, and recognizes no principle of differentiation in the matter of lineal and collateral succession, as is the case under the Mitakshara, which divides inheritance into "unobstructed and obstructed heritage" all classes of property, whether ancestral or self-acquired, would in the case of Mahomedans follow one rule of devolution. If a custom governs the succession to the ancestral estate, the presumption is that it attaches also to the personal acquisitions of the last owner left by him on his death; and it is for the person who asserts that these properties follow a line of devolution different from that of the taluqs to establish it.[3]

Property is presumably partible and alienable.

212. (1) All property is presumably partible and alienable.[4]

(2) Impartibility and inalienability are the incidents of an estate which must be pleaded and proved in each case.[5]

1764. Analogous Law.—When we see the vast body of property around us which is both partible and alienable, law naturally presumes in favour of the general partibility and alienability of all property. Impartibility or inalienability being exceptional and confined only to a few estates, must be proved whenever it is challenged in each case. So it is now enacted in S. 6 of the Transfer of Property Act as follows: "Property of any kind may be transferred except as otherwise provided by this Act or by any other law for the time being in force."

The impartible and inalienable estates owe their existence to the feudal tenures created by the sovereign power for past and future

---

(1) Parbati v. Jagadis, 29 C. 433 P.C.; Shibaprasad v. Prayagkumari, 59 C. 1399 (1415) P.C.

(2) Secretary of State v. Kamachee, 7 M.I.A. 476 (537); Harihar Prasad Singh v. Kesho Prasad Singh, 93 I.C. 454 : (1925) Pat. 68.

(3) Murtuza Husain v. Yasin Ali, 38 A. 552 (567, 568) P.C.

(4) Cf., S. 6, T. P. Act.

(5) Rup Singh v. Rani Basini, 7 A. L. (19) P.C.

services. But in recent years law has declared several estates to be impartible and inalienable, while in other cases, the same incidents have become attached to certain estates by custom.

An estate may be impartible, though not inalienable, and it may be inalienable though not impartible. The question of inalienability again depends upon the nature of the tenure, law or custom,[1] since a custom may be general, local, or one confined only to the estate in question.[2]

1765. These incidents cannot be engrafted upon an estate by contract or compromise which is void as being opposed to public policy.[3] The fact that parties have treated the estate as impartible and as such have not partitioned it for six or seven generations does not deprive the members of the family of their rights of partition.[4] Apart from some estates to which custom may become attached, it cannot be pleaded, as a rule of the family succession, applicable to all properties held by them. Even the fact that the family has observed such a custom for time immemorial, say even for 500 years, would not render it valid by its age, since it is unreasonable.[5]

The question whether an estate is impartible, is a mixed question of law and fact.[6]

213. Limits of inalienability. (1) An estate made inalienable by law or a grant from the Crown cannot be alienated except when so provided or permitted by any law for the time being in force.[7]

(2) An estate inalienable by custom may be alienated for legal necessity.[8]

(3) A custom making an estate absolutely inalienable is repugnant to Hindu Law and opposed to public policy.

Explanation 1.—The holder of an estate, howsoever inalienable, is entitled to open new mines and cut down timber.[9]

Explanation 2.—The holder of an impartible and an inalienable estate is entitled to make grants of land, and grant leases.[10]

1766. An estate may be absolutely or conditionally inalienable. It may be absolutely so made by law or a grant from the Crown, as pro-

---

(1) Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj, 10 A. 272 (288) P.C.; Venkata v. Court of Wards, 22 M. 383 P.C.; Pratap Chandra v. Jagadish Chandra, (1925) C. 116, O. A. : (1927) P.C. 159 : 54 I.A. 289; Venkatachalam v. Visvanatha, 102 I.C. 618: (1927) M. 725; Baij Nath v. Kedar Nath, 106 I.C. 646, P.C.

(2) Basvant Rao v. Mantappa, 1 B. H.C.R. (App.) 42 (47).

(3) Vinayak v. Gopal, 27 B. 353 P.C.; Piroj Shah v. Manibhai, 36 B. 53 (56); Sri Raja Viravara v. Sri Raja Viravara, 20 M. 256 P.C.

(4) Durriao v. Dari, 13 B.L.R. 165 P.C.; Muthu v. Dorasingha, 3 M. 290.

(5) Venkatachalam v. Visvanatha, 102 I.C. 618 : (1927) M. 725.

(6) Rupsingh v. Rani Basini, 7 A. 1 (19) P.C.

(7) Cf. S. 4, The Madras Impartible Estates Act, (II of 1904).

(8) Gopal v. Raghunath, 32 C. 158; Madhusudan v. Krestabasi, 8 Pat. 932 (940).

(9) Cf., Subba v. Chingalamma, 22 M. 126 (widow's right in partible property which is in alienable by her).

(10) See S. 209 (2) §§ 1744-1749; Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj, 10 A. 272 P.C.

vided in the Crown Grants Act[1] (§ 1706) which is then subject to no variation, unless the law or Crown grant itself permits it to be varied. But where it is inalienable by custom, no custom can make it absolutely so, since all estates whether legally or customarily inalienable are liable to be seized and sold for arrears of Government revenue or Government advance or loan recoverable as such revenue; and it is so provided by appropriate Acts of the Legislature or by the terms of the grant creating them, and in any case, such right is implied and would be assumed unless it is expressly excluded[2] in addition to which an estate only customarily impartible might be alienated for the purpose of saving it from forfeiture or sale for payment of the paramount charge. Such estates are further alienable for legal necessity, and it has been held that any custom making it immune from such alienation would itself be illegal and opposed to public policy. The question of its alienability is not then a question of personal law but one of general policy "because an estate which cannot be alienated for legal necessity (including even estates, dedicated to religious or charitable uses) is unknown to Hindu Law. Such a custom would not be merely in variation of Hindu Law of property, but it would be a custom repugnant to Hindu Law, and it is certainly against public policy to allow a family, by a custom created by itself, to establish a permanent monopoly of possession of any given area of land."[3]

Then again, such estate is further subject to the law of estoppel since the question of custom is one of fact and a person may have advanced money without knowledge of that fact which the holder may have done nothing to disabuse him of it. But there can be no estoppel of the manager so as to enlarge the estate belonging to a religious or charitable institution.

214. In the absence of any law or custom to the contrary, succession to an impartible estate is subject to the personal law of the holder adapted to the nature of the tenure to the following extent:—

Succession to impartible estate.

(1) Succession is ordinarily governed by the rule of primogeniture;[4]

(2) Where the holder is subject to the Mitakshara law, the heir is the eldest male issue of the deceased, or failing him, the eldest coparcener.[5]

(3) Where it passes by survivorship from one line of descent to another, it devolves not on the coparcener nearest in blood but on the nearest coparcener of the senior line;[6]

---

(1) XV of 1895. For the history and scope of this Act, see 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.).

(2) S. 6, Transfer of Property Act, which supersedes any rule of Hindu Law to the contrary.

(3) Ib., S. 2 (d), per Courtney Terrel, C.J., in Madhusudan v. Khestabai, 8 Pat. 932 (940, 941) dissenting from in Gopal Prasad v. Raghunath, 32 C. 158 (161) in which the legality of such custom was assumed.

(4) Ishri Singh v. Baldeo Singh, 10 C. 792 (805) P.C.; Bhawani v. Deo Raj, 5 A. 542; Dinkarasami v. Bhas-Karasami, 24 M. 613.

(5) Parbati v. Chandrapal, 31 A. 457 P.C.; Subramanya v. Siva, 17 M. 316 (325); Raja of Kalahasti v. Achigadu, 30 M. 454; Balu v. Lahoo, 1937 B. 508 (552) F.B.

(6) Naraganti v. Venkatachalapati, 4 M. 250; Kachi v. Kachi, 24 M. 562 affirmed O.A. 28 M. 508 P.C.; Ravaneshwar v. Chandri Prasad, 33 C. 721.

(4) In a case subject to the Dayabhag school, the heir is the eldest member of the class of persons who are the next heirs of the deceased.[1]

(5) Females are presumably excluded from succession in favour of coparceners if the estate is ancestral, but if it is a separate acquisition of the holder they are entitled to succeed;[2]

Explanation.—In the absence of a custom determining seniority according to the seniority of the mother, seniority in age amongst brothers alone determines the seniority, irrespective of the seniority of the mother.

Illustrations.

[Note.—In the following illustrations, A must be understood to be the owner of an impartible estate.]

(a) A dies leaving his son B aged 10 and a brother C aged 30. B succeeds in preference to C.

(b) A dies leaving his widow and a brother. The widow would succeed if the zemindari is in Bengal, otherwise it will go to the brother.

(c) A dies leaving him surviving B, elder brother of the half-blood, and C, a younger brother of whole blood. B succeeds in preference to C in Mitakshara country[3] while C will succeed in Bengal.[4]

(d) A dies leaving two sons, B aged 19 by his junior wife and C aged 10 by his senior wife. B succeeds.

(e) A dies leaving a grandson B aged 10 and a brother's son C aged 20. B succeeds.

1767. Analogous Law.—In describing the incidents of an impartible estate, it has been stated that succession thereto is subject to the personal law of the holder adapted to the tenure. The one incident of impartibility carries with it another necessary incident as to its succession being subject to the rule of primogeniture. (§§ 1770-1777.) To this extent the personal law must necessarily stand modified. Partibility being the general rule, the succession of one heir is, therefore, an exception.[5] This section lays down the salient principles as regards succession. All the clauses are drawn from the decided cases.

1768. The explanation is, moreover, supported by the following text:—

Manu.—"150. As between sons born of wives equal in their class and without any other distinction, there can be no seniority in right of the mother, but the seniority ordained by law is according to the birth."[6]

1769. Law of Succession.—Generally speaking, succession to an impartible estate is subject to the personal law of the holder, varied by the nature of the estate or custom. Where the family is subject to the Mitakshara law, succession to it will follow survivorship, though while the holder is alive, his coparcener possesses none of the rights inherent in a coparcener. For example, he has no right of partition, residence, maintenance or the like, nor is the holder a mere manager holding for the family, whose rights qualify his own right of alienation, though, on his death, succession is governed by survivorship, and for that purpose, the

(1) Mayne's H.L. (8th Ed.), p. 767, Expl.; Jagdish v. Sheo Partap, 23 A. 369 (382) P.C.; Ramalakshmi v. Sivanatha, 14 M.I.A. 570; Pedda v. Bangari, 2 M. 286 P.C.

(2) Tara Kumari v. Chaturbhuj, 42 C. 1179 P.C.; Lekhraj v. Harpal, 30 A. 406, affirmed O.A. 34 A. 65 P.C.; Rup Singh v. Basini, 7 A. 1 P.C.; Heranath v Ram Narain, 17 W.R. 316.

(3) Subramania v. Siva, 17 M. 316.

(4) Neel Kisto v. Beerchunder, 12 M. I.A. 523.

(5) E. I. Co. v. Kamachee, 4 W. R. 42 P.C. s.c.; Sub nom. Secretary of State v. Kamachee, 7 M.I.A. 476.

(6) Manu, IX-125.

question of jointness of the family and of the estate becomes material, the Privy Council having gone the length of holding that so far as regards succession, the jointness of the family does not cease by a mere partition, and the presumed rule of its exhaustiveness, but continues unless the junior members renounce their right of succession,[1] or to put the same thing differently, in order to prove that the estate has ceased to be joint, there must be proof of intention, express or implied, that the members had separated quad the estate.

The difference between succession by primogeniture, survivorship and inheritance is that in the former the estate devolves not on the member nearest in blood but on the eldest member of the senior branch of the family.[2]

1770. Primogeniture or Selection.—The fact that an estate is impartible carries with it the incident that it must be held by and descend to a single individual. This person may be ascertained by the rule of primogeniture or some other mode of selection as might be customary. The fact that an estate is impartible does not necessarily imply that it is descendible according to the rule of primogeniture. If the estate be ancestral joint property, the question of selection of the head of the family is a part of the general law,[3] though in ordinary cases, such head is selected by the rule of general or lineal primogeniture. Where the estate is separate property, this complexity does not arise.

Custom of primogeniture.

1771. Succession of large quasi-principalities is regulated by the law of primogeniture, the history of which explains the origin of the rule. In the West, on the fall of the Roman Empire, a number of barbarous tribes, then inhabiting Germany, overran its territories and settled portions of them on feuds, a German word, meaning stipendiary estate. These service estates were, at first, personal but later on they were granted to a man and his male heirs. In later times, this system of service tenure became extended to France and was introduced into England by William the Conqueror. For similar reasons the military conquerors of the country, both Moghuls and the British, found this system useful and it continued first, on the ground of military service and later, of political service. But after the mutiny of 1858, these tenures were enfranchised and mostly settled on the primary feudal condition of impartibility to which inalienability was, sometimes, though not uniformly, added. But apart from the royal grants several old tenures in the hands of the fighting clan, the Rajputs, have continued to preserve their estates on the basis of their original tenures, which the courts have recognized as a Kulachar or family custom, which, however, being a marked departure from the general law which favours free disposal of property, such custom must be supported by precise pleading[4] and convincing proof supported by instances of its actual observance.[5]

---

(1) Shibaprasad v. Prayag Kumari, 59 C. 1399 P.C.; Collector of Goralchpur v. Ram Sundar, 56 A. 468 P.C;. Sellappa v. Suppan, 1937 M.L.J. 422; Bai Kesarra v. Shivasanji, 56 B. 619.

(2) Har Govind v. Collector, (1937) A. 377.

(3) Baijnath v. Tej Bali, 43 A. 228 (244) P.C.

(4) See §§ 1737-1739, Heeranath v. Burm Narain Singh, 15 W.R. 375 (383); Serumah v. Palathan, 15 W.R. 47 P.C.

(5) Ib., Serumah v. Palathan, 15 W.R. 47 P.C.

1772. Meaning of Primogeniture.—The question is what is the meaning of primogeniture and how are the two kinds of it distinguished. The term primogeniture means "first-born", and the heir most senior in age, whatever his relationship to the last owner, will succeed under the rule in preference to other heirs of equal degree. So where the deceased has left several sons, the eldest succeeds and the fact that he was born of a junior wife is immaterial. As the Privy Council observed: "It is by the birth of his first-born son that a Hindu discharges the duty which he owes to his ancestors, and obtains a spiritual benefit for himself, and therefore, it is to that son that the pre-eminence should be given.[1] But as between a previously adopted son and a subsequently born natural son, an impartible estate goes to a natural son "the reason being that the adopted son is a substitute for the auras son and that, when the latter comes into existence, he excludes the substitute.[2]

1773. General and Lineal Primogeniture.—Primogeniture may be general or lineal. Now, since impartibility is the creature of law or usage, it must equally determine the rule of succession and whether it is one or the other, cannot be the subject of any a priori reasoning. It must depend upon the nature of the grant and the law or custom which regulates its succession, in the absence of which, the general law must apply. As this law does not exclude women from succession, there is no inconsistency between a custom of impartibility and the right of females to inherit, and the general law will prevail unless it is proved that they are excluded by custom.[3] That custom may shew what is the rule of succession, if it is by primogeniture, general or lineal, the one favours succession by proximity of degree,[4] while the other limits succession to the eldest member of the senior line. In the one case, nearness of blood and in the other nearness in line, is the ground of preference —that is to say, while in the one case, one nearer in blood, though belonging to the junior line, is preferred, in the other, succession goes to the eldest in the senior line without reference to the nearness in blood. It is settled in accordance with the rulings of the Privy Council that when impartible property passes by survivorship from one line to another, it devolves not on the coparcener nearest in blood but on the nearest coparcener of the senior line.[5] In other words, the ordinary rule governing primogeniture favours lineal as opposed to general primogeniture. But where general primogeniture is shown to be customary, and proximity of degree governs succession as amongst those who are equal in proximity, the older in line is to be preferred.[6] The question whether an estate is subject to the ordinary law of succession or descends according to the rule of primogeniture must be decided in each case according to the evidence given in it.[7]

1774. In the Udayarpalayam zemindari case, the plaintiff sued for recovery of the zemindari on the ground of his nearness in blood. The

---

(1) Jagdish v. Sheo Partab, 23 A. 369 (382) P.C.

(2) S. 53 (3), ante; Dattak Chandrika v. 32; Ramaswami v. Sundaralingasami, 17 M. 422 (434, 435).

(3) Ram Nundan v. Janki Koer, 29 C. 828 (852) P.C.

(4) Muhammad v. Hussain, 26 C. 81 (90) P.C.

(5) Naraganti v. Venkatachalapati, 4 M. 250 (267) F.B.; Kachi v. Kachi, 24 M. 562 (609) affirmed O.A. 28 M. 508 (512) P.C.

(6) Mhd. Iman Ali v. Husain Khan, 26 C. 508 (512) P.C.

(7) Yarlagadda v. Yarlagadda, 13 M. 406 P.C.

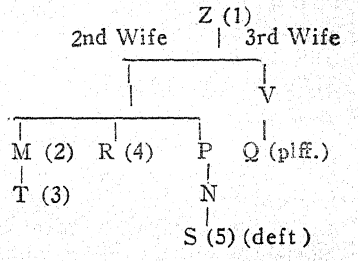
zemindari belonged to one Z who had three wives. By the first wife he had no issue. By the second he had three sons M, R, and P, and by the third one son V. On the death of Z the estate passed first to M then to M's son and then to M's brother R. On the latter's death possession was taken by S the grandson of his brother P. Q contested S's right on the ground that he was nearer in blood to R, but the Privy Council threw out his suit holding that S being a nearer coparcener of the senior line was preferably entitled.[1] In other words, the estate was subject to lineal primogeniture.



"The principle of representation places the first defendant (S) and the plaintiff (Q) in the position respectively of their grand-father (P) and father (V) and therefore, equally near to the deceased Zemindar (R) (apart from any question of half-blood) and that being so, the first defendant (S) being senior in age to the plaintiff would take the impartible property in preference to the plaintiff (Q):"[2]

1775. The case would have been differently decided if it were subject to the Dayabhag, which does not recognize survivorship as determining the devolution of property.[3] The same view was taken by the Privy Council in a competition between a junior uncle of the last Zemindar and a grandson of a senior uncle who was held to have a superior right.[4] Similarly, in another case, the custom of succession by lineal primogeniture was pleaded and proved. There the contest lay between the eldest male descendant of the second son of the original owner and the descendant of his fourth son nearer by one degree to the propositus. It was not disputed that a grandson whose father was dead succeeded to the grandfather's estate in preference to a surviving uncle. But it was contended that this did not prove that the rule of lineal primogeniture applied in cases of collateral relationship. But the Privy Council held it established from a family tradition, though unsupported by any actual instance in which the rule had neither been followed nor departed from, proving the custom and the title of dignity bestowed on the heir apparent.[5] The rule of succession by lineal primogeniture is then an exception to the general rule that a nearer heir excludes a remoter one. But though from the reported cases it would appear that this mode of succession is common to impartible estates, it cannot be so presumed. And he who relies upon it must prove it.[6] Again, the fact that the estate is held by a single heir does not necessarily

---

(1) Kachi v. Kachi, 24 M. 562 (609), following Naraganti v. Venkatachalapati, 4 M. 250 (267) P.C., affirmed O. A. Kachi v. Kachi, 28 M. 508 (512) P.C.

(2) Kachi v. Kachi, 24 M. 562 (609, 610).

(3) Neelkisto v. Beerchunder, 12 M. I.A. 523, explained in Naraganti v. Venkatachalapati, 4 M. 250 P.C. and in Subramanya v. Siva, 17 M. 316 (325-330); Kachi v. Kachi, 24 M. 562 (608, 609), affirmed O. A. 28 M. 508 (512) P.C.

(4) Naraganti v. Venkatachalapati, 4 M. 250 (267) P.C.

(5) Mohesh v. Satrugan, 20 C. 543 P.C.

(6) Achal Ram v. Udai Pertab, 10 C. 511 (518, 519) P.C.

imply that it is subject to the rule of primogeniture,[1] or to any particular kind of primogeniture.

1776. In determining the right of succession to an impartible estate the class of kindred from whom a single heir is to be selected, should be first ascertained. Next, it should be seen whether family custom or kulachar disclosed a special rule of selection, and in default of such custom, seniority of age constitutes a title by descent to the impartible estate, by analogy to the general Hindu Law. Nearness of blood is no ground of preference under the Mitakshara Law in case of disputed succession to coparcenary property which is partible, and it is likewise no ground of preference when such property is impartible. When, therefore, the family property belongs to a coparcenary family consisting of all the brothers of the deceased propositus, whether of the whole or half-blood, in the absence of a specification to the contrary, the brother that is entitled to succeed to the property is the eldest in years.[2]

1777. The parties to a suit, first cousins once removed, contested the right to inherit an impartible zemindari, which had been acquired by their common ancestor, who had left two daughters by two different wives. The plaintiff was the son of the younger daughter, the defendant's father was the son of the elder. The younger half-sister survived the elder, and in 1863 was judicially declared to have inherited alone the impartible zemindari. On her death, the elder daughter's son, in litigation ending in 1881 made good his title to the estate being descendant in the elder line. It was held that this last male owner became the stock from which descent had now to be traced and that the successor was no longer of that stock, and that the son of this last male owner had a title to the zemindari on his father's death in consequence of the full and complete ownership of the latter who had himself become a fresh root of title.[3]

Order of succession.

1778. In a zemindari subject to the Mitakshara, a half-brother senior in age would have preference over a younger brother of full blood[4] but the very reverse is the case in a Dayabhag succession in which the doctrine of survivorship has no application either as a general part of inheritance or as an exception to it.[5] In the case of competition between two half-brothers, in the absence of custom seniority in years is alone the criterion. The seniority of the mother does not count.[6] But custom may decree otherwise. It may, for instance, confer priority by reason of the seniority of the mother and not by reason of the seniority in age. Such a custom was pleaded and affirmed by the Privy Council.[7]

(1) Bhai Narindar v. Achal Ram, 20 C. 649 (652) P.C.; Muhammad v. Husain, 26 C. 81 (90) P.C.; Jeetnath v. Lokenath, 19 W.R. 239; Ramchandra v. Venkatrao, 6 B. 598 (613); contra in Bhawani v. Deo Rajkumari, 5 A. 542; Muthuvadugunada v. Periasami, 19 M. 451 P.C.

(2) Subramanya v. Siva, 17 M. 316 (327); Balu v. Lahoo, 1931 B. 508 (552) F.B.

(3) Muthuvadugunadha v. Periasami, 19 M. 451.

(4) Subramania v. Siva, 17 M. 316 (330); Ramasami v. Sundaralingasami, 17 M. 422.

(5) Sheo Soondary v. Pirthee Singh, L.R. 4 I.A. 147 : O.A. from Raj Kishore v. Gobind, 1 C. 27 F.B.

(6) Ramalakshmi v. Sivanatha, 14 M. I.A. 570; Pedda v. Banjari, 2 M. 286 P.C.; Ramasami v. Sundaralingasami, 17 M. 422 (438).

(7) Sundaralingasami v. Ramasami, 22 M. 515 P.C.

Such was also the custom proved in a case that sons by a wife of the caste of the Raja take in preference to a son by a wife of a lower caste.[1]

1779. A half-brother succeeds in preference to the widow of the last owner.[2] So, where the Zamindar was a Shudra amongst whom the illegitimate son succeeds to his father, it was held that as between the son by a wedded wife and an illegitimate son, the ordinary rule of survivorship incidental to a family coparcenary applied and the illegitimate son having survived the legitimate upon his death without male issue, was entitled by survivorship to succeed to the partible Raj.[3] So if the owner died leaving no male issue, but two co-widows, they would jointly inherit if the estate is partible. But if the estate be impartible, the senior will take the estate and the junior will only receive maintenance. In other words, the rule of descent is the personal law of the parties. That determines the heir or heirs. If the estate is partible they all participate. If it is impartible, the eldest of them takes and the rest are excluded by reason of the impartible character of the estate. And since the heir is determined by the general law, it follows that if females are competent to inherit to an impartible estate, the fact that it is impartible is no reason for their exclusion though, here as elsewhere, custom may have ordained their exclusion; but in that case such custom must be strictly proved[4] in the absence of which in the absence of male issue, the widow of the late zemindar will succeed[5] and possess the absolute rights of the owner but may relinquish any of her rights in a compromise with her reversioner.[6] So it was proved that there was a custom applicable to the Babuana and Sohag grants from the Darbhanga Raj which excluded widows, daughters and descendants of the daughters from succession. These grants descend in the family of the Darbhanga Raj not to one male heir only, but to all the existing male heirs in the male line of the grantee as coparceners.[7]

1780. Though the heir is traced in conformity with the general law, the interest of the other members of a Mitakshara family is, as regards an impartible estate, no more than a mere spes successionis.[8] (§ 1750.) It is not a vested interest as in the case of partible property. And while it is true that the clear and unequivocal declaration of his intention to separate from the holder of such estate would exclude him from the joint family to the same extent as in the case of the family holding partible estate, the fact that the person so separating forfeits his chance of inheriting the

---

(1) Bistooprea v. Basoodeb, 2 W.R. 232.

(2) Parbati v. Jagodis, 29 C. 433 P. C.

(3) Jogendra v. Nityanand, 18 C. 151, (155) P.C.; approving Sadu v. Baiza, 4 B. 37; Visvanatha v. Kamulu, 24 M.L.J. 271: 21 I.C. 724 contra in Parvathi v. Thrumalai, 10 M. 334 (346), dissenting from Sadu v. Baiza, 4 B. 37, can no longer be maintained since the approval of the Bombay case by the Privy Council. The view taken in that case that there is coparcenary in an impartible estate, is equally erroneous; Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 39 M. 396, affirmed O.A. 41 M. 778 P.C.

(4) Ramnundun v. Janki, 29 C. 828 P.C.; Tarakumari v. Narayan, 42 C. 1179 P.C., O.A. from Narain v. Tarakumari, 5 I.C. 193.

(5) Periasami v. Periasami, 1 M. 312 P.C., followed in Doorga v. Doorga, 4 C. 190 (202, 203) P.C.

(6) Harpal v. Lakraj, 30 A. 406, affirmed O.A. Lekraj v. Harpal, 34 A. 65 P.C.; Indar Sen v. Harpal, 34 A. 79.

(7) Ekradeshwar v. Janeshwari, 42 C. 582 P.C.

(8) S. 6 (a) Transfer of Property Act, 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.) § 198, p. 136; Laliteshwar v. Rameshwar, 36 C. 481.

whole of the estate by survivorship, the courts require strong evidence to establish such separation.[1] This would be clear from the facts of the following case decided by the Privy Council. The Jagirdar had four sons, of whom the eldest was weak of intellect. He, therefore, settled his Jagir on the second son. The estate then descended from father to son for 92 years when the junior branch became extinct. Meanwhile there had been partitions of all partible property between the senior and his own branch and between his own branch and between the members of each branch inter se. On the death of the last owner issueless, in 1914, the senior member in the line of his eldest excluded son took possession of the estate, whereupon the mother of the last owner sued to dispossess him. It was found that although there had been several partitions the fact that the second son had been let into possession by arrangement, the zemindari remained and continued the joint family property in his line since "in order to establish that an impartible estate has ceased to be joint family property for the purposes of succession, it is necessary to prove an intention expressed or implied on behalf of the junior members of the family to give up their chance of succession of the impartible estate."[2]

1781. As to this, it is submitted that even if a member of the junior branch had given up his chance of succession, it would not have sufficed to make the estate separate when it was otherwise joint.[3] But their Lordships hold that the other ground is more conclusive. It was argued that since all partitions are presumed to be complete, the several partitions had the effect of destroying coparcenary in the impartible estate to which their Lordships replied that since the impartible estate could not be partitioned, the members' right of succession could only be destroyed by renunciation. "Further, to lay down that members of a joint family could not partition their partible property without losing their rights of succession to the impartible estate, would impose on those families a restriction on the free right to partition which has been so fully recognised by the decisions of this Board in recent years."[4] In the end their Lordships upheld the rights of succession to be by survivorship.

1782. Succession by Selection.—It has already been seen that ordinarily an impartible estate is subject to the rule of lineal primogeniture, and that where the estate is impartible, but not inalienable, the owner for the time being is entitled to dispose of it by gift or devise. Where, however, it is inalienable, he may still possess the customary right of selecting his heir from amongst his sons. Such right is not merely confined to the impartible estates in this country; since it was equally the incident of an ancient Irish tenure known as Tanistry, which, however, has long since been obsolete,[5] but it seems to still survive in some Taluquadari estates in Oudh; e.g., the Kanhmow estate, where the Taluqua-

---

(1) Jagadamba v. Wazir Narain, 2 Pat. 319 P. C.; Konammal v. Annadana, 51 M. 189 P.C.

(2) Konnammal v. Annadana, 51 M. 189 (204) P.C.; Collector of Gorakhpur v. Ram Sunder, 56 A. 468 P.C.

(3) S. 6 (a), Transfer of Property Act, S. 225 (a), post; Annada Mohan v. Gour Mohan, 48 C. 536, O.A. 50 C. 929 P.C.

(4) Konammal v. Annadana, 51 M. 189 (205) P.C.

(5) From Ta, territor; also called Tanistria, which allotted the inheritance to the oldest and the most worthy of the deceased's name and blood without regard to proximity. It led to bloody wars and was abolished by James I.—See Wharton; 3 Hall, Const. Hist., C. 18, p. 377.

dar was found to possess the right to nominate one of his sons as his successor without reference to seniority.[1]

Clause (4).

1783. Dayabhag Succession.—The same rule holds good in the case of a Dayabhag family, that is to say, the heir is selected by the personal law and if there are more than one equally eligible, the eldest succeeds by his right of seniority. But as under this law there is no survivorship, the only rule of succession is by inheritance.

Clause (5).

1784. Position of Females.—The right of a female heir to inherit an impartible zemindari depends upon the law to which it is subject. In a zemindari subject to no special law or custom, the ordinary rule must prevail, viz., a female cannot inherit an impartible ancestral estate, belonging to a joint family under the Mitakshara, when there are male members of the family who are qualified to succeed as heirs; a rule of law not dependent on custom, and a custom modifying the law in this respect must be a custom to admit females, not a custom to exclude them.[2] This view would be intelligible if we remember that the rights which women possess as regards an ordinary partible property cannot be enlarged by the mere fact that the property to be dealt with is impartible. They succeed or are excluded irrespective of the nature of the property in accordance with their personal law. Such law entitles them to succeed to their husband's separate property[3] from which they cannot be excluded by reason of their sex unless they are excluded by custom.[4]

---

(1) Per Lord Hobhouse, in Ishri Singh v. Baldeo Singh, 10 C. 792 (804, 805) P.C. In Achal Ram v. Udai Pratab, ibid., 511 P.C., the rule was recognized, though the decision turned upon another point. But a similar tenure was found in Afzul Khan v. Kasim Khan, 30 C. 843 P.C.

(2) Yenumula v. Ramandara, 6 M.H. C.R. 93 (108, 109); Hiranath v. Ram Narayan, 9 B.L.R. 274, approved in Chintamun v. Nowlukho, 1 C. 153 P. C. Rupsingh v. Basini, 7 A. 1 (10, 11) P. C.

(3) Ram Nundun v. Janki, 29 C. 828 (851) P.C., following Beer Pertab v. Rajendar, 12 M.I.A. 1; Udai Pratab v. Jagat Mohan, (1928) P. 66 (77, 78).

(4) Ram Nundun v. Janki, 29 C. 828 P.C.

CHAPTER XVI.

TRUSTS, BENAMI TRANSACTIONS AND POWERS.

1785. Topical Introduction.—There is nothing technical in the root idea of Trusts. Where one person entrusts another with some work, it creates a trust, but arising out of the trust flow certain jural rights and obligations which invest the subject with a complexity and importance. The law of fiduciary relations was developed in the Civil Law which has guided the course of modern jurisprudence.

1786. Trust means confidence, and the law of Trust is the law which prescribes the mode in which such confidential relation arises and the manner in which the obligations arising therefrom may be discharged. So the Trusts Act defines the term "trust" as "an obligation annexed to the ownership of property, and arising out of a confidence reposed in and accepted by the owner, or declared and accepted by him, for the benefit of another, or of another and the owner."[1] The person in whom the confidence is reposed is called a trustee, and the person for whose benefit the trust is to be exercised is called a cestui que trust, or a beneficiary, and the property in respect of which the trust is created, trust property. Trusts are either (a) express, or (b) constructive, presumptive or implied. The former arises where the author defines its actual terms and the latter, where it is to be inferred from circumstances.

1787. Hindu Law recognizes Trusts. Indeed, it assigns it a prominent place because of its large and valuable religious endowments, the maintenance and administration of which involves the creation of trusts and the appointment of trustees. These Trusts remain unaffected by the Trusts Act which expressly excludes them. Apart from religious and charitable trusts, Hindu Law now recognizes the right of testamentary disposition which again calls for the intervention of trustees.

1788. All these, however, need the creation of express trusts. But implied trusts have equally a firm footing in Hindu Law, and an instance of it is to be found in the law of benami transactions, and the law of joint family, in which the manager has been assigned a position analogous to that of a trustee. Allied to the law of Trusts is the law of Powers, the existence of which is displayed in several transactions elsewhere considered. The law of Trusts is in fact the necessary sequence of the law of property, and there is no system which recognizes the right of property which does not equally recognize the law of Trust which is necessary both for its full enjoyment and disposition. Hindu Law has prescribed no formula for the creation of a trust. Words of recommendation, request, entreaty, wish or expectation, addressed to another, whether a relation, a friend, a devisee or legatee will suffice to create a trust, provided the direction is given with sufficient clearness and certainty, both as to the subject-matter and the object or objects of the intended trust. But while the Hindu, like other archaic systems of law, contains sufficient elementary principles applicable to cases of trust, it fails to furnish the detailed rules by which effect is to be given to its principles. These rules, therefore, supplement its provisions and must be read as if they were necessarily engrafted upon its scanty foundation.

(1) S. 3, Act II of 1882.

Form of Trust.

215. (1) No form is necessary to create a trust for religious or charitable purposes.

(2) But a secular trust cannot be created otherwise than as provided in Sections 5 and 6 of the Trusts Act.

1789. Analogous Law.—Even under English Law, "technical language is not necessary to create a trust. It is enough that the intention is apparent. Thus it has been long settled that words of recommendation, request, entreaty, wish, or expectation, addressed to a devisee or legatee, will make him trustee for the person or persons in whose favour such expressions are used, provided the testator has pointed out, with sufficient clearness and certainty, both the subject-matter and the object or objects of the intended trust."[1] Where therefore, the testator by his will left to his wife the whole of his property in the confidence that she would act justly to their children in dividing the same when no longer required by her, the wife by her will, left to their children certain portions of such property, leaving to their child, amongst other things, certain banking shares. These were seized by her creditors, but the court released them holding that the wife took under her husband's will a life-interest only in his property with a power of appointment in favour of the children and that the shares belonged to the child and could not be sold in execution of the decree as part of the estate of the wife.[2]

1790. A trust is created when the author of the trust indicates, with reasonable certainty by any words or acts, (a) an intention on his part to create thereby a trust, (b) the purpose of the trust, (c) the beneficiary, (d) the trust property, (e) the transfer of such property to the trustee,[3] unless the trust is declared by will or the author of the trust is himself to be the trustee.

Reading Sections 5 and 6 of the Trusts Act together, it would seem that a specific oral declaration of trust on points (a) to (d) would be enough to create a trust without transfer where the author was himself to be the trustee.[4]

1791. Imperfect Gift.—Where there has been a clear intention to make a gift, but on account of some omission on the donor's part, that intention has failed, the courts will not erect a trust on the imperfect gift. When the intention is to make a gift, and the intention has failed for want of transfer or any other cause, the court will not convert what was meant to be an out and out gift into a trust.[5] No trust is created by words in the will to the effect that "the executors should give my brothers, their wives and children according to their (executors') wishes."[6] A person cannot do by intervention of a trustee what he cannot do directly by a gift.[7]

---

(1) Jarman on Wills (3rd Ed.), cited in Raynor v. Mussorie Bank, 2 A. 55 (58).

(2) Raynor v. Mussorie Bank, 2 A. 55.

(3) Sabnis, (In re), (1937) B. 374 (378).

(4) Manchershaw v. Ardeshir, 10 Bom.L.R. 1209.

(5) Milory v. Lord, 4 De.G.F. and J. 274, followed in Manchershaw v. Ardeshir, 10 Bom.L.R. 1209 (1216, 1223).

(6) Kumarasami v. Subharaya, 9 M. 325; Quare in Venkatachella v. Thathammal, 4 M.H.C.R. 460.

(7) Rajomoyee v. Troylukho, 29 C. 260.

Object of Trust.

216 A trust may be created for any lawful purpose, whether secular[1] or religious.[2]

1792. Analogous Law.—Secular trusts are now subject to the Trusts Act,[3] which, however, exempts all "public or private religious or charitable endowments" from its operation.[4] Such trusts will be governed by Hindu Law, which recognizes the creation of trusts, as was stated in the Tagore case: "Property whether moveable or immoveable must for many purposes be vested, more or less absolutely, in some person or persons for the benefit of other persons, and trusts of various kinds have been recognized and acted on in India in many cases. Implied trusts were recognized and established here in the case of benami purchases,[5] . . . . and in cases of a provision for charity or for other beneficial objects, such as the professorship[6] provided for by the will under consideration, where no estate is conferred on the beneficiaries and their interest is in the proceeds of the property (to which no objection has been raised), the creation of a trust is practically necessary."[7]

Quoting this West, J., pointed out that while Hindu law insists as strongly as any on the suppression of fraud and the fulfilment of the promises, in India, it fails to furnish the detailed rules by which effect is to be given to its principles in case of trust, which have to be drawn from English law as embodying the rules of equity.[8] It was so held in a case in which the pensioner had dedicated some property for religious and charitable uses, vesting it in two trustees one of whom had since died. It was contended that the surviving trustee was well able to manage the trust, but the court appointed another trustee in place of the deceased.[9]

1793. It is clear that since Hindu Law permits the dedication of property to religious and charitable uses, it must necessarily permit the vesting of it in trustees but for whose intervention the purpose of the founder would be impossible of achievement. But the trusts can only be sustained to the extent and for the purpose of giving effect to those beneficiary interests which the law recognizes, and that, for the determination of those interests, the beneficial interest in the residue of the property remains in the person, who, but for the will, would lawfully be entitled thereto.[10]

The subject of religious and charitable endowments occupies an important place in Hindu Law and will be the subject of another chapter.

Insurance by husband for benefit of wife.

217. (1) A policy of insurance effected by any married man on his own life, and expressed on the face of it to be for the benefit of his wife, or of his wife and children, or any of them, shall enure and be deemed to be a trust for the benefit of his

---

(1) Cf. Ss. 5 and 6, Trusts Act, 1882.
(2) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (401, 402) P.C.
(3) II of 1882.
(4) Ib., S. 1, Sabnis, (In re) (1937) B. 374.
(5) Citing Gopeekrist v. Gunga Persaud, 6 M.I.A. 53.
(6) The Tagore Law Professorship provided for in the will construed in Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 P.C.
(7) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (401, 402) P.C.
(8) Kahan Das (in re), 5 B. 154 (174).
(9) Ib. p. 175.
(10) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (402) P.C.

wife, or of his wife and children, or any of them, according to the interest so expressed, and shall not, so long as any object of the trust remains, be subject to the control of the husband, or to his creditors, or form part of his estate.

(2) When the sum secured by the policy becomes payable, it shall, unless special trustees are duly appointed to receive and hold the same, be paid to the Official Trustee of the Presidency in which the office at which the insurance was effected is situate, and shall be received and held by him upon the trusts expressed in the policy, or such of them as are then existing.

(3) And in reference to such sum, he shall stand in the same position in all respects as if he had been duly appointed trustee thereof by a High Court under Act XVII of 1864 (to Constitute an Office of Official Trustee), section 10.

(4) Nothing herein contained shall operate to destroy or impede the right of any creditor to be paid out of the proceeds of any policy of assurance which may have been effected with intent to defraud creditors.

1794. Analogous Law.—This is section 6 of the Married Women's Property Act,[1] expressly extended to Hindus by another Act,[2] the necessity for which arose from the conflict of decisions on the subject. Ordinarily, a stranger to a contract cannot enforce its performance. Therefore, if A insured his life for the benefit of his wife B, the latter could not, on A's death, recover the money, nor indeed would B be entitled to it without a formal assignment of policy in her favour. This is the law as enacted in the Contract Act.[3] But this rule has been modified by section 6 of the Married Women's Property Act, which passes the benefit of assurance, effected and expressed to be in favour of the assurer's wife and children, without the requirement of a deed of transfer.

The question then arose whether this provision applied equally to Hindu assurers, which fact was denied both by the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts,[4] though the contrary was held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court,[5] which has since received legislative approval in the enactment above referred to. It enables a Hindu married man to effect a policy of insurance for the benefit of his wife, or of his wife and children, or any of them, and a policy so effected operates as a trust for the benefit of the wife, or the wife and children, divesting the husband of all interest therein and entitling the beneficiaries to realize the policy in their own right without the necessity of its formal transfer by the assurer. It is apprehended that where the insurer effects a policy for the benefit of his wife and children, the beneficiaries would take unaffected by the special disabilities imposed by Hindu Law upon women.[6]

1795. The only exception recognized by the section is that such policy of assurance should not be effected with intent to defraud credi-

(1) III of 1874.

(2) Act XIII of 1923; Section 2 (c), Contract Act (IX of 1872), explained in Balamba v. Krishnayya, 37 M. 483 (494).

(3) Act IX of 1872.

(4) Eshani Dasi v. Gopal Chandra, 18 C.W.N. 1335: 20 C.L.J. 4; Shankar v. Umabai, 37 B. 471.

(5) Balamba v. Krishnayya, 37 M. 483 (504) F.B., overruling contra in Oriental Life Assurance Co. v. Vanteddu, 35 M. 162.

(6) Bengal Insurance Co. v. Velayammal, I.L.R. (1937) M. 990.

tors. It may raise some nice questions of Hindu Law, e.g., if the manager of a joint Hindu family should, out of the family funds, insure the lives of his wife and children, the question might arise whether he is liable to account for the cost of insurance in a partition. It is clear that the coparceners cannot lay claim to a policy, and their only remedy is to call for a partition, should they feel aggrieved by the policy effected out of joint funds.

1796. The Hindu rule as to delivery of possession is now superseded by S. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, under which a gift may be validly made if the gift deed is registered, though there is no delivery.[1]

1797. There is nothing in Hindu Law to preclude the donor from reserving to himself the usufruct of a part of the property for his own life, or postponing the enjoyment by the donee of a part of the profits till after the donor's death.

Benami transaction defined.

218. (1) Benami transfer or transaction means the transfer by or to a person who acts only as the ostensible owner in place of the real owner whose name is not disclosed.

(2) The question whether such transfer or transaction was real or benami depends upon the intention of the beneficiary.

(3) The real owner in such cases may be called the beneficiary and the ostensible owner the benamidar.

Illustrations.

A purchases property in the name of his relation B. A supplies the consideration and B merely lends his name. A is the beneficiary and B his benamidar.

Benami transfer.

219. (1) A person does not acquire any interest in property by merely lending his name.

(2) Where one person holds property for another, he will be deemed to hold it in trust for another.

1798. Analogous Law.—The habit of acquiring and holding property benami, so inveterate in India,[2] is not merely confined to the Hindus;[3] nor indeed, is the habit confined to India, since the purchase of property by one in the name of another is not unknown in England,[4] though such instances are comparatively rare. But in India, it is a habit which, though now on the decline, is yet maintaining a firm hold on the people. So, in one case their Lordships of the Privy Council observed: "The system of acquiring and holding property and even of carrying on business in names other than those of the real owners, usually called the benami system, is and has been a common practice in the country. There is nothing inherently wrong in it, and it accords, within its legitimate scope, with the ideas and habits of the people."[5]

---

(1) Lallu Singh v. Gur Narain, 20 A. L.J. 744 F.B.: 68 I.C. 798 (801); Sahu Ram's case, distinguished in Kalyan Singh v. Dharam Singh, 68 I.C. 794: 20 A.L.J. 721.

(2) Though not in Burma; Ma Gyi v. Ma Me, 4 R. 522.

(3) Gopee Krist v. Ganga Prashad, 6 M.I.A. 53; Monevie Sayyad v. Bebee, Ultaf, 13 M.I.A. 232; Ameeroonissa v. Ashrufoonissa, 14 M.I.A. 433.

(4) Pelham v. Gregory, 1 Eden. 516 followed in DeSilva v. DeSilva, 5 Bom. L.R. 784.

(5) Gur Narayan v. Sheolal, 46 C. 566 (574) P.C. following Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj, 37 A. 557 P.C.

1799. The case for benami may arise (i) where the father or manager acquires property in the name of the junior member for the benefit of the family; (ii) where the husband acquires property in the name of the wife; (iii) where similar acquisitions are made by strangers. Not only may property be acquired benami but it may be transferred and held benami. But the principle applicable to all cases is the same. In the first place, the mere fact that the property stands in the name of a certain person raises some presumption that the property is his own. But the strength of this presumption must vary with circumstances. If the holder be a close relation or dependent of the alleged beneficiary, very slight evidence would be needed to shift the burden of proof. If he was moreover a minor, the presumption would be negligible. In other cases it is a question of evidence in each case. But while on the one hand, there must be some evidence and not mere suspicion to rebut the presumption,[1] on the other, the evidence adduced need not be more than formal.[2] As Lord Hobhouse in one case observed: "even a slight quantity of evidence to show it was a sham transaction will suffice for the purpose."[3]

The two propositions formulated in this section may now be explained.

Clause (1).

1800. The first clause defines the term "benamidar" as a person who merely lends his name to another, but who thereby acquires no interest in the property, though he may possess—in fact he does possess—some of the indicia of ownership. There is nothing colourable or fraudulent in a benami transaction as such, though the term is at times loosely used to denote a fraudulent transaction from which it is wholly distinct.[4] The difference between the two lies not only in the intention but in the change of ownership. In a benami transaction, the intention merely is to conceal the name of the real owner who prefers to remain incognito. But a fraudulent transfer is both a transfer and one which is fraudulent the ulterior object of which is to defeat or defraud a third party. There can be no doubt that benami transactions may easily lend themselves to this purpose and are at times so resorted to, but nevertheless, a distinction must be made between the two, since the one is legal which the other is not.

1801. Indeed, the acquisition of property incognito is not unknown in other countries, though here the practice is perhaps more prevalent. But a benami transaction in England raises a strong presumption of title in favour of the benamidar and where the latter is the wife or son or any other relation it raises the further presumption of intended advancement. But in this respect the Indian rule differs and this clause is intended to emphasize that distinction. It makes clear that the English rule in favour of advancement does not apply to Hindus, though it might be applicable to persons of British parentage resident in this country.[5] (S. 221). Since the possession of the benamidar is possession of the trustee, he acquires no title by reason of his possession.

---

(1) Per Lord Westbury in Sreeman v. Gopichunder, 11 M.I.A. 28 (48), followed in Mahbub Ali v. Bharat, 23 C. W.N. 321: 53 I.C. 54 P.C.

(2) Uman Parshad v. Gandharp, 15 C. 20 P.C., followed in Mahbub Ali v. Bharat, 23 C.W.N. 321: 53 I.C. 54 P. C.

(3) Uman Prashad v. Gandharp Singh, 15 C. 20 P.C.

(4) Mina Kumari v. Bijoy Singh, 44 M. 662 (670, 671), P.C.

(5) Kerwick v. Kerwick, 48 C. 260 P.C.; Bilas Kunwar v. Deoraj, 37 A. 557 (565) P.C.

1802. The second clause is more in conformity with the English Law. As the Privy Council observed: "It (i.e., a benami transaction) has a curious resemblance to the doctrine of our English Law that the trust of the legal estate results to the man who pays the purchase money, and this again follows the analogy of our common law, that where a feoffment is made without consideration, the use results to the feoffer. The exception by way of advancement in favour of wife or child does not apply to India, but the relationship is a circumstance which is taken into consideration in India in determining whether the transaction is benami or not."[1]

Clause (2).

1803. Since the benamidar is a mere trustee for the real owner, it follows that his heirs inheriting that property succeed merely to the trust and would be liable as trustees on his death.[2] But being clothed with the outward emblems of ownership, he may sue[3] and be sued[4] in respect of the property which he so holds, and any decision given against him would be res judicata against the real owner. The latter may of course, protect himself by becoming a party to the suit, but whether he is made a party or not he is bound by the result of the suit. Of course, the right to sue carries with it the consequential right to execute a decree.[5] In other respects, too, he possesses all the rights of an ostensible owner, and can, in the circumstances mentioned in S. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, even convey a good title to the property which holds against the beneficiary.[6]

But though by reason of his ostensible ownership a benamidar may create rights in others, it does not create in him any interest in the property, while at the same time, his obligation as trustee thereof to the beneficial owner remains.

220. A benami transaction is legal unless it is made with intent to defeat, defraud or delay, or results in defeating, defrauding or delaying a third party[7] or is prohibited by law or is against its policy.[8]

When benami tranaction is illegal.

Illustrations.

(a) A becomes heavily indebted to B who is expected to attach his property for the satisfaction of his debt. To screen it from B, A transfers some of it to C. The transfer is void.[9]

(b) A has innocently transferred his property to B who holds it for A, but getting involved in heavy losses, B compromises with his creditor C to whom he transfers X in satisfaction of his debt. A sues to eject C on the strength of his real title. C claims to be a bona fide purchaser from B without notice of A's title. A cannot eject C.[10]

(c) In execution of a decree passed against A, his village X is sold at Court auction. A finances B to purchase it benami for A which he does. A sues to eject B on the ground that B was his benamidar. The suit is not maintainable, as section 66

(1) Bilas Kunwar v. Deoraj, 37 A. 557 (565) P.C., followed in Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal, 46 C. 566 (574) P.C.; Kerwick v. Kerwick, 48 C. 260 (263) P.C.

(2) Raja of Deo v. Abdullah, 45 C. 909 (918-919) P.C.

(3) Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal, 46 C. 566 P.C.; Vyadhiswara v. Srinivasa, 42 M. 348 F.B.; Singa Pillai v. Ayyaneri, 41 M. 435; Parmeshar v. Anardan, 37 A. 113.

(4) Tharat Karim v. Bal Kuar, 2 Pat. L.J. 740.

(5) Chelam v. Seeni, (1918) M.W.N. 226: 43 I.C. 801; Kamta Prasad v. Indomati, 37 A. 414; Prasanna Kumar v. Asutosh, 18 C.W.N. 450: 20 I.C. 685.

(6) See 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.).

(7) S. 53, Tr. P. Act.

(8) Sheo Narayan v. Mata Prasad, 27 A. 73.

(9) S. 53, Tr. P. Act.

(10) S. 41, Tr. P. Act.

of the Civil Procedure Code prohibits a suit to shew that B's purchase was made benami for A.[1]

221. Presumptions in Benami. (1) Save as provided in section 129, there is no presumption in favour of benami, and he who alleges that the apparent title is not the real title must prove it.[2]

(2) There is no presumption that a purchase made by a Hindu or a Mahomedan in the name of his child, wife or mistress is by way of advancement, the question being one of intention which must be proved by the party alleging it; but such presumption shall be made where the purchaser is a British resident in India.[3]

1804. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by the following autorities.[4] It enunciates both a rule and an exception, the rule being that the apparent title is presumably the real title till the contrary is shewn, and the exception being the reversal of the presumption justified by the law of joint property. The second clause is in consonance with S. 82 of the Trusts Act and is a departure from the English Law which assumes the purchase by one in the name of a relation as a purchase by way of advancement. No such presumption arises here in the case of Hindus and Mahomedans[5] even in cases outside the scope of joint property —the result being that while a benami transfer in England suffices to convey a title to property in the transferee, no title of any kind is created in his favour here, but the English rule is held still to hold good in the case of British residents in India.[6]

1805. Principle.—This section along with S. 129 refers to benami transactions, the law regarding which is this. Both under the English as well as the Indian law, the general rule is the ex facie owner of a property must be presumed to be its real owner; where, however, such ownership is held in common by a family, the same presumption extends to them, namely that any property acquired by the manager in the name of a coparcener must presumably enure for the benefit of the whole coparcenary, since joint ownership is the rule and individual ownership an exception. Apart, however, from the joint family, the general rule must prevail that he who wishes to displace an apparent title can only do so by adducing proof that it is not the real title. Further, while both under the English and the Indian law, the rule is that the trust of the legal estate results to the man who pays the purchase money,[7] the English Law makes an exception when the purchase is in the name of the wife or child in whose favour it presumes an advancement. But no such presumption can arise in the

---

(1) Ganga Sahai v. Keeri, 37 A. 545 (554, 555) P.C.

(2) S. 82, Trusts Act (II of 1882); Mg. Po Kin v. Mg. Po Shein, 4 R. 518 P.C.; Arab Ali v. Mohmud Ali, 67 I.C. 444: (1922) P.C. 84; Mhd. Mahbub Ali v. Bharat, 23 C.W.N. 321: 53 I.C. 54 P.C.; Moti Lal v. Kundan Lal, 21 C. W.N. 929: 39 I.C. 964 P.C.

(3) Sayyuduchur Ali v. Ultai Fatima, 13 W.R. 1 (2) P.C.; Kerwick v. Kerwick, 48 C. 260 (263) P.C.; Mollaya v. Krishnaswami, 47 M.L.J. 622 (1925) M. 95; Raj Kunwar v. Rani Maharaj, (1925) O. 243; Dhurm Das v. Shama Soondri, 3 M.I.A. 229.

(4) Vide foot-notes (1) & (2).

(5) Sayyuduzhur Ali v. Ultai Fatima, 13 W.R. 1 (2) P.C.; Lakshmiah v. Kottan Danama, 48 M. 605 (608) P.C.; Bilas Kunwar v. Devraj, 37 A. 557 P.C.

(6) Kerwick v. Kerwick, 48 C. 260 (264, 265) P.C.

(7) Jagannath v. Abdullah, 45 C. 909 P.C.; Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal, 46 C. 566 P.C.

case of a Hindu or even a Mahomedan in this country,[1] though the English rule was held applicable to British subjects resident in India.[2]

Clause (1) of this section states the rule as one of general application; but as stated therein, it is subject to the exception which forms the subject of section 129. Apart from that section there is no presumption in favour of benami. The presumption is rather the other way, although the habit of benami is inveterate in India.[3]

1806. Evidence of Benami.—Where benami cannot be presumed, it must be proved like any other fact. "The burden is no doubt a difficult one to discharge, because in all these benami transactions, the very object of the parties is secrecy: but still the person who alleges that property conveyed to another belongs to him must prove his allegation and prove it beyond reasonable doubt."[4] Mere suspicion is insufficient,[5] and though direct evidence may at times be difficult to obtain, still the fact must be established by at least good circumstantial evidence.[6] In such cases, the questions to be considered are (i) who paid the consideration,[7] or if it is a gift, why it was made;[8] and its construction;[9] (ii) who was in possession;[10] and (iii) had the muniments of title; (iv) was the benami acted upon,[11] and if so, for how long; (v) was there any motive for a benami transaction or was the alleged benamidar so connected with the alleged principal as to render it probable that he should be selected as a benamidar.[12]

1807. Parties to a benami transaction are not estopped from showing that a transaction is benami.[13] The case is different, where it is not benami but fraudulent. The difference between these is distinct though often slurred.[14] (§ 1800.) Where a person sells property nominally to avoid his creditors, the sale, though in a sense benami, is really nominal and may

(1) Sayyuduzhur Ali v. Ultai Fatima, 13 W.R. 1 (2) P.C.; Bilas Kunwar v. Deoraj, 37 A. 557 P.C.

(2) Kerwick v. Kerwick, 48 C. 260 (264, 265) P.C.

(3) Buzloor v. Shumsoonissa, 11 M.I. A. 551; Ramabai v. Ramachandra, 7 Bom. L.R. 293; Shamlal v. Joharilal, (1909) P.R. 37: 1 I.C. 732; Uman Parshad v. Gandharp, 15 C. 20 P.C.; Akam Ali v. Mohamed, 48 M.L.J. 104 P.C.; Manik Lal v. Bijoy Singh, 25 C.W.N. 409: 62 I.C. 356 P.C.; Jasoda Lal v. Balaram, 35 C.L.J. 589; Bilas Kunwar v. Deoraj, 37 A. 557 P.C.; Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal, 46 C. 566 (574) P.C.; Moti Lal v. Kundan Lal, 21 C.W.N. 929: 39 I.C. 964 P.C.; Mahbub Ali v. Bharat, 23 C. W.N. 321: 53 I.C. 54 P.C.

(4) Mg Po Kin v. Mg Po Shein, 4 R. 518 (520) P.C.

(5) Rai Radha Kishen v. Bisheshwar, 49 I.A. 312: 67 I.C. 914: (1922) P.C. 336.

(6) Mhd. Mahbub Ali v. Bharat, 31 I.C. 586 O.A.: 23 C.W.N. 321: 53 I.C. 54 P.C.; Promoda Kumar v. Madan Mohan, 27 C.W.N. 305: 70 I.C. 555: (1923) C. 228; Abdul Latif v. Abdul Huq, 28 C.W.N. 62: (1924) C. 523; Bhuban Mohini v. Kumudbala, 28 C.W. N. 131: (1924) C. 467; Lalit Mohan v. Manoranjan, 38 C.L.J. 208: 72 I.C. 698: (1923) C. 13.

(7) Bilas Kunwar v. Deoraj, 37 A. 557 P.C.; Srimati Nrityamoni v. Lakhan, 43 C. 660 P.C.; Vaithinatha v. Vaithinatha, 29 I.C. (M.) 970; Ram Sarup v. Maya Shankar, (1918) P.R. 46: 43 I. C. 556; Habibullah v. Nayah Khanam, (1914) P.L.R. 74: 22 I.C. 536; Abid Ali v. Asgar Ali, 7 N.L.R. 159: 12 I. C. 721; Pewand Bai v. Chetan Lal, 15 S.L.R. 84: 82 I.C. 1002.

(8) Marian v. Mhd. Ibrahim, 28 C.L. J. 306: 48 I.C. 561.

(9) Sailendra Nath v. Saraj Kumar, (1935) P.C. 73.

(10) Upendra Nath v. Bhupendra Nath, 21 C.W.N. 280: 32 I.C. 267.

(11) Raghunatha v. Aravamuthu, 34 I. C. (M). 617; Arab Ali v. Mhd. Ali, 67 I.C. 444: (1922) P.C. 84.

(12) Kalisahu v. Kedarmal, 38 I.C. (P.) 561; Almadi v. Udit Narain, 17 O. C. 173: 25 I.C. 164; Jasoda Lal v. Bala ram, 35 C.L.J. 589: 69 I.C. 67: (1922) C. 488; Periya v. Aiyappa, 24 I.C. (M.) 924.

(13) Dhirendra v. Chandra, 36 C.L.J. 82: 68 I.C. 648: (1923) C. 154; Nur Mahomed v. Kessumal, 20 I.C. 523: 7 S.L.R. 11.

(14) Mina Kumari v. Bejoy Singh, 44 C. 662 P.C.

prove to be fraudulent. A Government servant who is precluded by the rules of his service from acquiring land purchased it benami. It was held that as his conduct did not amount to fraud, he was entitled to recover it from the benamidar.[1] Where the purpose of a benami transaction is fraudulent, a party seeking to avoid it must show that the purpose did not go beyond the stage of mere intention.[2] There is again a difference between a fraudulent and a nominal or a sham transaction, in that while in the one the transfer is real though the transferee holds it for the transferor's benefit, in the other case, there is no intention to make any transfer at all, but merely to create evidence of one.[3]

1808. Oral evidence is admissible to prove that a transaction was benami,[4] except in cases where the transaction was entered into with intent to defraud a third party, in which case, if the fraudulent purpose was accomplished, then the court applies the maxim in pari delico potior est conditio possidentis.[5] Another exception favours the certified auction-purchaser whose purchase cannot be shown to be benami.[6] But these are all exceptional cases, and where there is no legal impediment to the proof of benami, it may be proved by oral evidence. And where the oral evidence is inconclusive, it is necessary to rely largely upon the surrounding circumstances, the position of the parties and their relation to one another, the motives which could govern their action, and their subsequent conduct.[7]

1809. The courts even look with jealousy on benami transactions, requiring from one, claiming under such title, a strict proof,[8] though in view of its prevalence, even a slight quantity of evidence to show that it was a sham transaction will suffice for the purpose.[9] But though slight, it must be evidence and not a mere suspicion[10] though in considering the quantum of evidence the court will take into consideration the frequency of such transactions, remembering at the same time, that an apparent title is not to be legally displaced unless there is sufficient evidence to do so,[11] which may comprise of the fact that the person purchasing the property had no means of his own, and that the consideration was advanced by the beneficiary who had possession and control over the property.[12]

1810. Badges of Benami.—The first and most material criterion of beneficial ownership is the source from which the purchase-money is derived.[13] This does not mean the apparent passing of consideration—money from hand to hand—which is not sufficient to establish the bona fide charac-

(1) Dhirendra v. Chandra, 36 C.L.J. 82: 68 I.C. 648: (1923) C. 154.

(2) Ismail v. Wasudeo, 58 I.C. (N.) 285: 16 N.L.R. 129.

(3) Secretary of State v. Dadi, 36 M. L.J. 180: 50 I.C. 593; Vyrecherla v. Dasiraju, 57 I.C. (M.) 689.

(4) Shamlal v. Amarendro, 23 C. 463.

(5) Pethepermal v. Muniandy, 35 C. 551 P.C.; Goberdhan v. Rutu Roy, 23 C. 962; Kalicharan v. Rasik Lal, 23 C. 962 n.; Banka Behari v. Raj Kumar, 27 C. 231.

(6) S. 66 (1), C. P. Code, 1908; S. 317, C. P. Code, 1882.

(7) Dalip Singh v. Nowal Kunwar, 30 A. 258 P.C.; Manmohan v. Mt. Raindei, (1931) P.C. 175 (177).

(8) Azimut v. Hurdwaree, 13 M.I.A. 395; Radha Krishna v. Bisheshwar, 1 Pat. 733. P.C.; Appa v. Babaji, 46 B. 85; Brij Kishore v. Harbans, 2 Pat.L.J. 728: 62 I.C. 611.

(9) Uman Parshad v. Gandharp, 15 C. 20 P.C.; Sreeman Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, 11 M.I.A. 28 (43). To the same effect, Faez Bax v. Fakiruddin, 14 M.I.A. 234; Radha Krishna v. Bisheshwar, 3 Pat.L.J. 529 P.C.; Jasoda Lal v. Balaram, 35 C.L.J. 589.

(10) Sreeman Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, 11 M.I.A. 28 (43).

(11) Uman Parshad v. Gandharp, 15 C. 20 P.C.

(12) Hoymobutty v. Sreekishen, 14 W. R. 58.

(13) Akbar Ali v. Faiz Buksh, 15 W. R. 12.

ter of a sale. It is necessary to see that it is really the money of the alleged vendee that is actually paid to the vendor.[1]

(1) Payment of Consideration.

1811. Of the several indicia of benami, the payment of consideration is naturally the most important, since he who pays the consideration is naturally presumed to be the true owner. But this fact, though crucial, must not be regarded as conclusive as to the actual ownership of the property, since actual possession and receipts of rents of the property are matters which should not be ignored.[2] The question who paid the consideration is a question of fact: the fact that the ostensible owner had no means of his own,[3] and that the contract was made and all incidental negotiations concluded by another, would go far to show that the latter was probably the real purchaser. Even as regards the payment of consideration where it is denied, it is not sufficient to give formal evidence of the passing of consideration or of its acknowledgment, since it is necessary to shew who really paid it.[4]

(2) Possession.

1812. Next to consideration stands the question of possession. If the transfer was not benami, the transferee should be in possession of the title deeds and the property. But this again, though crucial, is not conclusive, since the motive which may have prompted the benami might suffice to keep the beneficiary in the background; and since secrecy is of the essence of such transactions, undue emphasis must not be laid upon the benamidar's possession, the mutation of names in his favour or the presence of other ostensible indicia or admissions of ownership. In cases of benami, the possession of the benamidar, after the motive which induced the benami has ceased, is vital to the issue. As between the vendor and the vendee, where the latter produces the deed and the former proves his possession, the burden is still on the vendor to show that he had only executed the sale deed benami, and that he had not received the consideration, though he acknowledged it in his sale deed.[5]

(3) Relationship.

1813. As benami implies repose of confidence between the benamidar and the beneficiary, the existence of relationship between the two is a circumstance which has a material bearing on the case. Consequently, very little evidence suffices to show that a purchase made in the name of the wife[6] is benami the daughter[7] or other near relations.[8] So the Privy Council said: "There can be no doubt now that a purchase in India, by a native of India, of property in India in the name of his wife, unexplained by other proved or admitted facts, is to be regarded as a benami transaction, by which the beneficial interest in the property is in the husband, although the ostensible title is in the wife."[9] In this case, the wife's title was sought to be defended on the ground that the purchase was made in pursuance of an ante-nuptial agreement, but while their

(1) Luchmee Kooar v. Fattehsingh, 24 W.R. 400.
(2) Ram Narain v. Mhd. Hadi, 26 C. 227 P.C.
(3) Hoymobutty v. Sreekishen, 14 W. R. 58.
(4) Akbar Ali v. Faiz Buksh, 15 W. R. 12; Luchmee Kuar v. Fatteh Singh, 24 W.R. 400.
(5) Durga Charan v. Khorda & Co., 29 I.C. (C.) 696.
(6) Lakshmiah v. Kothandarama, 48 M. 605 P.C.
(7) Kadeerun v. Lallun, 14 W.R. 366.
(8) Roop Dharee v. Narain, 1 W.R. 217.
(9) Lakshmiah v. Kothandarama, 48 M. 605 (608) P.C.

Lordships did not rule out such a plea, they held that it would be unwise of a Judge to act in a disputed Indian case upon oral evidence, unless there was contemporaneous written evidence to corroborate the oral evidence.[1]

1814. Presumption in Benami.—The purchaser of property does not usually cancel his purchase unless he has some motive for it. When fraud enters into his calculation, the transaction becomes void or voidable in accordance with the provisions of S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. Apart from fraud, the transferee may remain incognito for reasons of his own, or he may make a benami purchase, because he wishes to convey to the transferee some interest therein; but in either case, the mere fact of a purchase in the name of another would not, in the case of a Hindu (or for that matter, a Mahomedan), suffice to convey any interest in favour of the transferee, who must hold the property in trust for the beneficiary.[2] The case is, however, different where the benamidar and the beneficiary are British residents in India, for in their case the English rule applies;[3] that rule being that such purchase when made in the name of the wife or child is treated as an advancement, or the advance delivery of their inheritance before it becomes one. This is the presumption, but a rebuttable one. In the case of Hindus, the purchase by a Hindu in the name of his wife or child, may lead to the contrary presumption if the purchaser is a member of a coparcenary; but in other cases, though there is no presumption in the nature of an advancement, still it is a question of intention[4] to be decided with reference to the circumstances of each case. It may be that the purchase was made to benefit the transferee in whose name it was made. But where the intention is to confer a present benefit it must be accompanied by the other usual incidents of ownership, where, however, the intention is to confer a future benefit, such intention must be proved, but cannot be presumed.

Clause (2).

[See in this connection Ss. 129, 336.]

1815. Though ordinarily speaking, there is nothing illegal in a benami purchase, where it is a purchase of trust property by a trustee the purchase is void. It is so provided in the Trusts Act[5] and was so held in a case in which the purchaser, a shebait of a private endowment, created by one of his ancestors, had, in execution sale of a portion of debutter property, purnhased it benami in the name of his son, whereupon the High Court held the sale to be void, and its decision was affirmed by the Privy Council who said: "A trustee for sale cannot purchase, he cannot purchase because the same person cannot be both vendor and purchaser, and he who acts for another cannot also act for himself. But even if he be not a trustee for sale, if in any capacity he is trustee for the estate, although his incapacity to buy is not absolute and is subject to different limitations, it is equally well established. A trustee may indeed acquire from beneficiaries, who are sui juris, an estate in which they are interested, but he can only do this if he has made the fullest disclosure to Benami Purchase When Void.

(1) Lakshmiah v. Kothandarama, 48 M. 613.

(2) Sayyuduzhur Ali v. Ultai Fatima, 13 W.R. 1 (2) P.C.; Bilas Kunwar v. Deoraj, 37 A. 557 P.C.; Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal, 46 C. 566 P.C.; Kerwick v. Kerwick, 48 C. 260 (263) P.C.

(3) Kerwick v. Kerwick, 48 C. 260 (263) P.C.

(4) Ismail v. Hafiz, 33 C. 773 P.C.; Chandernath v. Ramjoy, 15 W.R. 7 P.C.

(5) S. 52, Trusts Act (II of 1882).

them of all the relevant and material facts within his knowledge affecting or that might affect the value and condition of the estate and that parties are at arm's length, the cestui que trust knowing that he is dealing with the trustee. Otherwise, the purchase is bad, and it is bad because any person who occupies a fiduciary relationship, may be able by virtue of his position to acquire information with regard to the trust estate which he is not permitted to use for his own benefit."[1]

Power defined.

222. (1) "Power" is a right which a person acquires over another, or over things not his own.

(2) The person who confers the power may be called the donor of the power, and the person upon whom it is conferred the donee of the power.

(3) The exercise of power is discretionary with the donee.

1816. Analogous Law.—The term "power" is a technical term and is distinct from the dominion which a man has over his own property[2] It is used to denote the use of delegated authority of which a power of attorney is an example.

Hindu Law recognizes powers of which the power of adoption conferred by the husband upon his wife, the power of appointment, the power to appoint an heir[3] or an executor[4] are examples. But the exercise of power by a Hindu is necessarily subject to and circumscribed by the requirements of his personal law, and while the English Law on powers furnishes analogies, it is not to be applied generally to Hindu wills.[5]

1817. Creation and Exercise of Powers.—Under English Law, powers relate to property, but under Hindu Law, they may relate both to persons and property. This is due to the parental authority which still survives the patria potestas. The power of adoption has already been the subject of a previous discussion (S. 38). It is stated there that the father possessed the power to authorize his widow to make an adoption.[6] He is also conceded the power of appointing a guardian of his minor children (S. 81). He is equally entitled to confer upon a person the power of appointing an heir. Such a case arose upon the following facts: A testator had devised his immovable property upon trust for the income to be appropriated to the maintenance of his widow and of his daughter Mamu and the children that might be born of her, the property to be divided among the heirs of such children. If there should not be any children born of the daughter, the property under the will should devolve upon them "to whom she might direct it to be delivered by making her will." The daughter having had no children and questions having arisen between the daughter and the widow as to the administration of the estate according to the will, it was held that there was no absolute gift to the daughter, and that the persons to whom the property was given, though to be designated by her, did not take the gift from her, but from the testator. In so holding

(1) Peary Mohan Mukerjee v. Monohar, 26 C.W.N. 133: 62 I.C. 76 P.C., following Nugent v. Nugent, (1907) 2 Ch. 292 O.A.: (1908) 1 Ch. 546 (disqualification of a Receiver to purchase).

(2) Armstrong, (In re), 17 Q.B.D. 521; Commissioner of Stamps v. Stephen, (1904) A.C. 137; Goatley v. Jones, (1909) 1 Ch. 557.

(3) Brij Lal v. Sura, 34 A. 405 P.C.

(4) Lallubhai v. Mankuverbai, 2 B. 338 (406); Dossee v. Taruchurn, Bourke (Pt. VII) 50.

(5) Motivahu v. Mamubai, 21 B. 709 (722) P.C.; for the English law on "Powers," see Hindu Code, (3rd Ed.) §§ 2143-2146, pp. 1064-1065.

(6) Indar v. Jaipal, 15 C. 725 P.C.

the Privy Council said: "The remaining question is whether his substituting Mamu, and giving her power to designate the person by her will, is contrary to any principle of Hindu Law. There is no analogy to it in the law of adoption. A man may, by will, authorize his widow to adopt a son to him, to do what he had power to do himself, and although there is a strong religious obligation, their Lordships think that the law as to adoption shows that such a power as that now in question is not contrary to any principle of Hindu Law. Further, they think that the reasons which have led to a testamentary power becoming part of the Hindu Law are applicable to this power, and that it is their duty to hold it to be valid. But whilst saying this, they think they ought also to say that, in their opinion, the English Law of powers is not fit to be applied generally to Hindu wills."[1] Similar construction was placed by the same high tribunal on a will in which the testator had bequeathed his estate to his wife, and on her death to her daughter-in-law, and thereafter "she shall have power to nominate any one whom she may think fit as 'heir' so that the name of the family may continue as formerly with honour."[2]

1818. It was at one time held that in order to be operative the donee of the power must have been in existence at the death of the testator.[3] But since the passing of the Hindu Disposition of Property Act, this is by no means now necessary, and the Hindu Law of appointment and power is now subject only to the provisions of that Act and Ss. 13, 14 and 20 of the Transfer of Property Act.

1819. In one case, the testator made a bequest to such person "and in such manner as his brother Jamnadas should by deed or deeds, writing or writings appoint, with or without power of revocation or new appointment." It was held that there was no principle of Hindu Law which forbade such a bequest being construed and given effect to according to its plain and literal terms; always, however, subject to the same restrictions as the Hindu testamentary law imposes on the testator himself, viz., that the appointment should be made so that the appointee might be ascertained when the event arose on which he was to take. In this case, the testator had by his will, after appointing his brother J to be his executor, bequeathed all his estate to J (i) upon trust to pay his debts and the residue in trust for the testator's wife and the wife of the executor J during the life of both, or the survivor of them for their or her sole use; (ii) and from and after the decease of the survivor of them, in trust for the male issue of J if any there were; and (iii) in default of such male issue, in trust for any person or persons in any shares or share, and in such manner as his brother J should, by any deed or deeds, or writing or writings, appoint, with or without power of revocation or new appointment. The court upheld the last as a valid power of appointment which was not opposed to any principle of Hindu Law.[4]

---

(1) Motivahu v. Mamubai, 21 B. 708 (722) P.C.

(2) Brijlal v. Suraj, 34 A. 405 (411) P.C.

(3) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 P.C.; Motivahu v. Mamubai, 21 B. 709 P.C.; Yethirajulu v. Mukunthu, 28 M. 363 (375); Upender v. Hem Chundra, 25 C. 405 P.C.; Narayan v. Lal Ramesh, 11 O.C. 271.

(4) Javerbai v. Kabli Bai, 16 B. 493 (499, 500), reversing O.A. 15 B. 326; Girdharji v. Madhowdas, 17 B. 600 (617).

1320. The conferral of power must of course be legal. For instance, the husband possesses the power to authorize only his wife to make an adoption. If, therefore, he authorizes his widow who was also the executrix of his will conjointly with two other executors, the power is void.[1]

But there is nothing illegal in a testator conferring two or more separate powers upon separate individuals. So where the testator empowered his two wives to make patni settlement of his immovable property and empowered three other persons to arrange for the performance of the family rites and ceremonies and the debts and dues, the court upheld them as in no way clashing with one another.[2] Where a testator leaves a kani out of a certain land to a certain person, the whole land measuring more, the legatee has the right of selection and is entitled to one kani out of a specified portion of the estate.[3]

---

(1) Amrito Lall v. Surnemoni, 25 C. 662, affirmed O.A. 27 C. 996 (1003) P. C.

(2) Promode v. Krishna, 1 C.L.J. 301.

(3) Narayanasami v. Periathambi, 13 M. 460.

CHAPTER XVII.

ALIENATIONS, GRANTS AND GIFTS.

1821. Topical Introduction.—This chapter deal with the Hindu notion of property, alienations and grants, other than gifts and wills, now governed by the statute law, which lays down rules in some respects more liberal than the Hindu law. When the Succession Act, 1865 was enacted, it was generally felt that its narrow crystallized provisions should not extend to Hindus, whose law contained no such restrictions as that Act was going to embody. But to the surprise of the Hindus, several years later, the Tagore case was decided in which the Lords of the Privy Council held that Hindu law contained many rules far narrower than the statute law. The full effect of their Lordships' decision was not realized even in 1882, when the Transfer of Property Act was enacted, with the result that Hindu law was exempted from its chapters, II and VII. But when the decision in the Tagore case was reaffirmed by their Lordships in subsequent pronouncements, public opinion became aroused to the necessity of Legislative amendment, resulting in the enactment of the three Acts[1] which later became absorbed in the more comprehensive amendments of 1929.

1822. A grant is a generic term and includes the creation of any interest in property; the interest so created may amount to a mere personal right short of an interest in property. A license is such a grant, though a license creates no right in rem but merely legalizes another to do a thing which, but for the license, would be wrongful. But a license may be coupled with a transfer of a right in rem. A gift is a transfer of property and creates a right in rem, which is prima facie both transferable and heritable. The difference between the two is one of degree. A maintenance grant affords an apt illustration of a right which the grantee enjoys in the property, which, when coupled with a transfer of property, develops into a gift investing the donee with a title, the attributes of which are well defined and enumerated in Ss. 122-129 of the Transfer of Property Act, which now extend to Hindu gifts.

1823. In popular parlance, the two are sometimes spoken of as if they were synonymous; but in law, a grant is a wider and perhaps a looser term, including as it does the divesting of any right, howsoever small, in favour of another. Law has not yet formulated any rules for the creation and control of grants; but whatever is given it treats as a grant, and whenever it rises to the level of an interest, which it treats as property, it fastens on to it the rights which are its inalienable attributes. Even in cases in which it falls short of it, it has prescribed certain rules to define its enjoyment, as in the case of an easement, which arises out of an express or assumed grant and is a right short of property.

1824. Leaving out of account such grants, also those which fall into the class of gifts, grants may be both testamentary or non-testamentary, and may be made to take effect at any time, subject to the restrictions which Hindu Law imposes upon their creation, continuance or enjoyment. Four well-known classes of grants recognized by it are those known as (1) Religious, (2) service, (3) charitable, and (4) personal grants. The Crown grants, which account for a large number of estates, are subject to the general law and are now, as regards their extent, subject to the provisions of the Crown Grants Act. Other grants are also now the subject of several enactments, and all these must be left out of account.

(1) Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act, 1914; Hindu Disposition of Property Act, 1916; Hindu Transfers and Bequests (City of Madras) Act, 1921. Kuppusami v. Jayalakshmi, 58 M. 15.

In point of rights, to which grants may give rise, they vary according to their terms, nature and purpose, and while, on the one hand, they may at times create absolute rights, they may, on the other, be little distinguishable from mere licenses.

The various modes in which they are created, the various rights to which they give rise, and the incidents which become attached to them are matters which will be found discussed under the appropriate chapters elsewhere in this Code. In this chapter it is proposed merely to set out the leading provisions of law applicable to grants and gifts in which Hindu Law is still paramount.

1825. By the enactment of two amending Acts in 1929[1] the law of gifts and wills has been removed from the domain of Hindu personal law to that of the statute law, as enacted in the Transfer of Property Act and the selected sections of the Succession Act, dealing with the operation and construction of a will executed by a Hindu anywhere in British India. Before the Acts of 1929, the general principles enunciated in Chapter II (Ss. 5-53-A) of the Transfer of Property Act did not apply if they purported to contravene any rule of Hindu law to the contrary. Similarly, all Hindu gifts were exempted from the provisions of the chapter relating to gifts, except section 123 which provided for its registration. Under the amending Act, both the general principles as well as the specific sections relating to gifts will supersede the rules of Hindu law on the subject.

In extending these provisions to Hindus, it was stated that they were so extended because they were in consonance with Hindu law. That this is an optimistic statement would be apparent from the facts set out in the sequel in which the two laws have been compared and contrasted, but the Hindu law on these subjects is now decadent and is limited only to gifts and wills that they may have still to be construed in its light.

In the two ensuing chapters an attempt is made to set out the two laws to enable the appropriate one to be applied.

Definition of property. 223. (1) "Property" is anything which may be the subject of ownership.

(2) It may be movable or immovable.

1826. Analogous Law.—The general notion of property will be found discussed in the author's work on the Law of Transfer.[2] It is proposed here to set out its meaning under Hindu Law, which, however, contains no disquisition on the meaning of the term. "Property" is a creature of law. It includes only those things which law recognizes as capable of ownership. As such, the term is necessarily elastic, comprising as it does such objects as law from time to time throws into that category.

(1) Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, XX of 1929; Succession (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1929.

(2) 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), §§ 66-80.

Besides the ordinary objects and things which are classed as property by the general law, Hindu Law treats the following as property.

1827. Idols.—An idol is treated by Hindu Law as a juridical person and property. As property, idols may be the subject of partition. So, where the plaintiff and defendant were jointly entitled by rotation to the profits from an idol in the defendant's temple, and the defendant having obstructed the plaintiff's use and worship of the idol in his temple, the plaintiff was declared entitled to remove the idol to her own house during the period that she was entitled to the profits from it.[1] So in another case, it was laid down that in the eye of the law, idols are property, and the right to deal with such property must, in the event of disputes arising, be determined by a Civil Court.[2] The idol is again a juridical person, in perpetual minority and capable of holding property through its manager.[3] As such, the individuality of one idol cannot, it is said, be validly transferred to its substitute.[4] Nor is it clothed with any existence till it is consecrated, and has so become spiritualized or rather individualized.[5] But it is submitted, and is now held, that neither of these conditions in essential, since an idol is a person in an ideal sense and its personality is not destroyed by the substitution of one image for another. In fact, the wooden image of the god Juggunnath has to be so renewed from time to time. A permanent image does not, therefore, seem to be indispensable for dedication to a deity of which the image is merely the visible expression.[6] Such are other ideal persons such as muths[7] and colleges, which lead the dual existence of being both persons and properties, since they are both owners and the things owned.

The subject will have to be further examined in the sequel in connection with the law relating to Religious Endowments (Ch. XXII.)

1828. Sub-division of Property.—Though the General Clauses Act[8] as well as the Transfer of Property Act[9] contain definitions of "immovable property", they do not dispense with a reference to Hindu Law. The definition of that term in the Transfer of Property Act is negative and incomplete[10] and that adopted in the General Clauses Act describes it as including "land, benefits to arise out of land and things attached to the earth, or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth." This definition only provides a working definition of that term as used in the Imperial Act.[11] Even as such, it does not define what is a "benefit to arise out of land," which may have to be considered with reference to Hindu Law. This is all the more necessary as Hindu Law prescribes special rules for the alienation of immovable property by the manager, the Hindu widow, and other qualified owners of family property.

---

(1) Dwarkanath v. Jannobee, 4 W.R. 79.

(2) Subbaraya v. Chellappa, 4 M. 315 (316); Damodar Das v. Uttam Ram, 17 B. 271.

(3) Narayan v. Roodur Narain, 2 Hay 490; Bippro v. Kenae Dayee, 3 W.R. 165: 5 W.R. 82; Bhuggabutty v. Goroo Prosonno, 25 C. 112; Mandhar v. Lakshmi Ram, 12 B. 247.

(4) Doorga Pershad v. Sheo Prasad, 7 C.L.R. 278.

(5) Upendra v. Hem Chunder, 25 C. 405; Rajomoyee v. Troylukho, 29 C. 260 (274).

(6) Asita v. Nirode, 20 C.W.N. 901: 35 I.C. 127.

(7) Jagadindra v. Hemanta, 32 C. 129 P.C.

(8) Act X of 1897, S. 3 (25).

(9) Act IV of 1882.

(10) S. 3; see 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), §§ 66-80.

(11) General Clauses Act (X of 1897), S. 3.

1829. Property may be variously sub-divided according to the standpoint from which it is viewed. Hindu Law divides it into land and goods, or immovable and movable property. So far Hindu Law does not differ from the general law. It, however, regards certain incorporeal rights as immovable property. The leading text on the subject is as follows:—

Yadnyavalkya.—"Let a king, having given land or assigned a corrody, cause his gifts to be written for the information of good princes who will succeed him."[1]

To this Jagannath adds the following explanatory note: "In the Dipkalika a corrody is thus explained: The gift of a future thing by a previous agreement in this form: 'I will give a hundred suvarnas[2] every month of Kartik or out of this mine or this village, I will annually give a hundred suvarnas, or I will monthly give one suvarna.'"[3]

1830. Nibandh.—What is then a nibandh[4] translated as corrody?[5] It is thus explained in the Ratnakar: "That which is fixed or made fast (nibadhayate) is a nibandh (or corrody), fixed pension receivable out of mines or the like."

The co-relation of nibandh with land shows that the two were regarded as closely allied. The question then arises what they comprise and whether they are similar in their nature and quality. There can be no doubt that there are several incorporeal rights which Hindu Law classes as immovable property. Such is a hereditary office which it treats as immovable property,[6] unless it is an office which carries no emoluments at all.[7] So is also a right to officiate as a priest at funeral ceremonies,[8] a right to worship an idol[9] and such is a nibandh or corrody,[10] which is an allowance, whether secured on land or not.[11] For the purpose of limitation, since the Limitation Act does not define immovable property, the character of such allowances must be judged by a reference to Hindu Law.[12]

1831. This view is supported by a decision of the Privy Council in which the same view was taken of a Toda Giras hak, which is a customary due owing its origin to the annual payment exacted by the Girasias from the village communities in certain territories in the West of India by vio-

---

(1) 2 Dig. pp. 162, 163. "Corrody—the gift of a thing assigned on a fund."—Colebrooke's note. The Sanskrit word is Nibandh, cited in Mayukh, II-I-6 (Mandlik), 19.

(2) "Gold pieces."

(3) 2 Dig., p. 163. To the same effect, Mayukh, II-I-6.

(4) The word Nibandh originally signified any piece of composition. It was then applied to a piece of composition issuing from a king. Thence by the transference of idea the word came to signify any hereditary office conveyed by a royal charter.

(5) "Corrody" is a word of mediæval origin; properly signifying a peculiar right, viz., the grant, by the royal or other founder of an abbey, of certain allowances out of the revenues of the abbey in favour of a dependent or servant; Fatesangji v. Kalyanrayaji, 10 B.H.C.R. 281 (288, 289) P.C.

(6) Sinde v. Sinde, 4 B.H.C.R. 51; Balvantrav v. Purshotam, 9 B.H.C.R. 99, approved in Futtehsangji v. Desai, 13 P.L.R. 254 (263, 264) P.C.; Beema v. Jamasjee, 2 M.I.A. 13.

(7) Manohar v. Bhupendra Nath, 60 C. 452 (479) F.B.

(8) Futtehsangi v. Desai, 13 B.L.R. 254 P.C.; Krishnabhat v. Kapalibhat, 6 B.H.C.R. 137; Balvantrav v. Purushotam, 9 B.H.C.R. 99; Collector v. Krishnanath, 5 B. 322; Appana v. Nagid, 6 B. 542; Raghoo v. Kassy, 10 C. 73; Sukh Lal v. Bishambhar, 39 A. 196.

(9) Eshan v. Manmohim, 4 C. 683, followed in Jatikar v. Mukunda, 39 C. 227 (230).

(10) Government v. Kahanrai, 14 M.I.A. 551; Government v. Gosvami, 9 B.H.C.R. 222 (226); Krishnaji v. Gajanan, 33 B. 373.

(11) Kristodhone v. Nandarani, 35 C. 889 (894).

(12) S. 1 (12), Act XIV of 1859. Collector v. Hari, 6 B. 546 (559) F.B., overruling O.A. Collector v. Krishna Nath, 5 B. 322 (in which the allowance was erroneously, not treated as immovable, because it was not charged on land).

lence and wrong, in the nature of blackmail, but which, on the assumption of Government by the British, acquired by long usage a quasi-legal character of hak could not be considered with reference to Hindu Law. were made to Girasias who might be Mahomedans, the question of the character of hak could not be considered with reference to Hindu Law. They then added: "Whatever may have been the origin of the hak, it must be assumed to be now a right to receive an annual payment which has a legal foundation and of which the enjoyment is hereditary; and that the liability to make the payment is not personal to the respondent but one which attaches to the Inamdar virtute tenure. This being so, their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the interest of the hakdar does possess the qualities both of immobility and of indefinite duration in a degree which, if the question depended on English Law, would entitle it to the character of a freehold interest in or issuing out of a real property,[1] that upon the general principles of construction applicable to an Indian statute, it must be held to be an interest in immovable property within the meaning of Act XIV of 1859."[2]

This case is then an authority for the proposition that a fixed perpetual payment, assured by the ruling power, must be regarded as immovable property even though it is not charged on land. Such is the vritti or office of a hereditary priest.[3] As compared to this, varshasans[4] are unquestionably immovable property since they are annuities charged on land.[5]

Such is also a malikana[6] and a nankar allowance receivable out of the profits of a particular village,[7] and such is the right to manage saranjam.[8]

But the emolument of an office, due by custom, is not immovable property,[9] nor is a claim for maintenance unless it is charged on land.[10]

Alienation defined.

224. The term "alienation" in this chapter includes any disposal by a person of any right in the property, in whatever form, by any act or omission, voluntary or involuntary, intended to take effect in praesenti or in futuro.

Illustrations.

(a) The mortgage by a person of his co-parcenary right is an alienation.
(b) Its sale in execution of a decree is an alienation.
(c) Its disposal by will is an alienation.
(d) The sale by the reversioner of his reversionary right is an alienation.

Alienation subject to Hindu Law.

225. (1) The execution and construction of all transfers, as defined in section 5 of the Transfer of Property Act, and of all wills and codicils as defined in S. 2 (h) and S. 2 (b) of the Succession Act, executed on and after the coming into force of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929[11] and the Succession (Amendment) Act, 1929,[12] shall be subject to the provisions of the former Act; and those

(1) See 1 Cruse's Digest, p. 47, plac. 10.
(2) Fatesangji v. Kalianrayaji, 10 B. H.C.R. 281 (291) P.C.
(3) Girja Shankar v. Murlidhar, 22 Bom.L.R. 1202.
(4) "Annual allowances."
(5) Keshav v. Vinayak, 22 B. 22.
(6) Heeranund v. Ozeerun, 9 W.R. 102; Bhoalee Singh v. Neemoo, 12 W.R. 498; Gobind v. Ramchunder, 19 W.R. 94.
(7) Deputy Commissioner v. Jagiwan, 33 I.C. (O.) 461.
(8) Narayan v. Vasudeo, 15 B. 247.
(9) Rathna v. Tiruvenkata, 22 M. 351; Raoji v. Bala, 15 B. 135; dissenting from contra in Chhagan Lal v. Bapubhai, 5 B. 68.
(10) Beer Chunder v. Raj Coomar, 9 C. 535 (555).
(11) Act XX of 1929.
(12) Act XVIII of 1929.

of S. 57 of the latter Act, including such sections of Schedule 3 thereof as are referred to therein.

(2) All other alienations including grants not covered by the provisions of the two aforementioned Acts shall continue to be subject to Hindu Law.

1832. Analogous Law.—This section is adapted from S. 6 of the Transfer of Property Act which supersedes any rule of Hindu Law to the contrary. But as there is no rule of Hindu Law to the contrary, it follows that that section always applied to Hindus. This rule renders the properties therein specified as generally untransferable. It implies that other property is transferable unless it is made untransferable by some other law.

Grant defined.

226. (1) "Grant" is the passing of an interest in one's property to another.

(2) The person who creates such interest may be called the grantor, and the person in whose favour the interest is created, the grantee.

(3) A grant includes a gift; but a grant may not amount to the transfer of an interest in property.

1833. Analogous Law.—The word "grant" is not a term of art, and possesses no legal significance. It is a general term and implies what its etymology connotes—the mere conferral of a right by one upon another. As such, the term deserves no further notice. But it is just as well that its limitations should be borne in mind. The incidents of a grant must depend upon other factors: the rights possessed by the grantor, the nature of the right created by the grant, its terms, and its motive and purpose.

1834. Some grants, such as inam and saranjam, (which is the same as inam)[1] are presumably grants of a personal nature, being prima facie merely grants of revenue and not of the soil, and as such, resumable at pleasure. As such, they are impartible and have been dealt with in the chapter dealing with impartible estates (Chapter XVII). Grants from the Indian sovereigns, and those made by the British Government are the subject of general law and possess no special incidents under Hindu Law. Other grants, such as for maintenance, have already been the subject of a separate notice. (§ 952.)

Hindu Gift and Devise Subject to Hindu Law.

227. (1) Apart from a "gift" as defined in section 122 of the Transfer of Property Act, a Hindu may make a gift or a devise of his property, movable or immovable, to a person, real or fictitious, directly or indirectly, through the medium of a trust, and where such transfer is not covered by any provisions of the statute law, it would be still subject to Hindu Law.

(2) As such, all gifts and devises, when governed by any express provision of the statute law, will be subject to that law, provided that where they do not infringe on that law, their incidents remain subject to Hindu Law.

(3) Gifts and devises affecting the personal law of the parties will, subject to that limit, be subject to that law.

(4) As such, all gifts and devises made for a religious or charitable purpose are subject to Hindu Law and, as such, subject to the rules stated in chapter XXI.[2]

(1) Guru Rao v. Secretary of State, 41 B. 408.

(2) Vidya Varuthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831 P.C.; Manohar v. Bhupendra Nath, 60 C. 452 (502, 503) F.B.

(5) As such, the surrender or relinquishment by a female or other limited owner of an estate in favour of her next reversioner, male or female, though it may amount to a gift as defined in section 122 of the Transfer of Property Act, is still subject to Hindu Law.

Illustrations.

(a) To clause (1).—A gift as defined in section 122 of the Transfer of Property Act can only be made to a living person called the donee. But a gift under Hindu law may be made to an idol, in which case, its acceptance by the idol is not possible, nor indeed, is it necessary. Such gift may take any form from a mere sankalpa or renunciation to formal dedication with or without conditions as to the mode of its administration and management. When it is unaccompanied by any conditions, its management would follow the usage. Otherwise the conditions would have to be observed if they do not contravene the statute law.

(b) To clause (2).—A childless Hindu devises his separate estate to his wife B. If the devise is effective B would take an absolute estate; otherwise she would inherit only a widow's limited estate.

(c) To clause (3).—A, a Hindu dies leaving him surviving his widow and a daughter, the widow takes the estate and makes it over to her daughter. The daughter dies. Her estate will revert to the donor if she be alive, failing which it devolve on A's heirs unaffected by the gift.[1]

1835. Statutory Abrogation of Hindu Law.—Under sections 13 and 20 of the Transfer of Property Act and section 113 of the Succession Act which applies to Hindus, a gift or bequest to a person not in existence at the time of the gift or death of the testator, as the case may be, is perfectly legal; but under Hindu law, the rule is that there can be no valid gift or devise unless the donee or devisee was in existence at the time of the gift or the death of the testator when the devise takes effect.[2] As such, a Hindu could not make marriage settlements and provide for his descendants, not in existence at the time of his death. A single instance will show the iniquity of this law. A testator makes a bequest to his son and grandsons. He dies. The son has only one son alive at the time. Several sons are born to him thereafter. The grandson, alive at the time of the testator's death, takes to the exclusion of the other grandsons, though the testator intended that all of them should participate in his bounty. This inequity was first set right in Madras by a local act[3] and elsewhere by the Hindu Disposition of Property Act[4] incorporated in the general amending Acts of 1929,[5] the result of which is to abrogate this narrow rule in favour of more literal provisions of the three sections above cited.

Again, Hindu law demanded that the corpus and income must be vested in the same person, with the result that it did not permit of accumulations, and if at all, its term was limited to one year.[6] But the courts had long broken through this rule and permitted accumulations, subject to the English equitable principles, embodied in sections 17 and 117 of the Transfer of Property Act and the Succession Act respectively, which permit accumulations for a period of 18 years or longer as therein provided from the date of the transfer or death of the testator, as the case may be.

---

(1) Rup Ram v. Revati, 32 A. 582.

(2) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (397, 400) P.C.; Padmanand v. Hayes, 28 C. 720 (732) P.C.

(3) Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act, 1914; Hindu Transfers and Bequests (City of Madras) Act, 1921.

(4) Act XV of 1916.

(5) Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act (XX of 1929) and Succession (Amendment) Act (XVIII of 1929).

(6) Amrito Lall v. Surnomoni, 25 C. 662; see Ss. 104, 107, Succession Act (Act XXXI of 1925) amended by Act XXI of 1929. Under the unamended Act accumulations were permitted for only one year after the testator's death.

Connected with the law of accumulations is the law against perpetuity, on which both the Acts lay down specific rules[1] that supersede any rule that may have been deduced from Hindu law. That law recognized no clear distinction between vested and contingent interests[2] defined in sections 20 and 21 of the Transfer of Property Act and sections 119-121 of the Succession Act.

1836. Other rules of Hindu Law that had long become established are those which relate to the construction of gifts and bequests. Such is for example, the rule of Hindu law that since women usually take only a limited estate, a gift or devise to a female would be so construed unless there is anything to shew to the contrary.[3] But by the extension of the general provisions of the two Acts, which contain sections 8 and 95 respectively, to the gifts and bequests of Hindus, the presumption is now not limited by the sex of the donee or devisee who would take the quantum of such interest as the transferor or the devisor can pass, unless he has limited it.[4] Such interpretation had in fact preceded its legislative recognition. In other respects either Hindu law had no rule of its own, or the rules treated as part of that law were drawn from the English cases, which the courts applied as embodying the rules of equity, and therefore, of universal application. For example, in a case decided in 1883, the testator, an Oudh Taluqdar had executed an unregistered will bequeathing his estate to his junior wife, and on her death to his son C by her. His eldest son sued to eject both on the ground that the will, being unregistered, failed to vest the estate in B under the provisions of section 13 of the Oudh Estates Act[5] and that intermediate estate failing, the remainder also failed, but the Privy Council held that the remainder accelerated by the failure of the intermediate estate[6] and it is so provided in section 27 of the Transfer of Property Act and sections 129 and 130 of the Succession Act.

Grant how made.

228. (1) A grant may be made in any of the modes and to the extent allowed by law;

(2) Whenever a grant amounts to a gift, as hereinbefore defined, it can only be made by a registered instrument, the execution of which must be attested by two or more witnesses.

(3) A grant when it is not coupled with a transfer of property, and is not subject to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, may be made without writing.

Clause (1).

1837. Grant Allowed by Law.—If law permits a grant, it is not rendered invalid by any provision of Hindu Law inconsistent therewith. As an illustration, the Hindu Disposition of Property Act[7] permits a grant to an unborn person

(1) S. 18, Transfer of Property Act; S. 114 Succession Act; see author's Law of Transfer, (6th Ed.), pp. 271, 272.

(2) Bipradas v. Sadhan Chandra, (1927) 56 C. 790 (construction of a gift to a daughter in 1921).

(3) See these cases collected in 1 Law of Transfer, (6th Ed.), 399 f.n. (16), pp. 271, 272.

(4) Bipradas v. Sadhan Chandra, (1927) 56 C. 790 (construction of a gift to a daughter in 1927); Shalig Ram v. Charanjit Lal, 11 L. 645 P.C.; Jagmohan v. Sri Nath, (1930) P.C. 253; Pramath Nath v. Suprakash, (1931) 58 C. 77 (gift to wife in 1921); Provabati v. Sarojini, (1933) C. 72; Krishnaswami v. Ramachandra Rao, (1934) M. 646 (gift to a wife).

(5) I of 1869.

(6) Ajudhia v. Rajhman, 10 C. 482 (488) P.C.; following Turner, L.J. in Laison v. Lainson, 18 Beav. 1.

(7) Act XV of 1916.

subject to the restrictions therein specified, which Hindu Law did not permit. The Act abrogates Hindu Law to that extent.

Clause (2).

1838. Gift Allowed by Law.—Similarly, a gift now can only be made in accordance with the provisions of S. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, though, apart from that Act, a gift could be completed by mere delivery of the property gifted. The provisions of the statute law have abrogated Hindu Law to that extent.

But both a grant and a gift, not falling under the terms of S. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, may still be made without a registered instrument. It has accordingly been held that a dedication of property may be so made.[1]

Clause (3).

1839. Grants and Gifts Distinguished.—The term "grant" is generally used with reference to an estate, office or privilege, or a right granted by the sovereign, a corporation or a public body or officer. It is distinguishable from a sale, lease or gift in that it need not possess any of their incidents. Take, for example, the grant of a jagir, an inam or an annuity, which are all comparable to a gift, but easily distinguishable from it in that the jagir is presumably a personal grant resumable on the death of the grantee, and may, for its continuance, depend upon its terms. It may be supported by past or future consideration, and may be otherwise conditional upon the grantee's rendering certain services, whereas a gift implies the absence of any consideration, and from the moment of its completion, vests the donee with ownership. The distinction between a gift and a grant would be apparent if we recall the essential ingredients of a gift as defined in S. 122 of the Transfer of Property Act. A gift is there defined to be the transfer of a certain existing movable or immovable property made voluntarily and without consideration, whereas a grant may or may not amount to a transfer of property, and when it does amount to a transfer of property, it need not be the transfer of certain existing property, nor need it be made without consideration. A gift, from the moment of its completion, devests the donor of all control over the subject matter of the gift, whereas the grantor may, and often does, retain some control over the subject-matter of his grant. There can be no gift of future property,[2] which may still be the subject of a grant. At the same time, the term "grant," being a generic term, embraces within its comprehension all transfers, whether by sale, exchange, gift or devise. Referring to this word, Sheppard's Touchstone observes: "This word is taken largely where anything is granted or passed from one to another. And in this sense, it doth comprehend feoffments, bargains and sales, gifts, leases, charges, and the like, for he that doth give or sell, doth grant also. And thus it is sometimes in writing or by deed, and sometimes it is by word without writing."[3] Of grants, then it may be said that when they fall within the scope of the Transfer of Property Act, they must be made in the manner therein provided; but grants other than those comprised in the term "transfer," as defined in the Transfer of Property Act, may be made by parol. So, while a license, coupled with the transfer of property, can be made only as required by the Transfer of Property Act, a license

(1) Pallaya v. Ramavadhanulu, 13 M. L.J. 364; Ramalingam v. Sivachidambara, 42 M. 440; Tammireddi v. Gangireddi, 45 M. 281 (296).

(2) S. 124, Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).

(3) 2 Sheppard's Touchstone, Ch. XII, on "Of a Grant," p. 228.

otherwise may be made without writing as provided in S. 52 of the Easements Act.

Who may make a gift.

229. Any adult may make a gift of his property or of any interest therein over which he possesses the disposing power.

Historical Retrospect.

1840. Analogous Law.—The sacerdotal lawgivers naturally commended the making of gifts to the Brahmins as the highroad to heaven. But as a curb upon his cupidity, Manu declared that "though permitted to receive presents, let him avoid a habit of taking them, since by taking many gifts, his divine light soon fades."[1] But, all the same, the donor was encouraged to make continual gifts.

Ladnavalkya's dissertation on gifts is contained in the Achar Kand (Chapter on Rituals) and proceeds on the lines of Manu.[2] It has no legal value. The Mitakshara[3] and other texts follow the same line. All regard gift as a pious act and, therefore, relegate it to the Achar Kand of their works.

1841. Hindu Law divides gifts into four classes: (1) Deyam or that which should be given; (2) Adeyam or that which should not be given; (3) Dattam or valid gifts; and (4) Adattam or invalid gifts. As to the quantum of interest, Hindu Law divides gifts as stated by Wilson, J.: "Gifts are of three kinds—those which convey present title and interest and a present right of enjoyment; those which are vested, that is, present in interest, but in which the enjoyment is deferred; and those which are contingent, that is to say, in which neither title nor right of enjoyment is given at present; both depend upon future uncertain events. All these kinds of gifts are admissible among Hindus. All are recognized by the Succession Act, the Hindu Wills Act and the Transfer of Property Act."[4] But the development of the modern law has rendered the old texts[5] wholly obsolete.

1842. The authority to make a gift depends upon the donor's power of disposal over the subject-matter of gift. If it is his self-acquired property, he is entitled to dispose of it by gift or devise at his discretion. But if it is his joint property, then his power of disposal is necessarily limited by the rights of his coparceners.

Again, his power of disposal may depend upon the nature of the property. If it is impartible, he cannot alienate it in parts; if inalienable, he cannot alien it at all. Then again the quantum of interest taken by the donee may depend upon the terms of the gift but irrespective of the sex of the donee. These will be the subject of a future discussion.

The subject of gift of coparcenary interest has already been the subject of discussion in the foregoing pages. (See S. 126.)

The subject of individual property and the extent to which it may be disposed of by gift will now be considered.

1843. Father's Power of Gift.—As regards the father's power of gift, it is settled that, under the Dayabhag law, the father being the sole and undivided owner of all property, whether movable or immovable,

(1) Manu, IV-186; 226, 228 (see also 229-233).
(2) Yad. (Mandlik), pp. 186, 187.
(3) Mit., III, V-VI.
(4) Ramlal v. Kanai Lal, 12 C. 663 (668).
(5) Narad, IV-6; IV-8-11, 12; 33 S.B.E. 120, 128, 129, 130. To the same effect, Manu VIII-212, XI-7; Yad., I-124; Vashisth, VIII-10; Vishnu, IX-8.

ancestral or self-acquired, can make a valid gift or devise of any such property.[1] But the powers of the Mitakshara father are limited, for the Mitakshara declares that "the father has independent power in the disposal of effects, other than immovable, for indispensable acts of duty and for purposes prescribed by texts of law, as gifts through affection, support of the family, relief from distress, and so forth, but he is subject to the control of his sons and the rest in regard to the immovable estate, whether acquired by himself or inherited from his father or other predecessor."[2] But, as pointed out by the Privy Council, this text can no longer be literally enforced.[3] The question then arises: What are the limits within which the father is entitled to make a gift of his joint or separate property? It cannot be denied that the true measure of his power is to be found in the cases and not in the texts. His present power has been the result of gradual growth. At first, the text was literally construed so far as to protect the sons. And the Privy Council, accordingly, laid down that if the father had no male issue, he was free to dispose of all his self-acquired property, whether movable or immovable.[4] But later on it was discovered that the Mitakshara texts were themselves contradictory; for, while in one place the father's wealth is declared to be "subject to the control of the sons."[5] in another place, it is said that the "sons must acquiesce in the father's disposal of his own self-acquired property."[6]

1844. These conflicting texts supported the conflicting decisions[7] till the law was finally settled by the Privy Council, who upheld the father's unqualified power to dispose of his self-acquired property, whether movable or immovable.[8] In so holding, their Lordships said: "It appears to them that the subject is one of those in which, from the earliest times, there have been two conflicting principles of law, one favouring the paternal integrity and the fixed succession of family property, and the other, the free use of such property for the circumstances of the day. The controversies and conflicting decisions on the father's powers of mortgage and sale, for the payment of his debts out of the inheritance, and on the testamentary power, will occur to everybody who is familiar with Indian litigations of the past half century or so. On each of those subjects, there has been a growing tendency, coincident with the growth of commerce, to give more effect to the latter of the two principles, viz., the use of property by the living generation or its living heads."[9] They then held that the father had full power for disposal of all his self-acquired property, whether by sale, mortgage, gift or devise, and that the presence of the sons was no curb on his power.

---

(1) Mit., I-I-27, cited in Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (164) P.C.

(2) Mit., I-I-27, Hari Shanker v. Ram Sarup, (1938) L. 113.

(3) Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (164, 165) P.C.

(4) Beer Pertab v. Rajender, 12 M.I. A. 38.

(5) Mit., I-I-27.

(6) Mit., I-V-10.

(7) That he had full power of disposal was held in the following cases: Sudanund v. Bonomallee, 2 Hay 205; Mudhu Gopal v. Rani Buksh, 6 W.R. 71; Ojoodhya v. Ramsarun, 6 W.R. 77; Rajaram v. Tewary, 8 W.R. 15; Bishen Perkash v. Bawa, 10 W.R. 287; Sudanund v. Soorjo, 11 W.R. 436; Bishen Perkash v. Bawa, 20 W.R. 137 P.C.; Sipal v. Madho, 1 A. 394; Gangabai v. Vamanji, 2 B.H.C.R. 318; Jugmohun Das v. Manguldas, 10 B. 528: Contra 1 Str. H.L. 261; 2 Str.H.L. 436, 441, 450; Meenatchee v. Chetumbra, (1853) Mad. D. 61; Muttumaran v. Lakshmi, (1860) Mad.D. 227; Nallatambi v. Mukunda, 3 M.H.C.R. 455; Ponnappa v. Pappuvayyangar, 4 M. 47; Madhasookh v. Budree, 1 N.W.P.H.C.R. 153.

(8) Balwant Singh v. Ram Kishore, 20 A. 267 (288) P.C.

(9) Balwant Singh v. Ram Kishore, 20 A. 267 (288) P.C.

Gift how made.

230. (1) A gift of movable property must be accompanied by delivery.

(2) And a gift of immovable property must be made in the form prescribed by section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act.

1845. Analogous Law.—The Hindu Law of gifts is, since the passing of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929 (Act XX of 1929), subject to the provisions of Ch. VII (Ss. 122-129) of the Transfer of Property Act.

1846. Requirements of Hindu Gift.—It has already been seen that the term "gift" in Hindu Law is used in a much wider sense as connoting anything movable or immovable given for no valuable consideration. A gift under the Transfer of Property Act postulates the presence of two persons, called the donor and the donee. It is an inter vivos gift, and is even then limited because it must be accepted during the life-time of the donor. But a testamentary gift need not be made in praesenti or accepted by the donee during the donor's life-time. Nor, indeed, need the subject of bequest be in existence when it is made, though it must be necessarily in existence when it takes effect. The subject of such gifts is dealt with in Ss. 90-199 of the Succession Act,[1] many of which now apply to Hindus. Leaving out all these statutory gifts, there remain for consideration gifts which are yet unaffected by statute, and are so recognized by Hindu Law. Such gifts are completed by mere delivery.[2] The Madras Court inclines to the view that a Hindu religious gift, made on the occasion of marriage or funeral, need not even satisfy that requirement, that such gift is in the nature of a dedication made to a person, real or ideal, and in fact, not even to him.[3] But even where the donee is an idol or a temple, the dedication need not conform to the provisions of S. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. Once the gift is made, the owner becomes the custodian and trustee of the property and must "appropriate to pious purposes the corpus of a property, or its income according as it may have been resolved."[4]

Clause (2).

A Gift or devise to unborn persons.

231. Notwithstanding the rule of Hindu Law to the contrary, a settlement gift or devise to an unborn person, at the time of the settlement or gift or at the testator's death when the devise takes effect, shall be valid if it conforms to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and the Succession Act, respectively.

1847. Analogous Law.—This section is adapted from the Hindu Disposition of Property Act, 1916,[5] which was enacted to abrogate the rule of Hindu Law of devise, which did not allow a gift or devise to be made in favour of a person,[6] real or juridical, e.g., an idol,[7] not in existence at the time it took effect. Now, since, under Hindu Law, an estate cannot remain in abeyance, but must vest in some one at the time of the donor's or testator's death, it followed that where the donee or the devisee was not in existence

(1) Act XXXIX of 1925.

(2) 3 Gour's Law of Transfer, (6th Ed.).

(3) Ramalinga v. Sivachidambara, 42 A. 440 (442, 443); Tammireddi v. Gangireddi, 44 M. 291 (296); Bhupati Nath v. Ramlal, 37 C. 128 (153) F.B.

(4) Mahanirvan Tantra, S. XII, vv. 92-94; cited in Bhupati Nath v. Ramlal, 37 C. 128 (137) F.B.

(5) Act XIV of 1916.

(6) See the subject discussed in 1 Gour's Law of Transfer, (6th Ed.).

(7) Bhagabati v. Kalicharan, 38 C. 468 (472) P.C.; Rai Upendra v. Hemchandra, 25 C. 405 P.C.; Motivahu v. Mamubai, 21 B. 709 P.C.; Rajamoyee v. Troylukho, 6 C.W.N. 267.

at the time of the former's death, his disposition failed altogether.[1] English Law permitted, however, the creation of such future estates, subject to the limitations contained in Ss. 13, 14 and 20 of the Transfer of Property Act. With the passing of the Hindu Disposition of Property Act, it is now possible to extend the same rule to Hindus.

1848. Though the operation of this section will best be seen in the subsequent discussion on the effect of future devises, it is not to be understood as confined merely to gifts and devises, but applies equally even to transfers for consideration.[2]

1849. The net result of the Hindu Disposition of Property Act is to legalize the creation of future estates, subject to the provisions of Chapter II[3] of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, between its enactment in 1916, and its merger in the Transfer of Property, and the Succession Acts as amended in 1929.

This Act has overruled a series of cases decided by the Privy Council and the courts in India, in which the orthodox Hindu rule was enunciated and applied.[4]

Gift or devise to female relations.

232. (1) Notwithstanding any rule of Hindu Law to the contrary, gifts and devises to females, made since the amendment of the Transfer of Property Act and the Succession Act, by Act XX of 1929, which came into force on 1st April, 1930, and Act XVIII of 1929, which came into force on 1st October, 1929 respectively, shall be construed in accordance with the rules as there enacted.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, it shall not be presumed that, in the absence of words amplifying the terms of a grant, a gift or devise should be ordinarily construed as intended to convey only a limited estate to a female donee or devisee relation of the donor or devisor.

(3) That all gifts and devises shall thenceforth be construed in accordance with the principles embodied in section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act and section 95 of the Succession Act.

1850. Analogous Law.—For a commentary on this section see §§ 1821-1825.

Conditional gift or devise.

233. (1) A gift or devise may be absolute or conditional.

(2) A conditional gift or devise takes effect upon the fulfilment of the condition, except in the following cases:—

(a) Where the condition is a condition subsequent;

(b) Where it is illegal or immoral or

(c) Where it is repugnant to the nature of the grant.

---

(1) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 P.C.

(2) Ramasamy v. Chinnan, 24 M. 449 (469); Chundichurn v. Sidheswari, 15 C. 71 P.C.

(3) Cf. S. 12 of Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, XXI of 1929.

(4) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (394) P.C.; Soorjeemoney v. Denobundo, 6 M.I.A. 555; Motivahu v. Mamubai, 21 B. 709 P.C.; Kally Prosonna v. Gopee, 7 C.L.R. 241; Kristnaramani v. Ananda, 4 B.L.R. (O.C.) 231; Colgan v. Administrator-General, 15 M. 424; Javerbai v. Kalli Bai, 16 B. 492; Kashinath v. Chinnaji, 30 B. 477 (490); Bhagabati v. Kalicharan, 32 C. 992 (1009), O.A. 38 C. 468 P.C.

(3) A substantial fulfilment of the condition may be sufficient if its literal fulfilment is impossible or impracticable.

(4) A gift once completed cannot be revoked except on a ground which would suffice to cancel a contract.

1851. Analogous Law.—Conditional transfers are subject to the provisions of Ss. 25-27 of the Transfer of Property Act, and conditional bequests subject to those of Ss. 126-130 of the Succession Act. And as there is nothing in Hindu Law to the contrary,[1] their principles are equally applicable to Hindus. The Privy Council have upheld the validity of conditional gifts, holding it competent to the donor to create an absolute estate defeasible on the failure of issue.[2] So, where the donor gave a taluq to his sister for her support and "for the generation born of your womb successively and no other heirs of yours shall have a right or interest," it was held that the grant was absolute and defeasible on the failure of issue living at the death of the donee.[3]

1852. Gift is Irrevocable.—The following texts bear on the subject of this clause:—

Brihaspati.—"Things once delivered on the following eight accounts cannot be resumed: for the pleasure of hearing poets, musicians or the like, as the price of goods sold, as a nuptial gift to a bride or her family, as an acknowledgment to a benefactor, as a present to a worthy man from natural affection or from friendship.

"What is given by a person in wrath or excessive joy, or through inadvertence or during disease, minority or madness, or under the influence of terror, or by one intoxicated or extremely old, or by an outcast or idiot, or by a man afflicted with grief or with pain, or what is given in sport, all this is declared ungiven or void. If anything be given for a consideration unperformed, or to a bad man mistaken for a good one, or for any illegal act, the owner may take it back."[4]

Yadnavalkya.—"Let the acceptance be public, especially of immovable property, and delivering what may be given and has been promised, not a wise man resume a donation."[5]

Dayabhag.—"Accordingly, Harit says: 'A father, during his life distributing his property, may retire to the forest or enter into the order suitable to an aged man; or he may remain at home having distributed small allotments and keeping a greater portion; should he become indigent, he may take back from them.' "[6]

A gift once complete cannot be revoked,[7] except upon grounds which suffice to cancel a contract.[8] Such grounds are fraud, misrepresentation, undue influence and the like. In this respect, Hindu Law agrees with the statutory provisions contained in S. 126 of the Transfer of Property Act.

With the solitary exception of the Dayabhag text, all texts declare a gift irrevocable, Katyayan even going so far as to make the offer of a gift for a religious purpose specifically enforceable. But though this part of the law contravenes the express provisions of the statute law and is there-

(1) Soorjeemoney v. Denobundhoo, 9 M.I.A. 123 (135); Tarokessur v. Soshi, 9 C. 952 P.C.

(2) Bhoobun v. Hurrish Chunder, 4 C. 23 P.C.; Sham Shivendra v. Janbi Kuar, 36 C. 311 P.C.

(3) Bhoobun v. Hurrish Chunder, 4 C. 23 P.C., explained in Tarokessur v. Soshi, 9 C. 952 (959) P.C. To the same effect, Sham Shivendra v. Janbi Kuar, 36 C. 311 P.C.

(4) 2 Dig., 174, 197.

(5) Cited in Kalidas v. Kanhaya Lal, 11 C. 121 (132) P.C.

(6) Dayabhag, Ch. II-57.

(7) Bishenchand v. Asmaida, 6 A. 560 (575) P.C., Rajaram v. Ganesh, 23 B. 131.

(8) Nasir Hussain v. Mata Prasad, 2 A. 891 (895); Bishenchand v. Asmaida, 6 A. 560 (575) P.C.; Ganga Baksh v. Jagat Bahadur, 23 C. 15; Rajaram v. Ganesh, 23 B. 131; Sita Ram v. Harihar, 35 B. 169 (Alludes to text stating that a gift cannot be resumed if it is to 'a benefactor' or to father, but it does not imply that a gift to any other person is resumable).

fore obsolete, the fact remains that Hindu Law does not countenance the resumption of a gift.

234. (1) A person may dispose of by gift, made in contemplation of death, any movable property which he was competent to dispose of by will.[1]

Gift in contemplation of death.

(2) A gift so made divests the giver of the property given and he is not entitled to resume it upon his recovery, unless his gift was to that extent conditional.[2]

1853. Analogous Law.—The section is drawn from S. 191 of the Succession Act which, however, being based on the English law of donatio mortis causa, and influenced by the Statute of Frauds, has not been extended to apply to Hindus. But apart from it, it was laid down in two cases decided in 1869 and 1871 that Hindu law does recognize gifts made in contemplation of death, though such gifts vary in their incidents from the English donatio mortis causa.[3] Both were deliveries of Government promissory notes to the donee without endorsement and the question was whether property in the notes passed to the donee without endorsement and the executor of the donor was liable to complete the formality of an endorsement. Both the courts held in the affirmative, distinguishing a Hindu gift from a donatio mortis causa, in which the donee secures the gifted property in trust for the donor till his death, on which property therein vests in his executor, who treats it as a legacy to be made over to the donee. The main difference between the statutory donatio mortis causa lies in its main incidents which may be thus stated. Under the statutory provision, as under English law (1) the gift must be made in contemplation of death; (2) the subject must be movable property; (3) it must be accompanied by actual delivery of the subject in question. (4) The gift takes effect only after the giver dies of the illness and not if he recovers therefrom; (5) the gift does not take effect if the donor survives the donee. (6) The gift may be resumed by the donor. But such a gift under Hindu Law (1) divests the donor of his ownership immediately the gift is made. (1) Its resumability does not necessarily follow his recovery, but depends upon the donor's express or implied intention at the time he made the gift. (3) Though the gift must relate to movable property, in view of S. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, still that term is wider in its scope, covering as it does any actionable claim, bond or security, though perhaps not if it a security of immovable property.[4]

---

(1) S. 191, Succession Act.

(2) Cf. Peacocok, C.J., in Coomar Krishna v. Woopendra, 12 W.R. (App. from O.J.) 4 (6).

(3) Coomar Krishna v. Woopendro, (1869) 12 W.R. (Appeals from O.J.) 4; Visalatchmi v. Subbu Pillai, (1871) 6 M.H.C.R. 270.

(4) As to which see 1 Law of Transfer, (6th Ed.) 70, pp. 55, 56.

CHAPTER XVIII.

WILLS.

1854. Topical Introduction.—Hindu Law, as such, contains no provision for wills, which have come into vogue in the following manner described by the Privy Council: "As to gifts by way of will, whatever doubts may have once been entertained by learned persons as to the existence of the testamentary power, those doubts have been dispelled by a course of practice in itself enough, if necessary, to establish an approved usage, and by a series of judicial decisions both here and in India, proceeding upon the assumption that gifts by will are legally binding, and recognizing the validity of that form of gift as part and parcel of the general law. The introduction of gifts by will into general use has followed in India, as it has done in other countries, the conveyance of property inter vivos. The same may be said of the Roman Law, in which the testamentary power, apart from public sanction, appears to have been a development of the law of gifts inter vivos. Such a disposition of property, to take effect upon the death of the donor, though revocable in his lifetime, is, until revocation, a continuous act of gift up to the moment of death, and does then operate to give the property disposed of to the persons designated as beneficiaries. They take upon the death of the testator, as they would if he had given the property to them in his lifetime. There is no law expressly and in terms applicable to persons who can so take. The law of wills, has, however, grown up, so to speak, naturally from a law which furnishes no analogy but that of gifts, and it is the duty of a tribunal dealing with a case, new in the instance, to be governed by the established principles and the analogies which have hitherto prevailed in like cases."[1]

1855. Before the enactment of Act XXXVII of 1926, which came into effect from the 1st January 1927, wills of Hindus, Buddhists, Sikhs and Jains, except those provided in S. 57 of the Succession Act need not have been in writing; but it was held in Madras that otherwise the provisions of the Succession Act afforded a good aid to the construction of all wills, since it embodied the principles in consonance with justice, equity and good conscience.[2] As such, two years later, the legislature passed another Act[3] formally extending the provisions of Part VI of the Succession Act, set out in Schedule III, to such wills, with the result that the law of wills has since become statutory, and as the law of gifts is allied to that of wills, similar amendments were made to the Transfer of Property Act by an amendment Act of the same year[4] by which all rules of Hindu Law in conflict with the general rules stated in chapter II thereof, and those in conflict with the law of gifts, as enacted in chapter VII were abrogated.[5] The net result of all these amendments is to remove the Hindu Law of gifts and that of wills from the Shastras to the statute which must thenceforth govern those transactions.

---

(1) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (397) P.C.

(2) Ratna v. Narayanaswami, 26 M.L.J. 616: 24 I.C. 796.

(3) Act XVIII of 1929 which came into force on 1st October, 1929.

(4) Act XX of 1929 which came into force on the 1st April, 1930.

(5) See repeal of the saving clauses Ss. 2 (d) and 129 by Act XX of 1929.

1856. Logically, these two subjects must be removed from this Code, but they have been retained to set out to shew the interplay of the two authorities in some cases in which the rules of the personal law still survive, distinguishing them from those in which those rules have now become extinct.

Thus, the testamentary power, though a graft upon the archaic law, has now become well established.

The ensuing sections present the leading principles thus evolved out of the analogies from gifts.

235. (1) "Will" means the legal declaration of the intention of a testator with respect to his property which he desires to be carried into effect after his death.[1]

"Will" defined.

(2) "Codicil" means an instrument made in relation to a will, and explaining, altering or adding to its dispositions, and shall be deemed to form part of the will.[2]

"Codicil" defined.

1857. Analogous Law.—These two definitions are copied from S. 2 (h) and S. 2 (b) of the Succession Act,[3] as they now extend to Hindu wills, which, since the enactment of the Succession (Amendment) Act 1926[4] has become equally applicable to all Hindu wills and codicils, which extends to Hindus, Buddhists, Sikhs and Jains all the provisions of S. 63 of the Succession Act; and since the definitions given in S. 2 thereof apply to all the provisions of the Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, it follows that a will or a codicil executed by a Hindu on or after the 1st January, 1927, must conform to these definitions.

A will is described as a "legal declaration", meaning a declaration in conformity with law, not in any set form prescribed by the law, since law has prescribed no forms, though under Hindu law, an informal and even a casual statement is sufficient.

1858. It has already been seen that Hindu law contains no provision for wills which had become evolved out of the law of gifts before their passing under statutory control. (§§ 1854-1855.) The provisions of the Succession Act relating to wills have been taken from the English law, which in its turn received its main principles from the civil law. The definitions of "will" and "codicil" as enacted is an instance in point. The word "will" means "wish", which in its turn is drawn from the Code of Gaius and Ulpian where it is so described.[5] Similarly, a "codicil" is the English form of the Roman term "codicilli" where it meant an informal will, though it means a postscript to a will adding, altering or explaining it.

1859. Pre-requisites of a Will.—It will be seen from the wording of the definition formulated in this section that a will is a declaration—but a declaration which must possess the following essential elements:—

---

(1) S. 2 (h), Suc. Act, 1925.
(2) S. 2 (b), Ib.
(3) Act XXXIX of 1925.
(4) Act XXXVII of 1926.
(5) "Testamentum est mentis; nostrae justa contestatio in id sollemniter facta ut post mortem nostram valeat"—XX-I.

(1) It must be legal.

(2) It must relate to a disposition of property.

(3) It must relate to the testator's property or to property over which he has the disposing power.[1]

(4) It must dispose of it so as to take effect from the testator's death.

(5) It must be revocable at the testator's pleasure.[2]

1860. Legal Declaration.—Prior to, legislative control, a Hindu will, like the Roman codicilli, might be oral or in writing, and if in writing, law permitted it to assume any form, provided its intention was clear. And since it needed no attestation, it might be contained in a writing which was intended to be merely a petition or a letter, or in fact, any document, the context of which may bear no relation to the statement which constituted the will.[3] Such wills were subjected to no set rules of construction and were permitted to be construed with the utmost latitude, the only rule being to ascertain the intention, regardless of the form and the mode of expression except so far as it threw any light on the intention.[4]

But that wide latitude is no longer possible in the treatment and construction of a document as a will; since the first requisite of a will is that it must be the legal declaration of a person's intention. The term "legal" is taken from the civil law, under which it must be "justa", meaning in conformity with the forms of law. The classical lawyers paid unduly excessive attention to the form rather than the substance of a disposition. The modern tendency is to reverse that order of consideration, and in the case of Hindu wills, the Privy Council[5] have counselled such course, as will be presently seen in the chapter dealing with the construction of wills. (Ch. XXI.) The term "legal" does not mean valid under law, since the validity of a will has nothing to do with its formal legality, which is all that legal declaration means and which is to be distinguished from a legal disposition of property.

1861. Secondly, a will must be couched in the form of a declaration, that is, in a formal statement as the best evidence of intention. But the term "declaration" must not be too literally construed, since it has been held that, however irregular in form or inartificial in expression, "the form of the instrument is not conclusive against its testamentary effect,[6] although it may not be valid in the form in which it was drawn up. Again, a will may be conditional or contingent, as witness the will of a man who said that he was starting for Delhi and in case he died, which he hoped by the grace of God he will not he would cancel it. He returned but had not cancelled his will. The Privy Council accepted it to be an effective will.[7] A will may be in the form of "Instructions to be followed if I die at sea or abroad."[8]

It is not necessary that the declaration, constituting a will, should be embodied in a single document or a single passage, since it may be

---

(1) Bijra v. Puraj Sundari, 42 C. 56 P.C.

(2) Rajammal v. Authiammal, 33 M. 304.

(3) Din Tarini v. Krishna, 36 C. 149 (150).

(4) Thakur Ishri Sinah v. Thakur Baldeo Singh, 10 C. 792 (801, 802) P.C. (a case of a will executed under the Oudh Estates Act, I of 1869).

(5) Ibid.

(6) King's Proctor v. Daines, (1830) 3 Hagg. 221.

(7) Jagannath v. Ram Bharosa, 60 I.A. 49: (1933) P.C. 33; but see, Porter, In re, L.R. 2 P. 22: Robinson, In re, L.R. 1 P. 71. (The distinction is one of construction for which see post).

(8) Lindsay v. Lindsay, L.R. 2 P. 459.

scattered over several documents, all of which will have to be treated as jointly constituting a will. So the nomination of beneficiary in his life policy by a subscriber will amount to a will, provided, of course, it is now duly executed and attested. But a statement in revenue papers as to who are a person's heirs on his death would lack those essentials and would not, therefore, be treated as a will.[1]

There is a presumption against treating a deed as a will unless its circumstances compel the court to do so.[2]

1862. Will Distinguished from Gift.—Although the notion of wills is evolved out of gifts, the two classes of dispositions are distinguishable and must be distinguished. A gift confers a present interest, relates to existing property and takes effect immediately, while a will confers a deferred interest, may comprise future property and does not take effect until the death of the testator.[3] A gift once completed cannot be revoked; but a will may be revoked at any time and is by its nature ambulatory and revocable by the testator and again and again by him.[4]

Then, again, a person may give what he cannot devise. In this respect the power of gift and devise are not identical.[5]

1863. Disposal of Property.—Another essential condition of a will is that it must be accompanied by what the civil law required animus testandi, that is, the intention and power of disposal of his property. It is not necessary that the subject of his will is his property over which he possesses complete ownership or any right in presenti, since a will takes effect from his death and as in the case of a life policy, the property disposed of may only take shape on his death. On the other hand, he may possess such property over which his rights will cease on death, in which case, though he may execute a will, it will be infructuous. If he has then any property as will survive his death, its disposal must be such disposal as he would have made if he were able to do so after his death. The disposal of property is then in futuro and it may be conditional or contingent. Any number of persons may execute a will, and they may execute mutual wills, that is, such wills as are inter-dependent, in which case, one testator may alter his will after notice to the other, but he cannot do so after the other's death.[6]

The property to be the subject of a testamentary bequest may be any property held jointly or severally over which the testator has disposing power.

1864. Will Revocable.—The last condition of a will is that it is voluntary, ambulatory, and revocable in that it may be altered, amended or cancelled at any time and as often as the testator wishes to do so. Consequently, if the property rests in another immediately, it would not be a will even though it contains a scheme of settlement on his death.[7] On the other hand, an instrument described as a deed of settlement, executed on

---

(1) Ma Na v. Ma Gun, (1925) R. 8.
(2) Balraj v. Mahadeo, 44 I.C. (O.) 89.
(3) Bishenchand v. Asmaida, 6 A. 560 (572) P.C.
(4) Sagat v. Dwarka, 14 C.W.N. 174: 3 I.C. 381; Sita v. Deonath, 8 C.W.N. 514; Rammonir v. Ram Gopal, 12 C.W.N. 942.
(5) In Lakshmi Bai v. Ganjat, 4 M.H. C.R. 150 (158), this question was held unsettled by judicial decisions; Mulchand v. Mancha, 7 B. 491 (493); Lakshman v. Ramchandra, 5 B. 48 (61) P.C.
(6) Dias v. De Livera, 5 App. Cas. 123 (136).
(7) Reference under Stamp Act, 20 B. 210 F.B.: 21 M. 422.

his taking a son in adoption, provided inter alia that his wife and son should live together, and in case of disagreement, the wife should enjoy the land described during her life-time in lieu of maintenance was held to be a will.[1] One vital difference between a settlement and a will is that the latter is revocable.[2]

1865. Codicil.—A codicil is an appendix to a will intended to explain,[3] amplify or vary its terms. As such, it must be executed with the same formalities as a will and is to be treated as a part of it. There is no limit to codicils, nor any rule as to their contents. A codicil may survive even though the will itself is revoked.[4]

1866. Trust.—It is immaterial by what name the will is called, or what was the primary intention of the testator, provided that its eventual and resultant intention was such disposal as falls within the terms of its definition. Of course, a person may effect the purpose of a will by transferring his property to trustees, charging them to dispose of his estate after his death, according to his instructions. Such course is usually resorted to by persons who do not trust the written word, and at the same time, they escape payment of the probate duties. And for the same reason, by the conversion and disposal of one's estate through the medium of a private company, one can escape the death duties since a company never dies, and consequently, there is no liability to pay the consequential death duties. But, of course, both probate and death duties are revenue duties and may be altered any moment to rope in such examples.

Who may make a will or codicil.

236. (1) "Every person of sound mind, not being a minor, may dispose of his property by will."[5]

(2) Any property may be disposed of by will over which the testator possesses a disposing power, by an act inter vivos without consideration.

(3) "A will is liable to be revoked or altered by the maker of it at any time when he is competent to dispose of his property by will."[6]

(4) A codicil must be executed in the same manner as a will.

1867. Analogous Law.—The Indian Majority Act excepts Hindus only as regards marriage, dower, divorce and adoption, but not as to the power to make a will, which is subject to it.[7] Consequently, a person, who is major under the Hindu personal law, but not so under the statute, is not competent to make a bequest.[8] Where, therefore, a guardian is appointed or declared under the Guardian and Wards Act, the minority of the ward does not cease till he attains the age of 21 years and he is incompetent to make a will till then, it being immaterial whether the guardian dies, is removed, or otherwise ceases to act.[9]

(1) Lakshmi v. Subramanya, 12 M. 490.
(2) Rajammal v. Authiammal, 33 M. 304.
(3) Rameshwar v. Balraj, (1935) P.C. 187.
(4) Greig, (In re), L.R. 1 P. 72.
(5) S. 59 Succ. Act; Four explanations and three illustrations appended thereto are omitted.
(6) Ib., S. 62.
(7) S. 2 (9), Act IX of 1875; Golab v. Thakorlal, 36 B. 622; Krishnama v. Veeravelli, 38 M. 166; Dekram v. Somanchi, (1911) M.W.N. 383: 12 I.C. 551.
(8) Gulab v. Thakorlal, 36 B. 622; Hardurai v. Gomi, 8 A.L.J. 385; Dipa v. Lakshmi, 6 I.C. (C.) 6.
(9) Jayaram v. Mahadeb, 36 C. 768; Dipa v. Lakshmi, 6 I.C. (C.) 6; Deheram v. Soman Ali, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 383: 12 I.C. 551.

1868. Power of Bequest.—The testator's competency to make a will is distinct from its validity. The former depends upon his age, the latter upon his disposing power.[1] A person cannot make a bequest of property which he could not have conveyed by a transfer inter vivos. The rule on the subject was thus stated by Willes, J.: "The analogous law in this case is to be found in that applicable to gifts, and even if wills were not universally to be regarded in all respects as gifts, to take effect upon death, they are generally so to be regarded as to the property which they can transfer and the persons to whom it can be transferred."[2] The power of a Hindu to make a will is not of modern introduction nor is it of local origin. Wills were known to and in use amongst Hindus not in the presidency towns only, but from one end of the peninsula to the other. The right to make a will is a part of Hindu Law itself.

Now, since a Hindu coparcener in some provinces[3] is permitted to alien his undivided interest inter vivos only for value, it follows that he has not the power to alien it by gift or bequest.[4] But except in Bengal, where the coparcener holds his share in quasi-severalty, he is competent to make a gift of his interest, and is held equally competent to devise it by will so as to deprive his widow of her share on partition.[5]

1869. A person may make a bequest of his self-acquired property,[6] or even of his ancestral coparcenary property, if he had no coparceners at the time,[7] since the right of alienation in such cases is subject to the right of coparceners. Hence the son may challenge the father's bequest even if made before he was born.[8] And since the manager of a joint family is in the position of a trustee, he has no power to make a will in respect of any portion of the property.[9]

Since the will takes effect from the death of the testator and the coparcenary interest vests from the moment of conception,[10] occasion's may arise when the right of survivorship is in conflict with the right of devise when the right of survivorship, being the prior right would take precedence over that by devise.[11] In other words, in a competition between a right acquired by survivorship and that by devise the farmer prevails.

It is now settled that since the holder of an impartible estate has no active coparceners, it follows that he is competent to will away his estate.[12]

1870. The power of a person to bequeath by will is here declared to be co-extensive with his power to alienate his property inter vivos. This is the rule, but it may appear to conflict with the manager's power to make small customary gifts to his relations on ceremonial occasions, or

---

(1) Pitum v. Joykishan, 6 W.R. 101 (102); Court of Wards v. Venkata, 20 M. 167; Vallinayagam v. Pachche, 1 M.H.C. R. 326.

(2) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 P.C.

(3) S. 126 ante.

(4) S. 126, Lakshman v. Ramachandra, 5 B. 48 P.C.; Bhujanga Rao v. Maloji Rao, 5 B.H. C.R. (A.C.) 161.

(5) Debendra v. Brojendra, 17 C. 886.

(6) Narainasami v. Arunachala, 1 M. H.C.R. 487-n; Bawa v. Bishen, 10 W.R. 287; Nana v. Haree, 9 M.I.A. 96.

(7) Nagalatchmee v. Gopoo, 6 M.I.A. 309.

(8) Vithabai v. Balwant Rao, (1893) B. P.J. 72.

(9) Lalta Prasad v. Mahadeo, 42 A. 461.

(10) Sabapathi v. Somasundram, 16 M. 76.

(11) Vitla v. Yamenamma, 8 M.H.C.R. 6; Gooroova v. Narainaswamy, 8 M.H.C.R. 13-n; Lakshmi v. Subramanya, 12 M. 490 (492); Subbarami v. Ramamma, 43 M. 824.

(12) Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 41 M. 778 P.C.; Mathuraswamy v. Bangarammal, 8 I.C. (M.) 332.

grants for maintenance and the like. But in doing so, the manager does not exercise his proprietary power. He rather acts as the agent of the joint family. The rule stated in this clause, therefore, holds good.

1871. A person cannot bequeath his undivided share in the joint property, even with the consent of his coparceners, since the testator's interest in the property becomes extinct from the moment his will is to take effect.[1] The case might be different if, though in form a will, it was in reality an arrangement acted upon by the coparceners during the testator's lifetime, in which case, it would operate as a partition of the joint property.[2] The right of enjoyment is much less than ownership, and it cannot be bequeathed. And since a widow is incompetent to transfer by gift her limited estate, it follows that she has no power to bequeath it even with the consent of the next reversioner.[3] For the same reason, though the widow of the donor of a religious bequest is, on the failure of the appointed manager, entitled to manage the property, and may even nominate a manager, such nomination to take effect after her death, she has no power to do so by will.[4] But she is not incapacitated by her sex from bequeathing property to which she is absolutely entitled.[5] For instance, though the widow of the founder of a religious trust is, on the failure of the appointed manager, entitled to manage the property, and may even nominate a manager, the nomination taking effect after her death, she has no power to do so by will.[6]

237. Form of will. (1) A will executed on or after the first day of January, 1927, can only be made subject to the provisions of section 63 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, that is to say, it must be in writing and attested by two or more witnesses as therein provided.

(2) A will executed before the first day of January, 1927 may be oral or in writing, and, if in writing, it need not be attested or registered:

(3) Provided that all wills and codicils made after the first day of September, 1870, by a Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain in the province of Bengal or within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Courts of Judicature at Madras and Bombay, or relating to immovable property situated within those territories or limits shall be made only subject to the provisions of section 57 and Schedule III of the Indian Succession Act, 1925.

Exception.—Nothing herein applies to the privileged will of an adult soldier, employed in an expedition or engaged in actual warfare, or of an airman so employed or engaged, or of a mariner at sea, which may be executed as provided in section 66 of the Succession Act.

1872. Analogous Law.—The Hindu Law of Wills falls in to four stages. Before the enactment of the Hindu Wills Act, 1870,[7] there was

(1) Seth Lakhmichand v. Anandi, 48 A. 313 P.C.; Bhikhabhai v. Purshottam, 50 B. 558 (565, 566), citing Anand Rao v. Administrator-General, 20 B. 450, distinguishing Brij Raj v. Sheonandan Singh, 35 A. 337 (346) P.C.; Jamnadas v. Gordhandas, 28 Bom. L.R. 532: 96 I.C. 181: (1926) B. 463.

(2) Seth Lakhmichand v. Anandi, 48 A. 313 P.C.; Subbarami v. Ramamuka, 43 M. 824 (826-828).

(3) Raghava v. Narayanasami, 4 M.L. J. 89; Gooroova v. Narainaswamy, 8 M. H.C.R. 13.

(4) Puran Lalji v. Rao Bihari, 44 A. 590 (601).

(5) Beukot v. Jeshankar, (1881) B.P. J. 271.

(6) Puran Lalji v. Rao Bihari, 44 A. 590 (601, 602).

(7) XXI of 1870.

no statutory bar to the execution of a will, which might be nuncupative or in writing. That Act, for the first time, made writing obligatory in the case of wills executed by Hindus, Buddhists, Sikhs or Jains throughout Bengal and within the local limits of the original jurisdiction of the High Courts of Madras and Bombay, and in the case of wills and codicils outside those territories and limits so far as they relate to immovable property situate within those territories and limits. The third stage was reached by the enactment of the Succession (Amendment) Act, 1926,[1] which made writing in accordance with the provisions of S. 63 of the Succession Act obligatory on all Hindus, Buddhists, Sikhs and Jains.[2] The fourth stage was reached by the passing of another amendment in 1929, which brought into line all Hindu wills with those subject to the Bengal wills Act.[3] (§§ 1854-1856.)

1873. Since a codicil is included in the term will,[4] of which it forms a part, it follows that it must be attested in the same manner as a will.[5] There is of course, now no scope for implementing the text of a will or codicil by parol evidence.

1874. The provision of Act XXXVII of 1926 does not overrule the provisions of other local Acts, as for example, the Oudh Estates Act,[6] which makes a special provision for the execution of wills by a Taluqdar. S. 20 of this Act provides that any bequest to any religious and charitable use of any interest in the estate of more than Rs. 2,000 in value shall not be made "except by will executed not less than three months before his death and registered within one month from the date of its execution."

1875. True Test.—From these and similar cases, it is clear that whatever may be the form of the instrument, whether it is formal or informal, a deed or a memorandum, the one essential thing is: Has it the effect of a will? Now, since the one characteristic or distinguishing feature of a will is its revocability, it follows that if the grant was revocable, then it is a will: otherwise it is not.[7] The fact that the grant is stated to operate in præsenti or that it is expressed to be operative in future is, though relevant, equally indecisive, since there is no magic in the future tense.[8] The fact that the document is called an agreement is no doubt a circumstance which cannot be ignored, but it should not be overrated. As stated in a case: "This per se is not much.[9] So, conversely, the fact that the document is called a will does not make it so unless it has that effect. Such was the document executed by the father who divided his estate amongst his sons, and after setting out its details, provided that "if I at any time come back from pilgrimages and find mismanagement or the character of any one bad, then I shall have power to cancel this will which shall be enforced from the date of its execution." And it concluded thus: "All the three sons were put in a separate possession of the estate in the beginning of the year 1303 Fasli. I have no other heir having a right besides those mentioned in this will. I have, therefore, executed this will in order that it may serve as evidence."

---

(1) Act XXXVII of 1926.
(2) Ibid.
(3) Act XVIII of 1929.
(4) S. 3 (57), General Clauses Act (X of 1897); S. 2 (b) Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925); Good v. Colyer, (1876) P. R. No. 33.
(5) Good v. Colyer, (1876) P.R. No. 33.
(6) S. 19 of Act I of 1869.
(7) Rajammal v. Authiammal, 33 M. 304.
(8) Per Kekewich, J., in Johnston v. Mappia, 64 L.T.R. 49 (51).
(9) Rambhat v. Lakshman, 5 B. 630 (636).

On the father's death, two of his sons sued for partition on the strength of his "will". The defence was that the deed was a partition deed, and was miscalled a will. The Privy Council held it to be a family arrangement,[1] by which all the sons were bound.

1876. It is said that an instrument which confers or reserves a life-estate to the maker, is not a will.[2] But it is submitted that this statement is too wide, since there is nothing to prevent the testator from executing a composite deed, reserving a life-interest for himself.[3]

Execution and proof of will.

238. (1) A will, subject to the provisions of section 57 of the Succession Act must be executed as provided in section 63 thereof.

(2) A will otherwise executed must be proved so as to show that it is a complete instrument and expresses the deliberate intention of the testator.

(3) The words of an oral will made before the 1st day of January, 1929, must be proved with the utmost precision, with every circumstance of time and place.

1877. Analogous Law.—Since the enactment of the Succession (Amendment) Act, 1926, a Hindu will can no longer be made otherwise than as provided in S. 57 of the Succession Act.[4] As such, it must be executed as provided in S. 63 of the Succession Act. The will does not require to be registered, and even if registered, its terms can be varied by an unregistered codicil.[5]

A will, subject to the provisions of S. 57 of the Succession Act must be executed as provided in S. 63 thereof.

1878. Proof of Execution.—A will subject to S. 57 of the Succession Act must be executed in accordance with S. 63 thereof, which enacts that it should be in writing signed and attested by at least two witnesses. The signature of the testator includes a mark, made by him or by any other person, in his presence and by his direction.[6] These formalities cannot be dispensed with even in a holograph will. The attesting witnesses are not required to be informed of the contents of the will they attest: all they do attest is its execution or its admission by the executant.

1879. Proof of Will.—As already stated, all wills are now subject to statutory control which provides for their proof. The statute defines a will as a "legal declaration", but there is no set form for such a declaration, and all that the phrase implies is that it should be a formal expression of his wish as to how the disposal of his property will take effect on his death. In order to assure him of the certainty of his wishes being given effect to, law has provided certain checks against perjury and fraud. These include the necessity of a written memorial of his intention attested by at least two witnesses.[7] In this respect, the legal formality of a will is the same as that of a gift,[8] but with this difference, that while a gift may also be com-

(1) Brij Raj Singh v. Sheonandan Singh, 35 A. 337 (352) P.C.
(2) Persab v. Guruppa, 38 B. 227 (235, 236).
(3) 20 B. 210 (214) F.B.; followed in Rajammal v. Authiammal, 33 M. 304 (307).
(4) XXXIX of 1925.
(5) Sham Rai v. Goverdhan, 78 I.C. (S.) 249.
(6) Dasu v. Venkatasubbammal, 57 M. 979.
(7) S. 63, Succession Act.
(8) S. 123, Tr. P. Act.

pleted by delivery, a will cannot be so effected, since, in point of time, it becomes effective only from the moment of the testator's death. Again, while a gift of immovable property is ineffective unless it is effected by an instrument not only attested by at least two witnesses, but also registered, a will is effective if it is so attested, though it is not compulsorily registrable, and if its registration is desired, it can be closed in a sealed cover, which may be deposited with the Registrar as provided in part IX (Ss. 42-46) of the Registration Act. But its proof is in either case subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act. Apart from its formal proof, several questions especial to the will arise, e.g., its officiousness, the mental condition of the testator, his freedom from fraud, coercion and undue influence, all of which are questions of evidence, dealt with by the Evidence Act, while the subject of its import and construction is dealt with in Chapter VI of the Succession Act, several sections of which have now been extended to Hindus.

It is not proposed to cover the ground of the two Acts; but they raise certain questions which infringe upon Hindu law and cannot, therefore, be left out.

One such question is deduced from the fact that wills are comparatively new in any part of India, and the will is consequently not a familiar instrument to the people who prepare it or those who sign it, while the testator is afraid lest he should be treated as having lost control over his property in his life-time, a fear that prompted the testator in one case to declare that even on his death he intended to remain the owner of his property, which if strictly construed would have invalidated the will, but the Privy Council overlooked this reservation and gave effect to the substantial characteristics of the disposition.[1]

1880. The question whether the will was an officious or an inofficious will is material as operating upon its probability or improbability.[2] The court will treat an officious will as prima facie improbable, being regardless of the ordinary preferences[3] of natural ties and affection. So, where a person, subject to the Mitakshara law, made a will in favour of the first cousin who lived in joint estate with him to the disinherison of his widow, except a small provision for her maintenance, in the event of her leaving the family home, the will was held, in the circumstances, proved.[4] But this is a question of antecedent probability upon which the English Judges rely upon the opinion of Hindu Judges who are more conversant with the habits and trend of thought of their co-religionists.[5] So, on the point of vernacular writing, the opinion of an Indian Judge is to be preferred to that of a European. As their Lordships observed: "Now, with great respect for the knowledge which the two learned Judges of the High Court possessed, as their Lordships doubt not, of the Bengali language, their Lordships cannot but think that upon such a point as that the native Judge, examining a letter in his own alphabet, is more likely to be a competent Judge than the two European Judges."[6] These remarks occur with reference to the construction of the letter which the moribund testator was stated to have mustered strength to write, for the word "manzur," (or "agreed") which the Sadar Amin had held to be

(1) Isri Singh v. Baldeo Singh, 10 C. 792 (801, 802) P.C.; Uday Raj v. Bhagwan, 32 A. 227 (240) P.C.

(2) Soorendranath v. Heeramoni, 12 M.I.A. 81 (97, 98).

(3) Soorendranath v. Heeramoni, 12 M.I.A. 81 (98).

(4) Ib.

(5) Rajendra v. Jogendro, 14 M.I.A. 67 (80).

(6) Rajendra v. Jogendro, 14 M.I.A. 67 (80).

in the testator's handwriting, from whom the High Court had disagreed. After expressing their preference for the Indian Judge, their Lordships proceeded: "But it is impossible from the mere inspection of the letter, as it appears to their Lordships, to be able to predicate with any degree of certainty or accuracy, that he was too weak to make the impression with his pen which he is said to have made. It is impossible to say what momentary rally of strength might take place to do an act of such brevity as that: and therefore, their Lordships are unable to give to that, which is after all merely the impression of these two judges derived from actual inspection, the weight which has been given to it."[1]

1881. A will is not invalidated merely because some person other than the devisee is competent to confer greater spiritual benefit on the testator.[2] The will of a childless Hindu, giving power to adopt a son, though opposed to the interests of the widow and the next heir in reversion, is not officious.[3]

Under English Law, a will traced to the testator's possession and not forthcoming at his death, is presumed to have been destroyed by him animo revocandi. But the same degree of presumption, if at all, does not arise under Hindu Law.[4]

1882. Nuncupative Will.—Before the enactment of 1926, a nuncupative will was valid.[5] "But if any party is bound, in strictness of pleading, it is he who sets up a nuncupative will. He who rests his title on so uncertain a foundation as the spoken words of a man, since deceased, is bound to allege, as well as to prove, with the utmost precision, the words on which he relies with every circumstance of time and place."[6]

Clause (3).

239. (1) All corrections in a will or codicil must be signed and attested where they are made, or in the margin or otherwise, so as to show that they were made and witnessed before its execution.

Correction.
Alteration.
Revocation.

(2) Any alteration made in a will or codicil must be executed and attested with the same formality as a will, and be in conformity with the provisions of section 71 of the Succession Act.

(3) The revocation of a will or codicil may be effected by destruction of the writing evidencing it, or by a writing which must be executed and attested and otherwise be in conformity with the provisions of section 70 of the Succession Act, save that the marriage of the testator has not the effect of revoking his will or codicil as provided in that section.

Illustrations.

(a) A has made an unprivileged will. Afterwards A makes another unprivileged will which purports to revoke the first.

This is a revocation.

(b) A has made an unprivileged will. Afterwards A, being minded to make a privileged will, makes a privileged will which purports to revoke his unprivileged will.

This is a revocation.

---

(1) Rajendra v. Jogendro, 14 M.I.A. 67 (84).

(2) Rookmonee v. Krisno, 20 W.R. 147

(3) Sarado v. Tincowry, 1 Hide 223.

(4) Shibi Sabitri v. Collector, 29 A. 82 (89).

(5) Sreenivasammal v. Vijayammal, 2 M.H.C.R. 37; Tarachand v. Nobin Chander, 3 W.R. 138; Sudanand v. Soorjo, 8 W.R. C.R. (A. C.) 224; Bhagwan v. Kalashankar, 1 B. 641 (644).

(6) Per Sir James Colville in Beer Partab v. Rajender, 12 M.I.A. 1 (28); Mahabir Prasad v. Syed Mustapha Husain, (1937) P.C. 174; Hargovind v. Collector, I.L.R. (1937) A. 292; Dhurilal v. Dhania, 5 N.L.R. 85.

1883. Analogous Law.—Before the enactment of the Succession (Amendment) Act 1929,[1] there was one rule for the revocation and alteration of a will subject to the Hindu Wills Act, 1870 and another applicable to the mofussil wills. But since the passing of that enactment, and the amendment of S. 57 of the Succession Act, Schedule III thereof, which includes Ss. 70 and 71 of that Act, has been extended to all wills made by a Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain, on or after the 1st January 1927,[2] which abolished nuncupative wills, with the result that all wills have now to be in writing.

Under the Hindu usage, a will is revocable without any of the restrictions enacted in the Succession Act. All that is necessary is the intention,[3] This was the law of England before the Statute of Frauds was passed.[4] It is not necessary that the will itself should be cancelled, torn up or destroyed. Nor, indeed, need the revocation be formal or in writing.[5] But though this was the law, its dangers were obvious, justifying the statutory control now effected.

1884. Correction, Alteration and Revocation.—A correction is the alteration of a document before its completion. A correction after its completion is an alteration, and an alteration amounting to its cancellation is revocation. S. 70 of the Succession Act treats marriage as a revocation. But this clause has been omitted in its application to Hindus, Buddhists, Sikhs and Jains.[6] A correction is intended by the executant, while an alteration is presumed to alter that sense. The one precedes execution while the other follows it.[7] In either case, the general provision of S. 71 will apply; that is to say, all such corrections and alterations should now be signed and attested near to the changes made or in the margin opposite or otherwise to show that they have been made by the testator. If they are not so executed and attested, it may be presumed that they are unauthorised, unless it appears from the condition of the will, internal evidence or direct proof that they are genuine.[8]

Alteration:

S. 71 of the Succession Act provides that no alteration of a will is effective unless (a) it is evidenced by a writing executed with the formalities of a will; but (b) if it is altered by obliteration, interlineation, or otherwise, e.g., by erasure;[9] overwriting such alteration is ineffective unless the meaning of the will has been thereby rendered illegible or undiscernible.

The subject of revocation is now controlled by S. 70 of the Succession Act, which, apart from its reference to marriage, applies to Hindus.

1885. Revocation of Will.—The power of revocation of a will is a necessary incident of a will and inherent in the maker, who may make and unmake it as he chooses till the hour of his death.[10] Persons may agree to make mutual wills which remain revocable during their joint lives by either with notice to the other. But where the joint will is a disposition by each testator of his own property, without any arrangement between the two, the will Joint Wills.

(1) S. 3, Act XVIII of 1929, which came into force on 1st October, 1929.

(2) Succession (Amendment) Act, 1926, (Act XXXVII of 1926) which came into force on Ist January, 1927.

(3) Pertab Narain v. Subhao, 3 C. 626 (638) P.C.

(4) Ib., p. 643.

(5) Venkayyamma v. Venkata Ramanayamma, 25 M. 678 (685) P.C.

(6) Sch. III, Succession Act.

(7) Pandrang v. Vinayak, 16 B. 652.

(8) Surendra v. Rani Dassi, 47 C. 1043 (1066); Cooper v. Backett, 4 Moo. P.C. 419; Grenville v. Tyler, 7 Moo. P.C. 320 (328).

(9) Broughton, In the goods of, 29 C. 311 (312).

(10) S. 49, Succession Act; Rambhojan v. Gircharan, 27 A. 14; Basant v. Muna, 20 C. 226.

is revocable at the will of either and cannot be proved till the death of the survivor.[1]

1886. A will, whether single or joint, is revocable. No formal words are necessary to constitute revocation. As Lord Denman, C.J., said: "Some doubt has been entertained whether any declaration could be sufficient without the word 'revoke,' but upon full consideration, we think it impossible so to limit the testator's power of revocation, and that any equivalent word or words and expressions would be sufficient for that purpose. But further, we are now required to consider whether, without any language at all, a testator may revoke a will by the conduct he exhibits. And this appears to be tantamount to an enquiry whether conduct can give a positive declaration of intent. If it can, there can be no more necessity for words than for the use of a particular expression. Now, nothing is easier than to imagine such gestures and proceedings connected with the will, as must fully convince every rational mind that the testator intended to revoke his will, and thought he had done so by the means he took for that purpose. But if he who has power to revoke by declaring a present resolution then to do so, does in fact make that resolution manifest, it seems clear that the act of revocation is complete in every essential part."[2] But in a will subject to the Succession Act, no such revocation is possible, since both the making and revoking and altering of a will is now subject to the statutory control which permits of writing or the destruction as the only means of revocation.

But a will may contain its own terms of revocation. Such was the will of a testator who had stated in the preamble to it that it was executed for that year only. He died without doing anything afterwards, to indicate his intention to keep it as a testamentary instrument, and it was held that the will had no force whatever and that the testator must be presumed to have died intestate.[3]

1887. Revocation is not only possible by the formal execution of a codicil or an instrument cancelling an executed will, but also by "the burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying the same by the testator or by some person in his presence and by his direction, with the intention of revoking the same."[4] The extreme point of this law was illustrated in a case in which the testatrix had revoked that will written and covered in a bookform of 12 pages, by drawing on its first page two cross lines and adding on the top of that page "This will is cancelled," which was signed but not attested. The will contained a codicil on pages 10 and 11. On an application for its probate, a caveat was filed and Davar, J., believed the two witnesses who swore that the writing was intended to cancel the whole will together with the caveat, and found as a fact that the testatrix had cancelled the will, but he rejected the caveat, holding that the revocation was not in accordance with the express words of S. 70, in which the words "or, otherwise" were to be read as ejusdem generis with the previous words.[5] The revocation of a will even if valid has not necessarily the effect of revoking the later codicil.[6]

Revocation by destruction.

(1) Minakshi v. Viswanatha, 20 M.L.J. 339: 5 I.C. 794.

(2) Reed v. Harris, 8 A. & E. 11, cited and followed in Chelikini v. Appa, 20 M. 207 (209, 210), reversed O. A. on a different point Venkayyamma v. Venkata Ramanayyamma, 25 M. 678 (685) P. C., as to which see now Mhd. Husain Khan v. Krishna Nandan. I.L.R. (1937) A. 655 P.C.: (1937) P.C. 233.

(3) Gnanambal v. Ammalu, 5 M.L.J. 94.

(4) S. 70, Succession Act.

(5) Kharshetji v. Kekohad, (1928) B. 194 (197).

(6) 16 Eq. 19: 2 P.D. 78: 8 P.D. 109.

1888. Effect of Marriage and Birth or Adoption of a Son.—Under S. 69 of the Succession Act, a marriage operates as a revocation of the will, but it is expressly provided in S. 57 of the Act that marriage has not that effect on a will or a codicil of a Hindu. Consequently, neither marriage nor the birth or adoption of a son[1] has the effect of revocation, though, as already remarked, the son may defeat a devise by his own claim by survivorship.

Clause (3).

1889. In England, a presumption of revocation arises from the non-discovery of the will, last shown to be in possession of the testator.[2] But no such presumption arises in this country.[3] Even in England, it raises only a presumption more or less varying in strength with the circumstances of each case,[4] and the same rule is applicable in India.[5]

Non-discovery of will.

240. (1) The validity of a will depends not upon the validity of the testator's disposing power at the execution, but upon such power possessed by him when the will becomes effective.

Subsequent invalidity of wills.

(2) As such, a will, good or bad at its execution may become invalid or valid by a subsequent event, depriving the testator of his disposing power or upon his acceding to such power when the will takes effect.

Illustrations.

(a) A and B are two coparceners of a Mitakshara family. B makes a will of his coparcenary interest which he has no right to do. But A predeceases B, and on the latter's death, the will takes effect, because, as the sole surviving coparcener, he had every right to dispose of his property.[6]

(b) A and B are two coparceners of a Mitakshara family. A dies, whereupon B survives to his interest. He bequeaths it to C whereupon A's widow adopts D. D is entitled to defeat B's survivorship by his adoption, though he could not have devested B's heirs if the estate had vested in them by inheritance.[7]

Void will.

241. (1) A will made without free will is void.

(2) As such, it is void if it appears to have been induced by coercion, fraud, undue influence, misrepresentation, apprehension of divine displeasure, constant importunity or the like.

(3) A will made by one whose power of judgment had been weakened by age, disease, distress or intemperance and infirmity of any kind is void.

(4) A will made by accident, inadvertence or mistake is void.

Explanation 1.—The term "will" in this section includes any part of the will, and the causes that render the will void apply equally to its revocation and alteration.

Explanation 2.—Where the relationship between the testator and the beneficiary is one of fiduciary character, there is a presumption that

(1) Bodi v. Venkataswamy, 39 M. 369 (373); Subba Redi v. Doraisami, 30 M. 369 (371); Harendra Nath v. Shibo, 3 L. C. (C.) 376; Vinayak v. Govindrao, 6 B. H.C.R. (A.C.) 224; Shib Sabitri v. Collector, 29 A. 82 (85).

(2) Finch v. Finch, 1 P. & D. 37 (per Sir J. P. Wilde): "It is the non-existence of the paper at the time of death which leads up to the legal presumption of revocation"; Welch v. Phillips, 1 Moo. P.C. 299; Brown v. Brown, 8 E. & B. 876; Sugden v. Lord St. Deonards, L.R. 1 P. D. 154.

(3) Chidambara v. Swaminathan, 13 M. L.J. 135; Hanwata v. Padam, (1909) P. W.R. 160; Shib Sabitri v. Collector, 29 A. 82 (89); Anwar Hossain v. Secretary of State, 31 C. 885.

(4) Brown v. Brown, 8 E. and B. 876.

(5) Welch v. Phillips, 1 Moo. P.C. 299.

(6) Balu v. Lahoo, I.L.R. (1937) B. 508 (543) F.B.

(7) Ib.

a bequest to him was induced by his undue influence, and it lies upon the beneficiary to rebut such presumption.[1]

Illustrations.

(a) A threatens to shoot B, or to burn his house, or to cause him to be arrested on a false charge unless he makes a bequest in favour of C. B, in consequence, makes a bequest in favour of C. The bequest is void as induced by coercion.

(b) A falsely informs B that his son is dead and thereby induces B to bequeath his estate to A. The bequest is void.

(c) A, being in so feeble a state of mind as to be unable to resist importunity, is pressed by B to make a will of a certain property, and A does so merely to purchase peace and in submission to B. The will is void.

(d) A wishes to revoke his will made in favour of B. B threatens to kill A if he revoked it. The will is void.

(e) A makes a will in favour of B on his death-bed. He is induced by importunities of C to alter it in favour of C. The alteration is void.

(f) A is induced by the adulation and flattery of B to make a bequest in his favour. The bequest is not rendered invalid by reason of B's adulation and flattery.

1890. Analogous Law.—This section is adopted from S. 61 of the Succession Act which now applies to all Hindu wills, but even before its application, it was held to embody an equitable principle and so applied to them.[2] The section as set out here is explanatory of the statutory provision enlarged in the light of leading cases. The language of S. 61 of the Succession Act, which follows the vocabulary of English law, specifies importunity but omits "undue influence", though both are a species of coercion. Similarly, "misrepresentation" is included in "fraud", while age, diseases and drunkenness, mistake and the like fall out of the requirement of "intention" in the definition of "will".

1891. Free Will.—To be operative, the will must emanate from the free will of the maker, who must have then possessed a disposing mind. This does not mean that the making of a will must originate with the testator;[3] nor is it required that proof should be given of the commencement of such a transaction, provided it be proved that the testator completely understood, adopted and sanctioned the disposition proposed to him, and that the instrument, if made, itself embodied such disposition.[4] If a part of a will has been obtained by fraud or any of the other means above enumerated, it is to that extent invalid, unless it alters the sense of the remainder, so that there is a question whether there is a valid will at all.[5]

1892. Force and fraud are sufficient to vitiate all transactions. As such, they vitiate a will. But apart from these, a will may be vitiated if it is caused by the exercise of undue influence. As Eyre, C.B., said: "There is another ground which, though not so distinct as that of actual force, nor so easy to be proved, yet, if it should be made out, it would certainly destroy the will, that is, if a dominion was acquired by any person over a mind of sufficient sanity to general purposes, and of sufficient soundness and discretion to regulate his affairs in general; yet if such a dominion or influence were acquired over him as to prevent the exercise of such discretion, it would be equally inconsistent with the idea of a disposing mind."[6] To which Williams adds in his work on Executors: "But the

(1) Wright v. Carter, (1903) Ch. 27.
(2) Bali v. Husani, (1894) P.R. 55; Khashalal v. Administrator-General, 5 C. W.N. 505.
(3) Constable v. Tufnell, 3 Knapp 122: Hyde 250; Trimbston v. D'Alton, 1 D. & G. 85.
(4) Constable v. Tufnell, 3 Knapp 122.
(5) Rhodes v. Rhodes, L.R. 7 App. Cas. 192.
(6) Mountain v. Beinett, 1 Cox 355.

influence to vitiate an act must amount to force and coercion, destroying free agency; it must not be the influence of affection and attachment; it must not be the mere desire of gratifying the wishes of another, for that would be a very strong ground in support of a testamentary act; further, there must be proof that the act was dictated by his coercion; by importunity which could not be resisted; that it was done merely for the sake of peace, so that the motive was tantamount to force and fear."[1]

1893. The same view was taken by Lord Cranworth in delivering the judgment of the House of Lords, in the course of which he said: "In a popular sense, we often speak of a person exercising undue influence over another, when the influence certainly is not of a nature which would invalidate a will. A young man is often led into dissipation by following the example of a companion of riper years, to whom he looks up, and who leads him to consider the habits of dissipation as venial, and perhaps even creditable; the companion is then correctly said to exercise an undue influence. But if, in these circumstances, the young man, influenced by his regard for the person who has thus led him astray, were to make a will and leave to him everything he possessed, such a will certainly could not be impeached on the ground of undue influence. Nor would the case be altered merely because the companion had urged, or even importuned, the young man to dispose of his property; provided only that, in making such a will, the young man was really carrying into effect his own intention, formed without either coercion or fraud. I must further remark that all the difficulties of defining the point at which influence exerted over the mind of a testator becomes so pressing as to be properly described as coercion are greatly enhanced when the question is one between husband and wife. The relation constituted by marriage is of a nature which makes it as difficult to inquire, as it would be impolitic to permit inquiry, into all which may have passed in the intimate union of affections and interests which it is the paramount purpose of that connection to cherish.

"In order therefore, to have something to guide us in our inquiries on this very difficult subject, I am prepared to say that influence, in order to be 'undue' within the meaning of any rule of law, which would make it sufficient to vitiate a will, must be an influence exercised by coercion or by fraud. In the interpretation, indeed, of these words, some latitude must be allowed. In order to come to the conclusion that a will has been obtained by coercion, it is not necessary to establish that actual violence has been used, or even threatened. The conduct of a person in vigorous health towards one feeble in body, even though not unsound in mind, may be such as to excite terror and make him execute as his will an instrument which, if he had been free from such influence, he would not have executed. Imaginary terrors may have been created sufficient to deprive him of free agency; a will thus made may possibly be described as obtained by coercion. So, as to fraud, if a wife, by falsehood, raises prejudices in the mind of her husband against those who would be the natural object of his bounty, and, by contrivance, keeps him from intercourse with his relatives, to the end that these impressions, which, she knows, he had thus formed to their disadvantage, may never be removed; such contrivance may, perhaps, be equivalent to positive fraud, and may render invalid any will executed under false impressions thus kept alive. It is, however, extremely difficult to state in the abstract what acts will constitute undue influence in questions of this nature. It is sufficient to say, that, allowing a fair latitude of construction, they must range themselves under one or other of these heads—coercion or fraud."[1]

(1) Williams on Executors (9th Ed.), 40, citing Williams v. Goode, 1 Hagg. 581; Constable v. Tufnell, 4 Hagg. 485; Sefton v. Hopwood, 1 Fost & F. 578; Lavett v. Lavett. 1 Fost & F. 481; Hall v. Hall, L. R. 1 P. & D. 481: enacted as S. 48. Succession Act, and followed in Jajneshwari v. Ugneshwari, 11 C.W.N. 828.

1894. The undue influence vitiating a will must be an influence exercised in relation to the will itself, not an influence in relation to other matters or transactions. But, as pointed out by Lord Cranworth in the case last cited, this principle must not be carried too far. "Where a jury sees that, at and near the time when the will sought to be impeached was executed, the alleged testator was, in another important transaction, so under the influence of the person benefited by the will that, as to them, he was not a free agent, but was acting under a control, the circumstances may be such as fairly to warrant the conclusion, even in the absence of evidence bearing direct on the execution of the will, that, in regard to that also, the same undue influence was exercised."[2] So, in another case Sir J. Wilde (afterwards Lord Penzance) directed the jury in these words: "To make a good will, a man must be a free agent. All influences are not unlawful. . . . But pressure, of whatever character, whether acting on the fears or the hopes, if so exerted as to empower the volition without convincing the judgment, is a species of restraint under which no valid will can be made. The importunity or threats, such as the testator had assented and yielded to for the sake of peace and quiet, or of escaping from distress of mind or social discomfort—these, if carried to a degree in which the free play of the testator's judgment, discretion, or wishes is overborne, will constitute 'undue influence', though no force is either used or threatened. In a word, a testator may be led but not driven, and his will must be the offspring of his own volition and not the record of some one else."[3]

1895. It will be thus seen that the term "undue influence," as used in relation to wills, has a more limited meaning than it bears as operating on contracts and gifts. These latter are set aside, if it can be shown that, by reason of a relationship, one was in a position to dominate the will of the other. But in the case of a will, such relationship is no evidence of coercion or dominion exercised over the testator against his will, or of coercion so strong that it could not be resisted.[4]

1896. The question of undue influence must not be mixed up with that of incapacity, since incapacity is one thing and undue influence another,[5] though the proof of one is not irrelevant to the proof of another,[6] for the exercise of undue influence is greatly facilitated by feeble health, produced by disease, distress or age.[7]

Burden of proof.

242. (1) The burden of proving a will lies upon the person who propounds it, and not upon the person who impeaches it.[8]

(1) Boyse v. Rossborough, 6 H.L.C. 1.
(2) Boyse v. Rossborough, 6 H.L.C. 1 (6), followed in Sayad Muhammad v. Fatteh Muhammad, 22 C. 324 (336, 337) P.C.
(3) Hall v. Hall, L.R. 1 P. & D. 481.
(4) Parfitt v. Lawless, L.R. 2 P. & D. 462.
(5) Sayad Muhammad v. Fatteh Muhammad, 22 C. 324 (336) P.C.
(6) Levett v. Levett, 1 F. & F. 581.
(7) Woomesh Chunder v. Rashmohini, 21 C. 279; Bur Singh v. Uttam Singh, 38 C. 355 P.C.
(8) Sukh Dei v. Kedarnath, 23 A. 405 P.C.; Bindeshri Prasad v. Balakha, 24 C. W.N. 674: 61 I.C. 431 P.C.

(2) Such proof must comprise not only the proof of the execution, but also that the executant was of a sound disposing mind, though, if nothing appears to the contrary, this may be presumed.[1]

Explanation.—A person is said to possess a disposing mind if he possesses sufficient understanding and reason to be able to form an intelligent judgment as to the disposal of his property.

1897. Analogous Law.—Both the clauses of this section are supported by the decisions of the Privy Council. If a party writes or prepares a will under which he takes a benefit, or if other circumstances exist which excite the suspicion of the court, and whatever their nature may be, it is for those who propound the will to remove such suspicion, and to prove affirmatively that the testator knew, and approved of, the contents of the will, and it is only where this is done that the onus is thrown upon those who oppose the will to prove fraud, or undue influence, or whatever they rely on to displace the case for proving the will.[2]

1898. Ordinarily, proof of due execution will be sufficient if only execution is proved, it being presumed that the testator was competent. But where his competency is challenged, it must be proved as a part of "due execution," that is to say, he who proves execution by a person must also affirmatively establish his competency to the extent that he possessed, at the time, a sound disposing mind.[3] But when once it is proved that the will was executed with due solemnization by a person of competent understanding, apparently as a free agent, the burden of proving that it was executed under undue influence would rest on the party who alleged it. That burden would not be discharged merely by showing that the beneficiary under the will had the power to unduly overbear the will of the testator. It must be shown that in the particular case, the power was exercised and that it was by means of the exercise of that power that the will was obtained.[4]

1899. Disposing Mind.—The testator must be known to possess a disposing mind, that is to say, a mind sufficiently sound to understand the nature of the act.[5] A man may be a monomaniac,[6] but it does not incapacitate him from making a will. Even a lunatic may make a will in his lucid intervals, the only difference being that, upon proof of general insanity, it will be on those relying upon the will to prove its execution during a lucid interval.[7]

The amount of intelligence which constitutes a disposing mind was thus defined by Warren, J.: "A man is competent to make his will if he has sufficient memory and intelligence to be able to comprehend the nature of his property, to remember and understand the claims of relations and friends, and to have a judgment of his own

---

(1) Shunmugaroya v. Manikka, 32 M. 400 P.C.

(2) Lachho v. Gopi, 23 A. 472.

(3) Woomesh Chunder v. Rashmohini, 21 C. 279; O.A. Rash Mohini v. Umesh Chander, 25 C. 824 P.C.; Bur Singh v. Uttam Singh, 38 C. 335 P.C.

(4) Craig v. Lamorense, (1920) A.C. 493.

(5) Woomesh Chunder v. Rashmohini, 21 C. 279; Bur Singh v. Uttam Singh, 38 C. 355 (366, 367) P.C.; Saradindunath v. Sudhirchandra, 50 C. 100; Purandar v. Tulsa, 9 C.P.L.R. 139; Anandi v. Harlal, 15 C.P.L.R. 1 (2).

(6) Vanks v. Goodfellow, L.R. 5 Q.B. 549.

(7) Cartwright v. Cartwright, 1 Phillim. 100.

in disposing of his property. . . . If a man possesses this amount of memory and intelligence, he is a competent testator; if he is not able to perform the mental acts mentioned, then he is not a competent testator."[1] "It is not sufficient, in order to make a will, that a man should be able to maintain an ordinary conversation and to answer familiar and easy questions. He must have more 'mind' than suffices for that. He must have what the old lawyers called 'a disposing mind.' He must be able to dispose of his property with understanding and reason. This does not mean that he should make what other people may think a sensible will, or a reasonable will, or a kind will. . . . But he must be able to understand his position, he must be able to appreciate his property and to form a judgment with respect to the parties whom he chooses to benefit by it after death; and if he has capacity for that, it suffices.[2]

1900. The term "disposing mind," is thus defined by the Privy Council: "In order to constitute a sound disposing mind, a testator must not only be able to understand that he is, by his will, giving the whole of his property to one object of his regard, but that he must also have capacity to comprehend the extent of his property and the nature of the claims of others whom, by his will, he is excluding from all participation in his property. . . . The question is not whether Mr. Baker knew when he was giving all his property to his wife and excluding all his other relations from any share in it, but whether he was at the time capable of recollecting who those relations were, of understanding their respective claims upon his regard and bounty, and of deliberately forming an intelligent purpose of excluding them from any share of his property."[3]

1901. Proof of Will.—Two things are essential to the proof of a will: (i) That the executant had a disposing mind, and (ii) that he had executed it. Mere proof of execution is not sufficient, but if added to execution, there is the proof of the executant's disposing mind, then the requirements of law are satisfied. It is then on him who challenges its execution to disprove it. It is of the utmost necessity that the will should be proved by the evidence of the attesting witnesses; if they are not procurable, their absence must be explained satisfactorily.[4] Law does not require that the attesting witnesses should know anything more than that the executant had signed the will or acknowledged its execution by him.[5] But this is the minimum, though not the only requirement of law; since it is for the attesting witnesses to satisfy themselves that the testator then possessed a 'sound disposing mind,' was free to act and was so acting without undue influence, fraud, coercion or the importunity of any of those surrounding him. Moreover, if the testator be a pardanashin lady, this necessity becomes doubly great, for, in that case, law throws round her a special cloak of protection. It demands that the burden of proof shall, in such a case, rest, not with those who attack, but with those who found their claim upon the deed, and the proof must go so far as to show affirmatively and conclusively that the deed was not only executed by, but was explained to, and was really understood by, the grantor. In such cases it must also, of course, be established that the will

(1) Longford v. Purdon, Ir. R. Ch. 75 (77).

(2) Per Creswell, J., in Sefton v. Hopwood, 1 F. & F. 579; Parker v. Telgate, 8 P.D. 171; Saradindunath v. Sudhirchandra, 50 C. 100.

(3) Bacry v. Butlin, 2 Moo. P.C. 480; 12 E.R. 1089; Harwood v. Baker, 3 Moo. P.C. 282 (290); Gopessur In re, 16 C.W.N. 265 (269).

(4) Ss. 68, 69, Ev. Act.

(5) S. 63 (c), Succession Act.

was not signed under duress, but arose from the free and independent will of the grantor.[1]

1902. Law does not require that the attesting witnesses should possess any special qualifications. But what it does expect is that they must be honest, truthful and independent men. The fact that the will is attested by the testator's servants and dependents is, of course, no ground for holding it invalid, though that fact becomes material when there is a reasonable suspicion that the will is not the voluntary act of the testator and has been procured by the undue influence of members of his household.[2] That such influence must be connected with the execution of the will and be not merely general, which may have influenced its execution, has been laid down in several cases, both English and Indian.[3]

1903. Though the will be in writing, and even registered, the courts require it to be proved with the same degree of precision as a nuncupative will. In an ordinary case, "proof of the testator's signature is all that is needed; but in case of doubt or dispute, justice requires that the best evidence procurable of that signature should be furnished, and an attempt to support the signature by anything that falls short of this standard, is a matter which, though it may not be fatal, is a serious defect."[4] The fact that the deceased had previously expressed a desire to make a will, or made previous wills, is admissible to prove not only the animus testandi[5] but also the genuineness of the will to be proved.[6] Its naturalness or unnaturalness is another important element for consideration.[7] It is sufficient for the proof of the will that the attesting witnesses prove that the executant had affixed his signature in their presence and that he was then in a 'sound disposing mind.' But there is no rule of law that on proof of the fact that the testator had himself read the will, or that it was read over to him, it must be presumed that he had understood all that he had read or heard.[8] But, as their Lordships observed: "A will is one of the most solemn documents known to the law. By it a dead man entrusts to the living the carrying out of his wishes, and as it is impossible that he can be called, either to deny his signature or to explain the circumstances in which it was attached, it is essential that trustworthy and effective evidence should be given to establish compliance with the necessary forms of the law.[9]

1904. What is, then, the degree of consciousness and intelligence that is sufficient to uphold the will of a dying man? "To constitute a good testamentary disposition, the testator must retain a degree of understanding to comprehend what he is doing—to have a volition or power of choice: so that what he does must really be his own doing and not the doing of anybody else.

"The faculties in those two great divisions, of the understanding, and the will, must still exist. They have declined from their former comprehensiveness and vigour, they may be, and often are, on such occasions, weak and actually on the point of being extinguished; still though they may be, as it were, flickering in the socket, yet, if they suffice to show the genuine and last behests of a rational creature, and a free agent, that is a good will in point of law. Wills are too frequently made by the sick

(1) 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), § 316.
(2) Chot Narain v. Ratan, 22 C. 519 (532) P.C.
(3) Sala Mahomed v. Janbai, 22 B. 17 (37, 38) P.C. (case of Khoja merchant of Zanzibar who followed Hindu customs as regards his property).
(4) Ram Gopal v. Apina Kunwar, 44 A. 495 (500) P.C.
(5) "The intention of making a will."
(6) Palchur v. Palchur, (1922) P.C. 315.
(7) Biro v. Atmaram, (1937) P.C. 101.
(8) Fulton v. Andrew, L.R. 7 H.L. 448.
(9) Ram Gopal v. Apina Kunwar, 44 A. 495 (500) P.C.

and dying; the degree of understanding, therefore, which the law requires, is such as may reasonably be expected from persons in that condition. It is not enough that the testator is able to answer familiar and usual questions. That has always been laid down. He must be able to exercise a competent understanding as to the general nature of the property, as to the state of his family, and as to the general condition and claims of the objects of his bounty, as to the nature of the instrument which he executes, and as to the general nature and general objects and the provisions which it contains, if he can do that, though he may be very feeble and debilitated in understanding, and be at the point of death, it is enough."[1]

1905. These observations were applied to the will of a person, executed during his last illness, which the court held had not been executed in a state of mind where he could deliberate upon its nature and character.[2] But in another case, the Privy Council upheld the will of a moribund testator, against whom all that was proved was that he was generally intemperate and at the time seriously ill, and as to the charge of undue influence, all that was shown was that there was motive and opportunity for its exercise, which, in their Lordships' view, was a ground for suspision such as should justify the scrutiny, with special care, of the evidence of those who propound the will. "But in order to set it aside, there must be clear evidence that the undue influence was in fact exercised, or that the illness of the testator so affected his mental faculties as to make them unequal to the task of disposing of his property."[3] Such evidence was lacking in the case, and the circumstances attending the making and execution of the will were not reasonably consistent with it.

1906. A will is not invalidated on the ground of its having been executed under pressure, unless the pressure was such as the testator could not resist.[4] But in an ordinary case, this must be proved by the party who pleads its invalidity upon that ground.[5] The fact that the will is unjust to the testator's wife and children does not rebut proof of execution,[6] though it would invalidate it, if it is shown that his estrangement towards them had been brought about by misrepresentations concerning their attitude towards the testator.[7]

1907. In an ordinary case, it lies on him who propounds the will to prove it. But where the propounder is himself the beneficiary and the relationship between him and the testator was one of a fiduciary character, law presumes that the bequest to him was induced by undue influence and it lies on him to rebut such presumption.[8] The question of evidence in such cases depends largely on the nature and amount of the benefit taken by him and all the circumstances of the case.[9] It is then on the court to exercise great vigilance and scrutiny in judging of his evidence to satisfy itself that the beneficiary had not exercised undue influence over the testator in procuring the will.[10]

Onus on the Propounder.

(1) Swinfen v. Swinfen, 1 F. & F. 584, followed in Woomesh Chunder v. Rashmohini, 21 C. 279 (293, 294.)

(2) Woomesh Chunder v. Rashmohini, 21 C. 279.

(3) Bur Singh v. Uttam Singh, 38 C. 355 P.C.

(4) Janeshwara v. Ugneshwari, 11 C. W.N. 824.

(5) Mriti Bai v. Jamsetjee, 29 C.W.N. 45: 80 I.C. 777: (1924) P.C. 28.

(6) Monghi Bai v. Pragji, 30 C.W.N. 462: (1925) P.C. 198.

(7) Govindaswami v. Kannammal, 51 M.L.J. 747.

(8) Fulton v. Andrew, L.R. 7 H.L. 448 (461).

(9) Gangabai v. Bhagwandas, 29 B. 530 (559) P.C.

(10) Barry v. Butlin, 2 Moo. P.C. 480 (482), followed in Fulton v. Andrew, L.R. 7 H.L. 448 (461); Vellaswami v. Shivaraman, 8 R. 179.

CHAPTER XIX.

CONSTRUCTION OF GIFTS AND WILLS.

1908. Topical Introduction.—The first and the only object of construction is to fathom the true intention of the executant. For this purpose the court has to take its seat in the easy-chair of the executant and think his thoughts—which is sometimes not an easy thing to do. All rules of construction have this one object in view, namely, how to hold communion with the dead and obtain his message of what he intended by his words and expressions, which baffle those who have to give effect to them. In England, the rules of construction have become interwoven with the history of real property which, again, has followed the peculiar tenures, which are the offspring of its political history. India is in this respect happy, because its land tenures have no history prior to the establishment of the British rule, when all land was technically held on sufferance, though, in reality, Indian rulers recognised that possession was nine points of the law, and suffered succeeding generations to hold and thrive upon their ancestral domains.

1909. When the British assumed the Government of this country, they naturally found land held under grants and gifts, which they, after inquiry, formally reaffirmed and ratified. In doing so, they found the grants of previous rulers ambiguous, defective, incomplete or imperfect. It then became necessary to construe them. The first tendency of the courts was to construe them in the light of the voluminous rules of interpretation which centuries of Judicial dicta had multiplied and developed. But it was soon perceived that Indian deeds could not be construed with the aid of these rules, which had grown up side by side with a very special law of property and a very artificial system of conveyancing which follows the rules of construction, in the light of which formal documents are ordinarily framed and interpreted. Expert conveyancing in India outside the Presidency towns is yet unknown and even in the Presidency towns, deeds and wills of Hindus and Mahomedans are drawn up upon forms modelled on English conveyancing, without adverting to the radical difference which the two systems present.

1910. Apart from such deeds, which must be banned as outlaws from the domain of this chapter, the vast majority of deeds and wills are drawn up with bucolic simplicity, in which the barest outline of the executant's intention is disclosed. These documents have to be construed by the courts, which, in this respect, are courts of conscience, but now bound by the technical rules of construction enacted in sections 74-111 (except sections 91-94, 99 and 100) of the Succession Act. To them the few rules here set out must appeal as rules based upon no peculiarity of English Law, but rather rules which are the outcome of robust commonsense which, in the language of law, passes as "justice, equity and good conscience," and which, in so far as they are not covered by the statutory rules, must be treated as supplementary to them.

1911. In the construction of a man's words law takes account of the varying degree of the human mind. If his dominant motive was to benefit a person as a centre of his affection, then it ignores his description of him. If his intention was to pass the benefit to a person who answers his description, then it ignores the fact that he is named unless the description fits him. If his gift is conditional, it is then a question whether the condition was a condition precedent to its validity. And since human language is at best an inadequate vehicle for expressing human thought, and people take many things for granted, law cannot ignore this infirmity of the human mind. In this country, it is a trite learning that people affect loose expressions in their ordinary intercourse, which they do not eschew in writing. The task of the construer becomes difficult when he is confronted with a string of such expressions in a deed or will, penned by a penny-a-liner whose services have been (it may be) requisitioned from the adjoining village, who formulated his draft, giving it the garb of a solemn scroll, adapting it, as far as he can, to his own notion of what he is accustomed to regard as embodying the instructions received from his employer, assisted (it may be) by the assembled quidnuncs, using terms and expressions which he has got by heart and which he uses in caprice but which, as often as not, would not have been more bewildering if he had used them with malignity.

1912. A document of this character, seldom reflected on, and often hurried through, can only be liberally construed, as has been so often emphasized in the decided cases. But the liberality of construction, too, has its limits. And the sections formulated in this chapter are intended to set out some of the leading rules which the courts have been driven to adopt for their own guidance. Some of these are self-evident and others self-explanatory, but all are such as the wisdom of the Judges have commended as calculated to lighten the labour of those upon whom rests the duty of understanding the true meaning of other men.

Deed includes will.

243. In this chapter, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, the term "deed" includes a "will".

1913. Analogous Law.—In English Law, the term "will" is treated as distinct from a "Deed," since the one operates on the executant's death, while the other conveys an interest inter vivos. But the rules governing their construction are mostly the same, and the following rules, therefore, apply equally to both.

Construction of Indian deeds.

244. Gifts and wills must be liberally construed so as to give effect to the grantor's true intention ascertainable, as far as possible, without the aid of any artificial rules of construction.[1]

1914. Analogous Law.—There are two modes of construction favoured by law, viz., the literal and the benignant construction. The English Law enacted in several sections of chapter II of the Transfer of Property Act and of chapter VI of the Succession Act, favours the first method of interpretation which is natural owing to the advanced stage of English conveyancing and its phraseology, adapted to the rules of interpretation, which have become an integral part thereof, but the same rule of literal construction cannot be extended to this country where the law of property is different and the art of conveyancing outside the Presidency towns practically unknown.

(1) Indirarani v. Akshaykumar, 60 C. 554 (565) P.C., following Nagendra Nath v. Kamal Basini, 23 C. 563 (572) P.C.

1915. The only rule possible for this informal mode of expression is that laid down by the Privy Council who said: "Deeds and contracts of the people of India ought to be liberally construed. The form of expression, the literal sense, is not to be so much regarded as the real meaning of the parties which the transaction discloses."[1] The court must not lay undue emphasis upon what the deed is called and ignore what it is actually.[2] This rule their Lordships have repeated in other cases,[3] in one of which they emphatically called their attention to the following passage in the judgment of Wilson, J., which they approved. "It is no new doctrine that the rules established in English courts for construing English documents are not as such applicable to transactions between natives of this country. Rules of construction are rules designed to assist in ascertaining the intention and the applicability of many such rules depends upon the habits of thought and modes of expression prevalent amongst those to whose language they are applied. English rules of construction have grown up side by side with a very special law of property and a very artificial system of conveyancing and the success of those rules in giving effect to the real intention of those, whose language they are used to interpret, depends, not more upon their original fitness for that purpose than upon the fact that English documents of a formal kind are ordinarily framed with a knowledge of the very rules of construction which are afterwards applied to them. It is a very serious thing to use such rules in interpreting the instruments of Hindus, who view most transactions from a different point, think differently and speak differently from Englishmen and have never heard of the rules in question."[4]

A document may be intended to operate as a will, but that failing, it may still operate as a family arrangement, as where the widow executes two simultaneous documents at the same time, one a will, making provision for her grand-daughter and another an adoption deed. The adopted son attests the deed in token of his consent, in which case, the will failing, it will be held good as evidencing a family arrangement.[5]

1916. So in the Tagore case, the same High Tribunal had observed that the construction of the will of an Indian, even though it was drawn up by an English solicitor and containing phrases borrowed from the English forms of conveyancing was no exception to the rule.[6] So where a will is

---

(1) Hunooman Prasad v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (411, 412); Indirarani v. Akshaykumar, 60 C. 544 (565) P.C.

(2) Kondapalli v. Sudarsana, 48 M. 614 P.C.

(3) Sreemutty v. Sibchunder, 6 M.I.A. 1; Gokuldas v. Rambux, 11 I.A. 126; Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 P.C.; Rai Bishen v. Asmaida, 6 A. 560 P.C.; Mathura Das v. Narain, 19 A. 39 P.C.; Vassonji v. Chanda Bibi, 37 A. 369 P.C.; Ramlal v. Kanai Lal, 12 C. 663 P.C.; Bhagabati v. Kalicharan, 38 C. 468 P.C.

(4) Ramlal v. Kanailal, 12 C. 663 (678), cited with approval in Bhagabati v. Kalicharan, 38 C. 468 (474) P.C., affirming O.A. 32 C. 992; Skinner v. Naunihal Singh, 36 A. 105 P.C., Sardar Nisar Ali v. Mhd. Alikhan, (1932) P.C. 172.

(5) Kashibai v. Tatta, 40 B. 669; Venkoba v. Ranganayaki, (1936) M. 967.

(6) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 P.C.

drawn up in English language by a Hindu testator whose mother tongue is an Indian vernacular "it is comparatively easy to determine what the Indian testator meant to say. The difficulty is to be satisfied judicially that in his English language he has succeeded in saying it."[1]

1917. Where the recitals are in conflict with the operative words, the latter prevail.[2] The question whether a writing operates as a gift or a will depends upon whether the interest conveyed is irrevocable or not, and upon what is the point of time from which the interest is intended to pass.[3] In the case of repugnancy, the rule is that the earlier part in a deed and the latter one in a will prevails. Where the testator made two wills, the fact that the later will failed would not create intestacy if the testator had cancelled the earlier will on the assumption that his second will was valid.[4] (§ 1964).

1918. An Oudh Taluqdar, in a settlement of his estate to take effect after his death, provided that after the deaths of himself, his son and the widow of his eldest son (to each of whom a life-interest was given), his second son Lachman "and his heirs and representatives shall succeed to the estate as provided by S. 22 of Act I of 1869."[5] Lachman died, bequeathing the estate absolutely to his second son Narain Singh, superseding his eldest son Ram Prakash, whose son disputed the validity of the will, inter alia on the ground that the interest conveyed to Lachman was not absolute, being expressly limited "as provided by S. 22 of Act I of 1869." That section, however, lays down special rules of succession, only applicable to intestate Taluqdars and their grantees. It was held that the bequest to Lachman, his heirs and representatives conveyed to him an absolute and not merely a limited estate, and that the reference to S. 22 was a surplusage and could not limit what had already been given away by the preceding words of sufficient amplitude. In other words, as those words derogated from the grant already made, they were inoperative.

Grant or bequest conveys grantor's entire interest.

245. A grant or bequest prima facie conveys the entire interest of the grantor unless it is limited expressly or by necessary implication.[6]

Explanation.*—The fact that the grantee or devisee is a female relation does not limit the extent of her interest by reason only of her sex relationship.[7]

Illustrations.

(a) A, the proprietor of the estate B, bequeaths it to C with words: "I give B to C." The quantum of interest bequeathed to C is that possessed by A at the moment of his death.[8]

(b) A, the proprietor of the estate, B, bequeaths it to his wife C with the words: "I give B to C." The quantum of interest bequeathed to C is prima facie the same as was possessed by A at the moment of his death.

---

(1) Indirarani v. Akshayakumar, 60 C. 554 (556, 565) P.C., following Narendra v. Kamal Basini, 23 C. 563 (572) P.C.

(2) Hussain v. Chin Chong, 3 R. 83.

(3) Sengamalam v. Logambal, 86 I.C. 8: (1925) M. 471.

(4) Govinda v. Ramcharan, 52 C. 748.

(5) Lal Ram Singh v. Deputy Commissioner, 45 A. 596 (603) P.C.

(6) Cf. S. 8, T.P. Act; S. 95, Succ. Act.

(7) S. 8, T.P. Act, S. 95, Succ. Act.

(8) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (395) P.C.

1919. Analogous Law.—Clause (1) of this section states a general rule of universal application, and one which underlies S. 8 of the Transfer of Property Act and S. 95 of the Succession Act, and is in accordance with the English rule that every grant must be construed most strongly against the grantor as conveying all that he has not reserved by words or necessary implication.[1] The explanation is added to distinguish the present law, resulting from the extension of the provisions of section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act[2] and those of section 95 of the Succession Act to Hindu transfers and wills respectively, overruling the contrary held in a large number of cases in which the courts had settled down to the view that a gift or a bequest to a female relation prima facie conveyed only a life-estate, since that was the limit imposed upon an estate that females took by inheritance.[3] The rule here enunciated, of course, applies only where the deed is ambiguous and is not sufficiently explicit as to the quantum of interest conveyed to a female donee, since it is now enacted that the words which are sufficient to convey an absolute estate in favour of a male relation are equally sufficient to convey the same interest where the donee or devisee is a female.

1920. In one case, the father, the holder of an impartible Raj, made a gift of a village to his daughter on the occasion of her marriage, providing that the daughter should hold possession of it without the power of transfer, and that on her death, it should descend to her children, but that if she died childless, the village should revert to the grantor. The daughter having died childless, the grantor's successor sued for resumption, and the Privy Council held that the resumption was justified under the terms of the grant which conferred an absolute estate defeasible on failure of issue.[4] So, where the testator, after creating an endowment for religious worship in a pagoda, directed that the shebaitship should be held by his wife, and after his death by his son, and after his death "by my daughter and her husband Nundoo Lal Bose and their male children successively," the Privy Council held the word "successively" to control the whole gift to the daughter, her husband and the male children, the intention being to give life-estates in the shebaitship to the sons of his daughter in succession.[5] In another case, the testator, who had no male issue, bequeathed certain real property to his eldest daughter and her sons from generation to generation. The legatee, who had daughters, predeceased the testator who also then died, leaving a widow and other daughters surviving him. The daughters of the deceased legatee claimed the property as the lineal descendants of the testator, contending that although S. 109 of the Indian Succession Act did not apply to the case, it should be held to govern it by analogy, as affording a guide to justice, equity and good conscience. It was held that the English rule embodied in the Succession Act, providing that, on a gift to the testator's child, the legacy did not lapse on the legatee dying before the testator leaving lineal descendants, could not be extended by analogy to Hindu Law, and that on the legatee predeceasing the testator, the gift failed altogether.[6]

---

(1) Damodar Das v. Dayabhai, 22 B. 833 (841).

(2) See Ss. 2 (d) and 129 as amended by Act XX of 1929.

(3) For earlier cases on this point, see Hindu Code (3rd Ed.), §§ 2262, 2263, pp. 1118, 1119.

(4) Sham Shivendra v. Janki Kuar, 36 C. 311 P.C.

(5) Gopal Chunder v. Kartikchunder, 29 C. 716 P.C.

(6) Ramamirtham v. Ranganathan, 24 M. 299; Nanhi v. Nathu, 1 C.P.L.R. 45; Krishna Das v. Dwarkadass, (1937) B. 679.

Gift to coparceners.

1921. The question whether a gift, made to two or more coparceners jointly, conveys to them a joint or separate interest—a joint tenancy or a tenancy-in-common—has been considered in some cases.[1] But the question seems to be one of intention,[2] in the absence of which, the donees would take as tenants-in-common and not as joint tenants with a right of survivorship inter se.[3] But a gift to two or more persons, without indicating an intention that they were to take as tenants-in-common, constitutes a joint tenancy. But this is, as pointed out by the Privy Council,[4] an extremely technical rule of conveyancing,[5] which cannot be extended to Hindu Law, as it has been (it is submitted, erroneously,) in some cases.[6]

1922. The donor's intention must be gathered primarily from the deed of gift, construed with reference to the rule of construction adapted to the personal law to which the parties may be subject. Where, for instance, the testator (a Parsi) bequeathed his property to his widow and daughters, directing "that the donees were to agree together and to manage the affairs with unanimity, after whom his daughter's two sons were the owners of whatever property and estate there may be belonging to me," Fulton, J., held it to constitute a tenancy-in-common, but on appeal, this view was overruled, the court applying the English rule of construction applicable to the Parsis and holding that the gift was a joint gift to the two sons, Farran, C.J., observing: "Speaking as a grammarian I apprehend that a simple gift to A and B is a joint gift, that is to say, for the purpose of the gift, the two are treated as one person. The idea is more clear when a gift to a class, as for example, to the inhabitants of a parish is assumed. If a gift is made in that form, no one would, I imagine, suggest that it was a gift to each of the inhabitants of a proportionate share in the bequest. They are all considered as a unit for the purpose of accepting the gift. The Roman jurists adopted the same view."[7] This case was, of course, expressly decided with reference to the English Law. But if, in the same case, the donor were a Hindu, the sons would have taken as tenants-in-common.[8] It has been held that a maintenance grant to two widows makes the grantees tenants-in-common and not joint tenants.[9]

---

(1) Jageswar v. Ramchandra, 23 C. 670 (678, 679) P.C.; Ram Piari v. Krishna, 43 A. 600; Kishori v. Mundra, 33 A. 665; Gopi v. Jaldhara, 33 A. 41; Ethirajulu v. Mukumthu, 28 M. 363 (370).

(2) Jogeswar v. Ramchandra, 23 C. 670 (678) P.C.; Bahu Rani v. Rajendra, (1933) P.C. 72.

(3) Jogeshwar v. Ramchand, 23 C. 670 P.C., Bahu Rani v. Rajendra Baksh, 8 Luck. 121 P.C.: (1933) P.C. 72; Fani Bhusan v. Ful Kumari, (1937) C. 1 (2); Diwali v. Patel, 26 B. 445; Kishori v. Mundra, 33 A. 665; Ram Piari v. Krishna, 43 A. 600, contra in Mankamma v. Balkishan, 28 A. 38, dissented from in Jogeswar v. Ramchandra, 23 C. 670.

(4) Jogeswar v. Ramchandra, 23 C. 670 (679) P.C.

(5) Navroji v. Perojbat, 23 B. 80 (87) (a case of Parsi will governed by the English Law).

(6) Gobind v. Inayat, 27 A. 310 (312); Mankamma v. Balkishan, 28 A. 38, dissented from in Ram Piari v. Krishna, 43 A. 600.

(7) Navroji v. Perozbai, 23 B. 80 (98); Jogeshwar v. Ramchandra, 23 C. 670 (676, 679) P.C.

(8) Diwali v. Bechardas, 26 B. 445 (448); Hemanta v. Sudhanon, 25 C.W. N. 262.

(9) Jogeswar v. Ramchandra, 23 C. 670 (678, 679) P.C.; Lakshmi v. Hira, 11 B. 75; Diwali v. Bechardas, 26 B. 445 (448); Sasibala v. Chandra, 56 I.C. 937.

1923. A donatio mortis causa is an example of a conditional gift dependent upon the death of the donor (S. 234). Hindu Law makes no distinction between this and any other condition.[1] Where, for instance, the donor delivered certain Government promissory notes to the plaintiff in contemplation of death, a few months after which he died, whereupon the plaintiff sued his heirs for completion of his title by endorsement, the court decreed the claim, holding that the donee's title was complete on delivery, whereas in the same case, the decree's title under English Law would not have been complete until his death.[2] The difference between the English Law and the Hindu Law is then this that, while under the one property in the donatio mortis causa does not pass until death of the donor, property under the other passes with delivery, subject to the conditional right of resumption. The fact that the donor did not make the endorsement was held not to affect the validity of the gift. The same view was taken by Peacock, C.J., in another case in which he said: "A transfer by deed and delivery, in my opinion, in the case of Europeans, constitutes the relationship of trustee and cestui que trust even in favour of a volunteer. In this case, the delivery without a transfer by deed was as valid between Hindus as if there had been a conveyance by deed and a delivery. The notes, therefore, in my opinion passed to the donee."[3]

Donatio mortis causa.

246. A gift or devise creating an estate of inheritance inconsistent with the general law of inheritance is void to that extent.[4]

Void gift and devise.

Illustrations.

(a) A devises his estate to B and his eldest nephew and the eldest nephew of such eldest nephew and so forth for ever. B takes the life-estate but the rest of the devise is invalid for it creates a line of succession inconsistent with the general law.[5]

(b) A bequeaths his partible estate to B and on his death to his eldest son, and thence forward to the eldest son of each holder. The bequest is invalid for it alters the course of ordinary succession to one by primogeniture, a new form of estate which cannot be created by will.

1924. Analogous Law.—"The power of parting with property once acquired, so as to confer the same property upon another, must take effect, either by inheritance or transfer, each according to law. Inheritance does one depend upon the will of the individual owner, transfer does. Inheritance is a rule laid down (or, in the case of custom, recognized) by the State, not merely for the benefit of the individuals, but for reasons of public policy.[6] It follows directly from this that a private individual, who attempts by gift or will to make property inheritable otherwise than as the law directs, is assuming to legislate, and that the gift must fail and the inheritance take place as the law directs."[7] As Turner, L.J., put it: "A

---

(1) 1 Str. H.L. 169; ib., p. 426; Krishna Deb v. Krishna Deb, 12 W.R. (O.C.) 4; Visalatchumi v. Subbu Pillai, 6 M.H.C.R. 270.

(2) Visalatchumi v. Subbu Pillai, 6 M.H.C.R. 270; cf. S. 191, Succession Act, not applied to Hindus.

(3) Krishna Deb v. Krishna Deb, 12 W.R. (O.C.) 4.

(4) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (394) P.C. Ambalal v. Ambalal, (1933) B. 34.

(5) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (395, 396) P.C.

(6) Domat, 2413.

(7) Per Willes, J., in Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (394) P.C.

man cannot create a new form of estate, or alter the line of succession allowed by law, for the purpose of carrying out his own wishes or views of policy."[1] Quoting this passage in another case, Willes, J., added: "If the gift were to a man and his heirs, to be selected from a line other than that specified by law, expressly excluding the legal course of inheritance, as for instance, if an estate were granted to a man and his eldest nephew, and the eldest nephew of such eldest nephew, and so forth for ever, to take as his heirs to the exclusion of other heirs, and without any of the persons so taking having the power to dispose of the estate during his lifetime, here inasmuch as an inheritance so described is not legal, such a gift cannot take effect, except in favour of such persons as could take under a gift, to the extent to which the gift is consistent with the law. The first taker would, in this case, take for his lifetime, because the giver had at least that intention. He could not take more, because the language is inconsistent with his having any different inheritance from that which the gift attempted to confer, and that state of inheritance which it confers is void."

"It follows that all estates of inheritance created by gift or will, so far as they are inconsistent with the general law of inheritance, are void as such, and that by Hindu Law no person can succeed thereunder as heir to an estate described in the terms which English Law would designate an estate in tail."[2]

The Tagore case was an attempt to create an estate in tail male, but the Privy Council held the tail void, upholding only the life-estate to the immediate grantee.

Gift or devise to a persona designata.

247. Where a benefit, by way of a gift or devise is conveyed by a person to another, described as his adopted son, the wife, or any other relation; the question whether the benefit is intended to pass to the donee or devisee personally as a persona designata, or to him only, if the relationship alleged exists is one of construction of the dominant motive of the donor or testator as the case may be.

For commentary see S. 59, § 693.

Gift to joint donees devisees.

247-A. (1) The quantum and character of interest conveyed by a gift to two or more donees or devisees depends upon the dominant intention of the donor and the devisee[3] as the case may be.

(2) In the absence of indication of any such intention the quantum and character of their interest may be ascertained by the following rules, namely:—

(3) Where the donees or devisees are persons, other than the members of the Mitakshara joint family, they would be presumed to take their respective interests as tenants in common.[4]

---

(1) Soorjeemoney v. Denobundhu, 6 M.I.A. 526, cited per Willes, J., in Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (394, 395) P.C.

(2) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (395, 396) P.C.

(3) Kamakhya v. Khushalchand, (1934) P.C. 72.

(4) Jogeswar v. Ramchandra, 23 C. 670 P.C.; Babu Rani v. Rajendra, 8 Luck. 121: (1933) P.C. 72; Navroji v. Perozbai, 23 B. 80 (98); Mahalakshmi v. Nagappaya, 62 I.C. (M.) 814; Fani Bhusan v. Fulkumari, (1937) C. 1.

(4) Where they are members of a joint Mitakshara family they will be presumed to take as joint tenants. [1]

Illustrations.

(a) The testator bequeaths a legacy to two brothers A and B. A and B will take as tenants in common, unless they are members of a Mitakshara coparcenary in which case they would take as joint tenants.[2]

(b) The testator bequeaths a legacy to two brothers A and B their heirs successors and assigns: A and B are coparceners, but an interest to them and their heirs and assigns cannot extend unless they take as tenants in common. They will so take.[3]

(c) The testator bequeaths a legacy to the mother and her son A and B. The two take as tenants in common even though they belong to a Mitakshara joint family, because they are not and can never be coparceners.[4]

(d) But in the last case the testator can bequeath a legacy to A and B as joint tenants with survivorship since such bequest cannot be avoided as altering the law of inheritance and therefore opposed to the principle settled in the Tagore case.[5]

248. Gift to a class. Where an interest is gifted or devised to a class some of whom are incapable of taking by reason of any rule of law or otherwise, the gift or devise will take effect as to the rest.

1925. Analogous Law.—With the amendment of S. 115 of the Succession Act, by Act XXI of 1929,[6] the original section founded on the English case of Leake v. Robinson[7] has been amended so as to bring it into line with the Indian Law. On the subject of gift to a class two views are possible: one benignant and another literal. The English precedent took the literal view and was enacted as S. 115 of the Succession Act. But the Indian cases have always taken the benignant view and with the amendment of the section, this view has now received legislative sanction. The difference between the two views may be thus stated. Suppose a fund is bequeathed to A for life and after his death to all his children who shall attain the age of 25. A survives the testator and has some children, say, B, C, and D, living at the testator's death. Now, B, C, and D, living at the testator's death must attain the age of 25 (if at all) within the limits allowed for the bequest, which is 18 years after the death of the testator.[8] But since A may have children after the testator's decease, some of whom may not attain the age of 25 until more than 18 years have elapsed after the decease of A, it follows that if the bequest is to be construed literally as benefiting all A's children on attaining the age of 25, and as all cannot take, it follows that B, C, and D cannot take also, that is to say, as the bequest is given to all A's children as a class, it is not good to any division of that class, but is wholly void.[9]

---

(1) See ft.-note (3) at p. 780.
(2) Navroji v. Perozbai, 23 B. 80 (98).
(3) Babu Ravi v. Rajendra, 8 Luck 12; (1933) P.C. 721: Diwali v. Patel Bechardas, 26 B. 445; Mahalakshmi v. Nagappaya, 62 I.C. (M.) 814.
(4) Ib.
(5) Ib.
(6) S. 14.
(7) 2 Mer. 363, which is discussed in 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), §§ 486, 489.
(8) S. 14, Transfer of Property Act, and S. 101, Succession Act.
(9) S. 115, Ill. (ii), Succession Act.

1926. But there is another view. The bequest might be construed benignantly, giving effect to it as far as possible. In that case, B, C, and D will take, though all A's children may not be able to profit by the testator's bounty. This is the Indian rule and adopted as a canon of construction applicable to Hindu gifts and bequests.[1]

1927. But, where the intention is to benefit a class as a whole, and not any of its individuals, then the latter cannot take apart from the class.[2] So, a gift or devise to "sons of sons" and "daughters of sons" or "widows of sons" is a gift to a class and not to any of its members. Consequently, if any member falling into that class was not found within 18 years after the testator's death, the bequest would be void altogether.[3] It appears to be now settled that there is no general presumption in India that, when property is bequeathed to two or more persons under a will, they take jointly.[4] The question depends on the intention of the testator, as gathered from the terms of the will and the surrounding circumstances, and the fact that the donees constitute an undivided family.[5] Where, therefore, the testator bequeathed certain property to two minor coparceners, upon the question arising whether the bequest was joint, the court held it to be so, because the testator had not left the management of the bequest during the legatees' minority to their mother, who was their natural guardian, but had appointed a third person to manage it until both the boys had attained majority. This provision was held to explain the testator's intention to make a joint bequest, since he considered it unnecessary to appoint a guardian if one of the minors had attained majority before his death, as in that case, he would be entitled to manage the whole property bequeathed.[6]

249. Construction of Wills. Since the amendment of Section 57 of the Succession Act by Act XVIII of 1929, a will is subject to the provisions of that section and the sections enumerated in Schedule III of that Act as therein provided.

1928. Analogous Law. —The four stages of the law bearing on the subject of Hindu wills, already been set out (§ 1872). All wills, wherever executed, are now subject to the selected rules of construction collected in schedule III of the Succession Act and supersede all rules of Hindu Law, many of which were narrower.

Only the substance of these rules will be indicated here.

1929. Of these, S. 75 states that it is not necessary that any technical words or terms of art shall be used in a will, but only that the wording shall be such that the intention of the testator can be known therefrom. This is entirely in accord with the Hindu Law, under which a will, if reduced to

---

(1) Bhagabati v. Kalicharan, 32 C. 992 F.B., affirmed O.A. 38 C. 468 P.C.; Tarakeshwar v. Shashi, 9 C. 952 (960) P.C.; Bishen Chand v. Asmaida, 6 A. 560 (573, 574); Krishna Das v. Dwarka Das, I.L.R. (1937) B. 679; Kandarpa v. Akshaychandra, 61 C. 106 (117).

(2) Gordhandas v. Ramcoover, 26 B. 449.

(3) Khiwji v. Morarji, 22 B. 533 (538).

(4) Jageswar v. Ramachandra, 23 C. 670 P.C.

(5) Mahalakshmi v. Nagappaya, 62 I.C. (M.) 814.

(6) Ib.

writing, might be made in any language, form or order, the only pre-requisite being a sufficient expression of intention since the intention is to be judged by the expressions used and their general tenor and effect. For this purpose, oral evidence is admissible for the purpose and within the limits prescribed in Ss. 77-81.

1930. A will is presumed to speak from the moment of the testator's death. Consequently, the description contained in a will of property, which is the subject of a gift shall, unless a contrary intention appears in the will, be deemed to refer to and comprise property answering that description at the death of the testator.[1]

1931. General words may be understood in a restricted sense where it may be collected from the will that the testator meant to use them in a restricted sense; and words may be used in a wider sense than that which they usually bear, where it may be collected from the other words of the will that the testator meant to use them in such a wider sense.[2] Where a clause is susceptible of two meanings, according to one of which it has some effect and according to the other it can have none, the former is to be preferred.[3] If the same words occur in different parts of the same will, they must be taken to have been used everywhere in the same sense, unless there appears an intention to the contrary.[4] But no part of a will is to be rejected as destitute of meaning if it is possible to put a reasonable construction upon it.[5] The meaning of any clause in a will is to be collected from the entire instrument and all its parts are to be construed with reference to each other, and for that purpose, a codicile is to be considered as a part of the will.[6]

1932. Where a will is contained in two or more documents, they must be read together as a single deed, and it is legitimate to look at a contemporaneous document referred to in the will, which the testator caused to be written with the express intent to render clear his wishes with regard to his succession.[7] In construing a will, a court must consider the surrounding circumstances, the position of the testator, the family relationship, the particular sense and many other things, including the race and religious opinions of the testator and influence, and aims arising therefrom—but all this is an aid solely to ascertaining the meaning of the language used by the probability that he would use words in a particular sense in a particular will. Once the construction is settled, the duty of the court is loyally to carry out the intentions as expressed and none other. This duty is universal and is true alike of wills of every nationality and every religion or rank of life. The court is in no case justified in adding to testamentary dispositions. If they transgress any legal restrictions, they must be disregarded. If any eventuality arises, which the will leaves unprovided for, there will be intestacy.[8] For the purpose of determining questions as to what person or what property is denoted by any words, used in a will, a court must inquire into Extrinsic Evidence.

---

(1) S. 90, Succession Act.
(2) Ib., S. 83.
(3) Ib., S. 84.
(4) Ib., S. 86.
(5) Ib., S. 85.
(6) Ib., S. 82.
(7) Narasimha v. Parthasarathy, 37 M. 199 P.C.
(8) S. 75, Succession Act.

every material fact relating to the persons who claim to be interested under such will, the property which is claimed as the subject of disposition, the circumstances of the testator and his family, and into every fact, a knowledge of which may conduce to the right application of the words which the testator has used.[1]

1933. Where the words used in a will, to designate or describe a legatee or a class of legatees, sufficiently show what is meant, an error in the name or description shall not prevent the legacy from taking effect. A mistake in the name of a legatee may be corrected by a description of him, and a mistake in the description of a legatee may be corrected by the name.[2] Where any word, material to the full expression of the meaning has been omitted, it may be supplied by the context.[3] Where the words of the will are unambiguous, but it is found by extrinsic evidence that they admit of applications, one only of which can have been intended by the testator, extrinsic evidence may be taken to show which of these applications was intended.[4] But where there is no ambiguity or deficiency on the facts of the will, no extrinsic evidence as to the intention of the testator shall be admitted.[5]

1934. Where two caluses or gifts in a will are irreconcilable so that they cannot possibly stand together, the last shall prevail.[6] In this respect a will differs from a deed, in which, of two repugnant clauses, the first prevails.[7] This rule is, of course, not to be resorted to in case of inconsistency in the same provision,[8] nor where different subjects are referred to[9] and in all cases only when reconciliation is impossible.[10]

When will or bequest fails.

1935. A will or bequest, not expressive of any de lnfinite intention, is void for uncertainty.[11] This rule is incorporated in a separate section in the Code where its scope will be found discussed. (S. 261.)

1936. Where a will purports to make two bequests to the same person and a question arises whether the testator intended to make the second bequest instead of or in addition to the first, if there is nothing in the will to show what he intended, the following rules shall prevail in determining the construction to be put upon the will:—

First.—If the same specific thing is bequeathed twice to the same legatee in the same will, or in the will and again in the codicil, he is entitled to receive that specific thing only.

Second.—Where one and the same will, or one and the same codicil, purports to make, in two places, the bequest, to the same person, of the same quantity or amount of anything, he shall be entitled to one such legacy only.

---

(1) S. 75, Succession Act.
(2) Ib., S. 76.
(3) Ib., S. 77.
(4) Ib., S. 80.
(5) Ib., S. 81.
(6) Ib., S. 88.
(7) Forbes v. Git, (1922) 1 A.C. 256.
(8) Advocate-General v. Hormasji, 29 B. 375.
(9) Damodar Das v. Dayabhai, 22 B. 833 (841) P.C.
(10) Amrithayyan v. Kalka, 14 M. 65 (69, 70).
(11) S. 89, Succession Act.

Third.—Where two legacies of unequal amount are given to the same person in the same will or in the same codicil, the legatee is entitled to both.

Fourth.—Where two legacies, whether equal or unequal in amount, are given to the same legatee, one by a will and the other by a codicil, or each by a different codicil, the legatee is entitled to both legacies.

Explanation.—In the last four rules the word "will" does not include a codicil.[1]

Fifth.—A residuary legatee may be constituted by any words that show an intention on the part of the testator that the person designated shall take the surplus or residue of his property.[2] Under a residuary bequest, the legatee is entitled to all property, belonging to the testator at the time of his death, of which he has not made any other testamentary disposition which is capable of taking effect.[3]

Sixth.—If a legacy be given in general terms, without specifying the time when it is to be paid, the legatee has a vested interest in it from the day of the death of the testator, and if he dies without having received it, it shall pass to his representative.[4] If the legatee does not survive the testator, the legacy cannot take effect, but shall lapse and form part of the residue of the testator's property, unless it appears by the will that the testator intended that it should go to some other person.

Seventh.—In order to entitle the representatives of the legatee to receive the legacy, it must be proved that he survived the testator.[5] If a legacy be given to two persons jointly, and one of them die before the testator, the other legatee takes the whole.[6] But where a legacy is given to legatees, in words which show that the testator intended to give them distinct shares of it, then if any legatee die before the testator, so much of the legacy as was intended for him shall fall into the residue of the testator's property.[7] Where the share that lapses is a part of the general residue bequeathed by the will, that share shall go as undisposed of.[8] Where a bequest shall have been made to any child or other lineal descendant of the testator, and the legatee shall die in the lifetime of the testator, but any lineal descendant of his shall survive the testator, the bequest shall not lapse, but shall take effect as if the death of the legatee had happened immediately after the death of the testator, unless a contrary intention shall appear in the will.[9] Where a bequest is made to one person for the benefit of another, the legacy does not lapse by the death, in the testator's lifetime, of the persons to whom the bequest is made.[10] Where a bequest is made simply to a described class of persons, the thing bequeathed shall go only to such as shall be alive at the testator's death.

Exception.—If property is bequeathed to a class of persons described as standing in a particular degree of kindred to a specified individual, but the possession of it is, by reason of a prior bequest or otherwise, deferred until a time later than the death of the testator, the property shall, at that

(1) S. 101, Succession Act.
(2) Ib., S. 102.
(3) Ib., S. 103.
(4) Ib., S. 104.
(5) Ib., S. 105.
(6) Ib., S. 111.
(7) Ib., S. 107.
(8) Ib., S. 108.
(9) Ib., S. 109.
(10) Ib., S. 110.

time, go to such of them as shall be then alive and to the representative of any of them who have died since the death of the testator.[1]

250. Extrinsic evidence is inadmissible to alter, detract from, or add to, the terms of a will, though it may remove a latent ambiguity arising from words equally descriptive of two or more subjects or objects of gift.[2]

Extrinsic evidence when in admissible.

1937. Analogous Law.—It is a sovereign rule of construction that, in interpreting the intention of the testator, the primary and paramount object one should keep in view is to ascertain the testator's real intention. He must take his seat in the testator's easy-chair and, with the unfolded will upon his lap, think his thoughts for the moment. But in doing so, he must not take leave of the actual words used by the departed occupant of that chair. For it is his duty to interpret, not in the light of intention, nor by a flight of imagination, but by the stern realities of the written will.[3] As Turner, L.J., said: "In determining that construction, what we must look to, is the intention of the testator. The Hindu Law, no less than the English Law, points to the intention as the element by which we are to be guided in determining the effect of a testamentary disposition; nor, so far as we are aware, is there any difference between the one law and the other as to the materials from which the intention is to be collected. Primarily, the words of the will are to be considered. They convey the expression of the testator's wishes, but the meaning to be attached to them may be affected by surrounding circumstances, and where this is the case, those circumstances no doubt must be regarded. Amongst the circumstances thus to be regarded, is the law of the country under which the will is made and its dispositions are to be carried out. If that law has attached to particular words a particular meaning, or to a particular disposition a particular effect, it must be assumed that the testator in the dispositions which he has made, had regard to that meaning or to that effect, unless the language of the will or the surrounding circumstances displace that assumption." "To put the matter another way, the question is not what the testator intended to do but what he did mean by the words which he actually used. The true enquiry is not what a testator meant to express, but what the words used do express; extrinsic evidence cannot be received as evidence of a testator's intention, outside and independent of the written words employed by him. In other words, where the meaning is fairly certain, it cannot be allowed to be modified by speculative inferences, drawn from his conduct, as to what he intended to do or thought he had done; extrinsic evidence, when admissible, is used as an aid to the correct interpretation of the language of the will, but it cannot be relied upon for misconstruing the will."[4]

Oral evidence.

1938. The admissibility of oral evidence affecting the terms of a will is subject to the provisions of chapter VI (Ss. 91-100) of the Evidence Act, S. 100 of which, however, provides that nothing in that chapter shall be taken to affect any of the provisions of the Indian Succession Act as to the construction of wills. Now, since these provisions have since been extended to the wills of all Hindus it follows that Hindu wills are subject to the rules of

(1) S. 111, Succession Act.
(2) Soorjeemoney v. Denobundoo, 6 M.I.A. 526, (550 551).
(3) Ib.
(4) Srinibash v. Monhohini, 3 C.L.J. 224 (254).

construction enacted in the Succession Act, and in chapter VI of the Evidence Act only so far as its provisions do not "affect" those of the Succession Act. The fact is that the provisions of the Evidence Act are far more rigid than those of the Succession Act which permits a far greater laxity in the construction of wills than what the Evidence Act permits in the construction of deeds.

When extraneous evidence admissible.

251. The surrounding circumstances under which the devisor made his will—as the state of his property, of his family and the like—is admissible.[1]

1939. Analogous Law.—It is, again, a general rule, applicable alike to English and Hindu Law, that a will must be benignantly construed, the testator's intention being carried out, if ascertainable, to the extent and in the form that the law allows.[2] Expressions in one will cannot be construed with reference to expressions of more or less doubtful import, to be found in other wills.[3] Such a method of interpretation has gone out of fashion in England.[4] "To extend it to India would hardly be desirable. To search and sift the heaps of cases on wills which cumber our English Law Reports, in order to understand and interpret the wills of people speaking a different tongue, trained in different habits of thought and brought up under different conditions of life, seems almost absurd. In the subordinate courts of India, such a practice, if permitted, would encourage litigation and lead to idle and endless argument."[5] In another case, their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out that owing to the fact that Indian deeds are not uniformly drawn up by practised conveyancers, it would be misleading to apply the rules of conveyancing to their interpretation. The Indian scribe at times makes no distinction between a deed and a will, between a gift and a testatament,[6] or between a testament and a power to adopt.[7]

Reference to other Wills.

1940. There is no radical contrariety between the two sets of rules. And generally speaking, the rule stated in the section applies equally to all wills, whether those made by a Hindu or a non-Hindu, and whether or not subject to the Succession Act. Extrinsic evidence is admissible to prove the intention to make, alter or revoke, to ascertain the person named in the will, to ascertain the thing bequeathed—that is, to ascertain the subject and the object—to ascertain whether a codicil is cumulative or substituted, and other similar matters which do not contradict, add to or detract from its terms.[8]

---

(1) Narasimha v. Parthasarathi, 37 M. 199 (221, 223) P. C.; Emid Browne v. F. Y. Moody, (1936) P. C. 285; Sasanka Bhushan v. Gopi Ballav, (1935) C. 716.

(2) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 P.C.; Gordhan Das v. Ram Cooverbai, 26 B. 449; Elkins v. Cullan, 13 N.L.R. 51.

(3) Narendranath v. Kamalbasini, 23 C. 563 P.C.; Ganesh Chunder v. Lal Behary, (1936) P.C. 318.

(4) Ib.

(5) Per Lord Macnaghten in Narendra v. Kamalbasini, 23 C. 563 (572) P. C. followed in Bhagbati v. Kali Charan, 38 C. 468 P.C.; Dinbai v. Nusserwanji, 49 C. 1005 (1012, 1013) P.C.

(6) Mhd. Abdul Ghani v. Fakhar Sohan, 44 A. 301 P.C.

(7) Jagannath v. Kunja Bihari, 26 C. W.N. 374: 64 I.C. 458: (1922) P. C. 162.

(8) Narasingerji v. Raja Pangauti, 47 M. 729 P.C.; Venkatadri v. Parthasarathi, 48 M. 312 (329) P. C.; Vatsavava v. Venkatapathi, 80 I.C. 807: (1924) P.C. 162; Thaung v. Ma Than, 51 C. 374 P.C.; Secretary of State v. Jyoti Prasad, 53 C. 533 P.C.

1941. The language of the will to be construed must be the best guide to its interpretation. It must be read as a whole and its paramount purpose ascertained. If all its clauses are interdependent but consistent, then effect must be given to them all; but if some of them are inconsistent, then the inconsistencies must, if possible, be reconciled and effect given to such of them as are reconcilable. It may be that the two clauses, though appearing to be antagonistic, are intended to provide for different circumstances. Such was the case in a will, of which the 8th, 13th, and the 18th clauses were seemingly antagonistic, in that they left uncertain whether the interest conveyed to the two sons of the testator was absolute or limited. The High Court held them to convey only a limited estate, since there was a gift over, which precluded the possibility of an absolute devise; but, on appeal, the Privy Council reversed their decree, holding that the limitation over was not intended to limit the son's estate but to provide for a contingency.[1] So, a gift under a will, to certain persons and their heirs for ever, of certain annuities, being fixed portions of the nett profits of an estate, was held to amount to a gift of proportionate shares in the corpus of the estate, in the absence of a conflict of such an interpretation with the general intention as gathered from the whole will.[2] So, where the testator had bequeathed his estate "to my adopted son Janardhan," the court upheld the bequest, though the adoption was found to be invalid. The deceased had made the adoption and considered it good, but did not make the bequest contingent upon its validity.[3]

Construction of words and Technical Terms.

252. (1) All words must be construed in their ordinary popular sense, unless there is a clear indication that they are used in another sense.[4]

(2) Technical terms must be presumed to bear their legal sense, unless the context clearly indicates the contrary;[5]

(3) Provided that, before so construing, due regard must be had to the infirmity of the scribe if a layman, and his unfamiliarity with the expressions used by him.

1942. Construction of Words.—The only safe rule applicable to the construction of wills is that there is really no rule at all. Indeed, there can scarcely be any fixed and general rule applicable to the construction of settlements and wills varying in terms and applying to estates varying in situation.[6] The only rule equally applicable to the construction of all documents, whether deeds or wills, is that ordinary words should be construed in their ordinary sense, and not in their technical sense, unless there is anything in the context to shew the contrary. As many of the wills of Hindus are written or spoken in the vernacular, English Judges are not in a position to construe them with the same advantage as Indian Judges. But this is no reason for the court, not conversant with the language, to consult and decide upon the opinion of an Indian Judge who had not heard the case. As their Lord-

(1) Damodar Das v. Dayabhai, 21 B. 1 (2, 3), where they are set out; reversed O.A. 22 B. 833 (841) P.C.

(2) Hemangini v. Nobin Chand, 8 C. 788.

(3) Dhondu Bai v. Laxman Rao, 22 Bom. L. R. 794.

(4) Gurusami v. Sivakami, 18 M. 347 (358).

(5) Lalit Mohan v. Chukkan Lal, 24 C. 834 P.C.

(6) Har Narayan v. Surja Kunwari, 43 A. 291 (296) P.C.

ships observed in a case: "The learned Judges say that in the construction of the clause, they have had the advantage of the opinion of Mr. Justice Gupta, who is fully conversant with the Bengali language, which is his mother tongue, and who agrees with them in the meaning to be attached to it. Their Lordships remark upon this that Judges, who have heard the arguments and who are responsible for the decision, can hardly with propriety rest it on the authority of one who has not heard the arguments and is not responsible for the decision, although he may be a Judge of the High Court. It is true that this case is a peculiar one, in which Judges have to interpret a language which seems to be imperfectly known to themselves and to be familiar to a colleague. But, then their Lordships are not informed how Mr. Justice Gupta translates the Bengali words. It is only said that he agrees with the meaning which the other learned Judges below attach to the clause in question. He does not appear to have thrown any new light on the rendering of the words into English. It must be taken that on this point, he agrees with his colleagues of the High Court and with their sworn interpreter and with the official translation in the record. If so, the agreement with the decision must be on account of that further reasoning, which has led the courts below to inferences from which their Lordships dissent."[1]

1943. The case from which this passage is cited, related to the construction of the crucial words in a will "parjyapt haibek," translated by the English words "will become vested," as to which the High court said: "The technical meaning conveyed by the English expressions 'shall vest,' 'shall become vested' are not in our opinion conveyed by the Bengali words 'parjyapt haibek,' which really mean 'shall devolve or go' and indicate the line of devolution."[2] Quoting this passage, the Privy Council said: "This appears to their Lordships to be a misconception of what words are necessary for the vesting of a bequest or legacy. A bequest in favour of a person simply (that is, without any intimation of a desire to suspend or postpone its operation) confers a vested interest. It must be remembered that it is within a comparatively recent period that Indian testators have adopted English modes of creating interests in their estates. There is no line of precedents attaching to Bengali terms meanings which make them understood as terms of art by Bengali lawyers. It is not suggested in this case that the meaning affixed by the courts to the testator's language is a sense required by a course of practice known to vakils. The only safe course is to give to his words the plain ordinary meaning."[3] In the end the Privy Council held the words to convey no more than a direct and simple gift to the eldest son. This case is then an instance of the danger to which the interpreter is exposed by ascribing to a non-technical expression a technical meaning. In another case, in which the question was whether the bequest to an idol conveyed the corpus of the estate or created only a charge thereon, the Privy Council said: "In such cases no fixed and absolute rule can be set up, derived alone from the use of particular terms in one portion of the will. The question whether the idol itself shall be considered the true beneficiary, subject to a charge in favour of the heirs or specified relatives of the testator for their upkeep, or that, on the other hand, these heirs shall be considered the true beneficiaries of the property, subject to a charge for the upkeep, worship and expenses of the idol, is a question which can only be settled by a conspectus of the entire provisions of the will."[1] The terms of absolute grant in a will may be qualified by its other clauses, and words expressed only to convey a limited interest may be enlarged by the purpose and effect of the bequest. The only safe rule to follow in the construction of a will is, then, to eschew all rules of technical construction, to read the will as a whole, and to see what was its manifest or underlying intention. This is the only safe guide which the courts are counselled to follow in the construction of wills and settlements[2]

(1) Harris v. Brown, 28 C. 621 (635) P.C. (2) Ib., pp. 635, 636. (3) Ib., 634 P.C.

1944. But though, this is the soverign rule, still certain words, such as "malik," "putrapoutradikrame," "istemrari" and the rest, have now acquired a definite sense in conveyancing, and when the context permits, they must be understood in that sense. (§ 1927.)

So, it is held to be a well-established rule of construction that a gift of the rents and profits of property is equivalent to a gift of the property itself, and it has also been decided that a gift of the income of property will also carry the legal and beneficial interest in the property itself.[3] The testator bequeathed to his daughter-in-law his property "detailed below," which comprised "all cash, ornaments, utensils included and also two houses." After execution of the will, the testator had invested some money on the security of mortgage bonds, and the question was whether they could be held as comprised in the term "cash" bequeathed. It was held that they did. "The words in which the gift to her is made are very general and seem to us to be comprehensive enough to include all the property, which is described in the body of the will as ornaments, cash, utensils, et cetera. True it is that the words et cetera do not appear in the details of the property, but it was, we think, intended by the testator that all movable and immovable property, of which he was or should be possessed, should pass."[4] Where, however, the testator gave his wife a life-interest in the house in his possession, and in those which he might afterwards "purchase," and the testator acquired a house by inheritance in consequence of the death of his younger brother, the question arising whether this house equally passed under the will, it was held that the term "purchase" (khareed) was used in its normal sense and did not include the house acquired by inheritance. "It may be thought that, at the time of the execution of the will, he did not contemplate the contingency of his acquiring any immovable property otherwise than by purchase, and that, had he contemplated such a contingency, he would have provided for it, and would have left to his widow all his real property, however acquired by him subsequently to the date of his will. This is a surmise not destitute of plausibility, although, if it be true, the circumstance that he did not add a codicil to the will, after he had inherited the house in question from his brother, for the purpose of supplying the defect in the terms of the clause, which is the subject of consideration, and securing the devolution to his widow of the aforesaid house, is not easily explained."[5]

(1) Har Narayan v. Surja Kunwari, 43 A. 291 (293) P.C., affirming O.A. Surja Kunwari v. Har Narayan, 39 A. 311, following Sonatun v. Juggutsoondaree, 8 M.I.A. 66; Ashutosh v. Doorga, 5 C. 438 P.C., distinguishing Jadu Nath v. Sita Ramji, 39 A. 553 P.C.

(2) Har Narayan v. Surja Kunwari, 43 A. 291 (296, 297) P.C.

(3) Durga v. Dunichand, 2 A. L. J. 568 (572), following Shookmoy v. Manoharri, 11 C. 692; Mannox v. Greener, L. R. 14 Eq. 456.

(4) Parsanni v. Ghareeb Das, 5 A.L. J. 708 (712).

(5) George v. George, 6 N. W. P. H. C.R. 219 (221, 222).

1945. In another case, the testator had died in 1857, leaving a will, dated January 1857, clause II of which provided that all his residuary estate "shall descend in equal shares to the eldest son to be born to each of the daughters of my late brother who are now alive." By clause 15 of the will the testator declared that "until the majority of whoever may be the eldest at the time amongst the sons of my brother's daughters, the estate shall remain in the hands of the executor absolutely and for all purposes." At the time of the testator's death, two daughters of his brother were living, of whom C was married and F unmarried. C had a son born in 1858 who lived to be 21 years of age, and to whom, on his attaining that age, a moiety of the estate was made over by the executor. F married W in 1878, the only issue of the marriage being a son born in 1883, who lived only a few hours. It was held that a moiety of the estate vested in the sons of C and F on their birth, and that the vesting was not suspended by the direction that the estate should remain in the hands of the executor, who should "make over the share" of each on his attaining 21 years; those words merely pointed to the possession and enjoyment of the shares, which had already been vested. The words "the sons of those daughters," following the bequest, referred to the sons to whom it was made, namely, the eldest son of each daughter. On the birth of F's son, therefore, moiety of the estate vested in him, and on his death, passed to his father as his heir.[1]

1946. So, where the testator bequeathed his estate to his wife as its "malik," but added: "Such shall during her lifetime apply and spend the same in a good way," it was held that these words had the effect of reducing an absolute estate to a life-estate with uncontrolled powers of disposition by acts inter vivos.[2] In another case, the testator bequeathed an estate, stating that it "shall be considered to be the property" of a certain idol, and that "whatever may be saved after defraying the expenses of the temple and the pay of the servants, shall be used by our legal heirs to meet their own expenses," it appeared that the expenses of the temple absorbed only a small portion of the income, from which facts it was inferred that the testator could not have intended to bequeath the corpus to the idol, in whose favour the estate was merely charged with the expenses of its upkeep.[3]

1947. Technical Terms.—There are no technical terms; strictly so-called. By consensus of opinion, the courts ascribed to certain words a definite meaning. In this sense, these words may be taken to have become terms of art, as connoting a certain sense when used in deeds and wills. Such are the words malik and putrapautradikrame,[4] or putrapoutradi,[5] which are understood as words of general inheritance and generally as conveying an absolute interest, but this sense may be limited by the context. As observed by Lord Davey: "There are two cardinal principles in the construction of wills, deeds and other documents, which their Lordships think are applicable to the decision of this case. The first is that clear and unambiguous words are not to be controlled or

(1) Harris v. Brown, 28 C. 621 P.C.
(2) Mithi Bai v. Maher Bai, 23 Bom. L.R. 858.
(3) Har Narayan v. Surja Kunwari, 43 A. 291 P.C.
(4) Chukkun Lal v. Lalit Mohan, 20 C. 906, reversed O.A. Lalit Mohan v. Chukkun Lal, 24 C. 834 P.C.; Sasiman v. Shib Narain, 1 Pat. 305 P.C.; Ramlal v. Secretary of State, 7 C. 304 P.C.; Hari v. Secretary of State, 5 C. 228; Motilal v. Advocate-General, 13 Bom.L.R. 471; Ramanuj v. Manraj Kuar, (1935) O. 198.
(5) Padam Lal v. Teksingh, 29 A. 217; Gooroo Das v. Sarat Chunder, 29 C. 699.

qualified by any general expression of intention. The second is, to use Lord Denman's language, "that technical words or words of known import must have their legal effect, even though the testator uses inconsistent words, unless those inconsistent words are of such a nature as to make it perfectly clear that the testator did not mean to use the technical terms in their proper sense."[1] In another case, Lord Buckmaster observed that the word "malik could be appropriately used to constitute the wife an absolute owner. It is not that the word is a 'term of art,' it does not necessarily define the quality of the estate taken but the ownership of whatever that estate may be."[2] In this view, the use of the term malik is significant but not conclusive of the quantum of interest intended to be conveyed. But taken along with the context, it might be conclusive.

1948. A will contained the following in favour of the testator's sister's son, Lalit, viz., that he "becoming my substitute and becoming malik of all my estate and properties, shall. . . . enjoy, with son, grandson, and so on, in succession (putrapoutradikrame) the proceeds of my estate." Provisions followed for the maintenance of his nephew's widow and of his daughter, should he die; and a gift over that "in the absence of the said nephew's son, grandson, great-grandson, and so on, then of the sons born of my sisters . . . . . the eldest with son, grandson, and so on, in succession, shall" receive the ownership. On a claim by the nearest gotraja sapinda of the testator, against the nephew, for the construction of the will, it was held by the High Court that there being expressions excluding the succession of females and conferring the succession to male heirs and the gift over referring to the failure of male issue at any remote time, and not to the event of Lalit's death without having male issue, and there being also expressions indicating an intention not to grant an absolute alienable estate, the will should be construed as giving to Lalit only a life-estate. But this view was reversed by the Privy Council who said: "Their Lordships cannot find any sufficient reasons for importing into the gift to the appellant an implied prohibition against females succeeding as heirs, so as to limit the nature or extent of the estate taken by the appellant or confine it by construction to heirs male, although his estate may be defeasible if the gift over is valid and the event on which it takes effect should occur."[3]

1949. In Bombay, where before the enactments of 1929 a more favourable view prevailed regarding the rights of female heirs, it was held that a gift over to the daughters as "my waris" (heir) conveyed the same absolute estate which would have passed if the term used were malik (owner).[4] The same sense is conveyed by the phrase santansrenikrame,[5] or words which convey the sense that the estate is granted to the donee's "children and grand-children," which are words of enlargement and not of limitation. The testator granted a taluq to his sister K "with all rights appertaining thereto.....to you and the generations born of your womb, successively to enjoy the same. No other heir of yours shall have right or interest." On the question arising as to the nature of the estate thus conveyed, the Privy Council held that the words "you and the generations born of your womb" were intended to convey an

(1) Lalit Mohan v. Chukkun Lal, 24 C. 834 (846) P.C.
(2) Bhaidas v. Gulab, 45 B. 718 P. C.
(3) Lalit Mohan v. Chukkun Lal, 24 C. 834 (851) P.C.
(4) Chunilal v. Mulid, 24 B. 420.
(5) Bhoobun v. Hurrish Chunder, 4 C. 23 (25) P.C.

absolute estate, the effect of which was not, to cut down by the negative words which were capable of being read as referring to the time of K's death and "that their effect is to make the absolute estate, before given, defeasible in the event of a failure of issue living at the time of her death, in which event the estate was to revert to the donor and his heirs."[1]

1950. It has already been seen that the term "putra" means in Sanskrit and in Bengali not only a son, but also a son's son and a son's son's son, the three being regarded as one person in Hindu Law. (§ 112.) Consequently, when the testator spoke of a person as dying without leaving sons, the condition is satisfied only if he dies leaving no son, grandson or great-grandson in the male line.[2] And the term "issue" not only includes children but also a son adopted by the widow under authority from her husband.[3] Unless the term is qualified by the word "auras" or self-begotten, it does not exclude an issue by adoption.[4] Again, the terms "aulad" or "santan" import issue, both male and female.[5] Unless a different intention appears from the context, limiting it only to male issue, that term is, however, ordinarily confined only to legitimate issue, though if the gift is made by will of the corpus of a fund, or of a life-interest in a fund to the children of the testator or of another as a class, it would probably include also the illegitimate issue.[6] The word "bans" is of doubtful import and may mean either agnatic kinsmen or descendants. The last term, again, is confined only to children and grand-children and not to the testator's brother or widow.[7] So, where the testator gave his widow the power to adopt from amongst "my father's bans," it was held to refer to his paternal agnatic kinsmen and not to the descendants of his father.[8]

1951. The word "family" is an elastic term and may mean "a person and his wife and children" or the larger group of "a person and his descendants and their wives." So, where the testator created a trust for the support of the testator's "family," the question arose what that word included, and it was held by White, J., to mean the relatives of the testator, whether connected by marriage or blood, who were living at the time of the testator's death and then formed part of his household and were maintained by him. But on appeal, this construction was held to be too wide, the court restricting it to include only the testator's descendants and their wives living at the time of his death.[9]

1952. The words "hamesha," "always" or "for ever" though implying perpetuity, may be limited in their import by the context. And taken by themselves, they do not per se extend the interest beyond the person who is named. They are not inconsistent with limiting the interest given, but the circumstances under which the instrument is made or subsequent conduct of the parties may show the intention with sufficient certainty, to enable the court to presume that the grant was perpetual. So, where a decree provided that A should always pay B Rs. 70

(1) Bhoobun v. Hurrish Chunder, 4 C. 23 (28) P.C.

(2) Bissonath v. Bamsoondery, 12 M.I.A. 41 (47).

(3) Beemchurn v. Heeralal, 2 I.J. (N.S.) 225.

(4) Suriya Rau v. Raja of Pittapur, 9 M. 499 (595) P.C.

(5) Kumud v. Jogendra, 21 C.W.N. 854 (858): 41 I.C. 11; Dhan Devi v. Mahan, (1900) P.R. 114; Krishna Rao v. Bena Bai, 20 B. 571 (Children cannot mean only sons).

(6) Sher Bahadur v. Ganga, 36 A. 101 (121, 122) P.C.

(7) Arumugam v. Ammi, 1 M.H.C. R. 400.

(8) Dayabai v. Chunilal, 10 Bom.L. R. 97.

(9) Khetter v. Ganga, 4 C.W.N. 671 f.n.

per month, and the question arose whether the charge was to cease with B's death or was heritable, the court held that there was nothing to show that the payment was to continue after B's death.[1]

1953. Meaning of "Malik".—In several cases the courts had to construe the meaning of the term "malik" as used in describing the female donee's estate. Referring to it the Privy Council observed: "It is not that the word is a term of art, it does not necessarily define the quality of the estate taken, but the ownership of whatever that estate may be"[2] that is to say, the use of the word "malik" by itself has not necessarily the effect of conferring a heritable estate on the donee, though it certainly implies that the female donee is clothed with absolute right. But the question whether such donee has necessarily an absolute estate, must largely depend upon the context, and in every case it is one of intention. As their Lordships observed later on in the same case: "If words were used conferring absolute ownership upon the wife, the wife enjoyed the rights of ownership without their being conferred by express and additional terms, unless the circumstances or the context were sufficient to show that such absolute ownership were not intended."[3] This case then reiterates once more their Lordships' view, so often expressed by them in previous cases,[4] and now superseded by the legislature that the rule which regulates the construction of a gift applicable to a male donee, cannot be extended to a female; and the use of a single word must not be construed as wrested from the context. "I am the 'malik,' says the female donee. "Yes," says the court, "but let me see of what you are in the malik of your widow's estate, or of the entire estate. For this purpose I must read the whole deed and take into account all the circumstances. It may be that the donor has conferred upon you an exceptional estate. But I cannot assume it, as I would have done, if you were not a female."

1954. The several cases, otherwise seemingly irreconcilable, may probably be so reconciled. So, where, of two brothers B and G, B died childless, leaving a will giving his widow the power to adopt and bequeathed his estate in two moieties to his widow and adopted son, if one was adopted, but otherwise his widow was to succeed to the entire estate as malik with power of sale and gift, but that if she sold any property, the testator's heirs and co-sharers should have the right if pre-emption for an adequate consideration. The widow died dedicating the property to a deity, whereupon G's son sued for its recovery, contending that the widow had only a life-estate; but his claim was thrown out, the court holding that the word malik, if taken with the context sufficed to convey an absolute estate and that the fact that her right of sale was subject to pre-emption did not qualify her power of alienation any more than it would in any other case of sale otherwise subject to pre-emption.[5]

(1) Azizunnissa v. Tasadduq, 23 A. 324 P.C.

(2) Bhaidas v. Gulab, 26 C.W.N. 129 (131) P.C.

(3) Ib.

(4) Padam Lal v. Tek Singh, 29 A. 217; Surjamoni v. Rabinath, 30 A. 84 P. C.; Bhaidas v. Gulab, 46 B. 153 P.C.; Bishnath v. Chandrika, 55 A. 61 P.C.; Sarju Bala v. Jyotirmayee, 59 C. 142 (148) P.C.; Jagmohan Singh v. Sri Nath, 57 I.A. 291: (1930) P.C. 253: Punchoomoney v. Trailokya, 10 C. 342; Shib Lakshan v. Tarangini, 8 C.L.J. 20; Sures Chandra v. Lalit Mohan, 20 C.W. N. 463, and cases cited therein; Mangalji v. Rambhaoo, 64 I.C. (N.) 752.

(5) Sudhamoni v. Surat Lal, 25 C.W. N. 527.

253. The construction must be uniform, the same words being construed in the same sense, unless a contrary intention appears from the context, or unless the words refer to a different subject.[1]

Construction must be uniform.

1955. Analogous Law.—This rule, though equally general, does not coincide with the English rule, which does not favour the same construction of words, though appearing in one clause, if they apply to realty and personalty respectively.[2] So, where there is a gift of realty and personalty together to children "or their heirs," the word "heirs" is read in a dual sense, as denoting heir-at-law as regards the realty and next of kin as regards the personalty.[3] But this is an artificial rule due to the statute of distribution, for which there is no parallel in this country, and no such distinction is, therefore, authorized by the law of construction. The context may, of course, indicate that the same word was intended to be used in a dual sense. So, while the term "aulad" or "issue" is normally used to mean only a legitimate issue, where the context shows that the testator intended to benefit all his issue, whether legitimate or illegitimate, it will be so construed.[4]

1956. The rule on the subject is thus formulated in the Succession Act:—

Interpretation of words repeated in different parts of will.

"86. If the same words occur in different parts of the same will, they must be taken to have been used everywhere in the same sense, unless there appears an intention to the contrary."

This is a general rule, and applies to all Hindu wills.[5] "The will is the dictionary from which you are to find the meaning of the terms which the testator has used."[6] "The principle is, that if words acquire a special meaning by reason of their context, that meaning cannot be safely given to them, when used in a different context."[7] Considerations, which only show that a testator has made a disposition in his will which the court is surprised to find there, though they might have determined the sense in which the testator had used an ambiguous expression, cannot of themselves lead the court to refuse to give effect to the plain language he has employed. Where, for instance, the testator makes a bequest to his children, it cannot be read as one limited only to the sons, to the exclusion of the daughters.[8] So, where the testator made a will whereby he appointed his wife as his executrix and heir, and provided that if a son be born to him, that son should be the owner of the residue, and if no son be born, then his wife should be the owner, the court held that, on the failure of the contingency contemplated, the wife took an absolute estate.[9] Where the words of contingency form part of the description of the class of persons to take,

(1) S. 86, Succession Act.
(2) Forth v. Chapman, 1 P. Wms. 667; 2 Williams on Executors (9th Ed.), 933 (967), foot-note (h).
(3) Williams on Executors, (9th (Ed.), 996, foot-note.
(4) Sher v. Ganga, 36 A. 101 (121, 122) P.C.
(5) Krishna Rao v. Bena Bai, 20 B. 571 (592).
(6) Per Lord Cairns in Hill v. Crook, 6 H. L. 283 (285); Birks, In re, (1900) 1 Ch. 417 (418).
(7) Per Wilson, J., in Ballin v. Ballin, 7 C. 218.
(8) Krishna Rao v. Bena Bai, 20 B. 571 (591, 592).
(9) Jairam v. Kessowjee, 4 Bom.L.R. 555 (557).

as in the case of a gift to those "who shall attain the age of 21," the words must receive their natural construction, and no estate vests in any one till he attains the prescribed age. In such a case, there must be something in the context pointing to a different construction, or something in the will inconsistent with the literal construction, to justify a court in adopting any but the literal construction. In the words of contingency occurring in the description of the class of persons to take, a mere gift over is not sufficient to alter their meaning.[1]

1957. So, where the testator appointed four trustees to his will and provided that "upon your death, these properties shall similarly devolve on your heirs," and it was contended that while the words "your" referred to the four trustees, "your death" was intended not to refer to the death of all the trustees, the court rejected the construction, holding that there was nothing in the context to justify a departure from the normal rule.[2]

All words must be considered.

254. (1) Of two modes, preference must be given to the construction which gives effect to every expression.[3]

(2) But where two or more clauses are repugnant in a deed or will, the first in the deed and the last in the will shall prevail.[4]

1958. Analogous Law.—Both the clauses of the section are abstracted from sections 82, 84, 85 and 88 of the Succession Act, and are supported by the undernoted cases.[5]

Clause (1).

1959. The general rule is that all words used in a will must receive their due importance. This is emphasized by Jaimini who quotes the terse aphorism—"more words, more meaning".

The rule is taken from the English Law and may be thus illustrated.[6] If one devises land to A in fee, and later on in the same will devises it to C for life, both parts of the will stand. C will take first, and A on determination of C's interest.[7]

1960. Although the cardinal rule in the construction of wills is to give effect to the intention of the testator, the duty of the court is to discover not what the testator meant but what is the meaning of his words.[8]

1961. The primary rule applicable to the construction of a deed or a will is that stated in clause (1). It is but natural that where the executant has used expressions, he is presumed to have intended that they should control his meaning. But this is not always possible. And if two or more expressions are found to be irreconcilably contradictory, how are they to be construed? In that case, the rule of English Law governing wills, enacted also in the Succession Act now applicable to Hindu

(1) Ballin v. Ballin, 7 C. 218 (224).
(2) Aghore Nath v. Kamini, 11 C. L.J. 461 (473).
(3) Amirthayyan v. Katheramayyan, 14 M. 65 (69).
(4) A.-G. v. Hormusji, 29 B. 375; Somasundra v. Ganga, 28 M. 386.
(5) See f.-ns. (3) and (4).
(6) 2 Jarman on Wills (5th Ed.), 1656; 1 Williams on Executors, (10th Ed.), 837, citing Grey v. Minnethorpe, 3 Ves. 105; Constantine v. Constantine, 6 Ves. 102; Hall v. Warren, 9 H.L.C. 420.
(7) Anonym., Elliz., 9; Doe v. Daires, 4 M. & W. 599.
(8) Aghore Nath v. Kamini, 11 C.L. J. 461 (474): 6 I. C. 554, following Abbot v. Middleton, 7 H.L.C. 68; 11 E.R. 28; Scarle v. Rawlins, (1892) A.C. 342 (344).

wills is that the later clause overrules the earlier clause,[1] though the converse rule is held to govern deeds[2] (§ 1962). The reason for this distinction appears to lie in the fact that since a will takes effect upon the death of the testator, his last wishes are alone material, whereas a deed, which takes effect upon execution, must follow the conveyancing rule that the words which purport to convey in praesenti, have that effect instanter, and cannot be qualified by later words of limitation. But the rule that if there be a repugnancy, the first in a deed and the last in a will shall prevail, has no application where the supposed inconsistencies are found in one and the same provision,[3] or where they provide for different circumstances.[4]

1962. Construction of Repugnant Clauses.—The rule here formulated is a rule of English Law,[5] enacted in S. 88 of the Succession Act but it is a rule which is in consonance with natural equity and has been recognised in several cases in this country. But it is a rule to which recourse must be had only in the last resort and only after all other rules fail.[6] And before it is applied, it must be clear that two or more clauses of a deed or will are really repugnant. In many cases they may be supplementary and by no means irreconcilable, if due regard be had to circumstances and to context. Such a case arose in a case decided by the Privy Council, in which their Lordships had to construe the effect of two seemingly contradictory clauses. The recital in a debtor's letter referred to a standing debt, and the lien he created charged all the balances due from him. The debtor contended that the charge was limited to the debt then due, while the creditor claimed lien for all balances, whereupon the Privy Council observed: "The construction of an ambiguous stipulation in a deed may undoubtedly be governed or qualified by a recital; but on the other hand, if the intention of the parties is clearly to be collected from the operative part of the instrument, that intention is not to be defeated or controlled because it may go beyond what is expressed in the recital."[7] In this case the recitals stated that since the executant owed to the creditor a considerable amount of money, he delivered a lien for the current outstandings "and upon my payment of all balances, you will at once return to me all documents now deposited with you and cancel this letter." The debtor contended that the lien was limited by the recitals, but the Privy Council held the later clause, which constituted the contract, to extend to all unpaid balances. In another case, the Bombay High Court had to consider the effect of repugnancy in the same clause, in which case they held the rule here formulated inapplicable. In that case, a deed of indenture contained, among other things, a provision conveying to trustees "upon trust and for the use of the said trustees absolutely, to be expended and used by them for such charitable purposes as they might think fit." There was clearly inconsistency between conveying "absolutely" and a further direction creat-

Clause (2).

(1) S. 88, Succession Act; Chiman Rao v. Rambhau, 4 Bom.L.R. 509.

(2) Doe v. Biggs, 2 Taunt. 109 (113); Forbes v. Git, [1922] 1 A.C. 256.

(3) A.-G v. Hormusji, 29 B. 375.

(4) Damodar Das v. Dayabhai, 22 B. 833 (841) P.C.

(5) Deo v. Licester, 2 Taun. 109 (113).

(6) Advocate-General v. Hormusji, 29 B. 375 (381); Anirthayyan v. Kotheramayyan, 14 M. 65 (70).

(7) Marcar v. Sigo, 2 M. 239 (257) P.C., following Walsh v. Trevanion, 15 Q.B. 750.

ing a trust in favour of charity. It was held that, read as a whole, the testator intended to create a trust and that the word "absolutely" was not inconsistent with the creation of a trust.[1] But in another case, where the husband had bequeathed his estate to his widow as "malik" but had added that "during her lifetime she shall apply the same and spend it in a good way," the court held the words to be words of limitation, reducing the estate to a life-estate.[2]

Construction must be testacy.

255. That construction must be preferred which will prevent a total intestacy.[3]

1963. Analogous Law.—This rule is a natural corollary to that which favours the benignant construction of wills, giving effect to its bequests as far as possible and after straining every nerve to make a sense out of the most uncouth declaration of the deceased. Consequently, of two modes of construction, law favours that which will prevent a total intestacy.[4] So, in one case the testator bequeathed his estate to his two wives A and B and his nephew C in equal shares, providing that so long as his "wives A and B will remain alive, all the three shall enjoy in equal shares, and on the death of A, her share will be enjoyed by B and C in equal shares, and on the death of both A and B, C shall obtain the estate absolutely." C survived A but predeceased B, a contingency not provided for in the will, whereupon it was contended that on the death of C, the estate would descend as upon an intestacy, and that, therefore, B became entitled to the estate as the heiress of her husband. But the court held that that was not the testator's intention, and that the court could not adopt a construction which would lead to intestacy, and that the testator's intention being to vest the estate in C on the determination of the lives of A and B, C's representative became entitled to possession of C's interest.[5]

Construction against Intestacy.

1964. Where a person made two wills, by the latter of which the dispositions made by the earlier one were cancelled, but where the dispositions made by the latter will turned out to be invalid in law, it was held that as the testator had wanted to make a will and had had no intention of dying intestate, his animus revocandi had only a conditional existence and that his real intention was to revoke the first, only if the second would successfully effect the dispositions set out therein, and that, on these failing, the first will became operative.[6] (§ 1917.)

Subsequent events ignored.

256. The construction is not to be varied by events subsequent to the execution.[7]

1965. Analogous Law.—A will speaks and takes effect as from the date of the testator's death.[8] But this does not mean that we are to construe whatever a man says in his will, as if it were said on the day of his death. All it means is that where the testator uses expressions such as "my land" or the like, it would not include all after-acquired

(1) Advocate-General v. Hormusji, 29 B. 375 (385).
(2) Mithi Bai v. Mehar Bai, 46 B. 162.
(3) Mandakini v. Arunbala, 3 C.L.J. 515, following Turner v. Hallard, 30 Ch. D. 390 (395).
(4) Ib.
(5) Mandakini v. Arunbala, 3 C.L.J. 515 (520, 521).
(6) Govinda v. Ramcharan, 52 C. 748.
(7) Portal and Lamb, In re, 30 Ch. 50 (55).
(8) S. 90, Succession Act, framed in accordance with S. 24 of the English Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict., C. 26).

property which he possessed at the date of his death. In one case, at the date of his will, the testator possessed a cottage and a little land in a place where he subsequently purchased a large house and gardens. By his will he had given "my cottage" and "all my land" in the place to a specific devisee, and the question was whether the devise sufficed to convey the house and gardens which he had purchased since the date of his will. It was contended that since the description of the property must be deemed to refer to the property answering that description at the death of the testator, "all my land" in the will had the effect of conveying both the subsequently acquired house and the gardens. But Lindley, L.J., overruled this contention, holding that in order to construe a will, you must look at the facts as they were at the date of the will.[1]

1966. In another case, Thurlow, L.C., laid down as a sound rule that the language of a will must be construed with reference to the circumstances existing at the time it was executed, and not by any subsequent event. Where, for instance, the testator had bequeathed a fund to A, desiring him to dispose of it to such charities as he thought fit, recommending poor clergymen with large families and good character. A died 9 years before the testratrix had notice of it, whereupon the next-of-kin contested the devise to charity on the ground that A's death had revoked it, or at least made it so imperfect that it could not be rendered perfect. The next-of-kin argued as follows: "The testratrix had given nothing to any charitable purpose, but personally to the trustee to appoint. She must have contemplated either that he was to outlive her or not. By his death 9 years before her, the gift lapsed, and she was for 9 years together in the situation of a testatrix giving to such uses as she should herself appoint; for she did not mean the confidence to go to his representatives as she meant the legal interest to go." But Thurlow, L.C., overruled this contention, holding that the will could not be construed in the light of subsequent events or of what the testatrix might have done or thought afterwards. "The court cannot resort to circumstances of that kind, nor judge of her intention at the time of making the will by what she thought afterwards."[2]

1967. So, where the testator gave £ 1,000 to M and the issue of her body, and in default of such issue, he gave the said £ 1,000 to be equally divided between the daughters, then living, of J and E his wife, it was held that the devise could not benefit the daughters of J and E born after the testator's death.[3] On the same principle, where the number of children mentioned by the testator agrees with the number existing at the date of the will, the gift will not be extended to an after-born child, although en ventre sa mère at the date of the will.[4]

---

(1) Portal and Lam, In re, 30 Ch. 50 (55), explained in Gullins, In re, (1909) 1 Ch. 345 (351, 352).

(2) Moggridge v. Thackwell, 1 Ves. J. 464 (475) s.c.: 7 Ves. 36: 13 Ves. 416; 30 E.R. 440 (445); S. 110, Succession Act.

(3) Jee v. Audley, 1 Cox 324: 29 E. R. 1186.

(4) Shere v. Bishop, 4 B.C. C. 55; Emery's Estate, In re, 3 Ch. D. 300.

Effect of operative part.

257. Where a testator's intention cannot operate to its full extent, it shall take effect as far as possible.[1]

1968. Analogous Law.—This is S. 87 of the Succession Act and is in accordance with the English Law,[2] according to which, if a testator devised two parts of his property, showing an anxious intention that they should both go together, but on its appearing that he had no power of disposition over one part, the devisee would take the other part, though the testator did not intend him to take the one without the other.[3] So where the testator bequeaths an estate contrary to Hindu Law, what is contrary to law will alone be inoperative, but the rest given effect to. "If the gift were to a man and his heirs, to be selected from a line other than that specified by law, expressly excluding the legal course of inheritance, as, for instance, if an estate were granted to a man and his eldest nephew, and so forth for ever, to take as his heirs, and without any of the persons so taking having the power to dispose of the estate during his lifetime, here inasmuch as an inheritance so described is not legal, such a gift cannot take effect except in favour of such persons as could take under a gift, to the extent to which the gift is consistent with the law. The first taker would, in this case, take for his lifetime, because the giver had at least that intention. He could not take more, because the language is inconsistent with his having any different inheritance from that which the gift attempts to confer, and that estate of inheritance which it confers is void.[4]

If an estate is limited to two jointly, the one capable of taking, the other not, he who is capable of taking shall take the whole.[5] If the legacy be given to two persons jointly and one of them die before the testator, and other legatee takes the whole.[6] But where a legacy is given to legatees in words which show that the testator intended to give them distinct shares of it, then if any legatee die before the testator, so much of the legacy as was intended for him shall fall into the residue of the testator's property.[7]

Probate.

258. (1) Probate of a will may be obtained by an executor appointed by the will.

(2) The grant of probate is subject to the provisions of Ss. 211-369 of the Succession Act.

(3) The probate of a will only establishes its factum but not its validity which must be otherwise established.

1969. Analogous Law.—The object of obtaining probate[8] of a will is to prove it and obtain a conclusive order as to its contents and the appointment of executors, if any, named therein, but not the validity of its provisions.[9] The object of the proceedings is merely to determine the

(1) S. 87, Succession Act.

(2) Fisk v. A.B., 4 Eq. 521; Hunter v. Bullock, 14 Eq. 45; Dawson v. Small, 18 Eq. 114; Williams, In re, 5 Ch.D. 735; Birkete, In re, 9 Ch.D. 575.

(3) Southey v. Somerville, 13 Ves. 486.

(4) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 P.C.; Tarokessur v. Soshi, 9 C. 922 (957, 958) P.C.; Kristoronimoni v. Norendho, 16 C. 383 P.C.

(5) S. 106, Succession Act; Nandi Singh v. Sita Ram, 16 C. 677 P.C.

(6) S. 106, Succession Act.

(7) S. 107, Ib.

(8) From Lat. Probo, to prove; hence, the proceeding in which a person's will is proved as such and registered.

(9) S. 227, Succession Act.

question of representation of the deceased for the purpose of administering the estate and not for the purpose of determining any question of inheritance or the title.[1] Though the judgment of the Probate Court is a judgment in rem, binding upon all persons, it is not conclusive in the sense that the Civil Court is precluded from trying the same issues.[2] The court in granting probate must follow the language of the Succession Act, without digressing into English Law on the subject.[3] It has not to try the applicant's title to the property or to decide on the property disposed of or on the validity of such disposition.[4] Obtaining probate means nothing more than that the will was executed by the testator, and does not decide his power to make the will or its validity.[5] The court canno go into the title of the testator.[6] It is bound to grant probate on proof of execution of the will, unless it finds that it was not executed by the testator, or that he was not in a state of mind competent to exercise his testamentary powers, or that the will was not the testator's own voluntary act. The court has no concern with the question whether the will, if proved, will be effectual or valid, or whether it can affect certain parts of the property with which it purports to deal. The mere fact that a will is proved, might, in view of a previous decree of a Civil Court prove ineffectual, is no ground for refusing to grant probate.[7] Though the probate proceedings are miscellaneous,[8] and question of title cannot be raised or decided, still no matter can subsequently be contested in a regular suit after it is once decided in the probate proceedings. So where a will contained a clause "that the testator had no son and had not given and will not give the widow authority to adopt," it was held that the question that there had been no adoption was res judicata, and could not be re-agitated in a regular suit.[9]

1970. The object of proceeding under part IX of the Succession Act is to determine the question of representation of the deceased for the purpose of administering the estate, and not to determine the question of inheritance. The court should not enter into questions of adoption in such proceeding.[10]

In every case in which probate of a Hindu will is asked, a special citation ought to be served upon those persons whose interests are direct-

---

(1) Jagannath v. Ranjit, 25 C. 354; Arunmayi v. Mahendra, 20 C. 888; Ganesh v. Ramchandra, 21 B. 563.

(2) Bailey v. Harris, 12 Q.B. 905.

(3) Kurratulain v. Nuzleat, 33 C. 110 P.C.

(4) Thrope v. Macdonald, 3 P.D. 76; Behary v. Juggo, 4 C. 1; Arunmayi v. Mahendra, 20 C. 888; Lalit Chandra v. Baikantha, 14 C.W.N. 463 : 5 I.C. 395; Nishi v. Ashutosh, ib. 613; Baisnav v. Kishore, 15 C.W.N. 1014; Hormusji v. Dhanbaiji, 12 B. 164; Barot v. Muli, 18 B. 749; Bal Gangadhar v. Sakwar Bai, 26 B. 792 (797); Ochavaram v. Dolatram, 28 B. 644; Birjnath v. Chander, 19 A. 458; Mahasundar v. Ratan Prasad, 1 Pat.L.W. 370; Behari v. Ganga, 1 Pat. L.W. 744 : 41 I.C. 279; Nga Pwe v. Michan, (1910) U.B.R. 169 : 10 I.C. 993.

(5) Bhabangana v. Horendra, 17 C.W.N. 445 : 16 I.C. 48; Chintaman v. Ramchandra, 12 Bom.L.R. 694.

(6) Bhabangana v. Horendra, 17 C.W.N. 455: 16 I.C. 44.

(7) Jagadindra v. Madhusudan, 20 C.W.N. 307 : 27 I.C. 24.

(8) Indra Narain v. Onkarlal, (1912) P.R. No. 20 : 10 I.C. 130; Cullen v. Elkins, 9 N.L.R. 152; 21 I.C. 599.

(9) Brendon v. Sundarbai, 38 B. 272.

(10) Manshana v. Ma Chin, Taw, 10 Bur.L.T. 184 : 44 I.C. 138.

ly affected by the will. The practice of a mere general citation in all cases in one which may tend to encourage fraud.[1]

An application for probate cannot legally be disposed of by a compromise. The court is itself under a duty to determine whether the will is genuine or not.[2]

Except in a case subject to the Hindu Wills Act, there is nothing to oblige a person to apply for a probate before enforcing the terms of the will.[3] And since a will may in certain cases be still oral, a person may obtain probate even of an oral will.[4] The court naturally view with suspicion an oral will,[5] but the court cannot refuse probate if the will is proved without opposition, and in any case it cannot be refused merely because the will is officious.[6]

Before the extention of the several general provisions of the Succession Act, a question had engaged the attention of the courts whether a woman executor or administrator possessed the same unlimited power of disposal as a male executor or administrator, it being held that she did not;[7] but this distinction is no longer material, since the powers of an executor or administrator, whether male or female, are now subject to the general provisions of S. 307 of the Succession Act. The estate of the testator vests in the executor, but "it is the duty of an executor to administer the assets in a due course of administration. It is a breach of trust in him in effectuating that breach is a party to such fraud."[8] Though the estate vests in the executor, his conveyance may be avoided by a person interested in the will if it is for undervalue,[9] or is otherwise infected by fraud[10] or collusion with the purchaser, or is otherwise in breach of his duty.

An executor derives his title from the will and not from the grant of probate.[11]

His Title to Property.

1971. Since the executor or the administrator is in no better position as regards the title to the property devised, it follows that the disposal, by will, of her husband's property by a Hindu widow, confers no title on the legatee to eject even a trespasser.[12] A devise may be defeated by the subsequent transfer of property by the testator, and it may be otherwise postponed by the claims of his creditors and others who take precedence over a mere legatee.[13]

(1) Kamona v. Hurro Lall, 8 C. 570.

(2) Jaggeshwar v. Jagatdhari, 2 Pat. L.J. 535 : 40 I.C. 345.

(3) S. 213 (2) Succ. Act from which S. 57, cl. (c) is omitted; this section is also omitted from Sch. III; Peribai v. Motumal, (1937) S. 84; Bhagwan Sang v. Bechavdas, 6 B. 73 (75).

(4) Gokulchand v. Mangal Sen, 35 A. 313; Haji Mahomed, In re, 24 B. 8; Mangtu v. Jowala, (1908) P.W.R. 8.

(5) Haji Mahomed, In re, 24 B. 8.

(6) Rammal v. Kakal, 22 C. W. N. 315 : 43 I.C. 208.

(7) Kamikhya Nath v. Hari Charan, 26 C. 607, followed in Chunni Lal v. Makshada, 52 I.C. (C.) 309 (310); Mithi Bai v. Mehar Bai, 46 B. 162 (170); Mahomed Yusuf v. Hargovandas, 47 B. 231; Katreddi v. Kadiyala, 49 M. 261 F.B.

(8) Doe v. Follows, (1832) 1 L.J.R. 177 (178).

(9) Umamoyi Dasi v. Raja Janki, 1 I. C. (C.) 248 (250); Rice v. Gordon, 11 Beav. 265 (270): 50 E.R. 818 (820): 83 R.R. 153 (157).

(10) Whale v. Booth, 4 T. R. 625-n; Rice v. Gordon, 11 Beav. 265; Scott v. Tyler, 2 Dick. 725; Doe v. Fallows, 2 Cr. & Jerv. 481: 1 Wms. Ex. 697-698.

(11) Soona Mayna v. Soona Navena, 35 I.C. 323 P.C.; Ganapathi Aiyar v. Sivamalai Goundan, 36 M. 575.

(12) Jagdeo v. Raja Kuar, 103 I.C. (P.) 482: (1927) P. 262.

(13) Krishna Kumari v. Rajendra Bahadur, 2 Luck. 43: (1927) O. 240.

CHAPTER XX.

RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS.

1972. Topical Introduction.—The present law relating to religious and charitable endowments has grown mainly out of the numerous inculcations, commending and enjoining the making of gifts to such objects. The rest is statute law and case-law. The sacred texts contain no rules for the management of charities, in which the pious founders have invested their fortunes. Probably, no other country in the world can boast of such munificent bequests, made in the name of religion and charity. But like all other countries, these endowments have, to a large extent, been diverted from their original purpose and are now held in quasi-proprietary rights. In 1810,[1] in the Bengal Presidency, and in 1817,[2] in the Madras Presidency, the British Government had assumed control of all the public endowments and benefactions, Hindu and Mahomedan, and placed them under the charge of the respective Boards of Revenue. On the close of the Mutiny, which was ascribed to undue religious intervention by Government, it decided to relinquish its control of these institutions and to place them under the management of their own respective creeds. With this object, the Religious Endowments Act of 1863[3] was enacted, which devised a system of committees, to which were transferred the powers vested in Government for the appointment of "managers, trustees and superintendents;" other endowments remained unprovided for, with the result that grave abuses crept into their management, and the splendid funds, which the bounty of the public had consecrated to religious and charitable uses, were dissipated in other ways. Unavailing efforts have since been made to control their administration, but the Government, pledged to religious neutrality, is slow to move, and until the enactment of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act,[4] the only provisions to be found in the statute book were those contained in the Religious Endowments Act[5] and S. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Trusts Act did not touch them, and the Religious Endowments Act is a misnomer, since it merely transfers to Government the powers previously possessed by the Board of Revenue, and merely deals with public religious foundations.

1973. The provisions of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act are wider, but, as will be presently seen, it merely arms the court with power to afford advice and guidance to the trustee and call upon him to furnish particulars of the trust to a person interested therein. Its proceedings are summary, and the only relief it can grant to a petitioner against a recalcitrant trustee is by a suit, which the former may institute under S. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. Apart, however, from the statute law, the common law has laid in terms, which admit of no equivocation, that religious and charitable endowments, whatever their nature and character, are essentially trusts, of which the manager, for the time being

(1) Beng. Reg., XIX of 1910.
(2) Mad. Reg., VII of 1817.
(3) Act XX of 1863.
(4) Act XIV of 1920.
(5) Act XX of 1863.

—by whatever name he may be called whether mahant, shebait or dharmadhikari,—is a trustee, in the wider sense of that term, and that, as such, he has now power of alienation of the corpus, which he is bound to maintain for the purpose for which it was created. Even the mahant of a muth, who was at one time held to be in the nature of a proprietor, has now been accorded a place alongside of other trustees and in no way distinguishable as regards his power of administration and alienation.

1974. Hindu endowments are divided into religious and charitable. The former may be further sub-divided into public and private. The vast majority of the endowments are those designated public. The only instance of a private religious endowment is that furnished by a family endowment for the benefit of a private idol, over which neither the public nor the court has any control.

The sacred texts do not distinguish between religion and charity according to which the one includes the other. The Sanskrit term "dharm" is wide enough to include both religious and charitable objects In England and in the Indian law as enacted in S. 17 of the Transfer of Property Act, religious trusts are classed as charitable trusts. So Lord Langdale M.R., said, "All the cases with one exception, go to support the proposition that a religious purpose is a charitable purpose."[1] But though the two purposes are allied they are distinguishable and will be found distinguished in the sequel. (S. 262.)

1975. The Hindu Law of gifts being applicable to wills, it follows that, while the Smritis encourage unfettered gift to religion and charity, the only check that the clerigical inculcations receive, is from the inclination of the testator and the calls of other claimants upon his affection and liberality. But where no such claimants exist, or the testator is susceptible to the influences of religion, he is known to make wholesale bequests of his estate to religious charity.[2] And such bequests have been held to be even free from the rule against perpetuities. "It being assumed to be a principle of Hindu Law that a gift can be made to an idol, which is a caput mortuum and incapable of alienating, you cannot break in upon that principle by engrafting upon it the English Law of perpetuities."[3]

The encouragement, which charitable bequests have thus received, both from the sacred and the secular laws, has naturally prompted persons to make illusory bequests, where, while the form is religious, the intention is to benefit the devisee. Such illusory devises are, however, subject to the ordinary law.

Definitions.

259. In this chapter unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context.

(a) "Beneficiary" is a person for whose spiritual or temporal advancement an edowment is created. It includes an idol to whom, or any other object for which, the property is dedicated.[4]

(b) "Debutter property" is property dedicated to a god or gods or a religious object as distinguished from a charitable object.[5]

(1) Baker v. Sutton, 1 Keen 225 (233) followed in Jouresend v. Carne, 3 Hare 257.

(2) F. Macn. H.L. 320, 323, 331, 335, 336, 347, 349, 350, 371, App. 58.

(3) Per Markby, J., in Aseme v. Krishna, 2 B.L.R. (O. C.) (47); Jamshedji v. Soonabai, 33 B. 122; now see S. 17, Transfer of Property Act.

(4) Har Narayan v. Surja Kunwari, 43 A. 293 P.C.; Eshwari Bhuwaneswari v. Brojo Nath, (1937) P.C. 185 (188); Manohar v. Bhupendra Nath, 60 C. 452 (476, 479) F.B.

(5) Manohar v. Bhupendra Nath, 60 C. 452 (475) F.B.

(c) "Dedication" is the formal renunciation of one's right in property in favour of a religious or charitable object.[1]

(d) "Endowment" is the dedication of property by a grant, gift or devise to religious or charitable uses.[2]

(e) "Pujari" is a person appointed to be in charge of the worship of an ideal or deity.[3]

(f) "Manager" is a person, charged with the management of debutter property, possessing some proprietary rights therein[4] which rights and his duties are regulated by custom or usage of the institution to which he is attached. He is variously called a trustee, shebait, sarbarakar, dharmakarta or mahant. And though he is sometimes called a trustee, he is not a trustee in the English sense or in the sense in which that term is used in the several Acts of the Indian legislature.[5]

(g) "Worshipper" is a person who has the right of worship or to otherwise offer his reverence to an idol or shrine.

1976. Analogous Law.—The following are but a few out of the numerous texts to be found on the subject of endowments:—

Manu.—"323. Should the king be near his end through some incurable disease, he must bestow on the priests all his riches, accumulated from legal fines; and having duly committed his kingdom to his son, let him seek death in battle, or if there be no war, by abstaining from food."[6]

Vishnu.—"81. Let him (the king) bestow landed property upon Brahmans.

"82. To those upon whom he has bestowed (land) he must give a document, destined for the information of a future ruler, which must be written upon a piece of (cotton) cloth, or a copper-plate and must contain the names of his three immediate ancestors, a declaration of the extent of the land and an imprecation against him who should appropriate the donation to himself, and should be signed with his own seal."

"83. Let him not appropriate to himself landed property bestowed (upon Brahmans) by other (rulers)."

"84. Let him present the Brahmans with gifts of every kind."[7]

Mitakshara.—"Both he who accepts land and he who gives it, are performers of a holy deed, and shall go to a region of bliss".[8]

Ib. (citing the last).—"Since donation is praised, if a sale may be made, it should be conducted for the transfer of immovable property, in the form of a gift, delivering it with gold and water (to ratify the donation)."

Sankh.—"Wealth was conferred for the sake of defraying sacrifices."

"Though, in the case of secular gifts, delivery of possession is necessary to complete a gift, it is dispensed with when the gift is in favour of religion or charity. And though other gifts are void if made by a man who is afflicted with disease and the like, a gift to religion is irrevocable and may, on death of the promisor, be enforced against his son."[9]

Katyayan.—"What a man has promised in health or in sickness for a religious purpose, must be given, and if he die without giving it, his son shall doubtless be compelled to deliver it."[10]

1977. Definition of Terms.—Hindu Law makes no distinction between religious as distinct from charitable objects. The "beneficiary" of a religious en-

(a) Beneficiary.

(1) Manohar v. Bhupendra Nath, 60 C. 476 (481).

(2) Watson & Co. v. Ramchand, 18 C. 10 (18) P.C.

(3) Indurj v. Chundemun, 16 W.R. 99.

(4) Ram Parkash v. Anand Das, 43 C. 707 (713) P.C.; Arunachellam v. Venkatachalapathi, 43 M. 253 (286) P.C.

(5) Vidyavaruthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831 P.C.; Naina Pillai v. Ramanathan, 47 M. 337 (352) P.C.; Manohar v. Bhupendra Nath, 60 C. 452 (467, 494, 495) F.B.; Keshav Das (Mahant) v. Amardas, 14 Pat. 379.

(6) Manu, IX-323.

(7) Vishnu, III-81-84; 7 S.B.E. 21, 22, 32.

(8) Brahm Vaivart, cited in Mit., I-I-32.

(9) 3 Dig., 484.

(10) 2 Dig., 96.

dowment may be any object, real or imaginary, an idol, a muth or other juristic person or a body of men. In either case, they are the direct beneficiaries. But in a wider sense, worshippers and devotees are equally regarded as beneficiaries, if they have the right of offering their devotion and worship to the deity.[1]

(b) Debutter property.

1978. The term "debutter" is a popular corruption of the Sanskrit word "devottar" which means "dedicated or given to God". As such, debutter property is property dedicated to a god or gods.[2] An idol[3] a muth[4] or a temple is a juridical person and can hold property. But it is, like the Church, a person in perpetual minority and requires some one to manage its estate. The destruction of an idol does not destroy the endowment[5] since the endowment is not to the idol but to the god of which it is a visible symbol.

(c) What is Dedication.

1979. The term "Dedication" implies an intentional renunciation by the owner of his right in the property that he offers to an idol or any sacred object. A dedication is not a transfer within the meaning of law, though, upon dedication, the property ceases to belong to the owner and its ownership passes to the object concerned. The two cardinal essentials of such dedication are the sankalp, and samarpan or utsarga[6] by spoken words accompanied by libations of water in the presence of a priest or other witness to proclaim the act of voluntary renunciation.

A dedication must relate to a sacred or charitable object. The sacred object may be public or private, existent or brought or to be brought into existence by the founder for which his dedication is made.[7] Hindu law recognizes no distinction between a religious and a charitable object. Consequently, where a dedication relates to a charitable object or purpose, its character, as such, is not to be judged by the limitations of the English statute, which gives to the term "charity" a technical meaning.[8] Any object that is treated as charitable, e.g., the construction of a well, a tank, a reservoir, a dharmasala, or a serai for the accommodation of the public or any section of it, the opening of sadarvart, or a fund, created for the distribution of food and money to all comers, or for the feeding of animals fish or birds and the like, is a charitable object.

1980. Nevertheless, the usual human motives prompt these endowments, and in judging of the character of an endowment, the following questions naturally arise: (1) what is the total value of the estate of the deceased disposed of by his will? (2) what proportion of it was bequeathed to the family god and how much to its members? (3) If the estate be large, and the bequest to the god small, it might be an effort to create a perpetuity and make the estate both impartible and inalienable. (4) If that was not

(1) Mohiuddin v. Soyududdin, 20 C. 810 (816); Kazi Hassan v. Sagun, 24 B. 170 (181).

(2) Shyma Charan v. Sagun, 24 B. 511; Sripathi v. Khudiram, 41 C.L.J. 22: 82 I.C. 840: (1925) C. 442.

(3) Pramatha Nath v. Pradyumna, 52 C. 809 P.C.; Shibessouree v. Mothooranath, 13 M.I.A. 270 (273); Jagadindra v. Hemanta, 32 C. 129; Jodhi v. Basdeo, 8 A.L.J. 817: 11 I.C. 47, F.B.; contra in Raghunathji v. Shah Lal, 19 A. 336.

(4) Babaji v. Laxman Das, 28 B. 215 (223). A Muth is known as Marhi in Sindh; Goverdhangir v. Vishingir, 15 S. L.R. 38: 63 I.C. 370.

(5) Purna v. Gopal, 8 C.L.J. 369.

(6) Manohar v. Bhoopendra Nath, 60 C. 452 (477) F.B.; Bhekdhari v. Sri Ramchanderji, 10 Pat. 388 (400); Chandulal v. Rampatmal, (1933) L. 189 contra such ceremonies not necessary, Prem Nath v. Hari Ram, 16 L. 85.

(7) Lakshmi Narayan v. Gostha Raman, (1937) C. 327 following, Bhupati Nath v. Ram Lal, 37 C. 128.

(8) Statute of Elizabeth (43 Eliz., C. 4); Morris v. Bishop of Durham, 9 Ves. 495.

the object, why was not specific property made over to the god for his maintenance and worship? (5) If the estate was indebted was it an attempt to screen the property from the creditors, was there any reason for making the bequest benami. (6) If the endowment was small and all the surplus was left to the legatee, it would be treated as a gift to the legatee with a burthen for the worship of the idol. (7) If the testator was an orthodox idolator, it would account for his bequest to his guardian deity, otherwise it would arouse suspicion. (8) Charitable bequests call for similar scrutiny. (9) In all gifts and bequests made since 1929, the rules of construction of deeds and wills is subject to the statutory control. (10) But in cases decided since, Hindu Law, applicable to religious and charitable grants and bequests still holds good, since an idol is a juridical person in perpetual minority, and any dedication made to it will still be judged by Hindu Law. (11) Consequently, an endowment made in favour of a public religious or charitable object will carry with it the incidents formulated by that law. (12) For instance; where the bequest is to a math, its mahant takes the estate upon the terms that custom and usage have vested him. (13) If he appoints a shebait, law vests in him some degree of proprietary interest, though for the purpose of limitation, that interest must be treated as non-existent. (14) The question whether an endowment creates a public or a private trust is again a question that may call for decision. (15) The Hindu Law of religious and charitable endowments is at present neither wholly statutory nor purely personal. How much of the other applies to a given case depends upon its nature and the circumstances attending it.

(d) Endowment.

1981. An endowment is a loose term, and sometimes used in a dual sense as distinguishing the property dedicated to an object as also the object itself. Strictly speaking, it means the one and not the other.

(e) Pujari.

1982. As defined under the head "trustee," the manager of a religious object is variously described; but whatever description might be given to him, he is distinct and must be distinguished from a pujari who is the officiating priest in charge of the worship, and where the object is charitable e.g., a dharmashala, or a hospital, he does not exist, because he is not required. A person may serve both as a shebait as well as a pujari; but his two functions remain separate.

1983. In the first place, a manager must be distinguished from a superintendent[1] or other officer, in which the trust does not vest, but who is merely to supervise the work of the manager.[2] Such officer performs his prescribed duties, but has neither the rights nor is liable to perform the duties of manager. Then, again, the manager of the trust properties, as such, must be distinguished from the manager of the temple-service and ceremonies which he performs according to the customary ritual. As manager of the properties, he is trustee of the endowment, and his general rights and duties are those of a trustee,[3] which he cannot delegate for performance to another.[4]

Religious Trustee.

1984. The term "trustee" has become engrafted into Hindu Law, in a sense different to what it bears under English Law, a sense in which that term has been

(1) Ramcharan v. Rakbal, 41 C. 19.
(2) Ramanathan v. Murugappa, 29 M. 283 (289) P.C.
(3) Srinivasa v. Esalappa, 46 M. 565 (582) P.C.
(4) Bannerjee v. Sita Nath, 26 C.W.N. 236 (241) P.C.; Kotasseri v. Kanholi, (1922) M.W.N. 428.

used in several Acts of the Legislature.[1] The difference between a shebait and a trustee in the English sense is this. A shebait takes the estate dedicated to an idol upon customary terms, which include some interest in the dedicated property whereas a trustee has, and can have, no such interest. Such is a dharmadhikari, who has no right beyond that for personal support.[2] But a mahant of a muth has larger powers than a shebait and is sometimes described as an owner in trust for the muth[3] and "the only law of these mahants and their offices, functions and duties is to be found in custom and practices which is proved by testimony."[4]

The Position of a Mahant.

1985. The position of the mahant must then be now settled to be as follows: "The whole assets (of the muth) are vested in him as the owner thereof in trust for the institution itself."[5] "The nature of the ownership is . . . . an ownership in trust for the muth or institution itself, and it must not be forgotten that although large administrative powers are undoubtedly vested in the reigning mahant, the trust does exist and must be respected."[6] "The mahant, in their Lordships' opinion, is not only a spiritual preceptor, but also a trustee in respect of the muth over which he presides."[7] Adverting to this case, a Madras Bench held it to be a "considered pronouncement as to the position of the head of a muth, as to his functions and his legal position with regard to the endowments."[8] In the absence of custom, a mahant of a muth cannot transfer the right of management vested in him, though coupled with obligation to manage in conformity with the trust annexed thereto.[9]

There is no fixed rule which regulates the relation between a superior and a subordinate muth; even if a muth is subordinate to another, it must be governed by its own rules of management.[10]

But though a mahant does not, as a matter of common law and apart from special usage, possess the power of appointment, he is entitled to appoint a deputy, who may, in due course, succeed to him.[11] It has already been stated (§ 1978) that a muth, like an idol, is a juridical person, capable of acquiring, holding and vindicating legal rights, though, of necessity, it can only act in relation to those rights through the medium of some human agency. In connection with the property of a muth, there are two distinct classes of suits, those in which the manager seeks to enforce his private and personal rights, and those in which he seeks to vindicate the rights of the muth. The rights of the muth cannot ordinarily be prejudiced by the

(1) Vidyavaruthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831 (839, 842) P.C. e.g., The Religious Endowment Act (XX of 1863); Charitable Endowments Act (XXVII of 1890); Indian Trustees Act (XXVII of 1866); Trusts Act (II of 1882); The Trustees and Mortgagees Powers Act; (XXVIII of 1866).

(2) Vidyapurna v. Vidyanithi, 27 M. 435; approved in, Srinivasa v. Evalappa, 45 M. 565 (581, 582) P.C.

(3) Arunachellam v. Venkatachalapathi, 42 M. 253 (286) P.C.

(4) Greedhari v. Nund Kissore, 11 M. I.A. 405 (428); quoted in, Ram Parkash v. Anand Das, 43 C. 707 (716) P.C.; Kesho Das v. Amardasji, 14 Pat. 319.

(5) Ram Parkash v. Anand Das, 43 C. 707 (713) P.C. distinguished in; Vidyavaruthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831 (838) P.C. But in Srinivasa v. Evalappa, 45 M. 565 (582), a Mahant was held to possess larger powers than a mere Dharmkarta.

(6) Ib., p. 714.

(7) Ib., p. 732.

(8) Baluswamy v. Venkataswamy, 40 M. 745 (749).

(9) Rajah Vurmah v. Revi Vurmah, 1 M. 235 P.C.; Gnanasambanda v. Velu, 23 M. 271 P.C., explained in Prayad v. Kriparam, 8 C.L.J. 499 (504).

(10) Prayad v. Kriparam, 8 C.L.J. 499 (505), following Kashi v. Chidumbarnath, 20 W.R. 217; Giyana v. Kandasami, 10 M. 375.

(11) Tiruvambala v. Pandaram, 40 M. 177 (197).

result of a suit of the former class.[1] The head of a muth may contract debts for the purpose of the muth, and debts so contracted may be recovered from the muth property, and will devolve as a liability on his successor to the extent of the assets received by him. But the head of a muth cannot pledge its credit for debt contracted for its purposes without necessity and without reference to the question whether they should have been met from current income. In this respect, the head of a muth does not possess larger powers than the heads of other religious institutions, whose powers are, analogous to those of the manager of an infant heir.[2]

Dedication—Partial or complete.

260. (1) A dedication of property to an endowment may be partial or complete.

(2) It is partial when there is merely a charge or trust created.[3]

(3) It is complete when the property is dedicated absolutely, and no person has reserved any beneficial interest therein.[4]

Explanation 1.—The question whether the dedication in a given case is absolute or partial is a question of intention deducible from the construction, execution[5] and effect of its terms.[6]

Explanation 2.—The question whether a bequest amounts to a dedication to an object, subject to a charge in favour of another, or is an alienation in favour of the latter, subject to a charge in favour of the object,[7] is a question of intention deducible from the construction and effect of the bequest.[8]

1986. Partial Dedication.—A dedication may be partial or complete, since a disposition may create a charge or trust in favour of the idol or in favour of the heirs, or any other person, such as the shebait or the mahant. In such cases, the dedication is complete or partial according as the religious object is the sole beneficiary or merely a beneficiary to the extent of a charge created in its favour. In the one case, ownership of the property vests in the religious object, while in the other case, it vests in the donees or the heirs who take it, subject to a trust, but it descends (and descends beneficially to heirs) subject only to a trust or charge for the purpose of religion.[9] "In such cases, no fixed and absolute rule can be set up, derived alone from the use of particular terms in one portion of the will. The question whether the idol itself shall be considered the true beneficiary, subject to a charge in favour of the heirs or specified relatives of the testator for their upkeep, or that, on the other hand, these heirs shall be considered the true beneficiaries of the property, subject to a charge for the upkeep, worship and expenses of the idol, is a question

(1) Babai Rao v. Luxman Das, 28 B. 215.

(2) Nataraja v. Karutha, 9 I.C. (M.) 150.

(3) Jagadindra v. Hemanta, 32 C. 129 P.C.

(4) Ib.

(5) Ganesh Gir v. Fatechand, 31 N.L.R. 282 (288).

(6) Har Narayan v. Surja Kunwari, 43 A. 291 (293, 295) P.C.; Surendra Krishna v. Ishwar Bhubaneswari, 60 C. 54 (81, 84).

(7) Bhekhari v. Sri Ramchand, 10 Pat. 338 (396, 400); Janardan v. Khilishchandra, (1932) C. 419.

(8) Manohar v. Bhupendra Nath, 60 C. 452 (490, 491) F.B.; Surendra Krishna v. Ishwar, 60 C. 54.

(9) Sonatun v. Juggulsoondree, 8 M. I.A. 66; Ashutosh v. Doorga, 5 C. 438 P.C.; Jagadindra v. Hemanta, 32 C. 129 (141) P.C.; Gopal Lal v. Purna Chandra, 49 C. 459 (465) P.C.; Janardan v. Khitish Chandra, (1932) C. 419; Mahimchandra v. Hara Kumari, 42 C. 561; Bhuggobutty v. Gooroo, 25 C. 112; Rajender v. Shamchand, 6 C. 106; Ram Kumar v. Jogender, 4 C. 56; Sathianama v. Savanathanabagi, 18 M. 266; Sri Ganesh v. Keshav Rao, 15 B. 625.

which can only be settled by a conspectus of the entire provisions of the will."[1]

1987. So where the testator by will devised all his movable and immovable property to his family idol, and after stating that he had four sons or grandsons in succession, but that they should enjoy "the surplus proceeds only," and the will, after appointing one of the sons manager to the estate, to attend to the festivals and ceremonies of the idol and maintain the family, further directed that whatever might be the surplus after deducting the whole of the expenditure, the same should be added to the corpus, and in the event of a disagreement between the sons and the family, the testator directed that, after the expenses of the family, whatever net proceeds and surplus there might be should be divided annually in certain proportions among the members of the family, it was held that the bequest to the idol was not an absolute gift but was to be construed as a gift to the testator's four sons and their offspring in the male line, as a joint family, so long as the family remained joint, and that the four sons were entitled to the surplus of the property, after providing for the performance of the ceremonies and festivals of the idol and the provisions in the will for maintenance.[2] In other words, this was a secular bequest in the guise of a religious endowment, but in it the religious motive was not illusory. As Turner, L.J., said: "According to the true construction of the will, the property granted to the idol is effectually granted for the benefit of the testator's four sons and their offspring in the male line as a joint family, subject to the performance of acts, business, ceremonies and festivals and to the provision for maintenance in the will contained, and that the surplus income, after answering the performance of such provisions, is in like manner well and effectually given for the benefit of the four sons and their offspring in the male line in the joint family."[3] This case was followed in another case, in which the court had to decide upon the following facts: The plaintiff sued for partition, alleging the property was joint, but that, out of the profits, certain expenses for the worship of God and performance and celebration of certain religious festivals and ceremonies were incurred, all of which were alleged to be patrimonial, the balance being divided amongst the co-sharers. The defence was that the whole of the Ijmalee land was the property of the idol. It was held that since there was no dedication of the property to the idol by its transfer from the family in its favour, the land was partible, but subject to a trust in favour of the idol.[4]

1988. The converse case was that of the testatrix who left, by will, to her sons lands belonging to her, to support the daily worship of an idol, and defray the expenses of certain other religious ceremonies, with a provision that, in the event of there being a surplus after these uses had been satisfied, out of the revenue of the said lands, such surplus should be applied to the support of the family. It was held that this provision amounted to a bequest of the surplus to the members of the joint family for their own use and benefit, and that each of the sons of the testatrix took a share in the property, which, after satisfying the religious and cere-

(1) Harnarayan v. Surja Kunwari, 43 A. 291 (293) P.C.; Jadu Nath v. Thakur Sitaramji, 39 A. 553 P.C.; Ishwari Bhubaneshwari v. Brojo Nath, (1937) P.C. 185.

(2) Sonatun v. Juggutsoondree, 8 M.I. A. 66 (87, 88); Har Narayan v. Surja Kunwari, 43 A. 291 P.C.

(3) Sonatun v. Juggutsoondree, 8 M.I. A. 66 (87, 88).

(4) Ram Coomar v. Jogender, 4 C. 56, following Sonatun v. Juggutsoondree, 8 M.I.A. 66.

monial trusts, might be considerable and could not be presumed to be valueless. In so holding, Sir Barnes Peakcock said: "It cannot be said that the property was wholly debutter. They consider that it created a charge upon the property for the expenses of the daily worship of the idol as it was performed at the death of the testatrix."[1] Referring to these cases, the Privy Council said: "There is no doubt that an idol may be regarded as a juridical person capable, as such, of holding property, though it is only in an ideal sense that property is so held. And probably, this is the true legal view when the dedication is of the completest kind known to the law. But there may be religious dedications of a less complete character. The cases of Sonatun Bysack v. Juggutsoondree Dossee[2] and Asutosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee[3] are instances of less complete dedications, in which, notwithstanding a religious dedication, property descends (and descends beneficially) to heirs, subject to a trust or charge for the purposes of religion. Their Lordships desire to speak with caution, but it seems possible that there may be another class of cases of partial or qualified dedication not quite so simple as those to which reference has been made."[4] Then their Lordships confessed that if they had to determine the nature of the dedication in the case before them, they would have felt great difficulty in doing so. This question their Lordships had not to consider for the purpose of the case. But the question raised was whether the land in suit was debutter, so granted by Government to the plaintiff's predecessor and so described in the settlement pattas of 1868 and 1877, referring to which their Lordships observed: "On the one hand the use of the term 'Shebait' in the settlement pattas of 1868 and 1877 and in the plaint in this suit, points rather to a dedication of the completest character. On the other hand, the provisions in those pattas which impose liability upon the grantees to the whole extent of their own property, and not merely to the extent of what they might hold as Shebaits, suggest a different conclusion. And so does the clause in the patta of 1868, empowering Government to determine the term on death."[5] Their Lordships then assumed, for the purpose of their argument, the religious dedication to have been of the strictest character. In another case, the testator had bequeathed his two houses to his two nephews for the worship of a deity installed in one of them and provided for its worship out of the joint income of the houses and the pilgrim's offerings, leaving the surplus to be appropriated by the nephews. The trial judge held the bequest to the temple merely illusory, but the High Court upheld it as a valid endowment without reference to the quantum of income from each source and the expense of worship, and the net surplus that the nephews were to appropriate.[6]

1989. These cases show that there is no fixed rule governing the construction of gifts to idols, which must be construed in accordance with the general rules applicable to the construction of other gifts. Thus, although a will provides that the property of the testator "shall be considered to be the property" of a certain idol, the further provisions such as that "whatever may be saved, after defraying the expenses of the temple

(1) Ashutosh v. Doorga, 5 C. 438 (443) P.C., following Sonatun v. Juggutsoondree, 8 M.I.A. 66, followed in Har Narayan v. Surja Kunwari, 43 A. 291 P.C.; distinguishing Jadu Nath v. Thakur, 39 A. 553 P.C.; Surendrakrishna v. Ishwar, 60 C. 54.

(2) 8 M.I.A. 66.

(3) 5 C. 438 P.C.

(4) Jagadindra v. Hemanta, 32 C. 129 (140, 141) P.C.

(5) Ib., p. 141.

(6) Murlidhar v. Diwanchand, 38 A. 214.

and the pay of the servants, shall be used by our legal heirs to meet their own expenses," and the circumstances such as that the expenditure upon the idol was fixed and would require only small proportions of the income, may indicate that the intention was that the heirs shall take the property subject to a charge for the performance of the religious purposes named.[1]

Absolute dedication.

1990. On the other side of the line fall cases such as the following: The family dwelling house belonged to a lady who executed a deed of gift purporting to give it to an idol. By this deed, she appointed her sons managers of the trust, and provided that they should live in the house, that they should not be able to partition or sell any part of the endowed property, and that the surplus profits, after providing for the Government revenue, expenses of establishment and worship and salary of the manager, for the time being, should be expended in the purchase of adjacent lands, in the name of the idol, for the accommodation of the families of the managers, and in the erection of a new building thereon. Wilson, J., held this to constitute an absolute gift to the idol, "but that subject to a trust for worship, there was a gift for the benefit of the members of her family mentioned in the deed. . . . The deed in terms gives the house to the idol and appoints the four surviving sons managers. The house is to be the perpetual habitation of the idol.[2]

1991. Under Hindu Law, an idol, as symbolical of certain religious purposes, is capable of being endowed or vested with property. But it is not an essential condition of a valid endowment that it should take the form of an express gift to an idol. All that is necessary is that the religious purposes or objects of the testator should be clearly specified, and that the property intended for the endowment should be set apart for or dedicated to these purposes.[3] In 1544, a village was granted to the head of a Gosavi muth, to be enjoyed from generation to generation, and the deed of grant provided that the grantee was "to improve the muth, maintain the charity and be happy." The office of the head of muth was hereditary in the grantee's family. In 1866, an inam title-deed was issued to the then head of the muth, whereby the village was conferred on him and his successors, tax-free, to be held without interference so long as the conditions of the grant were duly fulfilled. It was found, regard being had to usage, that the trusts of the institution were the upkeep of the muth, the feeding of pilgrims, the performance of worship, the maintenance of water-shed and the support of the descendants of the grantee. From before 1840, it had been usual for the head of the muth, for the time being, to make grants to his brothers or younger sons for their maintenance. In 1842, the father of the present plaintiff, being the head of the muth, granted certain lands of the village, above referred to, to his younger brother, the deed of grant being in terms absolute. The grantee died about 30 years before the suit, and the lands in question came into possession of the widow and a mortgagee from her respectively. In 1863, the plaintiff's father placed certain other lands in possession of defendant No. 3, who paid rent therefor, and received pattas for some years from the plaintiff, who sued for possession, when defendant No. 3 pleaded a right of permanent occupancy. The court, however, ejected him, holding that the village was granted as an endowment for the muth and charities connected with it, and that what might remain after due execution of those trusts, was intended to be applied to the maintenance of the grantee or his descendants. An absolute grant could not be made, and the grant was good to that extent only.[1]

(1) Har Narayan v. Surja Kunwari, 43 A. 291 P.C.; distinguishing Jadu Nath v. Thakur, 39 A. 553 P.C., following Sonatun v. Juggutsoondree, 8 M.I.A. 66; Ashutosh v. Doorga, 5 C. 438 P.C.; Surendra Krishna v. Ishwar, 60 C. 54.

(2) Rajunder v. Shamchand, 6 C. 106 (117, 118).

(3) Per Sale, J., in Bhuggobutty v. Gooroo, 25 C. 112 (127), overruled, on a different point, in Bhupati v. Ramlal, 37 C. 128 F.B.

1992. There is nothing in law to prevent the creation of an absolute estate in trusteeship, and the fact that trust property is inalienable, would not make the estate in the trusteeship the less an absolute estate, and would not affect the descent of the trust property to the heirs of the donee according to the ordinary law.[2]

Certainty of subject and object: Doctrine of cypres.

261. (1) An endowment must be certain both as to the subject and the object.[3]

(2) Provided that where a specific bequest fails for uncertainty in the object, and there is no direction upon its failure that the bequest should go to the residue, the court will apply the gift cy pres, that is to say, to other objects, as nearly as may be, of a similar character.

Illustrations.

(a) If a testator says "I bequeath goods to A", or "I bequeath to A" or "I leave to A all the goods mentioned in the schedule, and no schedule is found", or "I bequeath 'money', wheat, 'oil' or the like," without saying how much, this is void.[4]

(b) A bequest to such benevolent institutions round about Auckland as my trustee may select is void because of the want of precision inherent in the word "benevolent."[5]

(c) The testator bequeaths a sum of money to "dharm." The bequest is void for uncertainty and cannot be applied cy pres.[6]

(d) The testator bequeathed a sum of money for the erection and maintenance of a hospital to be erected on a portion of his garden house at E, to be demarcated by his executors. By the partition of the garden house, the land is not available for the dispensary. The executors are all dead; still the court will frame a scheme for giving effect to the testator's intention as far as possible.[7]

(e) The testator bequeathed his estate to trustees for dharmarth, a dharamshala and for Sanskrit education, the trustees being free to apply the fund on any or all of the three objects, of which the first being void for vagueness, the whole bequest is void on account of the correlation of the void object with the two valid objects.

1993. Analogous Law.—The first clause is based upon the broad principle that the court cannot administer a trust unless it is certain of its subject and object. This is now statutorily enacted in S. 89 of the Succession Act, the illustration to which shows the uncertainty in the subject. that is the property intended to be didicated to charity. The second clause is equally supported by S. 87 of the same Act.

1994. Subject Certain and Uncertain.—The subject of a charitable bequest must be reasonably certain, that is, it must be ascertainable with a reasonable degree of certainty as to what property the founder has dedicated or set apart for charity. There is this difference between a secular and a charitable bequest that in the latter case, if the testator has supplied a measure of the bequest, the court will ascertain how much should be applied and will settle a scheme.

---

(1) Sathinama v. Saravantabagi, 18 M. 266 (276).

(2) Guruvajammah v. Rungaswamy, 62 I.C. (M.) 745.

(3) Chhotabhai v. Juanchandra, (1935) P.C. 97; Bhuggobutty v. Gooroo, 25 C. 112 (127).

(4) S. 89 Ill., Suc. Act.

(5) A.-G. v. New Zealand Insurance Co., (1937) P.C. 8.

(6) Ranchordas v. Parvatibai, 23 B. 725 P.C.

(7) A.-G. v. Belchambers, 36 C. 261.

The subject is, however, not uncertain where the testator devises the remainder over, after a succession of life-estate, to charity.[1] So, he may devise the income of a certain field or fund, the rent of certain properties,[2] half his income[3] or a sum of money[4] specified or unspecified provided its amount can be estimated. Such was the bequest to "get a Shiva temple erected at a reasonable cost in a suitable place," which the court fixed at Rs. 2,843-10-6, being 3 per cent. of the value of the movable property left by him.[5]

1995. The dactrine of cy pres, as applied to charities, rests on the view that charity in the abstract is the susbtance of the gift and the particular disposition merely the mode, so that, in the eye of the court, the gift, notwithstanding the fact that the particular disposition may not be capable of execution, subsists as a legacy which never fails and cannot lapse. It cannot be laid down as a general principle that the cy pres doctrine is displaced where the residuary bequest is to a charity, or that among charities, there is anything analogous to the benefit of survivorship, since cases may easily be supposed where the scope of the charitable object is such, or requires so small an amount to satisfy it, that it would be absurd to allow a large fund bequeathed to a particular charity to fall into it.

1996. On the failure of a specific charitable bequest, jurisdiction arises to act on the cy pres doctrine, whether the residue be given in charity or not, unless, upon the construction of the will, a direction can be implied that the bequest, if it fails, should go to the residue.

In applying the cy pres doctrine, regard may be had to the other objects of testator's bounty, but primary consideration is to be given to the gift which had failed, and to a search for objects akin to it. The relief of misery in a particular locality may guide the court in framing a cy pres scheme to benefit that locality. Unless the cy pres scheme framed by the lower court be plainly wrong, a court of appeal should not interfere with it.[6]

1997. In the first place, the cy pres doctrine only applies to religious and charitable bequests. It has no application to bequests generally.[7] In the second place, the doctrine has no application even as regards charitable bequests, where there is a direction that, on failure of the bequest, the property shall fall into residue, or where the objects of the original trusts are capable of being carried into effect but remain unsatisfied, or where the original trusts are still subsisting. As the Privy Council observed: "The jurisdiction of the court, to act on the cy pres doctrine, upon failure of a specific charitable bequest, arises whether the residue be given to charity or not, unless upon the construction of the will, a direction can be implied that the bequest, if it fails, should go to the residue."[8] This passage occurs in a case in which the

(1) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 P.C.; Gobind v. Gomti, 30 A. 288.

(2) Moraji v. Nenbai, 17 B. 351; Jamnabai v. Khimji, 14 B. 1.

(3) Jadunath v. Sitaramji, 39 A. 533 P.C.

(4) Gordhan v. Chunnilal, 30 A. 111; Rajendra v. Raj Coomari, 34 C. 5 (Money includes investments); Callicart v. Eyskene, (1918) 1 Ch. 33.

(5) Gokool v. Issur, 14 C. 222 (230).

(6) Mayor of Lyons v. A.G., 1 C. 303 P.C.

(7) A.-G. v. Haberdashers Co., 1 My. & K. 420; Thomson v. Shakespeare, 1 De G. F. & J. 399; Carve v. Long, 2 De G.F. & J. 75; Re Clark, 1 Ch. D. 497; Pearse v. Pattinson, 32 Ch. D. 154, cited in 4 Hals. L. E. § 346, p. 197.

(8) Mayor of Lyons v. Advocate-General, 26 W.R. 1 (7) P.C.

testator had made a bequest for the discharge and relief of poor debtors detained in prison in Calcutta, which failed by reason of the abolition of imprisonment for debt, but the privy Council held that the gift was capable of being applied cy pres, notwithstanding that the residuary bequest was to charity; that upon the construction of the will, there was not such a necessary inference of intention to be found in the terms and provisions of the will as to raise the implication of a bequest over by the testator of these legacies upon the failure of the particular charities, and that the appellant was not competent under his present petition, which was confined to a claim of the share of the residue as residuary legatee, to reopen the scheme, which had been settled and confirmed by the High Court, for the cy pres application of the fund in dispute, on the ground that the appellant was excluded from participation therein.[1]

1998. Charitable Bequest.—The essential characteristic of a charitable bequest is that it must be for the benefit of the public or mankind. A bequest to a poor relation or friend by name, howmuchsoever charitable in intention and in fact, is not a charitable bequest in law. In this respect there is no distinction between the English and the Indian view of the subject. So, in an old English case, charity is defined as a "gift to a general public use, which extends to the poor as well as to the rich."[2] The difficulty of attempting an exhaustive enumeration of objects which constitute charity is obvious and admitted.[3] But it is not difficult to understand what charity means. The difficulty arises when it is diverted from its public purpose and becomes what is sometimes called "a private charity," which, however, is only a charity in the legal sense when it is at least a charity restricted to a special class or administered by individuals without the intervention of any corporate organization.[4] "Each particular object may be private, but it is the extensiveness which will constitute it a public charity."[5]

1999. Both the English and the Indian rules of construction permit a latitude of construction in giving effect to the testator's religious or charitable bequests which, if made to an individual, would be unquestionably void. Charitable bequests are no exception to the rule that a benignant construction must be placed upon wills and charitable bequests.[6] In ascertaining whether or not a general intention to make a bequest to a public charity is expressed with definiteness, the test to be applied is, whether a man of ordinary common-sense, wishing to follow the directions of the testator with a willing mind, will have any practical difficulty in giving effect to the bequest. So, where the testator directed his brothers to start a "sadavart" for the needy in his name, and the bequest was opposed as void for uncertainty, though it was admitted that "sadavart" meant charity which took the form of a periodical distribution, at regular intervals, of money and goods, the court held the bequest good, on the ground that the testator had expressed his general intention to give a legacy to charitable purpose, and only left uncertain the particular mode by which his intention was to be carried into effect.

---

(1) Mayor of Lyons v. A.-G., 1 C. 303 P.C.

(2) Jones v. Williams, (1767) Amb. 651.

(3) Attorney-General v. Pearce, (1740) 2 Atk. 87; Hall v. Darby Sanitary Authority, 16 Q.B.D. 163.

(4) Sinclair, In re, (1884) 13 L.R. Ir. 150 (154).

(5) Nash v. Morley, 5 Beav. 177 (183).

(6) Per Lord Loreburn, L.C., in Weir v. Crum Brown, (1908) A.C. 162 (167).

In such a case, the trustees or, failing them, the court could draw up a scheme giving effect to the testator's general intention.[1]

2000. The courts have accordingly upheld bequests for performing the testator's funeral ceremonies and for feeding Brahmins according to the custom of the caste,[2] or for feeding and paying Brahmins on the day following the Shivaratri festival,[3] or for feeding indigent men at the outer gate of his house.[4] So, where a gift was made to the inmates of a hospital, it was held that the gift was in reality for the proper management and use of the hospital. Gifts to charitable institutions are valid and upheld, even though the institution be not a corporate body, provided there is some responsible authority charged with the general administration of the funds of the institution.[5]

2001. As compared to this, the following are more certain, e.g., settlement of Rs. 500 a month for continuance of the charity at the testator's dharamsala at Benares,[6] or for the construction of a temple to Shiv within the compound of a specified house.[7] On the same ground the bequest of the income derived by the testator's securities "to the oldest respectable inhabitant of Gunville" was upheld as a charitable bequest, intended to bring comfort and relief to some old people in straintened circumstances.[8]

2002. The principle of Hindu Law, which invalidates a gift other than to a sentient being capable of accepting it[9] does not apply to a bequest to trustees for the establishment of an image and the worship of a Hindu deity after the testator's death, and does not make such a bequest void.[10] So, a direction to establish a Thakur at a place to be selected by the executors has been upheld,[11] as was the direction that the executors should get a Shiva's temple erected at a reasonable cost in a suitable place within the compound of the brick-built baithakkhana house inclusive of the building and garden thereof.[12] So are bequests to build a well and avada or cistern for animals to drink out of[13] or for the performance of shradh and the giving feasts to brahmins.[14] So was a bequest for the worship of Shiv Thakur[15] and dharm sabha

---

(1) Jamunabai v. Khimji, 14 B. 1; Advocate-General v. Strangman, 6 Bom. L.R. 56 (Sadavart and Anna Chatra the same); Krsihna Bai v. Notan Das, 3 S.L.R. 185: 4 I.C. 1158.

(2) Lakshmi v. Baijnath, 6 B. 24.

(3) Kedar v. Atul, 12 C.W.N. 1083.

(4) Rajendra v. Rajcoomari, 34 C. 5.

(5) Fanindra v. A.-G., 6 C.W.N. 321.

(6) Gordhan v. Chunnilal, 30 A. 111 (112).

(7) Gookool v. Issur, 14 C. 222.

(8) Lucas, In re, (1922) 2 Ch. 52.

(9) Moti Vahoo v. Mamoobai, 21 B. 709 P.C.

(10) Bhupati v. Ramlal, 31 C. 128 F. B., overruling Upendra v. Hemchandra, 25 C. 405; Rajomoyee v. Troylukho, 29 C. 260 (273, 274); Nogendra v. Benoy, 30 C. 521. To the same effect, Moharsingh v. Het Singh, 32 A. 337; Chatur Bhuj v. Chaterjit, 8 A.L.J. 34; contra in Phundan v. Srimatarya, 3 A. 793.

Per MacDonell and Tottenham, JJ.: "We believe that, according to Hindu notions, when an idol has once been, so to say, consecrated by the appropriate ceremony performed and mantra pronounced, the deity of which the idol is the visible image, resides in it, and not in any substituted image, and the idol as spiritualized, becomes what has been termed a juridical person. It does not by any means follow that, because the idol now in question has passed into the possession of the defendant, together with the property dedicated to it, it has thereby fallen into the condition of a last or broken idol, which by Hindu Law may be replaced."—Doorga v. Sheo Prashad, 7 C.L.J. 278 (280, 281).

(11) Rajamoyee v. Troylukho, 6 C.W.N. 267.

(12) Gokool v. Issur, 14 C. 222.

(13) Jamnabai v. Khimji, 14 B. 1.

(14) Lakshmi v. Baijnath, 6 B. 24 (25).

(15) Kedar v. Atul, 12 C.W.N. 1083, following Dwarkanath v. Burroda, 4 C. 443, followed in Lakshmi v. Vaijnath, 6 B. 24 (25).

with a power to the executor to receive the surplus income after defraying expenses but with no power to alienate the property.[1] So, again, was a direction to executors and trustees to "pay to my sons or their heirs and representatives such sums for the seva or service of my family idols and the usual pujas that are celebrated in my house and the periodical shradh of my ancestors, of my late wife and of myself, when dead, as to the executors and trustees may seem fit and proper."[2] A bequest to a charitable object to be selected by the executor is, of course, a valid charitable bequest, since its object is certain, in that it is capable of being made certain by the executor,[3] though on this point contrary is also maintained.[4]

Bequests void for uncertainty.

2003. But the case was held to be different where the executor was to apply a bequest for "such charitable uses or for such emigration uses,"[5] or "to charitable or other indefinite uses."[6] Such will be a bequest for sarakam" or good works,[7] or "for purposes of popular usefulness or for purposes of charity," as the executors, may, in their plenary discretion, select,[8] or any similar vague purposes which the executor might select to spend the same, "in proper and just acts for the testator's benefit".[9]

Such is a bequest to "dharm," a vague expression connoting "virtue," legal or moral duty and law. A bequest to "dharam" simpliciter, or when coupled with equally vague explanations such as "dharam or doing all good acts of a permanent nature and acting in such a manner as to give me a good name,"[10] and similar bequests are void, both because of vagueness and because their object can only be attained by the creation of a trust which cannot be administered effectively.[11]

Since a charitable bequest is mixed up with "popular" or useful" purposes, it has been held that where charitable purposes are mixed up with other purposes of such a shadowy and indefinite nature that the court cannot execute them, such as "charitable or benevolent,"[12] or "charitable or philanthropic" or "charitable or pious" purposes, or where the description includes purposes which may or may not be charitable, such as undertakings of public utility, and a discretion is vested in the trustees, the whole gift fails for uncertainty.[13]

---

(1) Benodi v. Sita Ram, 6 A.L.J. 144: 1 I.C. 666.

(2) Ananda v. Rajendra, 4 B.L.R. (O.C.) 231; Profulla v. Jogendra, 9 C.W. N. 522.

(3) Parbuti v. Rambharun, 31 C. 89.

(4) Surbomingola v. Mohendranath, 4 C. 506; Jamunabai v. Dharsey, 4 Bom.L. R. 893.

(5) Hingeston v. Sidney, 1908 1 Ch. 488.

(6) Hunter v. A.-G., 1899 A.C. 309.

(7) Baji v. Jamna Das, 22 B. 774.

(8) Trikum v. Haridas, 31 B. 583, following Runchor Das v. Parvati Bai, 23 B. 725.

(9) Gokool v. Issur, 14 C. 222.

(10) Motiwahoo v. Mamoobai, 21 B. 709 P.C.: 1 B. H. C. R. 71; Cursandas v. Vundravandas, 14 B. 482; Morarji v. Nenbai, 17 B. 351; Devashankar v. Motiram, 18 B. 136; Vundravandas v. Cursandas, 21 B. 646; Runchordas v. Parvatibai, 23 B. 725; Parthasarathi v. Thiruvengadam, 30 M. 340 (per Subramanya Iyer, J., dissentient); Upendra Lal v. Hem Chandra, 25 C. 405; Gurdit Singh v. Sher Singh, 14 I.C. 247.

(11) See the subject discussed in 3 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), §§ 3657-3660.

(12) A.-G. v. Brown, (1917) A.C. 393 (395, 396).

(13) Per Lord Davey in Hunter v. A.-G., (1899) A.C. 309 (323), followed in Trikumdas v. Haridas, 31 B. 583 (585).

Such would be an endowment for the worship of God without specifying the deity.[1] Such is a bequest to "the Thakurji in his thakurdwara,"[2] though in this case there was evidence that the testator was building a "thakurdwara" or temple for installation of the image of "Thakurji" or Ramchand. In this view, it is submitted that the case was wrongly decided as both the subject and the object were ascertainable with reasonable certainty, and in any case, the application of cy pres should have been considered.

But there can be no doubt that a bequest to spend the residue of a fund "in proper and just acts for the testator's benefit" is wholly void for the reason given by Lord Davey in the case before cited.[3] Such would also be a devise to "religious purposes," since, in a Hindu mind, the phrase might denote something more than and different from charitable purposes.[4] But a bequest that the income of certain property was "to be devoted to religious and charitable purposes under the direction of my executor" was declared to be valid charitable bequest.[5] And the same view was taken of another bequest of "the residue of my estate in charity and in such manner and to such religious and charitable purposes as he (the executor) may in his discretion think proper."[6] These cases shew that a bequest for the "religious purpose may fail for uncertainty, but one for a "charitable and religious" purpose may succeed, because the courts construe charitable bequest cy pres which they cannot in the case of a purely religious bequest.[7]

2004. A bequest to the testator's agnates or to Brahmins is void for ambiguity as to the object, in that it is uncertain as to which of them the testator intended to take.[8]

Kinds of Endowment: Religious, Charitable, Public, Private.

262. An endowment may be wholly or partially religious or charitable, public or private.

(1) A religious endowment is one which has for its object the establishment, maintenance or worship of an idol, deity or any other object or purpose subservient to religion.

(2) A charitable endowment is one which has for its object the benefit of the public or of mankind.[9]

(3) An endowment is public if the dedication is for the use or benefit of the public.

(4) An endowment is private if the dedication is limited to a family god, a family or families or small and certain body of individuals, to which the public have no access.

2005. Analogous Law.—Hindu law makes no distinction between charitable and religious endowments, but such distinction now exists and is statutorily recognized.[10] An endowment of either kind may be public

(1) Chandi v. Haribala, 46 C. 951.
(2) Phundun v. Arya, 33 A. 793.
(3) Gokool v. Issur, 14 C. 222.
(4) Parbati v. Ram Barun, 31 C. 895 (898).
(5) Advocate-General v. Damothar, 1 B.H.C.R. 76-n; Ram Gopal v. Sib Kissen, 1 B. H. C. R. 76-n; Parbati v. Ram Barun, 31 C. 895 (899).
(6) Parbati v. Ram Barun, 31 C. 895 (898, 899).
(7) Muthukrishna v. Ramchandra, 37 M. L. J. 489; Sundar Lal v. Kullu Ram, 65 I.C. (L.) 820.
(8) Shyama v. Naba, 17 C.W.N. 39: 14 I.C. 708.
(9) Charitable Endowments Act (VI of 1890).
(10) Ibid.

or private. The former has been the subject of legal protection, though it is not defined. The following definition of charitable purpose occurs in the Charitable Endowments Act.[1]

Definition.

"S. 2. In this Act, 'charitable purpose' includes relief of the poor, education, medical relief and the advancement of any other object of general public utility, but does not include a purpose which relates exclusively to religious teaching or worsip."

2006. S. 17 of the Transfer of Property Act also alludes to religious and charitable endowments as being for "the benefit of the public in the advancement of religion, knowledge, commerce, health, safety or any other object beneficial to mankind." There is a clear distinction between religious and charitable endowments: the one proceeds from a motive of piety, the other from benevolence. But in practice, the two are, at times, combined, as where an endowment is made for the establishment of a temple and distribution of alms to the poor. But an endowment may be charitable without being religious. Such is an endowment to found a professorship,[2] a university,[3] or to support a sarai, dharmasala of a hospital.[4]

History of English Endowments.

2007. Gifts for religious and charitable uses have been the first to be favoured in all countries overridden by priestly influences. In mediaeval Europe, practically everything a man possessed was left to the Church. And similar abuses had crept into England, till they brought into existence the Statute,[5] passed in 1547, restraining bequests to superstitious uses, which ordained that if any real or personal property whatever shall have been, or shall be, since assigned, limited, or appointed to have continuance for ever, or for a time only, towards or for the finding or maintenance of a stipendiary priest, or for the maintenance of an anniversary or obit, or chapel, or other like intent, these, and such like gifts and dispositions as these, are to be accounted within the superstitious uses intended to be suppressed by the Act. Establishments or foundations for securing prayers for the souls of the dead were to be deemed superstitious within the Statute.[6] Other bequests to superstitious uses, not mentioned by the Act, are deemed void by the general policy of the law, e.g., a devise for the good of the soul of the devisor.[7] The Statute provides that bequest made void by it shall vest in the Crown beneficially, though if it is for charitable purposes, the Crown may order to what charitable purpose it shall be disposed.[8] This Statute was amended and re-enacted from time to time,[9] and it was consolidated and re-enacted as the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888.[10]

2008. In India, the statute prohibiting the gift or devise of property to superstitious uses was never in force, and there is no other law to restrain the priestly inculcations to make pious and charitable bequests in the name of religion.

2009. Endowments: Public and Private.—The distinction between religious and charitable, and public and private is of later

(1) Act VI of 1890.
(2) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 P.C.
(3) Manorama v. Kalicharan, 31 C. 166.
(4) Fanindra v. Administrator-General, 6 C.W.N. 321.
(5) 1 Edw. VI, C. 14.
(6) Attorney-General v. Fishmongers' Co., 2 Beav. 151.
(7) R. v. Lady Portington, 1 Solk, 162.
(8) Ib.
(9) (1735) Mortmain Act (9, Geo. II, C.-36).
(10) 53 & 54 Vict., C. 16 (1890).

growth, since Hindu law, which dealt with coparcenary property, as a rule, and self-acquired property as a mere exception, afforded no ground for such bequests. The distinction between them is not even yet clearly defined, or in fact, defined at all. For while several Acts of the Indian Legislature provide for the protection of religious and charitable endowments, they treat the two as identical, and while some of these Acts prescribe a remedy for abuse in the case of public trusts, they do not attempt to define them nor is a clear definition possible, since trusts are often a blend of a religious charitable nature and they may be partially public and partially private. In the latter case, the question is often one of degree. Apart from it, one distinction between a public and a private trust appears to be that the one deals with the public generally or with a defined section thereof, which is, nevertheless, an uncertain and a fluctuating body of men who participate in its benefit;[1] while a private endowment is one limited to a defined body of men, such as the members of one's family or the like. Where the endowment relates to an idol or a temple, the same distinction marks its public or private character. If the idol is a family Thakur, installed for worship of the members of the family, it is a private endowment, though the Thakur may be widely worshipped by the entire Hindu Community. Even a place may be open to the public and yet not be a public endowment within the meaning of law. For instance, the founder may construct a serai or a dharamshala, for the accommodation of travellers, but if he keeps the key and can exclude any of them from entering it, it would not be a public endowment but a private property of the founder.[2] But if in this case, the founder had dedicated the property to the public, he could not exclude the public for whose benefit he had made the dedication.[3] Such dedication cannot be inferred from the mere execution of a deed of gift, though it is an evidence of it,[4] though it is not the same as dedication in Hindu law which requires the dual rite of sankalp (resolve) and samarpan (renunciation) whereby the property is completely given away and the owner completely divests himself of the ownership of the property.[5] Of course, such dedication may be inferred from the course of conduct of the founder, his heirs and of the committee of management or in fact, from any fact or circumstance showing that the public used the institution as a public trust and that it was so used and treated.[6]

2010. Public Endowments.—Where the nature of the trust cannot be ascertained from the deed of endowment, its character has to be ascertained from extrinsic evidence as to the founder's intention and how it was regarded by the founder or his family and the public, if any, interested in it. Two facts are in this case material: (i) How was it regarded by the founder and his heirs, and (ii) how was it regarded by the public? If, for instance, there is anything to show that the founder intended to

(1) Debrus v. Abdoor Rahman, 23 W.R. 453 (454).

(2) Chandu Lal v. Rampat Mal, (1933) L. 189.

(3) Deoratan v. Deoki, 3 Pat. 842; Bhekdhari v. Sri Ramchand, 10 Pat. 388 (397, 398); Chandu Lal v. Rampat Mal, (1933) L. 189; Bansilal v. Govindlal, (1932) B. 439.

(4) Bhekdhari v. Sri Ramchand, 10 Pat. 388 (399, 400) following Deosaran v. Deoki Bharthi, (1924) Pat. 657.

(5) Manohar v. Bhupendra, 60 C. 452 (476) F.B.; Deosaran v. Deoki Bharthi, (1924) Pat. 657 (661); Bhekdhari v. Sri Ramchand, 10 Pat. 388 (389).

(6) Lakshman v. Subramania, (1924) P.C. 44; Prakash Chandra v. Subode Chandra, (1937) C. 67 (79); Chintaman v. Dhondo, 15 B. 612; Jugal Kishore v. Lakshman, 23 B. 659 (664).

benefit the public as that it was open to them, and that the customary religious festivals had been celebrated there in a public manner, the court may treat the trust as public.[1] The fact that a temple is open for public worship, that the rites and ceremonies are such as are observed in public temples, and that numerous inam lands have been granted to the temple, constitute strong evidence of its public character.[2] To be public, it is not necessary that the institution should be open to the public at large. All that is necessary is that it should benefit a caste, a section of a caste, a class or a body of men sufficiently general to be called public.[3]

2011. Private Endowments.—Turning next to private endowments, it has been held that the distinction between this and a public endowment depends upon its extensiveness.[4] One form of such endowments takes the form of a family trust, in which the estate is tied up in the name of the family Thakur, for the benefit of the family, which brings to view the distinction between the real and an illusory dedication. But this amounts to a benami transaction.[5] That apart, there are certain private dedications in which the trust is intended to benefit, wholly or partially, the family deity, in which case, the further question arises whether the beneficiary is the Thakur, or the family. The distinction is material, since if the beneficiary is the Thakur, charged with the trust of maintenance of the family, the latter cannot deal with the property as their own. If, on the other hand, the family is the beneficiary, charged with the maintenance of the Thakur, they have the ordinary rights of owners only burdened with the trust, which they are liable to discharge. (S. 260.) Cases have occurred where the dedication to an idol is not absolute but merely partial.[6] The question is one of construction, intention,[7] and effect, which is a question of fact, and not one of law, depending upon the terms and conditions of the deed, and the conclusion to be drawn therefrom.

Proof of Private Endowments.

2012. The question whether an endowment is public or private is one intention[8] which may be gathered from the deed of dedication (S. 259) contemporaneous acts[9] and usage.[10] The ordinary instance of a private endowment is a family trust for the worship of a family idol.[11] In such a case, the only worshippers, as of right, entitled to worship it are the members of a family. But between such private idol and a public one, there are numerous degrees of ownership and rights. The true test of a place, whether it is private or a public one, is whether

(1) Lakshmi v. Murasi, 5 O.L.J. 97: 45 I.C. 231.

(2) Jafar v. Ibrahim, 24 M. 243; Muthia v. Periannan, 4 M.L.W. 228: 34 I.C. 551; Puravia v. Poonachi, 40 M.L.J. 289: 62 I.C. 655; Pujari v. Goundan, 29 C.W.N. 112: 81 I.C. 518: (1924) P.C. 44; Mandacheri v. Thachangat, (1934) P.C. 230.

(3) Sathapayar v. Periasami, 8 C. 32; Baswa v. Bhagwan Kaur, 17 I.C. (L.) 270.

(4) Shaw v. Halifax Corporation, (1915) 2 K.B. 170 (181); Verge v. Somerville, (1924) A.C. 496; Prakash Chandra v. Subodh Chandra, (1937) C. 67 (79).

(5) Mahatab Chand v. Tej Chundra, 5 B.S.R. 314: 7 I.D. (O.S.) 571; Braja Sundari v. Lachmi, 2 B.L.R. 155, affirmed O.A. 15 B.L.R. 176 (foot-note) P.C.

(6) Iswar v. Khitish Chandra, (1932) C. 419.

(7) Surrendrakrishna v. Ishwar Bhubaneshwari, 60 C. 54 (71).

(8) A.-G. v. Mayor of Bristol, 37 E.R. 640 (649).

(9) A.-G. v. Corporation of Rochester, 43 E. R. 1079 (1089); A.-G. v. Skinner's Co., 58 E.R. 470 followed in Kumaraswamy v. Lakshmana, 53 M. 608; Puran Das v. Shiromani, 15 L. 732.

(10) Kumaraswamy v. Lakshmana, 53 M. 608; Puran Das v. Shiromani, 15 L. 732.

(11) Gopal Lal v. Purna Chandra, 49 C. 459 (468) P.C.

the public have acquired a right to go to it[1] for certain purposes, it may be, for worship merely. In such a case, the fact that the temple was erected by some one who opened it and installed therein an idol at his own cost would be evidence of its origin, but it is well-known that such temples are dedicated by pious founders to the use of the public, which includes, as already stated, a section or sub-section of the people, caste or community. When a temple was erected upon land, one half of which had been given to the priest, and the other half was purchased for the purpose of building the temple, and the temple constructed out of funds raised by public subscription it could not be described otherwise than as a public temple.[2] The fact that the admission of the public is subject to rules,[3] or the payment of an admission fee, or that the public go there because of the sanctity of the priest does not suffice to make it private.[4]

2013. Hindu foundations are, as a rule, intended to be for the benefit of the public, and private ownership is an exception, and not the rule.[5] But such exceptions do exist, where, for instance, the donor dedicated certain houses for the maintenance or an idol, installed by him in one of them, appointed himself as its shebait, and provided for his successors from his own family, the mere fact that the whole of the income from the endowed property was to be appropriated for the service of the temple and charities connected therewith, including the feeding of students and the poor, would not make it a public endowment, as such charities are incidental to private trusts.[6] So where a temple is constructed within one's compound or on a site contiguous to it, it would indicate an intention to treat it as a private temple and the fact that the idol is fixed (achal) does not make it a public temple.[7] The question in such cases is whether the charities are optional or compulsory, only morally or legally obligatory.[8] Here again, the question is reduced to one of intention and usage.[9] So where properties, both religious and non-religious, are granted at various times by one person to another, and the latter treats them as his private properties, subject to partition, the court held the non-religious grants as personal to the grantee, a holyman, and the religious lands as impartible and as made not to the person but to the office.[10] A grant of land or any other property by a disciple to his spiritual preceptor is prima facie a personal grant, both heritable and transferable, if it appears that it was intended to perpetuate the spiritual family of the preceptor by providing for succession in the line of his disciples.[11] So if the dedication was to a private deity, temple or shrine, the fact that the public were admitted to it would not make it a public trust.[12] The fact that a large number of persons are interested in an endowment may be some evidence of its public character, but it is of itself inconclusive, since a family idol may be the subject of ownership of a numerically large number of members

(1) Premo v. Sheo Nath, (1933) O. 22.
(2) Oseri v. Bawa Balmukandass, 24 I.C. (S). 712.
(3) Basawa Singh v. Bhagwan Kuar, 17 I.C. (L.) 270.
(4) Puraviya v. Poonachi, 62 I.C. (M.) 655.
(5) Subramania v. Lakshmana, 54 I.C. (M). 177.
(6) Sathappayyar v. Periasami, 14 M. 1; followed in Prasad Das v. Jagannath, 60 C. 538 (543); Cf. Krishnaswami v. Avayambal, (1933) M. 204.
(7) Premo v. Sheo Nath, (1933) O. 22.
(8) Ram Prasad v. Ram Kishan, 11 Pat. 594; Bhekdhari v. Sri Ramchand, 10 Pat. 388.
(9) Mahomed Khazim v. Ali Saghir, 11 Pat. 288.
(10) Sethuramaswamiar v. Meruswamiar. 41 M. 296 (304, 305) P.C.
(11) Sathapayyar v. Periaswami, 14 M. 1 (6,7).
(12) Chinna Venkata v. Hindu R. E. Bd., (1938) M. 214.

of the family than an idol set up by an obscure sect. Again, suppose a hundred persons combine to erect a shrine, they do not by that very fact make it any more a public trust, than if they had constructed a house for their residence. But the case would be different where from the nature of the building, e.g., a dharamshala[1] or a serai, a dedication to the public would be presumed; a fortiori where there is evidence of dedication,[2] which may be rebutted by the evidence that the owner kept the key and his permission was necessary to occupy it.[3] The question in such cases is not whether the public go but rather whether they have a right to do so and the shebait has no power to exclude them.[4] Apart from dedication its user would, as already observed, determine its character. As such, the court took judicial notice of the fact that the Nair temples and their lands in Malabar are as a rule privately owned by the tarwads or large family corporations and that the very contrary is the case in the rest of Madras Presidency.[5]

2014. A public endowment may be reduced to private ownership by adverse possession,[6] which, in the case of a permanent alienation made by a mahant who could only alienate it for legal necessity, would comment on his ceasing to be mahant by death, or otherwise.[7]

Mixed Endowments.

2015. In not a few cases, an endowment is partially public and partially private. Such is the case where the donor sets apart a portion of his bounty to pious user and the rest is given for the maintenance of a certain person and his decendants, or disciples.

Sums set apart for this purpose may not even be defined, e.g., where the surplus income from the worship and certain charities is left to be appropriated by the priest. It is clear that in such case the trust cannot be deemed to be wholly public or wholly private. The difference is important both as regards the question of accountability as also the necessity of sanctity of sanction for a suit thereon. (S. 283.)

Form of an Endowment.

263. (1) An endowment may be made directly or indirectly, by a grant, gift or bequest, trust or otherwise, orally or in writing.[8]

(2) When it is in writing and the alienation amounts to a gift or will, or a trust, and relates to immovable property of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards, it must be registered in accordance with the provisions of the statute law.[9]

(3) Where, however, it is made in any other form, it will be complete when it amounts to a dedication under Hindu Law.[10]

(4) As such, such dedication, whether it relates to movable or immovable property of any value, may be direct or indirect; if direct it

---

(1) Jugalkishore v. Lakshman Das, 23 B. 659.
(2) M. Sirajut Haq v. Imamuddin, 19 A. 104 (108).
(3) Chandulal v. Rampat Mal, (1933) L. 189.
(4) Premo v. Sheo Nath, (1933) O. 22.
(5) Mundacheri v. Achuthan, (1934) P.C. 230 (231, 232).
(6) Kumaraswamy v. Lakshmana, 53 M. 608 (619).
(7) Ramcharan v. Naurangi Lal, 12 Pat. 251 P.C.; Sri Chidambara v. Manickam, (1933) M. 481.
(8) Gangi v. Tammi, 50 M. 421 (425) P.C.
(9) S. 17 Registration Act, S. 63, Succession Act.
(10) S. 259, see "Dedication".

must be made in the form of a formal dedication by sankalp and samarpan or utsarga as hereinbefore defined in section 259.[1]

2016. How Endowment may be created.—A religious and charitable endowment may be created by gift or devise. Where it is created by gift, it is not subject to the provisions of S. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. And as neither the Trusts Act nor the English Law of trusts[2] applies to such endowments,[3] it need not be in writing registered as therein provided.[4] Even the creation of a trust is not necessary. As West, J., said: "A Hindu who wishes to benefit a religious or charitable institution may, according to his law, express his purpose and endow it, and the ruler will give effect to the charity, or at least protect it so far, at any rate, as it is consistent with his own dharm or conceptions of morality. A trust is not required for this purpose; the necessity of a trust in such a case is indeed a peculiarity and a modern peculiarity of the English Law. In early times, a gift placed, as it was expressed, "on the altar of God," sufficed to convey to the church the lands thus dedicated. Under the Roman Law of pre-Christian ages, such dedications were allowed only to specified national deities. After Christianity had become the religion of the empire, dedications to particular churches or for the foundation of churches and of religious and charitable institutions were much encouraged."[5] They have been also encouraged by the Hindu Smritikars.

There being no legal prohibition against the creation of an oral endowment, an endowment may be created by word of mouth[6] or in writing at the discretion of the founder.[7]

2017. Registration When Necessary.—This section only deals with the creation of an endowment, but not with the endowment of an existing foundation. If, for instance a person wishes to endow a temple, muth or an idol, his endowment must take the form of a gift, either to the trustees or to the idol. In the first case, the gift would, it is said, be subject to S. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, though not if the gift is made directly to the idol.[8] For although all Hindu gifts are now subject to the provisions of chapter VII (Ss. 122-129) of the Transfer of Property Act, that chapter by operation of S. 5 is limited to a transfer "to one or more living persons" and thereby excludes a gift to juridical person, such as a deity temple or shrine, an endowment to which is free from the necessity of registration as provided in S. 123. Similarly, S. 1 of the Trusts Act exempts Hindu trusts from the provisions of S. 5 of the Indian Trust Act requiring registration and as a will is not compulsorily registrable, it follows that a Hindu endowment whether made by grant, gift, will or the medium of a trust and relating to immovable property of over Rs. 100 in value is not compul-

Clause (2).

(1) Deosaran v. Deoki, 3 Part. 842; Bhekdhari v. Sri Ramchand, 10 Pat. 388; Prem Nath v. Hari Ram, 16 L. 85 (97, 98).

(2) Vidya Varuthi v.Baluswami, 44 M. 831 P.C.

(3) S. 1, Trusts Act (II of 1882).

(4) Ib., S. 5.

(5) Manohar v. Lakhmiram, 12 B. 247 (263, 264); Bhuggobutty v. Gooroo, 25 C. 112 (127); Profulla v. Jogendranath, 9 C. W.N. 528 (534).

(6) Gangi v. Tammi, 50 M. 421 (425) P.C.; Muddun Lal v. Konnel, 8 W.R. 42; Pallaya v. Ramadhanalalu, 13 M.L.J. 364; Ramalinga v. Sivachidambara, 42 M. 440; Sri Gopal v. Radha Benode, 41 C.L.J. 396: 88 I.C. 616: (1925) C. 996.

(7) Narasimha v. Venkatalingam, 50 M. 687 F.B.

(8) Pallayya v. Ramavadhanulu, 13 M. L.J. 364; Ramalinga v. Shivachidambara, 42 M. 440; Tammireddy v. Gangireddy, 45 M. 281; Narasimha v. Venkatalingum, 50 M. 687 F.B.

sorily registrable.[1] Further, since such an endowment takes the form of a dedication which means renunciation, requiring no acceptor or acceptance, it follows a line of its own as indicated elsewhere. (S. 259.) As regards writing there is no statutory necessity except where such bequest is part of a will, which must be in writing and executed in accordance with the provisions of S. 63 of the Succession Act incorporated in S. 237 of this Code.

2018. Express Words Unnecessary.—Since law prescribes no form of dedication, it follows that no words are necessary to constitute a dedication. "All that is necessary is that the religious purposes or objects of the testator should be clearly specified, and that the property intended for the endowment should be set apart for or dedicated to those purposes."[2] In another case, the testator bequeathed his house to his daughter for her life, and after sundry bequests, empowered his executors to sell the residue of the landed property and make over the proceeds to the university of Calcutta. No express words were to be found in the will as to what would become of the house on determination of the daughter's life-estate; but the court held it to fall into the residue which was bequeathed to the university, and, as such, directed the executors to sell it and make over the proceeds, with that of the residue of the other estate, to the university.[3]

Clauses (3), (4).

There can be no endowment without dedication.[4] Where, therefore, in a document there was nothing to show that there was such a dedication except the use of the word "debutter," and the grant was made apparently for the personal enjoyment of the grantee, though the grantor may have contemplated that the profits of the property, after satisfying the personal wants of the grantee, would be devoted to the service of the God whom he attended, it was held that such an expectation may explain the use of the word "debutter," but it does not suffice to constitute a valid dedication to the God.[5] The mere fact of the proceeds of a piece of land, having appropriated for the worship of an idol, does not constitute it an endowed property, but the fact of the assignment to the idol must be specifically proved.[6] The mere fact of its being released by Government, on the ground of its being appropriated to the service of an idol, does not impose on it the character of a religious endowment.[7]

2019. It is, at times, a question of some difficulty whether what has been done amounts to a dedication or not. The fact that the income from some properties had been generally, though not invariably, applied to the maintenance of a Thakur, is evidence of its dedication; but the fact that, in some cases, it had not been so applied, may be evidence either against the dedication or of the breaches of trust which do not disprove the dedication. The question is how it was treated as a rule and on the whole.[8]

2020. Trust Unnecessary.—Under English Law, no endowment is possible without the creation of a trust, but it is held unnecessary for the

(1) Narasimham v. Venkatalingam, 50 M. 687 F.B.

(2) Per Sale, J., in Bhuggobutty v. Jogendra, 9 C.W.N. 528; Sarab Sukh v. Gooroo, 25 C. 112 (127); Profulla v. Ram Prasad, 46 A. 130.

(3) Manorama v. Kali Charan, 31 C. 166 (169).

(4) Watson & Co. v. Ramchand, 18 C. 10 (18) P.C.

(5) Shamcharan v. Abhiram, 8 C.L.J. 306, following Ram Kanai v. Narayan, 2 C.L.J. 546 (552).

(6) Narain v. Roodur, 2 Hay. 490; Ram Pershad v. Sreehuree, 18 W.R. 399.

(7) Nimaye v. Jogendro, 21 W.R. 365.

(8) Sri Gopal v. Radha Binode, 41 C. L.J. 396: 88 I.C. 616: (1925) C. 996.

creation of a Hindu endowment. But though this is the law, it is seldom that an endowment is created without the creation of a trust. Suppose, for instance, a person were to declare: "I dedicate my village B to the god C." How is the purpose of his dedication to be fulfilled? The god C is a juridical person and cannot take B, and unless there is somebody to accept and administer the gift on behalf of C, how are the founder's wishes to be fulfilled? It may be that A administers the fund himself, and there is nothing to prevent him from doing so. In that case, he becomes the trustee of the fund, and his subsequent acts and conduct will show whether he had really divested himself of his property B or had merely used it as a shield for some ulterior purpose. Where, therefore, his bona fides are challenged, say, by a creditor, who attaches B, the burden is heavy on A to show that he had dedicated it to C.[1] As the Privy Council observed: "Very strong and clear evidence of such an endowment ought to exist."[2] The mere fact that the rents and profits of the property have been, for some years, applied for the worship of the idol, may be inconclusive, unless separate accounts are shown to have been kept and the income of the endowed property treated as distinct from the family income, showing "that property has been inalienably conferred upon an idol to sustain its worship."[3]

2021. The fact that certain property was purchased in the name of his own idol, is equally inconclusive. As the Privy Council said: "The question is whether there is any evidence of an endowment properly so called. Now, what is the evidence of an endowment? This was clearly not an endowment for the benefit of the public. The idol was not set up for the benefit of public worship. There are no priests appointed, no Brahmans who have any legal interest whatever in the fund. It is not like a temple endowed for the support of performing religious service for the benefit of any Hindu who might please to go there. It is simply an idol set up by the Maharaja apparently in his own house, and for what purpose? Why, for his own worship. We constantly have suits claiming certain turns of worship; but here there is no turn or right of worship established. There is nothing stated in any way to show that the Maharaja intended that the idol should be kept up for the benefit of his heirs in perpetuity, and before it can be established that lands have been endowed in perpetuity, so that they can never be sold and must be tied up in perpetuity, some clear evidence of an endowment must be given. What are the objects of the endowment? None of the essentials of an endowment are stated. The Maharaja appears to have purchased the property in the name of the idol, and that is all. Then he deals with the funds of the idol, as if it were his own property. There is no evidence at all of any of the essentials of an endowment in favour of idol."[4] But while the founder of a private idol has an uphill task to establish his dedication, the task, though difficult, is not impossible. Where, for instance, the fact of the dedication was supported by an ancient document, added to which there was the evidence of appropriation of profits for the support of the idol, the Privy Council said: "The mere fact of the proceeds of any land being used for the support of an idol may not be

(1) Doorganath v. Ramchunder, 2 C. 341 P.C.; Ramcoomar v. Jogender, 4 C. 56; Watson & Co. v. Ramchand, 18 C. 10 P.C.

(2) Doorganath v. Ramchunder, 2 C. 341 (349) P.C.

(3) Doorganath v. Ramchunder, 2 C. 341 (349) P.C.; Dharma Das v. Gosta, 8 I.C. (C.) 894.

(4) Brojosoondery v. Lachmee, 20 W. R. 95 (96) P.C., affirming O.A. 11 W.R. 13.

proof that those lands formed an endowment for the purpose,[1] but it is a fact that may well be taken into consideration, when, as in this case, the intention of the founder has to be gathered from an ancient document, expressed, to say the least, in ambiguous language: Contemporanea exposito est optima."[2]

2022. When once an endowment is established, the mere fact that there had been sales and mortgages[3] of the property by some members and partition of it amongst the shebaits,[4] or that the conditions of the trust have not been performed,[5] does not alter its character, though properties dedicated to a family idol may be converted into secular property by the consensus of the family. As the Privy Council observed: "Where the temple is a public temple, the dedication may be such that the family itself could not put an end to it; but in the case of a family idol, the consensus of the whole family might give the estate another direction."[6] Consequently, in the case of such endowment, the fact that a certain property was at one time debutter, raises no presumption of its continuance, which must be proved by the manner it has been held and enjoyed and its income appropriated.[7] There can be no question that where an idol is consecrated in a temple, the latter must also be presumed to have been dedicated to the idol.[8]

But the mere execution and registration of a deed of endowment, unaccompanied by delivery of possession by the transfer of the apparent evidence of ownership, was not sufficient to create an irrevocable endowment.[9]

No Dedication.

2023. A dedication implies complete divestment, by the owner, of his ownership of the property, and its transfer to or in trust for the donee. If it falls short of this, it is not a complete dedication, though it may amount to a precatory trust, or other provision made for the maintenance of the object of his bounty. Such was the case of the testatrix who addressed her will to her grandson and directed him to perform the worship of some family idols out of the income of specified properties. There was no gift of any property to the idol, nor any provision made for worship after his death; it was held that no heritable Shebaitship had been created, and that the properties were conferred on the grandson subject to the maintenance of the worship, and that it created only a private trust, to which S. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code was inapplicable.[10] While a dedication may be oral, the mere fact that the manager of a joint family had been paying the expenses of a choultry out of a part of the profits of a usufructuary mortgage does not establish a dedication thereof to charity.[11]

Subject of endowment.

264. Any property movable and immovable that a person can dispose of by gift or will may form the subject of an endowment.

(1) Muddun Lal v. Komal, 8 W.R. 42 (43), cited in Abhiram v. Shyama Charan, 36 C. 1003 (1012) P.C.

(2) "A contemporaneous exposition is the best in law." Abhiram v. Shyama Charan, 36 C. 1003 (1012) P.C.

(3) Dharma v. Gosta, 16 C.W.N. 29: 8 I.C. 894.

(4) Bhabataran v. Behari, 10 I.C. 399.

(5) Kasheeshuree v. Krishnakaminee, 2 Hay 557; Madhab v. Sarat Kumari, 6 I.C. (C.) 26.

(6) Doorganath v. Ramchunder, 2 C. 341 (347) P.C.; Abhiram v. Shyama Charan, 36 C. 1003 P.C.; Dharma Das v. Gosta, 16 C.W.N. 29: 8 I.C. 894; Gobinda v. Debindra, 12 C.W.N. 98.

(7) Gobinda v. Debindra, 12 C.W.N. 98.

(8) Sri Gopal v. Radha Binode, 41 C. L.J. 396: 88 I.C. 616: (1925) C. 996.

(9) Ram Dhan v. Prayag, 43 A. 503.

(10) Gopal v. Purna Chandar, 49 C. 459 P.C.

(11) Gangi v. Tammi, 50 M. 421 (429, 431) P.C.

2024. Analogous Law.—Since an endowment is the gift of one's property to the service of God, or of men, in whom resides the spirit of God, a property, which a person is competent to dispose of by gift or will, he is equally competent to dispose it of in charity.

A mere easement may, however, be dedicated, though it cannot be transferred. The deceased had built a ghat as the last resting place of persons on the point of death, where the rites of antarjali (or last rite of water) was performed. It was held that as the deceased had appointed no shebait, he did not intend to part with the ownership of the ghat, but that, nevertheless, there was the dedication of an easement in favour of the Hindu community.[1]

Endowment in favour of non-existing object.

265. An endowment may be created in favour of an idol, muth or other object, not in existence at the death of the testator.[2]

2025. Analogous Law.—This is an exception to the ordinary rule of Hindu Law which requires that a gift, to be valid, must be in favour of a sentient being in existence at the moment the gift takes effect. Hence, where a gift is made by a will which takes effect on the death of the testator, under Hindu Law, unaffected by the Hindu Disposition of Property Act, the donee must be then in existence. Otherwise the gift shall fail. But religious and charitable endowments, being favoured by the sacred law, are an exception to the rule.[3] The contrary was laid down in some cases, in which it was held that the principle of Hindu Law, which invalidates a gift other than to a sentient being, capable of accepting it, applied equally to a bequest to trustees for the establishment of an image and the worship of a Hindu deity, and made such bequest void.[4] But these cases have since been overruled and the law is as stated in this section.

Vesting of the endowments.

266. In the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, the beneficial interest in the dedicated property vests in the religious or charitable object, and its management in the manager, subject to the customary incidents of his office.[5]

2026. Analogous Law.—There is no uniform rule governing religious and charitable endowments. The endower may make a direct bequest to the object of his bounty without the intervention of trustees, or he may transfer the property in trust. But whatever the nature of the bequest, ownership in the property so bequeathed vests in the idol, muth, temple or other object of his bounty, while the manager possesses the right of possession and management.

The manager is variously called sarbarakar, shebait, or mahant, but his legal character is identical. He is not the trustee of the Fund or its receipts, and his rights and liabilities are regulated by usage.[6]

(1) Jaggamoni v. Nilmoni, 9 C. 75.
(2) Bhupathi v. Ram Lall, 37 C. 128 F.B.
(3) Bhupathi v. Ram Lall, 37 C. 128 F. B., overruling Upendra v. Hemchandra, 25 C. 405; Brojomoyee v. Troylukho, 29 C 260; Nogendra v. Benoy, 30 C. 521; Mahar Singh v. Het Singh, 32 A. 337; Chatarbhuj v. Chatarjit, 33 A. 253.
(4) Upendra v. Hemchandra, 25 C. 405; Brojo Moyee v. Troylukho, 29 C. 260; Nogendra v. Benoy, 30 C. 521.
(5) Vidyavaruthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831; Manohar v. Bhupendra Nath, 60 C. 452 F.B.
(6) Vidyavaruthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831 P.C.; Manohar v. Bhupendra Nath, 60 C. 452 F.B.

2027. The presumption stated in clause (1), however, applies "in the absence of anything appearing to the contrary." This must depend upon the terms and conditions of the dedication and where these cannot be ascertained, by usage.[1]

The founder of an idol has the right of appointing its manager. It is open to him to act as the manager, in which case, he becomes the de facto trustee, in common parlance called the shebait. As such, the shebait may have to appoint other persons to assist him; one such person so appointed is the pujari,[2] but he is only a servant, appointed for the performance of worship and the due observance of ceremonies, and cannot claim the right of a shebait.[3]

Operation of endowment.

267. An endowment may be conditional or unconditional, permanent or temporary, and takes effect from such time as the founder may intend.

2028. Analogous Law.—An endowment may be created to take effect from any time in praesenti, as from the execution of the deed of endowment, or in futuro, as on the death of the testator, or at any time on determination of one or more life-estates.[4] In each case, it is a question of intention. And since endowments are free even from the rule against perpetuity, there is practically no legal impediment to their creation. So, where the testator bequeathed his house to his daughter for her life, and the residue was to be sold by his executors and the proceeds made over to the university of Calcutta; but no express provision was to be found in the will as to what would happen to the house in question on determination of the daughter's life-estate, it was held that the reversion in the house, expectant on the determination of the daughter's life-interest, passed under the specific residuary devise in favour of the university of Calcutta.[5]

Illusory and void endowment.

268. An endowment is illusory and void if it is a device to preserve the estate to the family of the endower, or to defraud, defeat or delay his other claimants or creditors.[6]

Illustrations.

(a) A, being indebted, dedicates his property to his family god, retaining all control. The endowment is void.

(b) A, endows a god to spite his son. The endowment is void.

2029. Analogous Law.—From the fact that a religious endowment is not subject to the rule against accumulations and perpetuities, and that it is no longer, as it was (§ 1975) at one time, subject to the ordinary rule of Hindu Law that the donee must be in existence at the death of the testator, testators often resorted to this device for the purpose of evading those laws, added to which an endowment offered a tempting bait to deceive creditors. At one time, such pseudo-endowments were quite common, being really resorted to for the purpose of withdrawing property alike from the grasp of the oppressor or from the disintegrating action of the ordinary rules affecting it.[7] And the fact an endowment might

(1) Kailasam v. Nataraja, 33 M. 265 F.B.
(2) Indurj v. Chundemun, 16 W.R. 99.
(3) Sripathi v. Khudiram, 41 C.L.J. 22: 82 I.C. 840: (1925) C. 442.
(4) Gobind v. Gomti, 30 A. 288 (289).
(5) Monorama v. Kali Charan, 31 C. 166 (169).
(6) Watson & Co. v. Ramchund, 18 C. 10 P.C.; Doorganath v. Ramchander, 2 C. 341 P.C. and cases cited in comm.
(7) Phillips and Trevelyan's Hindu Wills, (2nd Ed.), pp. 36, 37.

be validly made in favour of one's private tutelary god, without the intervention of trustees or the requirement of an instrument or other mode of publicity, facilitated the use of the god as a benamidar to shuffle out of the creditor's reach property, which the debtor could not otherwise shield from their grasp. The crucial test in such cases is, of course, the intention, and the only evidence of intention afforded is the application of its income on the endowed object.[1]

2030. The fact that separate accounts were maintained of the rents and profits collected and applied for the worship of the idol, is material but not conclusive,[2] since such accounts might be maintained by any unscrupulous person; but where they were so maintained for a period going over half a century, it will be strong corroborative evidence of a dedication,[3] as the fact that the dedicator had been appropriating its income[4] or that the property had been the subject of a partition, would be evidence against it.[5] The mere fact that an idol has been maintained out of the income of a property, is no proof of dedication, since such contributions might be voluntary and liable to discontinuance at any time.[6] In order to prove an endowment, it must be established that an absolute grant was, in the first place, made with the intention that the profits should be applied for the service of an idol, that the profits have since been so applied, and that members of the family of the founder have not treated the property as one, the profits of which were mainly intended to be applied for their benefit.[7]

2031. There may be dedication and yet only a partial dedication, as where it is burdened with a charge in respect of a charity, in which case the beneficial interest is liable to seizure in execution of a decree.[8] Here again, a distinction must be made between the bequest of property subject to a certain charge and a bequest of property subject to certain duties.[9] To constitute a valid dedication, it is not necessary that any specific property should be set apart. A share of the income derivable from the family properties may be dedicated. The family properties will then become subject to a charge for that amount, and whoever takes the family properties by alienation or partition, will take them subject to that charge. Whether the amount has been set apart by the family is a question of fact, to be decided on the evidence adduced in each case.[10] Where the testator dedicated his house to god Shiv and directed that the income from certain promissory notes worth Rs. 10,000 should be appropriated for his worship, the fact that he had also empowered his executor to live in the house did not make the bequest colourable.[11]

---

(1) Ramchandra v. Ranjit, 27 C. 242; Bhekdhari v. Sri Ramchanderji, 10 Pat. 388.

(2) Doorganath v. Ram Chunder, 2 C. 341 P.C.; Abhiram v. Shyama Charan, 36 C. 530 P.C.; Ramchandra v. Ranjit, 27 C. 242.

(3) Mudden Lal v. Komul Bibee, 8 W. R. 42; Radha v. Judoomonee, 23 W.R. 369 P.C.

(4) Sookheemoney v. Mohendro, 4 B. L.R. 16 P.C.; Suppammal v. Collector, 12 M. 387; Azizuddin v. Legal Remembrancer. 15 A. 321 (322).

(5) Kuneez v. Saheba, 8 W.R. 313.

(6) Mudden Lal v. Komul, 8 W.R. 42; Ram Pershad v. Sreemutee, 18 W.R. 399; Shurfoounissa v. Koolsoom, 25 W.R. 447; Doorganath v. Ramchunder, 2 C. 341 P. C.; Abhiram v. Shyama Charan, 36 C. 1003 P.C.

(7) Madhab v. Sarat Kumari, 15 C.W. N. 126: 6 I.C. 26; Kulada v. Kali Das, 42 C. 536.

(8) Dassa v. Narasimha, 35 B. 156; Muthu v. Shunmoogatha, 8 M.L.T. 224: 7 I.C. 79.

(9) Lalchand v. Nandlal, (1912) P.L. R. 171: 16 I.C. 838.

(10) Nagar v. Ramappaya, 25 I.C. 399.

(11) Benode v. Sita Ram, 6 A.L.J. 444: 1 I.C. 666.

2032. The question whether the endowment is real or illusory, depends upon whether it is a substantial bequest to charity or to the testator's family.[1] "To determine whether any particular case answers the test, all the circumstances existing at the date of the deed must be taken into consideration, such as the financial position of the grantor, the amount of the property, the nature and needs of the charity, their probable or possible expansion, the priority of their claim upon the settled fund and the like."[2] Where, therefore the grantor created a trust of his property for the performance of the customary fateha and the distribution of food and clothes to the poor in the month of Ramzan every year, the surplus being equally divided by his sons, grandson, and their heirs, from generation to generation, his estate yielding an annual income of Rs. 1,500, out of which Rs. 300 were spent on charity, and Rs. 300 paid to the trustee as his salary, leaving a balance of Rs. 900 per annum to feed the family and the descendants of the grantors in perpetuity, it was contended that the endowment was illusory in that only two-fifths went to charity while three-fifths went to the heirs; but the Privy Council overruled the contention, holding that the income might fluctuate or decrease permanently and needs of the charity might expand. It was contended that the trustee might spend little or nothing on charity, to which the Privy Council replied that if the trustee failed to perform his trust, the court could interfere. They then said: "The sum devoted to these charities is, according to any standard, not large, though, for the present, it is abundant for their needs. Having regard to the wealth of the grantors at the date of the deed, the provision made by it is a modest provision."

2033. "Their Lordships take the view that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the dominating purpose and intention of the grantors in executing this deed, evidently, was to provide adequately for these charities. That was their main and paramount object. The secondary and subsidiary objects were to secure for their families and descendants any surplus that might remain over, after the needs of the charities had been satisfied. As the gift for the charities was perpetual, it was necessary and right that the provision for capturing any possible residue should also be perpetual. The provisions of the deed carry out these objects, and that being so, it is, in their Lordships' view, only right to hold that the effect of the instrument is not to give the trust property in substance to the family of the grantors, but to give it in substance to the charitable purposes named in it. If this is so, as they think it is, the deed is within the authorities a good and valid deed of wakf and must be allowed to take effect according to its tenor."[3]

While the father is entitled to make "pious and reverential gifts to Brahmins," and also "gifts from affection towards Vishnu and other divinities."[4] Still, he is not entitled to do so out of spite towards his son. Such endowment is not bona fide, and, as such, it is void.[5]

Invalid endowment.

269 No endowment can be made, the purpose or object of which is illegal.[6]

Illustration.

A Hindu endows a mosque. The endowment is invalid.[7]

---

(1) Majibunnissa v. Abdul, 23 A. 233 (243) P.C.

(2) Ramanadan v. Vava, 40 M. 116 (121, 122) P.C.

(3) Ramanadan v. Vava, 40 M. 116 (124) P.C.

(4) Gopal v. Kunwar Singh, (1843) S. D.A.B. 24.

(5) Raghunath v. Gobind, 8 A. 76.

(6) Fazle v. Anath Bandhu, 16 C.W.N. 114: 11 I.C. 436, cf. S. 23, Contract Act; S. 6 (h), Transfer of Property Act.

(7) Fazle v. Anath Bandhu, 16 C.W.N. 114: 11 I.C. 436.

2034. Analogous Law.—It is provided by the Contract Act that no contract is legal, the purpose or object of which is illegal.[1] A transfer in the same circumstances is prohibited by the Transfer of Property Act.[2]

A person cannot achieve by a bequest what he could not do by a transfer. So, an endowment made to start a suicide club would be invalid as opposed to public policy.

Again, and apart from the statute law, a person cannot endow an object not warranted by his personal law. So, a Hindu cannot endow a Mahomedan mosque. Such a dedication is doubly void, being prohibited both by the Hindu and by the Mahomedan Law.[3]

But though the Mahomedan Law interdicts a gift received from an infidel, there is nothing in that law to preclude a Mahomedan ruler from making a religious or charitable grant to a Hindu.[4]

Endowment when revocable.

270 (1) An endowment once completed is both irrevocable and unalterable.[5]

(2) Provided that an endowment in favour of a family idol may be altered or transferred by the consensus of the family.[6]

2035. An Endowment is both Irrevocable and Unalterable.—A gift, once completed, becomes irrevocable; a fortiori, an endowment which is a gift to sacred uses. It was in one case argued that an endowment should be regarded as merely revocable appropriation, of which the founder may vary the use, but the contention was dismissed by the Privy Council with these words: "No authority whatever was adduced in support of this position, which strikes at the root of most modern endowment of the like nature."[7] Of course, an endowment brought about by coercion, fraud or undue influence may be set aside to the same extent as a gift. But, otherwise, when it is a voluntary act of public benevolence, it cannot be recalled without detriment to the public, in whom a right has become vested. An endowment does not fail because the idol, which was the subject of endowment, is stolen or broken, since the idol is merely a visible form of the deity who is imperishable. If its visible form disappears, it is open to the founder or shebait to replace it with appropriate ceremonies.[8]

Clause 1.

2036. When Revocable.—The case of an endowment in favour of a private family god is, however, different. There can be no doubt that if the family council so decide, it may be altered or transfered but it is by no means clear whether the family have an equal right to revoke and convert it into secular property. In one case,[9] the Privy Council had no doubt observed "where the temple is a public temple, the dedication may be such that the family itself could not put an to it, but in the case of family idol, the consensus of the whole family might give the estate another direction." This statement has not been followed in several Indian cases, in which it is distinguished as

Clause 2.

(1) S. 23, Contract Act.
(2) S. 6 (h), Transfer of Property Act.
(3) Fazle v. Anath Bandhu, 16 C.W. N. 114: 11 I.C. 436.
(4) Puran v. Darson, 11 I.C. (A.) 166, (170).
(5) Doorga Nath v. Ramchander, 2 C. 341 (347) P.C.; but see Surendrakrishna v. Ishwar Bhubaneswari, 60 C. 54 (71).
(6) Ib.
(7) Juggutt Mohini v. Sokheemoney, 14 M.I.A. 289 (302); Sripathi v. Khudiram, 41 C.L.J. 22: 82 I.C. 840: (1925) C. 442.
(8) Semble in Kali Kanta v. Surendra Nath, 41 C.L.J. 128: (1925) C. 648.
(9) Doorganath v. Ramchunder, 2 C. 336 (347) P.C.

an obiter dictum,[1] though, of course, full effect has been given to it in other cases.[2] It is submitted that a dedication is not like any other alienation, and, once made, it cannot be revoked, though it may be altered or transferred in the case of a family idol, by the consensus of the family. Where, therefore, a private debutter has been partitioned between members of the family for the better enjoyment thereof, and there had been sales and mortgages of portions of the property by some members, but there was nothing to show that there was a consensus to give the property a different turn, it was held that these facts alone did not alter the debutter character of the property.[3]

2037. Where land has been given as debutter land, and the requisite services are not performed, all that the donor can do is to take steps to have the services performed. He cannot recover it in a suit for khas possession.[4] Where certain buildings were dedicated to the professors of the Jain religion, after which the religion became subdivided into two sects, the Swetambar and the Digambar, the former of whom rebuilt and greatly improved the buildings and, therefore, claimed them for the exclusive use of their sect, the Privy Council held that the dedication of the buildings being for the common use of both the sects, their improvement by one sect created in them no exclusive right to their user.[5]

Management of Endowment.

Who may be appointed Manager.

271. (1) No person is disqualified by reason of his caste or sex to be appointed a manager.

(2) A female is not disqualified, by reason of her sex, from holding a priestly office, though she might not be competent to perform its spiritual duties.

2038. Analogous Law.—The question of eligibility cannot be determined without reference to the nature of the endowment. If its purpose is secular charity, there is no limit as to the person that may be appointed its manager. Where the institution is religious, its nature must determine the eligibility of any person to be its manager. In a new foundation, the founder usually appoints some one to manage it. And as any Hindu may validly create a religious endowment, it follows that caste is no disqualification. Nor is sex. But since a gift to Brahmans is commended by the Brahman text writers, pious endowers generally appoint a Brahman to the shebaitship of an idol or temple. But Kshatriyas and even Shudras[6] are hereditary shebaits of many a temple, and the Jains appoint one of their own creed to that office, and in one case, it was found that certain Mahomedan Malis were hereditary pujaris of an ancient Hindu temple;[7] while in the case of muths, Gosavi Bairagis are invariably appointed their mahants. As these orders are open to all Hindus, caste plays but a secondary part in the election to mahantship. But it is, nevertheless, a qualification.

(1) Sreepati v. Krishnachandra, 41 C. L.J. 22 (26, 27); Chandi Charan v. Dulal Chandra, 54 C. 30 (37, 38); Per Rankin, C.J., in Surendra Krishna v. Iswar Bhubaneshwari, 60 C. 54 (71).

(2) Gobind v. Debendra, 12 C.W.N. 98; Dharma v. Gosta, 16 C.W.N. 29: 8 I.C. (C.) 894; Lalit Mohan v. Brojendra Nath, 53 C. 251.

(3) Dharma v. Gosta, 16 C.W.N. 29: 8 I.C. 894.

(4) Gopinath v. Gooroo, 18 W.R. 472; Ram Narain v. Ramoon, 23 W.R. 76.

(5) Maharaj Bahadur v. Seth Hukum Chand, 24 A.L.J. 100: 93 I.C. 219: (1926) P.C. 13.

(6) Radha Mohun v. Jadoomonee, 23 W.R. 369; Sundarambal v. Yogovana Gurukkal, 38 M. 850 (859); Pujari v. Subramania, 29 C.W.N. 112: 81 I.C. 518: (1924) P.C. 44.

(7) Babu v. Sukka, (1923) A. 165.

2039. A married man may be appointed a shebait, unless celibacy is made a condition of the office or is necessarily implied by the nature of the institution, e.g., a muth, the mahant of which must of necessity be a celibate.[1] But there is no shastric prohibition against marriage.[2]

As regards females, it is competent to a founder to appoint a female shebait,[3] whose succession to that office may be, moreover, supported by usage.[4] In one case, it was contended, on the authority of Manu,[5] that as women are not instructed in the Vedas and are simple creatures, they are not fit for priestly duties, but the court held that, as in the case before them, the female shebait had been nominated by her husband and imparted mantras, which were accepted and not objected to, there was nothing to show that she was disqualified to be an adhikaree.[6]

2040. In another case a similar contention was raised but not decided.[7] But the fact that in no case has a female been declared disqualified by reason of her sex from filling the office, shows that sex no longer stands in the way of woman's eligibility to management of a religious trust, though whether she is equally competent to discharge the priestly duties, must depend upon the usage of the institution. In practice, the goddess Devi prefers priestess of her own sex, while the phallic god Shiv would never tolerate a woman high priest,[8] though, even here she may validly fill the office of the manager,[9] and even as regards her qualification to the priestship (archak or purohit), she has been permitted to hold the office, being held entitled to have the actual worship performed through a male substitute appointed for the purpose.[10] But, even here, it is open to the founder to appoint a female shebait,[11] and usage has recognized the right of a woman to act as mahant of a Biragi muth,[12] while there is no objection to her holding the office of a trustee of a charitable endowment.[13] Even in cases where her sex disqualifies her to officiate herself, she is entitled to appoint a substitute,[14] where, however, the sanad provided for the management by a priest and his family and its female members married into another family would become ineligible for appointment as manager,[15] though they would become eligible for such appointment in the family they have married into.

2041. Qualification of Manager.—No qualification is necessary for eligibility as manager, though it is obvious that the appointment of a person claiming adversely to the endowment, would place him in a posi-

(1) Ram Prakas v. Anand Das, 43 C. 707 P.C.

(2) Hari Das v. Raja Ram, (1935) L. 545.

(3) Surendra v. Doorgasoondery, 19 C. 513 (537) P.C.

(4) Janokee v. Gopaul, 2 C. 365, O.A. 9 C. 766 (770) P.C. ; semble in Sitaram v. Sitaram, 6 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 250; quaere in Keshava v. Bhagirathi, 3 B.H.C.R. (A. C.) 75; Joy Deb v. Huroputty, 16 W.R. 282.

(5) IX-18.

(6) Poorun v. Kasheeshurree, 3 W.R. 179 (180); Puranlalji v. Rao Behari Lal, 44 A. 590.

(7) Joy Deb v. Huroputty, 16 W.R. 282.

(8) Sundarambal v. Yogavana Gurukkal, 38 M. 850 (860, 861), dissented from in Rajeswari v. Subramania, 40 M. 105.

(9) Sundarambal v. Yogavana Gurukkal, 38 M. 850 (859).

(10) Annaya v. Ammakka, 34 M.L.J. 196 (209) F.B.; Seshammal v. Soondarajiengar, (1853) M.S.D.A. 261, explained as obiter in Sundarambal v. Yogavana Gurukkal, 38 M. 850 (859), dissented from in Rajeswari v. Subramania, 40 M. 105, following contra in Ramasundaram v. Savundrathammal, 16 M.L.T. 423; Tangirala v. Manikya, 27 M. L.J. 179.

(11) Surendra v. Doorgasoondery, 19 C. 513 (531, 532) P.C.

(12) Dhuncooverbai v. A.-G., 1 Bom. L. R. 743.

(13) Malligarjun v. Sridevamma, 20 M. 162 P.C.

(14) Kunj Bihari v. Naraini, 45 A. 437.

(15) Ranchhod v. Jayanti, 28 Bom. L. R. 463: 95 I.C. 85: (1926) B. 309.

tion where his interest will conflict with his duty.[1] A minor might be appointed as a manager, as he might be appointed an agent. But a person who is disqualified by reason of bodily deformity, or bodily disease such as leprosy, or disease of the mind, or of leading the life which is immoral or inconsistent with the religious vows of the office, such as that of a mahant of a muth, cannot be appointed to that office.[2] So, again, a married man cannot be appointed to be the head of a muth. If he is married and has children, he must renounce them before entering upon a life of enforced celibacy and asceticism.[3] But the Madras High Court has upheld the right of a married woman to inherit the service and emoluments of an archaka office in a temple.[4] In one case, the Privy Council held a beldar (stone-mason) incompetent to be the assignee of a Brahman shebait's right, on the ground that he was incompetent to perform the worship of the diety at the temple, adding: "The office of shebait of a temple was an hereditary office which could not be held by any one who was not a Brahman panda."[5] But this statement must not be taken as laying down any general rule which would not be in consonance with the established practice.

2042. The manager may possess power in varying degree. He may be the sole manager or a joint manager, and supreme or subordinate, in his power of management. The appointment of a general trustee is consistent with the existence of subordinate representatives having the right to manage certain special portions of the property, and pay over the income so collected to the endowment, and even in some degree control its use. Such rights are not inconsistent, with the existence of a general trust, but they are fatal to the general trustee's claim to possession of the properties from which those revenues were derived.[6]

Appointment of the Manager.

272. (1) The founder is entitled to provide for the management of any endowment created by him.[7]

(2) He may nominate a shebait and provide for his successor and effect will be given to his wishes, if not inconsistent with the general law.[8]

(3) Where the founder makes an endowment without providing for its management, the right of management vests in the founder and his heirs.[9]

(4) The right of the founder to provide for the management devolves upon his heirs on his death.[10]

(5) The court may appoint a manager in the last resort.[11]

2043. Analogous Law.—The founder of an endowment naturally possesses the right to arrange for its management. As such, it is for him to set out a scheme of management, nominate trustees, and give general

(1) Krishna v. Kali Sunkar, 1 I.C. (C.) 916.
(2) Ram Parkash v. Anand Das, 43 C. 707 (719) P.C.
(3) Ibid.
(4) Annaya v. Ammakka, 41 M. 886 F.B.
(5) Jalandhar v. Jharula, 42 C. 244 (252) P.C., reversing O.A. Jharula v. Jalandhar, 39 C. 887.
(6) Ambalavana v. Sri Meenakshi, 43 M. 665 P.C.
(7) Kamini v. Asutosh, 16 C. 103 P.C., and cases cited in f.n. below.
(8) Pramatha Nath v. Pradhyumna, 52 C. 809 P.C.; Manohar v. Bhupendra Nath, 60 C. 452 (551) F.B.
(9) Girdharji v. Romanlalji, 17 C. 3 P.C. and other cases cited in § 2046.
(10) Pramath Nath v. Pradhyumna, 52 C. 809 P.C.
(11) See § 2049.

directions as to the mode and manner in which he wishes to serve the object of his bounty.[1] Even where he endows an existing institution, it is for him to state the conditions of his offer, since, according to Hindu Law, when a religious endowment has been founded, the right to appoint a manager or superintendent remains in the founder and his descendants, unless there is evidence to show that the founder or his descendants have made any inconsistent disposition.[2]

2044. Who are the Founders.—Where the endower is a single individual, he is, of course, the founder. But an institution is, sometimes, founded by subscriptions by a single individual,[3] or conjointly by the members of a caste, sect or tribe, in which case, that individual,[4] of all the original subscribers, as the case may be, would be classed as the founder or founders.[5] A subsequent donor cannot claim that privilege.[6] So where one community found a temple dedicated to the public it was held that "although the donations were irrevocably dedicated to certain public purposes, the donors have never lost the right, which was attached to the caste since the beginning, to manage the temple which they founded, and the management can only be interfered with as a public charitable trust on proof of maladministration."[7] Where several members are entitled to management in rotation or by turns, the exclusion of one by the other, may become adverse, conferring on the members excluding a title by prescription, or at least, as a valid family arrangement, which will hold good until altered by the court or superseded by a new scheme, effected with the concurrence of all parties interested.[8] No person can be appointed as shebait whose interest is adverse to that of the idol. Such are persons who deny the endowment and assert a personal right to the property, who cannot be appointed shebaits or custodians of the income of the properties and supervisors of the worship of the deity.[9] It is the right of the founder to make rules for the management of the endowment and the appointment of its shebaits, and to alter them from time to time, so long as, by doing so, he does not prejudice the endowment or some right of property of the shebait or of third parties already accrued.[10] In an ordinary case, the founder and the shebait are the same person, and whether it is so or not, the shebait is the mouthpiece of the idol, and anything that the shebait does, must, consistently with his devotion and duty to the idol, be regarded as the will of the idol. Where, therefore, the founder in his will, gave certain directions for the removal of the idol, the court gave effect to them, not as the directions of the testator but as the will of the idol itself, expressed through its guardian and manager.[11] After the death of the founder, the rules made by him cannot be altered by any successor in estate or office, unless he had empowered some one to do so, but so long as they are not materially altered, it is open to the shebait, or

(1) Kamini v. Asutosh, 16 C. 103 P. C.; Baldeo v. Gobind, 36 A. 161; Lahar Puri v. Puram Nath, 37 A. 298 P.C.; Jadunath v. Sitaramji, 39 A. 553 P.C.; Sheo Prasad v. Aya Ram, 29 A. 663; Rajbans v. Karya, 8 A.L.J. 286: 10 I.C. 824.

(2) Sheo Prasad v. Ayaram, 29 A. 663; Narsingh v. Durjan, (1881) A.W.N. 52.

(3) Venkataramma v. Damodaram, 51 M.L.J. 457: 98 I.C. 298: (1926) M. 1150.

(4) Ibid.

(5) Luchmee v. Rookmanee, (1857) S. D.A.M. 152; Endowed Societies Act (In re), 10 A.C. 304 (308, 309).

(6) Lalit Mohan v. Brojendra Nath, 53 C. 251.

(7) Thackersey v. Hurbhum, 8 B. 432 (462).

(8) Ramanathan v. Murugappa, 27 M. 192, affirmed O.A. 29 M. 283 (288) P.C.

(9) Krishna v. Kali Sunkar, 1 I.C. (C.) 216.

(10) Sripathi v. Khudiram, 41 C.L.J. 22: 82 I.C. 840: (1925) C. 442.

(11) Pramatha Nath v. Pradyumna, 52 C. 809 P.C.

all the shebaits jointly, to add to or alter them for the better management of the endowment.[1]

2045. The owner of the soil who dedicates a way to the public, is entitled to sue for an injunction against one who destroys the improvements effected by him. He is not required to prove special damage.[2]

2046. Where the founder establishes an idol, or endows for the establishment of one, without making any provision for its worship, the office of shebait presumably vests in the founder and, on his death, upon such person as he might have appointed or designated as his successor, or in his heir,[3] unless there is any custom or usage showing that the devolution is otherwise.[4] Where, therefore, the founder appointed, by will, his widow as shebait, giving her the power to appoint her successor, which she did by will, but the person so appointed was born after her death, whereupon it was contended that the appointment of a successor, who was unborn at the death of the testatrix, was invalid as being opposed to the rule laid down in the Tagore case, to the effect that the donee must be in existence at the death of the testator; but it was held that the right of the founder of a religious trust to lay down a general rule of succession to the managership, must be regarded as exceptional and is not inconsistent with the Hindu Law or usage,[5] provided it does not contravene the rule in Tagore v. Tagore.[6]

Clauses (2), (3).

2047. Even where the founder appoints trustees, in the absence of custom or any provision in the deed of foundation to the contrary, the right of appointment of new trustees vests in the founder's heirs.[7] As regards the members of a Mitakshara family, who are joint shebaits the right of shebaitship passes by survivorship.[8] Where the management vests in the founder's family, the management of one member of the family must be regarded as being on behalf of all the members, including females, and not adverse to them.[9]

2048. In the absence of the founder, his heir possesses the right to see to the proper administration of the trust, and in case of its mismanagement, to invoke the assistance of the court for its proper management.[10] As regards a public trust, this right is now extended by the Legislature to any person "interested" therein.[11] Succession to a religious

Cl. (4). Founder's Heirs.

---

(1) Pramatha Nath v. Pradyumna, 52 C. 809 P.C.

(2) Bahadur v. Parash Nath, 31 C. 839.

(3) Girdharji v. Romanlalji, 17 C. 3 P.C.; Jagadindra v. Hemanta, 32 C. 129 P.C.; Pramatha Nath v. Pradhyumna, 52 C. 209 P.C.; Mohan v. Madhusudan, 42 A. 461; Ravichand v. Somal, (1886) B. P.J. 273.

(4) Girdharji v. Romanlalji, 17 C. 3 P.C.; Peet v. Dharee, 13 W.R. 396; Ramchandra v. Ram Krishna, 33 C. 507; Mohan v. Gordhan, 35 A. 283 P.C.; Lahar v. Puran, 37 A. 298 P.C.; Jadunath v. Sitaramji, 30 A. 553 P.C.; Deokinandan v. Brijnandan, (1924) Pat. 502.

(5) Mathura Nath v. Lakhi Narain, 50 C. 426 (436, 437), contra in Promotha Nath v. Anukul Chandra, 29 C.W.N. 17: (1925) C. 225.

(6) Gnansamband v. Velu Pandaram, 23 M. 271 P.C.; Manohar v. Bhupendranath, 60 C. 452 (551) F.B.

(7) Jai Bansi v. Chattar Dhari, 5 B.L.R. 181.

(8) Kokilasari v. Rurdanand, 5 C.L.J. 527.

(9) Meenakshi v. Somasundaram, 44 M. 205.

(10) Pramatha v. Pradyumna, 52 C. 809 P.C.; Manohar v. Peary Mohan, 24 C.W.N. 478: 54 I.C. 8.

(11) Act XIV of 1920, S. 3.

office does not follow the ordinary Hindu Law, though its provisions cannot be altogether ignored in the selection of an heir, nor can a line of heirs be created that is repugnant to that law.[1] The plaintiff, who held the office of an archaka for two days in each month, having resigned his office, was succeeded by his mother. On her death, he reclaimed the office, but his claim was resisted on the ground that, by his resignation, he civilly dead, but the court held him entitled, on the ground that, being eligible and alive, the fiction of civil death could not apply to the holder of a religious office.[2]

Where there are several hereditary trustees of a public charitable trust, there is nothing improper in one of them being appointed as managing trustee for certain purposes by the other trustees, though, so far as acts like the institution of suits, etc., are concerned, they must all be parties and must act after mutual consultation. A notice to quit, given by the managing trustee, is valid to determine the tenancy.[3]

Clause (5).

2049. Appointment by Court.—Since a trust cannot fail for want of trustees, the court will appoint a manager on the failure of those entitled to appoint him. Where a shebait is dead, and there is no provision in the deed of endowment about the mode in which the office is to be filled up, the court will not read into the deed of endowment a provision for appointment to the office of shebait which is not to be found therein. It becomes incumbent upon the representatives of the founders to make an appointment to the office of shebait, and upon failure to do so, the court has power to appoint a new trustee and will exercise the power whenever there is a failure of a suitable person to perform the trust, either from original or supervening disability to act. The appointment of a fit and proper person to be a new trustee is, however, not a matter of arbitrary discretion of the court. The appointment must be made subject to well-known and defined rules, stated by Turner, L.J., as follows: (i) The court will pay due regard to the wishes of the author of the trust if known or ascertainable; (ii) the court will not appoint a new trustee with a view to the interest of some of the persons, beneficially interested under the trust, in opposition either to the wishes of the founders or to the interest of other cestuis que trusts; and (iii) the court, in appointing a trustee, will have due regard to the question whether the appointment will promote or impede the execution of the trust, for the very purpose of the appointment is that the trust may be better carried into execution;[4] to which may be added, that, in making an appointment, the court will not fail to pay due regard to usage.[5]

Succession of the Manager.

273. (1) In the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, the succession of the manager is regulated by custom and usage of the endowment.[6]

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provisions, the right of management and control of an endowment vests in the founder and his heirs;[7] but the founder is entitled to nominate

(1) Manohar v. Bhupendra Nath, 60 C. 452 F.B.; A.-G. v. Lal Behari, 61 C. 393 (397, 398); Kandarpa Mohan v. Akshaychandra, Ib., 106, reversing O.A.: 60 C. 706.

(2) Mittevi v. Peduti, 21 M.L.J. 490: 9 I.C. 496.

(3) Angamuthu v. Ramalinga, 39 M.L.J. 685: 60 I.C. 766.

(4) Raj Krishna v. Bepin, 40 C. 251 (258).

(5) Sham Devi v. Ram Nath, 91 I.C. 465: (1925) L. 273.

(6) Goosami Sri Girdharji v. Romanlalji, 17 C. 3 (20) P.C.; Jagadindra v. Hemantha, 32 C. 129 (139) P.C.

(7) Ib., Narayan v. Bhuban Mohini, (1934) C. 244.

his successor;[1] but in so nominating his successor from his heirs he cannot create a line of heirs inconsistent with the law of inheritance.[2]

Illustrations.

(a) A, bequeaths his estate to his family idol and provides that its management shall be regulated by the rule of primogeniture. The provision for management is illegel in that it would create a devolution of property inconsistent with Hindu Law.[3]

(b) A, bequeaths his estate to his family idol and provides that its management shall vest in his eldest son. The provision for management is legal in that the gift to his eldest son is absolute.[4]

2050. Succession to Shebaitship.—The management of a religious foundation may become hereditary in a single family customarily, or under the terms of a foundation or by lapse of time creating in the shebait a right to hereditary office. The question whether such office is precarious or hereditary is a question of fact to be decided in each case. There are many old foundations of which the history of their origin is lost in antiquity; all that is known of them is that they have been managed by a single person who has inherited the management from his predecessor.

All religious endowments are not subject to the same rule, nor indeed are their rules of succession similar. There are those in which time has strengthened the right of the manager to a virtual ownership. There are others in which the manager is no better than a trustee, while there is yet an intermediate class in which the manager still holds the position of the guardian of an infant, possessing even larger powers of appropriating a portion of the income for his own maintenance for which he is not accountable. It cannot be generally asserted that a manager of an endowment is or is not a trustee. It all depends upon the endowment and his association with it.

2051. Succession to Mahantship.—It is now settled that the position of a mahant, in relation to the muth over which he presides, is, speaking generally, that of a trustee and not of an owner,[5] though he possesses larger powers of internal management. But being the trustee, he has no right to appoint a successor, and the question of succession to him must be governed by the particular usage of the institution and, in fact, the general law. If, by the practice and usage of an institution, the mahant is entitled to nominate a successor, by courts will give effect to it.[6] The mahant cannot appoint a successor by will,[7] though he may be authorized by usage to appoint one,[8] but that "usage forms the controlling rule with regard to the right to the office of mahant may now be considered as having been conclusively settled by authority."[9] But while it is so, usage

(1) Gnansambandha v. Velu Pandaram, 23 M. 271 (281, 282) P.C.; Manohar v. Bhupendranath, 60 C. 452 (499, 500) F.B.; Kandrapamohan v. Akshayachandra, 60 C. 706; Administrator-General v. Lalbehari, 61 C. 393; Lal Behari v. Administrator-General, (1935) C. 284.

(2) Ib.

(3) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 P.C. applied in Lal Behari v. Administrator-General, (1935) C. 284; Administrator-General v. Lal Bihari, 61 C. 393; Kandarparmohan v. Akshay Chandra, Ib., p. 106 distinguishing Madhav Rao v. Balabhai, 52 B. 176 P.C.

(4) Ram Parkash v. Anand Das, 43 C. 707 (713, 714, 732) P.C.. explained in Vidyavaruthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831 (838) P.C.; Palaniappa v. Sreenath, 40 M. 709 P.C.; Balusawmy v. Venkatasawmy. 40 M. 745 (749).

(5) Ibid.

(6) Kamini v. Asutosh, 16 C. 103 P. C.

(7) Ram Parkash v. Anand Das, 43 C. 707 (723) P.C.

(8) Saminatha v. Sellappa, 2 M. 175 (179), explained, per Lord Shaw in Ram Parkash v. Anand Das, 43 C. 707 (715) P.C.

(9) Ram Parkash v. Anand Das, 43 C. 707 (715) P.C.; Janaki v. Gopal, 9 C. 766 P.C.; Ganda v. Chatar Puri, 9 A. 1 P.C.; Grudharee v. Nandokishore, 2 Hay generally leans towards the succession of the senior chela as the rightful successor, and where there is no evidence of any usage to the contrary, the court will be justified in presuming such usage to govern the succession.[1] In many muths, the mahant is elected by the sanyasis of the muths of his order and, in the absence of custom and the power of appointment, this should be presumed to be the rule of election.[2]

2052. According to Hindu Law, neither the office of a mahant nor the property of a muth can be the subject of a partition,[3] bargain or huckster. It has been held as proved that the mahant of the muths of the Nanak Shahi Udasi sect possesses the power to nominate his own successor.[4] But in this case, the right of nomination is itself a trust which must be discharged in the interest of the institution. Where, therefore, the mahant makes a nomination of his successor out of selfish or sordid motives and it is not in the interest of the foundation, the court will have no hesitation in declaring the appointment void. Such was the case of the Mahant who had appointed his adversary as successor to quiet him in his own prosecution by him for murder and forgery of a will.[5]

2053. Gossains and Sanyasis.—The orthodox Hindu muths are tenanted by gossavis, sanyasis, bairagis, or asceties of other sects who are drawn from the Hindu society without distinction of caste, every Hindu being competent to enter a religious order. In the case of Dasnami Gossavis or Sanyasis, the initiation is gradual, the disciple being maintained for a year or two as a novitiate to enable him to become acquainted with the customs and usages of the order, after which, on attainment of his age of discretion which according to Hindu Law implies completion of the sixteenth year, he is finally admitted into the order by the ceremony of Biraj Homa in which the guru whispers into his ears the mul mantra or the mystic formulae after which his application to the order becomes irrevocable.[6]

2054. Muths: Their Origin and History.—A considerable portion of endowed property is held by the institutions called muths or monasteries, a term, which, in its original and narrow sense, signified the abode of an ascetic or sanyasi or pardesi.[7] In ancient India, religious learning was imparted by a teacher who drew to himself a number of disciples who lived and learnt with their guru who gave them shelter. These congregations of tutor and students lived the life of a religious family. At times, a number of rishis foregathered in an improvised shelter where they taught their students. These were the prototypes of colleges and monasteries. With the rise of Buddhism, these institutions received a considerable stimulus, born of a new faith with its levelling doctrines and proselytising vigour. Congregations of monks were formed to preach and practise its sublime philosophy. These monasteries offered welcome refuge to those who desired to escape the turmoils and troubles of wordly life. They were

633; Prayal v. Kriparam, 8 C.L.J. 499; Basdeo v. Gharib Das, 13 A. 256; contra in Sellappaswamy v. Manikaswamy, (1911) M.W.N. 359: 11 I.C. 336.

(1) Raja Ram v. Bhata, 38 I.C. 221; Gobinda v. Ram Charan, 52 C. 748; Krishnagiri v. Shridhar, 46 B. 655 (Designated chela succeeds even though his guru died before his formal initiation).

(2) Prayad v. Kriparam, 8 C.L.J. 499 (505), following Madho v. Kamta, 1 A. 539; Ramji v. Lachu, 7 C.W.N. 145.

(3) Gobinda v. Ram Charan, 52 C. 748.

(4) Dharam Dass v. Sadho, 40 I.C. (A.) 177.

(5) Nataraja v. Kailasam, 25 C.W.N. 145 P.C.: 57 I.C. 564, following Ramalingam v. Vythilingam, 16 M. 490 (498) P.C.

(6) Digambar (Mahant) v. Bhirongir, 18 L. 538.

(7) Giyana v. Kandasami, 10 M. 375.

the rendezvous alike of the elite of the faith as of the bereaved and distressed souls from all causes. Whatever tempest may rage without, within their walls there was peace. The rising power of the doctrine of nirvan aroused the Brahman hierophants from their accustomed lethargy. In the eighth century, Shankar, an orthodox Hindu scholar, rose to re-establish the ancient faith. Shankar was an ascetic and inculcated asceticism as the best antidote for the new-fangled creed. Like the Buddhists, he, too, established monasteries and founded the order of sanyasis called aranyas, asramas, vanas, bhartis, parvatas, puris, sagaras, saraswatis; and tirthas, who lived in muths where they took and taught the disciples. The head of these muths was called the mahant or acharya.

Manager's rights and duties.

274. The manager of an endowment, is bound to deal with its property with the same care as a trustee should in charge of a trust property[1] and in particular—

(1) He must carry out the founder's directions, if any, as to the management of the property;[2]

(2) He must maintain the customary usages of the institution;[3]

(3) He is entitled to the possession of all endowed property; and as shebait, he is entitled to the custody of the idol and all its paraphernalia;[4]

(4) He must maintain accounts of the trust and is entitled to an indemnity for anything of his own spent thereon;[5]

(5) And unless he is otherwise provided for, he has a right to use a reasonable portion of its income upon his own maintenance;

(6) He may retain or apply the surplus as may be usual or customary;[6]

(7) He may improve the property out of its surplus;[7]

(8) He is accountable to the founder, and in his absence, his legal representatives;[8]

(9) He is entitled to sue and is liable to be sued on behalf of the trust.

2055. Analogous Law.—All the clauses of this section are drawn from the decided cases. The duties of the manager must depend upon the nature of the endowment. If it is charitable without being religious, the manager has merely to administer the fund in accordance with the wishes of the founder or the general purpose of the foundation. Where, however, the trust is religious, the manager's duties are more artificial, and must conform to the forms and rituals, if any, prescribed or usual in such cases.

---

(1) S. 15, Trusts Act (II of 1882); S. 151, Contract Act; Speight v. Gaunt, L.R. 9 A.C. 1 (4).

(2) Cf. S. 11, Trusts Act.

(3) Vidyapurna v. Vidyanidhi, 27 M. 435 (455); Sankaralinga v. Rajeswara, 12 C.W.N. 940 (951) P.C.

(4) Seshadri v. Ranga, 35 M. 631 (634).

(5) Thackersay v. Harbhum, 8 B. 432 (457).

(6) Gajapati v. Bhagawan, 15 M. 44; Manohar v. Lakhmiram, 12 B. 247 (251, 252), affirmed O.A.; Chotalal v. Manohar, 24 B. 50 P.C.; Jugul Kishore v. Lakshman, 23 B. 659; Rajeshwar v. Gopeshwar, 35 C. 226.

(7) Thackersay v. Harbhum, 8 B. 432 (457).

(8) Ib.

For the rest, his duties are in conformity with the general law,[1] and will now be considered.

The general duty of the manager is to take that reasonable care in the management of the trust which a prudent person, under similar circumstances, would take of his own property.[2]

But though this is the ideal, mismanagement of Hindu endowments by their managers is a by-word of reproach. In a majority of cases the terms of the grant are extremely vague—in other cases, they are not even traceable, while in most cases, they follow a traditional practice. As remarked by West and Buhler: "The idol, deity or the religious object is looked on as a kind of human entity, and the successive officiators in worship as a corporation with rights of enjoyment but not generally of partition or alienation, except so far as this may be necessary to prevent greater injury. Such endowments are frequently founded by gifts and bequests simply to the endowments. No rules have, in a majority of these cases, been formally prescribed. The intention of the foundation has to be gathered from the traditional practice, and the succession is thus determined by the custom of each particular institution, though this may have become embraced in some more extensive custom. And as to the management of an endowment, it is not competent for the holders in one generation to impose rules on those of another. The endowment, once made, cannot be resumed, but performance of the duties may be enforced."[3]

Clause (1).

2056. Founder's Directions.—This clause is in consonance with the general rule enacted in S. 11 of the Trusts Act, which requires the trustee to fulfil the purpose of the trust, and to obey the directions of the author of the trust, given at the time of its creation, except as modified by the beneficiaries competent to contract, provided that where the beneficiaries are incompetent to contract, the directions of the District Judge should be taken, and the trustee is not bound to obey any direction which is impracticable, illegal or manifestly injurious to the beneficiaries. Under S. 43 of the Religious Endowments Act,[4] and S. 34 of the Trusts Act, and, as before stated, under S. 7 of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, it is open to the manager to take the advice of the court on any question respecting the management or administration of the trust property. The trustee is not bound to carry out the details of his instructions, since his position as trustee arms him with a certain discretion in the interest of the trust property. Where, therefore, he has acted erroneously but honestly, according to his best judgment, in the interest of the trust, the court will not too narrowly canvass the matter in which he has overborne his instructions.

Clause (2).

2057. Must Observe Customary Usages.—The manager must observe the customary usages of the foundation. As observed by the Privy Council: "It is the duty of the trustee or manager to maintain the customary usages of the institution, and if he fails to do so, he is.....guilty of a breach of trust, and still more so, if he deliberately attempts to effect a vital change of usage and make it binding on the worshippers, by obtaining a decree of the court

(1) Trusts Act XXVIII of 1867; similar provision exists in 22 & 23 Vict., C. 35, S. 22; Madras Doveton Trust Fund, In re, 18 M. 443.

(2) S. 151, Contract Act; Speight v. Gaunt, L.R. 9 A.C. 1 (100).

(3) W. and B., H.L., 301, 302; cited in Vidyapurna v. Vidyanidhi, 27 M. 435 (449).

(4) XX of 1863.

to establish it."[1] In the case of temples, the endowments, whether in the shape of landed property or tasdik allowances, have to be devoted to the carrying out of the specific purposes connected with the temples, i.e., the daily worship and the periodical ceremonies and festivals, purposes defined and settled by usage and custom and generally recorded in what is known as the 'dittam,' and the dharmkartas are mere trustees for carrying out or the executing of such trusts. In the case of muths, however, such defined and specific purposes, as are immediately connected with the maintenance of the muth as an institution, are in the nature of things very limited, and a large part of the income derived from the endowments of the muth as well as from the money offerings of its disciples and followers—which offerings as a rule are very considerable—is at the disposal of the head of the muth for the time being, which he is expected to spend, at his will and pleasure, on objects of religious charity and in the encouragement and promotion of religious learning. His obligation to devote the surplus income to such religious and charitable objects is one in the nature only of an imperfect or moral obligation resting on his conscience, regulated only by the force of public opinion, and he is in no way, whether as a trustee or otherwise, accountable for it in law.[2]

2058. The customary usages must necessarily differ according to the nature and purpose of the foundation. If it is a temple, the ordinary usage consists in preparing food (called bhog) for the deity, celebrating certain festivals, arranging for fairs[3] and collecting votive offerings. If he neglects to perform his usual and customary duties, or is guilty of malversation or misconduct in the performance of them, the court will restrain him. Such would be the case where the manager refused to perform the usual festivals though he was in funds: a fortiori would he be guilty of such misconduct, if it was usual to celebrate them with the aid of voluntary contributions. "And, of course, the courts are bound to restrain a trustee from injuring the institution under his charge by corruptly, arbitrarily or wantonly departing from the ordinary course of procedure in regard to the essential or important matters connected with the institution. That such departure on the part of a trustee amounts to a breach of legal duty incumbent on him is the ground on which the court exercises jurisdiction over him."[4] The manager must conform to the usage. He cannot alter it. He cannot alter the form of worship[5] or the ceremonies and processions in connection with idols.[6] He cannot, for instance, remove them from the temple, on the ground that it is dilapidated, if it is objected to by a majority of the worshippers.[7] And, of course, in this, as in all other matters, he must be guided by public opinion.

2059. The manager of a public temple cannot make rules preventing from admission of any worshipper thereto for the purposes of worship, though he may levy a small admission fee to prevent over-crowding, or otherwise regulate admission to a particular part owing to the value of the idol and its ornaments.[8] In this and other matters of detail, the manager

(1) Sankaralinga v. Rajeswara, 12 C. W.N. 940 (951) P.C.

(2) Vidyapurna v. Vidyanidhi, 27 M. 435 (455).

(3) Elayalwar v. Namberunmal, 23 M. 298 (304).

(4) Elayalwar v. Namberumal, 23 M. 298 (304); Krishnasami v. Samaram, 30 M. 158.

(5) Venkatarayar v. Srinivasa, 7 M. H.C.R. 32 (36).

(6) Subharaya v. Chellapa, 4 M. 315 (316).

(7) Hari v. Antaji, 44 B. 466.

(8) Shamyarlal Purshottam v. Dakor Temple Committee, 28 Bom.L.R. 309: 94 I.C. 47: (1926) B. 179; contra in Kalidas v. Gor Parjaram, 15 B. 309 (316, 317).

doubtless possesses a power which must be exercised not capriciously but only in good faith on necessary occasions and for necessary and legal purposes, as for preserving orderliness and decency of worship.

2060. Possession of the Endowment.—The manager has the sole right to be in possession of the endowment, the idols, its jewels and other paraphernalia. Where there are several trustees, they are allowed to partition the endowment for convenience of management. And where they have equal right of worship, they are permitted to exercise it by rotation. They may even remove the idol, if it has no local habitation, for the period of their turn, but on condition that they deliver it, at their own expense, to the owner of the next turn. But this is an exception and not the rule, since idols ordinarily gain in sanctity by the reason of their locality, and where they have for long remained in a place, it becomes their abode from which they cannot be removed.

Clause (3).

2061. The right of the manager to superintend the work of all servants employed on the foundation arises from the very nature of his office as manager. He is entitled to punish and dismiss all servants, including the hereditary priest, for misconduct,[1] and unless the dismissal is malicious or mala fide, the civil court has no jurisdiction to review his decision,[2] unless he can shew that there was a trust in his favour.[3] In any case, the fact that the servant was dismissed without notice given or explanation taken is no ground for interference. "The nature of the offence may be such that instant suspension from the functions of the office would be necessary in the interests of the institution, and to hold that the officer could not be suspended without notice and without explanation received from him, might be seriously detrimental to the interests of the temple."[4]

Authority over Servants.

2062. The possession of the manager, being qua trustee, cannot be adverse to the beneficiaries. In determining what right adverse possession would confer on the holder, the animus possidendi is the decisive factor. The character in which possession is held must determine the right which the possession would confer. The fact that the trustee was misappropriating the rents, would not make his possession adverse, though it would make him liable to account for the rents so misappropriated. The plaintiff's father, as trustee, had let certain temple lands to the defendant. The plaintiff sued to recover them. It was proved that the trust had vested in another. The plaintiff had, however, received rents of the land and appropriated them to his own use. He claimed the lands by adverse possession. But the court dismissed his shit, holding that the land belonged to a trust and could not be recovered by the plaintiff who was the trustee, however wrongfully he may have used its rents.[5]

Manager's possession cannot be adverse.

---

(1) Seshadri v. Ranga, 35 M. 631.
(2) Bhavani v. Timmanna, 30 B. 508; contra in Krishnaswamy v. Gomatuni, 4 M.H.C.R. 63; Seshadri v. Ranga, 35 M. 631 (632).
(3) Ram Charan v. Rakhol, 41 C. 19 (34).
(4) Seshadri v. Ranga, 35 M. 631 (634).
(5) Thuppan v. Hichiri, 37 M. 373 (377).

2063. Must Keep Accounts.—The manager must maintain accounts even if he be himself the founder.[1] His failure to keep accounts is a grave misconduct justifying his removal.[2] It is the manager's duty to protect and preserve the endowment, to manage it prudently and to conserve its resources with scrupulous care. It is his duty to take stock of all the dedicated property, and realize bad securities before they are lost.[3] If his predecessor has wrongly alienated any of the properties, it is his duty to recover them before they become irrecoverable, and if, by his fraud, or negligence, any of the properties are lost, he is liable for it.[4] All surplus must be promptly invested in sound securities, otherwise, he will be liable for interest.[5] He may invest in any securities, provided they are of a permanent and not perishable or terminable nature.[6]

Clauses (4), (5), (7), (8).

The manager must not mix the trust accounts with his own, since it leads to confusion. If he contravenes this rule and mixes trust money with his own and the two cannot be separated, the trust will be entitled to the whole.[7]

The manager's salary is, sometimes, fixed, but in many cases he is left to make what he can out of it. In such cases, it is difficult to call him to account, for he is accountable to no one. Such is ordinarily the position of the mahant of a muth.[8] Wherever he is accountable at all, his liability will be determined by the rules here stated.

2064. The destination of the votive offerings made to a shebait depends upon the status and holiness of the recipient and his relationship to the beneficiary. Such offerings made to a mahant[9] or the head of a sect or order to a guru by his disciples or the like, are prima facie intended to be personal presents to them, though charged with the duty of their application to the institution which they represent, but such obligation is merely moral and not legal.[10] They are not accountable for them to the auditor of the institution unless they constitute a part of its sustenance, in which case they would be so accountable. As a rule, votive offerings made on festive and ceremonial occasions by the general body of pilgrims, worshippers or devotees comprise small gifts, the destination of which is determined by usage and rules of the institution. In such case, a trust cannot be presumed in the absence of an intention to create it. But there can be no trust unless its purpose, the trust property and the beneficiaries are so indicated that the trust could be administered by the court if the occasion arose.[11]

Votive offerings.

Apart from much exceptional cases the manager is entitled to receive votive offerings which he must credit in accounts.

(1) Thackersay v. Hurbhum, 8 B. 432 (467).
(2) Manohar v. Lakhmiram, 21 B. 247 (261, 262), affirmed O. A., Chotalal v. Manohar, 24 B. 50 P.C.; Jugal Kishore v. Lakshman Das, 23 B. 659; Rajeswar v. Gopeshwar, 35 C. 226; Srinivasa v. Evalappa, 45 M. 565 (584, 585) P.C.
(3) Thackersay v. Harbhum, 8 B. 432 (465).
(4) Ib.
(5) Rajaram v. Lakshmi, 13 M.L.J. 206.
(6) De Souza v. De Souza, 12 B.H.C. R. 184; Thackersey v. Hurbhum, 8 B. 432 (466).
(7) Oatway Hertslet v. Oatway, (1903) 2 Ch. 356.
(8) Saminatha v. Sellappa, 2 M. 175 (179); Vidyapurna v. Vidyanidhi, 27 M. 435 (449).
(9) Vidyapurna v. Vidyanidhi, 27 M. 435; Kailasam v. Nataraja, 33 M. 265.
(10) Chhotahbai v. Chandra Basak, 57 A. 330 P.C.
(11) Ib., p. 342.

"Where an idol is set up temporarily for worship, or where the offerings are of a perishable nature, such as articles of food, the priest in attendance, as the nearest Brahmin available, generally appropriates the offerings;[1] and the same is the case where the idol itself is the private property of the priest. But where the idol is an ancient one, permanently established for public worship, and the offerings are generally of a more or less permanent character, being coins and other metallic articles, in the absence of any custom or express declaration by the donor to the contrary, they are, as they ought to be, taken to be intended to contribute to the maintenance of the shrine with all its rites, ceremonies and charities, and not to become the personal property of the priest. However much a Hindu votary may wish that his offerings to public shrines should ultimately go to the use of meritorious Brahmins, he can never be supposed to intend, nor does the Hindu Law anywhere allow, that they should become the property of the priest, to be squandered by him or devoted to purposes foreign to the endowment.[2]

Cl. (6). His Improvements.

2065. All acquisitions of the shebait, out of the income of the endowed property, would be treated as accretions to the estate, since it is his duty to apply all such income to the preservation and improvement of the corpus, a fortiori where he has all along treated them as belonging to the idol.[3] Where the shebait is empowered to expend the income from a fund, he is equally entitled to expend the income derived from such fund and its accumulation.[4]

Clause (7).

2066. His Accountability to the Founder.—The manager's accountability to the founder has already been the subject of discussion under a previous section (S. 272), and within the limits set out in the sequel he is equally accountable to the beneficiaries (S. 281).

Clause (8).

2067. His Right of Suit.—The manager is entitled to sue on behalf of the endowment as its guardian or next friend, and he may be sued as such.[5] In some cases, the manager is held entitled to sue and be sued in his own name, without the idol being joined as the party interested.[6] This procedure is at variance with the general principles but is said to be supported by practice. But there seems nothing to commend it. In the case of a private religious trust, in which the public are not interested and the shebaits' own conduct is in dispute, it is for the court to appoint a disinterested next friend to sue and conduct the suit.[7]

---

(1) Gangadhar v. Doraisami, (1937) M.W.N. 975.

(2) Banerjee, J., in Girijanund v. Sailajanund, 23 C. 645 (655, 656), following Manohar v. Lakhmiram, 12 B. 247. To the same effect, Ganpatrav v. Ramadhin Das, (1874) B.P.J. 258; Ganpatrao v. Anopram, (1879) B.P.J. 361; Chotalal v. Manohar, 24 B. 50 P.C.

(3) Kartick Chandra v. Rudra Nandagir, 25 C.W.N. 908.

(4) Cf. Gnanendra v. Surendra, 24 C.W.N. 1026 P.C.

(5) Jodhi Ram v. Basdeo, 33 A. 735 (737) F.B., overruling contra in Raganathji v. Shah Lal, 19 A. 530.

(6) Juggodumba v. Puddomoney, 15 B.L.R. 318 (330), followed in Babajirao v. Laxman Das, 23 B. 215 (223); Pramada v. Poorna Chandra, 35 C. 691 (698); Dinabhandu v. Chamiruddi, 34 I. C. (A). 548.

(7) Hanhayalal v. Hamid Ali, 8 L. 357 P.C.; Sharatchandra v. Dwarkanath, 58 C. 619, following Pramatha Nath v. Pradyumna, 52 C. 809.

Since an idol is a juristic person perpetually in minority, the manager suing for an idol is entitled to the extension allowed by S. 6 (old S. 7) of the Limitation Act.[1]

2068. Persons interested as worshippers in a public religious endowment may be added as parties to a suit instituted by a trustee on behalf of the endowment against third parties, if such joinder is considered by the court as desirable in the interests of the trust.[2] Such an occasion was held to arise where the worshippers complained of a breach of trust by the manager, who had colluded with the other side to the prejudice of their right of worship.[3] As S. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure deals only with immovable property, the court may declare the possession of a temple, but can pass no order as to the offerings[4] or of the right to act as priest.[5]

2069. Decree Against Manager Binds the Trust.—From the fact the manager represents the trust in all suits affecting its interest, it follows that a compromise made,[6] and decrees fairly obtained by or against the manager as representative of the trust, equally bind both his successor and the trust. But before applying the principle of res judicata to such judgments, the court should be satisfied that the judgments relied upon are untainted by fraud or collusion, and that the necessary and proper issues have been raised, tried and decided in the suits which led to them, and the execution of such judgments should be decreed only against the rents and profits of the debutter property.[7] But this is not an invariable rule, since, if the rents and profits are inadequate to satisfy the decree, the corpus itself may be seized and sold.[8] Consequently, it is open to the creditor advancing money for the trust to obtain a decree not only personally against the trustee but also one charging the trust funds, for which purpose the court may permit even an amendment of the plaint.[9]

The trust estate is liable for a tort committed by its trustee in the reasonable management of the trust.[10]

2070. Manager's Personal Liability.—The fact that a person is the manager of a trust does not suspend his civil rights. He is able to contract in his own name and on his own credit, and a decree obtained against him on his personal contract or security does not affect the trust,[11] which is only liable for a debt contracted by him on its behalf and for a decree passed against him as its representative.[12]

2071. Manager's Remuneration.—The manager of a religious institution is ordinarily paid or permitted to use a part of its income for his

(1) Jagadindra v. Hemanta, 32 C. 129 P.C.; Sankamurti v. Chidambara, 17 M. 143.

(2) Jeyangaruluvaru v. Sri Hati, 4 M. H.C.R. 9; Narayanasami v. Irulappa, 12 M.L.J. 355; Chidambaram v. Rangachariar, 29 M. 106 (110).

(3) Sankaralinga v. Rajeswara, 31 M. 236 (250) P.C.

(4) Ram Saram v. Raghu Nandan, 38 C. 387; Kader v. Kader, 29 M. 237.

(5) Gwiram v. Lal Behari, 37 C. 578.

(6) Pammayah v. Kandasamy, 12 M. L.W. 562: 60 I.C. 22.

(7) Golab v. Prosonno, 11 B.L.R. 332, affirmed O.A.; Prosonno v. Golab, 14 B. L.R. 450 P.C.

(8) Pramada v. Poorna, 35 C. 691.

(9) Laxmindrathirtha v. Raghavendra, 43 M. 795; Sundaresan v. Viswanada, 45 M. 703.

(10) Raybould v. Turner, (1900) 1 Ch. 199; Pramada v. Poorna, 35 C. 691 (699).

(11) Bishen Chand v. Nadir, 15 C. 329 P.C.; Peary Mohan v. Narendra, 5 C.W.N. 273; Ram Krishna v. Padama Charan, 6 C.W.N. 663; Babai Rao v. Luxman Das, 28 B. 215.

(12) Palaniappa v. Devasikamony, 40 M. 709; Anantkrishna v. Prayag Das, I.L.R. (1937) C. 84.

own sustenance. In the case of the mahant of a muth, in Southern India, he is virtually given a free hand over its disposal, though his power in this matter is to a large extent regulated by usage. It has already been seen that all managers, though possessing the like, do not necessarily possess the same powers. In this respect the mahant stands at the head of them while a dharmkarta is an ordinary trustee, and has, indeed, no larger powers.[1]

Right of Reimbursement.

2072. The manager is entitled to be reimbursed the proper[2] expense which he has incurred in carrying out the directions of the testator, or otherwise on objects of necessity. The right of indemnity is incident to the position of a trustee. The liability in respect of that indemnity is the first charge on the trust estate. So, where one Bejay succeeded to his father as shebait of a religious trust and his right was contested by one Peary who obstructed Bejay's possession, with the result that its income, calculated at Rs. 10,000 a year, fell to less than a moiety. Bejay defended his title and spent Rs. 71,572 out of his private funds in protecting the debutter estate and performing his obligations as shebait. It was held that the estate was liable to indemnify Bejay for the amount spent by him in defending his own title as shebait and in protecting the estate and carrying out the directions of the founder's will.[3]

Shebait's Rights.

275. (1) In the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, the right of a shebait to the management of an endowment extends to a right of property therein, which is enjoyable, as such, and alienable consistently with his duties as such shebait:[4]

(2) Provided, however, he is a trustee within the scope of section 10 of the Limitation Act, and any property comprised in an endowment "shall be deemed to be property vested in trust for a specific purpose".[5]

(3) As such, he is disqualified from implementing his rights by prescription or any mode of adverse possession.[6]

2073.—Analogous Law.—It was held by the Privy Council in a case,[7] decided before the amendment of section 10 of the Limitation Act, that a shebait or a manager, in possession of an endowment does not hold it as a trustee in the English sense of the term, in which sense, that word was used in that section, with the result that an adverse possession against a shebait became adverse to the endowment, and that a trespasser could prescribe for a title against the endowment by twelve years' adverse possession against the shebait. To this extent that case of the Privy Council and other cases of the same Board that followed it have been

(1) Srinivasa v. Evalappa, 45 M. 565 P.C.

(2) Panchakshari v. Venkat Ratnam, 58 M. 160 (costs of an infructuous second appeal excluded) see S. 2092.

(3) Peary v. Narendra, 37 C. 229 (234, 235) P.C.

(4) Manohar v. Bhupendranath, 60 C. 452 (494, 495) F.B.

(5) S. 10, Lim. Act (Amended by Act I of 1929) which came in force on 1st January, 1929 overruling, Vidya Varuthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831 P.C.; Annamalai v. Muthukaruppan, 8 R. 645 P.C.; Chhatra Kumari v. Mohan Bikram Shah, 10 Pat. 851 P.C.

(6) Manickammal v. Murugappa, (1935) M. 483 (485).

(7) Vidya Varuthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831 P.C.

superseded by an amendment of the Limitation Act by an Act[1] that came into force on 1st January, 1929.

2074. To that effect these cases have ceased to be good law. But the fact remains, and has been reiterated, that the term trust, as used to describe a religious and charitable trust in this country, has not the same meaning as trust in the English sense enacted in other Acts of the Legislature, e.g., the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, 1920,[2] and other Acts[3] in which that term is used. Under English Law, and in the Acts last referred to, that word postulates the existence of legal and equitable rights foreign to the Hindu Law of endowments. An illustration would make the distinction clear. Suppose A, the owner of property entrusts his property to B for the benefit of C. Here certain rights and liabilities in the three persons still remain. But if in such a case, B is the shebait and C is the idol, the rights of the three are quite different; though for certain purposes and certain purposes only, B would be treated as a trustee as has been explained in the section.

Rights and duties of Joint Managers.

276. (1) In the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, where an endowment is in charge of two or more managers, unless they agree to act in rotation, they must act jointly or divide their duties for facility of management[4] but they remain severally liable for any default in their duties.[5]

(2) The managers may delegate their authority to another, but the person so appointed acts under the manager, and is liable to him for his acts of commission and omission.

2075. Analogous Law.—The rule abated in the two clauses is narrowed than that enacted in Ss. 44 and 27 of the Trusts Act. Where the management vests in more than one person jointly, they must all act jointly and are entitled to joint possession and management, though they may not all agree amongst themselves, in which case, the person aggrieved must have recourse to a suit for settling a scheme of management.[6] Where the management is entrusted to several persons, some of whom died, the survivors are entitled to manage an endowment and, as such, entitled to restrain by an injunction any one disturbing their possession. Where, therefore, the managers appointed one M to collect rent, and some of the managers died, whereupon one V, the chela of M, refused to account to the survivors for rent, the court restrained him from realizing the rents in future.[7]

2076. It is competent for co-trustees to settle a scheme of management by each of the co-trustees in rotation, at any rate, where no emoluments are attached and the office is an hereditary one. Where emoluments are attached and the office is hereditary, the emoluments will be subject to partition, in the strict sense of the term, like any other family property.

---

(1) Act I of 1929.
(2) Act XIV of 1920.
(3) E.g., The Religious Endowment Act, (XX of 1863); Trusts Act (II of 1882); Charitable Endowments Act (VI of 1890); Indian Trustees Act (XXVII of 1866); The Trustees and Mortgagees Powers Act (XXVIII of 1866).
(4) Ramanathan v. Murugappa, 29 M. 283 (289) P.C.
(5) S. 27, Trusts Act (II of 1882).
(6) Meenakshi v. Somasundaram, 44 M. 205.
(7) Karam Singh v. Bir Singh, 2 L. 252.

But whatever may be the number of co-trustees, the office is a joint one, and the co-trustees all form, as it were, but one collective trustee, and, therefore, must execute the duties of the office in their joint capacity.[1] The manager of a temple fills a double role. "As regards the property, the manager is in the position of a trustee. But as regards the service of the temple and the duties that appertain to it, he is rather in the position of the holder of an office or dignity which may have been originally conferred on a single individual, but which, in course of time, has become vested, by descent, in more than one person. In such a case, in order to avoid confusion or an unseemly scramble, it is not unusual, and it is certainly not improper, for the parties interested, to arrange, among themselves, for the due execution of the functions belonging to the office, in turn or in some settled order and sequence. There is no breach of trust in such arrangement nor any improper delegation of the duties of a trustee."[2]

2077. Such arrangement, however, creates no right, but is supported on the ground of convenience, and may be, at any time, revoked by all the co-trustees,[3] though it could not be varied or revoked by any one of them as inconvenient to himself. Any co-trustee may enforce the agreement against any one obstructing him in his right.[4] A decision by the majority is binding on the minority when it is arrived at, after full opportunity given for mutual discussion, by all the members in which the minority had an opportunity to record their dissent.[5]

In the case of private or family idols, which have no local habitation, such as a temple, it is open to the co-trustee to remove them to another house for the period of his turn,[6] but he must return them, at his own expense, to the next turn owner.

Managers' power of alienation.

277. (1) In the absence of any custom or usage to the contrary, the manager's power of alienation of property comprised in an endowment is akin to that possessed by the guardian of a minor's estate, that is to say, he may incur debts, charge or alienate the corpus of an endowment, if justified by legal necessity or its benefit.[7]

(2) An alienation of such property, made by its manager for a purpose other than legal necessity or benefit is not valid beyond the term of the manager's office,[8] or his death,[9] nor can such alienation, if consented to by his successor, inure beyond his own term.[10]

---

(1) Ramanathan v. Murugappa, 27 M. 192 (199).

(2) Ramanathan v. Murugappa, 29 M. 283 (289) P.C.

(3) Narayanasami v. Kumaraswami, 7 M.H.C.R. 267 (270).

(4) Ramessur v. Ishan Chunder, 10 W. R. 457; Gour Mohan v. Madan Mohan, 15 W.R. 29 (30).

(5) Teramath v. Lakshmi, 6 M. 270; Thattan v. Mangalath, 34 M. 406.

(6) Dwarkanath v. Janobee, 4 W.R. 79 (80); Ram Soondur v. Taruck Chunder, 19 W.R. 28.

(7) Prosonno v. Golab, 14 B.L.R. 450 (458) P.C.; followed in Vidya Varuthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831 (852, 853) P.C.; Palaniappa v. Sreenath, 40 M. 709 P.C.; Ananda v. Bhoju Lal, 50 C. 292; Dayamaji v. Sankar, 42 C.L.J. 30: 87 I.C. 159; Pethu Lal v. Dayamind, 44 A. 721.

(8) Ramdhan v. Parbati, 16 Pat. 476: (1937) Pat. 519 (Shebait not bound by his predecessor's alienation without legal necessity).

(9) Prosunno Kumari v. Gulab Chand, 23 W.R. 253 P.C.; Naina Pillai v. Ramnathan, 47 M. 337 (352) P.C.; Ponnambala v. Periyanan, 59 M. 809 (818) P.C.; Ramdhan v. Parbati, 16 Pat. 476. Naurangi Lal v. Ram Charan, 9 Pat. 885.

(10) Vidya Varuthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831 P.C.; Ramdhan v. Parbati, 16 Pat. 476.

(3) No person can, by adverse possession,[1] estoppel[2] against the manager or compromise with him[3] obtain any larger rights against the debutter estate.

(4) In an improper alienation of such property by the manager adverse possession against the endowment would, ordinarily, commence only on the manager's relinquishment of office or his death.[4]

(5) Provided that the possession of the auction-purchaser of the endowment in execution of a decree passed against it is adverse thereto as from the date of his purchase.[5]

Explanation.—The term "manager" in this section includes any person actually filling that character whatever may be his designation or the defect in his appointment.[6]

2078. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by case-law. The general rule here formulated is in accord with the statement of law of the Privy Council, who, speaking of the powers of the manager and head of the family, said: "The principle in regard to this is analogous to that of the power vested in the head of a religious endowment or muth, or of the guardian of an infant family."[7] This was laid down as far back as 1875, when the same Board said: "The authority of the shebait of an idol's estate would appear to be in this respect analogous to that of the manager of an infant heir which was thus defined in a judgment of this Committee, delivered by Lord Justice Knight Bruce: 'The power of the manager of an infant heir to charge an estate, not his own, is, under Hindu Law, a limited and qualified power. It can only be exercised rightly in case of need or for the benefit of the estate. But where, in the particular instance, the charge is one that a prudent owner would make in order to benefit the estate, the bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted, or the benefit to be conferred upon it, in the particular instance, is the thing to be regarded. But, of course, if that danger arises or has arisen from any misconduct to which the lender is or has been a party, he cannot take advantage of his own wrong to support a charge in his own favour against the heir, grounded on a necessity which his own wrong has helped to cause. Therefore, the lender, in this case, unless he is shown to have acted mala fide, will not be affected, though it be shown that, with better management, the estate might have been kept free from debt.."[8]

"It is only in an ideal sense that property can be said to belong to an idol, and the possession and management of it must, in the nature of things, be entrusted to some person as shebait or manager. It would seem

---

(1) Ram Charan v. Naurangi Lal, 12 Pat. 251 (260) P.C.

(2) Nandalal v. Kumar Arun Chandra, (1935) 41 C.W.N. 465; Naina Pillai v. Ramnathan, 47 M. 337 (353) P.C.; Ponnambala v. Periyanun, 59 M. 809 (818, 819) P.C.

(3) Ramdhan v. Parbati, 16 Pat. 476 (481, 483) distinguishing Niladri v. Chaturbhuj, 6 Pat. 139 P.C.; Prosunno Kumari v. Golab Chund, 23 W.R. 253 P.C.; Mahadeo v. Karia, 57 A. 159 (165, 166) P.C.

(4) R. D. Cromartie v. Radha Damodar, (1935) 62 C.L.J. 10. Art. 134-B, Limitation Act. (See S. 278.)

(5) Subbaiya v. Mhd. Mustapha, 46 M. 751 (756) P.C.; Ponnambala v. Periyanun, 59 M. 809 (820, 821) P.C.

(6) Nanda Lal v. Kumar Arun Chandra, 41 C.W.N. 464.

(7) Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 39 A. 437 (443) P.C.; Magniram v. Kasturbhai, 26 C.W.N. 473 P.C.

(8) Hunooman Persaud v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (423).

to follow that the person so interested must of necessity be empowered to do whatever may be required for the service of the idol, and for the benefit and preservation of its property, at least to as great a degree as the manager of an infant heir. If this were not so, the estate of the idol might be destroyed or wasted, and its worship discontinued for want of the necessary funds to preserve and maintain them."[1]

2079. Referring to this case, their Lordships, in another case said; that the position of a shebait was analogous to that of a manager of an infant, and that he had the same authority, which in both cases arises from the necessity of the case, to raise money for the benefit of the estate.[2] In some cases, the shebait is likened to a Hindu widow.[3] In another case of the Calcutta High Court, it was said: "The powers and duties of a shebait may now be taken as almost settled. Apart from his duties in connection with the worship and service of the idol, a shebait has the possession and management of the properties. In other words, his possession is that of a manager, and he is not only empowered, but bound to do, whatever is necessary for the benefit or preservation of its properties. The liability of the estate of an idol, for wrongs committed by its shebait in the reasonable management of its properties, is analogous to the liability of a corporation for wrongs committed by its agent in the course of their employment and in the apparent furtherance of its purpose,[4] and in both cases it is founded on the policy of law and without regard to personal default, for both the idol and the corporation are incapable of personal wrong doing. Neither can be invested with rights or duties, except through natural persons who are their agents."[5]

These powers may, it is said, be exercised even by a de facto manager.[6] But a person entrusted with the duty of a shebait cannot delegate his function to another.[7]

2080. Power of Transfer.—Property devoted to religious uses is, as a rule, inalienable,[8] and it is open to the founder to make it alienable.[9] In such cases, the debts of the institution can only be paid by attaching its income and in any case whatever the nature of the property or the necessity it is only the temporalities and not the sacred object or the spiritual rights and duties of the shebait, that can, at any time, be the subject of alienation.[10] The manager is then a trustee,[11] using that term only in the general sense, and possesses the power to sell, mortgage or let all

---

(1) Prosunno v. Golab, 14 B.L.R. 450 (458, 459) P.C., followed in Sheo Shanker v. Ram Shewak, 24 C. 77 P.C.; Hossein v. Mahanta, 34 C. 249 (255); Abhiram v. Shyamcharan, 36 C. 1003 P.C.; Parsotam v. Dat Gir, 25 A. 296 (304, 311) (Powers those of a widow); Juggessur v. Rodro, 12 W.R. 299 (301).

(2) Doorganath v. Ramchunder, 2 C. 341 (352) P.C.

(3) Juggeshur v. Rodro Narain, 12 W. R. 299.

(4) Mersy & Co., Trustees v. Gibbs, L.R. 1 H.L. 93; Taff Vale Railway v. Amalgamated Society, (1901) A.C. 426.

(5) Pramada v. Poorna, 35 C. 691 (699).

(6) Sheo Shankar v. Ram Shewak, 24 C. 77 (82); contra in Ramdas v. Mohesur, 7 W.R. 446.

(7) Bonnerji v. Sitanath, 26 C.W.N. 236: 66 I.C. 140 P.C.

(8) Prosonno v. Golab, 14 B.L.R. 450 (458) P.C., followed in Vidya Varuthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831 (852) P.C.

(9) Tejo Bibi v. Murlidhar, 48 A. 671.

(10) Nagendra v. Rabindra, 53 C. 132 (149, 156); Rajah Vurmah v. Ravi Vurmah, 1 M. 235 P.C.; Gnanasambanda v. Velu, 23 M. 271 P.C.

(11) Srinivasa v. Evappa, 45 M. 565 (582) P.C.

or any portion of the endowed property in case of necessity[1] or benefit of the trust. He must not, however, alienate the corpus, if the necessity can be met by borrowing or an alienation of the rents and profits.[2] Even such property may be settled on a permanent lease such as mirasi, putni and mokurari grant.[3] Such a lease was granted by the shebait for the completion of a temple, which the Privy Council upheld with these words: "Here, can it be said the grant of a mokurari patta was an improvident way of raising money, if it were necessary to do it at all? It still left a rent for the sustentation of the idol; and if the transaction be bona fide, any subsequent sale of part of the rent was justified by the imperious necessity of finishing the temple which had been commenced."[4] But apart from legal necessity or benefit, a shebait has no authority to lease debutter property even to a co-shebait.[5] A permanent lease, unsupported by unavoidable necessity cannot be granted by the shebait who, as a manager can, at the most, grant a lease to enure for his own lifetime.[6] A permanent lease, unsupported by unavoidable necessity, would, on the most favourable construction, enure only for the lifetime of the grantor.[7]

But there is nothing to prevent a shebait from transferring debutter land to another member of his family for the purpose of continuing the worship of the idol.[8]

2081. In one case, it was held that the profits of a debutter may be assigned so long as the worship is duly kept up.[9] But the profits of an endowment are as much debutter property as the corpus, and the same rule applies to both. As the Privy Council observed: "The taluq itself, with which these jamas were connected by tenure, was dedicated to the religious services of the idol. The rents constituted, therefore, in legal contemplation, its property. The shebait had not the legal property, but only the title of manager of a religious endowment."[10] The power to transfer is, of course, an incident of the office. Where, therefore, the manager is suspended or removed from office, or is merely a disputed claimant to office,[11] he cannot transfer any of the debutter land, even for a justifiable necessity, though, if the creditor was a bona fide transferee without notice, he would be necessarily protected.[12]

2082. The question what remedy the creditor has personally against the manager, on failure of the security, is one which cannot be answered without reference to the facts of each case, since the personal liability of

---

(1) Abhiram v. Shyamcharan, 36 C. 1003 P.C.; Naina Pillai v. Ramanathan, 47 M. 337 P.C.; Parsotam v. Dat Gir, 25 A. 296; Trimbak v. Lakshman, 20 B. 495; Nritya Gopal v. Mani Chandra, 12 C.W.N. 63; Devasigamani v. Palaniappa, 34 M. 535; Vira v. Valappil, (1914) M.W.N. 909: 26 I.C. 239.

(2) Vira v. Valappil, 16 M.L.J. 503: 26 I.C. 239; Devasigamani v. Palaniappa, 34 M. 535.

(3) Ramachandra v. Kasinath, 19 B. 271; Doorganath v. Ramchander, 2 C. 341 (352) P.C.; contra in Motee Dass v. Modhoosoodun, 1 W.R. 4.

(4) Doorganath v. Ramchunder, 2 C. 341 (352, 353) P.C.

(5) Prosunno Kumar v. Baroda Prosunno, 22 C. 989.

(6) Doorganath v. Ramchander, 2 C. 341 P.C., followed in Abhiram v. Shyamacharan, 36 C. 1003 P.C.; Ponnambala v. Periyanan, (1936) P.C. 183; Ramcharan Das v. Naurangi Lal, 12 Pat. 251 P.C.

(7) Ravji v. Vasudeo, (1887) B. P.J. 5; Papaya v. Ramana, 7 M. 85.

(8) Baroda v. Hemdata, 13 C.W.N. 242.

(9) Shibbessuree v. Beckwille, 3 W. R. 152.

(10) Shibessure v. Mothooranath, 13 M.I.A. 270 (273).

(11) Madho v. Ramratan, 15 C.W.N. 838 P.C.: 11 I.C. 507.

(12) Kasin v. Sudhindra, 18 M. 359.

the debtor must largely depend upon the representation, express and implied, that induced the loan. Prima facie the swami of a malli has no private property and must be assumed to be pledging the credit of the malli when he borrows money for its purpose. Consequently, the personal liability of the shebait in such a case is out of question, and the malli, would be liable if the loan is shown to have been contracted for the benefit of the malli, or that the creditor had bona fide reason to suppose it was intended for such purpose.[1] But in any other case, where the manager has means of his own, he is bound by his contract, though the security he had offered failed.[2] But a debt so binding by estoppel cannot be recovered from his successors in the trust, though it might be available against his personal representatives.[3]

2083. Legal Necessity.—The legal necessity or benefit justifying alienation of the debutter property must naturally be adapted to the special requirements of the endowment and measured by the existing necessity justifying it. Besides the ordinary work of necessary reconstruction, completion or repairs of the buildings constituting or comprised in the endowment,[4] including those used for dwelling by the mahant[5] or other employees of the endowment, there are heads of expenditure which are equally necessary, such as the cost of restoration of the image,[6] the cost of litigation connected with the trust, defense of its title against hostile attack,[7] and the observance of customary practices, such as the performance of the puja or worship with due ceremonies,[8] the distribution of cloth at a festival,[9] the constant burning of a lamp where so required,[10] and the like.

2084. In judging of necessity, the first question is: What is the character of the institution and what objects was the income derived therefrom to be devoted to? The question of necessity cannot be decided upon the analogy of other institutions.[11] Where no deed of endowment is forthcoming, the rules, according to which property and its income are to be dealt with in order to carry out the intention of the original endower, can only be ascertained by inference from the practice proved by evidence to have been followed in the particular case. But these rules, so to be inferred, must not be inconsistent with or repugnant to the very nature and purpose of the endowment. If, for instance, the worship of the idol in the temple be intended to be perpetual, as it could hardly fail to be, then the preservation and use of the dedicated property, to support and maintain that worship, must be assumed to have been similarly intended to be perpetual. A rule, therefore, which would authorize and empower the shebait

(1) Shankar v. Venkapa, 29 B. 422 (425); Krishnan v. Sankara, 9 M. 441 (444); Lakshmindra v. Raghavendra, 43 M. 795.

(2) Krishnan v. Sankara, 9 M. 441 (444), following Elkington's case, L.R. 2 Ch. 511; Bridger's case, L.R. 9 Eq. 75.

(3) Ganesh v. Keshav, 15 B. 625 (637).

(4) Doorganath v. Ramchunder, 2 C. 341 P.C.; Tahboonissa v. Sham Kishore, 15 W.R. 228; Collector v. Hari, 9 B. 546.

(5) Kumud v. Tripura, 60 I.C. (C.) 464.

(6) Tahboonissa v. Sham Kishore, 15 W.R. 228.

(7) Jagarnath v. Bibi, 13 I.C. 85; Parsotam v. Dat Gir, 25 A. 296; Vidyapurna v. Vidyanidhi, 27 M. 435; Peary Mohun v. Narendra, 37 C. 229 (234) P. C., following Walters v. Woodbridge, 7 Ch.D. 504.

(8) Pandara v. Karutha, 21 M.L.J. 129: 9 I.C. 150.

(9) Samantha v. Sellappa, 2 M. 175.

(10) Collector v. Hari, 6 B. 546 (549).

(11) Dost Mohomed v. Nazir Ali, 6 M. L.W. 134: 42 I.C. 474; Ramanadhan v. Vava, 40 M. 116 P.C.

of such temple, arbitrarily, and at his own mere will and pleasure, to alienate the dedicated property, either piecemeal or en bloc, would be so repugnant to the whole purpose and object of the endowment that it could not be rationally held to embody the intention of the original founder. A shebait is not justified in selling debutter land solely for the purpose of raising capital to embark in money-lending business, however lucrative that business may be. He is not entitled to sell debutter land solely for the purpose of so investing the purchase of it as to bring in an income larger than that derived from the probably safer and certainly more stable property, the debutter land itself.[1]

2085. A shebait is entitled to mortgage the endowed property, to prevent its forfeiture or sale for non-payment of land revenue or other paramount charge.[2] So, again, where title to the "gaddi" was in dispute, expenses incurred in defending it, were held chargeable on the endowment.[3]

Though the head of a muth possesses larger powers of disposition over its income, he has no larger authority to alienate the corpus than the head of any other religious institution.[4]

2086. The term "necessity" implies pressure. There may be a debt, a legal debt chargeable on the trust, and yet no pressure. The manager cannot forecast wants and incumber the property, which might otherwise have never been lost. So, where there was a decree against a muth, but no attachment, the court held a bond executed by the manager as supported by no necessity, adding: "It was given in respect of antecedent transactions, and there was no necessity for Sheocharan giving such a bond. There was no danger to the estate which the money was advanced for the sake of averting. The plaintiff might have sought any remedy which he had against the muth: but it does not appear that any proceedings were taken for sequestration or attachment of the property; and there was not, therefore, any necessity for giving this bond and thus really giving a fresh right of suit, when, as regards at least a portion of the claim, a suit for it would have been barred by the law of limitation."[5]

2087. Benefit.—Benefit; as distinguished from necessity; is a distinct and recognized head of expenditure permitted by law. As stated before, it was at one time classed under the head of necessity from which it is, however, clearly distinguishable (Ss. 116-119). The term has already been generally defined (Ss. 112, 114), and its application with reference to cases arising in connection with religious and charitable endowments is all that calls for notice here.

What is benefit to an endowment must necessarily depend upon the nature and character of the endowment. The manager is, at all times, entitled to observe the customary usage of an institution. As such the head of a muth was held entitled to borrow money for the purpose of celebrating a festival, even though it lasted for a period of two years

---

(1) Palaniappa v. Sreenath, 40 M. 709 P.C.

(2) Parsotam v. Dat Gir, 25 A. 296 (311, 312); Palaniappa v. Sreenath, 40 M. 709 P.C.

(3) Parsotam v. Dat Gir, 25 A. 296 (311, 312) but so not the costs of an infructuous second appeal.

(4) Pandara v. Karutha, 21 M.L.J. 129: 9 I.C. 150; Gobinda v. Ram Charan, 29 C.W.N. 931: (1925) C. 1107.

(5) Ramchurn v. Nunhoo, 14 W.R. 147.

and entailed on the muth the liability of feeding as many Brahmins as attend it.[1] As compared to this, the reconstruction of a dining hall, which had fallen into disrepair and which the Government had ordered to be put in repair, is clearly justified by necessity.[2] So would be his other acts of ordinary management, though there is a clear distinction between acts that are necessary and those that are merely beneficial. For instance, the construction of a dharamshala, to accommodate pilgrims visiting a shrine, may be a "benefit" to the shrine, though it would not justify its mortgage. On the other hand, its mortgage to secure the repayment of money borrowed and applied to prevent its own extinction by sequestration would be a distinct benefit.[3] But the grant of a perpetual lease to fill up a tank on the property, which the shebait could not afford to do, is not such a benefit as would justify alienation of the trust property.[4]

2088. Partition.—As endowment is, sometimes, used in a dual sense as signifying the property dedicated to an object as also the object itself. Closely connected with the subject of endowment is that of the offices held by those entrusted with its management. A religious endowment would thus comprise (i) the property, (ii) the sacred object and (iii) the persons charged with the management of (a) the property and (b) the object. As regards the object[5] and the sacred office, they are ordinarily both impartible, though, in a family partition, even idols are known to have been thrown into the hotchpot, and as regards religious offices, though they are, strictly speaking, indivisible, still modern custom has sanctioned a departure by permitting their partition by allowing the persons entitled to a share to officiate by turns,[6] but such partition is only allowed when (a) it is in accordance with the wishes and intentions of the founder of the endowment, or (b) is justified by the usage or practice in the family.[7] A sacred institution is not partible merely because its branches are scattered and their partition would facilitate management. So where a math had several asthals or branches their separation by partition was held to be improper, unless justified by special circumstances.[8]

2089. Exchange.—The manager's right to effect an exchange of the dedicated property is, of course, to be tested by the same touchstone of necessity. If the property had deteriorated in value, owing to the deposit of sand or other deleterious material or by the shifting course of a stream, an exchange would be prima facie justifiable. So, again, it may be justified by more economic management, as where an outlying village is given away in exchange for another village more conveniently situated. The question, in such case, is not why there was an exchange, but whether it was necessary and conducive to the good of the endowment.

2090. Lease.—In the first place, whatever powers the manager may possess to grant leases, they are personal to him as manager, and cannot be delegated by him to an agent.[9] His power to grant permanent leases must

(1) Vibhudapriya v. Lakshmindra, 50 M. 497 P.C.
(2) Ib.
(3) Palaniappa v. Sreenath, 40 M. 709 P.C.
(4) Inananjan v. Adormoney, 13 C.W.N. 805: 3 I.C. 92.
(5) Pramath Nath v. Prdyumna, 52 C. 809 (821) P.C.
(6) Trimbak v. Lakshman, 20 B. 495; Rajesmar v. Goppessur, 34 C. 828.
(7) Rajeswar v. Gopessur, 34 C. 828; Ramkumar v. Jogender, 4 C. 56; Mancharan v. Pran Shanker, 6 B. 298.
(8) Ramcharan v. Govinda, 56 C. 894 (901) P.C. (observed that their remarks were merely obiter).
(9) Bonnerji, v. Sita Nath, 26 C.W.N. 236 (241) P.C.; Kotasseri v. Kanholi, (1922) M.W.N. 428.

be measured by the same rule of necessity or benefit to the estate. Ordinarily, he has no power to grant permanent leases of endowed property, at a fixed rent, which is little distinguishable from a permanent alienation.[1]

A permanent tenancy created without necessity can only last during the grantor's lifetime. But if it is continued by his successor, the possession of the lessee does not become adverse to him so as to deprive the latter of his right of ejectment.[2] There is no presumption that the lease of debutter property is permanent, though the rent was fixed. The presumption in favour of a permanent tenancy implies that there is ground for inferring that the tenure was always intended to be, and always was hereditary, or that it acquired that character by subsequent grant. But a presumption in favour of a transaction assumes its regularity; it cannot be made in favour of that which offends a legal principle.[3]

2091. The fact that the lessee is itself a charitable institution does not validate an otherwise invalid lease. So, it is immaterial that the site leased was a house site and yielded no rent and had been let at an unvarying rent on a fixed premium.[4] One manager cannot validate an invalid lease granted by his predecessor, and the legality of such ratification may be challenged by a presumptive reversioner.[5]

A long lease for 40 years by a manager about to vacate office is open to the same objection as a permanent lease.[6]

A lease treated as permanent and acquiesced in by successive trustees cannot, however, be determined by notice.[7] But if one manager grants an invalid lease and his successer accepts rent, in the absence of a registered lease, the only tenancy created against him is a new lease, terminable in accordance with the provisions of section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. But though the manager cannot, without necessity, grant permanent leases, he is not debarred from his right as manager to grant leases for a reasonable term and create derivative tenures and estates in conformity with usage or as an act of ordinary prudent management.[8]

The general rule as to a manager applies equally to the mahant of a muth who, though possessing larger power of internal management, has not the power to grant a permanent lease except for necessity or benefit of the institution.[9] But though the manager possesses no power to grant long leases without necessity, its propriety cannot be suffered to be questioned after a long lapse of time, say, one hundred years, when its propriety will have to be presumed.[10]

---

(1) Shibessouree v. Mothooranath, 13 M.I.A. 270 (275); Doorganath v. Ram Chunder, 2 C. 341 P.C.; Prosunno v. Saroda, 22 C. 989; Abhiram v. Shyama Charan, 36 C. 1003 P.C., reversing O.A. Shyama Charan v. Abhiram, 33 C. 511; Krishna v. Sukhas, 10 C.W.N. 1000; Palaniappa v. Sreenath, 40 M. 709 P.C.; Vidya Varuthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831 P.C.

(2) Vidyavaruthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831 (855) P.C.

(3) Satya Sri v. Kartik, 16 C.W.N. 227: 13 I.C. 536; Murugappa v. Rangaswami, 33 I.C. (M.) 57.

(4) Devasignamani v. Palaniappa, 34 M. 535; Muthusamier v. Sreemethanithi, 38 M. 356; Palaniappa v. Sreenath, 40 M. 709 P.C.

(5) Nanda Lal v. Kumar Arun Chandra, 41 C.W.N. 464.

(6) Palaniappa v. Sreenath, 40 M. 709 P.C.; Mangalasami v. Raja of Ramnad, 1 M.L.W. 1074: 27 I.C. 361.

(7) Narasimha v. Gopala, 28 M. 391.

(8) Prosunno v. Golab, 14 B.L.R. 450 (459) P.C.

(9) Balaswamy v. Venkataswamy, 40 M. 745.

(10) Chockalingam v. Mayandi, 19 M. 485, approved in Magniram v. Kasturbhai, 46 B. 481 (488) P.C.

2092. Acquisition of Endowed Land.—Since a manager is not "competent to alienate the land" within the meaning of S. 13 of the Land Acquisition Act, it follows that the price payable on compulsory acquisition of land should be invested as provided in S. 32 of that Act.[1]

Effect of a Compromise.

2093. The manager cannot enter into a valid compromise binding upon his successor, unless it is shown to have been entered into for the benefit of the endowment.[2] The manager cannot settle the right to his office by compromise, since, while a party may settle by compromise a matter of a private individual right, he cannot so settle a right which is not purely of a private civil character. A right in which the public are interested, will not be permitted to be adjusted by arbitration or compromise. "The court itself has certain duties in connection with a case in which a judgment in rem has to be pronounced, or in a case which involves the right of the public or the right to a religious and charitable office or the right of a minor or other incapacitated person."[3] An agreement or compromise affecting such right is not a lawful agreement or compromise.[4] A decree, even if passed on such compromise, will not bind the public whose rights are affected only by decrees passed upon their merits.[5] But the rule has no application to cases in which the public rights are not infringed.

For instance, it is competent to the shebait to compromise a suit in respect of the debutter property, and such compromise will bind his successor in office, if made in the interest of the endowment.[6]

Clauses (3), (4).

2094. Since an improper sale by the manager of an endowed property of which he is in possession is permissive and not adverse, law permits the transferee to hold it as such, during the term of his office or death, after which the transferee's title would on completion of twelve years possession ripen into ownership whether the manager ratifies it or fails to eject him. If he ratifies it, another person interested in the endowment may, within 12 years from the vendor's death, dispossess him or set aside his purchase under Art. 134-A, or 134-B of the Limitation Act. But if both he and the succeeding manager take no action, the purchaser would, by the operation of either of those Articles or Art. 144 prescribe for an absolute title with the result that no succeeding manager can eject him.[7] But where the first manager has sold or given a permanent or a long term lease of such property and the property sold or leased is the entire muth or other endowment, the sale or lease of the whole being void, the vendee or the lessee, as the case may be, must be ejected forthwith. His possession being from its very inception wrongful, he will perscribe for an absolute title within the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 144. But if on the other hand, the lease relates to only a portion of the estate which the manager may lease for legal necessity, that necessity failing, the lessee's possession is still permissive, and therefore, not wrongful during the lessor's term of office, in which case the limitation starts against

(1) Kamini v. Promotho, 39 C. 33, followed in Ram Prasana v. Secretary of State, 40 C. 895 P.C.

(2) Girijanund v. Sailajanund, 23 C. 645.

(3) Sundarambal v. Yogavanayurukkal, 38 M. 850 (865).

(4) Ib. p. 862.

(5) Jenkins v. Robertson, L.R. 1 H. L. Sc, 117; followed in Sundarambal v. Yogavanagurukkal, 38 M. 850 (863); Bhaskara v. Narayanasamy, 12 M.L.J. 360; Gyanananda v. Kristo, 8 C.W.N. 404.

(6) Hossein Ali v. Bhagwan Das, 34 C. 249 (255).

(7) Ponnambala v. Periyanan, 59 M. 809 (822, 823) P.C.

him only on his death. If, however, his successor affirms and ratifies the lease or accepts rent, the lessee's possession would then continue to be permissive during the term of the second manager, giving the third succeeding manager the right to eject him within the statutory period of 12 years, under Art. 144.[1] In this and similar cases, to be decided apart from the Amending Act, the distinction between a transfer void and voidable has to be borne in mind.[2]

2095. De Facto Manager.—The powers of a de facto and a de jure manager are the same,[3] provided he is in actual possession. So, where the plaintiff sued to recover on a bond given by the de facto manager of a muth as a charge on the muth, it appeared that the obligor had turned the manager out of possession, and as his own right to possession was contested at the time he executed the bond, he was in no better position than a trespasser and a wrong-doer and, as such, incompetent to represent the muth in its dealings with its creditors.[4] A de facto manager cannot inherit the power of another de facto manager even though he be his natural heir.[5] A de facto manager of a math recognized as such by the public is sufficiently competent to eject a trespasser for its benefit.[6]

Explanation.

2096. Mahant, Shebait, Dharmkarta.—The liability of the manager is not affected by the designation of his office. He may be a mahant of a muth[7] or the shebait of a temple or a mere trustee of a charitable public trust, but in each case, his right of alienation is subject to the same rule.[8]

2097. Setting Aside Improper Alienation.—An improper alienation made by the manager, being in breach of trust and in excess of his power, may be set aside by suit instituted by anyone interested in the endowment, including the alienor himself.[9] Where, for instance, it is a public religious endowment, it may be set aside by suit instituted by any worshipper suing in the interest of his class. No sanction, such as is provided for in S. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure or S. 18 of the Religious Endowment Act, is necessary to maintain it.[10] The same right belongs to all beneficiaries who sue only in the right of the trustee. They are his aliases, and in

---

(1) Ponnambala v. Periyanan, 59 M. 809 (822, 823) P.C.

(2) Verumah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah, 1 M. 235 P.C.; Gnanasambanda v. Velu Pandaram, 23 M. 271 P.C.; Vidya Varuthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831 P.C.; Subhayyar v. Mhd. Mustapha, 46 M. 751 P.C.; Ramcharan Das v. Naurangilal, 12 Pat. 251 P.C. explained in Mahadeo Prasad v. Karia Bharti, 57 A. 159 (165, 166) P.C.; Ponnambala v. Periyanan, 59 M. 809 (817, 821) P.C.; but see Hamid Miya v. Nagindas, 57 B. 709; Damodar Das v. Lakhan Das, 37 C. 885 P.C.

(3) Saminatha v. Purushottama, 16 M. 67; Kasim v. Sudhindra, 18 M. 359; Panchkuari v. Amode Lal, (1937) C. 559.

(4) Ramchurn v. Nunhoo, 14 W.R. 147; Madho Prasad v. Ramrattan, 15 C. W.N. 38.

(5) Panchkuari v. Amode Lal, (1937) C. 559.

(6) Ramcharan v. Naurangi Lal, 12 Pat. 251 P.C.; Mahadeo v. Karia Bharti, (1935) P.C. 44.

(7) Basudeo v. Jugal Kishore, 35 M.L. J. 5 P.C.

(8) Gopal Dass v. Kerparam, (1830) B.S.D.A. 250; Shibeesuree v. Mothooranath, 13 M.I.A. 270; Prosunno v. Golab, 14 B.L.R. 450 P.C.; Abhiram v. Shyama Charan, 36 C. 1003 (1013) P.C.; Jnananjan v. Adoremoney, 13 C.W.N. 305; Sambanda v. Narasambandapandara, 1 M. H.C.R. 298; Gnanasambanda v. Velu, 23 M. 271 P.C.; Vidyapurna v. Vidyanidhi, 27 M. 435 (439, 456); Murugesam v. Manickavasaka, 40 M. 402 P.C.; Narayan v. Chintaman, 5 B. 393; Collector v. Hari, 6 B. 546; Ganesh v. Keshavrav, 15 B. 625.

(9) Nogendra Nath v. Rabindra Nath, 53 C. 132.

(10) Venkataramana v. Kasturiranga, 40 M. 212 (223, 226) F.B.; Chidambaranatha v. Nallasiva, 41 M. 124.

England, they are bound to use the name of the trustee as co-plaintiff.[1] On the alienation being set aside, the court should order delivery of possession of the alienated property to the trustee, without driving the latter to a fresh suit for possession. For this purpose, it is necessary that the trustee should also be impleaded in the suit, as plaintiff if willing, otherwise as defendant.[2] The limitation for such suit is that now prescribed in the amended and added articles of the Limitation Act, commencing from a date stated in the sequel (§§ 2100-2110).

2098. Burden of Proof.—Following the rule already stated, it has been laid down that it lies on him who sues to enforce an alienation made by a manager to prove both its factum and its necessity[3] (S. 153). But though this is the rule, the burden may be discharged by proof of the fact that successive holders of the office had recognized the validity of the alienation and acted upon that basis, "and as time goes on, this may itself come to be a not unimportant element of probation upon the issue. It must also be fully borne in mind that with the lapse of time, the parties to the transaction may die or disappear . . . . and it is conceivable that, as years elapse, in such cases nearly all the material evidence may, in course of time, disappear, while the debt itself still remains, having from its initiation till almost the date of suit been recognized by all concerned as a debt truly constituted by the adinam. In such a case, a court is much more easily satisfied that the debt was properly incurred than where the transaction was itself recent and can, therefore, be the subject of more exact evidence, or where the transaction, although remote, has been the subject of a challenge or dispute by those charged with the interests of the institution."[4] So, in another case, where a lease granted by the shebait was challenged after a hundred years, the Privy Council said: "At the lapse of 100 years, when every party to the original transaction has passed away, and it becomes completely impossible to ascertain what were the circumstances which caused the original grant to be made, it is only following the policy, which the courts always adopt, of securing, as far as possible, quiet possession to people who are in apparent lawful holding of an estate, to assume that the grant was lawfully and not unlawfully made."[5]

2099. Where the head of an endowment had conveyed some properties to his wife, and his successor sued her in ejectment, it was held that it was on the donee to prove that the property conveyed to her by the last holder was his private property in that it was either acquired by him with funds of his own, or out of funds which might be regarded as his official perquisites.[6] Property so acquired would be prima facie the shebait's private property, though it may be known that it was an accretion to the endowment, because it was acquired out of the endowment fund and treated by the acquirer as a part thereof.[7]

Prima facie, of course, the mahant of a muth has no personal property of his own; for, from the very necessity of his constitution, he is a member

(1) Chidambaranatha v. Nallasiva, 41 M. 124.
(2) Subramania v. Nagarathana, 20 M. L.J. 151: 5 I.C. 901.
(3) Basdeo v. Sri Kishen, 13 O.C. 79: 5 I.C. 1005.
(4) Murugesam v. Manikavasaka, 40 M. 402 (408) P.C.; Chockalingham v. Mayandi, 19 M. 485 P.C., followed in; Magniram v. Kasturibhai, 26 C.W.N. 473 P.C.
(5) Magniram v. Kasturibhai, 26 C.W.N. 473 P.C.
(6) Kamla v. Mahanu, 25 C.W.N. 217: 58 I.C. 900 P.C.
(7) Ib.; but see Kartick Chandra v. Rudranandagir, 25 C.W.N. 908.

of the order of celibates and ascetics who own no personal property.[1] But at the same time, it is customary for the devout to offer pranami to the mahant, which becomes his personal property and is unconnected with the votive offerings made to the muth or the deity.[2] The mahant is entitled to own this property, and it may, at times, enable him to acquire a valuable estate which he may own as his own. But as this is an exception and not the rule, it cannot be presumed, but must be proved in every case in which it is so alleged.

Such was held to be the case of a person who holds the office of granthi of the Golden Temple at Amritsar, who is at liberty to spend the income of his office in any manner he pleases, and he is not bound to spend any portion of it in charity. If he acquires property out of such income, he is free to dispose of it as he thinks best, and on his death, it descends to his natural heirs. Where, however, a granthi succeeds to a property from another granthi, to the exclusion of natural heirs, there is a presumption that such property has been dedicated to religious uses, even in the absence of positive evidence of actual dedication.[3]

278. (1) A suit to set aside an improper alienation of endowed property, movable or immovable, or for following such property or the proceeds thereof, or for an account of such property or proceeds, by a person interested therein, against the manager, his legal representative or assign without valuable consideration is subject to no limitation.[4]

Limitation for possession or to set aside improper alienations.

(2) But such suit, instituted against his assigns for valuable consideration, must be instituted within 12 years from the date of such alienation, if the property be immovable;[5] and 3 years if the property be movable[6] from the time the alienation becomes known to him;

(3) Provided that such transfer may be set aside by the succeeding manager within the period of 12 years, of the death, resignation of removal of the transferor whether the property be movable[7] or immovable.[8]

Exception.—Nothing in this section applies to a right already determined before the amendment of the Limitation Act by Act I of 1929, which came into force on the 1st January, 1929.

2100. Analogous Law.—Before the amendment of the Limitation Act by Act I of 1929, which came into force on 1st January 1929, the position of the beneficiary, the shebait and the transferee from him, had become the subject of serious comment both by the courts and the Civil Justice Committee who had recommended amendment of the law, which resulted in the enactment of Act, I of 1929. The only provision dealing with religious endowments were then contained in section 10 and Arts. 133 and 134 of the Limitation

Limitation (Amendment) Act, 1929.

(1) Rampat v. Durga, 23 O.C. 303: 60 I.C. 440.
(2) Kumud v. Tripura, 60 I.C. (C.) 464.
(3) Indar Singh v. Fatesh Singh, 1 L. 540.
(4) S. 10, Limitation Act.
(5) Ib. Arts. 134, 134-A.
(6) Ib. Arts. 48-A, 48-B.
(7) S. 10, Limitation Act, Art. 134-C.
(8) Ib. Arts. 134-B, 134-C. A suit by one mahant to set aside an alienation by another putative mahant is still subject to Art. 134-B. Mahadeo v. Karia Bharati, 57 A. 159 P.C.

Act. Section 10 of that Act exempted from any limitation a suit, instituted "against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose" or "against his legal representatives or assigns, other than an assign for valuable consideration" while Arts. 133 and 134 prescribed a period of twelve years for recovery of its possession from the date of purchase or transfer of such property. In a case decided in 1921, the Privy Council held, on review of the cases and the Indian Acts bearing on the subject of trusts, that all of them dealt with trusts in the technical English sense and that since religious endowments were not "conveyed in trust" to the mahant or the shebait, he was not a "trustee" with regard to them, save as to any specific property proved to have been vested in him for specific and definite object. Consequently, both Arts. 133 and 134 which prescribed for a limitation for such trusts did not apply to religious endowments, with the result that where a lessee claimed possession of some lands belonging to a muth which had been permanently leased to him by a previous mahant, 22 years before his suit, the court dismissed the suit as neither covered by Arts. 134 or 144.[1]

2101. In 1922, this case was followed in a case of the mortgage of wakf property by its mutwalli executed in 1899 for a purpose unconnected with the wakf, upon which the mortgagee foreclosed him and obtained possession in 1906. Seven years later in 1913, the mutwalli who had succeeded the mortgagor sued for ejectment, and it was held that Art. 134 was inapplicable, and that as the suit was instituted within 12 years of the mortgagee's possession, the mutwalli was entitled to eject him, and since one mutwalli could not alienate such property otherwise than to satisfy the legitimate needs and purposes of the wakf, a suit for recovery of money advanced by the mortgagee must be in the nature of a claim in personam and could not be secured by a mortgage of the wakf property itself.[2] But the majority of the full bench of five judges of the Madras High Court had in a case decided in 1917 held that Art. 134 as it was then worded, gave the plaintiff twelve years for recovery of possession from "the date of the transfer" and not from the date of possession.[3]

In this state of the law, the Civil Justice Committee recommended that (a) a special provision should be made to deal with property vested in the head of a religious institution and (b) that articles 133 and 134 should be revised[4] which was accordingly effected by the Amending Act of 1929, which came into force on the 1st January 1929. The result of this Amending Act was to include all religious endowments within the meaning of the phrase "property vested in trust for a specific purpose" and all their managers as trustees thereof.[5]

Further Art. 133 of the Act, which dealt with movable property, was repealed, and in its place two new articles, 48-A and 48-B added, giving the plaintiff the shorter period of 3 years for recovery or setting aside the sale of movable property comprised in a Hindu or Mahomedan endowment, from the date the sale becomes known to the plaintiff; and as regards immovable property, provision is made by the amendment of Art. 134 and

(1) Vidya Varuthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831 P.C.

(2) Abdur Rahim v. Narayan Das, (1923) 50 C. 329 (337) P.C.; following Vidya Varuthi v. Balasami, 44 M. 831 P.C.

(3) Seeti Kutti v. Kunhi Pathumma, 40 M. 1040 F.B.

(4) See Statements of Objects and Reasons appended to the Amending Bill in the Gazette of India, Pt. V, dated 3rd September 1919, pp. 222, 223.

(5) S. 10, paragraph 2 added by Act I of 1929.

the addition of three new Articles, numbered 134-A, 134-B and 134-C, the first two providing for the recovery or setting aside of such property, in which case a period of 12 years is prescribed from the date when the transfer becomes known to the plaintiff, and the same period of twelve years both for recovery of movable and immovable property, comprised in an endowment when the suit is instituted by the manager to recover property or set aside a transfer by a previous manager from the time of his death.

2102. It will thus be seen that all transfers by a manager of a Hindu endowment whether by sale, mortgage, lease or otherwise of immovable property, and all sales of movable property, comprised in a Hindu endowment, may now be set aside by a succeeding manager within 12 years from the death of the transferor; but where the same relief is claimed by any other person, both the limitation and the terminus a quo are different, in that a suit for movables must be instituted within 3 years and that for immovables, 12 years from the date when the sale or transfer becomes known to the plaintiff.

With reference to this amendment it is clear that the Limitation Act is not merely adjective law since it creates and extinguishes rights by force of time, consequently, it cannot be retrospective and cannot, therefore, apply to a suit instituted before it came into force.[1] If therefore before that Act came into force, the shebait had instituted a suit for ejectment of a transferee for valuable consideration, who had taken possession of the endowed property from a previous manager, such transferee would be entitled to plead the prescription of his title by adverse possession, calculated from the date of transfer to him by a previous manager.[2]

2103. It should be added that the view of Hindu trusts taken by their Lordships in the cases already quoted has not been overruled by the Legislature by amendment of any of the Acts referring to Hindu trusts, e.g., the Charitable Endowments Act[3] or the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act.[4] All that the Legislature has done is to include the managers of Hindu and Mahomedan endowments within the scope of S. 10, and to provide for special limitation, and remove the applicability of Art. 144 as the residuary article to suits specially provided for. But since these articles only apply to suits arising on transfer or sale, it follows that a person, not a transferee or vendee from the manager, is not precluded from acquiring a title against an endowment by adverse possession.[5]

2104. The several questions that arise, under the provisions of the Limitation Act before and since its amendment in 1929, may be thus categorised under the following heads: (1) Those who may sue; (2) Those who may be sued; (3) For what reliefs there is no limitation; (4) and for what reliefs there is; (5) what assigns for valuable consideration are exempted.

All these questions, except No. (4) will be found answered in section 10, while that question will be found answered in Articles 48, 120, 133 and 144

---

(1) Allah Rakhi v. Mhd. Abdur Rahim, 56 A. 111 (117) P.C.; Dwarkadas v. Rikhiram, (1936) L. 784; Raghunandan v. Mahadeo, (1933) O. 38.

(2) Ib. pp. 121-122.

(3) Charitable Endowments Act (VI of 1890) which provides "for the resting and administration of property held in trust for religious purposes."

(4) Act (XIV of 1920).

(5) Manickammal v. Murugappa, (1935) M. 483 (486).

of the unamended Acts, and Articles 48-A, 134, 134-A, 134-B and 134-C of the amended Act. Taking these questions seriatim:—

(1) Who may sue.

2105. The persons entitled to sue under section 10 are not mentioned but their identity is made clear from the description of the relief to which the suit is confined, namely, "the following of trust property or its proceeds or for an account of such property or proceeds." As such suit can only be instituted by the beneficiary or some one interested in it and on its behalf, it follows that persons not so interested are not entitled to the benefit of this section. Consequently, a suit by one trustee to enforce his personal right against another trustee for executive management of the trust and as such, for the recovery of its property, dealt with by him, would be outside the rule;[1] but if such a suit is brought for the purpose of joint possession and joint management of the trust, or to oust the defendant who claimed to hold adversely to the trust, the section would apply.[2] The true test in such cases is whether the plaintiff's suit is in the interest of the trust or whether it is in reality a personal claim in which the trust stood to gain only incidentally.[3]

(2) Who may be sued.

2106. Secondly, as to the persons who may be sued under the section. Section 10, as unamended, has been held to exclude the manager of a Hindu or Mahomedan endowment, since its wording shows that it was intended to be restricted to express trustees in whom property had become vested for a specific purpose. As a right or bequest by dedication does not vest the property in any human agency, or for a specific purpose, all endowments were held to be outside the rule, (§ 2100) with the result that a suit against the manager of such endowments was not entitled to the protection afforded to other trust property, which law protects on the ground of public policy, with the result that the manager of an endowment could only be sued under the general law; further since Art. 134, as it then stood, only provided for recovery of property "conveyed or bequeathed in trust" it equally kept out endowments.[4] This defect in the law was rectified by the Limitation (Amendment) Act, 1929[5] which was brought into force from 1st January of that year. By this amendment, the liability of an express trustee was extended to the manager of a Hindu, Mahomedan or Buddhist religious or charitable endowment. Under the cases decided before the amendment, section 10 was held to apply to all managers irrespective of their right to act as such. And where there are more managers than one all fall within the section. A manager de son tort, or one removed[6] or one who claims to be so[7] would likewise fall within the section.[8]

---

(1) Ambala Vana v. Meenakshi, 43 M. 665 P.C.; Nilakandan v. Padmanabha, 14 M. 153; Shree Nath v. Radhanath, 12 C.L.R. 370; Ranga Payi v. Baba, 20 M. 398 (403).

(2) Ambalavana v. Meenakshi, 43 M. 665 P.C.; Aurabinda v. Manorama, 55 C. 903; Jasodha Bibi v. Parmanand, 16 A. 256; Baidya Nath v. Har Datt, 5 Pat. 249.

(3) Ranga Rai v. Bala, 20 M. 398 (403).

(4) Vidya Varuthi v. Balusami, (1921) 44 M. 831 P.C.

(5) Act (I of 1929).

(6) Vira Sami v. Subba, 6 M. 54.

(7) Ambalam v. Bartle, 36 M. 418; following Balvant Rao v. Puranmal, 6 A. 1 P.C.

(8) Mani Ram v. Rupchand, 33 C. 1047 (1060) P.C.; Sadasoak v. Ram Chander, 37 C. 620; Moosabhai v. Yacoobbhai, 29 B. 267 (281); Kuppan v. Munde Kotha, 37 M. 373; Khatri v. S. S., 5 Pat. 539; contra Behari Lal v. Shiv Narain, 47 A. 17 (refers to paragraph I and holds it is limited to express trustees). But this does not apply to the newly added paragraph 2.

(3) and (4) For what relief.

2107. Thirdly, the relief described in section 10 must be "for the purpose of following such property or the proceeds thereof, or for an account of such property or proceeds". The words "for an account of such property or proceeds" were added to section 10 in the Act, as re-enacted in the present Act of 1908, which came into force on 1st January, 1909, since when such suit is exempt from the bar of limitation if it complies with the other conditions of the Act.[1]

In the previous discussion (who may sue, etc.), it has already been seen that the section is intended to protect the property and proceeds of an endowment, with the result that a suit that does not purport to recover or protect such property cannot be admitted to the privilege of this section.[2] The question in a given case is one of construction. The phrase "following the property or its proceeds" would include not only the endowment but also the property into which it is converted, including its accretion, produce, profits or other usufruct. For all such reliefs there is no limitation, and the plaintiff may sue at any time, since his right to sue can never be extinguished by the efflux of time.[3] Such suit, free from limitation, will lie not only against the manager, but also against his "legal representatives or assigns, except assigns for valuable consideration".

(5) Suits subject to Limitation.

2108. This leads to the consideration of the next and the last question as to the excepted persons who remain subject to the ordinary law. Here again, a distinction must be drawn between the law as it obtained before its amendment in 1929 and thereafter.

2109. As already observed, under the previous law, a suit against the manager of a religious endowment was subject to the general law of limitation, while there was no limitation against the beneficiary or any one on his behalf for following up the property alienated by the trustee; with the amendment, all managers of religious endowment have been brought under the same liability. Under the previous law, a suit for declaration of the invalidity of a sale of movable or trust property was subject to Article 120, while a suit for its recovery was subject to 12 years from the date of the purchase;[4] but there was no provision for setting aside such transfers by a plaintiff, who, though interested in an endowment, was not himself entitled to recover possession. These lacunæ in the law have since been rectified by the Act of 1929, which provides for both a suit for possession as well as for setting aside a sale, subject to the limitation of 3 years from the date the sale becomes known to the plaintiff, except where the plaintiff is the manager, suing for recovery of such property sold by his predecessor, when the limitation allowed to him is 12 years, calculated from his removal or death; but where such plaintiff is the succeeding manager, he is given 12 years from the death of, or removal of, his transferring predecessor, at from the date he became functus officio, as where disposes of all the beneficiary's property in which case limitation would

(1) Balwant Rao v. Puran Mal, 6 A. 1 P.C. followed in Arunachellam v. Venkatachalapathi, 43 M. 253 P.C.

(2) Dhanpat Singh v. Mahesh Nath, 57 I.C. (C.) 805. As to what accounts can be claimed; see Peary Mohan v. Manohar, (1924) C. 25.

(3) S. 10 "Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore (e.g. in S. 3) contained" which provides for the dismissal of all suits not instituted within the time provided in the first schedule of the Limitation Act.

(4) Mhd. Habibullah v. Safdar Hussain, 7 A. 25; Yerukola v. Yerukola, 45 M. 648 (672, 673), F.B.

begin to run against the beneficiary as from the date of the alienation though it will also be the date of his civil death.[1]

There has been no substantial change in a suit for accounts of such property. (§ 2107) Like the manager, his transferees for valuable consideration were not subject to section 10, with the result that they were subject to the ordinary law including Article 133 (repealed by the Amending Act, 1929) and Article 134, both of which allowed 12 years for recovery of such property, whether movable or immovable, from the date of transfer, and as such, the residuary Article 144, not qualified by section 10, as then understood and applied, enabled all comers, including the manager, and his assignees, for or without value, to defeat the trust by the mere act of their adverse possession.

The Amending Act prevents this by widening the scope of section 10 by expressly including therein the manager of a religious endowment, his representatives and assigns, except "assigns for valuable consideration." So far then he is concerned, his transfers are liable to be aside by his successor from the date of his removal from office or death.

And so far as the beneficiary and all persons acting in its interest, they can now sue for recovery of movables within 3 years and immovables within 12 years from the date the transfer complained of becomes known to the plaintiff.

Transferees for valuable consideration.

2110. Turning next to the "assigns for valuable consideration" excepted from the operation of section 10 of the Act, it was held, and has since been legislatively confirmed,[2] that the term "assigns" is used in the section as including all transferees[3] whether by sale, exchange[4] mortgage or lease and all purchasers, whether at a court auction, in execution of a decree against the manager,[5] or by private treaty.

Apart from valuable consideration, neither want of notice of the trust,[6] nor presence of good faith is prerequisite for exemption under this section, not because want of notice and good faith are essential prerequisites of a valid transfer,[7] but because they were not considered necessary for exemption; but having crossed the limitation hurdle, no transferor can feel secure unless he can establish his good faith in which the want of notice of the trust would be material, since a transferee for valuable consideration but without good faith may otherwise find himself surrounded by the provisions of the general law, directed against such transfers, e.g., section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act[8] and sections 44, 53, 55 and 56 of the Presidency[9] and sections 51-55 of the Provincial Insolvency Acts. No trustee can feel secure unless his transfer is for valuable consideration, accompanied by good faith.

(1) Nawrangilal v. Ram Charan, 9 Pat. 885; Ramlagan v. Nandipat, (1938) Pat. 143.

(2) E.g. in Art. 134 and Arts. 134-A and 134-B (with Art. 134-C), added by Act I of 1929.

(3) Manik Lal v. Manchershi, 1 B. 269; Behari Lal v. Mhd. Muttaki, 20 A. 482 (488) F.B.

(4) Rajagopalam v. Kasivasi, 30 M. 316.

(5) Charuchandra v. Subash Chander, 50 C. 49; Prasanna Venkatachella v. Collector, 38 M. 1064.

(6) Ram Coomar v. Mc Queen, 18 W. R. 166 (168) P.C. "good faith" formed part of the Limitation Act, 1871 (IX of 1871) but was omitted from the later Acts.

(7) Act IV of 1882.

(8) Act III of 1909.

(9) Act (IV of 1920).

But a transfer would still be "for valuable consideration" for the purpose of section 10, though the consideration may afterwards fail, as where, in an exchange of lands by the manager, the latter is deprived of his land by a paramount title.[1]

Exception.

2111. The exception deals with rights already determined before the amendment of the Limitation Act in 1929. The law then in force has already been the subject of discussion elsewhere (§ 2100). The leading principles of the law may be thus categorized:

(1) In all alienations made by the shebait before 1st January, 1929, the possession of the alienee became adverse both to him and the beneficiary from the date of alienation.[2]

(2) The shebait himself was competent to implement his title by adverse possession against the beneficiary.

(3) In a suit for setting aside an improper alienation by the shebait or for dispossession of him, on the ground of his adverse possession, defalcation or mismanagement, no person could institute a suit other than a suit for a declaration unless he was himself entitled to possession of the endowment.

(4) In all suits against the shebait, the plaintiff must establish a cause of action within the scope of the Limitation Act as if section 10 thereof had never existed.

Manager's office how far transferable.

279. The office of the manager is inalienable except to the following extent:—

(1) The manager of a private endowment may transfer it with the consent of the founder or his whole family.[3]

(2) In other cases, it may be relinquished, if allowed by the terms of the foundation or usage, in favour of a member of the family, or failing such member, a stranger eligible to discharge the duties of the office.[4]

(3) Provided that notwithstanding any usage, no transfer can be made for the pecuniary benefit of the transferor or which is incompartible with the interest of the trust.[5]

Illustration.

A bequeaths his shebaitship to B. The bequest is invalid for since A's office only enures for his life, there remains nothing on A's death which he could bequeath.[6]

2112. Analogous Law.—The office of the manager is ordinarily inalienable, both because it is a sacred office and, as such, a res extra commercium as because it is of a personal nature and the discharge of its duties

(1) Rajagopalam v. Kasivasi, 30 M. 316.

(2) Damodar Das v. Lakhan Das, 37 C. 885 P.C. but death was held to be the starting point in some cases of the same Board—Vidyavaruthi v. Balusami, 44 M. 831 P.C.; Abhiram v. Shyam Charan, 36 C. 1003 P.C.

(3) Khetter v. Hari, 17 C. 557 (562); Rajeshwar v. Gopeshwar, 34 C. 831, affirmed O.A.; 35 C. 226; Niral Mohini v. Shibdas, 36 C. 975 (977).

(4) Raja Ram v. Ganesh, 23 B. 131; Savitri (Srimati) v. Mrs. Savi, 12 Pat. 359 (388).

(5) Rajah Vurma v. Ravi Vurma, 1 M. 235 (251, 252) P.C. followed Gnanasambanda v. Velu, 23 M. 271; Prasanna Deb v. Bengal Duars Bank, (1936) C. 744, and cases cited in comm.

(6) Doorga Nath v. Ramchander, 2 C. 341 P.C.; Rajeshwar v. Gopeshwar, 35 C. 226 (230).

requires personal qualifications. As such, it, was, at one time, held to be wholly inalienable and was exempt from seizure in execution of a decree against the shebait.[1] But since such offices are hereditary, the objection on the ground of personal fitness could not be pressed, and with the right of heridity followed the right of partition.[2] The next stage was the qualified right of alienation to a member of the shebait's family,[3] and failing him, to a stranger, provided the stranger was fit to discharge the trust.[4] But the right is still such as cannot be attached in execution of a money decree against the shebait, since, if such property be subject to attachment and sale, the purchaser might be a Mahomedan or a Christian, who would be both unwilling and incompetent to perform the service of the idol[5] or prepare food for it.[6] Such a devolution would thus be not only destructive of the endowment but wholly inconsistent with the presumed intention of the founder.[7] The present law is thus a compromise between the ordinary rights of property and its special character. It permits sale within limits, and those limits are stated in the section.

2113. Transfer of Manager's Office.—As regards a private endowment, the Privy Council stated that "the consensus of the whole family might give the estate another direction."[8] The founder has, of course, the same right. The public are not interested in such endowment; the only persons interested are the founder and his family, and it is for them to say who shall be its manager. It has been, accordingly, held that, in a case of a private endowment, an alienation of the shebait's office, made with the concurrence of the founder or of his whole family and for the benefit of the endowment, is valid.[9] But a consideration of benefit of the endowment was no part of the Privy Council dictum and does not appear to be an essential condition to its validity, though any transfer made to its detriment would doubtless be vetoed by the family. But it is their look-out.

Clause (1). When the endowment is private.

2114. In the case of public endowments the alienation of shebaitship can only be permitted if authorized by the deed of foundation or usage. Even if so permitted, the objections which apply to its attachment, equally apply to its transfer by treaty, except to persons otherwise qualified to fill that office. In the case of heritable shebaitship, it may be transferred to one in the line of heirs, but if no such heir exists, its transfer is permitted even to a qualified stranger. But such alienations are in the nature of exceptions,[10] and tolerated on the ground that they are in the end in the interest of the endowment. Strictly speaking, they should be wholly inalienable. As was observed: "The duties to be performed are the protection of this property, devoted by the piety of former ages, to the service of religion, against all invaders and especially against the invasion

Clause (2). When the endowment is public.

(1) Dube v. Srinibas, (1870) 5 B.L.R. 617; Juggurnath v. Kishen, 7 W.R. 266.

(2) Mitta v. Neerunjun, 14 B.L.R. 166.

(3) Srinivasa v. Rangasami, 2 M. 304.

(4) Mancharam v. Pranshankar, 6 B. 298.

(5) Juggernath v. Kishen, 7 W.R. 266; Kalicharan v. Bangshi, 6 B.L.R. 727; Mancharam v. Pranshankar, 6 B. 298 (300); Rajaram v. Ganesh, 23 B. 131; Manjunath v. Shankar, 16 Bom.L.R. 593; Durga v. Chanchal, 4 A. 81.

(6) Dube v. Srinibas, 5 B.L.R. 617.

(7) Rajah Vurmah v. Ravi Vurmah, 1 M. 235 P.C.

(8) Doorga Nath v. Ramchunder, 2 C. 341 P.C.

(9) Khetter v. Hari, 17 C. 557 (562); Rajeshwar v. Gopeshwar, 34 C. 831, affirmed O.A.; 35 C. 226; Nirad Mohini v. Shibdas, 36 C. 975 (977).

(10) Raja Ram v. Ganesh, 23 B. 131.

of the powerful. The property itself is, by the principles of all law, that of no individual whatever. A trustee cannot, by any act of his own, denude himself of his character of trustee until he has performed his trust. It is manifest that where the trust is one of perpetual obligation, where the cestui que trusts are the whole Hindu community, and where the property is res extra commercium, in no sense the office can be the subject either of bargain or of sale, and if not of sale, then not of gift, the attempt of trustees to surrender the trust property, and thus throw out their character, would not only be a gross breach of trust, but would be quite powerless to vest any rights in the persons in whose favour they had committed such breach of trust."[1]

2115. This question was considered by the Privy Council in 1877 in an appeal arising out of a suit in which the plaintiff claimed to manage a pagoda by his right of assignment from the authorized trustees. The courts in India dismissed the claim, and in affirming their decision, the Privy Council said that the plaintiff's assignors had no power, under what may be termed the common law of India, to transfer the trust.[2] At the same time, they conceded that such transfer would be possible if sanctioned by usage, adding, however, "that if the custom set up was one to sanction, not merely the transfer of a trusteeship, but, as in this case, the sale of a trusteeship for the pecuniary advantage of the trustee, they would be disposed to hold that that circumstance alone would justify a decision that the custom was bad in law."[3] This case narrowed down the scope of alienation by excluding therefrom all alienations not warranted by the foundation or custom.[4] Even the assignor could sue to recover back the trust he had no right to assign.[5] That custom has broken in upon the inalienability of the sacred office, will be clear from the decided cases.[6] So, custom may permit the assignment of a right to receive offerings[7] or a turn of worship,[8] though they are ordinarily unassignable.

2116. But apart from usage and the consensus of opinion, among those interested in the worship of an idol, in favour of such a course, the shebait has no power to alter the line of shebaits at variance with the wishes of the founder. Nor does a donor to the property already consecrated acquire that right, since he does not, by his benefaction, acquire the status of a joint-founder.[9] Though the office of the shebait is untransferable it does not preclude a claimant to shebaitship from abandoning her suit in favour of a man who would succeed to that office after her.[10]

---

(1) Rajah Vurmah v. Ravi Vurmah, 1 M. 235 (240, 241) P.C.

(2) Rajah Vurmah v. Ravi Vurmah, 1 M. 235 (250) P.C., followed in Gnanasambanda v. Velu, 23 M. 271 P.C.

(3) Raja Vurmah v. Ravi Vurmah, 1 M. 235 (251, 252) P.C., followed in Gnanasambanda v. Velu, 23 M. 271; Prasanna Deb v. Bengal Duars Bank, (1936) C. 744.

(4) Ayancheri v. Acholathil, 5 M. 89 (Lease for 96 years held void); Jannan v. Nilakandan, 7 M. 337 (338); Subbarayudu v. Kotayya, 15 M. 389; Alagappa v. Sivaramasundara, 19 M. 211; Gnanasambanda v. Velu, 23 M. 271; Lakshmanaswami v. Rangamma, 26 M. 31. To the same effect; Keyake v. Yedattil, 3 M.H. C.R. 380; Rup Narain v. Junko, 3 C.L. R. 112; Krishna v. Laldhari, 40 I.C. 276.

(5) Subharayudu v. Kottaya, 15 M. 389; Rangasami v. Ranga, 16 M. 146; Mallika v. Ratanmani, 1 C.W.N. 493.

(6) Sukhlal v. Bishambhar, 39 A. 196 (199) (Mahabrahmin's right might be mortgaged.)

(7) Puncha v. Bindeshri, 19 C.W.N. 580; Jati v. Mukunda, 39 C. 227 (Transfer acted upon for 25 years upheld).

(8) Rajeshmar v. Gopeshwar, 34 C. 818; Mohamaya v. Haridas, 42 C. 455 (Assignment of turns of worship upheld).

(9) Lalit Mohan v. Brojendra Nath, 53 C. 251.

(10) Savitri (Srimati) v. Mrs. Savi, 12 Pat. 359 (388).

2117. Limits of Allowable Custom.—It has already been seen that the courts will not enforce any custom which permits trafficking in sacred offices.[1] It is only in a special case that the alienation of such office is permitted, and he who relies upon it, must make out a case for its validity. A transfer which is a sale of such office,[2] or one which is intended, or will have the effect of altering the form of worship, cannot be permitted.[3]

Clause (3).

2118. Since the manager is entitled to represent the trust in all suits relating to it, a decree obtained against him as representing the trust will bind it in the hands of the successor, unless the decree was obtained by the collusion or fraud of the manager.[4] The binding nature of the decree in such cases is not affected by the fact that it is based on a compromise.

Res judicata.

280. A manager may be removed from his office for any misconduct as is incompartible with the interest of the endowment.[5]

Removal of Manager.

2119. Analogous Law.—The manager of a religious endowment is, sometimes, spoken of as its trustee; and the grounds for his removal are said to be similar. But as the Privy Council observed: "The grounds for removing a shebait from his office may not be identical with those upon which a trustee would be removed in this country. The close intermingling of duties and personal interest, which together make up the office of shebait, may well prevent the closeness of the analogy, but, as part of the office, it is indisputable that there are duties which must be performed, that the estate does need to be safeguarded and kept in proper custody, and if it be found that a man, in the exercise of his duties, has put himself in a position in which the Court thinks that the obligations of his office can no longer be faithfully discharged, that is sufficient ground for his removal."[6]

2120. The removal of the manager from his office depends upon the terms and conditions of the foundation and the nature of the manager's misconduct. Where the foundation is a family temple, members of the family arrange among themselves for its management. Where the foundation is a public trust, the court wields sufficient jurisdiction and control over its management. In such case, it has to examine the principles which should guide it in sanctioning the dismissal of the manager. It has been held that a mere non-feasance is wholly insufficient to justify his removal. The fact that he took no interest in the welfare of the temple or had mistaken the scope of his duties and sanctioned expenditure in payment of fines and costs of trustees of his own sect, or had taken part in faction fights, are not such nonfeasances for which he can be removed,[7] unless his neglect has led the buildings or the institution to fall into decay.[8]

(1) Rajah Vurmah v. Ravi Vurmah, 1 M. 235 P.C.; Narsimha v. Anantha, 4 M. 391; Kuppa v. Dorasami, 6 M. 76; Phatmabi v. Haji Musa, 38 M. 491 (497); Sundarambal v. Yagavanagurukkal, 38 M. 850 (854).

(2) Raja Vurmah v. Ravi Vurmah, 1 M. 235 P.C.

(3) Venkataraya v. Srinivasa, 7 M.H. C.R. 32.

(4) Kumari v. Golab, 14 B.L.R. 450 P.C.; Ranjit Singh v. Basanta, 12 C.W. N. 739: 9 C.L.J. 597; Sudindra v. Budan, 9 M. 80; Vidyapurna v. Vidyanidhi, 27 M. 435.

(5) Peary Mohan Mukerji v. Monohar, 48 C. 1019 P.C.; Sri Gopal v. Radha Binode, 41 C.L.J. 396: 88 I.C. 616: (1925) C. 996.

(6) Ib.

(7) Tiruvengadath v. Srinivasa, 22 M. 361.

(8) Ganapati v. Savithri, 21 M. 10 (11, 15).

A manager cannot be punished with dismissal for his mistake or error of judgment, though the court will give directions for better management in future.[1] Nothing short of fraud or dishonesty will move the court to remove him,[2] even though his office be hereditary.[3] Failure on the part of the manager to keep or submit accounts to the committee is a breach of one of the most important duties cast upon him by law and is sufficient to justify his dismissal.[4]

2121. So is the fact that the manager had continuously misused the income of the endowment,[5] or purchased a portion of it benami,[6] or denies the public character of the trust and refuses to discharge his duty[7] A manager wrongly dismissed from his office is entitled to damages for his wrongful dismissal. When a temple trustee had been given notice, by the temple committee, of some or all of the charges against him, and one of them drew up a report suggesting the trustee's suspension pending further orders, and the other members except one agreed, it was held that the action of the committee was ultra vires and that the trustee was entitled to damages against his corporators who were parties to his wrongful removal from office.[8]

2122. The lunacy of the mahant of a muth does not, it is said, disqualify him to continue as its head, though it would be a ground for appointing a substitute to carry on his duties during the continuance of his disability.[9] But immorality, marriage[10] and incontinence is quite another matter. It is a misconduct, for which the head of any religious foundation will be thrown out. So, Lord Shaw, referring to the qualifications essential to the mahant of a muth, said: "The nomination must fall upon one who is competent to hold this important sacred office. For instance, the person chosen may be disqualified by reason of bodily deformity, or bodily disease such as leprosy, or disease of the mind, or of the leading of a life which is immoral or is inconsistent with the religious vows of the brotherhood. In all such cases, the nomination would be void. Among these disqualifications stands the contracting of a marriage and the begetting of children. As already mentioned, initiation of a married man must be preceded by the entire and permanent separation from his wife and by the giving up of all worldly ties." But their Lordships were considering the case of appointment and not one of removal; and the two do not stand on a par. But that immorality would disqualify the manager of a religious endowment from holding office, cannot for a moment be doubted. And it has been so held.[11] But immorality has not the effect of causing forfeiture of the office, though the manager so guilty must be removed.[12]

---

(1) Annaji v. Narayan, 21 B. 556 (559).

(2) A.-G. v. Abdul Kadir, 18 B. 401, A.-G. v. Punjabai, 18 B. 551.

(3) Fakuruddin v. Ackeni, 2 M. 197 (199).

(4) Ananthanarayana v. Kuttalam, 22 M. 481; Fakuruddin v. Ackeni, 2 M. 197 (199).

(5) Sathappayyar v. Periasami, 14 M. 1.

(6) Peary Mohan Mukherji v. Monohar, 48 C. 1019 P.C.

(7) Vaithinath v. Tyagaraja, 41 M.L.J. 20; Nellappa v. Punnaivanam, 50 M. 567.

(8) Venkata v. Ponnusami, 33 M.L.J. 660: 43 I.C. 205.

(9) Vidayapurna v. Vidyanidhi, 27 M. 435 (443); contra in Ram Parkash v. Anand Das, 43 C. 707 (719) P.C.

(10) Ram Parkash v. Anand Das, 43 C. 707 (719) P.C.; Kartick Chandra v. Rudranand, 25 C.W.N. 908.

(11) Asaram v. Hari Singh, (1904) P. R. 53; Tiruvambala v. Pandaram, 40 M. 177.

(12) Tiruvambala v. Pandaram, 40 M. 177.

2123. It seems plain that a manager who declared that the trust property is his private property, and when called to book, fabricated accounts, can no longer be trusted to discharge his duties, and the first step towards trustworthiness in administration is to remove him.[1] But the case might perhaps be different, if he had, following in the wake of his predecessors, considered himself as owner of the estate. In this case, the court may find reason to overlook the past and provide against the future by settling a scheme of management.[2] So, again, a party holding land assigned for the support of an idol, subject to the performance of the ceremonies or worship of the idol, who fails to perform the required service cannot be summarily removed without being given the option to continue the worship.[3] A deposition of the shebait by a foreign state, e.g., Maharaja of Odaipur, has no effect upon his management of properties situate in British India.[4]

Besides the obvious cases of mismanagement, the manager may be removed for violating some of the rules of the foundation, such, for instance, that a Gir Gossain who drinks wine or marries, is incompetent to continue as the head of a muth.[5]

2124. Procedure for Removal.—The procedure for the removal of the manager must depend upon the terms and the nature of his appointment. If he was appointed by the brotherhood, those who possess the power of appointment presumably possess also the power of dismissal. But then both the appointment and the dismissal must be in consonance with fair play and justice, decided upon in a meeting convoked for the purpose, in which all members are consulted and the decision arrived at according to the opinions of the majority. Where, therefore, the brotherhood of Samuha Bhakats removed their high-priest by convening a meeting in which only those favouring his dismissal were present, it was held that the dismissal was improper in that there had been no convocation of all the brotherhood after sufficient notice and proclamation, in which the opinion of the assembly was taken or considered. To validate the removal of a high-priest from his office by a majority of a religious brotherhood, it is necessary, first to ascertain the voters and their qualifications, secondly to determine whether steps have been taken to enable the brotherhood to express their decision, and thirdly to determine whether a majority have expressed their wish in favour of removal. The qualifications of voters may depend upon membership of the brotherhood, age, sex and residence. A question may also arise whether a member or family is the unit for this purpose. The decision of the majority must be determined by reference to votes given at the meeting and cannot be made to depend upon views indicated subsequently in the course of a suit brought to contest the validity of a removal. Whether a quorum is necessary to legalize the decision of the meeting must depend upon the custom of the brotherhood in the absence of statutory provision or express direction in that behalf by the founder.[6]

---

(1) Srinivasa v. Evalappa, 45 M. 565 (584, 585) P.C.; contra in Damodar v. Bhat, (1896) B.P.J. 587.
(2) Damodar v. Bhat, (1896) B.P.J. 587.
(3) Mohesh v. Moylash, 11 W.R. 443
(4) Girdharji v. Madhowadass, 17 B. 600.
(5) Kartick Chandra v. Rudrananda, 25 C.W.N. 908.
(6) Juro Ram v. Gobind, 12 C.L.J. 497: 8 I.C. 124; Sundaresa v. Subramania, 13 M.L.W. 212: 61 I.C. 741.

2125. A mahant or manager of an endowment, if properly removed for his incapacity, cannot be heard to complain that the method of his removal was improper. Where a mahant had been removed from his office and from the possession of the properties of the endowment on the ground of his unfitness, and he sued his ejectors for a declaration of their incompetency to eject him, the court held the suit itself incompetent unless the mahant could show that he was not unfit to continue in office.[1]

Rights and duties of beneficieries.

281. (1) The beneficiary of an endowment may be any religious or charitable object, such as a math, temple, or shrine, an idol, public or private, or a charitable object such as a dharmsala, serai, pinjrapole (a shed for the protection of cattle) or the like.

(2) In the case of a public endowment all persons directly or indirectly interested therein, whether they be shebaits, worshippers[2] or the like,[3] are entitled to take such steps as are necessary to insure that the endowment is maintained and its legitimate functions are preserved.

(3) Worshippers and devotees of a public idol or temple or other sacred object or institution are entitled to resort to it, singly or jointly in procession, at all reasonable hours for the purpose of worship and devotion, and the manager is bound to afford them reasonable facilities for that purpose.

(4) Where the idol, shrine or temple is private only, such persons are entitled to worship and receive its benefits as are members of the family sect or class for whose benefit and worship the founder had installed the image or constructed the temple.[4]

Clauses (1), (5).

2126. Analogous Law —Generally speaking, the beneficiaries to an endowment may be an idol, a muth or other juristic person or a body of men. In either case, they are the direct beneficiaries. But in the former case, worshippers and devotees are equally regarded as beneficiaries, if they have the right of offering their devotion and worship to the deity.[5] As such, they are interested in its preservation and maintenance, and for that purpose, they are entitled to complain of any improper alienation of property.[6] Again, since the founder and his family are primarily interested in the maintenance of their endowment, they have the same right of worship and protection of the endowed property.[7] The term "founder" comprises not only the sole founder but also a joint contributor to the endowment.[8]

---

(1) Niamat Ali v. Yad Ali, 6 Pat.L.J. 408: 63 I.C. 849.

(2) Mohiuddin v. Soyududdin, 20 C. 810; Kasi Hasan v. Sagun, 24 B. 170 (181).

(3) Ganapathi v. Savitri, 21 M. 10 (Suit by neighbours).

(4) Vengamuthu v. Pandaveshwara, 6 M. 151.

(5) Mohiuddin v. Soyududdin, 20 C. 810 (816); Kasi Hassan v. Sagun, 24 B. 170 (181).

(6) Krishnaswami v. Shamaram, 30 M. 158 (165); Lakshmi v. Murari, 56 L. J. 97: 45 I.C. 213; Radhabai v. Chinnaji, 3 B. 27; Chintaman v. Dhondo, 15 B. 612; Chottalal v. Mandhar, 24 B. 50 (54) P.C., affirming O.A., 12 B. 247; Jowahra v. Akbar Hussain, 7 A. 178 F. B.; Kaleswara v. Nataraja, 19 M.L.J. 772: 3 I.C. 255; Oseri v. Bawa, 7 S.L. R. 129: 24 I.C. 712.

(7) Prosunno v. Koonjo, (1864) W.R. 157; Brojo Mohun v. Hurro Lal, 5 C. 700 (705); Greedharjee v. Romanlaljee, 17 C. 3 (20) P.C.

(8) Thackersey v. Hurbhun, 8 B. 432 (461, 462); Luchmee v. Rookmanee, (1857) M.S.D.A. 152; Endowed Schools Act (In re), L.R. 10 A. C. 304 (308, 309).

2127. The nature of the benefit accruing from an endowment must depend upon its nature and character. Persons who are residents of the locality in which a choultry is situated and are members of the community for whose benefit the choultry was founded, are sufficiently interested to be able to maintain a suit under S. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.[1] Any person to be benefited by the execution of a trust is a beneficiary entitled to sue for its protection. So, where a choultry was founded for the feeding of people, especially Brahmins, a suit by a resident Brahmin was held to be maintainable, though the Brahmins to be fed were ordinarily japlas or travellers.[2]

2128. If it is an endowment created for the worship of an idol, the question whether the public are entitled to free access for worship, depends again upon the nature and character of the idol. If it is the idol of a particular sect or caste, only persons belonging to that sect or caste are entitled to free access,[3] and others have no such right. Even a person ordinarily entitled to access may forfeit his right, if he offends against the rules of the caste entailing his suspension or excommunication.[4] So, it is a question of usage whether a dancing girl or a man who has married a widow, should be admitted into a temple.[5]

2129. It has already been stated that the manager has no right to levy a fee for admission, unless it be a small one to prevent over-crowding. All he is entitled to is to make such rules as to the time and order of worship for the sake of orderliness and decency of worship.[6]

The right of access is possessed by each person separately, though it may be possessed by a class of persons conjointly. Such, for instance, would be the right of a sect to proceed to a temple in procession for worship.

2130. Private Endowments Excepted.—The public have naturally no right of access to worship private deities. Nor can they complain of any malversation or misconduct on the part of their manager.

282. Idol's right of suit. (1) Where the subject of an endowment is a religious or a charitable object, existing or to be brought into existence, it is treated as a juridical person in perpetual minority,[7] and enjoys all the rights and immunities of such person, and all its acts must be performed through its accredited manager;[8]

(2) As such, all suits and proceedings relating to it must be instituted, conducted and defended in its name, through such manager, or the next friend or guardian to be appointed by the court.[9]

Explanation.—For the purpose of enforcing any right of such object, both spiritual and secular, its manager is deemed to be its legal representative by whatever name he may be called.

---

(1) Garuda v. Narella, 35 M.L.J. 661.
(2) Ganapati v. Savitri, 21 M. 10 (13).
(3) Vengamuthu v. Pandaveswara, 6 M. 151.
(4) Venkatachalapati v. Subharayadu, 13 M. 293 (299).
(5) Vengamuthu v. Pandaveswara, 6 M. 151; Venkatachalapati, v. Subharayadu, 13 M. 293 (299); Nathu v. Keshawaji, 26 B. 174 (183); Anandrav v. Shankar, 7 B. 323 (329).
(6) Dakar Temple Committee, 28 Bom. L.R. 309: 94 I.C. 47: (1926) B. 179; Kalidas v. Gor, 15 B. 309.
(7) Pramatha Nath v. Pradyumma, 52 C. 809 (815) P.C.; approving Rambrahma v. Kedar Nath, (1923) C. 60: 36 C.L.J. 478 (483).
(8) Jodhi Bai v. Basdeo, 33 A. 735.
(9) Pramatha Nath v. Pradyumna, 52 C. 809 (827) P.C.

2131. Idol as a Juristic Entity.—An idol or a temple is regarded in law as a juristic entity, a living person in perpetual minority, competent to sue and be sued as such person through its accredited manager or shebait, and if his interest or attitude is hostile to it, it may sue or conduct its proceedings through a next friend or a guardian to be appointed by the court. In as much as a religious beneficiary is immortal and its shebaits succeeding one another form a continuing representation of its property, a creditor of the shebait, claiming his debt out of the funds of the endowment, is not bound to bring an administrative suit on behalf of himself and all other creditors of the deceased shebait.[1] The idol is not to be treated as a chattel that can be carried about from one person to another. Its sanctity demands that it should be treated as a sacred object that cannot be removed from its temple or shrine where it was consecrated which is its permanent abiding place.[2] As a juridical person, an idol may acquire and hold property in its own name, but of course, its management must be entrusted to a living person, such as its manager or shebait. As already observed, such manager has customarily acquired an independent quantum of interest in its property which he is entitled to treat and dispose of as his separate property. (§ 2102.).

But apart from such property, the manager is bound to protect and preserve all property of the idol as if it were his own. (§ 2093.) But there are reasonable limits to his discretion. For example, the court is not bound to saddle the costs of an infructuous second appeal on the idol but may decree them as payable by the dharma karta personally.[3]

Judicial control.

283. The Public, religious and charitable endowments are subject to the following statutory control:—

(1) Any person interested in an endowment may sue alone in a case arising under the Religious Endowments Act, 1863; or

(2) He may, by a petition filed under the provisions of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, 1920, obtain information regarding it; or

(3) Any two or more persons interested therein, who intend to maintain a suit for any of the reliefs enumerated in section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, must follow the procedure therein prescribed:

(4) Provided that such suit or petition does not affect a suit otherwise maintainable for any of the reliefs not therein enumerated.

2132. Analogous Law.—Suits relating to religious endowments fall into three classes, namely:—

(1) Those supported by common law and independently of any statutory support;

(2) Those maintainable under Religious Endowments Act;

(3) Those provided by S. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code.

---

(1) Sharatchandra v. Dwarkanath, 58 C. 619.

(2) Meherbai v. Manganchand, 29 B. 96; Gulabbhai v. Subbaydesji, 52 B. 431 (433).

(3) Semble in Panchakshari v. Venkatratnam, 58 M. 160.

Religious Endowment Act, 1863.

2133. Statutory Control of Suits.—Turning to the statutory control of suits, it will be seen that two Acts of the Legislature prescribe such control. Of these, the first, the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, is really in three parts. The first (Ss. 1-13) substitutes non-official control for official control, theretofore exercised by the Board of Revenue over public religious endowments under the Regulations,[1] to that extent repealed by it. The second provides a measure of public control over all public religious endowments, (Ss. 14-21), and the third retains Government control over all public charitable (as distinct from religious) endowments which remain unaffected by the Act (Ss. 22, 23). The old Regulations extended only to the mofussil of Bengal and Madras, the two presidency towns being exempted, because the Supreme courts, and on their abolition, the High Courts had long been exercising their jurisdiction to control all charities in the name of the King who is constitutionally the protector of all charities. As it is, the Regulations had no force in the rest of India, including the Central Provinces[2] or the Bombay Presidency, excluding North Canara[3] where local Acts controlled such endowments,[4] till the enactment of the Act of 1863, which by prohibiting the Government of India or any officer of Government from interfering with the management of a religious trust otherwise than a provided by it[5] generally extended its policy to all India.

This Act does not apply to charitable as distinct from religious endowments which continued and still continue under Government management. As regards the religious endowments, which had been in charge of the Board of Revenue under the provisions of the Regulations, the Act prescribes the appointment of committees to be appointed by the local Governments for life unless removed for unfitness or misconduct. Section 14 of the Act is more general, and provides that any person interested in a public religious endowment, whatever its age or origin,[6] on previously obtaining leave of the court, may sue the manager or any member of the Committee "for any misfeasance, breach of trust or neglect of duty," and the civil court may, thereupon, decree specific performance of any act[7] and direct the removal of such manager or member and award damages or costs.

Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, 1920.

2134. The Act of 1863 is, thus restricted in its operation, since it failed to protect public trusts against the very abuses which had led to their wholesale control by the State. The non-official public opinion conscious of the return of such abuses demanded more effective public control of public trusts, resulting in the enactment of the half-hearted measure, known as the Charitable and Religious Trusts

(1) Beng. Reg. XIX of 1910; Madras Reg. VII of 1817.

(2) Jaiwanti v. Nagridas, 3 C.P.L. R. 11 (12).

(3) Hassainmian v. Collector, 21 B. 48.

(4) Act XI of 1852; Act XI of 1863 and Act VII of 1863.

(5) S. 22, Religious Endowments Act (XX of 1863).

(6) Syed Dilijan v. Bila Akhtari, 4 Pat. 741 (747) Badar Rahim v. Badsha Mia, (1934) C. 741; Debrus v. Kazee Abdool Rahim, 23 W.R. 453 O.A. 3 C. 324 P.C.; Protap Chandra v. Brojonath, 19 C. 275 (285); Narayana v. Chandra, 15 M. 1 (14); Muthu v. Gangathara, 17 M. 95; Jan Ali v. Ram Nath, 8 C. 32 (36-40) Sivayya v. Lami Reddi, 22 M. 223 (228); Ganee Singh v. Ram Gopal, 5 B.L.R. (A.C.) 55; Sheoratan v. Ram Pargash, 18 A. 227 (231); Dhurrum Singh v. Kissen Singh, 7 C. 767; Fakruddin v. Ackeni, 2 M. 197.

(7) E.g., to build a temple with funds raised for it.

Act[1] which prescribes a summary remedy to any person interested in such trust, who on a petition to the District Court may obtain particulars, nature and objects of the trust and of the value, condition, management and application of the subject-matter of the trust, and of the income belonging thereto, as also a direction that the accounts of the trust shall be examined and audited for a period not exceeding three years next prior to the date of the petition.[2]

2135. If the existence of the trust or the applicability of the Act is denied, the court will stay proceedings, upon the non-applicant undertaking to file a suit, for a declaration to that effect, within three months of the order.[3] "If no such undertaking is given, or if, after the expiry of the three months, no such suit has been instituted" the court shall itself decide the question,[4] and may pass such order as it deems fit,[5] and on the trustee's failure to comply with it, he shall be deemed to have committed a breach of trust, justifying the institution of a suit, by whom it does not say,[6] without sanction, as provided in S. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.[7] Such suit need not be limited to the same relief as was claimed in the petition, though it must be necessarily limited to that prescribed in S. 92 of the Code[8] unless the plaintiff is shown to be entitled to other reliefs under the general law.

The Act further enables any such trustee to apply to the court for opinion, advice or direction on any question affecting the management or administration of the trust property.[9] The procedure prescribed in the Act is summary, and the court cannot decide a question of title or any matter not fit for summary disposal. Any specified trust or class of trusts may be exempted from its operation by notification of the Governor-General in Council.[10]

2136. The net result of this Act is that if on a petition made thereunder, and an order passed thereon, the trustee fails to do as directed, he is declared to have committed a breach of trust dispensing with the previous sanction required by S. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code for a suit under that section,[11] but since the procedure under this Act is summary, nothing decided under it is res judicata.[12]

S. 92, Civil Procedure Code.

2137. The only section that goes further to correct abuses in the management of public charities is section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, though the relief prescribed by it is that limited by its seven clauses, added to which it is empowered to grant "such further and other relief as the nature of the case may require"—words which have been held to be construed ejusdem generis with the previous clauses describing the nature of the relief permitted.[13] And since some of the reliefs enumerated in this section overlap those mentioned in S. 14 of the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, and since the object of the two Acts is similar, a person

(1) Act XIV of 1920.
(2) Ib. S. 3.
(3) Ib. S. 5 (3).
(4) Ib. S. 5 (4).
(5) Ib. S. 5 (5).
(6) Presumably by any person "interested" and not necessarily the petitioner—Bapiraju v. Ramcharandas, (1933) M. 854.
(7) S. (6) Act XIV of 1920.
(8) Bapiraju v. Ramcharan Das, (1933) M. 854.
(9) S. 7, Act XIV of 1920.
(10) Ib. S. 1 (2).
(11) Ib. S. 6.
(12) S. 12, Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (XIV of 1920).
(13) Abdur Rahim v. Mhd. Barket Ali, 55 C. 519 (527) P.C.; Budh Singh v. Niradharan, 2 C.L.J. 431 (438); Budree Das Chaoni Lal, 33 C. 789 (810); Dharam Das v. Dharam Das, 40 I.C. (A.) 182.

obtaining sanction under the Act of 1863 has the option of proceeding under this section of the Code.[1]

2138. A comparison of the language of the enactment shows that—

(1) All the three Acts only deal with public endowments and so exclude those not wholly public but are only partially so.

(2) And since neither statute deals with private religious endowments, no suit in respect thereto can be brought under the authority of either statute. Such a suit, when maintainable, is independent of any statutory sanction, and is founded on the right of suit of a subject to vindicate his ordinary civil rights.

(3) Since the Act of 1863 does not apply to charitable endowments, a suit relating thereto can only be brought under S. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code.[2]

(4) While section 14 of that Act deals only with religious endowments, section 92 of the Code deals both with religious and charitable endowments. Further the reliefs under the two are not identical; e.g., a scheme and appointment of new trustees is only possible under the Code.[3]

(5) The only relief claimable under the endowments Act is the removal of the manager, and that too only for "misfeasance, breach of trust or neglect of duty," whereas under the Code he may be removed on any other ground, such as, incompetence, or forsaking the sect of which the idol is the deity, or introducing a new form of ritual or worship, and what is more, a new manager might be appointed in his place.

(6) That is, while the Religious Endowments Act deals with specific suits for a specific remedy, the Code deals with other suits, and though on a point or two it covers the same ground as the Religious Endowments Act, still the purpose and object of the two suits is different. This is implied in the saving clause in the Civil Procedure Code, which saves the precedure prescribed by the Religious Endowments Act for the institution of a suit thereunder.[4]

(7) It has been held that the "interest" which entitles a person to maintain a suit under the Act of 1863 is not the same as would suffice for a suit under the Code for which the "interest" of the plaintiff's must be direct, and closer.[5]

(8) Looking to the reliefs, claimable in the two cases, it is clear that the suits the two statutes contemplate are representative suits and not those limited to personal claims.

284. (1) A suit is maintainable by a person interested in an endowment in respect of a civil right concerning it:[6]

Suit maintainable.

---

(1) Najibuddin v. Amir Hasan, (1934) Pat. 443.

(2) Abdur Rahim v. Mhd. Barket Ali, 55 C. 519 (527) P.C., Budh Singh v. Niradharan, 2 C.L.J. 431 (438); Budree Das v. Chooni Lal, 33 C. 789 (790); Dharam Das v. Dharam Das, 40 I.C. (A) 182.

(3) Syed Diljan v. Bibi Akhtari, 4 Pat. 741.

(4) S. 92 (2), Civil Procedure Code.

(5) Ramchandra v. Parmeswaran, 42 M. 360.

(6) Budree Das v. Choonilal, 33 C. 789.

Previous sanction when necessary.

(2) Provided that a representative suit respecting a common right[1] in a public religious endowment for a relief specified in section 14 of the Religious Endowment Act, 1863, and that specified in section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code in respect of a public endowment, whether religious or charitable, cannot be instituted without the previous sanction as therein prescribed;

Sanction when dispensed with.

(3) Provided further that no previous sanction as is required for the institution of a suit by section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code shall be necessary where the trustee of such endowment has failed to comply with the directions of the court to furnish particulars thereof, or to have its accounts examined and audited on a petition made by a person interested under section 3 of the Charitable and Religious Endowments Act, 1920.[2]

Illustrations.

(a) A is the founder's heir. He sues for the ejectment of B who claims to be the manager of the temple which A's ancestor had founded. He is entitled to eject him.[3]

(b) A has the right of worship in a public temple of which B is the manager. B excludes A from the worship. A may sue B for an injunction and damages for his exclusion.[4]

(c) A has the right to have a special worship performed in a public temple of which B is the manager. B refuses to receive the money or to perform the worship. A may sue B for both.[5]

(d) A and B are two priests in a temple entitled to officiate by turns. B refuses A's turn of worship. A may sue B.[6]

(e) A grants land to his spiritual Guru B, for offering prayers to him. A's descendant C sues B's descendant D for his removal on the ground of misconduct. If the endowment be public no suit would lie for non-compliance with the proviso. But if the endowments be private C's suit is maintainable.[7]

(f) A worshipper at a temple sues its manager that a permanent lease by him of certain temple lands is void. The suit is neither covered by S. 14 of the Religious Endowments Act or of S. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is, therefore, maintainable on the general ground stated in clause (1).[8]

(g) A sues for a declaration that certain property in possession of B belongs to an endowment and is not B's personal property. Such relief is outside the scope of S. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, and is, therefore, claimable.[9]

(h) A sues B for a declaration that the appointment by him of C as his successor as the head of a muth was illegal. A can sue B and C without having recourse to the procedure prescribed in S. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, as the relief is not specified in that section.[10]

2139. Analogous Law.—From their very nature religious and charitable endowments cannot be treated like secular property. Consequently, civil law recognizes only limited rights concerning them as fit subjects of

---

(1) Budree Das v. Choonilal, 33 C. 789; Appanna v. Narasinga, 45 M. 113 F.B.

(2) Act XIV of 1920.

(3) Vaidyanatha v. Swaminatha, 47 M. 884 P.C.

(4) Vengamuthu v. Pandaveswar, 6 M. 151.

(5) Elayalwar v. Numberumal, 23 M. 298; Amriteshwara v. Murugappa, 27 I.C. (M.) 886.

(6) Amriteshwara v. Murugappa, 27 I. C. (M.) 886.

(7) Sathappayyar v. Periasami, 14 M. 1 (7,8).

(8) Ashraf Ali v. Mhd. Nurjjana, 49 I.C. (C.) 355; Monohar Das v. Tarini Charan, (1929) C. 612; as to interest of worshipper, see Oseri v. Bawa Balmukund Dass, 24 I.C. (S.) 712.

(9) Abdur Rahman v. Mhd. Barkat Ali, 55 C. 519.

(10) Nataraja v. Kailasam, 44 M. 283 (292, 293).

civil litigation. Such matters are referred to in the preceding sections. Under S. 6 of the Transfer of Property Act a public office or public duties which includes a religious office and religious duties cannot be transferred, though its transfer within limits is permissible.[1] Then again, since endowments are intended to be perpetual, in which the public, or a section of the public are interested, it follows that their corpus is inalienable, though for that very reason, law permits the intervention of the courts to protect and preserve them, and when they cease to be the subject of religious sentiment their alienation is permitted[2] and they then fall into the category of secular property which is held subject to the ordinary rules of civil law in which contractual and customary rights and obligations are recognized and enforced.

The one rule respecting endowments is that all such rights and obligations, when not merely contractual or tortious can only be enforced by a person "interested" therein, thereby keeping out an officious intermeddler on the ground of obvious policy.

Further, in regard to public endowments law has provided a further check by requiring the previous sanction of the court or the Advocate-General before a person can sue for a claim in respect of certain defined rights of management, beyond which law is left free to take its course. The subject will be found set out in the sequel.

2140. Both S. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code and the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act,[3] deal with "public" trusts; and as the Indian Trusts Act[4] excludes all religious and charitable trusts, whether public or private from its purview, it follows that the Hindu endowments are, as such, outside the scope of that Act, and being in the nature of trusts, limited to a section of the community, they partake of the nature of private endowments to which neither S. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, nor any of the provisions of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act applies. But such trusts are still not outside the cognizance of the courts who will protect them by preventing abuse and supervising their administration, if a proper case is made out.[5]

And since the statutes not only relate to public trusts[6] but limit themselves to the specific remedies therein specified[7] and since they do not bar other suits[8] it follows that other reliefs in respect of public trusts and all reliefs in respect of private trusts may be claimed ex debito justitiae in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction.

2141. Right of Suit.—Any person may institute a suit whether he has a legal cause of action or not; but such a plaintiff would be promptly non-suited if he has rushed into the court without a civil right. In the case of an endowment, whether public or private, law has prescribed a minimum safeguard that no one can sue unless he is at least "interested"[9] in the endowment. This

Clause (1).

(1) 1 Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), § 259, p. 177.

(2) Ramaswamy v. Venkata, 9 M. I. A. 344.

(3) Act XIV of 1920.

(4) S. 1, Savings Act, XI of 1882.

(5) Cf. Gopal Lal v. Purnachandra, 49 C. 459 (469) P.C.

(6) Ibid.

(7) Abdur Rahim v. Syed Abu Mohomed, 55 C. 519 (530) P.C.

(8) Ib., pp. 526, 527.

(9) This word is defined in the Act of 1863 (1) as a "person having a right of attendance, or having been in the habit of attending at the performance of the worship or service, of any mosque, temple or religious establishment, or of partaking of the benefit of any alms." (See S. 15). This definition was framed for the does not, of course, mean, that others cannot sue, for if they have a civil right they are entitled to enforce it. But such must be acquired ex contractu or ex delicto. Such cases apart, no plaintiff can sue in respect of an endowment unless he has some "interest" in it. The endowment may be public or private. Whether it is the one or the other, one not "interested" is an intermeddler, and is not permitted to sue, since such suits if permitted would expose an endowment to constant harassment. The "interest" required might be direct or indirect,[1] large or small, but it must be an interest as a guarantee of the suitor's good faith.[2]

What "interest" necessary.

2142. The "interest" required may be neither direct nor measurable in money, since it will suffice if it is such as the civil law would consider as sufficient. (§ 2141.) In so holding the Privy Council considered the fact that the mere fact that the plaintiff was the descendant of the founder of a public charity, though in the female line was sufficient to entitle her to sue for the removal of a trustee who had been improperly appointed to manage it. In this case it was held that the plaintiff could sue, though she never had occasion to partake of any benefit from the chatram.[3] Similarly, in other cases the founder's descendant was held entitled to remove the mahant of a math who had got married and had children whom he maintained out of its income.[4] It is not easy to define the interest that would qualify a person to maintain a suit, since the interest one possesses must differ according to the object and nature of the endowment and his own relation thereto. But the touchstone of his right is his "interest" in the endowment. If the endowment is a private one, the founder, and his descendants, his heirs,[5] members of the sect or order to which the endowment belongs, and even the worshipper possesses sufficient qualifying interest to start the suit. But if it be a public endowment, the same reason narrows down the circle of those to whom a suit is permitted, and where the relief affects its internal autonomy the statutes prescribe certain formalities as a preliminary to its maintenance.

The question of interest does not depend upon the numerical strength of the persons interested in an endowment, since in a private endowment e.g., a family shrine, the number of members might be conceivably larger than in a public endowment belonging to a small order, the membership of which might be comparatively small, though such must be exceptional cases, since a public endowment is one in which a larger number is ordinarily interested than in a private one. On the other hand, even in such endowments a person interested may claim a relief which does not impugn upon its normal autonomy. In such cases, even the statutory formalities need not be complied with. As already observed, such interest may be great limited purpose of that Act, but though a good serviceable definition, it is not exhaustive, since the founder's heir has a sufficient though only an indirect interest in the endowment, Vaidynath v. Swaminatha, 47 M. 884 (891) P.C. in which it is pointed out that the word "direct" in the section was omitted by the amending Act of 1888 (S. 44 Act VII of 1888) which overruled certain Calcutta cases in which such interest was literally insisted on.

---

(1) Ib., Sathappayar v. Periasami, 14 M. 1; Rabindra v. Chandicharan, (1931) C. 864.

(2) Barboni Coal Co. v. Gokulanand, 61 C. 313 (317 P.C.; Cf. Hukumchand v. Maharaj, 12 Pat. 881 P.C.

(3) Vaidyanatha v. Swaminatha, 47 M. 884 (891) P.C.

(4) Sattappayyar v. Periasami, 14 M. 1: Hidait v. Afzul, 4 N.W.P. H.C.R. 420.

(5) Sathappayar v. Periasami, 14 M. 1; Rabindra v. Chandicharan, (1931) C. 864.

or small, direct or indirect, still it must be a qualifying interest in the sense of its being sufficient in the eye of the law to entitle him to maintan a suit with or without the pre-requisite sanction. Thus a member of the Hindu Community may sue for a declaration that an institution is a public one to which the entire Hindu community is entitled to go and worship.[1] So it is competent to the founder's descendant to protect the trust by a suit complaining of the misappropriation of its funds by the trustee in collusion with the beneficiaries,[2] or on the ground of their being his private property.[3]

Such is the right of a worshipper complaining of obstruction in the performance of his devotion to an idol or temple,[4] or of the founder to enforce the trusts[5] or a suit by a trustee,[6] or by a committee, appointed under the Act for damages for misappropriation or for an injunction.[7] Such is his right to be a trustee,[8] or a co-trustee,[9] or to his turn of office,[10] or for the removal of an obstruction to his management,[11] or for the removal of the defendant as not entitled to act as the manager.[12] So, again, the plaintiff may sue for performing the customary special form of worship for the plaintiff on payment which the priests cannot refuse;[13] So one priest may restrain another from introducing a new form of worship.[14]

2143. So again, it is perfectly competent to one trustee to sue another for accounts of the trust,[15] or for specific share out of the dedicated property for the benefit of the founder,[16] or for recovery of the entire property by him on the ground that the trust has not been acted upon,[17] or for recovery of possession of the dedicated property from the manager who was claiming it as his private property, without praying for any of the three reliefs contemplated in S. 14 of the Act, i.e., for removal of the manager, specific performance of an act by him, or for damages,[18] or a suit by a trustee for recovery of property from an ex-trustee who had been dismissed from his office by a temple committee,[19] or a suit for recovery of property or damages against the heirs of the deceased manager for property lost by his breach of trust or for negligenae,[20] or a suit against the alienee for the declaration of the invalidity of an alienation made by the manager of trust property,[21]

(1) Ganpat Pujari v. Kanaiyalal, (1933) Pat. 246.
(2) Gopinath v. Delhi Cloth Mills, (1932) L. 670.
(3) Vaidyanatha v. Swaminatha, 47 M. 884 (894) P.C.
(4) Abdul Rahman v. Yar Mahammad, 3 A, 636; Quare in Radabai v. Chimnaji, 3 B. 27 (28).
(5) Hidait v. Afzul, 4 N.W.P.H.C.R. 420; Sathappayyar v. Periasami, 14 M. 1 (14).
(6) Singarachari v. Krishnaswami, 19 M.L.J. 513 : 4 I.C. 874. (Judgment gives no reason for its view).
(7) Puddolabah v. Ram Gopal, 9 C. 133; Bashikar v. Thathachariar, (1927) M. 551.
(8) Vishwanath v. Rambhat, 15 B. 152, Majijan v. Dhadeen, 32 C. 273.
(9) Miya Valiulla v. Sayad Bava, 22 B. 496 (499).
(10) Amirteshwar v. Murugappa, 27 I. C. (M.) 886.
(11) Navroji v. Dastur, 28 B. 20 (54).
(12) Gyana v. Kandasami, 10 M. 375, Budree Das v. Chunnilal, 33 C. 789 (807, 808) (Cl. 2 of S. 92 C.P.C. was added two years later in 1908 but it does not affect the main portion of the judgment.) See Appanna v. Narasinga, 45 M. 113 F.B.
(13) Elayalwar v. Namberumal, 28 M. 298 followed in Amirteshwara v. Murugappa, 27 I.C. (M.) 886.
(14) Ib.
(15) Appanna v. Narasinga, 45 M. 113 F.B.
(16) Kalub Hossein v. Meherum, 4 N. W.P.H.C.R. 155.
(17) Hidait v. Afzul, 2 N.W.P.H.C. R. 420.
(18) Mahalinga v. Vencoba, 4 M. 157.
(19) Virasami v. Subba Ram, 6 M. 54.
(20) Jeyangarulavaru v. Durma, 4 M. H.C.R. 2; Manally v. Vaidelinga, 1 M. 343; Virasami v. Subba Ram, 6 M. 54, Nellaiyappa v. Thangamma, 21 M. 406.
(21) Siwayya v. Rami, 22 M. 223.

or a suit to establish a right to share in the management,[1] or a suit by the trustee dismissed from office for a declaration that the dismissal is wrongful or for restoration to office,[2] or a suit by a manager for a declaration of his title as the rightful manager and for recovery of possession as such,[3] or for the appointment of himself or some other person as manager.[4]

Such and similar suits are opposed to no provision of law, and being a violation of one's civil rights, are clearly maintainable.

2144. Case for Sanction.—As already stated, sanction of the Advocate-General or of his substitute, provided in S. 92, is necessary to maintain a suit. It is a condition imposed to prevent the institution of frivolous and vexatious suits.[5] The suit under the Code is a representative suit, in which the plaintiffs represent the interest of the body of beneficiaries. The fact that the plaintiffs are two out of the five trustees does not entitle them to sue the remaining three without sanction.[6] Where two persons start a suit with due sanction, the addition of a third person as co-plaintiff does not necessitate fresh sanction.[7] Where two persons obtain sanction, and one of them afterwards dies, a fresh sanction is required to institute a suit. But when it is once properly instituted by the authorized plaintiffs, the death of one of them does not determine the suit, which may be continued by surviving plaintiff.[8] But where more than two persons have obtained sanction, they must all sue. It is not sufficient that two of them sue without the rest.[9] A sanction given under S. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, may be quite general in its terms, though the application for such sanction contains only one specific prayer. Where such general sanction is given and a suit instituted, the reliefs need not be confined to those that are asked for in the application for sanction. Where the person who originally obtained sanction and filed the suit, died during its pendency, the suit would nevertheless continue as a suit not prosecuted by individuals for their own interests but as representatives of the general public.[10]

Clause (2) (a).

2145. Suits requiring No Sanction.—It is a principle of equity that where there is a right there is always a remedy; ubi jus ibi remedium. But though this is the general rule, it is subject to the exception that where the injury is common to a large body of men, as an obstruction to a highway, apart from punishing the wrongdoer by indictment, no single person can maintain a civil action against him unless he has suffered some special damage, as if he falls into a pit in the highway. The fact that the wrongdoer is a public trust is no exception to the rule. Any person having a personal right the denial of which has caused him special damage is en-

Clause (3).

(1) Agri v. Vishnu, 3 M.H.C.R. 198.
(2) Amin v. Ibraim, 4 M.H.C.R. 112; Virasami v. Subba Ram, 6 M. 54.
(3) Agri v. Vishnu, 3 M.H.C.R. 198; Mahalinga v. Vencoba, 4 M. 157; Athavulla v. Gouse, 11 M. 283.
(4) Nellaiyappa v. Thangama, 21 M. 406.
(5) Sajedur v. Gour Mohan, 24 C. 418.
(6) Tricumdas v. Khimji, 16 B. 626.
(7) Ram Churn v. Protap, 2 C.L.J. 448; Varadayya v. Munusamy, 10 M.L.T. 504 : 13 I.C. 232.
(8) Parmesari v. Girdhari, 30 I.C. 240.
(9) Maddala v. Vadapalli, 29 M.L.J. 231 : 30 I.C. 236.
(10) Anand Rao v. Ram Das, 48 C. 493 P.C.

titled to maintain a suit. This is the substantive law and it remains unaffected by the two processual Acts which prescribe for a previous sanction, in certain cases in which any of the reliefs therein specified is claimed.

Apart from the pecuniary and personal interest so arising a person may be otherwise interested in a public or a private endowment, because his ancestors had founded it, or because he himself as a member of the community, sect or religion was interested in a religious foundation or as a member of the general public in a public charity. Both sections 14 of the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, and 92 of the Code indicate the nature of interest entitling one to sue for the reliefs there specified; but apart from those reliefs a person may claim other reliefs if he is "interested" in the endowment without the prerequisite of a previous sanction.

2146. Charitable Endowments.—By the common law, the Supreme Courts of Judicature were entitled to control public charities. S. 41 of the East India Company Act, 1813,[1] conferred powers on the Advocate-General similar to those of the Attorney-General in England. Similarly, Ss. 8-11 of the Official Trustees Act[2] enables any person to appoint the Official Trustee, with his consent, to be the trustee of any property for a charitable purpose or otherwise, whereupon the property so granted shall vest in him. The Official Trustee shall be paid such remuneration as he may, by the deed of settlement, be declared to be entitled to receive.[3] The Official Trustee may be appointed in place of the other trustees refusing to act, as provided in S. 10, in which case he is entitled to receive the remuneration as fixed by S. 11. The jurisdiction of the Official Trustees is limited to the three presidencies. While these two Acts made some provision for the administration of charities within the jurisdiction of the High Courts, similar charities in the mofussil remained unprovided for. These are now dealt with by the Charitable Endowments Act, 1890,[4] which enables the author of the trust, or the trustees, if already appointed,[5] to apply to the Local Government, which may settle a scheme for the administration of any property[6] and vest the property in a trustee called the Treasurer of Charitable Endowments,[7] on such terms as to the application of the property, or the income thereof, as may be agreed on between the Local Government and the person or persons making the application and the property, shall thereupon so vest accordingly.[8] The scheme so settled may, in a similar manner, be modified or substituted. The Local Government is, in the exercise of its powers under the Act, now no longer subject to the control of the Governor-General in Council.[9]

As previously stated, the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act[10] also enables a person interested in a public charitable trust to obtain information, and the trustee to obtain opinion, advice and direction of the Court. (§ 2135.)

---

(1) 53 Geo. III, C. 155.
(2) XVII of 1864.
(3) Ib., S. 9.
(4) VI of 1890.
(5) Ib., S. 6.
(6) Ib., Ss. 4, 5.
(7) VI of 1890, S. 3.
(8) Ib., S. 11.
(9) VI of 1890, S. 16, repealed by the Devolution Act (XXXVIII of 1920), Sch. I.
(10) Act XIV of 1920.

CHAPTER XXI.

LAW OF SURVIVORSHIP.

2147. Topical Introduction.—The Mitakshara view of property is generally the negation of individual rights in property. The unit of ownership is the family. It is the antithesis of modern law where the unit of ownership is the individual. All rights which the individual possesses in a family are by way of exceptions to the general rule that he has no separate rights. This being the primary conception of coparcenership, it will be seen that, strictly speaking, there can be no law of succession or inheritance. Births into the family increase its numbers; deaths diminish them. Subject to this ebb and flow, the family continues. The only check upon its continuance is partition. The law of survivorship is thus the law of increase rather than the law of succession; for since death removes no one with any individual rights there is no occasion for succession, properly so called. This is the orthodox Mitakshara view. It has been to a certain extent, improved upon by the Dayabhag. But in either case, the law of succession is so largely dependent upon the law of partition that the one cannot be understood without the other; and after the latter is mastered, there is little or nothing to understand in the other.

2148. The case of non-coparcenary property is different. For since, it is capable of individual ownership, it is necessarily subject to the law of succession. In other words, devolution by survivorship is applicable, not to all joint property, but only to that which constituted the unobstructed heritage of the deceased. As already said, this property comprises only that in which a coparcenary right is acquired by birth, or which is inherited from the father or other paternal male ancestor, not exceeding three degrees higher than himself, including its accretions. Other property which, though joint if comprised in the obstructed heritage, being inherited, from female ancestors or from maternal male or from separate paternal collateral relation, would be subject to the ordinary law of inheritance and not survivorship. But a person's self-acquired property descends to his male issue, if joint, by survivorship and not by inheritance.[1] This is in accordance with the rule that a man and his male issue are one. It will thus be seen that survivorship is both a rule of property, as it is a rule of succession, and in considering whether it applies, regard must be had not only to the nature of the property, but also to the relationship of those who claim by survivorship to the deceased.

In this chapter, the rules which govern quasi-succession to coparcenary property are alone set out. The next chapter will deal with the law of inheritance.

---

(1) Obiter in Nana v. Ramchandra, 44 M. 499 F.B. 32 M. 377; Vairavan v. Srinivas Chariar, Saving of Dayabhag succession.

285. Nothing in this chapter applies to members of a Dayabhag family who take by inheritance, and not by survivorship.

[Note.—See Topical Introductions to Chapters XIII XXII and XXIV, post. As explained in § 2156, devolution by survivorship is inapplicable to members of Dayabhag family, who, as stated in this section, take by succession or inheritance, but not by survivorship.]

Survivorship in impartible estate.

286. Survivorship applies to all property, movable or immovable, partible or impartible.[1]

Right of survivorship.

287. (1) When a person, possessed of coparcenary property, dies, his interest therein passes to the other coparceners then living, by right of survivorship, who take it in their own right and not in trust for the heirs of the deceased.[2]

(2) Provided that where he has left sons or grandsons in the male line his interest survives to them to the exclusion of his other coparceners.[3]

(3) Where such property passes to the surviving coparceners, they take per stirpes and not per capita.[4]

2149. Analogous Law.—From what has been said before, it is clear that coparcenary property, held by the joint family, is in the nature of property held by a coparcenary with perpetual existence, the members whereof vary, but the death of a member has no greater effect beyond causing a lapse of his share.[5] Those who are born into the family and those who go out of it, do not affect the joint property beyond varying the shares of the rest. Consequently, when a coparcener dies, his interest survives and passes to his other coparceners who "hold the property, which they take by survivorship legally and equitably for themselves and not in trust for the heirs of the deceased."[6] Of course, the estate acquired by survivorship is subject to defeasance on the coming into existence, by adoption or otherwise, of a new coparcener.[7]

2150. Succession by Survivorship.—Succession by survivorship is said to be limited to two descriptions of property, namely: (i) what is taken as un-obstructed heritage (§§ 1003-1005) and property acquired by means of it, and (ii) what forms the joint property of re-united coparceners;[8] but there is authority for the view that it applies equally to all joint family property, and not merely to that which is ancestral joint property. In other words, it applies equally to all property des-

---

(1) Shibaprasad v. Prayag Kumari, 59 C. 1399 (1413) P.C.

(2) Sadabart v. Foolbash, 14 W.R. 340 F.B.

(3) Mit., I-V-2; Dayakram Sangrah, I-I-3; Debi Pershad v. Thakur Dial, 1 A. 105 (115) F.B.

(4) Debi Prasad v. Thakur Dial, 1 A. 105 (113) F.B.

(5) Katama Nachiar v. Raja of Sivagunga, 9 M.I.A. 539 (611); Shyam Lal v. Byaj Narain, (1917) Pat. 121 : 39 I.C. 36.

(6) Sadabarat v. Foolbash, 14 W.R. 340 F.B.

(7) Madana v. Purushothama, 38 M. 1105 (1118).

(8) Jesoda v. Sheo Pershad, 17 C. 33.

cribed in section 109, and not merely to those described in the first two clauses of its sub-section,[1] that is to say, as much to ancestral property and acquisitions made with its aid as to property acquired with joint funds or by the joint labours of the members of the family or to that thrown into the common stock: in one word, to all coparcenary property as distinct from property which is joint but is not held in coparcenership. As a rule, survivorship does not extend to property known as obstructed heritage, which, as before stated, comprises joint property jointly inherited from a collateral or from or through a female, as for example from a maternal grandfather.[2] And there is a radical difference between survivorship and inheritance, since survivorship is an incident of coparcenary right and arises on birth, while a right of inheritance is only acquired on death.[3] One is the incident of a vested right, the other is a mere contingency. A right by survivorship must necessarily vary with the number of coparceners at any time, and with every increase by birth or adoption, the quantum of undivided interest of each of the coparceners is correspondingly reduced. If, on the other hand, any of them dies, his share passes to the rest, whose interest is correspondingly increased. As explained before, coparcenership is a joint right which the coparcener cannot devise or alien except in the limited circumstances permitted by law.

The right of survivorship has, therefore, nothing in common with the law of inheritance. As, however, it is a right affected by death, all it needs is a passing reference to its leading principles, by way of comparison with the doctrine of inheritance.

2151. The acquisition of a right by survivorship, on the death of coparcener, depends upon the community of interest and unity of possession between all the members of a united family having common property. On the death of any one of them, the others take by survivorship, that in which they had, during the deceased's lifetime, a common interest and common possession. But as the law of partition shows, as to the separately acquired and separate property of one member of a united family, the other members of that family have neither community of interest nor unity of possession. The foundation, therefore, of a right to take such property by survivorship fails.[4] Strictly speaking, a coparcenary right must, on the death of a coparcener, pass to all the surviving coparceners. And though this is the theory, practice and usage have sanctioned deviations, the nature and extent of which varies, with the result that, in certain cases, as for example, in the case of coparcenership under the Dayabhag law, the members hold their property in quasi-severalty, so that, on the death of a coparcener, his interest devolvss on his own heirs. This is a case of real inheritance. But between it and strict coparcenership there are various grades. For instance, the share of a coparcener, on his demise,

Clause (1).

---

(1) Gopalsami v. Arunachellam, 27 M. 32; Karsondas v. Gangabai, 32 B. 479 (492, 493).

(2) Mhd. Husain v. Kisva Nandan, I. L.R. (1937) A. 655 (664, 665) P.C.; distinguishing Venkayamma v. Venkataramanna, 25 M. 678 P.C.; contra in Mansingh v. Nawlakhwati, 2 Pat. 607.

(3) Ghosal v. Ghosal, 31 B. 25.

(4) Katama Nachiar v. Raja of Shivgunga, 9 M.I.A. 539.

does not pass equally to all his other coparceners, but only to his own sons, grandsons and great-grandsons, to the exclusion of his brothers. In this respect, rules of survivorship and inheritance agree. But the analogy ceases there. In the case of other relations, if the property was joint, the persons taking by survivorship would be different to those who take by inheritance, since survivorship is founded on the theory of joint ownership, while inheritance is founded on that of exclusive ownership. Hence, in a separated family, holding joint family property, brothers would succeed to the property of a deceased brother, excluding a nephew who is not entitled to inherit with a brother of the deceased brother.[1]

2152. As coparcenership is only possible within the circle of one's family, the question of coparcenership is one of family law. A person cannot create coparcenary rights by contract. (S. 122.) It must arise by law. Women cannot be coparceners.[2] Hence, on the death of the owner, his coparcenary rights may pass to one set of persons and his separate property to another. Where, for instance, the owner has left a brother and a wife, his coparcenary interest will survive to his brother, while his separate property will devolve on his wife.[3]

Again, if the property be impartible, it devolves not on the coparcener nearest in blood but on the nearest coparcener in the senior line.[4] The succession to an impartible estate follows the rule of survivorship according to the personal law of the owners.[5] This has already been explained. (S. 214.)

There may be coparcenary of dancing girls, but in this case it can not be held that their daughters acquire by birth an interest in the ancestral property. Where, however, the partie were dancing girls, and the mother, daughter and grand-daughter all lived together, put their earnings together, and acted in all respects as members of a joint family they were held to constitute a joint family, with rights of survivorship.[6]

2153. This is the general rule but it is subject to one exception stated in clause (2) supported by an express text of Mitakshara.[7]

Clause (2).

This is the right of representation of a person by his sons, grandsons and the great-grandsons, or as it is explained, the father together with his son, grandson and great-grandson forms a single individual, and on the death of the former, the latter take his share to the exclusion of his undivided brothers. The rule, then, that the interest of a coparcener, on his death, passes to the other coparceners is subject to the exception that, where he has left male issue, it passes to them and not to the general body of survivors.[8] The case is the same where the widow of a deceased coparcener takes a son in adoption.

---

(1) Ralla Ram v. Malva Ram, (1911) P.W.R. 123 : 12 I.C. 308.
(2) Ananda v. Nownit, 9 C. 315.
(3) Varadaperumal v. Ardaneri, 1 M. H.C.R. 412.
(4) Ravnehwar v. Chandi Prasad, 38 C. 721.
(5) Gur Pershad v. Dhori, 38 C. 182; contra in Nachiappa v. Sivasubramania, 29 M. 453.
(6) Kokilambal v. Chandrammal, 86 I. C. 633 : (1925) M. 902.
(7) Mit., I-V-2; Daya-kram Sangrah, I-I-3.
(8) Debi Pershad v. Thakur Dial, 1 A. 105 (115) F.B.

2154. Acquisition Per Stirpes.—For the same reason, the rights of other coparceners are enlarged per stirpes and not per capita, since the rule of representation is equally applicable to all coparceners.[1]

Clause (3).

The variation of an estate by operation of the law of survivorship merely varies its quantum: it does not vary its incidents. When, therefore, a joint family constitutes of one tenant, the death of one of its members has not the effect of determining the tenancy, which the survivors are entitled to continue.[2] So, the change of a vighotia village into a bhagdari village was held to be merely a change for administrative convenience, involving no alteration in the law of succession.[3]

2155. Survivorship when Defeated.—From what has been stated before, it is clear that the right of survivorship will be defeated in the following cases, namely:—

(1) Where a coparcener is disqualified as provided in section 123.

(2) Where a coparcener has lost his interest as provided in section 124.

(3) Where a coparcener has, as provided in section 126 (6), alienated his share.

(4) Where the share of a coparcener is attached during his lifetime in execution of a decree against him, as provided in section 127 (iv).

(5) But, if in the last case, the deceased coparcener be the father,[4] then, not only his interest but the entire coparcenary interest inclusive of that of his sons is liable to attachment even after his death, in execution of a decree against him for a debt of his own not illegal or immoral as provided in section 158 (3).

(6) Where on the insolvency of a coparcener, being the father or a junior coparcener, mentioned in section 126, his interest has vested in the Official Assignee or the Receiver as the case may be.[5]

In case (4) if the attachment was made before judgment, followed up by a decree in the coparcener's lifetime, it is a question whether on the subsequent death of the judgment-debtor, his interest would pass to the survivors. According to the Bombay and Patna Courts it does,[6] but according to the Madras court it does not, the reason given being that an attachment before judgment serves the purpose of an attachment in execution of the decree, since no fresh attachment is then necessary.[7] It is submitted that this view is sound since all that the law

(1) Debi Prasad v. Thakur Dial, 1 A. 105 (113) F.B.

(2) Mahabir v. Bhagwanti, 38 A. 325.

(3) Lalu Dayal v. Lalu Gopal, 12 Bom.L.R. 573 : 7 I.C. 659.

(4) Used in the sense defined in S. 112.

(5) S. 52 (2) (a) Pres. Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), and Ss. 2 (1) and 20 (2) Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920) as to father, see Sat Narain v. Behari Lal, 6 L. 84 P.C.; other coparceners, see S. 126 (6). For U.P. see Anant Singh v. Kalka Singh, 5 O.L.J. 665 : 48 I.C. 526.

(6) Subrao v. Mahadevi, 38 B. 105; Luxman v. Vinayak, 40 B. 329; Sundarlal v. Raghunandan, 3 Pat. 250 (256) (case obiter as court found that there was no attachment; still relied on O. 34, R. 10, C.P.C.).

(7) O. 38, R. 1, Civil Procedure Code: Baiher Krishna v. Lakshmana, 4 M. 302 requires, is that the share should have been attached, which gives the decree-holder a right to prosecute his remedy against the property attached.

2156. Dayabhag Family Different.—This is, however, the view of the orthodox school, the survival of an ancient institution in which individual, as distinguished from the corporate, rights are totally ignored: The Dayabhag admits the rights of the widow, the daughter, the mother and the paternal grandmother "under express texts."[1] And as will be seen in the sequel, although the Dayabhag places in the forefront the doctrine of spiritual efficacy, it does not subscribe to the orthodox rules of survivorship, but rather treats the coparcener in a joint family as holding his interest in quasi-severalty which, on his death, passes to his heirs by descent and not by survivorship.

Survivorship amongst heirs.

288. Members of a joint family inheriting the ancestral or the self-acquired property of their paternal ancestor, take the estate subject to the rule of survivorship.[2]

Illustration.

(a) Two joint brothers A and B inherit an estate from their maternal grandfather. A dies, leaving him surviving his widow C. C would take A's share, to the exclusion of B.[3]

(b) Two joint step-brothers A and B were the sons of two sisters, to whose father they inherited. A dies, leaving him surviving his widow C. A's share descends to C, to the exclusion of B.

2157. Analogous Law.—This section deals with two species of property, inherited by a member of a joint family—ancestral property of his paternal ancestor, and his self-acquired property, both of which pass to the heirs as coparceners subject to the rule of survivorship, but the property that constitutes obstructed heritage, as before explained (S. 114 is not subject to survivorship, being subject to the law of inheritance. The one exception to this rule was understood to be the property that a coparcener took from his maternal grand-father, which though obstructed, was nevertheless, held to be subject to devolution by survivorship. This view proceeded upon a statement of the Privy Council, which was criticised in the last edition of this work and reasons given why it was should not be so treated.[4] This view has since been affirmed by that high Tribunal.[5]

The principle of this section is that members of a joint family inheriting property from a common paternal ancestor acquire it subject to the

---

(307); Muthusami v. Chunnammal, 26 M. L.J. 517 : 24 I.C. (M.) 320; Thadi Ramamurthi v. Moola Kamiah, 24 I.C. (M.) 667; Sankaralinga v. Official Receiver, 49 M.L.J. 616 : 92 I.C. 504 : (1924) M. 72; cf. Raj Chunder v. Isser Chunder, (1865) Bourke (O.C.) 139, followed in Ganu Singh v. Jangi Lal, 26 C. 531 (535).

(1) Dayabhag, XI-VI-11.

(2) Venkayyamma v. Venkatu, 25 M. 678 P.C., reversing O.A. Venkata v. Appu, 20 M. 207, overruling contra in Gopalasami v. Chinnasami, 7 M. 458; Saminadha v. Thangathanni, 19 M. 70; Jasoda v. Sheo Pershad, 17 C. 33, following Chote Lal v. Chunnoolal, 4 C. 744 P. C.; Mattu v. Doraisinga, 3 M. 290 P.C.; Vythinathu v. Yeggia, M. 382 (385). Muhd. Husain v. Kishvanandan, I.L.R. (1937) A. 655 (665) P.C.

(3) Ib.

(4) Hindu Code (3rd Ed.), § 2555 p. 1255.

(5) Mhd. Hussain v. Kishva Nandan, I.L.R. (1937) A. 655 (664, 665) P.C., distinguishing Venkayamma v. Venkata, 25 M. 678 P.C.

ordinary incidents of such property, one of which is survivorship. In such a case, it is immaterial that the members have sons of their own.[1] But where the sons of different mothers inherit to their common maternal grand-father, the same rule is inapplicable, the reason being that "they belong to different families and there could be no joint property with the right of survivorship between them."[2] It has been held that joint sons succeeding to the stridhan of their mother or to her brother take severally without the benefit of survivorship.[3]

When coparcenary property devolves on heirs.

289. Where the deceased was at his death the sole coparcener, his estate devolves upon his heirs in the same manner as if it were his separate property.[4]

2158. Analogous Law.—The right of survivorship postulates the existence of coparceners. If, therefore, the deceased was the sole surviving coparcener, he can give or bequeath his property like any other owner, whether the property be ancestral or self-acquired.[5] A divided coparcener possesses the same right.[6] "By the nature of the case the joint family must commence and also must end, when it does end, in an individual, who holds the property in a separate condition. If this individual dies without becoming the root of a joint family, the Mitakshara law gives an interim enjoyment of the property to his female representatives, where there are any, and then transfers it to a collateral heir as the origin of a new joint family."[7]

Survivorship amongst sons, daughters and co-widows.

290. (1) Two or more sons, grandsons and great-grandsons inheriting the separate or the self-acquired property of their ancestor take as joint tenants subject to survivorship inter se.[8]

(2) In default of the issue, where two or more widows[9] and daughters[10] inherit the estate of their husband or father respectively, they take subject to survivorship inter se except that in Bombay, and the territory subject to the Mayukh law, daughters take an absolute interest and are not subject to survivorship.[11]

(3) Save as above, all relations inheriting an estate do so as tenants-in-common.[12]

2159. Analogous Law.—In the absence of any coparceners, the property of the deceased devolves on his widow, or widows, in the latter case, with the right of survivorship inter se, with the result that the suc-

---

(1) Karuppai v. Sankar, 27 M. 300 (312, 313) F.B.

(2) Vythinatha v. Yeggia, 27 M. 382 (385).

(3) Karuppai v. Sankar, 27 M. 300 F.B.; Parsan v. Somli, 36 B. 424.

(4) Vythinatha v. Yeggia, 27 M. 382 (385); Karuppai v. Sankar, 27 M. 300, F.B.; Parsan v. Somli, 36 B. 424.

(5) Venkatanarayana v. Subbammal, 39 M. 107 (112) P.C.

(6) Venkiah v. Guraviah, 51 M.L.J. 669 : 96 I.C. 290 : (1926) M. 757.

(7) Ram Narain v. Pertum Singh, 20 W.R. 189 (192); Nallatambi v. Mukunda, 3 M.H.C.R. 455; Saminadha v. Thangathani, 19 M. 70 (72).

(8) Jogendra (Raja) v. Nityanand, 18 C. 151 P.C.

(9) Bhagwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M.I.A. 487.

(10) Katama Nachiar v. Doraisinga, 6 M.H.C.R. 310 P.C.; Aumrit Lall v. Rajonee Kant, 15 B.L.R. 10 P.C.

(11) Vithappa v. Savithri, 34 B. 510.

(12) Madivalappa v. Subbappa, (1937) B. 458 (461).

cession does not open till the last of them is dead.[1] On demise of the last widow, the daughters inherit, with the similar right of survivorship,[2] unless they are excluded by custom,[3] it being immaterial that they have children of their own.[4] But daughters in Bombay inherit severally and possess no right of survivorship inter se.[5]

The conditions as to chastity and other disabilities in each case will be considered in the sequel.

Another case of survivorship inter se is possible where the father bequeaths his estate to his undivided sons jointly. The question in this case is one of intention.[6] (§§ 1015, 1022.)

291. (1). Where, on a partition of joint property, some property remains undivided, such property, including all its accretions, will, as regards devolution, continue to be subject to survivorship.[7]

Devolution of undivided property.

(2) In such cases, it is immaterial whether the property was designedly or accidentally left undivided, or the person in whose possession it remained, and whether the surviving member was or was not a party to the partition.

Illustrations.

(a) At a general partition between two brothers A and B, A received lot C, and B lot D, while lot E remained undivided. A died leaving him surviving his widow F. F will inherit C, while B will take E by survivorship.[8]

(b) Two brothers, A and B, partitioned all their joint property except an item C, which failed to be partitioned and which remained in the exclusive possession of A. On A's death, it will devolve on B.[9]

2160. Analogous Law.—Survivorship is the necessary incident of joint property, and, therefore, that incident remains attached to any property that remains designedly or accidentally undivided. As Turner, L.J., observed: "Where a residue is left undivided upon partition, what is divided goes as separate property, what is undivided follows the family property; that which remains as it was, devolves in the old line; that which is changed and becomes separate, devolves in the new line. In

(1) Smiriti Chandrika, XI-I-47; Tarachand v. Reeb Ram, 3 M.H.C.R. 51; Bhugwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M.I.A. 487; Nilamani v. Radhamani, 1 M. 290 P.C.; Rumea v. Bhagee, 1 B.H.C.R. 66; Balakidas v. Keshavlal, 6 B. 85; contra in Dayabhag, XI-I, §§ 15, 47, is no longer law.

(2) Mit. II-2; Dayabhag, XI-II, §§ 1-30; Katama Nachiar v. Dorasinga, 6 M.H.C.R. 310 P.C.; Aumrito Lall v. Rajonee Kant, 15 B.L.R. 10 P.C.

(3) Chintaman v. Mt. Nowlukho, 24 W.R. 255 P.C.

(4) Aumrito Lall v. Rajonee Kant, 15 B.L.R. 10 P.C.; Bandan v. Beharee, 1 N.W.P.H.C.R. 200; Baijnath v. Mahabir, 1 A. 608 : Sant Kumar v. Deosaran, 8 A. 365 : Sib Chunder v. Treepoorah, Fulton 98; Jamiatram v. Jamna, 2 B.H.C.R. 13; Lakshmee v. Ganpat, 5 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 139 : 1 Mac. 24 : 2 Mac. 44, 57.

(5) Bulakidas v. Keshavlal, 6 B. 85; Bindabai v. Anacharya, 15 B. 206; Gulappa v. Tayawa, 31 B. 453; Vithappa v. Savithri, 34 B. 510; Tukaram v. Bappu, 27 Bom.L.R. 670: 89 I.C. 196: (1925) B. 424.

(6) Yethirajulu v. Mukunto, 28 M. 363.

(7) Katama Nachiar v. Rajah of Shivgunga, 9 M.I.A. 539; Chintamun v. Nowlukho, 1 C. 153 (161) P.C.; Konammal v. Annadana, 51 M. 189 P.C.

(8) Chintamun v. Nowlukho, 1 C. 153 (161) P.C.

(9) Konammal v. Annadana, 51 M. 189 (204, 205) P.C.

other words, the law of succession follows the nature of the property and of the interest in it."[1]

2161. In his "Principles of Hindu Law, "Sir William Macnaughten said: "If, at a general partition, any part of the property is left joint, the widow of a deceased brother will not participate, notwithstanding the separation, but such undivided residue will go exclusively to the brother.[2] Quoting this passage with approval, their Lordships said: "That authority was in fact one of those upon which this Board, in the Shivagunga case,[3] decided the converse of the proposition, viz., that though a family might be undivided, the separate property of any member would nevertheless go according to the law of succession to separate estate. It in fact goes to support the proposition that, whether the general status of the family be joint or divided, property which is joint will follow one, and property which is separate will follow another, course of succession."[4]

2162. The reason of the rule would appear to be this. Since survivorship is the incident of all partible joint property, that incident enures till it is destroyed by partition. Consequently, where the property, though partible, has not been partitioned, nor included in a partition, it remains joint and, as such, retains its incident of survivorship.

Of course, where the character of jointness is otherwise destroyed, e.g., by adverse possession, the incident of survivorship will disappear with the loss of its attribute of jointness.

Clause (2).

2163. It may be that the family has separated and all available property belonging to it, then known, was divided, but if some item failed to be partitioned, it would still remain subject to survivorship, for, so far as that property was concerned, there was no division. The person in possession would continue to hold it on behalf of all his quondam coparceners. As against them, his possession is not adverse. He took possession as a coparcener, and as a coparcener, he must be presumed to hold it till he alters its character. If the property was designedly excluded from partition, all it implies is that the partition was partial; if the exclusion was accidental, there can be no change in the character of its possession, which must continue as theretofore. The fact that the person in possession was or was not a party to the partition, is immaterial. So is the fact of its possessor. If he was a coparcener, he continues to be so pro tanto; if a stranger, he continues to hold it for the coparcenary, unless, of course, some other facts supervene, which alter the character of its possession and, with it, the mode of its devolution.

Such a case may arise where there is a separation in status, and parties intend to divide all property known and unknown. If, in that case,, some property escapes partition, a question may arise whether this property would still continue to be coparcenary and impressed with

---

(1) Katama Natchiar v. Raja of Sivagunga, 9 M.I.A. 539 (610).
(2) Vol. I, p. 53; (4th Ed.).
(3) Katama Natchiar v. Raja of Sivagunga, 9 M.I.A. 539, explained in Surnani (Raja) v. Surnani (Raja), 13 M.I.A. 113 (140); Yanumula v. Yanumula, ib., 333 (336); Chitamun v. Nowlukho, 1 C. 153 (161) P.C.
(4) Chintamun v. Nowlukho, 1 C. 153 (161) P.C.; Konammal v. Annadana, 51 M. 189 (204, 205) P.C.

the incident of survivorship. The question depends upon intention and unless it was intended to be held in severalty, there is no reason why it should cease to remain joint, merely because every one concerned had overlooked it.

292. Non-liability of survivors for debts.

The survivors as such are not liable for the debts and other personal obligations of the deceased coparcener, nor are they liable for the gift or devise of his coparcenary interest.

Explanation 1.—The liability of the son to pay his father's debts, not illegal or immoral, arises from his relationship to the father and not by reason of his coparcenership.

Explanation 2.—Nothing herein applies to the debts or other obligations of the deceased coparcener binding on the joint estate as in cases of debts incurred for the family necessity or for its benefit, or for the purposes of the family trade, or where the debt of the deceased coparcener was charged on his coparcenary interest, or his interest attached in his lifetime.

Illustration.

Three brothers A, B and C are joint. A borrows Rs. 1,000 on a bond from D. A dies and his interest in the estate survives to B and C. D sues them on the bond. They are not liable.

2164. Analogous Law.—The incident of survivorship here set out has already been disussed in the chapter on Debts. (S. 149.) This section is intended to summarize the law there explained, and is made a part of this chapter, because it bears on the rights and obligations of survivors.

293. Survivor's right of suit for debt.

Members of a joint family succeeding to the interest of a deceased coparcener by their right of survivorship are entitled to realize all debts and dues due to the joint estate and payable to the deceased member, without having to obtain a succession certificate required by section 214 of the Succession Act.[1]

2165. Analogous Law.—Section 214 (1) (a) of the Succession Act[2] forbids the court to pass a decree against a debtor of a deceased person, for payment of his debt to a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person, or any part thereof, or to proceed upon an application of a person claiming to be so entitled, to execute against such a debtor a decree or order for the payment of his debt. As survivorship implies the extinguishment of the interest of the deceased in the property on his death, it follows that the enlargement of the survivor's interest by his death follows as a matter of course. The survivor is, therefore, not a person "claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person," within the meaning of S. 214 (1) (a) of the Succession Act,[3] and he is, therefore, not liable to obtain a certificate to realize the debts that the deceased may have had to recover on behalf of the joint family.[4] Of

(1) Patershuri v. Bhagwati, 17 A. 578; Mathura v. Durgawati, 36 A. 380 and cases cited below.

(2) Act XXXIX of 1925.

(3) Act XXXIX of 1925 (S. 4 of Act VII of 1889).

(4) Pateshuri v. Bhagwati, 17 A. 578; Mathura v. Durgawati, 36 A. 380; Ram-Ratan v. Subhan, 12 A.L.J. 672 : 24 I. C. 93; Beejraj v. Bhyropersaud, 23 C. 912; Nilmoni v. Soorendra, 46 I.C. (C.) 648 (Dayabhag case); Mathura v. Rukh- course, a certificate would be required to recover a debt personally due to the deceased.[1] But if the debt was joint, the survivor need not obtain a certificate, even though he was appointed receiver of the deceased's estate.[2]

Since survivorship is an incident of coparcenership, which may be determined by an unequivocal expression of an intention to separate, it follows that a coparcener may, in the same way, equally determine the right of survivorship.[3]

Survivorship determined by contract or conduct.

294. The right of survivorship may be determined by contract or conduct evidencing its discontinuance.

2166. Analogous Law.—It has already been seen that while coparcenary relationship cannot be created by contract or conduct,[4] it may be so determined. Since such relationship may be determined by notice, it follows that what suffices to determine coparcenership, would equally suffice to determine survivorship, which is only one of its incidents."[5] mini, 17 C.L.J. 87: 13 I.C. 148; Subramania v. Rakku, 20 M. 232; Pallamraju v. Bapanna, 22 M. 380; Pichai v. Ranganadham, 28 M.L.J. 323 : 28 I.C. 490; Ahmad v. Rahiman, 27 M.L.J. 236 : 25 I.C. 206; Ramanathan v. Subramanian, 28 M.L.J. 372 : 28 I.C. 688; Raghavendra v. Bhima, 16 B. 349; Jagmohan Das v. Allu, 19 B. 338; Guraditta v. Dharimal, 31 I.C. (L.) 904; Ramsewak v. Baldeo, 5 O.L.J. 442 : 47 I. C. 649; Mukund v. Purnia, 9 C.P.L.R. 65.

---

(1) Gur Pershad v. Dhobi Rai, 38 C. 182.

(2) Harihar v. Harendra, 37 C. 754.

(3) Anmole Kuer v. Kamala Dut, 95 I. C. 648 : (1926) Pat. 392.

(4) S. 122.

(5) S. 287.

CHAPTER XXII.

GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF INHERITANCE.

2167. Topical Introduction.—The devolution of property of a Hindu, dying intestate, may be by inheritance, or survivorship, according to the nature of his property. If the property was his separate or self-acquired property, then it passes to his heirs by inheritance.[1] The distinction between inheritance and coparcenership is that in the case of inheritance, property devolves on death, while it survives in the case of coparcenership; on inheritance, new rights are acquired; on survivorship, the enjoyment of existing right is increased by the removal of one from the body of co-sharers.[2] As Vidyaneshwar says: "The term 'heritage' signifies that wealth which becomes the property of another solely by relation to the owner. The wealth of the father or of the paternal grandfather becomes the property of his sons or grandsons, by the right of their being sons or grandsons. The property devolves on parents (or uncles), brothers, and the rest, upon the demise of the owner, if there be no male issue, in the right of their being his uncles or brothers. The same holds good in respect of their sons or other (descendants)."[3]

"Therefore it is a settled point that property in paternal or ancestral estate is by birth and not by demise of the last owner."[4] But under the Dayabhag family, with the father as the head, the other coparceners have no vested rights in the estate of their parents which only arise on their death.[5] Their rights do, indeed, arise on the birth, and they are alienable and devisable, but they lack the cardinal incident of forcing a partition. While, then, under the Mitakshara system the rights of all coparceners are co-ordinate, those of the members under the Dayabhag are contingent, and in the nature of spes successionis.

2168. The two systems differ radically on the subject of inheritance, though the difference here lies in the process of reasoning rather than in the result. The Mitakshara selects the heirs upon the rational basis of propinquity, but the Dayabhag selects them not so much upon their propinquity as upon the efficacy of their obsequial offerings to the manes of the deceased. But when the Mitakshara professes to consult propinquity, it dissembles, since its conception of heirship is generally tinctured with an under-current of religious thought, and while the Dayabhag places it in the forefront, it equally dissembles, for its idea of heirship is equally tinc-

---

(1) Balwant Singh v. Rani Kishori, 20 A. 267 P.C.; Vairavan v. Srinivasachariar, 44 M. 499 (504) F.B., overruling contra in Nana v. Ramachandra, 32 M. 377; Muddan Gopal v. Ram Buksh, (1863) W. R. 71; Baboo Nund Coomar v. Moulvi Razeeuddeen, 10 B.L.R. 183; Jagmohun Das v. Siv Mangaldas, 10 A. 272 P. C.; Raja Chelikani v. Raja Chelikani, 25 M. 678 P.C.

(2) Ghosal v. Ghosal, 31 B. 25 (30); Devi Prasad v. Thakur Dayal, 1 A. 105 F.B.

(3) Mit., I-I-2, 3.

(4) Mit., I-II-27.

(5) Dayabhag I-§ 30.

tured with the under-current of affinity and its consequent natural affection. In both systems women enter with apologies. But their number and rights are limited, though curiously, the Dayabhag, with the more conservative ideal of spiritual benefit, admits the nearest females, which the Mitakshara excludes. But both systems are equally defective, and the courts had to struggle for a more rational construction in order to rectify their glaring defects. Take, for instance, the case of the daughter and the sister. The former is directly admitted by the Dayabhag in the list of heirs, but the latter has no place in the system. In Bombay, the court had, however, to assign her a place in response to insistent usage. But usage is naturally of slow growth, and the Legislature had to intervene to correct some of its glaring inequalities. But other inequalities and differences far too numerous to be noticed here still remain. They will be found set out in the sequel.

2169. Both the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag start with designating certain nearest relations as heirs of the deceased. They constitute what the Mitakshara calls the compact series of heirs set out in S. 313.

After these heirs, both systems generally declare that the inheritance shall fall on the nearest sapinda. The whole Hindu Law of inheritance may be said to be centred in this single word. What is then a sapinda? Unfortunately, it is the one word, upon the import of which the two systems differ. The word sapinda comes from two Sanskrit words, sah meaning "with," and pind, "a ball or body."

2170. The Dayabhag accepts the first, that is a ball and the Mitakshara, the second that is a body as the real meaning. According to the latter, a sapinda is a relation who is of the same body, or between whom and the deceased there are the largest number of common particles of the same body. As such, the son, possessing, as he does, the largest number of particles of his father's body, is, therefore, his next heir. But the Dayabhag admits the conclusion, though not the reason. According to it, the son is such an heir because he and his father are allied by the funeral ceremony of "Pinda Karm." This is not clear to the unsophiscated student of law unversed in the religious law of the Hindus.

2171. As has been pointed out in the General Introduction (§ 5), the Hindu Law of Inheritance is an off-shoot of those mysterious religious rites and dogmas, with which the ancient scriptures of all patriarchal people teem. They begin with an assumption that life is permanent and outlives the body after its decay, and as life requires for its sustenance material pabulum, its continuance must depend upon its constant supply, even after life, to all appearances, has vanished. In other words, when a man dies, his body decays, but his spirit survives the body, with all its earthly longings and cravings. After death, the spirit yearns for the food and drink, to which it had become accustomed in its earthly sojourn. Some provision had to be made for its nutrition after death. What is more natural than that he who inherits worldly wealth must also provide for the nutrition of the departed soul. The priests, who are the viceregents of God, know what it wants. What is more natural than that the rice and roots, upon which the man lived while in life, should be dedicated to his soul after his death. He who provides them to the departed soul must take his heritage. And as the son is tied to him by the bond of affection, he is most likely to continue to perform these post obit offices, to prevent the departed soul, wandering about in the vacant void, restless from hunger. As fire is the mouth of the gods, these ethereal bodies require their food to be conveyed through that channel. This is the genesis of sacrifice.

2172. The sacrifice ordained for the dead was called shradh. It was to be performed in the dark half of every lunar month. The heir must roll boiled rice with butter and consign it to the fire in the name of the person whom he desires it to reach. It will go to him. This rolled rice of the size of a billiard ball—miscalled a cake—is the pinda offering of the living to the dead and he who offers it is the sapind, or one connected with the deceased through that offering. If the son is alive, he must offer it. If he is dead, some other relation must perform that pious office. In the remote patriarchal age, its order became soon settled. It is needless to add that all agreed as to who were the nearest heirs. Hence, so far the two systems agree. But as the line of heirs became in time enlarged, other rules had to be invented to regulate succession. The one kept up the fiction of the spiritual repast, the other boldly addressed itself to the natural law of affinity. But, as stated before, neither affinity nor religous thought was wholly eliminated from the two systems. They acted and re-acted upon each other, till they became crystallized by a declaration of the Mahomedan conquerors, and afterwards by the British, that the personal law of the Hindu shall regulate their succession. At that time, neither system had been fully developed. New ideas were creeping in and leavening the inert mass of the Shastric ritual. But the decadence of religion, brought about by the levelling influence of the Western culture, left the religion in a state of neglect, while the law which was dependent upon it, had to be developed and adapted to the rapidly changing social environment. The very unsatisfactory system of having to find the new law in the old age is responsible for the conflicting decisions of the courts on almost every point. What is now required is a secularization of Hindu Law, which alone will ensure its development.

2173. As it is, the test by which the true heirs are known are rapidly vanishing from the daily observance of the people. Mr. Sarkar observes that there is scarcely a Hindu nowadays who performs the Parvan Shradh, and that "hence the conferring of spiritual benefit on ancestors by presenting pindas to them in the Parvan Shradh is a myth in the majority of instances."[1] And yet this is the raison d'etre of inheritance.

2174. Apart from the different standpoints from which the two systems view the claims of heirs, the material differences between them may be thus summarized:—

(1) Both the systems recognize the claims of the nearest heirs which they designate as entitled to the heritage, as such. These are called the "compact series of heirs." (S. 311.)

(2) In default of these heirs, the order of succession in the two systems differs, though they both quote and profess to follow Manu's aphorism that "to the nearest sapinda the inheritance next belongs."

---

(1) Sarkar's H. L., (3rd Ed.), 301.

They, however, differ on the meaning of the word sapinda. The Mitakshara takes it to comprise only agnates up to the sixth degree, while the Dayabhag limits it to relations up to the third degree, but includes therein both the agnates and cognates, the result, being that cognatic relations, whom the Mitakshara relegates after all agnates, take with the sapindas—otherwise, the sakulyas and samanodakas, being agnatic relations from the fourth to the fourteenth degree, exclude the cognates in both systems. After the samanodakas, the bandhus of the Mitakshara walk in, but the Dayabhag is silent as to the claims of its cognate sapindas from the fourth to the sixth degree. But it is apprehended that in this respect the Dayabhag being silent, the Mitakshara rule would apply.

2175. The law of inheritance of all nations is intended to ensure the passage of the estate of a deceased to those nearest and dearest to him. Both the Christian and Mahomedan laws of succession recognize the claims of the wife and children, but the Hindu law of succession placed the male issue before the wife, and as a sharer she had no place except at a partition, when she was assigned a share in lieu of her right to maintenance. But this textual disqualification has since been removed by the Legislature.[1]

2176. Even as regards the succession of males, there is a sharp cleavage between the Dayabhag and the Mitakshara school. Under the former, all property, whether coparcenary or separate, is heritable, while under the Mitakshara, inheritance is not possible in respect of joint property which, on the death of a member, survives to the other members. This incident it continues to retain even on partition, which merely alters the mode of its enjoyment but does not destroy its essential incident.

In the ensuing chapters this is made apparent by treating of the succession of such property in a separate chapter.

The conflicting claims of remote heirs have not been all yet settled by judicial decisions, but the leading principles regulating their precedence have become well settled and the courts recognize the force of stare decisis as essentially applicable to the law of property.

2177. Succession is a generic term and includes devolution of a person's property, whether by survivorship, devise or inheritance. Strictly speaking, succession should be confined only to the latter modes of devolution, since the right by survivorship arises on birth and not upon the death of any of the coparceners. Thus, if A, B and C be three coparceners, they all have a third share in the joint property. If A dies, the interest of B and C is enlarged by reason of their survivorship; but it would not be correct to say that B and C have succeeded to A, though, in popular parlance, that is how the enlargement of their interest is described.[2]

Inheritance is, however, a term of more certain import and is used only to denote devolution of the separate or self-acquired property of

---

(1) Hindu Woman's Right of Property Act, 1937.

(2) Ghosal v. Ghosal, 31 B. 25

one on another as his heir. Such devolution may be by will, or by law. In either case, the successor is the heir of the deceased, to whom he has succeeded. But if the devise was to a person who was not his legal heir, the devisee is not in strictness even his heir, which term is limited to designate a person who takes by reason of his relationship to the deceased, recognized by law.

The subject of coparcenary rights and their devolution has already been examined in the previous chapter.[1] So has also been the subject of wills.[2] This chapter deals only with the devolution of property by inheritance, that is to say, the succession to self-acquired or separate property by the direction of law.

Course of inheritance cannot be altered.

295. No person can alter the course of inheritance prescribed by law[3] except to the extent permitted by it.

Illustrations.

(a) The course of inheritance may be altered by will, to the extent law allows it.

(b) Heirs may waive or vary their shares, since law allows it.[4]

(c) A variation made by contract may ripen into a kulachar or a family custom, which law will recognize.[5]

(d) The Crown can alter the course of inheritance, since law permits it.[6]

2178. Analogous Law.—A man cannot make his own law of inheritance, since "inheritance does not depend upon the will of the individual owner; transfer does. Inheritance is a rule laid down (or in the case of custom, recognised) by the State, not merely for the benefit of individuals, but for reasons of public policy. It follows directly from this that a private individual, who attempts by gift or will to make property inheritable otherwise than the law directs, is assuming to legislate, and that the gift must, therefore, fail, and the inheritance take place as the law directs.[7] So, Turner, L.J., said: "A man cannot create a new form of estate, or alter the line of succession allowed by law, for the purpose of carrying out his own wishes or views of policy."[8] Citing this, Willes, J., said: "If . . . . the gift were to a man and his heirs, to be selected from a line other than that specified by law, expressly excluding the legal course of inheritance, as for instance, if an estate were granted to a man and his eldest nephew, and the eldest nephew of such eldest nephew, and so forth for ever, to take as his heirs, to the exclusion of all other heirs, and without any of the persons so taking having the power to dispose of the estate during his lifetime; here, inasmuch as an inheritance so described is not legal, such a gift cannot take effect,

(1) Ch. VIII.
(2) Ch. XVIII.
(3) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (394) P.C.
(4) See cases cited in § 2180.
(5) Ibrahim v. Ashanullah, 39 C. 311 P.C.; Ambalika v. v. Arpana, 45 C. 835.
(6) S. 3, Crown Grants Act (XIV of 1895); Rajendra v. Raghubans, 40 A. 470, (480) P.C.; Panchubala v. Jotindranath, 53 C. 816.
(7) Per Willes, J., in Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B. L. R. 377 (394) P.C.
(8) Soorjeemoney v. Denobandoo, 6 M.I.A. 555, followed in Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (395, 396); Rup Narain v. Gopal, 36 C. 780 P.C.; Purna Sashi v. Kalidhan, 38 C. 603 P. C.; Ambalika v. Arpana, 46 C. 835; Panchubala v. Jotindranath, 53 C. 816; Rajendra v. Rashubans, 40 A. 470 P.C.; Bhup-Singh v. Jairam, 16 A.L.J. 459; Ghisao v. Gajraj, 18 O.C. 289 : 33 I.C. 371.

except in favour of such persons as could take under a gift to the extent to which the gift is consistent with the law. The first taker would, in this case, take for his lifetime, because the giver had at least that intention. He could not take more because the language is inconsistent with his having any different inheritance from which that the gift attempts to confer, and that estate of inheritance which it confers is void."[1] So, in another case, it was observed: "That Crown has in British India power to grant or to transfer lands, and by its grant, or on the transfer, to limit in any way it pleases the descent of such lands. But a subject has no right to impose upon lands or other property any limitation of descent which is at variance with the ordinary law of descent of property applicable in his case."[2]

2179. It is thus clear that a person cannot direct that his property shall follow a certain course of devolution at variance with his personal law. If he is dissatisfied with that law, the only course open to him is to devise his estate or to abandon the law by becoming a convert to another faith. So where two brothers entered into an agreement that their estate should only descend in the line of the brother having auras issue and should not be alienated from the line by the latter by adoption, the Privy Council held the agreement void as "entirely altering the law of descent."[3] This view, of course, follows the exposition of law in the Tagore case,[4] since followed in other cases[5] in which attempts were made to alter the course of succession by either excluding females and collaterals,[6] by postponing the latter to lineal descendants,[7] or prescribing a special rule of succession, as for instance, by primogeniture[8] and cases in which a perpetuity has been attempted by the creation of successive life-estates,[9] in all of which cases the courts have ignored the attempts as void. So where the adopted son relinquished his share in his adopted father's estate in consideration of a sum of money, his relinquishment was held to make him a separated son, but had not the effect of extinguishing his right, so that, when the father died, he was entitled to recover the estate from his adoptive mother. As West, J., put it: "The heirship was a legal consequence of Trimbak's status with regard to Gobind casting on him, on Gobind's death, the right correlative to his own obligation under the Farkat, and which could not be got rid of by agreement."[10] The course of devolution prescribed by law cannot be altered by private agreement, though, no doubt, Trimbak, like a son by birth, could for adequate reasons, have been disinherited.[11] The rule here

---

(1) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (395, 396) P.C.; Tarakesswar v. Shoshi, 9 C. 952 (958) P.C.

(2) S. 3, Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895); Rajendra v. Raghubans, 40 A. 470 (480) P.C.; Panchubala v. Jotindranath, 52 C. 816.

(3) Suriya v. Raja of Pittapur, 9 M. 499 (505) P.C.

(4) Tagore v. Tagore, 6 M.I.A. 555: 9 B.L.R. 377 P.C.

(5) Purna Sashi v. Kalidhan, 38 C. 603 P.C.; Rup Narain v. Gopal, 36 C. 780 P.C.; Rajendra v. Raghubans, 40 A. 470 P.C.; Ambalika v. Arpana, 45 C. 885; Gouri Shanker v. Naidor Singh, 18 C.W.N. 59 : 23 I.C. 287; Bhup Singh v. Jai Ram, 16 A.L.J. 459: 46 I.C. 387; Venkatappanayanim v. Thimmanayanim, 27 M.L.J. 656: 27 I. C. 379; Ghisao v. Gajraj Singh, 18 O. C. 289: 33 I.C. 371; Atmaram v. Lala, 7 N.L.R. 36: 10 I.C. 733.

(6) Venkatappanayanim v. Thimmanayanim, 27 M.L.J. 656: 27 I.C. 379.

(7) Purna Sashi v. Kalidhan, 38 C. 603 P.C.

(8) Rajendra v. Raghubans, 40 A. 470 P.C.

(9) Ambalika v. Arpana, 45 C. 835.

(10) Balakrishna v. Savitribai, 3 B. 54 (57), following Ruvee v. Rupshankar, 2 Borr. 713 (729).

(11) Ib., p. 57.

stated is one of general application to all schools, including the Dayabhag.[1]

2180. Limits of Departure.—But law only determines the heir. It cannot compel the heir to take what he refuses. He may, for instance, waive his right of succession in favour of another,[2] or agree to take a different share to what he was legally entitled, or relinquish it altogether.[3] Again, a departure from the ordinary law may have been so long acquiesced in and followed as to ripen into a family custom. Such has at times been found to be the history of impartible estate,[4] and other abnormal rules of succession.

2181. Customary Variation.—Though contract cannot,[5] custom may modify the law of succession. As such, custom vests the Jain widow with absolute rights by inheritance.[6] On the other hand, custom is sometimes severe on the daughters, excluding them altogether from succession.[7] Whatever may be its effect, a custom which has the effect of varying the law, must, like all customs, be strictly proved.[8] But sometimes, as in the case of impartible estates, the custom that they are, as regards succession, subject to the rule of primogeniture, has become a fact of sufficient notoriety, to be presumed till the contrary is shown.[9]

Heir's right personal.

296. (1) The heir succeeds in his own right and not in the right derived from another.[10]

(2) On a property descending to a male heir, he becomes a fresh stock of descent and the property passes to his own heir and not to the heir of any previous owner.

(3) But where property descends to a female heir, her heirs are those of the last full owner,[11] except in Bombay, where the female heir born in the family becomes a fresh stock of descent.[12]

Illustrations.

(a) A and B are father and son. B predeceased A, leaving him surving his daughter C. On A's death C does not inherit, though her father B would have, if he were than alive.[13]

(b) A has two sons, B and C. B predeceased, leaving his widow D. On A's death, C inherits the whole estate. D takes nothing, though her husband would have takon a moiety if he were alive at A's death.

---

(1) Purna Shashi v. Kalidhan, 38 C. 603 P.C.

(2) Balkrishna v. Savitribai, 3 B. 54: Venkata v. Venkata, 9 M. 499 P. C.; Meherban v. Sheo Koonwar, 1 Agra 105; Dalchand v. Soonder, 2 Agra 173.

(3) Yad., II-117; Mit., I-II-2; Dayabhag, XL-VI-2; Lallubhai v. Mankuverbhai, 2 B. 388 (418, 428, 438), affirmed O.A. 5 B. 110 (118) P.C.; Guru Govind v. Anandlal, 13 W.R. 49 F. B.; Madhunala v. Lakshman, 20 C.W. N. 627.

(4) Ibrahim v. Ahsanullah, 39 C. 711 P.C.; Ambalika v. Arpana, 45 C. 835.

(5) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 P.C.; Purna v. Kalidhan, 36 C. 603 P. C.

(6) Madanji v. Tribuvan, 36 B. 396; Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 6 N.W.P.H.C. R. 382, affirmed O.A. 1 A. 688 P.C.

(7) Bajrangi v. Manokarnika, 9 Bom L.R. 1348 P.C.

(8) Bhagwan Devi v. Nihal Chand, (1879) P.R. No. 73.

(9) Katama Nachiar v. Raja of Shivaganga, 9 M.I.A. 589; Sivasubramanya v. Subramaniam, 17 M. 316; Mallikarjuna v. Durga, 18 M. 406 P.C.; Muthuvaduganadha v. Periasami, 19 M. 451 P.C.; Kachi v. Kachi, 25 M. 506 P.C.; Ram Nundan v. Janki, 29 C. 828 P.C.; Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj, 10 A. 272 P. C.; Jagdish v. Sheo Partab, 23 A. 369 P.C.

(10) Brojo v. Gouree, 15 W.R. 70; Balamma v. Pullayya, 18 M. 168; Peddemuthu v. Appu, 2 M.H.C.R. 117.

(11) Katama Naichiar v. Rajah of Shivganga, 9 M.I.A. 543 (601), followed in Moniram v. Kerry, 5 C. 776 (789, 790) P.C.

(12) See S. 364.

(13) Ananda v. Nownit, 9 C. 315.

2182. Analogous Law.—It is a principle of Hindu Law, that the heir must succeed in his own right, and not in the right of another person. So, a nephew succeeds not as the heir of his father, but as the direct heir of his uncle.[1] So, the widow must take at once at her husband's death, or not at all. No such right can accrue to her as widow in consequence of the subsequent death of any one, to whom her husband would have been heir if he had lived.[2] So, while the sister is no heir under the Mitakshara, her son is a heritable bandhu. The contrary was contended in a case, in which Holloway, J., said: "Heritable blood is a foreign importation from a foreign law, and engrafting it upon the Hindu system can only lead to further confusion and inconsistency."[3]

Clause (1).

A person is not disqualified because the person through whom he is related was either disqualified or ineligible. So, while a person may be himself disqualified, by personal defect, such as congenital blindness, impotency and the like, to inherit, still his son would not be disqualified to inherit, by reason of the disqualification of his father.[4] But, in that case, the son would not inherit as the son of his father but by reason of his own relationship to the deceased. So, the widow of the son,[5] son's son,[6] daughter's son,[7] father,[8] brother,[9] cousin,[10] and uncle,[11] have no right of inheritance, though their husbands were in the line of heirs.

2183. From the fact that the heir must succeed in his own right it follows that the same rule must equally apply to his own heir. He will succeed to the last owner and not to any previous owner; or to put it differently, the heir being the sole owner of the estate by virtue of inheritance, his successor must be his own heir, and not the heir of any one else.

Clause (2).

2184. The only exception to this rule is the case of a female heir, upon whose death succession devolves not upon her own heirs, but upon the heir of the last full owner, as if he had died simultaneously with her. Until her death, it is impossible to say who are the persons who might be entitled to succeed as heirs to her husband. "The succession does not open to the heirs of the husband until the termination of the widow's estate. Upon the termination of that estate, the property descends to those who would have been the heirs of the husband, if he had lived up to and died at the moment of her death."[12]

Clause (3).

---

(1) Brojo v. Gouree, 15 W.R. 70.

(2) Balamma v. Pullayya, 18 M. 168 (170); Pedamuttu v. Appu, 2 M.H.C.R. 117.

(3) Rayaningaru v. Vencata, 6 M.H.C.R. 278 (287).

(4) Pareshmani v. Deriantti, 1 B.L.R. (A.C.) 117.

(5) Aya Butti v. Raj Kishen, 3 B.S.R. 28; Raisaham v. Prankishen, 3 B.S.R. 44; Himulla v. Pudoo, 4 B.S.R. 25; Anandu v. Nownit, 9 C. 315; Amrit v. Manik, 12 B.H.C.R. 79.

(6) Goornee v. Oomrao, 1 Agra 149.

(7) Veerayya v. Gangamma, 36 M. 570.

(8) Seethai v. Nachiar, 37 M. 286 (291); Ramkoowar v. Ummur, 1 Borr. 415; Bhyrobee v. Nubkishen, 6 B.S.R. 61.

(9) Jymunee v. Ramjoy, 3 B.S.R. 385; Jogdamba v. Secretary of State, 16 C. 367; Choora v. Busuntee, 1 Agra 174; Peddamuttu v. Appu, 2 M.H.C.R. 117; Thayammal v. Annamalai, 19 M. 25.

(10) Soorendranath v. Heeramonee, 12 M.I.A. 81.

(11) Upendra v. Thanda, 12 W.R. 263; Gauri v. Rukko, 3 A. 45.

(12) Katama Nachiar v. Raja of Shivganga, 9 M.I.A. 543 (601), cited and followed in Moniram v. Kerry, 5 C. 776 (789, 790) P.C.; Ranika v. Janina, 15 A.L.J. 798; 42 I.C. 846.

But even this rule is subject to an exception in favour of female heirs other than the widow; such as, for instance, the daughters of the family in Bombay, on whose death, their estate is descendible to the heirs of their stridhan. Women in Pondicherry and other parts of French India[1] and Jain widows of the Mangrole and Uplata community in Kathiawar, inheriting to their husbands, take an absolute estate with even testamentary powers.[2] But the case of women generally is regarded as exceptional.

Time of vesting.

297. (1) On the death of the owner, the estate vests immediately in the heir then living.

(2) The inheritance cannot be held in abeyance except when the heir is in the womb.

2185. Analogous Law.—Under Hindu Law, birth relates back to the moment of conception. Consequently, where a son was in utero matrix at the moment of his father's death, the inheritance awaits his birth. If he is born alive, the estate vests in him. If he was still-born, the estate vests in the last owner.[3] Of course, the vesting of an estate may be postponed by the owner by will within the limits allowed by law[4] Since the estate vests immediately on the death of the owner, it follows that a widow can only succeed to property vested in the husband at the time of his death. No fresh right can accrue to her by reason of the subsequent death of a person to whom he would have been heir had he been alive.

Effect of vesting.

298. On the vesting of the inheritance, the heir becomes entitled to all the property which was vested in the deceased in title or in possession, though its enjoyment by the deceased may have been postponed.[5]

2186. Analogous Law.—For the purpose of inheritance and representation, the heir is the alter ego of the deceased, being in law the continuation of his personality. All rights of the owner vest in him, as he becomes subject to all his liabilities other than those of a purely personal character, which do not survive his death. In an old case, a contention was raised that, under Hindu Law, a widow could only take such property as had been reduced into possession during her husband's lifetime.[6] But this contention was overruled by the Privy Council who said: "We do not think that there is anything in the nature of the disputed property which should except it from a general division."[7] In another case, the same contention was dismissed with the following remarks: "The Judge cites authorities to show that a widow does not represent her husband in respect of succession to an estate which would

(1) Milathai v. Subbaraya, 24 M. 460.
(2) Madanji v. Tribhuwan, 36 B. 396.
(3) Koylasnath v. Gyamone, (1864) W.R. 314; Goura v. Chummun, (1864) W.R. 340 (342).
(4) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (409, 410) P.C.; Toolseydas v. Premji, 13 B. 61 (69).
(5) Hurrosoondery v. Rajessuree, 2 W.R. 321 (324); Rewan Persad v. Radha, 4 M.I.A. 137 (167).
(6) Rewun Persad v. Radha, 4 M. I. A. 137 (167), citing, for the appellant, Ayabutee v. Raj Krishen, 1 F. Mac. 1, 2 W. Mac. 104: 3 B.S.D.A.: 28; Ram Koonwar v. Ummur, 1 Borr. 415; Pranshunker v. Prankoonwar, 1 Borr. 427.
(7) Rewan Persad v. Radha, 4 M.I. A. 137 (173).

have devolved upon her husband, had he outlived its owner, but can only take as her husband's heir, such property as he possessed or was entitled to when he died. The rule as stated cannot affect the present case, in which the interest of the adopted son at the time of his death was not merely the expectant interest of an heir, nor an interest contingent on his outliving the mother (as the Judge supposes) but a vested and absolute interest in the property postponed in enjoyment during the lifetime of Wooma Dabea. Whatever may be the precise extent and meaning of the doctrine of the Hindu Law, that a widow succeeding as heir to her husband cannot recover property of which he was not possessed, it is inapplicable when the interest is a vested interest under a will or deed, the actual enjoyment being postponed."[1] The question in such cases is not whether the deceased owner died possessed of any property, but rather whether the interest claimed was his "property" within the meaning of law. A mere contingency is not such property. On the other hand, a vested interest, though not reduced to possession, is "property" and would pass to the heir.[2]

Devested of inheritance.

299. An estate once vested cannot be devested except in the following cases, namely:—

(a) Where the widow makes an adoption to her deceased husband, the adopted son takes the estate of his adoptive father, even though it has the effect of devesting another of his estate if it had vested in him by survivorship.[3]

(b) Where the widow remarries subject to the provisions of the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act, 1856.[4]

(c) Where a posthumous son is born to the father, who, if he were born when the inheritance opened, would have had a preferential claim to the estate.

2187. Analogous Law.—It is a principle of Hindu Law that an estate once vested cannot be devested by any subsequent event, such as the birth of a preferential heir or co-heir.[5] The rule is a natural corollary of that stated in section 297, viz., that an inheritance can never be in abeyance. So, where the rightful heir was excluded from succession by reason of his insanity, his subsequent recovery did not entitle him to resume property from an heir who had succeeded to it in consequence of his disqualification when the succession opened.[6] So, while unchastity of the wife is a disqualification for inheritance, a widow in whom the estate has once vested on the death of her husband, cannot be devested by reason of her subsequent unchastity.[7] On the same ground, the subsequent conversion of the heir will not devest his estate, even though it might be an effective impediment in the way of his taking it.[8] So,

(1) Hurrosoondery v. Rajessuree, 2 W.R. 321 (324).

(2) Rewun Pershad v. Radha, 4 M. I. A. 137 (176), followed in Hurrosoondery v. Rajessuree, 2 W.R. 321 (324).

(3) See S. 49 (2); Balu v. Lahoo Sambhaji, I.L.R. (1937) B. 508 F.B., following Chandra v. Gojrabai, 14 B. 463.

(4) See S. 316 (4) post.

(5) Narsimha v. Veerabhadra, 17 M. 287 (292).

(6) Virmitrodaya, VIII-4; Pareshmani v. Dinanath, 1 B.L.R. (A.C.) 117; Deo Kishen v. Budh Prakash, 5 A. 509 F.B.; Kali Das v. Krishna, 2 B.L.R. (F.B.) 103.

(7) Keri Kolitani v. Moniram, 13 B. L.R. 1 F.B.; 19 W.R. 367; O.A. 5 C. 776 P.C.; Dall Singh v. Dini, 32 A. 155; Sitaram v. Laxman, 8 N.L.R. 126.

(8) Kulada v. Haripada, 40 C. 407 (416, 417); Abraham v. Abraham, 9 M. I.A. 195.

where the heir became bairagi or subsequently contracted leprosy[1] it was held that it did not divest him of his inheritance. If he chose to retain his estate, however morally wrong it might be, it created no legal disability which the courts could enforce.[2]

Clause (a).

2188. Exceptions.—The first exception has already been considered. (S. 48), it being pointed out that, by the adoption the widow does not divest any one's estate but her own, which she is fully entitled to. But she cannot divest the interest of another, if the inheritance has vested in him before her adoption.

Divesting of Coparcenary Estate.

2189. According to a considered obiter dictum of the Privy Council, a widow, subject to the Bombay School, is entitled to make an adoption even where her husband had died a united member of the family and his share had, upon his death, vested in the other members by survivorship.[3] This view is now supported by judicial authority (S. 49.) it being held, that the status acquired by an adoption being superior to the law of survivorship suffices to divest any estate, even though it may have become vested in another. In short, adoption revives the coparcenary interest which had ceased to exist on the death of the person to whom the adoption is made. If this view prevails, it will make a vital change in the law of coparcenership, though it would, at the same time, in some measure, improve the lot of the Maharashtra widows.

Clause (3).

2190. The third exception is scarcely an exception at all, if regard is had to the view of law that birth relates back to the moment of conception.[4] (See S. 197.)

Spes successionis.

300. The right of a person to succeed to another is a mere contingency which cannot be transferred, or devised, or be the subject of a valid contract.

2191. Analogous Law.—The right of a person to succeed to another as his heir is, unlike a coparcenary right,[5] a mere spes successionis wholly beyond his control, since it might be defeated any moment by a testamentary disposition by the owner.[6]

It is a mere chance which is not transferable[7] or devisable or capable of being even the subject of a contract. Three persons claiming to be the reversionary heirs of a Hindu widow, and being uncertain as to whether she had an absolute or only a qualified estate, agreed that she should hold the estate as an absolute owner, but that on her death, they should all succeed to her. The widow alienated the property to the defendant, whereupon the three claimants sued for cancellation of the alienation, but the defendant pleaded an estoppel and their agreement against them, but the Privy Council held that there was no estoppel, and even assuming that the arrangement pleaded amounted to a contract between

(1) Moolchand v. Chota Devi, I.L.R. (1937) A. 825 F.B.

(2) Teeluck v. Shamacharan, 1 W.R. 209; Jagannath v. Bidyanand, 10 W.R. 172.

(3) Yadao v. Namdeo, 49 C. 1 P.C.; contra in Ishwar v. Gajabai, 50 B. 468 F.B.

(4) Kalidas v. Krishna, 2 B. L. R. 103 (121) F.B.

(5) 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), § 200.

(6) Laliteshwar v. Rameshwar, 36 C. 481 (487).

(7) S. 6 (a), Transfer of Property Act. 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.) § 200.

the plaintiffs' predecessors and the defendants' alienor, such a contract was not binding on them. The plaintiffs' predecessors were then but expectant heirs with a spes successionis. The plaintiffs claimed in their own right as heirs of the widow when the succession opened, and it would be a novel proposition to hold that a person so claiming is bound by a contract made by every person through whom he traced his descent.[1]

Preference of the whole blood.

301. As between heirs of equal degree those of the whole blood take before those of the half blood.[2]

2192. Analogous Law.—The rule that the whole blood excludes the half blood is specifically mentioned both in the Mitakshara[3] and the Dayabhag[4] in relation to the brothers; but the Mitakshara treats the case of the brothers as falling under Manu's more general textual maxim "to the nearest sapinda the inheritance next belongs."[5] It is now so held[6] though the Bombay High Court still clings to the view that the distinction does not extend beyond the brothers and their sons,[7] though it has extended it to the sisters.[8] The rule is one of propinquity and there seems no reason to hold it confined to the special text which itself deduces it from a general principle. As such, it has been held to determine preference between great-grandsons[9] uncles[10] and other gotrajas even five, six or seven degrees remote.[11] The rule is not only limited to sapindas but extends to bandhus also.[12]

Illegitimacy a bar.

302. Illegitimacy creates no legal relationship between the parents and their offspring, and is, therefore, a bar to inheritance, except in the cases hereinafter provided, that is to say:—

(a) Illegitimate children of the father inherit to one another in accordance with the rule stated in section 314.[13]

(b) Illegitimate children inherit their mother's stridhan in accordance with the rule stated in section 376.

(c) The mother inherits the estate of her illegitimate son.[14]

(d) The illegitimate son of a Shudra is his heir in accordance with the rule stated in section 314.

1293. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by the cases noted in the sequel. The law against illegitimacy has been rather strengthened than weakened with the passage of time. In ancient society,

---

(1) Bahadur v. Mohar Singh, 24 A. 94 (107, 108) P.C.

(2) Ganga Sahai v. Kesri, 37 A. 545 (556); Jatindra Nath v. Nagendra Nath, 59 C. 576 (579) P.C.

(3) Mit., II-IV §§ 5, 6.

(4) Dayabhag XI-V §§ 9, 17.

(5) Manu IX-187 cited in Mit. II-IV, § 5.

(6) Suba v. Sarafraz, 19 A. 216 F. B., approved in Ganga Sahai v. Kesri, 37 A. 545 (556) P.C.; Nachiappa v. Rangasami, 28 M.L.J. 1 F.B. : 26 I. C.; 757; Sham Singh v. Kishun Sahai, 6 C.L.J. 19.

(7) Samat v. Amra, 6 B. 394; Vithal Rao v. Rama Rao, 24 B. 317; Saguna v. Sadashiv, 26 B. 710 (715); Shankar v. Kashi Nath, 51 B. 194 (203, 204) F.B.

(8) Jana v. Rakhma, 43 B. 461 (466).

(9) Nachiappa v. Rangasami, 28 M. L.J. 1 F. B.: 26 I. C. 757 (763).

(10) Ganga Sahai v. Kesri, 37 A. 545 (556) P.C.; approving Suba v. Sarafraz, 19 A 215 F.B.; Sham Singh v. Kishun Sahai, 6 C. L. J. 190; Narain v. Hamraji, 21 N.L.R. 163.

(11) Suba v. Sarafraz, 19 A. 215 F.B.

(12) Jatindra Nath v. Nagendra Nath, 59 C. 576 (579) P.C.

(13) Subramania v. Rathnavelu, 41 M. 44 F.B.

(14) Dattatraya v. Matha, 58 B. 119; Jagannath v. Sher Bahadur, 57 A. 85.

when any connection was regarded as a marriage,[1] and niyog was customary, there was little scope for illegitimacy. The Aryan immigrant felt the want of a son to strengthen his household, and he, therefore, devised various subterfuges to legitimatize what would now be considered an illegitimate issue. Manu speaks of twelve kinds of sons, those begotten and received with the bride, or begotten on a married or an unmarried woman, or on one's own wife with or without the husband's knowledge, or on the appointed daughter, or one brought or adopted.[2]

In later times, as the rules of morality became more rigid, the idea of legitimacy became more pronounced, and at the present day, when the law of legitimacy has received a fresh stimulus from the Western school of morality, there is little room for revision of the rights of an illegitimate relation, beyond those recognized in the four exceptions.

2194. Law of Legitimacy.—Two questions arise on the subject of legitimacy: the validity of the mother's marriage and proof of the child as being the issue of such marriage. Now, since marriage and legitimacy is usual and in consonance with the rule of morality, it follows that there would be presumption of marriage from the mere fact of cohabitation and repute,[3] and of legitimacy from the fact that the child was born during the continuance of a valid marriage between his mother and any man, or within 280 days after its dissolution, the mother remaining unmarried.[4]

In denying to the parents and their children the rights springing from natural consanguinity and affection, Hindu law followed the rigid sanctity of the ecclesiastical as well as the civil law, which treated all illegitimate issue as filius nullius, admitting only such exceptions as became irresistible. But in later times, marriage is treated as only a social contract with the resultant enlargement of the rights of parents and their issue which has found recognition in the four exceptions appended to the section.

Murderous and inimical

303. (1) No heirship to another can be claimed by or through a person who has been a privy to his murder.[5]

(2) A person cannot inherit the estate of another towards whom he has displayed malignant hostility.[6]

2195. Analogous Law.—The rule stated in this section is of wider application, being a rule of public policy, which qualified even the peremptory language of the statute.[7] It has been given effect to by the Privy Council[8] and in other cases cited in the sequel.

2196. Inimical Heir. On the subject of other grounds for exclusion, both the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag exclude a son who is "an enemy to his father."[9] This is explained in Dayakram Sangrah[10] to include

(1) General Introduction, §§ 91-94
(2) Ib., §§ 95, 96.
(3) Moujilal v. Chandrabati, 38 C. 700 P.C.; Imambandi v. Matasaddi, 45 C. 878 P.C.
(4) S. 112, Ev. Act.
(5) Kencheva v. Grimallappa, 48 B. 569 (575) P.C., citing Narad, II-13-21 cited in Mit. II-X-3.
(6) Khettarmoni v. Kadambini, 16 C. W.N. 964; 17 I. C. 83.
(7) Cleavar v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assurance, (1892) 1 Q.B. 147 (157, 158), followed in Pitts (In re), (1931) 1 Ch. 546 (550).
(8) Kenchava v. Girimallappa, 48 B. 569 (575) P.C.; citing Narad, II-13-21, cited in Mit., II-X-3.
(9) Narad, II-13, 21 cited in Mit., II X-3; Dayabhag, V-II-13.
(10) Ch. III, § 3.

"one who ill-treats his father during his lifetime or one who is averse to performing his obsequies when dead." But according to the Vivad Ratnakar,[1] such hatred must terminate "in compassing the death of the father when he is alive," and according to the Dayatatwa, "one who abuses him by beating and the like," would suffice, provided that, in such case, the son refuses to perform his obsequies when he is dead.

Whatever may be the literal value of these virtuous precepts, it has been held[2] that the precepts are not altogether destitute of legal value, and that an heir who has evinced malignant hostility to the deceased, cannot be his heir.[3] But such hostility must be habitual and evidenced by unquestionable evidence. The fact that the son was known to have struck the father once or twice is not sufficient,[4] though the contrary was laid down in earlier cases.[5]

More recently, it has been held that a person who has been a party to the murder of another cannot succeed to his estate.[6] All that he can claim is maintenance.[7] But he ceases to be a stock for a fresh line of descent,[8] so that both he and his direct lineal descendants are excluded from inheritance,[9] unless his act was committed in a state of lunacy in which case his heirs would not be disqualified.[10]

Lunacy or idiocy as a disqualification.

304. (1) A person who is and has been congenitally a lunatic[11] or an idiot, is disqualified from inheritance.[12]

(2) Save as above, no person is so disqualified by reason only of any disease, deformity or physical or mental defect:

(3) Provided, however, that nothing herein shall be deemed to confer upon any person any right in respect of any religious office or service or of the management of any religious or charitable trust, which he would not have had, independently of the Hindu Inheritance (Removal of Disabilities) Act, 1928.[13]

2197. Analogous Law.—This section, drawn from a recent enactment passed to modify the Hindu Law,[14] has materially altered that law as regards the disqualifications which disentitled a person to be a coparcener or an heir. The law, drawn from the sacred texts, is contained in section 332, which, before the amending Act, equally applied to persons subject to the Mitakshara law. That Act has, however, limited the disqualifications to congenital lunacy and idiocy, in respect of persons

---

(1) Ch. V.

(2) Khettermoni v. Kadambini, 16 C. W.N. 964: 17 I.C. 83.

(3) Ib., Mukandi v. Jamni, 73 I. C. 875.

(4) Kalka v. Badree, 3 N. W. P. H. C.R. 267 (270); see Vedammal v. Vedanayaka, 31 M. 100 (105).

(5) Bhola Nath v. Sabitra, 6 B. S. R. 71: 7 I.D. (O. S.) 720.

(6) Vedanayaga v. Vedammal, 27 M. 597; s.c. after remand Vedammal v. Vedanayaga, 31 M. 100; Gangu, v. Chandrabhaga, 32 B. 275; Nilmadhab v. Jotindra, 17 C.W.N. 341; Girimallappa v. Kanchava, 45 B. 762, affirmed C.A. Kanchava v. Girimallappa, 48 B. 569 (575) P.C.

(7) Nilmadheb v. Jotindra, 17 C.W. N. 341.

(8) Kenchava v. Girimallappa, 48 B. 569 (575) P.C., distinguishing Ganga v. Chandrabhagabai, 32 B. 275. Same under English law—Pitts (In re) [1931] 1 Ch. 546.

(9) Har Bhagwan v. Hukam Singh, 3 L. 242.

(10) Pitts (In re), (1931) 1 Ch. 546 (550).

(11) Dilraj Kuari v. Bikeswar, 12 P. 712.

(12) Hindu Inheritance (Removal of Disabilities) Act, 1928.

(13) Hindu Inheritance (Removal of Disabilities) Act, 1928 (XII of 1928, which came into force on the 20th September, 1928).

(14) Ib.

subject to the Mitakshara law. That Act except the Dayabhag law does not affect any rule regarding the management of any religious or charitable trust. To that extent the old rule still holds good. But in other respects, it is modified by the enactment which, so far as the Mitakshara law is concerned, overrules all texts, and cases which disqualified a person from participation in his heritage, whether as a coparcener or an heir, by reason of any disqualification, mental or physical, other than congenital lunacy or idiocy.

The question as to what amounts to congenital lunacy or idiocy is a question of fact dependent upon what degree of cognitive faculty a person possessed when he was born. The subject has been discussed by the writer in another place, to which reference is invited.[1]

As the Hindu Inheritance (Removal of Disabilities) Act only rescinds the rule disqualifying a person from participation or inheritance, by reason of his mental and physical defects, it does not affect the Hindu rule that a person turning an ascetic, and abandoning the world, ceases to be a coparcener and is so disqualified as an heir.

2198. Ascetics.—The texts cited under section 332[2] debar a person who has abandoned the world, from claiming as an heir. So Vashisth says: "Those who have changed the domestic order and entered into another, are debarred from shares."[3] Referring to this, Nilakanth says that this means that the person must have entered the order of perpetual student, hermit or ascetic. The fact that a person is a bairagi, has, however, been held to be no ground for exclusion, since bairagis still pursue secular occupations.[4] And since a Shudra cannot enter the order of yati or sanyasi, a Shudra who becomes an ascetic, is not excluded from inheritance to his family estate, unless some usage is proved to the contrary. The texts applicable to the disinheritance of ascetics do not apply to Shudras.[5] There are degrees in asceticism, and it does not follow that a man, by becoming an ascetic, has so completely renounced the world as to make himself incapable of taking an inheritance. It has been held that his becoming a fakir entails that disability,[6] and that the burden of proving otherwise is upon him.[7] But it is submitted that he who relies upon the disqualification, must prove it. It has been doubted whether a gossain forfeits his secular estate by becoming an ascetic.[8] gossains marry, and their marriage had not necessarily the effect of entailing forfeiture of their office and of its appendant property and rights.[9]

Pleading.

2199. Since succession is the rule and exclusion an exception, he who relies upon an exclusion by reason of any disability, must establish it by clear evidence.[10]

(1) Gour's Penal Law, 5th (Ed.), §§ 696-701.

(2) Mit., II-X-3; Dayabhag, V-V- 11; Mayukh, IV-XI-5, (Mandlik), p. 109.

(3) Cited in Mayukh, IV-XI-5, (Mandlik), p. 100.

(4) Teeluk v. Shama Churn, 1 W.R. 209; Jagannath v. Bidyanand, 10 W.R. 172.

(5) Harish v. Atir, 40 C. 545 (547); Dharmapuram v. Virapandiyam, 22 M. 302; Somasundaram v. Vaithilinga, 40 M. 846; Sadhu v. Baldeodasji, 39 B. 168; Mahant v. Khande Rao, (1922) B. 295; Sobhaddi v. Gobind, 46 A. 616.

(6) Teku v. Busti, (1874) P.R.No. 15.

(7) Badhawa v. Sochat, (1892) P.R. No. 7.

(8) Mula v. Partap, 32 A. 489; Asharb v. Ishri, 11 A.L.J. 683 : 20 I.C. 398; Kailasgir v. Kishorgir, Oudh S.L., Pt. VIII, No. 3.9

(9) Rambharti v. Surabharti, 5 B. 682.

(10) Surendra Nath v. Ashutosh, 27 C. W.N. 959: (1923) C. 331.

He must not only prove a disability, but the disability pleaded by him must be shewn to be such as justifies the exclusion. A stranger cannot attack the plaintiff's title, unless he has himself a valid title to the estate. Where the defendant pleaded a will in answer to the plaintiff's suit, based upon his inheritance, it is for him to establish the will, without which he would be a trespasser, and, as such, not entitled to defeat the plaintiff by throwing on him the burden of proving his title free from infirmity at the time when the succession opened.[1] The fact that he was suffering from it at the time of the suit, does not prove his disqualification to inherit, which must be established at the moment the succession opened.[2] It is only a person with a superior right that can disturb another in possession of property.[3] A person with defective title may, however, perfect it by adverse possession.

305. Disqualification of women. (1) Women are excluded from inheritance unless their claim is supported by special texts[4] or local usage,[5] or legislative enactment.[6]

(2) And save as provided in section 336, a female heir presumably takes, by inheritance, only a limited interest in her estate which, on her death, reverts to the heir of the last full owner.[7]

2200. Analogous Law.—The following texts bear on the subject of this section:—

Apastamb.—"If there be no male issue, the nearest kinsman inherits; on default of kindred, the protector, or failing him, the disciple."[8]

Baudhayan.—"A woman is not entitled to inherit, for thus says the Veda: 'Females and persons deficient in the organ of senses are deemed incompetent to inherit.'"[9]

Dayabhag.—"Accordingly (since they, i.e., females, are excluded), Baudhayan, after premissing 'A woman is entitled to proceeds not to the heritage, for females are persons deficient in an organ of sense or member, are deemed incompetent to inherit.' The construction of this passage is a 'Woman is not entitled to heritage.' But the succession of the widow and certain others (viz., the daughter, the mother and the paternal grandmother) takes effect under express texts, without any contradiction to this maxim."[10]

Virmitroday also interprets the Vedic text to be limited only to those women whose right of inheritance has not been expressly declared.[11]

2201. But this disqualification applies only as between relations and not against a stranger. And even then the disqualification is purely personal, and does not affect their sons, while the sister,[12] uncle's daughter,

---

(1) Jainadi v. Kanshi Ram, (1899) P. R. No. 19; Lochan v. Babai, 5 N.L.R. 161.

(2) Murli Singh v. Jaisingh, 5 A.L. J. 115.

(3) Mangal Das v. Raila Ram, (1912) P.R. No. 83.

(4) See § 2200.

(5) Lallubhai v. Cassibai, 5 B. 110 (118) P.C.

(6) Cf., Hindu Women's Right of Property Act, 1937.

(7) See S. 335.

(8) Cited in Mit., II-VII-1. The words in the text are बन्धूनामभावे, i.e., if there be no Bhandu or kindred of the deceased.

(9) This Vedic text, Vidyaranya (a commentator on the Taititriya Veda) interpreted in a different way, so that it would have no reference to inheritance: Ananda v. Nownit, 9 C. 315 (322).

(10) Dayabhag, XI-VI-11.

(11) Virmitroday, (Golap Shastri), 175.

(12) Chelikani v. Vencata, 6 M.H.C. R. 278 (288). But sisters inherit in Bombay; Annaji v. Vasudev, 38 B. 438.

brother's daughter, nephew's daughter, son's daughter[1] or daughter's daughter[2] are excluded from inheritance, their sons inherit in their own right though not through their mothers. But it is submitted that according to Apastamb, cited with approval in the Mitakshara quoted elsewhere (§ 2334) the kindred are preferential heirs to to the preceptor, and, as such all female relations would inherit as bandhus in preference to a stranger. This point was raised but not decided by the Privy Council in the case in which their Lordships limited the range of heritable bandhus.[3]

Barrenness.

2202. Barenness does not disqualify a woman from succession.[4] In the case of the wife, the texts empower the husband to supersede but not to disinherit her.[5] But in Bombay, where the daughter would otherwise take an absolute estate, a childless widowed daughter does not, in the absence of custom, inherit absolutely to her father, but takes only a life-estate, which she cannot alienate except for legal necessity.[6]

Clause (2).

2203. Woman's Limited Estate.—The limitation stated in clause (2) now only applies to a female relation, who takes as an heir, and not to one who takes by gift or devise, who are now subject to the general rule, that the grantee presumably acquires all rights of the grantor.[7]

The only exceptions to this rule are those embodied in section 364 and (380), the effect of which is to except the Maharashtra female heirs who take an absolute interest in their heritage as therein provided.

The exceptional case of express texts and local usage will be considered in the sequel.

Unchastity a disqualification.

306. (1) Subject to the provisions of section 299, the widow is disqualified from inheritance if she was unchaste when the succession opened.[8]

(2) But under the Dayabhag law, this disqualification extends generally to all female heirs.[9]

2204. Analogous Law.—The following texts bear on the subject of unchastity as a ground for exclusion:—

Katyayan.—"Let the childless widow, keeping unsullied the bed of her Lord and abiding with her venerable protector, enjoy with moderation the property until her death."

Vridha Manu.—"The widow of childless man, keeping unsullied her husband's bed and persevering in religious observances, shall present his funeral oblation and obtain his entire share."[10]

---

(1) Nanhi v. Gauri Shankar, 28 A. 187; Koomul v. Seetakanth, W.R. (F. B.) 75; Nallanna v. Ponnal, 14 M. 149.

(2) Ramphal v. Panmati, 32 A. 640; Ajudhia v. Ramsumer, 31 A. 454; Nanhi v. Gauri, 28 A. 187; Jagannath v. Champa, 28 A. 307 (contra in Bansidhar v. Ganeshi, 22 A. 338, dissented from); Ramappa v. Arumagath, 17 M. 172; Malan v. Jewan, 32 I.C. (L.) 916.

(3) Ramchandra v. Vinayak, 42 C. 384 (421) P.C.

(4) Khen Koer v. Jai Koer, (1875) P.R. No. 16.

(5) Ram v. Loorindas, (1867) P.H. No. 40.

(6) Bulakhidas v. Keshaval, 6 B. 85.

(7) Cf., S. 8 Transfer of Property Act; S. 95 Succession Act.

(8) See the texts cited in the analogous law.

(9) Ramanath v. Durga, 4 C. 550; Ramananda v. Raikishori, 22 C. 347 (354); Sundari v. Pitambari, 32 C. 871; Rajabala v. Shyama, 22 C.W.N. 566 : 45 I.C. 714; Trailakya v. Radhasundari, 23 C.W.N. 970: 55 I.C. 704.

(10) Cited in Mit., II-I-6, 18.

Yadnavalkya.—"A woman guilty of unchasity shall be deprived of her position and possession, shall wear dirty clothes, shall live upon starving maintenance, shall be humiliated and made to sleep on bare ground.

"The moon has given them purity, the Gandharvas have given them sweet voice, the Fire-god has given them permanent sanctity; women are, therefore, always pure.

"A woman guilty of adultery is purified by catamenia, but her abandonment is ordained in case of conception by adultery, and in case of causing abortion or killing the husband, as well as in case of committing heinous sins."[1]

Chastity in a woman is generally commended.[2] But in Manu Unchastity is no bar to succession, and as an offence it is regarded as venial. "A woman (committing adultery) is purified by catamenia, provided she did not conceive."[3] But it grew in popular disfavour when Yadnavalkya wrote, for he is severe upon that failing. But neither Yadnavalkya nor his commentator, the author of Mitakshara, expressly mentions unchastity as a disqualification for inheritance; though as leading to degradation in certain cases it is held as comprised in the acts entailing it.

2205. It will be noticed that all the texts dealing with unchastity relate to the wife. They do not refer to other female relations. Other texts, letting in other females, do not refer to their chastity, which only occurs in the case of the widow. It is consequently held that it is a condition applicable only to the widow, and not to all female heirs.[4] But the contrary has been held in Bengal,[5] on the authority of Raghunandan, "a high authority in the Bengal school," which the Madras court refused to follow.[6] But in Bombay, the Bengal view was supported on the ground that since unchastity is either a vice or results in excommunication, the woman is incompetent to inherit in any and every capacity.[7]

2206. Unchastity does not dissolve the marital tie[8] but is a disqualification for the wife's succession to her husband,[9] unless it was condoned by him.[10] Unchastity does not, however, debar a woman from inheriting the stridhan property of her female relative.[11] (S. 378.) According to the Bengal school, unchastity is a ground for disinheriting a daughter,[12] but elsewhere the disqualification is stated to be limited to the widow, being inapplicable to other female relations, e.g., the mother.[13] But the Privy Council, in one case, said: "It seems clear, however, that though

(1) Yad., I-70-72.
(2) Manu, IX-29, 30.
(3) Parasar, VII-4.
(4) Advyapa v. Rudrava, 4 B. 104; Kojiyadu v. Lakshmi, 5 M. 149; Angammal v. Venkata, 26 M. 509; Vedammal v. Vedanayaga, 31 M. 100 (109); Ganga v. Ghasita, 1 A. 46; Baldeo v. Mathura, 33 A. 702; Ram Pargash v. Dhan Bibi, 3 Pat. 152.
(5) Ramanath v. Durga, 4 C. 550; Ramananda v. Raikishori, 22 C. 347 (354); Sundari v. Pitambari, 32 C. 871; Rajabala v. Shyama, 22 C. W. N. 566: 45 I.C. 714; Trailakhya v. Radhasundari, 23 C.W.N. 970: 55 I.C. 704.
(6) Vedammal v. Vedanayaga, 31 M. 100 (110); Kothandarama v. Subbiar, 52 M.L.J. 514: 102 I.C. 429: (1927) M. 576.
(7) Gangu v. Chandrabhaga, 32 B. 275 (294).
(8) Bisheshar v. Mata, (1870) N. W. P.H.C.R. 300; Gunga v. Ghasita, 1 A. 46 F.B.; Narayan v. Tirlok, 29 A. 4; Subharaya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171; Chhatukurmi v. Rajaram, 3 I.C. 374; contra in Ram Prasad v. Suhu Bai, 4 N. L.R. 31.
(9) Khettermoni v. Kadambini, 16 C. W.N. 964: 17 I.C. 83; Sita Ram v. Laxman, 8 N.L.R. 128.
(10) Gangadhar v. Yelu, 36 B. 138; Radhi Lal v. Balwant Ram, 40 A. 178.
(11) Nogendra v. Benoy, 30 C. 521; Angammal v. Venkata, 26 M. 506.
(12) Ramchandra v. Raikishori, 22 C. 347; Aiti v. Aidew, 24 C.W.N. 173.
(13) Advyapa v. Rudrava, 4 B. 104; Kojiyadu v. Lakshmi, 5 M. 149; Angammal v. Venkata, 26 M. 509; Vedammal v. Vedanayaga, 31 M. 100 (105); Baldeo v. Mathura, 33 A. 702.

an unchaste daughter is excluded from inheriting her father's estate, or an unchaste mother that of her son, it is not by virtue of either of the abovementioned texts of Vridha-Manu or Katyayan."[1]

But the rule equally applicable to all is that whatever may be the effect of unchastity as a disqualification for inheritance, it is no ground for divesting an estate after it has once become vested in her. In other words, while unchastity may be a good ground for exclusion from inheritance, it is no ground for disinhersion.[2] Another point to be remembered is that a single lapse does not amount to unchastity. The earlier texts even condone unchastity not followed by conception. But while this view is no longer tenable, still the courts treat unchasity as admitting of degree.

2207. Re-marriage is not unchastity. Consequently, apart from custom or any other law for time being in force, a female heir is not disqualified from inheritance by reason of her re-marriage. For instance, the mother though re-married, is a competent heir to her son[3] and even to her husband, except when her re-marriage, being legalized by the Hindu Widow's Re-marriage Act,[4] is coupled with the disability created by the Act. Apart from such disability, where a re-marriage is permitted by custom, no disability can be imported into the custom, unless it was an integral part of it.

307. Except as provided in section 303 (1), when an heir is disqualified, the next heir of the deceased succeeds, but the disqualified heir is entitled to maintenance for himself and his family.[5]

Succession on exclusion of disqualified heir.

2208. Analogous Law.—The following texts support the rule stated in the section:—

Mitakshara.—"The disinheritance of the persons above described seeming to imply the disinheritance of their sons, the author adds: 'But their sons, whether legitimate, or the offspring of the wife by a kinsman, are entitled to allotments, if free from similar defects.'"[6]

Dayabhag.—"When the father is dead (as well as in his lifetime), an impotent man, a blind man, etc., are not competent to share the heritage. Food and raiment should be given to them, excepting the outcast. But the sons of such persons, being from similar defects, shall obtain their father's share of the inheritance."[7]

2209. Effect of Exclusion upon Inheritance.—The effect of exclusion of an heir upon inheritance is that the excluded heir receives maintenance charged on the estate, and the succession devolves upon the next heir as if he were dead or had relinquished his right.[8] It is immaterial that the next heir claims through him, since the incapacity being personal, does not taint the blood.[9] Consequently, the wife or widow of a dis-

(1) Kery v. Moneeram, 13 B.L.R. 1 (45), affirmed O.A. Moniram v. Keri, 5 C. 776 (787) P.C., explained in Ramanand v. Raikishori, 22 C. 347 (353). To the same effect, Ram Nath v. Durga, 4 C. 550; Sundari v. Pitambari, 32 C. 871.

(2) Matangini v. Jayakali, 5 B.L.R. 466; Keri v. Moniram, 13 B.L.R. 1 F. B.: 19 W.R. 367 F.B., O.A.. Moni Ram v. Keri, 5 C. 776 P.C.

(3) Akorh v. Boreance, 2 B. L. R. 199 F.B.: 11 W.R. 82; Basappa v. Rayava, 29 B. 91 F.B., followed in Har Kishore v. Thakur Dhan, 26 C.W.N. 925.

(4) Act XV of 1856.

(5) Pareshmani v. Dinanath, 1 B.L.R. (A.C.) 177; Bodhnarayan v. Omrao, 13 M.I.A. 519; Budha Kuar v. Sahodra, 11 Pat. 35.

(6) Yad., II-142: Mit., II-X-9.

(7) Dayabhag, V-V-11.

(8) Pareshmani v. Dinanath, 1 B.L. R. (A.C.) 177; Bodhnarain v. Omrao, 13 M.I.A. 519; Budha Kuar v. Sahadra. 11 Pat. 35.

(9) Gangu v. Chandrabhaga, 32 B. 275 (295).

qualified person is not incapable of inheriting property merely by reason of her husband's disqualification, whether she claims as heir to a deceased person through her husband or otherwise, if she is herself free from any of the defects which exclude a person from inheritance.[1] But this rule cannot be extended to one excluded for his being guilty of murder, in which case he ceases to be a stock for a fresh line of descent.[2]

2210. Maintenance of Excluded Heir.—The excluded heir and his family are provided with maintenance as a solatium for loss of inheritance. The subject has been already considered in S. 97.

308. No court shall enforce the disqualification of an heir resulting from his renouncing or having been excluded from the communion of any religion, or being deprived of caste.[3]

Outcastes not disqualified.

2211. Analogous Law.—The language of this section is drawn from the provisions of Act XXI of 1850, then misnamed. "The Lex Loci Act," and afterwards again misnamed. "The Caste Disabilities Removal Act."[4] Its more appropriate title would have been "The Freedom of Religion Act," since the Act abrogates the rules of both the Hindu and Mahomedan Law, which disqualify an infidel from inheritance.[5]

The texts on the subject have been already set out under the last section. They regard an apostate and an outcast as wholly disqualified from inheritance. That rule enacted to prevent defection from one's ancestral faith, has now been in a great measure abrogated by the Statute which regards freedom of thought as no disqualification for inheritance.

2212. It will be noticed that the language of the Act only removes the disability from the convert but does not extend to his descendants. Consequently, if a Hindu becomes converted to Christianity, his descendants cannot, as reversioners, claim the estate of a deceased Hindu. This view proceeds upon the restricted meaning assigned to the word "renounced" or "excluded" as applicable only to the immediate convert and not to his descendants.[6] The contrary has been held in Allahabad, where these words, read with the preamble, are held to include those who are at any time excluded from their religion.[7] In any

(1) Ganga v. Chandrabhaga, 22 B. 275 (295) distinguished in Kenchava v. Girimallappa, 48 B. 569 (576) P. C. contra, Budha Kuar v. Sahodra, 11 Pat. 35.

(2) Kenchava v. Girimallappa, 48 B. 569 (576) P.C.

(3) Cf., The Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850); Mitar Sen v. Maqbul Hasan, 57 I.A. 313: (1930) P. C. 251.

(4) By the Short Titles Act (XIV of 1897).

(5) Under Mahomedan Law, a Kafir relation, howmuchsoever near, is wholly excluded.—Amir Ali's Mahomedan Law (Handbook), 35-37; ib., 2 Mahomedan Law (2nd Ed.), 85, 121; Mitar Sen v. Maqbul Hasan, 57 I.A. 313: (1930) P. C. 251, overruling Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu, 11 A. 100 (in which the Act was held to extend to the converts' descendants). Rupa v. Sardar Mirza, 1 L. 376; Khunni Lal v. Gobind, 33 A. 356 (365, 366) P.C. The Act was first enacted as S. 9 of Beng. Reg. VII of 1832, the principle of which was extended to the whole of British India by Act XXI of 1850.

(6) Vaithilinga v. Ayyathorai, 40 A. 1118; Sundarammal v. Ameenal, (1927) M. 72.

(7) Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu, 11 A. 100, dissented from in Vaithilinga v. Ayyathorai, 40 A. 1118.

case, if the descendants of a Hindu convert are brought up as Hindus, they re-enter the fold of Hindu Law, and will be subject to its rules regarding succession.[1] A Christian is entitled to succeed to another Christian, though the latter be converted to Islam.[2] The Act protects the convert's right of succession, whether he became a convert before or after the succession had opened.[3]

It will be noted that the Act does not abrogate the law of forfeiture absolutely, but merely enacts that that law "shall cease to be enforced as law," which might mean that the courts, would give effect to it or that they shall do so only otherwise than by enforcing it. In either view, the forfeiture remains—only the courts will not recognize it for certain purposes. Consequently, if the forfeiture is given effect to by an award, it cannot be set aside on the ground of its illegality.

Again, the Act does not apply to all exclusions from inheritance, but only to those resulting from apostacy. Consequently, where a Hindu[4] or a Buddhist[5] became converted to Mahomedanism and married a Mahomedan wife, his Hindu wife would be excluded from inheritance to him, since the law of succession applicable to him would be the Mahomedan Law, and under that law, an infidel is disqualified.

309. Persons subject to the Succession Act. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained herein, succession to the property of any person married under the provisions of the Special Marriage (Amendment) Act, 1923, shall be regulated by the provisions of the Succession Act:[6]

(2) Provided that his own right of succession to the property of another shall be determined as if he had not contracted such marriage.[7]

2213. Analogous Law.—The provisions of this section are drawn from those of the Act therein mentioned. It legalizes intermarriages between Hindus, Buddhists, Sikhs and Jains, and as they have their own law of succession, it was considered expedient to give them the benefit of the most modern law of statutory succession as enacted in the Succession Act. At the same time, their own right to succession is safeguarded.

2214. Exceptional Cases.—In liberalizing the Hindu Law of marriage by permitting Hindus, Buddhists, Sikhs and Jains to intermarry without reference to caste or sect, it was apprehended that the issue of such marriage should receive the benefit of the modern law of Succession, which confers no special rights upon agnatic kinsmen to the supersession of cognates and especially the females. At the same time, it was felt that such persons should not be penalised by having to forfeit their right of succession to others. The dual object is achieved in the enactment of two sections added to the Special Marriage Act,[8] which

(1) Ram Pergash v. Dahan, 3 Pat. 152.
(2) Rupa v. Sardar Mirza, 1 L. 376.
(3) Khunni Lal v. Gobind, 33 A. 356 P.C.; Ram Pergash v. Dahan Bibi, 3 Pat. 152 (179).
(4) Chedambaram v. Ma Nyein, 6 R. 243 (252).
(5) Asha Bibi v. Ma Kya Yin, 6 I.C. (R.) 514.
(6) S. 24, Special Marriage Act, as amended by Act XXX of 1923.
(7) Ib., S. 23.
(8) Ss. 23, 24, Special Marriage Act (III of 1872), as amended by Act XXX of 1923.

while safeguarding such persons' right of succession to any property, at the same time removes all agnatic rights and sexual disabilities by placing succession to their own property under the jurisdiction of the Succession Act. The relations of Hindus who marry under this Act, are thus assured of every right to which they would be entitled under the modern law of inheritance embodied in a statutory enactment, free from the archaic notion of property and inferiority of the weaker sex.

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE MITAKSHARA INHERITANCE TO MALES.

2215. Topical Introduction.—The whole Hindu Law of Inheritance is centred in a single word—sapindas—who are a man's heirs. That word has varied in meaning as the law of inheritance developed. In the earlier stages of society, when religion was all in all, religious efficacy was, it is said, the sole test and preferred to propinquity, only those persons being selected as heirs who were most capable of exercising those religious rites which were considered to be beneficial to the deceased.[1] But though this is how the ancient Hindu scriptures treat the question of heirship, it is probable that propinquity was even then the real test, and though religion made the offering of oblations as an antecedent prelude to succession to insure their due performance, the two must have at first merely denoted the sequence, though in time they developed into post hoc ergo propter hoc. The other view that, in early times, the right of inheritance was dependent on the right to participate in the offerings of funeral oblations[2] must be referred to an intermediate stage when that test did not conflict with propinquity and when an undue emphasis laid on the performance of obsequies, could not divert succession from the nearest natural heirs. And in fact, in the case of near succession, the right depends upon consanguinity under both the systems. It is only in the case of remoter relations that the Dayabhag falls back on the principle of spiritual benefit,[3] while the Mitakshara consistently follows throughout the rule of propinquity.[4]

At any rate, the question of moment to the practical student of law is not to trace the genesis of the rule through its mazes of conflicting and contradictory texts, but to examine its present operation on the law of inheritance.

What property is subject of inheritance.

310. This chapter governs the devolution of the separate property of a male over which he had full disposing power, including property of which he died possessed as the sole surviving coparcener.

'Propositus and 'Last full owner' defined.

311. (1) "Propositus" means the person from whom a descent is traced by the heir for the purpose of connecting him with one whose property he inherits.

(2) "Last full owner" means a male who held the property which is the subject of inheritance, absolutely at the time of his death.

2216. Analogous Law.—The "last full owner" has reference not merely to the nature of the property possessed by a person at the time of his death, but also to the rights possessed by him. For instance, the Bengal father possesses absolute powers of disposal over coparcenary property

(1) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B.L.R. 377 (394) P.C.
(2) Ramchandra v. Vinayak, 42 C. 384 (405) P.C.
(3) Nagendra v. Benoy, 30 C. 521.
(4) Suba Singh v. Sarafaraz, 19 A. 215 F.B.

during his lifetime. He is the "last full owner" within the meaning of this clause. But since, under the Mitakshara, full ownership is only possible in respect of property (i) which is the self-acquisition of a member of a coparcenary, or (ii) which belonged to the sole surviving coparcener, or (iii) which was possessed by a separated member of his family, the term must be limited to designate such property. It is obvious that the propositus and the last full owner would in many cases be the same person. It is so when the relationship is to be traced to him.

Sapinda defined.

312. (1) The term "sapinda" includes all persons possessing common particles of body with him in the male or female line irrespective of degree.

(2) But the term is now limited in law only to heritable sapindas of the first degree, that is, the agnatic relations of a person in ascent or descent[1] within seven degrees of him, as also his wife, his daughter and his daughter's son and the wives of his six ascendants. These relations are also called "saman gotra sapindas".[2]

Samanodakas.

(3) Apart from the relations mentioned in the last clause, agnatic relations more remotely related and standing to him from the eighth to the fourteenth degree both inclusive, both in ascent and descent are also his sapindas, but are technically known as "samanodakas".

Bandhus.

(4) Cognatic relations of a man are also his sapindas, but are technically known as "bandhus" or "bhinna-gotra sapindas" and are his heritable heirs if they conform to the provisions of section 324.

(5) Bandhus may be—

(a) "Atma Bandhus", that is to say, one's own, cognatic relations, including also those one's his father.

(b) "Pitru Bandhus", that is to say, the cognatic relations of not only the owner's father, but also those of his grandfather, both paternal and maternal.

(c) "Matru Bandhus", that is to say, the relations of not only the owner's mother, but also those of his mother's grandfather both paternal and maternal.[3]

2217. Analogous Law.—The following texts bear on the subject of Sapinda relationship.

Manu (After specifying the nearer relations as heirs continues).—"7. To the nearest Sapinda (male or female)[4] the inheritance next belongs.[5] The relation of the Sapinda ceases with the seventh person."[6]

Yadnavalkya.—"Let him marry an auspicious woman; one not previously married or deflowered, beautiful, unrelated to him as a sapinda.....and who is beyond the fifth and seventh degree on the mother's side and the father's side respectively."[7]

---

(1) Lal Harihar v. Bajrang, (1937) P.C. 242.

(2) Jadunath v. Bishambar, (1932) P.C. 142 (145).

(3) Kalimuthu v. Ammamuthu, 58 M. 238 (245); Rami Reddi v. Gangi Reddi, 48 M. 722. The three-fold classification of Bandhus is neither scientific nor mutually exclusive. It is given here, merely because it is to be found in the texts.

(4) Kalluka Batt's Comm. adopted by Sir Wm. Jones & Cole., Lallubhai v. Cassibai, 5 B. 111 (117, 118) P.C.

(5) Manu, IX-187.

(6) Ib., V-60.

(7) Yad., I-53.

Mitakshara (commenting on the last).

"(1) Any descendant within the seventh degree reckoned from and inclusive of himself, that is, any of his first six descendants.

"(2) Any ascendant within the seventh degree reckoned from and inclusive of himself in the paternal line, that is, any of his first six ascendants in his paternal line.

"(3) Any collateral descendant within the seventh degree reckoned from and inclusive of the six paternal ascendants, that is, any of the first descendants of any of the first six ascendants in the paternal line.

"(4) Any ascendant within the fifth degree reckoned from and inclusive of himself in the maternal line, that is, any of the four maternal ancestors, namely, the mother, her father, her grandfather and the rest; and

"(5) Any collateral descendants within the fifth degree reckoned from and inclusive of any of the three maternal ancestors, beginning with the mother's father, that is, any of the first four descendants of any of the three maternal ancestors beginning with the mother's father.[1]

2218. The following texts define the Samanodak[2] relationship:—

Manu.—"(The relation of) samanodak or those connected by an equal libation of water, ends only when their births and family names are no longer known."[3]

Mitakshara.—"If there be none such, (i.e., sapindas), the succession devolves on kindred connected by libations of water, and they must be understood to reach to the seventh degree beyond the kindred connected by funeral oblations of food, or as far as the limits of knowledge as to birth and name extend. Accordingly, what Manu says: 'The relation of the sapindas or kindred connected by the funeral oblation ceases with the seventh person[4] and that of samanodaks or those connected by a common libation of water extends to the fourteenth degree, or as some affirm, it reaches as far as the memory of birth and name extends. This is signified by gotra or the relation of family name."'[5]

Upon these texts, the Privy Council have held that the samanodak relationship does not go beyond the Fourteenth degree.

It will be seen in the sequel that samanodaks take their place in the line of heirs, though their place is perhaps uncertain. (§ 323 comm.)

2219. The Hindu Law of inheritance is subdivided into two main systems, the Dayabhag and the Mitakshara. "By the general Hindu Law of inheritance, where the Mitakshara does not prevail, the heirs are generally selected because of their capability to exercise certain religious rites for the benefit of the deceased. Where, however, the Mitakshara governs, each son, immediately on his birth, takes a share equal to his father in the ancestral immovable estate."[6] In other words, while inheritance under the Mitakshara depends upon consanguinity, that under the Dayabhag, in the case of remoter relations,[7] depends upon spiritual efficacy.

2220. But both deduce these diametrically opposite conclusions from the same texts, ascribing to the term "sapinda" the meaning which accords with their conclusions. That term, as already remarked, is somewhat of a doubtful import, since the word "pinda" has a dual meaning and fits in with either deduction.[8] In either view, the material question is not what the word means, but rather what relations it comprises.

---

(1) Babu Lal v. Nenku Ram, 22 C. 339 (342), approved in Ramchandra v. Vinayek, 42 C. 384 (420) P.C. To the same effect, Umaid v. Udoi, 6 C. 119 (125) F.B.

(2) Lit. Saman alike or common, and Udak water, those allied by water, that is, these participating in the same oblation of water; Devkore v. Amritram, 10 B. 372 (379).

(3) Manu, V-60.

(4) This is incorrect. The word is "man." Held that the words within the brackets is not the view of Vidnyaneshwar.

(5) Mit., II-VI-6, cited in Devokore v. Amritram, 10 B. 372 (379, 380); Huchangouda v. Kellava, 30 Bom.L.R. 38: (1928) B. 100.

(6) Kali Pershad v. Anand Koy, 15 C. 471 (480) P.C.; Umaid v. Uday, 6 C. 119; Babu Lal v. Nanku Ram, 22 C. 339.

(7) Nagendra v. Benoy, 30 C. 521.

(8) Lit., Skr. sa with and pinda body or ball. According to the Daya-

2221. After mentioning the nearest relations as heirs of a person by name, such as sons, grandsons, great-grandsons, father, brother and others,[1] Manu adds: "To the nearest sapinda the inheritance next belongs,"[2] or more literally translated: "Whoever is near to a sapinda, his property shall belong to him", or in other words, the property of a person must be inherited by his nearest sapinda, from which it follows that the deceased proprietor and his heir must be nearly related to each other as sapindas, that is to say, (i) the two must be related to each other as sapindas, and (ii) the heir must be his nearest sapinda.

Sapinda.

2222. This raises the question: What is a sapinda? The earliest law-giver Manu defines it thus: "Now the relationship of the sapindas ceases with the seventh person."[3] This definition is meagre and does not state whether the seven degrees are to be counted both in the line of ascent or descent and whether it includes also collaterals. According to the Mitakshara,[4] 57 relations of a person constitute his sapindas who inherit in the order mentioned in the next section.

They are:

(1) His 6 male descendants in the male line;
(2) His 6 male ascendants in the male line, and their wives.
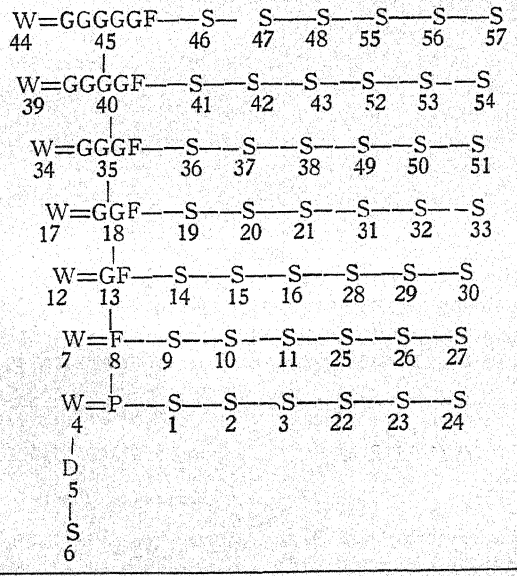
(3) The 6 male descendants in the collateral line of each of his male ascendants.
(4) His wife, daughter and daughter's son.

2223. A complete list of sapindas will be found shown in the following chart:—

MITAKSHARA SAPINDAS.



---

bhag, sapinda means persons allied by the funeral-ball, according to the Mitakshara, those possessing particles of the same body, see Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai, 2 B. 388 (429, 430).

(1) Manu, IX-153-186.

(2) Ib., 187; Sir W. Jones' paraphrase is inaccurate. He translates the passage thus: "To the nearest sapinda, male or female, after him in the third degree, the inheritance next belongs."

(3) Manu, V-60.

(4) Mit., II-V.

Bandhus.

2224. Now, sapindas may be either gotraj or bhinna gotraja, i.e., those who belong to the same gotra or those whose gotras are different. The first are called gotraj sapindas, and the latter bhinna gotraj sapindas, otherwise called bandhus. The former are agnatic, while the latter are cognatic kinsmen.

Historical retrospect.

2225. The term "bandhu" or "bandhav"[1] connotes persons bound together by ties of affection. In the Smritis, it is a term of uncertain import, being used by Manu,[2] Vashisth,[3] Vishnu[4] and Yadnavalkya to mean agnatic relations. Of these, Yadnavalkya uses it in no less than 17 places indiscriminately for relatives in general, for agnates, for cognates, and also as a synonym for friends.[5] He reserved the word "Yoni Sambandha"[6] for cognatic kinsmen. The term bandhu was for the first time used in the Mitakshara to connote only cognatic relations inferior both to the agnatic sapindas and samanodaks.[7] The term is now so used in legal treatises as meaning a cognate sapinda, or a sapinda related through a female. The Mitakshara only mentions nine bandhus, as such. Adding to them the daughter's son, as provided by special text, the number of heritable bandhus, according to the Mitakshara, did not exceed 10 relations. The sister's son remained outside this list, and he asserted his claim which, though at first rejected even by the Privy Council,[8] could not long be ignored.

2226. A new principle of exposition was discovered. It was held that the list of bandhus in the Mitakshara was merely illustrative and not exhaustive,[9] and the sister's son found a place as a heritable bandhu.[10] This opened the way to a brother's daughter's son,[11] a son of the sister's daughter,[12] a maternal uncle.[13] "The term bandhu applies not only to the maternal kinsmen mentioned above, but also to those kinsmen who are related through females, either of the paternal or the maternal line. The daughter's son, the sister's son, the father's sister's son, the brother's daughter's son and the uncle's daughter's son are all bandhus of the paternal line. So, in the maternal line, the mother's sister's son, the maternal uncle's daughter's son and the maternal grandfather's daughter's son are cognate sapindas of the deceased. All these persons belong to a different gotra and are related by blood to the deceased. They are, therefore, his bhinna gotra sapindas, or sapindas bearing a different family name."[14] As such, their number would be illimitable, since "relationship of all persons, may in one way or the other, be traced with all other persons in this world of eternal transmigrations of the soul with its minute body."[15] Consequently, relying upon the limited meaning assigned to the term in the Achar Kand (the chapter dealing with the Rituals) of the Mitakshara, it has been held to

---

(1) From Sk. Bandh to bind.
(2) Manu, IX-158.
(3) Vashisth, XVII.
(4) Vishnu, XV.
(5) Yad. I-82, 108, 113, 116, 144, 155, 158, 220, 340, II-138, 147, 152, 267, 283; III-11, 239, 294.
(6) Lit. Yoni women, and Sambandha related through.
(7) Mit., II-VI-1.
(8) Jowahir v. Kailassoo, 1 W.R. 74; Tharkoorain v. Mohunlal, 7 W.R. 25 P.C.
(9) Girdharee Lall v. The Bengal Government, (1868) 12 M.I.A. 448; Amrit v. Lukhee Narain, 10 W.R. 764 F.B.; Muthusami v. Simambedu, 19 M. 405 P.C.
(10) Amrit v. Lakhee Narain, 10 W.R. 76 F.B.
(11) Doorga v. Janiki, 18 W.R. 331.
(12) Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand, 6 C. 119 F.B.
(13) Muthusami v. Simambedu, 19 M. 405 P.C.
(14) Sarv. Inh. 636.
(15) Mit. II-V-§ 7.

be limited in its import only to persons not more than five degrees remote from the common ancestor; but in order to entitle a man to succeed to the inheritance of another, he must be so related to the latter that they are both sapindas of each other. In other words, to be an heir, the person must not merely be the sapinda of the propositus; but the propositus must equally have been his sapinda[1] (S. 324).

These two rules being settled, we have first to see what persons are related within five degrees of the propositus in the ascending or descending line.

Taking only the descendants it will be seen that there are 123 such relations as shown in the chart.

Similarly, there are 64 bandhus ex parte paterna, 31 bandhus ex parte materna, in addition to which there are 36 father's bandhus and 17 mother's bandhus, or altogether 168 bandhus. Taking the two together, there are no less than 381 such cognate relations conforming to the first rule; but a great many of them are ineligible, by virtue of the second rule as to mutuality already explained.

Those that remain are heritable bandhus who are eligible as heirs, but of whom the nearest bandhu will succeed. This is the subject of another rule.

For further discussion, see commentary on Ss. 324, 325.

2227. Mode of Computation.—It will be seen from the annexed chart that in counting the degrees from the propositus in ascent or descent, the degrees are to be counted from and inclusive of the propositus. But in order to ascertain the relationship of the claimant to him, if he is a collateral, the counting must begin from the common ancestor up to the claimant who must be not more than seven degrees distant from him. This is graphically set out in the table. But it has been held in Madras, that such computation should be limited to three and not seven degrees in each branch, after which the three degrees in the next collateral branch must be considered and soon. Hence the great grandson of the propositus is a preferable heir to the son of the great grandson of the grandfather of the propositus.[2]

But the rule for the counting of a bandhu is in one respect different. In his case, while the counting in the ascending and descending line is the same, the father's mother is excluded in counting the father's maternal ancestors, but she is included in determining the degree of relationship of his descendants, the object aimed at being to let in by the one rule the father's mother's great grandfather as a bandhu, and exclude, by the other, seven of his descendants from the same category. This will be explained more fully in the sequel.

Female Sapindas.

2228. Manu's text, already quoted (§ 2217) permits all "sapindas" as qualified for inheritance. His commentator Kalluka Bhatt added the words "male or female" as explanatory of that term, which were consequently imported into the text by Sir William Jones and Colebrooke and quoted with apparent

(1) Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand, 6 C. 119 F.B.; Babulal v. Nanku Ram, 22 C. 339, approved in Ramchandra v. Vinayek, 42 C. 384 (420) P.C.; Adit Narayan v. Mahabir, 62 I.C. (Pat.) 251 P.C.

(2) Soobramiah v. Nataraja, 53 M. 61.

approval by the Privy Council[1] in a case admitting the widow of a collaternal relation to succession as one of the gotraja sapindas of that family. Other female relations have also been similarly admitted. (S. 326.) The Mitakshara after enumerating certain heir's states that "on failure of the grandfather's line, the paternal great-grandmother, the great-grandfather, his sons and their issue inherit. In this manner must be understood the succession of kindred belonging to the same family and connected by funeral oblations."[2] It does not except females, and consequently, on the authority of Nand Pandit, Mr. Colebrooke opined that the "daughters of the father and other ancestors must be admitted, like the daughter of the man himself, and for the same reason."[3] This was relied on by the Bombay High Court to support the claim of sisters[4] and half-sisters[5] which was on that ground affirmed by the Privy Council in a later case, however, they were not prepared to extend its operation to Bengal and Madras where the courts had felt bound by the overriding text of Baudhayan to the effect that women are incompetent to inherit, unless they are named and specified as heirs by special texts.[6] Consequently, as sisters are not so specified they were excluded as heirs till their exclusion was made good by the Legislature, which has admitted three female relations, namely, a son's daughter; daughter's daughter and sister as heirs:[7] other females can also come in accordance with the provisions of another Act.[8] These two (along with other) Acts will be found annotated in the appendix.

313. (1) Subject to other provisions of the Code in this behalf, the heirs of a man dying intestate, possessed of separate estate, are, in the first instance, the following relations who inherit his property (both movable and immovable) in the order given below, that is to say:—

Compact series of heirs.

(1) The male issue;[9]
(2) The widow;
(3) The daughter;
(4) The daughter's son;
(5) The mother; } (5) Father;[10]
(6) The father; } (6) Mother;[11]
(7) The brother;
(8) The brother's son;
(9) The brother's grandson;[12]

(2) Failing the above, his heir is the next of kin drawn from the following classes of persons in the order given below, that is to say:—

Other heirs.

---

(1) Lallubhai v. Cassibai, 5 B. 110 (117, 118) P.C.
(2) Mit., II-V-5.
(3) Cole. Note on Mit., II-V-5.
(4) Vinayak v. Lakshmibai, 1 B.H.C.R. 117 (124) affirmed O.A. 9 M.I.A. 516 (537, 538).
(5) Kesserbai v. Valab Raoji, 4 B. 188 (199, 200); Tikaram Purshottam v. Natha Daji, 36 B. 120 (122). The Mitakshara makes no difference between relations of the full-blood and half-blood unless the latter is executed. Jatindranath v. Nagendranath, 55 C. 1153 (1164, 1165) affirmed O.A. 59 C. 576 P.C., explained in Krishnabihari v. Sarojinee Dasee, 60 C. 1061 (1064, 1065).
(6) Lallubhai v. Cassibai, 5 B. 110 (117, 118) P.C.
(7) Act II of 1929.
(8) Act XVII of 1937.
(9) See S. 112.
(10) Under the Mayukh, the father takes before the mother—Mayukh IV-VII-13 (Mandlik) 80.
(11) Ib.
(12) Buddha Singh v. Raltu Singh, 37 A. 604 P.C.; Nilkanth v. Narayan, 28 N.L.R. 58 F.B. But the list ends with the brother's son in Bombay—Appaji v. Mohan Lal, 54 B. 564 (589, 602) F.B.

(10) The Gotraj Sapinda;
(11) The Samanodak;[4]
(12) The Bandhu;
(13) A pupil;
(14) A fellow student;
(15) The Crown.

2229. Analogous Law.—Both Manu, Yadnyavalkya and his commentator Vidnyaneshwar first enumerate the particular heirs, and then generally lay down the order of succession in the following texts:—

Manu.—"187. To the nearest sapinda, male or female, the inheritance next belongs; then on failure of sapindas and of the issues, the samanodaks or distant kinsmen shall be the heir; or the spiritual preceptor or the pupil or the fellow student deceased.

"188. On failure of all those, the lawful heirs are such Brahmans as have read the three Vedas, as are pure in body and mind, as have subdued their passions, and they must consequently offer the cake, thus the rites of obsequies cannot fail.

"189. The property of a Brahman shall never be taken as an escheat by the king; this is a fixed law; but the wealth of the other classes, on failure of all heirs, the king may take."[2]

Yadnyavalkya (After stating that the son inherits, continues).—"135-136. The wife, daughters, both parents, brothers; and likewise their sons gotrajas; bandhus; a pupil and a fellow student. Of these, on failure of the preceding, the next following in order is heir to the estate of one who has departed for heaven leaving no putras. This rule extends to all [males whether belonging or not to the four classes.

"137. The heirs who take the wealth of a hermit (vanaprasth), of an ascetic (yati) and of a student (brahmchari) are, in their order, the preceptor, the virtuous pupil, and one who is a supposed brother and belonging to the same order.

Mitakshara.—"1. That sons, principal and secondary, take the heritage has been shown. The order of succession among all (tribes and classes) on failure of them, is next declared. (Here cites Yad., II-135, 136 quoted supra).

"5. In the first place, the wife shares the estate. Wife (patni) signifies a woman espoused in lawful wedlock, conformably with the etymology of the term as implying a connection with religious rites.

2230. The Heirs.—Manu mentions the son as the heir par excellence, and after him any sapinda. Yadnyavalkya was the first to classify heirs by naming (i) the son, (ii) the wife, (iii) daughters, (iv) parents, (v) brothers, (vi) brother's son, (vii) gotrajas, (viii) bandhus, (ix) the pupil, (x) a fellow-student, and (xi) the king.

Compact series of heirs.

The Mitakshara mentions the following particular heirs: (i) son, (ii) son's son, (iii) son's son's son, (iv) widow,[3] (v) daughter, (vi) daughter's son, (vii) mother, (viii) father, (ix) brother, (x), brother's son, which concludes what it calls "the compact series of heirs," i.e., those whose order is "fixed," the rights of the rest being "after the manner of the entry of intruders who are placed at the end."[4] The question whether the list closes with the brother's son or goes a step further and includes the brother's grandson depends upon the extended meaning of the word

---

(1) Atmaram v. Bajirao, (1935) P.C. 57.
(2) Manu, IX-187-189.
(3) Mit., II-V-2.
(4) Mayukh, IV-VIII-17 (Mandlik), p. 81; Mohan Das v. Krishnabai, 5 B. 597 (602).

"putra" in the Mitakshara text where the position of the grandmother is described and which Mr. Colebroke assigns to her after the father's brothers's son, but which the Privy Council have held to belong to her only after the father's brother's grandson, holding the extended meaning of the term "putra" as not limited to the direct male issue of a person but equally extending to the issue of his collateral relation, namely, the uncle,[1] but the courts have since held this extended meaning unjustified.[2]

The inclusion of the brother's grandson in the "compact series of heirs" has, therefore, the single authority of the Privy Council, who have conceded that their view is not in consonance with the literal construction of the Mitakshara.[3]

2231. Proof of Title.—A person laying claim to property as the heir has necessarily to prove the particular relationship to the deceased which entitles him to claim it. For this purpose, he must not only prove a relationship but the relationship upon which he bases his title. He must further satisfy the court that, to the best of his knowledge, there are no nearer heirs. He cannot be expected to do anything more, and it is for those who claim a closer kinship to prove it.[4] The best evidence to prove such relationship is, of course, the direct evidence of witnesses who can, from their knowledge, testify to the relationship. But this is not always possible, especially where the relationship is distant, in which case, recourse must be had to other facts, such as the preferential right to perform the shradh,[5] or any other fact consistent only with relationship. Every link in the genealogical chain connecting the claimant with the propositus must be established.[6]

2232. Hindu Law contains no rules for the proof of relationship, and its scanty provisions on the subject have all been replaced by the Evidence Act,[7] to which reference must be made for the quality and quantity of evidence required in proof of relationship, if in dispute. Where this is the subject of direct proof, nothing more need be said, since it is then a question of its credibility. But in the case of remote relationship, in which the pedigree has to be traced to a common ancestor, direct evidence may not be possible. Take, for instance, the following case. Suppose H claims as the heir to C, what has he to prove? It will not do if he merely proved that his father was the "cousin" to G, or that his father's father F was the cousin to B. What is required to be proved is that B and F were the sons of A, and C was B's son, and G the son of F, and H a son of G. In other words, each link in the chain of the pedigree must be established by such evidence as law permits and the court considers sufficient. Failing direct evidence, the fact might be established by circumstantial evidence. Such evidence

(1) Buddha Singh v. Laltu Singh, 37 A. 604 (620, 623) P.C.

(2) Appaji v. Mohan Lal, 54 B. 564 (589, 602) F.B.; Nilkanth v. Narayan, 28 N.L.R. 58 F.B.

(3) Buddha Singh v. Laltu Singh, 37 A. 604 (622) P.C.

(4) Rama Row v. Kuttia, 40 M. 654, followed in Pandu v. Abdul Kadir, 65 I. C. (N.) 693.

(5) Soorendronath v. Heeramonee, 12 M.I.A. 81.

(6) Kedarnath v. Protab Chunder, 6 C. 626 (629); Rama Row v. Kuttiya, 40 M. 654; Mewa Singh v. Basant Singh, 21 Bom.L.R. 232 (235): 48 I.C. 540.

(7) Act I of 1872.

bears on the rites which relations are enjoined to perform on the demise of their sapindas. The fact that the two branches bore the same surname, that they observed mourning on the death of the members of the two branches are relevant, but by no means conclusive, though other facts added to them, e.g., the performance of obsequies and their treatment as such relations on religious occasions would suffice to establish their relationship.[1]

2233. Proof of Pedigree.—The proof of pedigree based on hearsay is now subject to the provision of S. 32 of the Evidence Act. Two conditions are prescribed as necessary to admit this evidence. In the first place, the person whose statement is sought to be proved must be dead or one who "cannot be found, or who has become incapable of giving evidence, or whose attendance cannot be procured without an auount of delay or expense, which, under the circumstances of the case, appears to the court unreasonable,"[2] and in the second place, the statement must be one of which he had special means of knowledge, and made before the question in dispute was raised.[3] The statement of relationship made by a claimant in a settlement proceeding, not denied by one in whose interest it would be to deny it, was held to suffice to establish the relationship in a case arising between the representatives of the parties.[4] A statement made to a witness by a person since deceased, who had special means of knowledge, would be admissible; but in order to be admissible, the witness must name his informant and state the period of time when he received the information.[5] Under English Law, such statements, to be admissible, must be made by only a relation,[6] but that restriction does not obtain in this country.[7] And a statement by a family priest,[8] members of a panchayat,[9] or indeed by any stranger possessing the knowledge, is relevant. So, Bards' books, recording the pedigree of their clientele, are relevant, but such pedigree must be something more than a statement of living persons who can themselves be called as witnesses.[10] An ancient family pedigree maintained in a family, and written up from time to time, would be admissible without proof of the entries made therein.[11] A horoscope prepared by a deceased person is admissible to prove the birth of a person, his father's name, his gotra and other facts ordinarily recorded therein.[12]

It seems scarcely necessary to add that the admissibility of evidence is one thing, its weight is another.

2234. In order to eject a trespasser, all that the claimant, claiming as an heir, is to show that he is an heir; but in a competition between two

(1) Devkore v. Amrit Ram, 10 B. 372 (378, 379).

(2) S. 32 (1), Evidence Act (I of 1872), which re-enacts S. 47 of Act (II of 1855); Surjan Singh v. Sarda Singh, 23 A. 72 P.C.

(3) Ib., Cl. 5.

(4) Bejoy Bahadur v. Bhupendra, 17 A. 456 P.C.

(5) Shafiqunnisst v. Shahan Ali, 26 A. 581 P.C.; Baker Ali v. Anjuman, 25 A. 236 P.C.; Bahadur v. Mohar Singh, 24 A. 94 (105) P.C.

(6) Johnson v. Lawson, 1 Bing. 86; Crease v. Baratt, 4 L.J. Ex. 297.

(7) Garwadhwaja v. Suparandhwaja, 23 A. 37 P.C.

(8) Sham Lall v. Radha, 4 C.L.R. 173.

(9) Ajab Singh v. Nana, 25 B. 1 P. C.

(10) Surjan Singh v. Sardar Singh, 23 A. 72 (77) P.C.; Jagatpal v. Jageshar, 25 A. 143 (153) P.C.; Kartic v. Protap, 66 I.C. (C.) 894; Mohan Singh v. Dalpat Singh, 24 Bom.L.R. 289; Kalka Prasad v. Mathura Prasad, 30 A. 510 P.C.

(11) Jagangir v. Sheo Raj Singh, 37 A. 600.

(12) Har Pershad v. Amar Dayal, 5 Pat.L.J. 605: 58 I.C. 72; Annamalai v. Annamalai, 10 M.L.W. 67: 52 I.C. 456; Shyamanand v. Ramakanta, 32 C. 6.

competing heirs, he has further to shew that he is the preferential heir. The quantum of evidence which the court considers as necessary, must depend upon the circumstances of each case. But one thing is certain that the difficulty of proof is no ground for dispensing with it. Hindu Law is archaic as regards succession, preferring, as it does, agnatic kinsmen, however remote, to cognates who are in other systems regarded as the natural nearer heirs. The position of women is one of abject dependence, and their rights are grudgingly recognized in the few cases in which custom has outgrown the law. And it is only just that before dispossessing the natural heir in favour of a remote kinsman, the court should require evidence which establishes the right, which cannot be assumed, as a matter of course, from the performance of mere rituals which the poor man may ostentatiously practise with an eye to the main chance which he foresees in the demise of his wealthy kinsman.

Righ of issue.

314. The issue of the deceased inherit in accordance with the following rules:—

(1) When there are more than one son, whether by the same or different mothers, they take equal shares.[1]

(2) Sons who were joint with their father at the time of his decease inherit to the exclusion of those who were separate.[2]

(3) Grandsons of a predeceased son inherit in the right of their father, taking per stirpes and not per capita.

(4) An adopted son of the deceased inherits the whole estate. But where the deceased has left an auras son surviving him, the adopted son takes one-fourth of the share of an auras son as provided in section 63.

Succession of illegitimate son.

(5) The illegitimate son of a twice-born does not inherit to his putative father.[3] But the son of a Shudra inherits to the same extent as a legitimate son, provided that he was born of a Shudra continuous concubine, intercourse with whom was neither incestuous nor adulterous:[4]

Provided further, that where a Shudra father has sons, a legitimate and an illegitimate, the latter takes half the share of a legitimate son, in default of whom he inherits the whole;[5] but he has otherwise no right to collateral succession.[6] He shares equally with the widow and the daughter's son.

Son.

2235. Analogous Law.—Of all the sapindas, the son is the nearest. He naturally succeeds to his father, and if there are more sons than one, they all take equally, whether they were born of the same or different mothers.[7] The term "son" must, in this connection, be understood to be a loose

---

(1) Ragendra v. Raghonath, (1864) W.R. 20.

(2) Fakirappa v. Yellappa, 22 B. 101; Narasimha v. Narasimha, 55 M. 577. See § 2236.

(3) Inderum v. Ramaswamy, 13 M.I.A. 141 (159).

(4) Vellaiyappa v. Natarajan, 55 M. 1 (15) P.C.

(5) Mit. I-XII-2; Mayukh, IV-IV-32.

(6) S. 308.

(7) Ragendra v. Raghonath, (1864) W.R. 20.

paraphrase of "putra," which is used in the Mitakshara and its commentary the Subodhini as a generic term for male issue or descendant including the grandson and the great-grandson.[1] Consequently, the son of a deceased son would share equally with a living son the self-acquired property of his grandfather.[2] Sons who were joint or had re-united[3] with their father, exclude those who had separated,[4] on the principle that those who have gone out of the family cannot have the same right as those who have remained within it,[5] who have not received their share and were probably in union with the father at the time of his death[6] (§ 1669).

2236. As anuloma marriages, i.e., a marriage of a higher caste Hindu with a woman of a lower caste than himself is valid in Bombay, the share of the son born of such marriage between a Brahmin and a Shudra woman is held to be one-tenth of the estate of his father as well as of his uncle.[7]

Illegitimate Sons.

2237. Illegitimate sons were at one time on a par with legitimate sons,[8] but, except in the case of Shudras, they have now no right beyond a bare right of maintenance.[9] As the Mitakshara puts it, "From the mention of Shudra in this place,[10] it follows that the son begotten by a man of a regenerate tribe on a female slave does not obtain a share even by the father's choice, nor the whole estate after his demise. But if he be docile, he receives a simple maintenance."[11] The son has no greater right because the father was himself illegitimate or belonged to a mixed class between the second and third of the regenerate classes.[12] So, the illegitimate son of a Kshatriya, one of the regenerate castes by a woman of the Shudra[13] or of a Shudra by a Brahmin mistress[14] or any other caste, e.g., a Kshatriya woman,[15] cannot, in the absence of custom,[16] succeed to his putative father;[17] the reason for exclusion being that law does not recognize the status of the

(1) Mit., I-IV-4-6; S. 112; Rutcheputy v. Rajundur, 2 M.I.A. 132 (156); Ananda v. Nownit, 9 C. 315 (319).

(2) Luchmun v. Debee Pershad, 1 W. R. 317; Fakirappa v. Yellappa, 22 B. 101.

(3) Jenka v. Dharma, 9 N.L.R. 150: 21 I.C. 597.

(4) Fakirappa v. Yellappa, 22 B. 101. But a mere separation in food and residence is not such separation, which must amount to a partition; Kunwar Bahadur v. Madho, 17 A.L.J. 151: 49 I.C. 620; Raghubar Dayal v. Ram Dulare, 6 R. 367: Narasimham v. Narasimham, 55 M. 577.

(5) Sarv. Inh., 886: 2 Mac.H.L. Sec. 1, Case 12 W. and B.H.L.: (3rd Ed.), 68, followed in Marudaji v. Doraisami, 30 M. 348 (350); Nana v. Ramachandra, 32 M. 377 (381), explained in Narasimham v. Narasimham, 55 M. 577; Balkrishna v. Savitri Bai, 3 B. 54.

(6) Ramappa v. Sithammal, 2 M. 182 (185).

(7) Natha Nathuram v. Menta Chotalal, 55 B. 1 (11).

(8) Manu, IX-159, 160, 180; Mit.; I-II-2; Str. H.L., 194, 211.

(9) Pandiya v. Puli, 1 M.H.C.R. 478 (482), affirmed O.A. Inderun v. Ramaswamy, 13 M.I.A. 141 (159); Ram Kali v. Jamna, 30 A. 508 (509); Bhaoni v. Maharaj Singh, 3 A. 738; Mohun Singh v. Chumun Rai, 1 B.S.R. 37; Pershad Singh v. Mahearee, 3 B.S.R. 176.

(10) Refers to Yad., II-134, 136: "Even a son begotten by a Shudra on a female slave may take a share by the father's choice....."

(11) Mit., I-XII-3.

(12) Hari v. Radhika, 2 M.H.C.R. 369 (374).

(13) Jwala Singh v. Sardar, 51 I.C. (A.) 216; Brandavana v. Radamani, 12 M. 72; Jwala Singh v. Sardar, 41 A. 629.

(14) Ramachandra v. Hanamnaik, 60 B. 75.

(15) Sitla Baksh v. Gajraj, 14 O.C. 227.

(16) Bhagni v. Maharaj Singh, 3 A. 738 (744).

(17) Chuoturya v. Sahib, 7 M.I.A. 18 (47, 49); Fuhoob Singh v. Khoaman, 3 Agra 313.

issue, when the intercourse between its parents was in violation of or forbidden by law.[1] All that he can claim is maintenance.[2]

2238. The contrary was laid down in a case, on the principle of equity and good conscience, in which one Khuman, a Brahmin, was outcasted for co-habiting with a Bania widow. He left his home with the widow, acquired property, which, on his death, passed to the widow and his natural son, from whom Khuman's brothers claimed possession; but their suit was dismissed on the ground that on his excommunication from his caste, Khuman must be deemed to have started a separate family altogether, and that his brothers were, therefore, equitably not entitled to dispossess his son.[3] This reasoning is not convincing for the fact of Khuman's excommunication did not snap the tie of relationship between him and his brothers, who, as his nearest sapindas, were entitled to inherit in the absence of a nearer relation. (§ 308). An illegitimate son of Shudra has no right to collateral succession. His right is limited to succession to his own parent.[4] As between legitimate and illegitimate sons of the father, there is no right of collateral succession.[5] But an illegitimate sister was held entitled to the property of another illegitimate collateral.[6] So the son of a legitimate son cannot inherit to his father's illegitimate brother, nor would his father, if alive, have succeeded to him.[7] So again the illegitimate son of a Shudra is entitled only to a moiety of his father's estate, as long as the widow, daughter or daughter's son of the father exists, and these relations take the other moiety one after the other[8] (§ 2225).

2239. Dasi-putra.—Two questions arise in this connection: who is a desi-putra, and what is his place in his natural family. As to the first, the texts[9] speak of a dasi-putra as a son of a female slave, but with the abolition of slavery a dasi-putra, as such, has ceased to exist, and that term is now taken to mean a son of a permanent concubine, or a mistress as distinguished from a son of a casual connection, or one of an incestuous[10] or an adulterous intercourse with a married woman[11] even with the consent of her husband,[12] or, it is said, by a Shudra widow whose

(1) Who is a Dasi Putra.

(1) Venkatachella v. Paravatham, 8 M.H.C.R. 134.

(2) Ganu Lal v. Kashi Ram, 68 I.C. (N.) 417.

(3) Radha v. Raj Kuar, 13 A. 573 (575).

(4) Vellaiyappa v. Natarajan, 55 M. 1 (15) P.C.; Nissar v. Kewar, (1863) Marsh 609; Krishnayyan v. Muttusami, 7 M. 407; Ranoji v. Kandoji, 8 M. 557; Parvathi v. Thirumalai, 10 M. 334; Ramalinga v. Pavadai, 25 M. 519; Meenakshi v. Muniandi, 38 M. 1144; Subramania v. Rathnavelu, 41 M. 44 F. B.; Ayiswarya v. Sivaji, 49 M. 116 (136, 137, 152, 153); Dharma v. Sakharam, 44 B. 185; Zipru v. Bomtya, 46 B. 424; Shome Shankar v. Rajeswar, 21 A. 99.

(5) Vellaiyappa v. Natarajan, 55 M. 1 (15) P.C.; Dharma v. Sarbaran, 44 B. 185.

(6) Bacha Singh v. Chaterpal, 9 O.C. 353; Dattatraya v. Matha, 58 B. 119 (125, 126).

(7) Zipru v. Bomtya, 46 B. 424, applying Dharma v. Sarbaran, 44 B. 185.

(8) Karuppayee v. Ramaswami, 55 M. 856: Manu, IX-179.

(9) Manu IX-179, II-134, 135; Mit. I-XII-1-3; Daya. IX-29; see Datti v. Datti, 4 M.H.C.R. 204 (208); Krishnayyan v. Muttuswamy, 7 M. 407 (411).

(10) Datti v. Datti, 4 M.H.C.R. 204.

(11) Rahi v. Govinda, 1 B. 97; Dalip v. Ganpat, 8 A. 387; Venkatachella v. Parvatham, 8 M.H.C.R. 134; Annayyan v. Chinnan, 33 M. 366; Sheonandan v. Pran Singh, 18 N.L.R. 115 (117).

(12) Vithabai v. Pandu, 28 Bom.L.R. 596: 96 I.C. 358: (1926) B. 301.

re-marriage is forbidden by the caste rules[1] but such prohibition has long since been statutorily overruled, and it can have no effect upon the issue who have been held to inherit to each other inter se. It has even been held that a daughter of an adulterous intercourse is entitled to inherit to her brother.[2]

It is sometimes said that such dasi must belong to the Shudra caste,[3] and as such a Brahmin mistress living with a shudra cannot be considered to be a dasi[4] but there seems no reason for this limitation,[5] and it has been accordingly that a dancing girl belonging to any caste might become a dasi so as to transmit to her issue the right of a dasi-putra,[6] one thing is certain that the dasi must be a Hindu, and not a Mahomedan or a Christian[7] in which case the son would not be a Hindu, and cannot succeed to the property of his father.[8] In such cases, the caste and persuation of the mother determine the rights of her son, if illegitimate.[9]

Rights of a Dasiputra.

2240. The next question is what rights a dasi-putra possesses to inherit to his father. It is clear that a dasi-putra of the three re-generate classes is entitled to no share beyond maintenance. But such son of a Shudra by a continuous concubine is entitled to a share in accordance with the text of the Mitakshara.[10] This share he takes as of right, and not merely in lieu of maintenance. What share it is must depend upon his father's other relations. Unlike his father's legitimate son, he acquires no right by birth. Such right, as he has, is merely textual, with the result that he cannot compel his father to give him a share, since such son takes a share by the father's choice, and on his death it varies according to the legitimate heirs left by him. If then the father has left an illegitimate son, and no separate property, being joint with his collaterals, he is not entitled to demand a partition of the joint property in their hands, though as a member of the family he is entitled to maintenance out of that property. In this respect his position is analogous to that of widows and disqualified heirs to whom the law allows maintenance because of their exclusion from inheritance and a share on partition. Such maintenance may not only be future but also past, provided it is not barred by the law of limitation, and it may be charged on the joint family property.[11] So much is settled by the Privy Council, who, however, refrained from deciding whether he would still possess the same right, if the father left separate property, or if such property was not sufficient for his maintenance.[12]

His share.

2241. Being, then, an heir to his father, the dasi-putra is a coparcener with his father and his legitimate sons as regards their joint property, with the right of survivor-

(1) Obiter in Annayyan v. Chinnan, 33 M. 366, following Datti v. Datti, 4 M.H.C.R. 204 (208), followed in Sheonandan v. Pran Singh, 18 N.L.R. 115 (117), dissented from in Subramania v. Rathnavelu, 41 M. 44 (47) F.B.

(2) Dattatraya v. Matha Bala, 58 B. 119.

(3) Mit., XI-2, Colebrooke note, p. 55; Rajani Nath v. Nitai Chandra, 48 C. 643 (720, 721) F.B.; Baji Rao v. Paika Patal, 6 C.P.L.R. 144.

(4) Ramchandra v. Hanmanik, 60 B. 75.

(5) Soundarajan v. Arunchalam, 39 M. 136 (150) F.B.

(6) Ib.

(7) Sita Ram v. Ganpat, 25 Bom.L.R. 73: 73 I.C. (B.) 412: (1923) B. 560.

(8) Lingappa v. Esudasan, 27 M. 13.

(9) Myna Bayee v. Ootaram, 8 M.I.A. 400 S.C. on remand sub nom Mayna Bai v. Uttaram, 2 M.H.C.R. 196; Viswanath v. Doraisami, 48 M. 944 (949, 951).

(10) Mit. I-12; Karuppayee v. Ramaswami, 55 M. 856 (866, 867).

(11) Vellaiyappa v. Natarajan, 55 M. 1.

(12) Ib.

ship,[1] to the exclusion of the widow,[2] and on partition, he takes half the share of a legitimate son.[3] This is an ambiguous expression,[4] and may mean either half of what the son takes[5] or half of what he would have taken if he were legitimate[6] "In the former case the legitimate and the illegitimate sons would share in the proportion of two to one, while in the latter case they would share in the proportion of three to one."[7] There are two methods of determining the extent of the share. One method is to divide the whole estate in such a way as to give to each of the illegitimate sons exactly half of the share of each of the legitimate sons. The other method is to divide the estate into as many shares as there may be sons, treating the illegitimate sons as legitimate sons, and then from one share to give half to each illegitimate son and give the remainder to the legitimate sons. To take the simplest instance, if there be one legitimate son and one illegitimate son, according to the first method, the whole estate would be divided into three shares, two shares going to the legitimate son and one share to the illegitimate son. According to the other method, the estate would be divided into two shares and the illegitimate son will be given half of one share, that is, one-fourth of the whole, and the remaining portion, that is, three-fourths of the whole, will go to the legitimate son.[8] The second method was favoured by Vidnyaneshwar,[9] but the first method is now adopted by the courts.[10]

Competition with Other Heirs.

2242. He is entitled to the same share in competition with the legitimate daughter.[11] In Madras, he was held entitled to an equal share with the daughter's son,[12] but the remark is casual and opposed to the express texts.[13] His right, as against the widow, is held to be similar,[14] though there are cases in which he is to take to the exclusion of the widow, who is

(1) Jogendra v. Nityanand, 18 C. 157 P.C., affirming, 11 C. 702; Vellaiyappa v. Natarajan, 55 M. 1 (15) P.C.; Soundararajan v. Arunachalam, 39 M. 136; Karuppa v. Kumarasami, 25 M. 429; Visvanathaswamy v. Rama, 24 M.L.J. 271 (282): 21 I.C. 724; contra in Nathamuni v. Parthasaradi, 33 M.L.J. 203: 40 I.C. 830, distinguishing, Jogendra v. Nityanand, 18 C. 151 P.C.; Sadu v. Baiza, 4 B. 37; Ganu Lal v. Kashi Ram, 68 I.C. (N.) 417.

(2) Sadu v. Baiza, 4 B. 37 F.B., followed in Baji Rao v. Paika, 6 C.P.L.R. 144 (152), approved in Jogendra v. Nityanand, 18 C. 151 (156) P.C., affirming O. A. 11 C. 706 (711), in which, however, the widow's position had not to be considered; contra in Ramalinga v. Pavadai, 25 M. 519 (522), Meenakshi v. Appakuti, 33 M. 226 (227); Karuppayee v. Ramaswami, 55 M. 856, where it was held that since the son takes only a moiety in competition with a daughter, he could not take more in competition with a widow who excludes the daughter.

(3) Mit., I-XII-2; Mayukh, IV-IV-32; Virmitrodaya (Sarkar), 130; Radi v. Gobinda, 1 B. 97 (104).

(4) In original अर्ध भागिक (Ardh half, Bhagik, sharer), "half sharer."

(5) Kesaree v. Samardhan, 5 N.W.P. H.C.R. 95; Sadu v. Baiza, 4 B. 37 (42); Gangabai v. Bandhu, 40 B. 369 (373, 374).

(6) Mit., I-VII-7; W. and B.H.L., (2nd Ed.), 40, 41, 108, Annasamy v. Tandavaraya, (1860) M.S.R. 11, followed in Kamulammal v. Visvanathaswami, 46 M. 167 (175) P.C.

(7) Kamulammal v. Visvanathswami, 46 M. 167 (175).

(8) Mit., I-VII-7; W. and B.H.L., (2nd Ed.), 40, 41, 108, 110, 374.

(9) Ib. Yad., I-VII-6-10.

(10) Kamulammal v. Visvanathaswami, 46 M. 167 (175) P.C.; Dhodyela v. Malanaik, (1874) B.P.J. 43; Sadu v. Baiza, 4 B. 37; Gangabai v. Bandhu, 40 B. 369 (375, 376); Kesaree v. Samardhan, 5 N. W.P.H.C.R. 94; Chellammal v. Ranganatha, 34 M. 277; Gopal Rao v. Sita Rao, 64 I.C. (N.) 863; Maharaja of Kolhapur v. Sundaram, 48 M. 1.

(11) Gangabai v. Bandhu, 40 B. 369 (374).

(12) Parvathi v. Thirumalai, 10 M. 334 (344).

(13) Yad., II-133, 134; Mit.; I-XII-2.

(14) Ambabai v. Gogind, 23 B. 257 (265).

merely entitled to maintenance as in the case of a legitimate son,[1] but it is argued on the other side, that the texts are silent on the point, probably because the widow's right is a later development; but from the fact that in competition with the daughter, who takes after the widow, such son gets only one-half, there is no reason why he should exclude the widow whose right is greater, but in no case less than that of the daughter.[2] And this view has now been affirmed by the Privy Council.[3] In the Dattak Chandrika, her right is stated to exist.[4] Even those who oppose the widow's right, admit the force of this reasoning, but consider it to be "one of those arbitrary arrangements not uncommon in Hindu Law."[5]

But assuming that the illegitimate son cannot exclude the widow, the question still remains as to what share he is entitled to. In Madras, relying on the authority of Dattak Chandrika, he is held to share equally with her[6] and down to the daughter's son, after which he takes the whole to the exclusion of other heirs.[7]

It goes without saying that, in a competition between the adopted and an illegitimate son of a Shudra, it cannot be presumed that the adoption was made after the birth of the legitimate son and so hold it invalid. The proper course is to assume the adopted son to be in the same position as the natural-born son, imagine the illegitimate son to be legitimate, assume that they can co-exist with the legitimate son, see what they would get on that footing, and give the illegitimate son one-half of it.[8]

No inheritance to collaterals.

2243. The illegitimate son inherits only to his parents, and has no right to collateral succession. Manu treated illegitimate issue as no heirs at all, treating them merely as kinsmen.[9] His right to inheritance is provided by an express text, beyond which it cannot be extended.[10] The same rule applies to succession to his estate by a legitimate collateral issue of his father. Hence, where a Shudra died leaving two sons, one legitimate and another illegitimate, on their death the son of the legitimate son could not inherit the property of the illegitimate son.[11] Of course, when he is a coparcener, he will succeed by survivorship,[12] but otherwise he is not a collateral heir.[13] Consequently, as he does not inherit to the legitimate son of a Shudra, it follows that the latter cannot equally

(1) Rahi v. Govinda, 1 B. 97.

(2) Ranoji v. Kandoji, 8 M. 557; Parvati v. Thirumalai, 10 M. 334 (344); Ramalinga v. Pavadai, 25 M. 519 (521); Meenakshi v. Appakutti, 33 M. 226 (227); Ambabai v. Govind, 23 B. 247 (265).

(3) Kamulammal v. Visvanathaswami, 46 M. 167 (175) P.C.

(4) Datt. Ch., V-30, 31.

(5) Sadu v. Baiza, 4 B. 37 (56) F. B., citing Rahi v. Govinda, 1 B. 105.

(6) Datt. Ch., V-30, 31; Meenakshi v. Appakutti, 33 M. 226 (227, 228); Kamulammal v. Visvanathaswami, 46 M. 167 (175) P.C., dissenting from contra in Gangabai v. Bandu, 40 B. 369, in which, following the case-law, the son was held to take only one-third, two-thirds going to the widow.

(7) Datt. Ch., V-31; Sarasuti v. Mannu, 2 A. 134.

(8) Maharaja of Kolhapur v. Sundaram, 48 M. 1.

(9) Manu, IX-159, 160, cited in Mit.; I-XI-30.

(10) Shome Shankar v. Rajesar, 21 A. 96 (103); Nissar v. Dhunwant, Marshall, 609; Krishnayyan v. Muttusami, 7 M. 407; Ramalinga v. Pavadai, 25 M. 519 (524); Fakirappa v. Fakirappa, 4 Bom. L.R. 809; Dharma v. Sakharam, 44 B. 185.

(11) Zipru v. Bomtya, 46 B. 424 (428).

(12) Sadu v. Baiza, 4 B. 37; approved in Jogendra v. Nityanand, 18 C. 151 P.C., explained in Shome Shankar v. Rajesar, 21 A. 99 (102); Shamu v. Babu, Aba, 52 B. 300.

(13) Ravji v. Sakuji, 34 B. 321; Dharma v. Sakharam, 44 B. 185; Shome Shankar v. Rajesar, 21 A. 99; Ramalinga v. Pavadai, 25 M. 519.

inherit to him.[1] It has already been stated before that, as between two collaterals both illegitimate, there is no reason why one should not inherit to the other. As such, an illegitimate sister even of an adulterous intercourse has been held entitled to inherit to her brother.[2] (§ 2238.)

Illegitimate v. Adopted Son.

2244. An illegitimate son has not the same position as an adopted son. As compared with the adopted son, the illegitimate son's position is certainly inferior. The adopted son has a co-ordinate interest with his father in ancestral property. He can claim partition from his father. He represents his father as against the father's coparceners. He excludes the widow, the daughter and the daughter's son. In ancient law, he was one of the twelve descriptions of sons, whereas the illegitimate son, as the son of a female slave, had no place amongst them.[3] If the adopted son takes a smaller share in competition with the legitimate son, it is because he is a mere substitute provided by a fiction of law, whilst in the case of the "auras" there is actual blood relationship consecrated by a legal marriage. In default of a legal marriage, the fiction operated as a special rule of law to give the adopted son the same status in the family as against every one of its members. On the other hand, save as to taking an inferior share, there is no analogy between him and the illegitimate son.[4]

2245. Son's Son and Son's Son's Son.—The right of divided sons, grandsons, and great-grandsons of the last male owner, to succeed to his separate property, is the same as in the case of undivided family property. The right of representation exists equally in the former as in the latter case, and the divided son will not, on the principle of the exclusion of remoter by nearer sapindas, exclude the divided grandson in the succession to divide property of the ancestor.[5] It has already been seen that the Hindu Law regards the son, the grandson and the great-grandson as really a single person in different bodies (§ 112), and this theory applied as regards their share both on partition and on inheritance. Consequently, if the father dies leaving a son of his predeceased son and the son's son of a predeceased son, that is a son of a son's son of a grandson and a great-grandson by his two predeceased sons, it has been seen that on a partition of his estate they will take one-third each (§ 1543). They will take the same share on inheritance. The rule that the nearest heir excluded the one more remote does not apply where the heirs are the owner's own issue who take per stirpes and not per capita as stated in section 184. Consequently, it has been held that the rule in the Mayukh that a brother's son takes equally with the brother, when the inheritance to another deceased brother opens, cannot be extended by analogy to the distant sapindas, in whose case, preference is determined by the only test of propinquity. Thus, in a competition between the uncle and the nephew as reversionary heirs, the uncle, being nearest, excludes the nephew, whereas if the analogy of sons and grandsons were extended, both the uncle and the nephew would have shared equally.[6] From the rule last stated, it follows that the legitimate son of an illegitimate son has the same right of inheritance as his father had against his father and his other sons. So, where A and B were two Shudra brothers and one of them B had an illegitimate son C by his

(1) Zipru v. Bomtya, 23 Bom.L.R. 1195.
(2) Dattatraya v. Matha Bala, 58 B. 119 (125, 126).
(3) Mit., I-XI.
(4) Parvati v. Thirumalai, 10 M. 334 (345).
(5) Gangadhar v. Ibrahim, 47 B. 556 (558); Marudayi v. Doraisamy, 30 M. 348; Muttuvaduganatha v. Periasami, 16 M. 11 (15).
(6) Haribhai v. Mathur, 47 B. 940.

permanent concubine who had a legitimate son D, C predeceased B, on whose death A claimed the estate against D, but his claim was thrown out on the ground that D represented C, and as C would have excluded A, so will his son D who represented his father.[1] The case would not have been different if D had himself been illegitimate.[2]

Statutory right of widow son's widow and son's son's widow.

315. Notwithstanding the provisions of the Hindu Law or custom to the contrary, the widow and the daughter-in-law of a man dying intestate, on or after the 14th day of April, 1937, shall inherit alongside of a man's descendants in the following manner and to the following extent, namely:—

(1) If the man dies leaving him surviving his widow and his lineal descendants, his estate shall devolve upon them in equal shares;

(2) Provided that if a man dies leaving him surviving his widow and his predeceased son's widow but no son of such son, his daughter-in-law will share equally with his widow;

(3) Provided further that if a man dies leaving him surviving his widow and his daughter-in-law, being the widow of his predeceased son, then she will take the share of his son's son, if there was surviving to him a son or grandson of such predeceased son;

(4) If a man dies leaving him surviving his widow, his daughter-in-law and a grand daughter-in-law, being the widow of his predeceased grandson, then such grand daughter-in-law will take the share of his predeceased grandson, if his father survives him or if her husband survives his father and the latter predeceases the owner.

Illustrations.

(a) To Clause (1).—A, the owner, leaves his widow and two sons and three daughters. All of them get 1|6.

(b) To Clause (2).—A, leaves W, and *W*1, being the widow of a predeceased son B. *W*1 will get nothing if B also survives A; but if B has predeceased A and left no son of his own, then *W*1 will share 1|2 each.

(c) To Clause (3).—A leaves W and *W*1 and *W*2, being his widow, his son's widow, and his grandson's widow respectively. Now, *W*1*'s* share will be equal to that of a grandson not of a son, if the deceased had left him surviving *W*1*'s* son or grandson by her predeceased husband.

(d) To Clause (4).—A leaves him surviving his widow, his daughter-in-law *W*1, and grand daughter-in-law *W*2, being widows of his predeceased son B and predeceased grandson C. Now, W, *W*1, *W*2 will each count as a son and share equally with his widow and his remaining descendants.

For Commentary, see the Act in the Appendix.

(4) The Mitakshara widow.

316 (1) In a succession opening before the 14th day of April, 1937, the widow inherits the estate of her deceased husband in default of male issue,[3] provided she be chaste when the succession opens.[4]

---

(1) Ramalinga v. Pavadai, 25 M. 519 (523, 524).

(2) Fakirappa v. Fakirappa, 4 Bom. L.R. 809 (811).

(3) Keerut Singh v. Khoolahul, 2 M. I.A. 331; Katama Natchiar v. Raja of Shivgunga, 9 M.I.A. 543 (611); Venkata v. Lakshman, 13 M.I.A. 113; Radhika v. Nilamani, Ib., p. 497; Periasami v. Periasami, 1 M. 312 P.C.; Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 1 A. 688 P.C.; O.A. from 6 N.W.P.H.C.R. 382; Patnimal v. Manoharlal, 5 B.S.R. 410; Narayan v. Lakshmi, 3 M.H.C.R. 289; Gulab v. Phool, 1 Borr. 154; Govinddass v. Muta, 1 Borr. 241; Sitaram v. Laxman, 8 N.L.R. 128: 17 I.C. 133.

(4) Moniram v. Keri Kolitani, 5 C. 776 (792) P.C.; Lakshmi Chand v. Anandi, 57 A. 672 (677) P.C. (a fortiori

(2) Where there are several widows all of them inherit the estate jointly with the right of partition for convenience of enjoyment and survivorship inter se.[1]

(3) The widow inheriting to her husband or other relation takes only a limited estate.[2]

(4) The question whether the widow upon her remarriage is devested of the estate of her husband and his lineal successor that had become vested in her before her remarriage is the subject of judicial conflict between the Allahabad[3] and several other High Courts, the former holding that section 2 of the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act, 1856 only entails forfeiture of her heritage in the case of remarriage legalized under that Act, whereas the other High Courts hold the words "any widow" in section 2 thereof to include even those who could customarily remarry independently of the Act[4] and that, by their remarriage on conversion to another faith, they cannot evade the forfeiture of their estate.[5]

2246. Analogous Law.—After the great-grandson, comes the widow, whose right to inherit is expressly provided by all the Smritikars.[6] with the following refrain: "The widow of a childless man preserving unsullied the bed of her lord and persevering in religious observances shall present his funeral oblation and obtain his entire share."[7] Two outstanding conditions are required to qualify her for the heirship to her husband: In the first place, she must have been chaste,[8] and in the second place, she must not be malignantly hostile to her husband—each disqualification being in itself sufficient to disinherit her, and the second being sufficient even to disinherit any heir, including the son.[9] These conditions have been evolved out of the texts which mention the "sadhwi patni" as her husband's heir.[10] The fact that the wife had refused to live with her husband is, however, no evidence of her "malignant hostility," which alone disqualifies her from inheritance.[11] Then, again, the unchastity, which equally disqualifies her, must be physical incontinence and must have occurred during the life time of the husband. Her subsequent unchastity is no disqualification,[12] though her remarriage is; and so is her conversion to an alien faith.[13]

2247. On marriage the wife assumes the gotra of her husband and is called his Sagotra sapinda[14] though the term sagotra

---

where the widow gets the estate by an instrument in lieu of her maintenance, in which case, there can be no forfeiture for unchastity unless the instrument provides for it.)

(1) See Ss. 181, 288, 337.

(2) Bhagwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M. I.A. 487; See Ss. 305, 335.

(3) Bhola Umar v. Kausilla, 55 A. 24 F.B.

(4) Matungini v. Ram Rutton, 19 C. 289 F.B.; Vitta Tayaramma v. Chalakondu, 41 M. 1078 F.B.; Vithu v. Govinda, 22 B. 221 F.B.; Raghunath v. Lakshmi Bai, 59 B. 417.

(5) Matungini v. Rum Rutton, 19 C. 289 (Princep J. dissentient); Vitta Tayaramma v. Chalakondu, 41 M. 1078 F.B. (Seshagiri Ayyar, J. dissentient.).

(6) Manu, cited in Mit., II-I; 6; Katyayan cited Ib., Vishnu, XVII-4-7; Yad., II-136, 137.

(7) Vrihat Manu, cited in Mit., II-1, 6.

(8) Manu, V-165; Katyayan, quoted in Harvit (2 Cole. Dig., 536); Mayukh, Pt.; II, § 8; Narad, XIII-26; Dayabhag, XI-1, § 43; 2 Cole. Dig., 528.

(9) Narad, XIII-21; Saraswati Vilas, § 152; Daya Kram Sangrah, III-3; Vivad Ratnakar, Ch. 5; Khettermoni v. Kadombini, 16 C.W.N. 964: 17 I.C. 83 (85).

(10) Texts discussed in Khettermoni v. Kadambini, 16 C.W.N. 964: 17 I.C. 83; Keri Kolitani v. Moneeram, 13 B.L.R. 1 F.B.: 19 W.R. 367.

(11) Khettermoni v. Kadambini, 16 C.W.N. 964: 17 I.C. 83.

(12) Keri Kolitani v. Moneeram, 13 B.L.R. 1 F.B.: 19 W.R. 367; Mukandi v. Jamni, 73 I.C. 875.

(13) S. 2, Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act (XV of 1856); Suraj Jote v. Attar, 67 I.C. 550: (1922) P. 378.

(14) Steele's Law of Caste, 27 note; 1 W. and B., H.L., 233, Q. 3; p. 231-note; Lallubai v. Mankuvarbai, 2 B. 388 (420).

is, strictly speaking, confined only to the agnatic kinsman.[1] When there is more than one widow, all take jointly as a single heir, with the right of partition and survivorship[2] which each widow may, however, relinquish in favour of the co-widow, but such relinquishment cannot extend beyond her life-interest.[3] Among castes which allow Karao marriage, that is, remarriage with the deceased husband's brother, the widow inherits the properties of both the brothers.[4] It has already been stated that the interest which the widow acquires is liable to be divested by the birth or adoption of a son (S. 299).

Forfeiture on remarriage Clause (4).

2248. The clause relating to the forfeiture of inheritance on re-marriage by a Hindu widow under the enabling provisions of the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act[5] has given rise to judicial conflict between the Allahabad and the other High Courts, the former holding that S. 2 thereof only applies to widows who could not otherwise remarry,[6] which the other High Courts incline to the view that the term "any woman" in that section must include even those whose re-marriage was customary.[7]

The difference between the courts arises from the reading of S. 2 of the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act, 1856, independently of the preamble, by which that section is, according to the Allahabad High Court, controlled,[8] while the other courts read the words of S. 2 as applying to "any widow" as therein mentioned. These courts hold that even in cases of a remarriage legalized by custom, Hindu law regards the widow as the surviving half of himself which she ceases to be upon her remarriage, whereas the Allahabad High court leaves the question of retention or forfeiture of the estate to be solely determined by the custom that legalizes that marriage.

It is submitted that the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act, 1856, was intended to insure freedom of conscience on the part of those to whom their religious injunction had barred from remarriage, and that the Act, being an ad hoc Act could not be read as rescinding rights that widows possessed under their customary Law[9] which, while legalizing a remarriage, may or may not prescribe for its consequential forfeiture of her husband's heritage. But in such case, the determining authority is custom and not the Act.

---

(1) Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai, 2 B. 388 (440).

(2) Bhagwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M.I.A. 487; Nilmani v. Radhamani, 1 M. 290 P.C.; Venkayamma v. Venkataramanayamma, 25 M. 678 (687) P.C.; Rumea v. Bhagee, 1 B.H.C.R. 66; Jijiamba v. Kamakshi, 3 M.H.C.R. 424; Dilipati Singh v. Kashinath, 17 O. C. 108: 24 I.C. 542; Man Singh v. Nawlakhbati, 2 Pat. 607 (642, 643).

(3) Ramakkal v. Ramaswami, 22 M. 522 (524).

(4) Nagar v. Khare, 86 I.C. 893: (1925) A. 440.

(5) XV of 1856.

(6) Bhola Umar v. Kaunsilla, 55 A. 24 F.B.

(7) Matungini v. Ram Rutton, 19 C. 289 F.B.; Vitta Tayamma v. Chata-Kondu, 41 M. 1078 F. B.

(8) Swraj Jote v. Attar Kumari, 1 Pat. 706.

(9) Mula v. Partab, 32 A. 489; Ramkishen v. Medh Singh, 1 I.C. (A.) 141; Sohan Lal v. Durga, 24 I.C. (A.) 691; Nihali v. Kanak Singh, 25 I.C. (A.) 617; but contra in Rusul Jehan v. Ram Sarun, 22 C. 589; Gouri Churn v. Sita, 14 C. W.N. 346; Nitya Madhav v. Srinath, 8 C.L.J. 542; Santala v. Badaswari, 50 C. 727 (736); Murugayi v. Viramakali, 1 M. 226; Vithu v. Govinda, 22 B. 321; Panchappa v. Sanjanbasawa, 24 B. 89. It should be noted that the Act was merely intended to create a new right and not to take away an old one.

2249. The Allahabad High Court has consistently taken this view. Thus the widows of a Sweeper,[1] Ahir,[2] Kurmi,[3] Halwai,[4] or a Tagh Brahman,[5] have been held to be entitled to re-marry by the custom of their caste, and as such, they do not forfeit their inheritance unless there is a custom to that effect. This fact was overlooked by the Bombay High Court in a case[6] in which the widow of the paternal uncle, who was entitled to succeed as sagotra sapinda of her late husband,[7] in preference to the father's sister, was held to have forfeited her right by the sole reason of her re-marriage, and by virtue of S. 2 of the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act, 1856.[8] The parties belonged to the Kachi (green grocer) caste, and as such, the widow might have succeeded in spite of her re-marriage, if the caste permitted re-marriage independently of the Act, which presumably it did, unless custom entailed the forfeiture of her right. But this point was overlooked. Reference was made in the case to S. 5 of the Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act, and it was held that, being passed in 1856, it could not have legislated with reference to a right which was not recognized in Bombay till 1876, whence the wife's position as the sagotra sapinda of her husband became first established,[9] but that fact would appear to make no difference in view of the fact that S. 5 defines the rights which the re-married widow forfeits. Even apart from the Act, a widow, upon her re-marriage, customarily, though not invariably[10] forfeits the property which she has inherited from her husband,[11] but the question is one of custom, and must not be treated as an inflexible rule.

2250. Where the widow forfeits her estate in law, but still continues in possession with the result that on expiration of the statutory period, she will acquire not an absolute but only a widow's estate.[12]

As regards her remarriage upon conversion to another faith, the courts are equally divided, the Allahabad High Court holding that the Lex Loci Act[13] safeguards her right of property and her re-marriage is legalized by her new faith unaffected by later Act[14] legalizing marriages of certain Hindu widows, while the other courts rely upon the words "any widow", as including even a convert.

317. Daughter's right. Statutory

(1) In a succession, opening on or after the 14th day of April, 1937, to a person dying with a widow surviving him, his daughter will share equally with his son and widow in accordance with the provisions of the Hindu Women's Right of Property Act, 1937.[15]

Daughter's under the Mitakshara.

(2) In a succession opening before the 14th day of April, 1937, the daughter succeeds to the estate of her father in default of the widow[16] subject to the following rules, namely,

(1) Har Saran v. Nandi, 11 A. 330.
(2) Dharam Das v. Nandlal, (1889) A.W.N. 78.
(3) Ranjit v. Radha, 20 A. 476.
(4) Gajadhar v. Kausilla, 31 A. 161.
(5) Simmani v. Mutammal, 3 M. 265.
(6) Pranjiwan v. Bhikhi, 45 B. 1247 but see Kora v. Boreani, 2 B. L. R. 199 F.B.; Chamar v. Kashi, 26 B. 388; Basappa v. Rayava, 29 B. 91 F.B.; Lakshmana v. Siva, 28 M. 425.
(7) Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai, 2 B. 388.
(8) XV of 1856.
(9) (1876) Lallubhai v. Mankurarbai, 2 B. 388.
(10) Jat widows do not forfeit their inheritance; Mangal v. Varto, 49 A. 203.
(11) Suraj v. Attar Kumari, 1 P. 706 (713).
(12) Parbati v. Ram Prasad, 7 Luck. 320.
(13) Act (XXI of 1850).
(14) Act (XV of 1856).
(15) Act (XVIII of 1937).
(16) Mit. II-I-2.

(a) As between two or more daughters, the daughter unmarried excludes the one married.[1]

(b) As between daughters both or all married, the one indigent excludes the one opulent,[2] provided that this rule does not apply to an estate, the succession to which is subject to the Mithila Law.

(c) Except in Bombay, all daughters take jointly to the same extent as the widows subject to the same right of partition and survivorship.[3]

(d) The daughter's right to succeed does not depend upon her chastity,[4] nor does her subsequent unchastity entail forfeiture of her inheritance.[5]

(e) Except in Bombay, the daughter like the widow takes only a limited estate.[6]

2251. Daughters (5).—The daughter ranks next to the widow as provided in the following text:—

Mitakshara.—"1. On failure of her (i.e., the wife), the daughters inherit. They are named in the plural number,[7] to suggest the equal or unequal participation of daughters alike or dissimilar by class.

"2. Thus Katyayan says: 'Let the widow succeed to her husband's wealth, provided she be chaste, and in default of her, let the daughters inherit, if unmarried.' Also Brihaspati: 'The wife is pronounced successor to the wealth of her husband, and in her default, the daughter. As a son, so does the daughter of a man proceed from his several limbs. How then should any other person take her father's wealth.'

"3. If there be competition between a married and unmarried daughter, the unmarried one takes the succession, under the special provisions of the text above cited ('in default of her, let the daughter inherit, if unmarried').

"4. If the competition be between the unprovided and the enriched daughter, the unprovided one inherits, but on the failure of such, the enriched one succeeds, for the text of Gautam is equally applicable to the paternal as to the maternal estate: 'A woman's separate property goes to her daughters unmarried or unprovided.'"[8]

2252. It is clear from these texts that though daughters as a class rank after the widow[9] the grounds of preference between them inter se are that the unmarried excludes the married,[10] and the poor daughter the rich, that is to say the competition is only as between the married and unmarried, and the rich and the poor. Consequently, the unmarried daughter excludes the married daughter, whether she be rich or poor.[11] In default of unmarried daughters, the married daughters succeed and amongst them the poor excludes the rich,[12] whatever may have been the source of her wealth, whether from her husband or from her father or otherwise.[13] Now, what is the test of poverty? It has been held that comparative poverty is the sole test for settling the claims of daughters amongst themselves,

(1) Mit. II-I-3.
(2) Mit. II-I-4.
(3) See Ss. 181, 288, 377.
(4) Adayappa v. Rudrava, 4 B. 104.
(5) Moniram v. Keri Kolitani, 5 C. 776 P.C.
(6) Chotaylal v. Chunno, 4 C. 744 P. C.
(7) Mit., II-I-2.
(8) Mit., II-II, 1-4. To the same effect, Mayukh, V-VIII-10, 11.
(9) Kattama v. Dorasinga, 6 M.H.C. R. 310; Narayan v. Manohar, 7 B.H.C. R. 153; Narayan v. Govind, 1 N.L.R. 154 (156).
(10) Hemanchull v. Maharaj Singh, 1 Agra 210 (211); Golab v. Hunsee, 2 Agra 166; Binode v. Purdhan, 2 W.R. 176 (177).
(11) Dowlat v. Burma, 22 W.R. 54; Jamnabai v. Khimji, 14 B. 1 (13).
(12) In original, साधन (Sadhan) with wealth and निर्धन (Nirdhan) without wealth; in Gautam, अप्रतिष्टित (Apratishthit) unprovided for; Manki Kunwar v. Kundan Kunwar, 47 A. 403.
(13) Danuo v. Darbo, 4 A. 243 (245); Totawa v. Basawa, 23 B. 229 (233); Audh Kumari v. Chandra, 2 A. 561; Manki v. Kundan, 47 A. 403.

but the court should not go into minute details, since all that it has to enquire is whether there is such marked difference between the wealths of the two that one should be called poor in comparison with the other.[1] Under the Dayabhag law, the capacity to produce a sapinda is the sole cause of the daughter's succession.[2] Hence, a barren daughter, or one who is not likely to have male issue,[3] or who is already a childless widow, is not entitled to succeed, but no such distinction exists in the Mitakshara.[4] But though the poor sister excludes the rich, she does not become a fresh stock of descent, and on her death, the rich sister succeeds to her in preference to the poor sister's son.[5] In Bengal, the latter would exclude the sister,[6] and in Bombay, the same rule prevails, since the daughter there takes absolutely and on her death her own heirs will succeed,[7] and the same rule extends to Berar which is a disciple of the Bombay school[8] and Sindh.[9]

Illegitimate Daughters.

2253. Illegitimate daughters, whether of a twice-born or of a Shudra, have no right of inheritance.[10] The illegitimate son of a Shudra succeeds, because his case is covered by a special text.[11] There is no text in favour of an illegitimate daughter. In one case it was contended that the texts applicable to the son applied equally to the daughter, since the word "son" included the daughter, but this contention was, of course, not acceded to.[12] The texts do not favour the claims of females generally, and they now only allow the claims of those expressly named. As such, the texts mention the daughter, but while they expressly allude to an illegitimate son, they nowhere mention an illegitimate daughter, which implies that illegitimate daughters were conceded no right. But illegitimate daughters are entitled to inherit to their mothers.[13]

Unchaste and Prostitute.

2254. Unchastity is no bar to a daughter's inheritance,[14] but a prostitute cannot be regarded as an "unprovided maiden" entitled to inherit in preference to her

---

(1) Tinumoni v. Nibarun, 9 C. 154 (159) F.B.

(2) Binode v. Purdhan, 2 W.R. 176; Radha Kishen v. Rajah Ram, 6 W.R. 147; Mukunda v. Manmohini, 19 C.W.N. 472: 26 I.C. 903, followed in Pramila v. Chandra Shekhar, 43 A. 450 (Dayabhag succession—certificate case).

(3) This does not include issue of a remarriage legalized by the Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act (XV of 1856), S. 4, (Mukunda v. Manmohini, 19 C.W.N. 472: 26 I.C. 903), or otherwise, unless the custom which permits remarriage also entitled the remarried daughter to inherit equally with the married daughter—Binodini v. Susthes, 48 C. 300.

(4) Simmani v. Muttummal, 3 M. 265 (267, 268).

(5) Ramdhan v. Beharee, 1 N.W.P. H.C.R. 114; Dulari v. Mulchand, 32 A. 314 (316); Dowlat v. Burma, 22 W.R. 54; Mula v. Maharaj, 2 C.P.L.R. 166.

(6) Dowlut v. Burma, 22 W.R. 54 (56); Kattamma v. Dorasinga, 6 M.H.C.R. 310 (332).

(7) Bhagirathi Bai v. Raya, (1881) 5 B. 264.

(8) Dowlut Rao v. Govinda Rao, 5 N.L.R. 13 (Berar case).

(9) Dowlut v. Govind, 2 S.L.R. 59: 1 I.C. 243.

(10) Ram Singh v. Bhani, 38 A. 117 (121).

(11) Manu, IX-179; Yad., II-133, 134; Mit., I-XII-2.

(12) Bhikya v. Babu, 32 B. 562 (566); Chuoturya v. Sahub, 7 M.I.A. 18 (50); the statement in Inderun v. Ramaswamy, 13 M.I.A. 131 (159); Sarasuti v. Manu, 2 A. 134; Rahi v. Govinda, 1 B. 97, that illegitimate children or offspring of the Shudra inherit is a lapsus calamai for a "son."

(13) Arunagiri v. Ranganayaki, 21 M. 40; Dundappa v. Bhimava, 22 Bom.L.R. 1306: 59 I.C. 561; Kasturi v. Lote, 16 N.L.R. 221: 56 I.C. 952.

(14) Adayapa v. Rudrava, 4 B. 104; Tara v. Krishna, 31 B. 495 (502); Kojiyadu v. Lakshmi, 5 M. 149; Annapurnamma v. Venkamma, 51 M.L.J. 387: 97 I.C. 664: (1926) M. 1017.

married sister.[1] Being neither maiden nor married, she will inherit only in default of either unmarried or married sisters.[2] But it is submitted that there is no textual support for this view, and that the conclusion reached is the result of reasoning which can only be justified on the ground of equity.

Excluded by Custom.

2255. A daughter may be excluded by custom. Such a custom has been successfully pleaded in several cases relating to several races, such as the Bhale Sultan tribe of Kshatriyas[3] and the Jangra Chauhans[4] of Oudh. In the latter case, it was contended that the evidence of custom as to impartible estate was inadmissible to prove it as regards the ordinary partible property. But the Privy Council held the distinction untenable. Similar customs excluding daughters have been successfully proved in the case of Utpat families of Pandharpur,[5] Chudasama Gamati Garasias[6] and the Bhagars in the Broach Collectorate.[7] In the case of Gobel Girasias, the custom was held proved by the trial Judge, but the High Court reversed his finding, holding that the District Judge was wrong in holding the custom proved from the absence of a single instance in which the daughter had inherited; whereas the real issue was, were there sufficiently numerous instances of her exclusion?[8] In another case, the case for exclusion was held rebutted by proof of a large number of instances of daughters inheriting.[9]

It will be seen in the sequel that, except in Bombay, the daughter takes a limited estate, and on her death the estate devolves on the next heir of the father.[10]

(6) His daughter's son.

318. (1) In default of the daughter, the daughter's son succeeds subject to the following rules, namely,

(a) The daughter's son inherits on the death of the daughter or where there are several on the death of last of them.[11]

(b) The estate inherited by him is not his ancestral property, but is treated as his self-acquired property, with the result that two or more of such sons by the same mother do not take jointly with the right of partition or survivorship inter se.[12]

(c) Where there are several daughter's sons by different daughters, they take per capita and not per stirpes.[13]

(d) He takes as a full owner like any other male owner and becomes a new stock of descent.[14]

---

(1) Sivasanga v. Minal, 12 M. 277; Tara v. Krishna, 31 B. 495 (502); Saraswati v. Kathirama, 4 C.P.L.R. 43; Bhayalal v. Churaman, 9 C.P.L.R. 38.

(2) Obiter in Tara v. Krishna, 31 B. 495 (510).

(3) Bajrangi v. Manokarnika, 30 A. 1 (15) P.C.

(4) Parbati v. Chandarpal, 31 A. 457 (461, 474) P.C.

(5) Nanaji v. Sundrabai, 11 B.H.C. R. 249.

(6) Verabhai v. Hiraba, 27 B. 492 (498).

(7) Pranjivan v. Reva, 5 B. 482.

(8) Ranchoddas v. Rawal, 21 B. 110 (117).

(9) Nadri v. Kura, 13 M.L.J. 91: 27 I.C. 707.

(10) Chotay Lal v. Chunno, 4 C. 744 P.C.; Vaduganadha v. Dorasinga, 3 M. 290 (P.C.).

(11) Baijnath v. Mahabir, 1 A. 608.

(12) Mhd. Husain v. Kishva Nandan, I.L.R. (1937) A. 655 P.C.

(13) Narasappa v. Bharmappa, 45 B. 209; Dana v. Mohesh, 30 C. 89.

(14) Muttuvaduganadha v. Periasami, 19 M. 451 P.C.

(2) Since the Hindu Women's Right of Property Act only extends to lineal descendants and the daughter's son is not such descendant, his succession remains unaffected by that Act.

Illustration.

A died leaving two daughters B and C. B has one son, C three sons. B being maiden first inherits the estate, on her death, her married sister C takes the estate and on her death the four sons of B and C inherit it in equal shares.

2256. Analogous Law.—The following text supports the succession of the daughter's son:—

Vishnu.—"On failure of sons, and of their male issue, the sons of daughters shall obtain the property; for the male offspring of a son of a daughter are equally qualified to perform obsequies for men of all classes."[1]

2257. Daughter's son.—The daughter's son is a bandhu and not a gotraj sapinda, though he ranks before the parents of the deceased for the purpose of succession. But this is so by special texts[2] due to history. Under the old law, failing a son a daughter might be appointed by the father to raise up issue to him and the son born is called a "putrika-putra" or the son of the (appointed) daughter. In early times, such son was treated as an auras or self-begotten son. In course of time the practice of appointment fell into desuetude, but the special position which he had attained remained. The daughter's son is competent to perform the Shradh of his maternal grandfather,[3] and Yadnyavalkya mentions him as an heir.[4] Vishnu regards him as equal to a son's son and supports his claim in the text before cited. The daughter's son has no right of inheritance in his maternal grandfather's estate so long as the estate vests in his mother.[5] He is the reversioner whose estate comes into being on the daughter's death.[6] But they are, nevertheless, entitled to protect their reversionary rights against an improper alienation made by their mother,[7] the cause of action arising on the date of alienation,[8] and except under the Mayukh, they take per capita and not per stirpes.[9] The same right extends to first cousins who all share equally, without reference to the shares which their respective fathers would have taken, had they been alive.[10]

2258. A daughter's son may succeed, though the daughter be disqualified.[11] But if the daughter's son predeceases his maternal grandfather, his son cannot inherit in the right of his father,[12] though he will succeed in his own right as a bandhu. "A daughter's son, on whom the inheritance has actually fallen, takes it as full owner, and thereupon he

(1) Vishnu, cited in Mit., II-II-6.

(2) Manu, IX-132; Yad., II-136; Mit., II-II-6; Mayukh, IV-VIII-13; Sm. Ch., XI-II-28; Vivad. Chint. (Tagore), 294; Nirnai Sindhu, 315; Dayakram Sangrah and Nand Pandit's Vaijyanti, cited Sarv. Inh., 479, 492, 2 Dig. 498.

(3) Vishnu, cited in Mitak., II-II-6; Mayukh V-III-13.

(4) Yad., II-136, 137.

(5) Baijnath v. Mahabir, 1 A. 608; Sant v. Geo Saran, 8 A. 365.

(6) Amritolal v. Rajooneekant, 15 B.L.R. 10 P.C.

(7) Krishnier v. Lakshmiammal, 18 M. L.J. 275.

(8) Chiruvelu v. Chiruvelu, 29 M. 390, explained in Veerayya v. Gangamma, 36 M. 570 (573, 574).

(9) Nagesh v. Gururao, 17 B. 303; Narsappa v. Bharmappa, 45 B. 296; Ram Swarup v. Basdeo, 2 Agra 68; Sheo Sahai v. Omed, 6 B.S.R. 378; Ranidhun v. Kishen, 3 B.S.R. 133; Laloo v. Laloo, 10 I.C. 448; Ram v. Basdeo, 2 Agra 168; Dan v. Mohesh, 30 C. 89; Birj v. Sheoraj, 10 C. 159.

(10) Narasappa v. Bharmappa, 45 B. 296, following Nagesh v. Guru Rao, 17 B. 303.

(11) Venkayamma v. Venkataramanayyamma, 20 M. 207, affirmed O.A. 25 M. 678 P.C.; Bansi Dhar v. Lachmi, 8 A. L.J. 849.

(12) Srinivasa v. Dandayudapani, 12 M. 411 (413, 420); Dhanrup v. Gobind, 8 A. 614 (621).

becomes a new stock of descent, and on his death the succession passes to his heir, and not back again to the heir of his grandfather.[1] But until the death of the last daughter capable of being an heiress, he takes no interest whatever and, therefore, can transmit none. Therefore, if he should die before the last of such daughters, leaving a son, that son would not succeed, because he belonged to a different family and he would offer no oblation to the maternal grandfather of his own father.''[2]

An impartible property will pass on the death of all daughters to the eldest surviving son.[3]

319. In default of the daughter's son, the mother succeeds, but under the Mayukh school the father precedes mother.[4]

(7) His mother.

Explanation.—The term mother in this section includes the adoptive mother[5] but not the step mother.[6]

2259. Analogous Law.—The following texts bear on the subject of the mother's right:

Mitakshara.—''Besides, the father is the common parent to other sons, but the mother is not so; and since her propinquity is consequently greatest, it is fit that she should take the estate in the first instance conformably with the text: 'To the nearest sapinda, the inheritance next belongs.' ''[7]

Mayukh.—''In default of daughter's son comes the father, in default of him, the mother.''[8]

Mother.

It will be seen that while the Mitakshara places the mother before the father, the Mayukh reverses the order, and this preference for the father has been given effect to in Guzerat on the ground ''that the majority of eminent Hindu writers give the preference to the father over the mother.''[9] But in the Ratnagiri and the Kanara[10] districts, where the Mitakshara is pre-eminent, the mother was held to inherit before the father,[11] the term 'mother' including both the natural as well as the adoptive mother.[12] The mother, like all females, will take only a limited estate,[13] and on her death, the estate will devolve on the son's heir.[14] On this point, there is no difference between the Mitakshara and the Mithila School.[15] The remarriage of the mother does not disqualify her from inheritance. Even if her remarriage was legal only under the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act,[16] it has no effect upon her right to inherit to her son, since the statutory disqualification is

(1) Muttuvaduganadha v. Periasami, 16 M. 11, affirmed O.A. 19 M. 451 P.C.; Muttu v. Dora, 3 M. 290 P.C.

(2) Mayne, cited in Dhanrup v. Gobind, 8 A. 615 (621).

(3) Kattama Nachiar v. Dorasingha, 6 M.H.C.R. 310 (333); Muttu v. Dorasinga, 3 M. 290.

(4) Khodabai v. Bahadar, 6 B. 541, (546).

(5) Anandi v. Hari, 33 B. 404.

(6) Mit. II-3 and cases cited infra.

(7) Mit., II-III-3. To the same effect, Dayabagh, XI-1-5, XI-IV-1-6; Vivad Chint. (Tagore), 293-295; Dayakram Sangrah, XI-1-5, XI-IV-1-6, I-V-1—2; Virmitroday (Sarkar), 190, 191; Vellanki v. Venkata, 1 M. 174 P.C.

(8) Mayukh, IV-VII-13 (Mandlik) 80.

(9) Khodabhai v. Bahdhar, 6 B. 541 (546).

(10) Anandi v. Hari, 33 B. 404.

(11) Balakrishna v. Lakshman, 14 B. 605 (612). For the territorial extent of the Mayukh, see, per Sir M. Westropp, C.J., in Sakharam v. Sitabai, 3 B. 353 (365).

(12) Anandi v. Hari, 33 B. 404.

(13) Ratan v. Umar Bai, 9 I.C. 997.

(14) Sakharam v. Sita Bai, 3 B. 353 (368); Narsappa v. Sakharam, 6 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 215; Bachiraju v. Venkatapadu, 2 M.H.C.R. 402 (406).

(15) Totan v. Ballabhaji, 48 I.C. (N.) 956.

(16) Act XV of 1856.

limited to disinherison of the husband's estate.[1] The mother can inherit to her illegitimate son, a rule not opposed to the Mitakshara and in consonance with natural justice.[2] As already stated, both the natural as well as the adoptive mothers inherit to a son adopted in the Dvamushayan form. (S. 75.).

Stepmother.

2260. On the general principle that females are excluded from succession unless expressly mentioned in the text, the stepmother has no place in the table of succession. She cannot, therefore, succeed to her stepson.[3] And for the same reason, a step-grandmother is not the heir of her step grandson.[4]

2261. But though the step-mother cannot succeed as mother, she may still succeed in Bombay as a widow of her husband and, as such, his gotraj sapinda.[5] As such, she is held to be preferable to the widow of the half brother,[6] and the widow of a first cousin ex parte paterna of the deceased propositus was preferred to a fifth male cousin,[7] and in another case she was held to succeed to her stepson in preference to her stepson's paternal uncle's son,[8] on the principle that the widows of gotraj sapindas, in the case of collaterals, are to be preferred to the male gotrajas in a more remote line, and a fortiori, the widow of a male gotraj in the ascending line should be preferred to such collateral.[9] As West and Buhler put it: "The step-mother ought to be placed, on account of her near relationship to the deceased, immediately after the paternal grandmother, up to whom only the succession is settled by special texts."[10]

(8) His father.

320. In default of the mother, the father succeeds;[11] but under Mayukh, he precedes the mother.[12]

Explanation.—The term father in this section includes the adoptive father, but not the step-father or the natural father of one adopted by another.

2262. Analogous Law.—It has already been stated before that the father takes before the mother, under the Mayukh. Otherwise, he follows her.[13] The stepfather has, of course, no place in the Hindu table of succession. Even the wife who re-marries, forfeits her husband's inheritance, so that her son by such marriage cannot lay any claim to his

(1) Akoral v. Boreanee, 2 B.L.R. 199 F.B.; Basappa v. Rayava, 29 B. 91 F.B.; Hari Kishore v. Thakur Dhan, 26 C.W.N. 925: (1922) C. 140; Hussainbhai v. Bansilal, (1924) N. 338.

(2) Basappa v. Gurulingawa, 57 B. 74; Jaganath Gir v. Sher Bahadur Singh, 57 A. 85.

(3) Mit., II-3; Jotilal v. Durani, W. R. (F.B.) 173; Tahalai v. Gaya Pershad, 37 C. 214, followed in Sundar Moni v. Bangsidhar, 16 I.C. 900 (902); Sundar v. Bansidhar, 18 C.W.N. 150: 16 I.C. 900; Kumaravelu v. Virana, 5 M. 22; Muttammal v. Vengalakshmi, 5 M. 32; Ramasami v. Narasamma, 8 M. 133; Seethai v. Nachiar, 37 M. 286; Keeserbai v. Valab, 4 B. 188 (208); Ramanand v. Surgiani, 16 A. 221; Nanki v. Gauri Shankar, 28 A. 187; Ram Prasad v. Babu Lal, 86 I. C. 849: (1925) A. 417; Kirpi v. Ramjas, (1889) P.R. No. 153.

(4) Jotilal v. Durani, W.R. (F.B.) 173.

(5) Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai, 2 B. 388; O.A. 5 B. 110 P.C.; Keser Bai v. Valab, 4 B. 188 (208); Basangowda v. Rudrappa, 30 Bom.L.R. 591: (1928) B. 291.

(6) Rakhmabai v. Tukaram, 11 B. 47.

(7) Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai, 2 B. 388, affirmed O.A. 5 B. 110 P.C.

(8) Russoobai v. Zoolekha Bai, 19 B. 707.

(9) Rachava v. Kalingapa, 16 B. 718, explaining Lallubhai v. Mankuverbai, 2 B. 388.

(10) W. and B., H.L. (3rd Ed.), 472; cited with approval in Russoobai v. Zoolekhabai, 19 B. 707 (710).

(11) Mit.; II-III-2.

(12) Mayukh, IV-VII-13 (Mandlik) 80; Khodabai v. Bahadur, 6 B. 541 (546).

(13) Mit., II-III-2.

father's estate. The putative father of a Shudra succeeds to his illegitimate son by reason of propinquity, in the absence of nearer heirs.[1]

321. (1) In default of the father, the estate descends to the brother[2] or those of the whole blood succeeding before those of the half blood,[3] except that where the former were divided and the latter undivided, they all share equally;

(9) His brother.

Provided that in the territory subject to the Mayukh Law, in the absence of a brother of the whole blood, a nephew of the whole blood is preferred to a brother of the half blood.[4]

(2) The succession of brothers divided and undivided, reunited and divided and of the whole blood and the half blood is subject to the rules stated in section 202.

2263. Analogous Law.—After the father, come the brothers, those of the whole blood being preferred to those of the half blood, and an undivided brother to a divided one.[5] The following texts support him:—

(9) Brother.

Mitakshara.—"On failure of the father, the brothers share the estate. Accordingly, Manu says: Of him who leaves no son, the father shall take the inheritance or the brothers."[6]

"5. Among brothers, such as are of the whole blood take the inheritance in the first instance under the text before cited: 'To the nearest sapinda, the inheritance next belongs,'[7] since those of the half blood are remote through the difference of the mothers."[8]

It will be noted that except in the case of brothers and sons of brothers, neither the Mitakshara nor the Mayukh makes any distinction between persons of the whole blood and those of the half blood. Legitimate sons by different mothers take equally the property of their father. The Mitakshara, in the succession of brothers, places uterine brother, i.e., brothers of the whole blood before brothers of the half blood. It then brings in brothers of the half blood and places the sons of brothers respectively in the same order as their respective fathers.[9] The Mayukh also prefers brothers of the whole blood to brothers of the half blood, but next to the brothers of the whole blood brings in their sons.[10] It names, as next in succession, the paternal grandmother, and after her the sister, and after the sister introduces together the paternal grandfather and the half brother, and after them the paternal great-grandfather, the father's brother and the sons of brothers of the half-blood.[11] But so far as brothers of the full and half-blood are concerned, both the Mitakshara and the Mayukh agree,[12] it being, of course, clear that the term brothers of "half-blood" means brothers born of the same father and different mothers. Sons of the same mother by different fathers belong to different families and are not includ-

(1) Subramania v. Rathnavelu, 41 M. 44 F.B.
(2) Mit., II-IV-1.
(3) Mit., II-IV-5; to the same effect, Mayukh, IV-VIII-16. Anant Singh v. Durga Singh, 32 A. 363.
(4) Mayukh, IV-VIII-16.
(5) Devi Bhai v. Dayaboy, 89 I.C. (S.) 164.
(6) Manu, IX-185; Mit., II-IV-1.
(7) Ib., IX-187.
(8) Mit., II-VI-1, 5. To the same effect, Mayukh, IV-VIII-16.
(9) Mit., II-IV-7; Haribhai v. Mathur, 47 B. 940; Har Bhagwan v. Hukam Singh, 3 L. 242.
(10) Mayukh, IV-VIII-16.
(11) Ib., IV-VIII-18-20.
(12) Krishnaji v. Pandurang, 12 B.H.C.R. 65; Samat v. Amra, 6 B. 394; Parmappa v. Shidappa, 30 B. 607 (610).

ed in the term.[1] Of course, custom may eliminate the textual difference between brothers of the whole and brothers of the half-blood, and in one case such custom was sought to be supported upon the strength of an entry in the wajib-ul-arz, which the Privy Council ruled out as connoting "the views of individuals as to the practice that they would wish to see prevailing rather than the ascertained fact of a well-established custom."[2] But in the Punjab such a custom is presumed in the case of certain tribes.[3]

2264. It has already been seen that there is no relation between the sons of the mother by her first marriage and those by her second marriage after death or divorce of her first husband. The later Smritis abhor a woman's re-marriage, and it would be a far cry to expect them to suffer any relationship between the offspring of a sacramental and those of a sinful union.[4]

As regards the right of the illegitimate brothers to inherit inter se, the question was answered in the affirmative by the Madras High Court in a case of a Shudra,[5] and in one case it was held to be the rule applicable to all castes.[6]

Effect of Re-union.

2265. As between brothers of the whole blood and those of the half-blood, those re-united take in preference to those not re-united. But a re-united half-brother takes equally with the separated whole brother. In other words—

(1) A whole brother re-united excludes a whole separated brother. Here, the relationship being equal, the succession is regulated by union.

(2) A whole brother re-united excludes a half-brother re-united. Here, the union being equal, superior relationship rules the succession.

(3) A whole brother separated and a half-brother re-united share equally. Here, superior relationship without union and union with inferior relationship are equal.[7]

(4) A whole brother though separated excludes the father though re-united.

This subject has been already considered elsewhere (S. 202.).

(10) Nephew.

322. (1) In default of all brothers of the whole blood and the half blood, the sons of brothers or nephews succeed.

(2) The succession of nephews divided and undivided, reunited and divided and of the whole and half blood follows the rules applicable to brothers stated in section 202.

(3) Where the nephews succeed on the death of their father, after the estate had vested in him, they take per stirpes; otherwise they take per capita.[8]

---

(1) Ekoba v. Kashiram, 46 B. 716 (718).

(2) Anant Singh v. Durga Singh, 32 A. 363 (373) P.C.

(3) Jafar v. Mhd. Khan, (1906) P.L.R. 29; Eoda v. Amar, (1873) P.R. No. 75; Devi v. Mangal, (1874) P.R. No. 84; Tekhu v. Waliah, (1876) P.R. No. 6; Phaggan v. Buta, (1877) P.R. No. 9; Hazara v. Samita, (1876) P.R. No. 76; Ram v. Bishen, (1879) P.R. No. 123; Albela v. Pat, (1881) P.R. No. 21; Mahtaba v. Jaimal, (1883) P.R. No. 187; Maya v. Bishen, (1884) P.R. No. 23; Gopal v. Nainu, (1887) P.R. No. 71.

(4) Ekoba v. Kashi Ram, 46 B. 716.

(5) Myna Bai v. Uttar Ram, 2 M.H.C.R. 197; Shome Shankar v. Rajesar, 21 A. 99 (104, 105).

(6) Sitta Baksh v. Gajraj Singh, (1911) 14 O.C. 227: 12 I.C. 767.

(7) Sham Narain v. Court of Wards, 20 W.R. 197 (202).

(8) Brojo Kishore v. Srinath, 9 W.R. 463; Brojo Mohun v. Gouree, 15 W.R. 70.

(10) Brother's Son.

2266. Analogous Law.—The sub-division of brothers into those of the whole blood and those of the half blood extends to their sons, both the Mitakshara and the Mayukh placing sons of brothers of the whole blood before the sons of brothers of the half blood.[1] On this subject the Mitakshara says:—

Mitakshara.—"7. On failure of brothers also, their sons share the heritage in the order of the respective fathers.

"8. In case of competition between brothers and nephews, the nephews have no title to the succession, for their right of inheritance is declared to be on a failure of brothers.

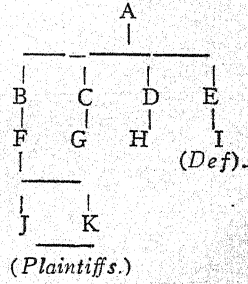
"9. However, when a brother has died leaving no male issue (nor other nearer heir), and the estate has consequently devolved on his brothers indifferently, if any one of them died before a partition of their father's estate takes place, his sons do in that case acquire a title through their father, and it is fit, therefore, that a share should be allotted to them in their father's right, at a subsequent distribution of the property between them and the surviving brother."[2]

Shrikrishna.—"In default of brothers, the brother's son is the successor. Here also a nephew of the whole blood inherits in the first instance, and on failure of such, the nephew of the half-blood, but in case of re-union of co-heirs and on the supposition of all being of whole blood, the associated son of the whole brother is in the first place heir; and on failure of him, the unassociated nephew of the whole blood, or on the supposition of all being of the half-blood, the associated nephew of the half-blood is the first heir, and on failure of him, the unassociated nephew. But if the son of the whole brother be separate, and the son of the half-brother associated, both inherit together, like brothers in similar circumstances."[3]

2267. According to the Mitakshara, the nephews do not share with their uncles, but take a share which had vested in their father.[4] According to the Mayukh, the sons of a deceased brother succeed along with the surviving brothers,[5] as tenants-in-common but not as joint-tenants.[6] The rule is held to extend even to sons of cousins.[7] But this rule cannot be extended to the Mitakshara country without proof of custom. In one case of the Ahban Thakers of Oudh, such a custom was pleaded, but the Privy Council held the four instances adduced in proof of it to be of a comparatively modern date and insufficient to prove a family custom pleaded in derogation of the ordinary law.[8]

Even in Bombay, the rules does not go beyond the brothers and their children.[9]

2268. In an undivided family, a brother's son takes his own share as well as the lapsed share of a brother's son, in preference to the grandson of another brother.[10] Where, for instance, A had four grandsons F, G, H and I, of whom I alone was alive at the date of the suit by F's two sons J and K, who claimed to divide A's estate in two equal shares, claiming a share by survivorship, to which I replied that, being a nearer sapinda of G and H, he was entitled to inherit their share, to the exclusion of J and K, the court held that inasmuch as F had predeceased both G and H, their share devolved on I, to the exclusion of the plaintiffs.[11] In other words,



(1) Mit., II-IV-57; Mayukh, IV-VIII-17; Samat v. Amra, 6 B. 394 (397); Hari Bhai v. Mathur, 47 B. 940; Har Bhugwan v. Hakam Singh, 3 L. 242.

(2) Mit., II-IV-7-9.

(3) Cited in Sarv. Inh., 927, 928.

(4) Sarv. Inh., 928.

(5) Mayukh, IV-VIII-17; Keshar Lal v. Jagu Bhai, 49 B. 282; contra in Hari Bhai v. Mathur, 47 B. 940.

(6) Jadav Bhai v. Multan Chand, 27 Bom.L.R. 426: 87 I.C. 926: (1925) B. 350.

(7) 1 W. & B., H.L., (3rd Ed.), p. 108.

(8) Chandika v. Muna, 24 A. 273 P.C.

(9) Ib., Shankar v. Kasinath, 51 B. 194 F.B.

(10) Madho v. Bindessury, 3 Agra 101.

(11) Ib.

under the Mitakshara, the nephew succeeds not as the heir of his father, but as the direct heir of his uncle.[1] As such, brother's sons take per capita and not per stirpes.[2]

The brother's son is the last of what Mitakshara calls the "compact series of heirs."[3]

(11) Brother's Son's Son.

2269. On the assumption that the Mitakshara passage relating to a brother's son[4] includes also a grandson, it was held, and is now settled, that the brother's son's son's place is next after the brother's son[5]

This raises the question whether the distinction between the whole and the half blood should equally apply to brother's grandson and in fact relations other than the brothers and their sons.

Except for some cases of the Bombay High Court,[6] it is now generally agreed that the distinction extends to all agnatic kinsmen even upto the fourteenth degree.[7] For instance, it extends to the sisters,[8] and paternal uncles.[9]

(12) Paternal Grandmother.

2270. The paternal grandmother comes in next. After the brother's son, the Mitakshara summarily dismisses the remaining heirs, with the following texts:—

Mitakshara.—"4. Here, on failure of the father's descendants, the heirs are successively the paternal grandmother, the paternal grandfather, the uncles and their sons.

"2. On failure of the paternal grandfather's line, the paternal great-grandmother, the great-grandfather, his sons and their issue inherit. In this manner must be understood the succession of kindred belonging to the same general family who are sapindas."[10]

Mayukh.—"In default of brother's sons [come] the Gotraj Sapindas [gentile relations].[11] Among them, first is the paternal grandmother, according to the text of Manu,[12] which says: 'And the mother also being dead, the father's mother shall take the heritage.'[13] And although she is to be entered at the end after the brother's sons, after the manner of the entry of intruders who are placed at the end, because she is not mentioned among those whose order [of succession] is fixed ending with brother's sons."

2271. It has been held in Bombay, that a paternal grandmother in Gujerat inheriting property, whether movable or immovable, from her maiden grand-daughter, takes an absolute interest therein, and on her death, the property goes to her heir, and not to the heir of the grand-daughter, and that the grandmother is entitled to dispose of such property by will.[14]

---

(1) Brojo Kisore v. Srinath, 9 W.R. 463; Brojo Muhun v. Gouree, 15 W.R. 70.

(2) Brojo Kishore v. Srinath, 9 W. R. 463.

(3) Mit., II-V-2; Mohan Das v. Krishna Bai, 5 B. 597 (602).

(4) Mit. II-IV-7, II-V-1. The word in the original is 'Santan', which means the "issue"; see Buddha Singh v. Laltoo Singh, 34 A. 663, affirmed O.A. 37 A. 604 (616) P.C.

(5) Buddha Singh v. Laltoo Singh, 34 A. 663, affirmed O.A. 37 A. 604 (612) P.C.; Kalian v. Ramachander, 24 A. 128 Kureem Chand v. Odung, 6 W.R. 158; Oorhya v. Rajoo, 14 W.R. 208; Chinnaswami v. Kunju, 35 M. 152; contra in Suraya v. Lakshminarasamma, 5 M. 291.

(6) Samat v. Amrao, 6 B. 304; Vithal Rao v. Ram Rao, 24 B. 317; Shankar v. Kashinath, 51 B. 194 (203, 204) F.B.

(7) Ganga Sahai v. Kesri, 37 A. 545 P.C., approving Suba v. Sarafraz, 19 A. 215 F.B.; Nachiappa v. Rangasami, 28 M.L.J. 1 F.B.: 26 I.C. 757.

(8) Jana v. Rakhma, 43 B. 461 (466).

(9) Sham Singh v. Kishun Sahai, 6 C.L.J. 190; Narain v. Hamraji, 21 N. L.R. 163.

(10) Mit, II-V-4.

(11) Mayukh, IV-VIII-19.

(12) Manu, IX-217.

(13) Mit., II-I-60; Mayukh, IV-VIII-16 (Mandlik), 81.

(14) Gandhi v. Jadah, 24 B. 193 (214, 218).

The paternal grandmother inherits in her own right, and not as a widow.[1]

(12-A) Sister in Mayukh.

2272. Under the express text of the Mayukh, the sister has a place between the grandmother and the grandfather,[2] while in Madras she came in only as a bandhu, and elsewhere she was wholly excluded. This omission has now been made good by the Hindu Inheritance (Amendment) Act 1929[3] which allots her a place after the father's father and two added statutory heirs, namely, the son's daughter and the daughter's daughter, (§ 2285) but her higher place in Bombay, after the father's mother but before the father's father, has been held to remain unaffected by this Act, which was enacted to raise her status, and by no means to lower it, as it would have been, if the Mayukh rule had been held superseded by the Act.

Under the Hindu Inheritance (Amendment) Act, 1929, which applies only to persons subject to the Mitakshara law, the sister ranks in the order of succession along with other statutory heirs next to the paternal grandfather and before the paternal uncle. Before the passing of this Act, although she was not classed as an heir, still even under the orthodox Mitakshara school, she was held, entitled to receive a share of the ancestral property, equal to one-fourth of what she would have got, had she been a male, as her marriage portion, the quantum being fixed upon whether she was married or unmarried, and whether the expenses of her marriage had already been met by other relations.[4]

(13) Paternal Grandfather.

2273. According to the Mitakshara,[5] the paternal grandfather comes immediately after the paternal grandmother. But as already stated, the Mayukh postpones him in favour of the sister, who intervenes between himself and the paternal grandmother. According to the Mayukh, again, he takes equally with the half-brother, "because their propinquity is equal."[6]

Intervention of statutory heirs.

2274. Under the Mitakshara, immediately after the paternal grandfather comes the paternal uncle. But the Legislature[7] has interposed the following heirs between them, namely:—

(14) Son's daughter.
(15) Daughter's daughter.
(16) Sister (including a half sister).
(17) Sister's son.

The first three female near relations, the Mitakshara naturally excluded, because they were females, though both in Bombay and in Madras, the son's daughter[8] and the daughter's daughter[9] were regarded as heritable bandhus, while in Bombay, the sister was assigned a comparatively high place next to the paternal grandmother,[10] and in Madras, he was

(1) Ib., p. 201.
(2) Mayukh, IV-VIII-17 (Mandlik), 81, citing manu, IX-187.
(3) Act II of 1929.
(4) Mit., II-7; Manu, IX-118 (25 S.B.E. 348); Yad., II-124 (Mandlik), p. 217; Brihaspati, XXV-64 (23 S.B.E. 379); Lachan Bai v. Babai, 5 N.L.R. 161: 4 I.C. 786.
(5) Ib., II-IV-4, 5.
(6) Mayukh, IV-VII-20.
(7) Hindu Inheritance (Amendment) Act, II of 1929.
(8) Venalal v. Parjaram, 20 B. 173; Nallanna v. Ponnal, 14 M. 149.
(9) Gungaram v. Ballia, (1876) B.P.J. 31; Lallubhai v. Mankuwarbai, 2 B. 388 (446); Tuljaram v. Mathuradas, 5 B. 662 (672); Madhavram v. Dave, 21 B. 739; Ramappa v. Arumugath, 17 M. 182.
(10) Mayukh, IV-VIII-19.

merely a bandhu,[1] which she was not elsewhere except when allowed by custom.[2] Bht in Madras, being a female, she ranked next to her own son who, being a male, was entitled to preference over her.[3] Both according to the Allahabad and Punjab Courts a son's daughter and a daughter's daughter were no heirs because, being females, they were excluded, not being expressly named.[4] These inequities and uncertainties of the textual and case-law have now been set at rest by the Legislature which assigns to the four relations an assured high place in the catena of heirs. To this extent all the texts and cases to the contrary are now overruled.[5]

Half Sister.

2275. The question whether the relations such as sister and son as used in the Hindu Law of Inheritance (Amendment) Act, 1929[6] are used in the sense ascribed to them in Hindu law,[7] has been the subject of some (it is submitted) unjustified judicial conflict, since the Act, being an amendment of Hindu Law, the terms therein used must be used as understood in that law and not in their lexicon sense which would exclude an adopted son included there; and by parity of reasoning the term "sister" should include a half sister, since the Mitakshara uses that term as meaning the father's daughter, as Mr. Colebrooke has pointed out in his note on the Mitakshara text that mentions the father's "issue" as entitled to inherit in the absence of certain relations therein named. This interpretation of the word "sister" was adopted in Bombay, and has received the approval of the Privy Council.[8] As such, half sisters have been held to inherit in Bombay[9] though following another principle in favour of the propinquity of blood,[10] in a competition between persons of equal degree half-sisters are excluded by full sisters, not because they are not the father's daughters but rather because they do not possess equal degree of propinquity. Even Manu's text provides for the inheritance of all sapindas, male and female, a text that has been so interpreted by the Privy Council,[11] the result being that, under the Mitakshara, the father's daughters are comprised in the term sister, an interpretation not disputed in the North where sisters have been held to be excluded by reason of the overriding text of Baudhayan who had declared women not expressly named in the texts as ineligible for inheritance.[12]

This text and the exclusion based thereon has now been set right by the Legislature, with the result that sisters in the sense of the Mitakshara, as including both sisters and half sisters must be deemed to be made legislatively eligible for inheritance. And it has been so held.[13]

---

(1) Raghunath v. Munnam Missar, 20 A. 191; Kutti v. Radhakrishna, 8 M.H. C.R. 88; Lakshmanamma v. Tiruvengada, 5 M. 241; Mari v. Chinnammal, 8 M. 107 (130) F.B.; Nallanna v. Ponnal, 14 M. 149; Mullani v. Lalamal, (1889) P.R. 180; Nanak Gir v. Kishan Kaur, (1919) P.R. 161: 53 I.C. 815.

(2) Bhadia v. Bhagi, 10 N.L.R. 24; Madho v. Janki, 12 N.L.R. 148 (149).

(3) Kutti v. Radhakrishnan, 8 M.H. C.R. 88 (93); Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada, 5 M. 141; In Vellanki v. Venkata, 1 M. 174 (186) P.C., the question was raised but not decided.

(4) Nanhi v. Gouri, 28 A. 187; Jagannath v. Champa, ib., Malan v. Jewan, (1916) P.W.R. 47: 32 I.C. 916.

(5) S. 2 (c), Hindu Inheritance (Amendment) Act, 1929.

(6) Act II of 1929.

(7) Pokhan Dusadh v. Mt. Mano, 16 Pat. 215 (221) F.B.; Cf. Collector of Thana v. Krishnanath, 5 B. 322 (328, 329).

(8) Cole—Note on Mit. II-V-5 approved in Vinayak v. Lakshibai in 1 B.H.C. R. 117 (124), affirmed O.A. 9 M.I.A. 516 (537, 538).

(9) Kesserbai v. Valab Raoji, 4 B. 188 (199, 200); Trikam Purshottam v. Natha Daji, 36 B. 120 (122).

(10) Jotindranath v. Nagendranath, 59 C. 576 (579) P.C.

(11) Budha Singh v. Laltu Singh, 37 A. 604 (613) P.C.

(12) Lallubhai v. Cassibai, 5 B. 110 (118) P.C.

(13) Rameshwar v. Ganpati, 18 L. 525: Amrut v. Thagan, I.L.R. (1938) N. 115

The Hindu law of testate succession is now subject to selected sections of the Succession Act under which the term sister includes half-sister,[1] and it would be anomalous if the same word bears a different meaning according to whether on succession was testate or intestate.

The result of the amending law is to remove the disability from which they had been suffering in provinces like Madras where they only stole in as bandhus[2] or in the United Provinces and elsewhere, where they did not come in at all.[3] And since the Act was intended to amend the law with a view to restore the principle of propinquity in the line of inheritance so far as the relations therein named were concerned, it follows that the sister, who, in Bombay, had been allotted higher place before the grandfather would still retain her place there.[4]

2276. The Act does not affect the quantum of interest which the first three female heirs will take, which must be decided with reference to their personal law. For instance, since the sister in Bombay is held to take an absolute interest, she will continue to do so, whereas the rule that females only inherit a limited interest will apply elsewhere. But the Act has necessarily abrogated another rule of Hindu Law enunciated in section 306, namely, that their inheritance depends upon their chastity. It is apprehended that the owner may insure it by executing a will, but that qualification cannot be read into the Act.

In this connection it should be added that the term "son" includes an adopted son, provided that, in the case of the adoption of a son by a sister's husband, the adoption was made with the consent of the sister during her life-time. This would insure the right of the sister and would prevent an adoption by her husband merely to secure her brother's estate.

The Act expressly excludes the Dayabhag law, not because the Dayabhag law of succession is any better but because some Bengal members were averse to a change. The position of these relations under the Dayabhag law is that neither a son's daughter nor a daughter's daughter nor a sister is there an heir, though the sister's son is an heir.[5]

(18) Paternal Uncle.
(a) of full blood,
(b) of half blood.

2277. The paternal uncle takes next, an uncle of the full blood being preferred to an uncle of the half blood,[6] and the latter to his cousins.[7] According to the Mayukh, the paternal uncle shares the inheritance equally with paternal great-grandfather, and sons of the half brother.[8]

The distinction between an uncle of the whole blood and one of the half blood only applies where the two are related to the deceased in the same degree. That distinction cannot apply when there is a difference in degrees. Consequently, after the sister's son, the order of succession will

---

F.B.: (1938) N. 184 F.B.; Shanker v. Raghoba, Ib., 97; Guranditta v. Mt. Diwani, (1937) L. 11 (14), contra Ram Adhar v. Sudesra, 55 A. 725 F.B.: (1937) A.L.J. 767: 11 Luck. 148 (case of sister's son).

(1) S. 27 (b), Succession Act.

(2) Rajab Venkata v. Rajab Venkata, 31 M. 321.

(3) Gaurisahai v. Rukko, 3 A. 45; Jagat Narain v. Sheodas, 5 A. 311 F. B.; Bindeshwari v. Baij Nath, (1937) O. 402; Gangoo v Beni, 14 N. 82 (92).

(4) Shidramappa v. Nilambai, 57 B. 377.

(5) See next chapter.

(6) Vithal Rao v. Ram Rao, 24 B. 317; Sham v. Kishun, 6 C.L.J. 190.

(7) Ganga Sahai v. Kesari, 37 A. 545 (556, 557) P.C.

(8) Mayukh, IV-VIII-20.

be as follows: paternal uncle of full blood,[1] paternal uncle of half blood[2] paternal uncle's son of full blood, paternal uncle's son of half blood.[3]

(19) Paternal Uncle's Son.

2278. On the ground that the "son" includes also the "grandson," a view now confirmed by the Privy Council,[4] a paternal uncle's son cannot succeed in preference to a brother's grandson. The contrary was held in Madras in a case[5] which has been overruled by the Privy Council.[6] A paternal uncle's son is preferable to the daughter of a brother,[7] for the obvious reason that a gotraj is always preferable to a bandhu.

(20) Paternal Uncle's Son's Son.

2279. On the ground that the term "son" (putra) is used in its generic sense as comprising the grandson, the place of the paternal uncle's grandson is the same as the paternal uncle's son.[8] In this view, the great-grandson of the grandfather will succeed in preference to the grandson of the great-grandfather, on the ground that the propinquity of gotraj is to be determined by lines of descent, that is to say, the inheritance is to go first to the santan or line of the paternal grandfather, then in default of any one in that line, to the line of the paternal great-grandfather and so forth; that is to say, the line of the grandfather must be first exhausted before the great-grandfather and his line come in.[9] In this view, the three immediate descendants of the grandfather succeed in preference to the great-grandfather and his descendants, and consequently, the great-grandson of the grandfather is a preferential heir as against the grandson of the great-grandfather. Similarly, the father's brother's grandson has preference over the brother's great-grandson.[10]

2280. Two remaining heirs, though categorized by the Smritikars, are seldom alive to be present to take the succession. They are:—

(21) Father's father's mother,[11]
(22) Father's father's father,
(23) Father's father's brother,
(24) Father's father's brother's son,
(25) Father's father's brother's son's son.

The above order is supported by the following text:—

Mitakshara.—"5. On failure of the paternal grandfather's line, the paternal grandmother, the great-grandfather, his sons and their issue inherit. In this manner must be understood the succession of kindred belonging to the same Gotra and Sapindas.[12]

---

(1) Kesari v. Ganga Sahai, 32 A. 541 F.B., affirmed on review Ganga Sahai v. Kesri, 33 A. 563; affirmed O.A. Ganga Sahai v. Kesri, 37 A. 545 (556) P.C.; Muthusami v. Simambedu, 19 M. 408 (410) P.C.; contra in Suba v. Sorafraz, 19 A. 215.

(2) Kalian v. Ram Chander, 24 A. 128, approved in Buddha Singh v. Laltu Singh, 37 A. 604 (621) P.C.

(3) Surya v. Lakshminarayana, 5 M. 291, overruled in Buddha Singh v. Laltu Singh, 37 A. 604 (622, 623) P.C. approving Chinnasami v. Kunju, 34 M. 152.

(4) Buddha Singh v. Laltu Singh, 37 A. 604 P.C.

(5) Surya v. Lakshminarayana, 5 M. 291.

(6) Buddha Singh v. Laltu Singh, 37 A. 604 (622, 623) P.C.

(7) Monekbai v. Naranji, 12 Bom. L.R. 454.

(8) Buddha Singh v. Laltu Singh, 34 A. 663, affirmed O.A. 37 A. 604 P.C.; Kashi Bai v. Moreshwar, 35 B. 389.

(9) Ranchara v. Kalingapa, 16 B. 716, followed in Buddha Singh v. Laltu Singh, 34 A. 663 (675), affirmed O.A. 37 A. 604 P.C. To the same effect, Kashi Bai v. Moreshwar, 35 B. 389; Chinnasami v. Kunju, 35 M. 152.

(10) Venkateswara v. Adinarayana, 58 M. 323.

(11) Mit., II-V-5.

(12) II-VI-5.

2281. The Subodhini carries the enumeration of gotraj sapindas a little further adding the following:—

(26) Paternal great-grandfather's mother;
(27) Great-grandfather's father.
(28) Great-grandfather's brothers and their sons.
(29) Paternal great-grandfather's grandmother;
(30) Great-grandfather's grandfather.
(31) Great-grandfather's uncles and their sons;

adding, "the same analogy holds in the succession of Samanodaks."

2282. The Mayukh contends for a different series of heirs after the brother's sons:—

(11) Paternal grandmother.
(12) Sister.
(13) Paternal grandfather and brothers of half blood.
(14) Paternal great-grandfather.
(15) Paternal uncle and sons of a brother of half blood.

It does not pursue the enumeration further, and the principle stated by it, viz., nearness of kin, does not clearly indicate the rule of continuation of this series.[1]

2283. Under the Hindu Law prevailing in the Bombay Presidency, the grandson of the paternal great-grandfather of the propositus is entitled to succeed in preference to the paternal aunt,[2] on the ground that, being a gotraj, he is preferred to a bandhu. So, a great-grandson of the great-grandfather comes in before the widow of a son of the great-grandfather, since she is not expressly mentioned or provided for in the text.[3]

2284. Remote Sapinda Heirs.—Grandsons in the fourth and fifth removed are sapindas and heirs to their common ancestors.[4] The text of the Mitakshara is in such cases decisive, unless it can be shown that its plain language has received qualification or judicial construction.[5] Such are descendants of the deceased from the fourth to the sixth degree:—

(26) Great great-grandson.
(27) Great great great-grandson.
(28) Great great great great-grandson.

Descendants of father of deceased from fourth to the sixth degree:—

(29) Brother's great-grandson.
(30) Brother's great great-grandson.
(31) Brother's great great great-grandson.

Descendants of grandfather of deceased from fourth to sixth degree:—

(32) Father's brother's son's son's son.
(33) Father's brother's son's son's son's son.
(34) Father's brother's son's son's son's son's son.

---

(1) Colebrooke's note to Mit., II-VI-5.
(2) Ganesh v. Woghu, 27 B. 610.
(3) Bayana v. Dinkar, 6 N.L.R. 39.
(4) Ram Singh v. Ugur Singh, 13 M. I.A. 373.
(5) Ram Singh v. Ugur Singh, 13 M. I.A. 373 (399.)

Descendants of great-grandfather of deceased from fourth to sixth degree:—

(35) Father's father's brother's son's son's son.

(36) Father's father's brother's son's son's son's son.

(37) Father's father's brother's son's son's son's son's son.

Ancestors of deceased in the fourth degree and their descendants to the third degree:—

(38) Father's father's father's mother.

(39) Father's father's father's father.

(40) Father's father's father's father's son.

(41) Father's father's father's father's son's son.

(42) Father's father's father's father's son's son's son.

Ancestors of deceased in fifth degree and their discendants to the third degree:—

(43) Father's father's father's father's mother.

(44) Father's father's father's father's father.

(45) Father's father's father's father's father's son.

(46) Father's father's father's father's father's son's son.

(47) Father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son.

Ancestors of deceased in sixth degree and their descendants to the third degree:—

(48) Father's father's father's father's father's mother.

(49) Father's father's father's father's father's father.

(50) Father's father's father's father's father's father's son.

(51) Father's father's father's father's father's father's son's son.

(52) Father's father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son.

Descendants from fourth to sixth degree of ancestors in fourth degree:—

(53) Father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son.

(54) Father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son's son.

(55) Father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son's son's son.

Descendants from fourth to sixth degree of ancestors in fifth degree:—

(56) Father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son.

(57) Father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son's son.

(58) Father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son's son's son.

Descendants from fourth to sixth degree of ancestors in sixth degree:—

(59) Father's father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son.

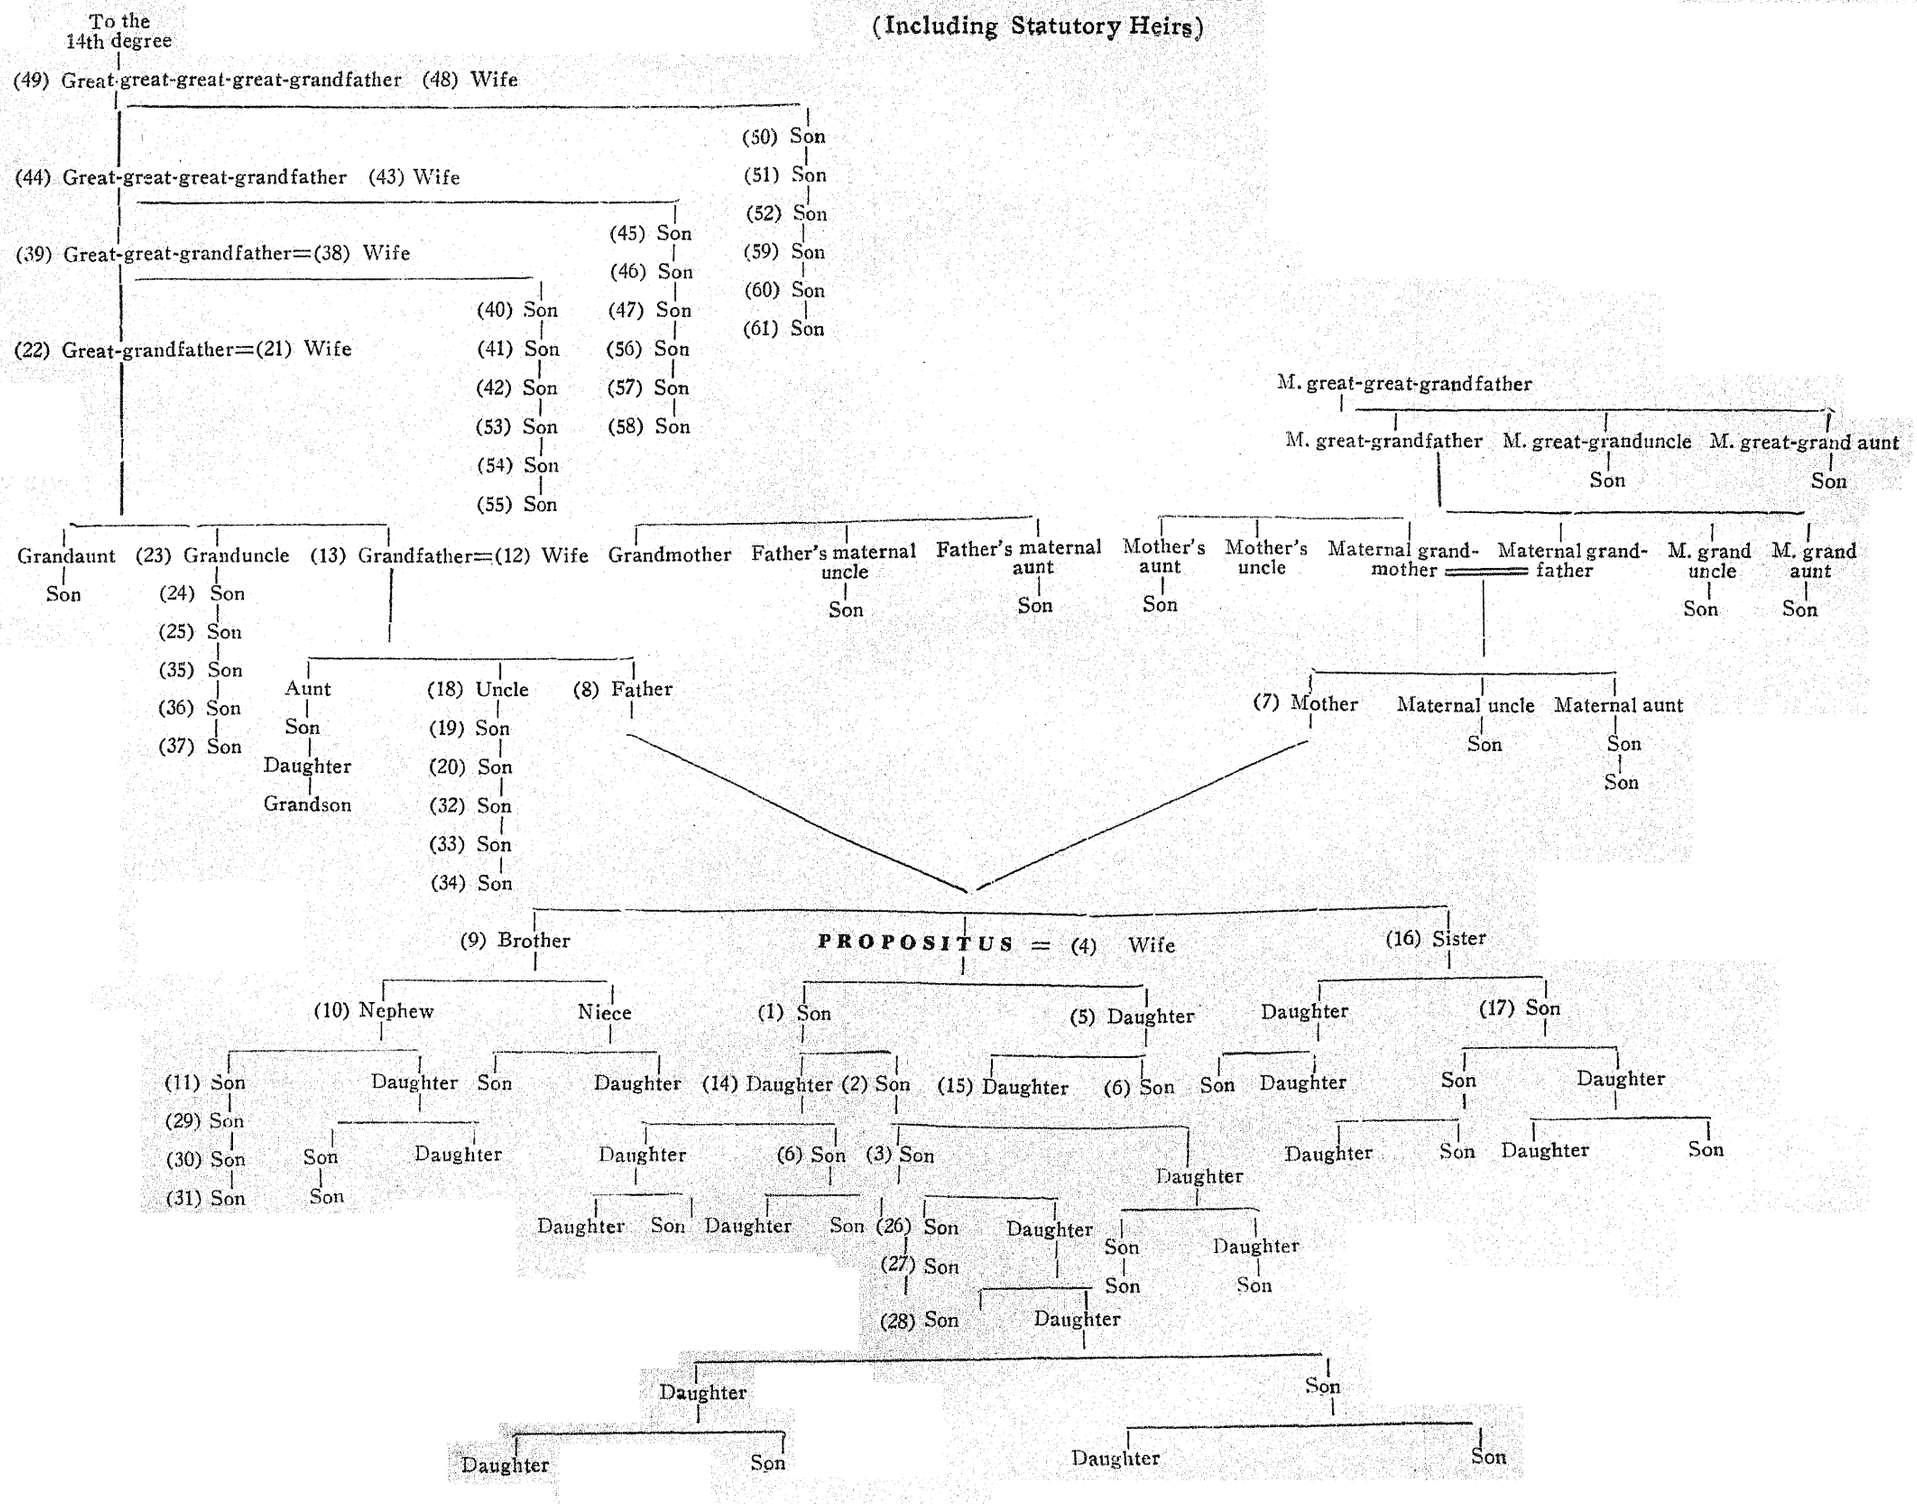
(60) Father's father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son's son.

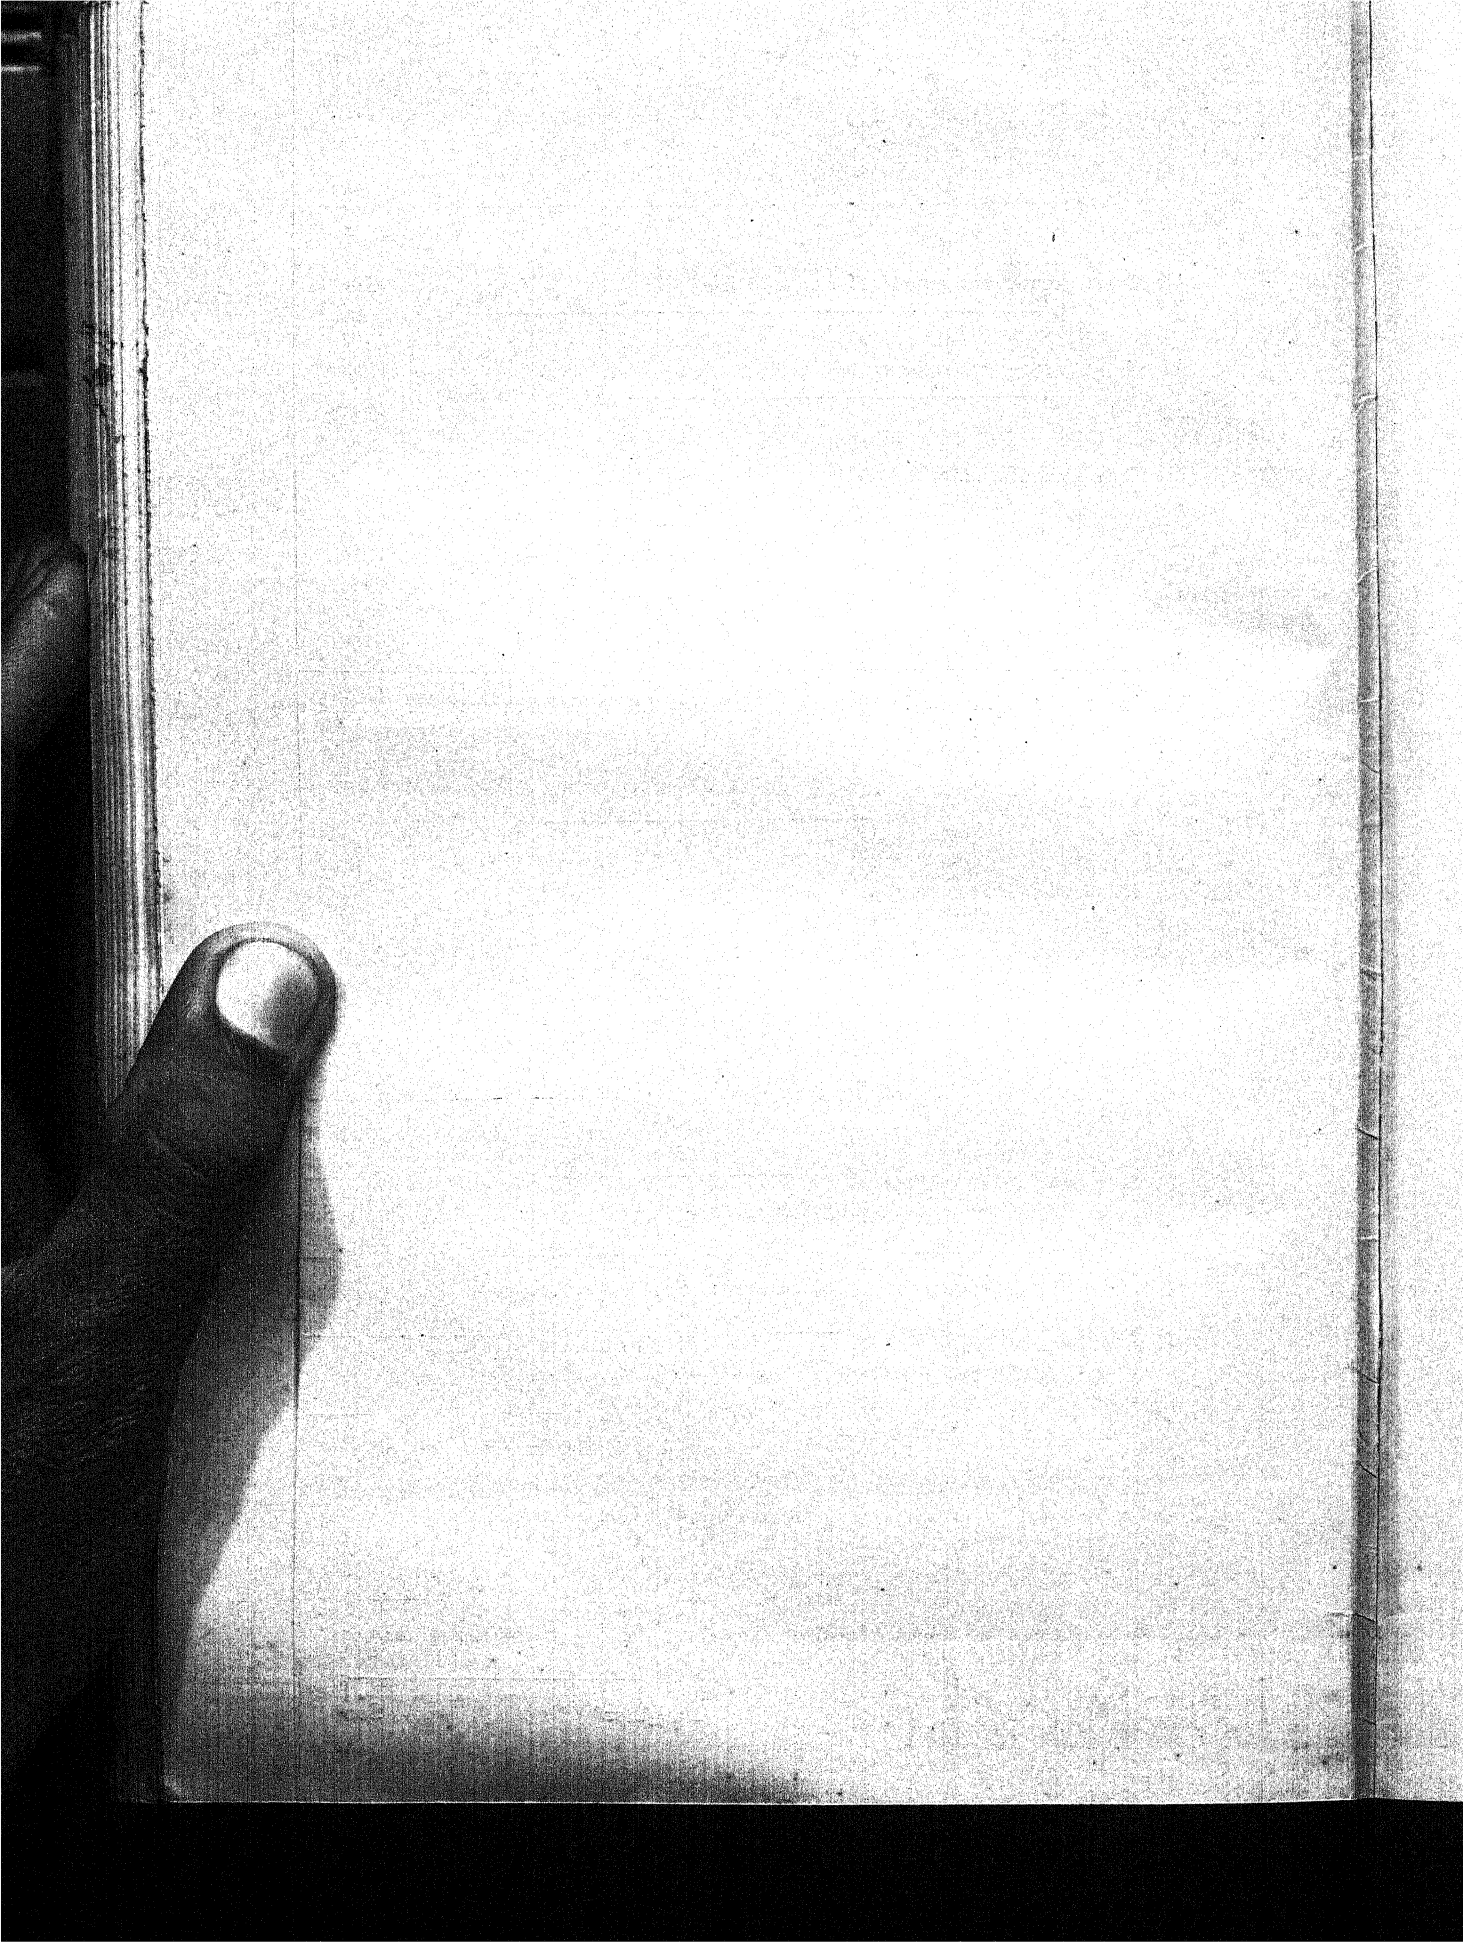
(61) Father's father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son's son's son.

MITAKSHARA SAPINDAS

(Including Statutory Heirs)

[To Face Page 954.





According to the Mitakshara, 57 relations of a person constitute his sapindas, as follows:—

Mitakshara.—1. His 6 male descendants in the male line.

2. His 6 male ascendants in the male line, and their wives.

3. The 6 male descendants in the collateral male line of each of his male ascendants.

4. His wife, daughter and daughter's son. After the sapindas come the samanodaks comprising 147 relations, i.e., all his agnates from the eighth to the fourteenth degree, and even beyond, so long as the pedigree can be traced.[1]

5. Among brothers such as are of the whole blood take the inheritance in the first instance under the text before cited: "To the nearest sapinda the inheritance next belongs," since those of the half blood are remote through the difference of the mothers.[2]

6. If there be no uterine (or whole) brothers those by different mother inherit the estate.

7. On failure of brother's also, their sons share the heritage in the order of their respective fathers.

2285. Summary of Mitakshara Sapinda succession.—The order of Mitakshara succession is as follows:—

(1) Son.[3]
(2) Son's son.
(3) Son's son's son.
(4) Widows.
(5) Daughter.
(6) Daughter's son.
(7) Mother.[4] } Father. } under Mayukh.
(8) Father. } Mother. }
(9) Brother.
(10) Brother's son.
(11) Brother's son's son.
(12) Father's mother.
(12-A) Sister (in Bombay).[5]
(13) Father's father.
(14) Son's daughter.[6] } Added by Act II of 1929.
(15) Daughter's daughter.[6] }
(16) Sister[6] including half-sister.[7] }
(17) Sister's son.
(18) Father's brother.
(19) Father's brother's son.
(20) Father's brother's son's son.
(21) Father's father's mother.
(22) Father's father's father.
(23) Father's father's brother.
(24) Father's father's brother's son.
(25) Father's father's brother's son's son.
(26) Son's son's son's son.
(27) Son's son's son's son's son.
(28) Son's son's son's son's son's son.
(29) Brother's son's son's son.
(30) Brother's son's son's son's son.
(31) Brother's son's son's son's son's son.
(32) Father's brother's son's son's son.
(33) Father's brother's son's son's son's son.

---

(1) Kalka v. Mathura, 30 A. 510 P.C. Ram-Baran v. Kamla, 32 A. 594; Devkore v. Amritram 10 B. 372.

(2) Mit., Ch. II-VI §§ 5-7; Dayabhag, Ch. XI, Sect. V, § 9; Smriti Chandrika, Ch. XI, Sect. IV, § 25.

(3) This, of course, includes a posthumous son; Kusum Kumari v. Dasarathi, 34 C.L.J. 323: 67 I.C. 210.

(4) The mother is a preferential heir to the father; Subedar v. Bhikam, (1922) Oudh 277: 9 O.L.J. 435.

(5) Shidramappa v. Neelawa Bai, 57 B. 377, see § 2272.

(6) The son's daughter, daughter's daughter, sister and sister's son have been introduced as heirs (between "father's father" and "father's brother") by Hindu Inheritance (Amendment) Act, II of 1929.

(7) See § 2274.

(34) Father's brother's son's son's son's son's son.
(35) Father's father's brother's son's son's son.
(36) Father's father's brother's son's son's son's son.
(37) Father's father's brother's son's son's son's son's son.
(38) Father's father's father's mother.
(39) Father's father's father's father.
(40) Father's father's father's father's son.
(41) Father's father's father's father's son's son.
(42) Father's father's father's father's son's son's son.
(43) Father's father's father's father's mother.
(44) Father's father's father's father's father.
(45) Father's father's father's father's father's son.
(46) Father's father's father's father' father's son's son.
(47) Father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son.
(48) Father's father's father's father's father's mother.
(49) Father's father's father's father's father's father.
(50) Father's father's father's father's father's father's son.
(51) Father's father's father's father's father's father's son's son.
(52) Father's father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son.
(53) Father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son.
(54) Father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son's son.
(55) Father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son's son's son.
(56) Father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son.
(57) Father's father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son.
(58) Father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son's son's son.
(59) Father's father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son.
(60) Father's father's father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son.
(61) Father's father's father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son's son.

Order of succession amongst Samanodaks.

323. The order of succession amongst Samanodaks is subject to the following rules:

(1) The nearer line excludes the line more remote; and

(2) A nearer kinsman excludes a remoter kinsman in the same line.

2286. Analogous Law.—As to the order of succession amongst samanodaks, the Mitakshara says: (After citing Manu) "To the nearest Sapinda the inheritance next belongs."[1] Nor is the claim in virtue of propinquity restricted to sapindas; but on the contrary, it appears from this very text that the rule of propinquity is effectual without any exception, in the case of samanodaks as well as other relatives when they appear to have a claim to the succession.[2]

The principle of propinquity then amounts to this. The descendants of a nearer ancestor succeed in preference to those of a remoter ancestor, and amongst descendants of the same ancestor, the nearest excludes the more remote.

2287. Samanodaks.—Failing all gotraj sapindas, the inheritance falls to the samanodaks, who are all agnates beyond the degree of heritable sapindas,[3] i.e., from the seventh to the thirteenth degree, 147 relations in number. The Mitakshara carries them even further so long as the pedigree can be proved.[4] But the Mitakshara text is somewhat ambiguous. It runs as follows:—

(1) Manu, IX-187.
(2) Mit., II-III-4.
(3) Kalka v. Mathura, 30 A. 510 P. C.; Ram Baran v. Rajwanti, 32 A. 594 (597).
(4) Mit., II-V-6; Mayukh, IV-III-8. To the same effect, Manu, V-60. See Devkore v. Amrit Ram, 10 B. 372 (380); Ram Baran v. Kamla Prasad, 32 A. 594; Hira Singh v. Vir Singh, (1918) P.R.

Mitakshara.—"If there be none such, the succession devolves on samanodaks, and they must be understood to reach to seven degrees beyond sapindas, or else as far as the limits of knowledge as to birth and name extend. Accordingly, Vrihat Manu says,[1] 'The relation of the sapindas ceases with the seventh person; and that of samanodaks extends to the fourteenth degree; or as some affirm, it reaches as far as the memory of birth and name extends.' This is signified by gotra."[2]

It is held that both Manu and Vidynaneshwar limited the samanodaks to the fourteenth degree, though they quoted a contemporary opinion favouring its further extension, which they did not endorse,[3] but in other cases the correctness of the above reading is questioned, it being held that the correct reference to Manu is as follows:—

Manu.—"The sapinda relationship ceases with the seventh person (in the line), and that of samanodaks ends when births and names are no longer known.[4] It has accordingly been held that the samanodak relationship is not limited to the fourteenth degree, but must be held to extend further so long as the relationship can be traced."[5]

2288. The samanodaks thus comprise the following relations:—

(1) The seven descendants of the propositus, from the seventh to the thirteenth degree (=7).

(2) The seven ascendants of the owner, from the seventh to the thirteenth degree (=7).

(3) The seven descendants from the seventh to the thirteenth degree in each of the 6 collateral lines of the owner (=6×7=42).

(4) The 13 descendants in each of the collateral lines of the 7 ascendants, who are up in the line from the seventh to the thirteenth degree from the owner (=7 ×13=91).

(Total=147.)

2289. All samanodaks inherit in the order of propinquity,[6] one related in the seventh degree excluding one related in the eighth degree, and so on. In one case the samanodaks were related as shown in the pedigree.

One Tulsi was the widow of G, and the question was who were her next reversioners, whether P, Q, R and S on the one side or J on the other. It was held that P, Q, R and S were nearer in degree as regards propinquity than J, in that while they were related to G through his grandfather, J was only related to him through his great-grandfather, and could not, therefore, be preferred to them.[7]

No. 47:43 I.C. 560; contra in Rama Rao v. Kuttiya. 40 M. 654 (Relationship should not be extended beyond the 14th degree).

(1) Manu, V-60.

(2) Mit., II-V-6.

(3) Rama Row v. Kuttiya, 40 M. 654 (657-659); Narain v. Chandihin, 9 A. 467.

(4) So quoted in Mayukh, IV-8, (Mandlik p. 82).

(5) Devkore v. Amritram, 10 B. 372 (380), followed in Ram Baran v. Kamla Prasad, 32 A. 594; Hira Singh v. Vir Singh, (1918) P.R. No. 47: 43 I.C. 460; Cf. Kaika Pershad v. Mathura Parshad, 30 A. 510 P.C. Sarv. Inh., (2nd Ed.), 569.

(6) Manu, IX-187, cited in Mit. II-III-3.

(7) Uman Prasad v. Debi Prasad, 2 A.L.J. 705. See the table of succession in Sarv. Inh., 656.

2290. The order of succession amongst samanodaks is as follows:—

Failing all gotraj sapindas, the inheritance passes to what are called the samanodaks, who are all agnates beyond the degree of a sapinda.

The order of succession amongst the samanodaks appears to be governed by two principles, namely:—

(1) The descendants of a nearer ancestor succeed in preference to those of a remoter ancestor.

(2) Amongst the descendants of the same ancestor the nearer excludes the more remote.

In the case of samanodaks, it is not possible to apply the test of religious efficacy.

2291. The following order of succession of samanodaks is given by Sir Henry Cunningham in his Digest of Hindu Law:—

(1) Seven generations from the grandson's grandson's son's son exclusive.

(2) Seven generations from the brother's son's son's son's son's son exclusive.

(3) Seven generations from the father's brother's brother's son's son's son's son's son exclusive.

(4) Seven generations from the father's father's brother's son's son's son's son's son exclusive.

(5) Seven generations from the father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son's son's son exclusive.

(6) Seven generations from the father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son's son's son's son's son.

(7) Seven generations from the father's father's father's father's father's father's son's son's son's son's son's son's son.

(8) Mother of father's father's father's father's father's father.

(9) Father's father's father's father's father's father's father.

(10) His male descendants up to thirteen generations.

(11) Mother of father's father's father's father's father's father's father.

(12) Father's father's father's father's father's father's father's father.

(13) His male descendants up to thirteen generations.

Similarly, up to thirteenth grandfather exclusive.

For all practical purposes this marks the extreme verge of provable samanodak relationship, and the Privy Council regard it as the legal limit.[1] And so does the Dayabhag.

---

(1) Atmaram v. Baji Rao, (1935) P.C. 57; Rama Row v. Kuttiya, 40 M. 654; contra in Devkore v. Amrit Ram, 10 B. 372; Ram Ratan v. Kamla Prasad, 32 A. 594 (in which, however, the contra held in Narain v. Chandihin, 9 A. 467, was overlooked); Hira Singh v. Vir Singh, (1918) P.R. No. 47: 43 I.C. 460.

III. Bandhus.

Heritable Bandhus.

324. (1) All bandhus do not inherit, but only those who are related to the propositus within five[1] degrees of the common ancestor or (within five or seven degrees of the common ancestor on the mother's or the father's side of the claimant respectively).[2]

(2) The deceased owner and the bandhu claiming the heritable right must be sapindas of each other, either through themselves or through their father and mother.[3]

2292. Analogous Law.—The following texts mention the heritable bandhus:—

Mitakshara.—"1. On failure of gotraj as the bandhus are heirs. Bandhus are of three kinds: (i) those related to the person himself, (ii) to his father or (iii) to his mother, as is declared by the following text: 'The sons of his own father's sister, the sons of his own mother's sister and the sons of his own maternal uncle, must be considered as his own cognate kindred. The sons of his father's paternal aunt, the sons of his father's maternal aunt, and the sons of his father's maternal uncle, must be deemed his father's cognate kindred. The sons of his mother's paternal aunt, the sons of his mother's maternal aunt and the sons of his mother's maternal uncles must be reckoned his mother's cognate kindred.'

"2. Here by reason of near affinity, the atma bandhus are his successors in the first instance; on failure of them his pitri bandhus, or if there be none, his matri bandhus. This must be understood to be the order of succession here intended."[4]

Two questions arise in a case of bandhu succession: First, Is the claimant a bandhu? and secondly, if so, is he the nearest bandhu? These two questions are not solved by any text in the Mitakshara, which contains a meagre reference to them.

2293. The fact is that the law of bandhu succession is of later growth. Manu does not mention bandhus among the heirs at all. They were for the first time mentioned by Yadnyavalkya who provided that they should offer pindas even to the manes on the maternal side.[5] The pinda was offered to the three ascendants of the mother but no lepa and no water were offered to the higher ascendants as in the case of agnatic sapindas. The right of inheritance thus became limited to five degrees. Both Manu and Yadnyavalkya made succession dependent upon these offerings. As such, they laid down the rule which is still the primary rule of succession under the Dayabhag system. But by the time the Mitakshara was composed (§ 129) the right of inheritance elsewhere became more dependent upon consanguinity than upon the right to offer funeral oblations, which consequently receded into the background, but was not wholly ignored. The Mitakshara only enumerated nine Bandhus classified into three classes, which the Viramitroday (§ 142) enlarged by the

---

(1) Ramchandra v. Vinayak, 42 C. 384 (420) P.C.; Gajadhar v. Gauri Shankar, 54 A. 698 F.B.

(2) Kesar Singh v. S. S., 49 M. 652 (664, 665, 682, 689).

(3) Mit., II-II-4; Mayukh, IV-VIII-13; Ramachandra v. Vinayak, 42 C. 384 (420) P.C.; Adit Narayan v. Mahabir, 48 I.A. 86: (1921) P.C. 53.

(4) Mit., II-VI-1, 2.

(5) Yad. I-X-242 (Mandlik) 190.

inclusion of maternal uncle.[1] It held the Mitakshara enumeration as merely illustrative and not exhaustive, and as already remarked, its view was accepted by the Privy Council.[2] This led to the inclusion of other heirs with the result that their list now comprises no less than 123 relations.

2294. But the multiplication of bandhus naturally gave rise to the question as to their relative preference and rules became necessary to ascertain their right and their respective priority. Of these, those stated in the section are generally accepted. But as it was to be expected, the courts being left with scanty guidance from the texts and without any assistance from the Legislature, which some Judges regret,[3] divergences became soon apparent, with the result that they have formulated other rules more or less supplementary which at times are not mutually reconcilable, as will be seen presently. It is proposed to examine first the general rules and then advert to the local rules.

2295. Bandhus.—With the exception of the daughter's son, who succeeds by virtue of a special text[4] all other bandhus take the last place in the order of succession, which, as already remarked, first falls on the gotraj sapindas, then on the samanodaks and lastly on bandhus who cannot inherit so long as there is a sapinda or a samanodak in existence.[5] As such, the samanodak, however remote, even in the thirteenth degree, will succeed, in preference to the deceased sister's son, who is a bandhu.[6]

The term "bandhu" has already been defined. (S. 312). A bandhu is a cognate sapinda, that is to say, one related through a female, not more than five degrees removed from the propositus or the common ancestor.[7] The bandhus are, therefore, also called bhinna gotra sapindas. A person is a bandhu if he can show that he is related to the deceased through a female and that he is his sapinda. There must be at least one female between the propositus and the bandhu, and in the case of bandhus ex parte paterna, there cannot be more than two females between them.[8]

2296. On the authority of an anonymous[9] text, the Mitakshara divides bandhus into three clauses:—

(1) Atma Bandhus comprising:—

(1) Father's sister's son.[10]

(1) III-VII-5.

(2) Girdhari Lall v. Bengal Government, 12 M.I.A. 448 (457).

(3) Subramania v. Ranganath, 44 M. 114 (120), reversed on the merits O.A. Vedachela v. Subramania, ib., 753.

(4) Mit., II-II-6; Mayukh, IV-VIII. 13; Viv. Chint. (Tagore), 294; Srikrishna, XI-II-28.

(5) Mit., II-V-1; Jeebnath v. Court of Wards, 23 W.R. 409 P.C.; Ram Singh v. Ugur Singh, 13 M.I.A. 373; Narain v. Chandi Din, 9 A. 467; Dindayi v. Bhatan Lall, 11 W.R. 300.

(6) Rani v. Khogendra, 31 C. 871 (882) P. C. (Mithila case); Kalika Prasad v. Mathura Prasad, 30 A. 510 P. C.; Dig Daji v. Bhatan, 11 W.R. 500.

(7) Ramchandra v. Vinayak, 42 M. 384 (420).

(8) Sarv. Inh. 689.

(9) Balam Bhat ascribed it to Vriddh Satatap, while it is quoted in the Mayukh as a text of Baudhayan.

(10) Which includes the grandson; Adit Narayan v. Mahabir, 60 I.C. 251: 19 A.L.J. 208: 48 I.A. 86 P.C., followed in Harihar Prasad v. Ram Daur, 47 A. 172 (178). The rule appears to the Punjab Hindus in the absence of custom; Tani v. Rokhi Ram, 1 L. 554. Father' sister's son is heir preferable to father's brother's daughter; Kenchava v. Girimallappa, 48 B. 569 P.C. Father's sister's son's son is heir preferable to grandmother's brother's son; Harihar Prasad v. Ram Daur, 47 A. 172.

(2) Mother's sister's son.[1]
(3) Mother's brother's son.[2]

(2) Pitri Bandhus comprising:—
(1) Father's father's sister's son.
(2) Father's mother's sister's son.[3]
(3) Father's mother's brother's son.

(3) Matri Bandhus comprising:—
(1) Mother's father's sister's son.[4]
(2) Mother's mother's sister's son.
(3) Mother's mother's brother's son.

This enumeration is merely illustrative and not exhaustive.[5] For example, it excludes the maternal uncle,[6] and the father's maternal uncle, though their sons are mentioned. So, again, the sister's son[7] and the sister's daughter's sons[8] are heritable bandhus, though neither of them is mentioned in the list. So, again, a mother's sister's son's son is an atma bandhu, though he is omitted from the above list. But none-the-less, he excludes the mother's paternal aunt's son, who is a matri bandhu and so mentioned.[9]

2297. In addition to the textual bandhus, other relations are classed as bandhus. Thus, in Bombay, the daughters of descendants and collaterals within seven degrees are bandhus,[10] who come in after the bandhus expressly named in the Mitakshara.[11] Such is the son's daughter,[12] daughter's daughter,[13] or a brother's daughter[14] or a sister's daughter,[15] which is questionable and has been questioned.[16]

In Madras, the son's daughter,[17] daughter's daughter,[18] brother's daughter,[19] father's sister[20] are bandhus. But a sister's daughter is not

(1) Harihar v. Ram Daur, 22 A.L.J. 1012: 82 I. C. 1032: (1925) A. 17. He has priority over brother's daughter; Balkrishna v. Ramkrishna, 22 Bom. L. R. 1442; also over father's brother's daughter; Kenchava v. Girimallappa, 48 B. 569 P.C.; also over maternal uncle; Venkatarama v. Boregowda, 2 My. L.J. 183.

(2) Mother's brother's son and mother's sister's son take equally; Rajappa v. Gangappa, 47 B. 48. Contra, the former excludes the latter, Rame Reddi v. Gangi Reddi, 48 M. 722 (733); Ramcharan Lal v. Rahim Baksh, 38 A. 416.

(3) Ram Sarup v. Nadir Mal, 14 I. C. (A.) 55.

(4) Preferred to the maternal uncle, on the ground that he is nearer to the stock or line, to which each claimant belongs; Venkatarama v. Bore Gowda, 2 My. L. J. 183.

(5) Girdhari Lal v. Government, 12 M.I.A. 448, explained in Ramachandra v. Vinayak, 42 C. 384 (416, 417) P.C.; Adit Narayan v. Mahabir, 60 I.C. (A.) 251 P.C.; Gajadhar v. Gouri Shankar, 54 A. 698 F.B.

(6) Girdhari Lal v. Government, 12 M.I.A. 448; Muthusami v. Simambedu, 19 M. 405 P.C.; Vedachala v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 P.C.

(7) Omrit v. Lukee, 10 W.R. 76 F. B.; Bishan Dayal v. Jaiseri, (1918) Pat. 323: 48 I.C. 746.

(8) Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand, 6 C. 119 F.B.

(9) Adit Narain v. Mahabir, 60 I.C. (A.) 251 P.C.

(10) W. & B., H.L., 137, 496, 498.

(11) Ib., 491.

(12) Venolal v. Parjaram, 20 B. 173.

(13) Gangaram v. Ballia, (1876) B. P. J. 31; Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai, 2 B. 388 (446), affirmed O.A. Lallubhai v. Cassibai, 5 B. 110 P.C.; Tuljaram v. Mathuradas, 5 B. 662 (672); Madhav Ram v. Dave, 21 B. 739.

(14) W. & B., H.L., (3rd Ed.), 497.

(15) Balambhat, cited in W. & B., H. L., (3rd Ed.), 130 Foot-note (C.).

(16) W. & B., H.L., (3rd Ed.), 476.

(17) Nallanna v. Ponnal, 14 M. 149.

(18) Ramappa v. Arumugah, 17 M. 182.

(19) Venkatasubramaniam v. Thayarammah, 21 M. 263; Kutti v. Radakristna, 8 M.H.C.R. 88; Ramappa v. Arumugath, 17 M. 182.

(20) Narasimma v. Mangammal, 12 M. 10; Chinnammal v. Venkatachella, 15 a bandhu in Madras[1] as she is in Bombay. Various reasons have been given in Bombay and Madras for letting in these relations. But the fact is that the woman's right had not developed when the Mitakshara was written, and its subsequent acceptance by the courts as the last word in Hindu Law has stereotyped the inequity which, however justified in a patriarchal age, is wholly unsuitable to modern times.

But though the Bombay and Madras courts have succeeded in letting in the female relations named, the courts in the other Mitakshara countries strictly follow the text of the Mitakshara, admitting none but those expressly mentioned therein as heirs.[2] As such, even a sister was excluded, because she was not expressly named.[3]

Clause (1).

2298. Who is a Heritable Bandhu.—The term "bandhu" cognate relation, and if his right of inheritance were not limited, his list would, as Vidnyaneshwar points out, end with the human race. Hence a limit had to be placed upon such succession. And the question is what is the limit? In the Acharkand of Mitakshara,[4] the limit imposed for the purpose of prohibiting marriage is the fifth and the seventh degree on the mother's and father's side[5] and the question is whether it is also the limit for the purpose of inheritance. In a case of a claim to succession to a person who was related to the propositus in the sixth degree on the mother's side from the common ancestor, this question was considered by the Privy Council who declared that the list of heritable bandhus ceased with the fifth degree,[6] but in a Madras case,[7] this case was distinguished on the ground that their observations, though general, were intended to be limited to the case before them, which, being a claim ex parte materna fell within the general rule given in the Acharkand of Mitakshara; that as such, it did not go into or negative a claim of a bandhu ex parte paterna seven degrees remote, which, according to the Madras High Court, is the true limit of such bandhu succession.[8] In a full bench case, the Allahabad High Court have held the Privy Council view as equally applicable to both classes of bandhus on the ground that after the fifth degree the second test of mutual sapindaship would be wanting.[9]

Clause (2).

2299. Mutual Sapindaship.—It has already been pointed out before, that in order that one person should inherit to another by reason of his sapinda relationship, it is not only necessary to show that he was the sapinda of the deceased, but also that the deceased was his sapinda. In other words, mutual sapindaship is essential to create a heritable right. In the case of agnatic kinsmen, mutuality is not insisted on, because it is always there. But in the case of bandhus the fact that one person is the sapinda of another, does not necessarily imply that the two are sapindas of each. Take, for instance, the following tree: P is the propositus, A is

---

M. 421; Venkatasubramaniam v. Thayarammah, 21 M. 263.

(1) Sundrammal v. Rangasami, 18 M. 193.

(2) Ram Dyal v. Magnee, 1 W. R. 227; Treelochun v. Raj Kishan, 5 W. R. 214; Mothooranath v. Eusuff, 14 W. R. 356; Jullessur v. Uggur, 9 C. 725; Balaji v. Maina, (1883) C.P. S. C., Pt. VIII, 102; Lalita v. Sita Ram, 6 C. P. L.R. 138; Lochan v. Babai, 5 N.L.R. 161.

(3) Jagat Narain v. Sheo Das, 5 A. 311; Jullessur v. Uggar, 9 C. 725; Lochan v. Babai, 5 N.L.R. 161.

(4) Mit., II-V-7.

(5) See § 2226.

(6) Ramchandra v. Vinayak, 42 C. 384 (420) P.C.

(7) Kesar Singh v. S. S. 54 M. 693 F.B.

(8) Kesar Singh v. S. S., 49 M. 652.

(9) Gajadhar Prasad v. Gouri Shankar, 54 A. 698 F.B.

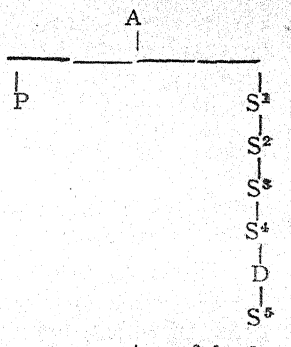
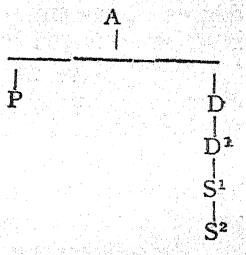
his father; S^1—S^4, S^5 are his male descendants, and D a female descendant. Now, Since the sapinda relationship reaches to the 6th degree in the father's line and 4th degree in the mother's line, it follows that P who is related to S^5 through his father A, and in the 6th degree of A (the common ancestor of both), is the sapinda of S^5. But S^5 being related to P through his mother D, is not his sapinda, because sapinda relationship in the maternal line does not extend beyond the 4th degree, i.e., beyond S^2; and in order to be P's sapinda, S^5 should have been within 4 degrees of A, the common ancestor of both A and S^5.



2300. Now, two persons may be related as sapindas to each other either through themselves or through their mother and father[1] Take, for instance, the following table for illustration. P is the propositus, A his father, D the daughter of A, D^1 the daughter of D, whose son is S^1 whose son is S^2. Now, P and S^1 are sapindas of each other, but not P and S^2 although S^2 is within six degrees from the common ancestor, yet S^2, not being the descendant of the line of maternal grandfather, either of S^2 or of his father S^1 or his mother, they are not sapindas to each other; but P being a sapinda of S^1, through his mother, they are sapindas of each other.



2301. Take, for instance, the following tree. Here the question is who is to inherit to P. Now, S^1 cannot; because he is related to P through the common ancestor, A, in the mother's line and being beyond the fifth degree is not his sapinda, though P, being related to him through A in the father's line, is his sapinda. Consequently, the test of mutuality failing, S^1 is not the heir of P, though his son S^2 is, because claiming as he does through his father S^1, he is allowed 7 degrees and as such, being the sapinda of A who is also his sapinda, he will inherit to P. This rule leads to the anomaly that while the father is excluded, the son is not. It is an anomaly, but an anomaly which necessarily follows from the rule approved by the Privy Council,[2] whose reference to the father's and the mother's line follows an archaic description, but overlooks the fact that a bandhu includes other relations in a line in which a female intervenes.

(1) Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand, 6 C. 119 (128) F.B.; Babulal v. Nanuk, 22 C. 339; Ramchandra v. Vinayak, 42 C. 384 (420) P.C.

(2) Ramchandra v. Vinayak, 42 C. 384 P.C.; Adit Narain v. Mahabir, 6 Pat.L. J. 140 P.C.; Shib Sohai v. Saraswati, 37 A. 583, explained in Ram Sia v. Bua, 47 A. 1013.

It need scarcely be added, that, in counting the degrees, law follows the canonical rule of counting both the heirs and the propositus or the common ancestor, so that if these are excluded, the intervening relations would be reduced to 5 and 3 respectively.

Order of succession amongst Bandhus.

325. The order of succession among bandhus is subject to the following rules:—

(1) Bandhus take in the following order:—(1) atma bandhus; (2) pitri bandhus and (3) matri bandhus.[1]

(2) Of bandhus of the same class, where both are expressly mentioned in the Mitakshara, the order of preference is according to the order in which they are mentioned therein;[2]

(3) Bandhus in a nearer line exclude those of a line more remote, and a nearer bandhu excludes a remoter bandhu in the same line;[3]

(4) Other conditions being equal, amongst bandhus of the same degree of descent from a common ancestor, a bandhu of the whole blood is to be preferred to one of the half blood.[4]

(5) Save as provided in clause (4), among bandhus of the same class, propinquity to the propositus is measured by their efficacy in conferring spiritual benefit on him;[5]

(6) As between bandhus of the same class and degree, a male is to be preferred to a female; and a bandhu descended through a male is to be preferred to one descended through a female;[6]

This clause applies only to Bombay,[7] Berar and Madras.

Explanation.—(1) A bandhu ex parte paterna is not to be preferred to a bandhu ex parte materna when the latter is nearer in degree in the sense that the oblations offered by the former are more efficacious than those offered by the latter.

Explanation (2) : to clauses (2) and (7).—Bandhus are said to belong to the same class when they are all atma bandhus, pitri bandhus or matri bandhus. They are of the same degree when they are all equally related to the propositus either directly to him or through a common ancestor.[8]

2302. Analogous Law.—Having once established the sapinda, relationship as provided, in the last section we have next to select out the

(1) Mit., II-VI-2, followed in Saguna v. Sadashiv, 26 B. 710 (715).

(2) Ram Dyal v. Magnee, 1 W.R 227; Trilocan v. Raja Kishan, 5 W. R 214; Mothooranath v. Eusuff, 14 W. R. 356; Jullesur v. Uggur, 9 C. 725; Balaji v. Maina, (1883) C. P. S. C., Pt. VIII, 102; Lalita v. Sitaram, 6 C. P.L.R. 138; Lochan v. Babai, 5 N.L R. 161.

(3) Narasamma v. Mangamma, 13 M. 10; Kedachala v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 P.C.; Kenchava v. Girimallappa, 48 B. 569 (578, 579) P.C.; Balasubramanya v. Subbayya, (1938) P.C. 34; Muthusami v. Simambedu, 19 M. 405 (409) P.C. affirming O. A. Muthusami v. Muthukumarsami, 16 M. 23 (30); Kalimuthu v. Ammamuthu, 58 M. 238 (243).

(4) Jatindra Nath v. Nagendra Nath, 59 C. 576 P.C.; Muttuswami v. Muthukumaraswami, 16 M. 23, affirmed O.A. Muthuswami v. Simambedu, 19 M. 405 P.C., followed in Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 P.C.; Marudappa v. Collector, (1935) M. 1057.

(5) Jatindra Nath v. Nagendra Nath, 59 C. 576 P.C.; Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 P.C.; approving Muthusami v. Simambedu, 16 M. 23 (30).

(6) Muthuswami v. Simambedu, 19 M. 405; Ganga Sahai v. Kesri, 37 A. 576 P. C.; Jatindra Nath v. Nagendra Nath, 59 C. 576 P.C.

(7) Vithalrao v. Ramrao, 24 B. 317; Shanker v. Kashinath, 51 B. 194 F.B.

(8) Kenchava v. Girimallappa, 48 B. 569 (578, 579) P.C.; Ramcharanlal v. Rahim Baksh, 38 A. 416; Rami Reddi v. Gangi Reddi, 48 M. 722 (contra Appandai v. Bagubali, 33 M. 439 dissented from).

nearest sapinda, that is to say, the heir, between whom and the deceased there must be closest community of blood. Now, how is this to be determined? The following text offers a solution:—

Mitakshara.—"Here, by reason of near affinity, the bandhus of the deceased himself are his successors in the first instance; on failure of them, his father's bandhus; or, if there be none, his mother's bandhus. This must be understood to be the order of succession here intended."[1]

2303. Classification of Bandhus.—The Mitakshara divides bandhus into three classes: those (1) related to the person himself,—atma bandhus, (2) to his father,—pitri bandhus, or (3) to his mother,—matri bandhus. The right of succession among these classes is governed by the propinquity of the class: no pitri bandhu succeeds until the class of atma bandhus is exhausted, and no matri bandhu succeeds until the classes of atma bandhus and pitri bandhus are exhausted[2] This rule—in preferring the nearer to the more remote—is not dependent on individual propinquity or on the efficacy of offerings to a deceased person. As such, the mother's brother, who is an atma bandhu, is entitled to succeed in preference to the father's father's sister's son, who is a pitri bandhu[3] and the mother's father's daughter's son's son, being an atma bandhu, is to be preferred to the mother's father's daughter's son, who is a matri bandhu.[4]

Clause (1).

2304. The tern "atma bandhu" is sub-divided into three sub-divisions: (i) descendants of the propositus, e.g., son's daughter's son, daughter's son's son, and daughter's daughter's son of whom the second is entitled to preference over the third.[5] It is only, after this sub-division of the person's own descendants are exhausted that we turn to (ii) the father's descendants, and (iii) the descendants of the grand-father. It is only after the exhaustion of those three sub-divisions of atma bandhus that succession goes to the pitri bandhus, and failing these to the matri bandhus.[6]

So far as the above text goes, it is conclusive. But the question still remains whether this order of precedence was limited only to the bandhus named in the Mitakshara or applies equally to others not therein named. That it must apply to all is clear from the fact that it is now settled that the Mitakshara list is merely illustrative, and not exhaustive, from which it follows, and it has been so held, that the same rule as to propinquity should be applied in testing the claim of all bandhus.[7] At one time, considerations of religious efficacy were held to determine the preference,[8] but this is not the sole test, for as stated in the Virmitro-

(1) II-VI-2; Saguna v. Sadashiv, 26 B. 710 (715); Adit Narain v. Mahabir, 60 I.C. (A.) 251 (254) P.C.

(2) Mit., II-VI-2, cited ante § 2723; Adit Narayan v. Mahabir, 48 I.A. 86 : 60 I.C. 251 (254) P.C.; Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 (763) P.C.; followed in Kenchava v. Girimallappa, 48 B. 569 (578) P.C.; Muthusami v. Simambedu, 19 M. 405 P.C.; affirming O.A. Muttusami v. Muttukumarasami, 16 M. 23 (30); Krishna Ayyangar v. Venkatarama, 29 M. 115; Chaman Lal v. Doshi Ganesh, 28 B. 453.

(3) Muthusami v. Simambedu, 19 M. 405 P.C.

(4) Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 (763) P.C.

(5) Tirumalachariar v. Andalamma, 30 M. 406.

(6) Kalimuthu v. Ammamuthu, 58 M. 238 (249).

(7) Muthusami v. Muthukumaraswami, 16 M. 23, affirmed O.A. Muthusami v. Simambedu, 19 M. 405 (410) P.C.; Appandai v. Bagubali, 33 M. 439 (443); Adit Narain v. Mahabir, 60 I.C. (A.) 251 P.C.; Vedachala v. Subramania, 41 M. 753 P.C.

(8) Ram Singh v. Ugar Singh, 13 M. I.A. 373 (392); Suba Singh v. Sarafraz, 19 A. 215 (223, 224, 226, 231); Muttu- daya, "nearness of propinquity is alone the criterion of succession,"[1] but nearness is to be judged by the test of spiritual efficacy.

Clause (2).

2305. Bandhus expressly mentioned in the Mitakshara.—It was also at one time suggested that the bandhus enumerated in the Mitakshara or by Satatap must be given preference over others; but this view, too, has been negatived by the courts, in which the contest lay between the sister's son[2] and the maternal uncle,[3] against the mother's sister's son. "But the introduction of the maternal uncle and the sister's son into a list of bandhus. so as to effect a breach in the order of persons named, is no reason for repudiating the notion of order amongst the persons inter se who have been named."[4] But this view was dissented from in a later case,[5] and must now be held to have been impliedly overruled by the Privy Council.[6] In one case, the contest lay between the mother's brother's son and the mother's sister's son and the court held the former entitled to preference on account of his superior spiritual efficacy, though, in Mitakshara, the mother's sister's son is mentioned before the mother's brother's son. And the Privy Council have held a maternal uncle (not even named in the Mitakshara) to be preferred to the paternal aunt's son (who has the first place among pitri bandhus there).

When Two Females Intervene.

2306. Another ground of preference equally unsupported by the texts is founded upon the fact that "the general preference exhibited by the Mitakshara for the male over the female line. . . . may legitimately be extended so as to prefer, all other considerations being equal, that claimant between whom and the stem there intervenes only one female link, to that claimant who is separated from the stem by two such links."[7] But this view has been dissented from elsewhere.[8] It may then be stated that apart from these divergences, the rule stated in the clause remains, and is all that has received the consensus of approval.

Clause (3).

2307. The Nearer Excludes the Mode Remote.—This clause merely repeats the often-quoted general rule of inheritance propounded by Manu, and repeated by all commentators, viz., "To the nearest sapinda the inheritance next belongs."[9] The question is how the nearness of the sapinda to the deceased is to be determined. A large number of rules have been suggested (i) that nearness should be determined by religious efficacy; (ii) that it should be determined by nearness is degree; but if both are equal in sami v. Muttukumara, 16 M. 23 (30); Balusami v. Narayana, 20 M. 342 (348).

---

(1) Virmitrodaya p. 194, cited and followed in Appandai v. Bagubali, 33 M. 439 (445); Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai, 2 B. 388, approved in Ramchand v. Vinayak, 42 C. 384 (409) P.C.; Gauri Shankar v. Manrai, (1919) Pat. 441.

(2) Gunesh v. Nil Komul, 22 W.R. 264.

(3) Mohandas v. Krishnabai, 5 B. 597.

(4) Appandai v. Bagubali, 33 M. 439 (445, 446).

(5) Rami Reddi v. Gangi Reddi, 42 M. 722 (738); but held in Rajeppa v. Gangappa, 47 B. 48 that they both take equally; sed quaere.

(6) Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 (761, 762) P.C.; overruling O.A. contra in Subramania v. Ranganathan. 44 M. 114.

(7) Tirumalachariar v. Andal, 30 M. 406 (407); Appandai v. Bagubali, 33 M. 439 (445).

(8) Ramcharan v. Rahim Baksh, 38 A. 416 (424); Uma Shankar v. Nageswari, (1919) Pat. 162 (192) F.B.

(9) Manu, IX-187.

degree, then it is permissible to apply the other test of religious efficacy.[1] As previously remarked, the second test has now received the sanction of the Privy Council and must be the sole test. Now, nearness in degree may arise (i) from the fact that the claimant is so mentioned in the texts, or (ii) because of his proximity to the common ancestor or (iii) because of his superior spiritual efficacy.[2]

Clause (4).

2308. Whole blood and Half-blood.—The rule as to the preference of the whole to the half bloods applicable to sapindas, already explained (P) apply equally to bandhus.[3]

Clause (5).

2309. Spiritual Efficacy.—Spiritual efficacy is out of question in the case of female bandhus, who inherit in Bombay and Madras.[4] Elsewhere, female bandhus are excluded. Again, it has no application to clause (1), under which the three classes of bandhus rank one after the other without advertence to their spiritual efficacy. (§ 2303.) It is a test which the Privy Council have always regarded as a ground admissible to determine preferential claims as between bandhus of the same class.[5] As far back as 1870, their Lordships considered this test admissible in determining the question of priority. Their Lordships said: "Where a question of preference arises, as preference is founded on superior efficacy of oblations, the principle must be applied to the solution of the difficulty."[6] Still, the doctrine of spiritual efficacy has only a secondary place in the Mitakshara succession and is by no means as well-developed as in the Dayabhag, under which it is the primary test in every case of succession. Even as such, it is not an infalliable guide, since even some of the textual pitri bandhus and matri bandhus are in no way connected by funeral oblation to the propositus, and so are some of the atma bandhus, e.g., the maternal uncle's son.[7] But nevertheless, it is a test which the courts are loath, to discard, though it is only resorted to when other tests fail. In one case, the true view was said to be that, while nearness of blood determines the heritable right, the doctrine of spiritual efficacy determines the preferential right.[8]

---

(1) Virmitroday, II-1, 23; III-1, 11; Sarv. Inh. (1882), 726; Rami Reddy v. Ganga Reddi, 48 M. 722.

(2) Vedachala v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 P.C.; Marudappa v. Collector, (1935) M. 1017 (1029).

(3) Jatindranath v. Nagendranath, 59 C. 576 (579) P.C.

(4) Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai, 2 B. 388 (429), O.A. Lallubhai v. Casibai, 5 B. 110 P.C.

(5) Virmitroday, II-I-23; III-II, § 2; Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 P.C.; Buddha Singh v. Lalta Singh, 37 A. 604 (613) P.C.; (case of Gotrajas); Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhya Ujur Singh, 13 M.I.A. 373 (392); Soorendronath Roy v. Heeromonee, 12 M.I.A. 81 (96); Rami Reddi v. Gangi Reddi, 48 M. 722 (734, 737); Sakharam v. Balkrishna, 49 B. 739 (756); Uma Shankar v. Nageswari, 3 Pat.L.J. 663 : 48 I.C. 625 (650, 651) F.B.; Omrit Koomaree v. Luckhe Narain, 2 B.L.R. 28 F.B. : 10 W.R. 76 F.B.; Gunesh Chunder v. Kamul Roy, 22 W.R. 264; Janki v. Nand Ram, 11 A. 194 F.B.; Suba Singh v. Sarafraz Kunwar, 19 A. 215 F.B.; Mohan Das v. Krishnabai, 5 B. 597; Chelikani v. Rajah Suraneni, 6 M. H. C .R. 278 (285, 291); Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada, 5 M. 241 (250); Muttusami v. Muttukumarasami, 16 M. 23 (30), affirmed O.A. Muthusami v. Simambedu, 19 M. 405 P.C.; contra in Balusami v. Narayana, 20 M. 343; Appandai v. Bagubali, 33 M. 439, must now be held overruled.

(6) Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhya Ugur Singh, 13 M.I.A. 373 (392).

(7) Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 P.C.

(8) Uma Shankar v. Nageswari, 3 Pat. L. J. 663 : 48 I.C. 625 (633 650) F.B.

Clause (6).

2310. This clause states two rules: (i) that as between bandhus of the same class and degree, a male is to be preferred to a female; and (ii) that a bandhu descended through a male is to be preferred to one descended through a female. The first rule has no application outside the two Southern presidencies, where female bandhus can inherit. But the rule has received the imprimatur of the Privy Council,[1] who held the paternal aunt's son preferable to the paternal uncle's daughter, and the Madras High Court has, on the same ground, held the mother's brother preferable to the father's sister[2] and a sister's son to a sister,[3] on the ground that, except the females specially mentioned in the Mitakshara, male heirs are entitled to priority over a female bandhu, even though nearer in degree.[4] The Bombay High Court has decided two cases, in one of which it followed this view, while in another it held the contrary. In the earlier case, it held the father's half-sister entitled to priority over the maternal uncle, and dissented from the Madras case on the ground that it recognized no females who are not mentioned in special texts and on the further ground that the order of precedence underlying the classification of the three classes of atma bandhus, pitri bandhus and matri bandhus, who are specially enumerated by the Mitakshara, is that the paternal relations should come before the maternal relations. The same principle of priority regulates the order in which the members of each group succeed as heirs,[5] but the very contrary was laid down in a later case in a competition between a mother's sister's son and a brother's daughter, where the former was held entitled to preference, on the ground that a male bandhu excluded a female bandhu, though the latter is nearer in degree.[6] In so holding, the court followed the Madras court but the earlier contrary decision was neither cited nor referred to. But in a later case, the same learned Judge who had decided the previous case, while regretting that he had decided that case without reference to the earlier case, still opined that that case could not have laid down that all female bandhus on the father's side were to be exhausted before the male bandhus on his mother's side could come in[7] He, therefore, held that in a contest between bandhus, both ex parte paterna and of the same degree, namely, the father's sister's and the father's brother's daughter, the former was entitled to preference. This decision was affirmed by the Privy Council,[8] who, however, noticed the conflict between the two decisions but left it to be settled by the High Court. The state of the case-law in Bombay is, then, a conflict between the two principles of preference: (a) that among bandhus, the male is to be preferred to the female, even though the latter is nearer in degree,[9] and (b) that the paternal bandhus have prior and paramount claim over maternal bandhus irrespective of their sex.[10]

---

(1) Kenchava v. Girimalappa, 48 B. 569 P.C.

(2) Narasimma v. Mangammal, 13 M. 10; contra in Saguna v. Sadashiv, 26 B. 710.

(3) Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada 5 M. 241.

(4) Rajah Venkata v. Raja Suraneni. 31 M. 321.

(5) Saguna v. Sadashiv, 26 B. 710 (715).

(6) Balkrishna v. Ramkrishna, 45 B. 353, following Rajah Venkata v. Raja Suraneni, 31 M. 321.

(7) Girimallappa v. Kenchava, 45 B. 768 (777).

(8) Kenchava v. Girimallappa, 48 B. 569 (578, 579) P.C.

(9) Balkrishna v. Ramkrishna, 45 B. 353.

(10) Saguna v. Sadashiv, 26 B. 710.

2311. As between bandhus of the same class, that is, where both the claimants are atma bandhus, pitri bandhus or matri bandhus, a question has arisen whether bandhus ex parte paterna (or related through the father) are to be preferred to those ex parte materna (or related through the mother). It was held by some cases of the Madras and Bombay High Courts that, as between bandhus of the same class, the bandhus related through the propositus's father were, though remoter in degree, to be preferred to those related to him through his mother, though nearer to him in degree.[1] As such, the court preferred the father's father's son's daughter's son to the mother's father's deaughter's son, on the ground that the one was related to the deceased through his father, while the latter was not. In another case, it held the deceased's (V's) sister's son (D) as entitled to preference over his mother's sister's son (P), because, though they were both atma bandhus, and it was admitted that D's capacity to confer religious benefit upon the propositus decidedly preponderated, still D must be preferred to P, because P traced his right through V's maternal grandfather, which D traced it to a nearer ancestor, namely V's father.[2] For the same reason, the father's half-sister was held to have priority over the mother's brother.[3] This question came up for decision before the Privy Council in a contest between the maternal uncle (P) and the paternal aunt's son (D), both atma bandhus, but one was related to the deceased through his paternal grandfather, while the other was related through his maternal grandfather, but the latter was preferred, because he offered pindas to his father and grandfather, to whom the deceased was also bound to offer pindas. The deceased thus shared the merit resulting from D's oblations to the manes of his ancestors, whereas P, as the father's sister's son, offered no pindas to the deceased's ancestors.[4]

Explanation (1).

2312. Other Local Rules.—While the general rules stated in the section are generally applicable to the entire Mitakshara country, local variations have set in, and as both the High Courts of Bombay and Madras admit other bandhus including females, they have formulated some rules of their own for their own guidance, which may be briefly referred to here. Their result will be seen in the ensuing lists of bandhus where comments thereon have been made, where necessary.

2313. The Bombay High Court holds that among bandhus of the same class, the one nearer in degree is entitled to preference.[5] This rule was followed by the majority of a full bench of the Patna High Court but is likely to create difficulties. In this case, the full bench held the maternal uncle preferabe to the sister's daughter's son, on the ground that the former was only two degrees removed from the common ancestor (the maternal grandfather), while the latter was four degrees removed from the common ancestor (from the propositus's) father.[6] While the decision itself is unexceptionable, the reasons by which it was supported by Mallik and Bombay rules.

(1) Sundarammal v. Rangasami, 18 M. 193 (199) (per Muttusami Ayyar and Best, JJ.)

(2) Balusami v. Narayana, 20 M. 342 (348).

(3) Saguna v. Sadashiv, 26 B. 710 (715).

(4) Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 122 753 (767) P.C., reversing O.A. Subramania v. Ranga, 44 M. 114.

(5) Dattatraya v. Gangabai, 46 B. 541.

(6) Uma Shanker v. Nageswari, 3 Pat. L.J. 663: 48 I.C. 625 (656); contra in Saguna v. Sadashiv, 26 B. 710; Madho v. Janki, 12 N.L.R. 148: 36 I. C. 514.

Jwala Prasad, JJ., may at times lead to a contretemps, as in a competition, say, between a father's grandson's daughter's son and a grandfather's daughter's daughter's son when, according to the full bench, the latter, who is four degrees removed from the common ancestor, should be preferred to the former, who is five degrees removed, and yet the former is in the direct line of descent from the propositus, and in the latter's line two females intervene which, it was admitted, is a disability. In fact, it is a rule accepted by both the Madras and the Allahabad High Court,[1] though in Bombay, it was held to have been stated "somewhat too broadly."[2] Nevertheless, the court admits that, of two bandhus equally removed from the propositus, the one in the direct line of descent is to preferred to another in the collateral line. As such, the son's daughter's son is preferable to the father's daughter's daughter. Where the two bandhus are of the same class and degree, they are entitled to take equally. Such is the case of the mother's brother's son and the mother's sister's son who were held to share the inheritance equally,[3] but it is submitted in this case, by reason of his spiritual efficacy, the former would exclude the latter (Clause 5).

Madras Rules.

2314. In Madras, it has been held that among bandhus of the same class, the nearer line excludes the more remote. As such, the father, being a nearer ancestor than the mother's father, a descendant of the father, however remote, is to be preferred to a descendant of the mother's father, howsoever near. Consequently, the father's daughter's grandson is preferable to the mother's father's daughter's son, though the former is four degrees removed, while the latter is only three degrees removed from the common ancestor. Both are atma bandhus, and if the test of spiritual benefit is applied, the latter should have preference.[4]

The rule is based on no text, but is deduced from the order of succession given in the Mitakshara as to certain named agnates, but, even in that connection, it is not of general application, as witness the case of the grandson's grandson, who is excluded by collateral descendants within three degrees in the line of the father and the grandfather.

It has been held in some cases in Madras, that in a contest between a male bandhu ex parte materna and a female bandhu ex parte paterna, the latter is entitled to preference.[5] Another rule was formulated in some cases of that court that persons connected through the father are to be preferred to those connected through the mother, and that persons in a line with one female should be preferred to one where two females intervene. So, in a case, the preference of a daughter's son to a daughter's daughter's son was justified on the following ground: "It is legitimate to prefer that claimant, between whom and the stem there

---

(1) Tirumalachariar v. Andalammal, 30 M. 406; Appandai v. Bagubali, 33 M. 430 (445); Ramcharan v. Rahim Baksh, 38 A. 416 (424).

(2) Rajeppa v. Gangappa, 47 B. 48 (53, 54).

(3) Rajeppa v. Gangappa, 47 B. 48 (77), but see Cl. (5); Vedachala v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 P. C.; Ramcharan v. Rahim Baksh, 38 A. 436; Rama Reddi v. Gangi Reddi, 48 M. 722, dissenting from Appandai v. Bagubali, 33 M. 439.

(4) Balusami v. Narayana, 20 M. 342 (348); Krishna v. Venkatarama, 29 M. 115.

(5) Sundaramma v. Rangasami, 18 M. 193; Balusami v. Narayana, 20 M. 342; Subramania v. Ranganatha, 44 M. 141; reversed O. A. Vedachela v. Subramania, ib., p. 753 P.C.; Uma Shankar v. Nageswari, 3 Pat. L. J. 663: 48 I.C. 625 (650) F.B.

intervenes one female link, to that claimant who is separated from the stem by two such links.''[1] But that this is not an invariable rule, since, in another case, the mother's sister's son was preferred to the maternal uncle's son, on the ground that he was mentioned before the latter in the Mitakshara[2] a reason which has been held to be unsound, and a case which has since been overruled.

2315. These clauses deal with the textual proximity and the rules arising therefrom. They are intended to be guides to natural proximity. But in some cases this proximity must, it is said, follow the analogy of the former.[3] Reasons, have already been given why that view cannot be accepted. There then remains the sole test, viz., nearness of the line of the heir to the deceased in the case of bandhus other than those enumerated in the Mitakshara, who succeed in the order in which they are classed.[4] First come atma bandhus and then bandhus connected through the father are preferred to those connected through the mother.[5] Other bandhus obtain no fictitious priority by any analogy drawn therefrom, but follow the rule of propinquity judged by the combined tests laid down in this section.

CLASSIFIED ORDER OF HERITABLE BANDHUS.

I. ATMA BANDHUS.

Sub-division of Atma-Bandhus.

2316. Even amongst bandhus a ground for preference in se is said to be found in two sub-divisions into which they are grouped, viz., (1) those related through the daughters of the family, and (2) those related through the mother of the deceased. Of these, the former are said to exclude the latter and among them, preference is given to the descendants of the deceased. But this further classification is deprecated,[6] and the better course held to be is to prefer one who is nearer in degree to the common ancestor.[7] The Mitakshara defines the term ''atma bandhu'' as comprising the sons of a man's own father's sister, the sons of his own mother's sister and the sons of his own maternal uncle or, in short, the sons of his father's sister or those of the sister or brother of the mother. These are held to be merely illustrative of the kind of relations intended. Even as illustrations, they are not those of the nearest of kin, and the courts have supplemented that list by declaring many more relations as included in this class.

---

(1) Tirumalachariar v. Andalammal, 30 M. 406; Ramcharan v. Rahim Baksh, 38 A. 416 (421-424); Uma Shankar v. Nageswari, 3 Pat. L.J. 663: 48 I. C. 625 (650) F.B.

(2) Appandai v. Ragubali, 33 M. 439 dissented from in Ramcharan v. Rahim Baksh, 38 A. 416 (421-424), overruled in Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 P. C.

(3) Thirumalachariar v. Andal, 30 M. 406 (407); Krishnaswami v. Ragubali 33 M. 439 (445); contra in Ramcharan v. Rahim Baksh, 89 A. 416 (424); Uma Shankar v. Nageshwar, (1919) Pat. 162 (192) F.B.; Parat v. Mehta, 19 B. 631 (634); Umaid Bahadur v. Udoichand, 6 C. 119; Venkatagiri v. Chandra, 23 M. 123; Krishna v. Venkatarama, 29 M. 115.

(4) Muttusami v. Muttukumaraswami, 16 M. 23, affirmed O. A. Muthusami v. Simambedu, 19 M. 405 P.C., followed in Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 P.C.

(5) Saguna v. Sadashiv, 26 B. 710 (715); Kenchava v. Girimallappa, 48 B. 569 (578) P. C.

(6) Uma Shankar v. Nageswari, (1919) Pat. 162 (173) F.B.

(7) Adit Narayan v. Mahabir, 1 Pat. L.J. 324; Uma Shankar v. Nageswari, (1919) Pat. 162 (173) F.B.; Ramcharan v. Rahim Baksh, 38 A. 416 (425); Madho v. Jonki, 12 N.L.R. 148.

(1) The son's daughter's son.[1]

A son's daughter is entitled to inherit her grandfather's estate as a bandhu,[2] though she cannot inherit in preference to the father's sister's son, because he is a bandhu expressly mentioned in the Mitakshara.[3] A son's daughter's son is entitled to succeed in preference to the sister's daughter, and the latter is preferred to the sister's son's son.[4] The Madras court, in one case, enunciated "another fundamental principle of the law" that among bandhus, those who are ex parte paterna were entitled to preference over bandhus ex parte materna.[5] But the Privy Council have held that there is no foundation for this principle, and, consequently, they decreed the claim of the maternal uncle to succession in preference to the paternal aunt's son's son both on the ground of propinquity and religious efficacy.[6]

(2) The son's son's daughter's son.

(3) Sister's son,[7] which includes a stepsister's son.[8]

(2) Sister's Son.

2317. The sister's son has had a strenuous struggle to get admitted into the table of heirs. At first, he was ruled out as no heir at all,[9] since he was not specified in the list of heritable bandhus in the Mitakshara, which was taken to be exhaustive, and this view was even concurred in by the Privy Council,[10] but his claim was too strong to be ignored, and it was first conceded, almost simultaneously,[11] by a full bench decision of the Calcutta High Court[12] and by the Privy Council in 1868,[13] and since then in several cases.[14] In Madras, a sister's son's right succeed was held superior to that of a sister.[15] He was a nearer heir than the mother's sister's son,[16] the paternal uncle's daughter's son,[17] the father's uncle's daughter's son,[18] as also the sister's daughter's son.[19] He

(1) Natwar Lal v. Ranochand, 22 Bom.L.R. 71 : 55 I.C. 313 (preferred to sister's daughter); Dattatraya v. Ganga Bai, 44 B. 541.

(2) Nallana v. Ponnal, 14 M. 149; contra in Koomud v. Seetakanth, W.R. 75 (F.B.); Vithal v. Ganpath Rao, 16 C.P.L.R. 65.

(3) Nanhi v. Gouri, 28 A. 187.

(4) Dattatraya v. Ganga Bai, 24 Bom. L.R. 69.

(5) Balusami v. Narayana, 20 M. 342; Venkata v. Surenani, 31 M. 321.

(6) Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 P.C.

(7) Amrita v. Lakhi Narayan, 10 W. R. 76 F.B.; Chelikini v. Vencata, 6 M. H.C.R. 278; Srinivasa v. Rangasami, 2 M. 304; Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada, 5 M. 241; Naraini v. Chandi Din, 9 A. 467; Raghunath v. Munnon, 20 A. 191.

(8) Subharaya v. Kylasa, 15 M. 300; Mari v. Chinnammal, 8 M. 126.

(9) Johari v. Kylaso, 1 W.R. 74; Girdhari Lal v. Secretary of State, 4 W. R. 13; Deo v. Kuppu, 1 M.H.C.R. 85.

(10) Thakoorain v. Mohun Lall, 11 M. I.A. 386; Kurun Singh v. Tyzali, 14 M. I.A. 178.

(11) The Calcutta Full Bench decided on the 12th September, 1869 and the Privy Council on the 17th July, 1868.

(12) Omrit v. Luckee Narain, 10 W. R. 76 (88) F.B.

(13) Girdharilal v. Government, 10 W. R. 31 P.C.; Muthusami v. Muthu Kumarasami, 16 M. 23 (30); approved in Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 (767) P.C.

(14) Chelikani v. Raja Surenani, (1871) 6 M.H.C.R. 278; Srinivasa v. Rangasami, 2 M. 304 (306); Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvenkada, 5 M. 241; Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand, 6 C. 119 F.B.; Nearam v. Andaram, 35 C. L.J. 34: 64 I.C. 145; Naraini v. Chandi, 9 A. 467; Raghunath v. Munnan, 20 A. 191; Ram Baran v. Kamla, 7 A.L.J. 802: 6 I.C. 698; Uma Shankar v. Nageswari, (1919) Pat. 162 F.B.; Goormukh v. Goomanee, (1866) P.R. No. 30; Mohunee v. Mohunna, (1866) P.R. 35.

(15) Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada, 5 M. 241.

(16) Gauri Shankar v. Manraj, (1919) Pat. 441.

(17) Khargai v. Debi, 9 I.C. (A.) 339.

(18) Ib.

(19) Uma Shanker v. Nageswari, (1919) Pat. 162 F.B.

was, however, not so near as the paternal uncle's grandson, who being a gotraj sapinda, excluded the sister's son, who is only a bandhu,[1] and as such, he yields place to a samanadok, howsoever remote,[2] at least up to the thirteenth degree.[3] The sister's son includes a step-sister's son.[4] In a contest between a sister's son and the maternal uncle's son, the former was held to be nearer in degree to the propositus than the latter, and, therefore, entitled to exclude him.[5] A sister's son's son's son is no bandhu, because he and the propositus are not mutually related as sapindas, as the propositus is not connected with him either through his maternal grandfather's line or his father's maternal grandfather's line or his mother's maternal grandfather, line.[6]

While a sister's son is a heritable bandhu, the stepson of a stepsister of the deceased is not his heir in any case.[7]

(4) Brother's daughter's son.[8]

(5) Brother's sons daughter's son.

(6) Father's father's daughter's son.[9]

(7) Father's father's son's daughter's son.[10]

(8) Father's father's son's son's daughter's son.

Atma bandhus ex parte paterna to whom the deceased was a pitri bandhu.

(9) Daughter's son's son.[11]

(10) Son's daughter's son's son. Son's son's daughter's son's son.[12]

(11) Father's daughter's son's son.[13]

(12) Brother's daughter's son's son.

(13) Father's father's daughter's son.[14]

(14) Father's father's son's daughter's son's son.

---

(1) Annayya v. Sidya, 22 Bom.L.R. 1092: 59 I.C. 125; Bishen Dyal v. Jeisiri, (1918) Pat. 323: 48 I.C. 746.

(2) Ram Ratan v. Kamala Prasad, 32 A. 594.

(3) Rama Rao v. Kuttiya, 40 M. 654.

(4) Mari v. Chinnammal, 8 M. 126, explained in Subbaraya v. Kylasa, 15 M. 300 (301, 302); Muthusawmy v. Muttukumara, 16 M. 23 O.A. 19 M. 405 P. C., followed in Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 P.C.; Sreenarain v. Bhya Jha; 2 B.S.R. 29.

(5) Balusami v. Narayana, 20 M. 342. The other reason given in this case for preference, viz., that he was a Bhandhu ex parte paterna, and therefore entitled to preference over a bandhu ex parte materna, was disapproved in Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 P.C.

(6) Lowji v. Mithabai, 2 Bom.L.R. 842.

(7) Saminatha v. Angammal, 42 M. L.J. 4.

(8) Doorga v. Janaki Pershad, 18 W. R. 133.

(9) Tahaldai v. Gaya Pershad, 37 C. 214; Shamdai v. Birbhadra Prasad, 43 A. 463; Tani v. Rikhi Ram, 1 L. 554: 56 I.C. 742; Kenchava v. Girmalappa, 48 B. 569, affirming O.A. 45 B. 768; Sakharam v. Balkrishna, 49 B. 739; Jatindra Nath v. Nagendra Nath, 59 C. 576 P.C., (Father's half sister preferred to mother's sister's son, Mit. case) Gaddam v. Anam Hanuman, (1937) M. 967.

(10) Tirth Ram v. Kuhan Devi, 1 L. 588; Sujan Devi v. Jagir Mal, 1 L. 608; Sundrammal v. Rengasami, 18 M. 193.

(11) Sheobarat v. Bhagwati, 17 A. 523; Krishnayya v. Pichamma, 11 M. 287; Tirumalachariar v. Andal, 30 M. 406; Maharaja of Kolhapur v. Sundaram, 48 M. 1 (preferred to sister's grandson).

(12) Sarv. Inh. 714.

(13) Balusami v. Narayana, 20 M. 342.

(14) Sham Dei v. Birbhadra, 43 A. 463 (467) preferred to father's daughter's daughter's son; but in Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 953, a maternal uncle is held entitled to preference over father's father's daughter's son's son.

Atma bandhus ex parte paterna to whom the deceased was a Matri bandhu.

(15) Daughter's daughter's son.[1]

The daughter's daughter's son is recognized as a heritable bandhu in Upper India[2] and in Madras he is preferred to sister's son[3] though in the view of that court, a bandhu with one female in the line is preferred to a bandhu with two females in the line.[4] This view has been dissented from in Allahabad[5] and Patna.[6] But if the Madras view be sound, the daughter's son's son will take precedence over the daughter's daughter's son. In any view, the daughter's son's son has precedence, since the claims through the father, while the daughter's daughter's son claims through the mother.

(16) Son's daughter's daughter's son.

(17) Father's daughter's daughter's son.[7]

(18) Father's son's daughter's daughter's son.

(19) Grandfather's daughter's daughter's son.[8]

(20) Grandfather's son's daughter's daughter's son.

According to Dr. Bhattacharya and Professor Sarvadhikari, the following relations should come in next:—

(20-A) Great-grandfather's daughter's daughter's son.

(20-B) Great-grandfather's son's daughter's daughter's son.

(20-C) Great-great-grandfather's daughter's daughter's son.

(20-D) Great-great-grandfather's son's daughter's daughter's son.

2318. But in view of the preference given to a maternal uncle of half blood over a paternal aunt,[9] they cannot be classed amongst atma bandhus. But as a bandhu, a paternal uncle is entitled to succeed in preference to a maternal uncle's son[10] or to the paternal aunt's son's son both on the ground of propinquity and religious efficacy, in that he offered oblation to the father and the grandfather of the deceased, while the latter offered none,[11] and he is preferred to the father's sister by reason of the general preference given among bandhus to the male over female heirs,[12] though he yields precedence to the father's sister's son on account of his connection through the paternal grandfather, while the maternal uncle is connected only through his maternal grandfather, as also by the test of religious benefit to the propositus resulting from oblations offered

(1) Ajudhia v. Ram Sumer, 31 A. 454; Ramphal v. Panmati, 32 A. 640; Tirumalachariar v. Andalammal, 30 M. 406.

(2) Ajudhia v. Ramsumer, 31 A. 454; Ramphal v. Panmati, 32 A. 640.

(3) Kalimuthu v. Ammamuthu, 58 M. 238.

(4) Tirumalachariar v. Andal, 30 M. 604; Appandai v. Bagubali, 33 M. 439 (445).

(5) Ramcharan v. Rahim Bux, 38 A. 416.

(6) Uma Shankar v. Nageswari, (1919) Pat. 162 (173).

(7) Umaid Bahadur v. Udaichand, 6 C. 119 F.B.; Sham Dei v. Birbhadra, 43 A. 463 (465); but in Uma Shankar v. Nageswari, 3 Pat. L. J. 663 F.B., a maternal uncle was preferred to paternal aunt's daughter's son.

(8) Parot v. Mahta, 19 B. 631 (634), following Umaid Bahadur v. Udaichand, 6 C. 119 F.B.; Venkatagiri v. Chandru, 23 M. 123; Krishna v. Venkatarama, 29 M. 115; Mukha v. Qabza, 31 I. C. (A.) 553.

(9) Muttusami v. Muttukumara, 16 M. 23, affirmed O.A. Muthuswami v. Simambedu, 19 M. 405 P.C.

(10) Jagannath v. Gangoo, (1926) 95 I.C. (A.) 541.

(11) Vedachela v. Ranganathan, 26 C. W.N. 159 P.C.

(12) Narasamma v. Mangamma, 13 M. 10, cited in Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 P.C., approved in Kenchava v. Girimallappa, 48 B. 569 (577) P.C.

by the two bandhus in question.[1] For the same reason, the mother's brother's son is entitled to succeed in preference to the mother's sister's son.[2]

Atma Bandhus Ex Parte Materna:—

(21 Mother's father.[3]

.....

(Here come atma bandhus, to whom the deceased was atma bandhu ex parte paterna.)

(22) Mother's father's son,[4] (i.e., mother's brother).[5]
(23) Mother's father's son's son.[6]
(24) Mother's father's son's son's son.
(25) Mother's father's father.[7]
(26) Mother's father's brother.
(27) Mother's father's brother's son.
(28) Mother's father's brother's son's son.[8]
(29) Mother's great grandfather.
(30) Mother's grandfather's brother.
(31) Mother's grandfather's brother's son.
(32) Mother's grandfather's brother's son's son.
(33) Mother's father's daughter's son.[9]
(34) Mother's father's son's daughter's son.
(35) Mother's father's son's son's daughter's son.
(36) Mother's father's great-great-grandson.
(37) Mother's grandfather's great-great-grandson.
(38) Mother's great-grandfather's great-great-grandson.

(Here come atma bandhus ex parte materna, to whom the deceased was pitri bandhu.)

(39) Mother's sister's son's son.[10]

The Patna High Court have in two cases given preference to a matri bandhu over a pitri bandhu, because he was nearer in degree counting from the common ancestors in their respective lines, and also on the ground of religious merit, holding that when there is a contest between bandhus other than the nine bandhus, or between one of the former and one of the latter, the principle of numerical propinquity alone will determine the heritable right, supplemented, in case of doubt, by the rule of religious efficacy and such other rules derived from the succession of

---

(1) Sakharam v. Balkrishna, 49 B. 739.

(2) Rami Reddy v. Ganga Reddy, 48 M. 722.

(3) Chinnammal v. Venkatachala, 15 M. 421.

(4) Narasimma v. Mangammal, 13 M. 10; Manikchand Golecha v. Jagat Settani, 17 C. 518; Muthusami v. Simambedu, 19 M. 405 P.C.; Mohandas v. Krishnabai, 5 B. 597; Saguna v. Sadashiv, 26 B. 710; Uma Shankar v. Nageswari, 3 Pat.L.J. 663 F.B. ; 48 I.C. (preferred to sister's daughter's son); Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 (preferred to father's father's daughter's son's son).

(5) Balasubramanya v Subbayya, (1938) P.C. 34.

(6) Ram Charan v. Rahim Baksh, 38 A. 416 (preferred to mother's sister's son); Rami Reddi v. Gangi Reddi, 48 M. 722, dissenting from Appandai v. Bagubali, 33 M. 439; Balusami v. Narayana, 20 M. 342.

(7) Krishnayya v. Pichamma, 11 M. 287.

(8) Ratnasubba v. Ponnappa, 5 M. 69.

(9) Appandai v. Bagubali, 33 M. 39; Ram Charan v. Rahim Baksh, 38 A. 416; Sundarammal v. Rengasami, 18 M. 193; Chamanlal v. Doshi Ganesh, 28 B. 453.

(10) Vijli v. Prabhalakshmi, 9 Bom. L.R. 1129; Chaman Lal v. Ganesh, 28 B. 453; Adit Narayan v. Mahabir Prasad, 6 Pat.L.J. 140 ; 48 I.A. 86.

agnates as may be appropriate. In this view, it has postponed the mother's sister's son's son to the maternal grandfather's daughter's son, as being one degree nearer to the common ancestor, though he is described as a matri bandhu in the Mitakshara and the former is an atma bandhu.[1] These decisions proceed upon the view that outside the specially named nine bandhus, there is no justification for following the same gradation.

It was so decided by the majority of three judges of a full bench, the minority of two, however, being in favour of the tripartite distinction as applicable to all bandhus, whether out of the nine enumerated in the Mitakshara or those not so named.[2]

(40) Mother's brother's daughter's son's son.—

Dr. Bhattacharya[3] and Professor Sarvadhikari[4] here place:—

(40-A) Maternal great-grandfather's daughter's son's son;
(40-B) Maternal great-grandfather's son's daughter's son's son;
(40-C) Maternal great great-grandfather's daughter's son's son;
(40-D) Maternal great great-grandfather's son's daughter's great-grandson.

But as the maternal great-grandfather's daughter's son is mentioned in the Mitakshara as matri bandhu, it follows that his son and those following his son are not atma bandhus.

(41) Mother's sister's daughter's son.
(42) Mother's brother's daughter's son.

These last two are atma bandhus ex parte materna, to whom the deceased was matri bandhu. They are sons of daughter's daughters.

Here the two learned authors abovenamed place—

(42-A) the maternal great-grandfather's daughter's daughter's son;
(42-B) the maternal great-grandfather's son's daughter's daughter's son;
(42-C) the maternal great great-grandfather's daughter's daughter's son;
(42-D) the maternal great great-grandfather's son's daughter's daughter's son; but, for the reason last noted, they are not atma bandhus.

II. PITRI BANDHUS.

2319. Next in the order of pripinquity stand the pitri bandhus, who are as follows:—

(43) Great-grandfather's daughter's son.[5]
(44) Great-grandfather's son's daughter's son.[6]

---

(1) Adit Narayan v. Mahabir, (1917) Pat. 12, followed in Uma Shankar v. Nageswari, (1919) Pat. 162 (173, 174) F.B.

(2) Uma Shankar v. Nageswari, (1919) Pat. 162 F.B.

(3) H.L., (2nd Ed.), 460.

(4) Sarv. Inh., 716.

(5) Mit., II-V-1; Muthusami v. Simambedu, 19 M. 405 P.C.; Krishna v. Venkatarama, 29 M. 115.

(6) Kissen v. Javallah, 3 M.H.C.R. 346 (351); Tahaldai v. Gaya Pershad, 37 C. 214; Shamdei v. Birbhadra Prasad, 43 A. 463; Parmarandas v. Parbhudas, 14 Bom. L. R. 630 : 16 I.C. 591; Ramsia v. Bua, 47 A. 10.

(45) Great-grandfather's son's son's daughter's son.
(46) Great great-grandfather's daughter's son.
(47) Great great-grandfather's son's daughter's son.
(48) Great great-grandfather's son's son's daughter's son.[1]
(49) Great-grandfather's daughter's son's son.[2]
(50) Great-grandfather's son's daughter's son's son.
(51) Great great-grandfather's daughter's son's son.
(52) Great great-grandfather's son's daughter's son's son.
(53) Great-grandfather's daughter's daughter's son.
(54) Great-grandfather's son's daughter's daughter's son.
(55) Great great-grandfather's daughter's daughter's son.
(56) Great great-grandfather's son's daughter's daughter's son.

Here follow the pitri bandhus, to whom the deceased was atma bandhu ex parte paterna:—

(57) Father's maternal grandfather's son.[3]
(58) Do. grandson.
(59) Do. great-grandson.[4]
(60) The father's maternal great-grandfather's son.
(61) Do. grandson.
(62) Do. great-grandson.
(63) The father's maternal great great-grandfather's son.
(64) Do. grandson.
(65) Do. great-grandson.
(66) The father's maternal grandfather's daughter's son.
(67) Do. son's daughter's son.
(68) Do. son's son's daughter's son.
(69) The father's maternal great-grandfather's daughter's son.
(70) Do. son's daughter's son.
(71) Do. son's son's daughter's son.
(72) The father's maternal great great-grandfather's daughter's son.
(73) Do. son's daughter's son.
(74) Do. son's son's daughter's son.
(75) Father's mother's father's great-grandson.
(76) Father's mother's father's father's great-grandson.
(77) Father's mother's great grandfather's great-grandson.

Here follow the pitri bandhus, to whom the deceased was pitri bandhu.

(78) The father's maternal grandfather's daughter's grandson.
(79) Do. son's daughter's grandson.
(80) The father's maternal great-grandfather's daughter's grandson.
(81) Do. son's daughter's grandson.

---

(1) Manikchand v. Jagat Settani, 17 C. 518 (Jain case), following Uma Shankar v. Kali Komul, 6 C. 256, affirmed O A. 10 C. 232 P.C.; Padmakumari v. Court of Wards, 8 C. 302 P.C.

(2) Sethurama v. Ponnammal, 12 M. 155, following Ratnasubba v. Ponnappa, 5 M. 69; Chamanlal v. Doshi, 28 B. 453; Muthusami v. Simambedu, 19 M. 405 P. C.

(3) Girdharilal v. Government, 12 M. I.A. 448.

(4) Ananda Bibi v. Nownit Lal, 9 C. 315.

Here follow the Pitri bandhus, to whom the deceased was Matri Bandhu.

(82) The father's maternal grandfather's daughter's daughter's son.
(83) Do. son's daughter's daughter's son.
(84) The father's maternal great-grandfather's daughter's daughter's son.
(85) Do. Son's daughter's daughter's son.

III. MATRI BANDHUS.

2320. Next follow matri bandhus, but this is not acceded to by the Patna High Court, who regard propinquity and religious benefit the sole test.[1]

(86) The maternal great-grandfather's daughter's son.
(87) Do. son's daughter's son.
(88) Do. son's son's daughter's son.
(89) The maternal great great-grandfather's daughter's son.
(90) Do. son's daughter's son.
(91) Do. son's son's daughter's son.
(92) The maternal great-grandfather's daughter's son's son.
(93) Do. son's daughter's son's son.
(94) The maternal great great-grandfather's daughter's son's son.
(95) Do. son's daughter's son's son.
(96) The maternal great-grandfather's daughter's daughter's son.
(97) Do. son's daughter's daughter's son.
(98) The maternal great great-grandfather's daughter's daughter's son.
(99) Do. son's daughter's daughter's son.

(Here follow the matri bandhus, to whom the deceased was pitri bandhu ex parte paterna.)

(100) The mother's maternal grandfather.
(101) The mother's grandfather's son.
(102) The mother's grandfather's grandson.[2]
(103) The mother's grandfather's great grandson.
(104) The mother's maternal great-grandfather.
(105) The mother's maternal great-grandfather's son.
(106) The mother's maternal great-grandfather's grandson.
(107) The mother's maternal great-grandfather's great-grandson.

Here Dr. Bhattacharya places the great-great-grandson of the mother's maternal grandfather and great-grandfather,[3] but according to Mr. Sarvadhikari, he should come after the daughter's son of the mother's maternal great-grandfather.[4]

(Here follow the matri bandhus, to whom the deceased was atma bandhu ex parte materna.)

(108) The mother's maternal grandfather's daughter's son.

---

(1) Adit Narain v. Mahabir, (1917) Pat. 12, followed in Uma Shankar v. Nageswari, (1919) Pat. 162 (173, 174) F.B. (Per Mullick, Jwala Prasad and Thornhill, JJ., contra Dawson Miller, C. J., and Manuk, J., dissentients).
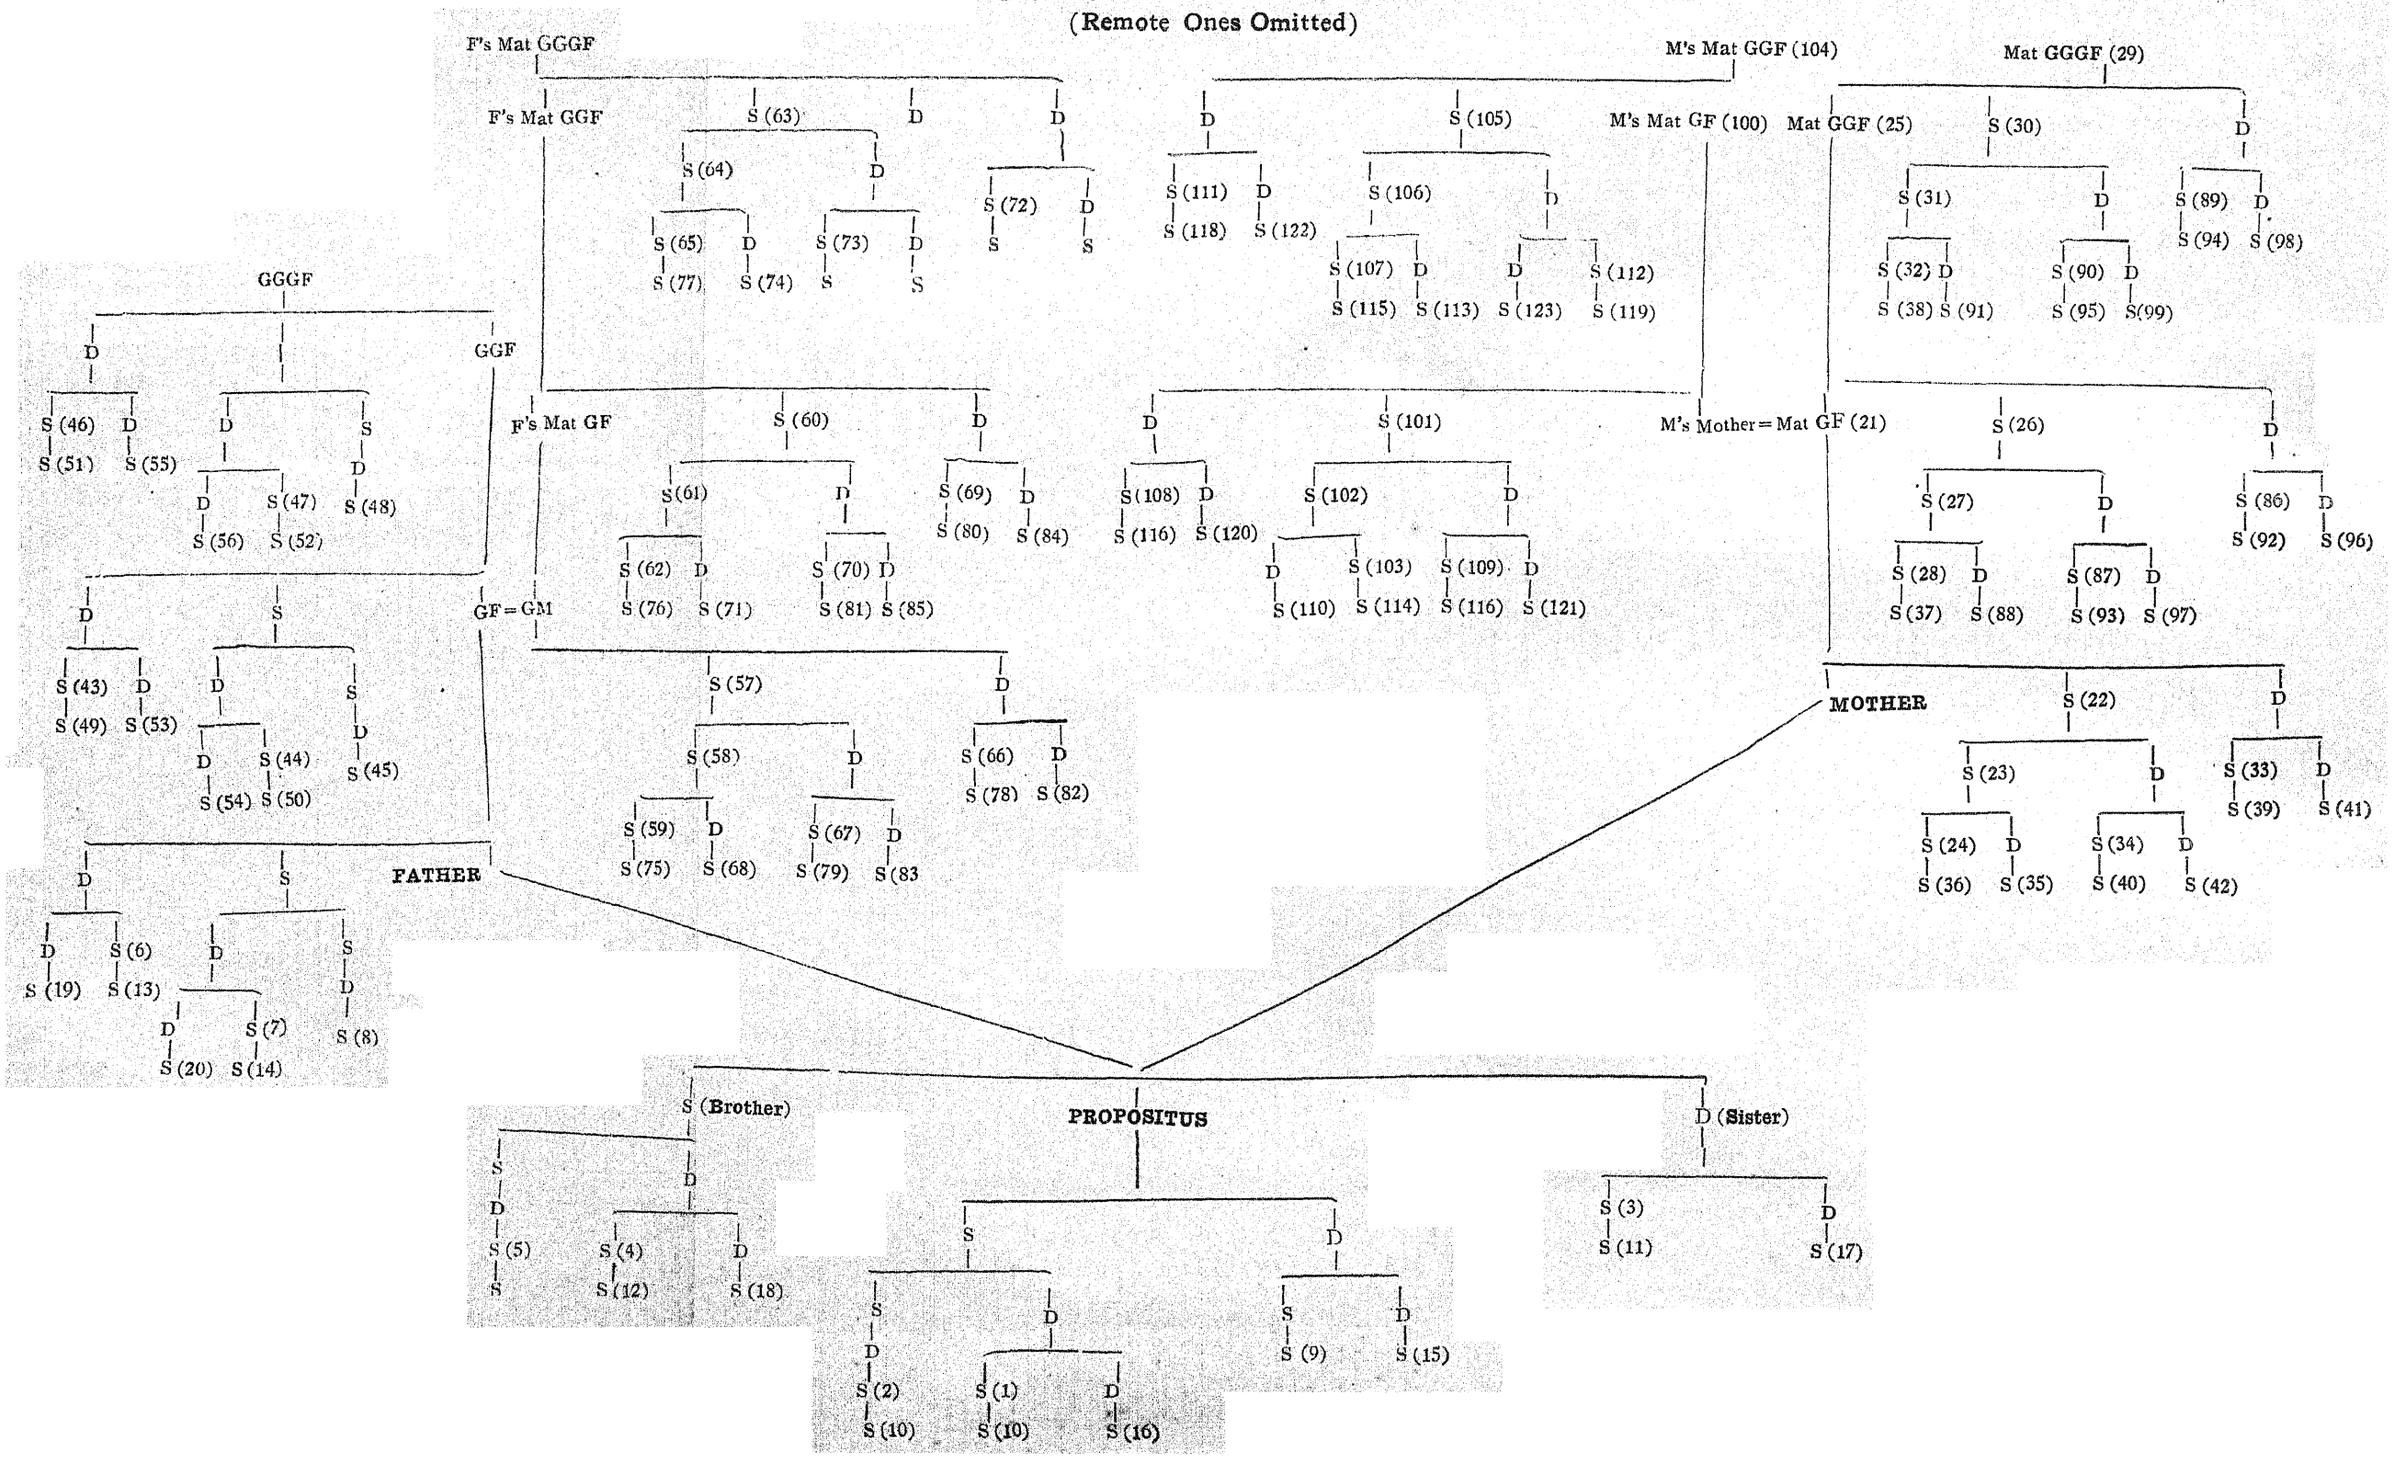
(2) Mit., II-VI-1.
(3) H. L., (2nd Ed.), 461.
(4) Inh., 717.

MITAKSHARA BANDHUS

(Remote Ones Omitted)

[To Face Page 979.



Here, according to Mr. Sarvadhikari there should come—

(108-A) his great great-grandson, and

(108-B) his great-grandfather.

(109) The mother's maternal grandfather's son's daughter's son.

(110) Do. grandson's daughter's son.

(111) The mother's maternal great-grandfather's daughter's son.

(112) Do. son's daughter's son.

(113) Do. grandson's daughter's son.

(114) The mother's maternal grandfather's great great-grandson.[1]

(115) The mother's maternal great-grandfather's great great-grandson.

(Then follow the matri bandhus, to whom the deceased was pitri bandhu.)

(116) The mother's maternal grandfather's daughter's son's son.

(117) Do. son's daughter's son's son.

(118) The mother's maternal great-grandfather's daughter's grandson.

(119) Do. son's daughter's grandson.

(Then follow the matri bandhus, to whom the deceased was matri bandhu.)

(120) The mother's maternal grandfather's daughter's daughter's son.

(121) Do. son's daughter's daughter's son.

(122) The mother's maternal great-grandfather's daughter's daughter's son.

(123) Do. son's daughter's daughter's son.

The relative position of all these relations may be more conveniently studied in the chart here appended.

2321. Other Bandhus.—Amongst other unclassified bandhus are the following:—

(1) The grandfather's brother's daughter's son.[2]

(2) The father's sister's son's son, who is entitled to inherit the propositus was the mother's father's mother's brother's son.[3]

(3) The father's sister's son's daughter's son (of whom the propositus was the mother's father's mother's brother's son.)[4]

2322. No Heirs.—Both under the Bengal and the Benares schools, the following relations are not bandhus, and are, therefore, no heirs to the owner:—

(1) Father's brother's daughter,[5] except in the Bombay presidency.[6]

---

(1) Dr. Bhattacharya would place him after No. 107.

(2) Ram Sia v. Bua, 47 A. 10.

(3) Harihar v. Ram Daur, 47 A. 172.

(4) Kesar Singh v. Secretary of State, 49 M. 652.

(5) Gaura (Mt.) v. Lal Singh, 10 C.P.L.R. 95; Sadashiv v. Jaikrishna, 14 N. 6.

(6) Lakshmi v. Jayram, 6 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 152; Lallubhai v. Mankuar Bai, 2 B. 388 (403, 444) O.A. Lallubhai v. Cassibai, 5 B. 110 P.C.

(2) Brother's daughter.[1]
(3) Sister's daughter.[2]
(4) Wife's sister.[3]
(5) Father's sister's great-grandson.[4]
(6) Paternal grandfather's mother's brother's grandson.[5]
(7) Paternal grandfather's great-grandson's daughter's son.[6]
(8) Paternal grandfather's daughter's son's daughter's son.
(9) The stepson of a stepsister.[7]

Special female heirs in Bombay.

326. In a case where the succession opened before the enactment of the Hindu Inheritance (Amendment) Act, 1929, in Bombay, Berar and Sindh, subject to the Mayukh, the wives of gotraj sapindas would be treated as sagotra sapindas; and take their husbands' places in the line of heirs, subject to the two following rules:—

(1) They come in only after all the gotraj sapindas in the line, to which their husbands belonged, are exhausted.

(2) A widow of a gotraj sapinda cannot inherit until after the sister.

(3) As such, the following other females are recognized as heirs:—

(i) Sister, whether of the whole or half blood;

(ii) Widows of predeceased sapindas and samanodaks;

(iii) Son's widow;

(iv) Stepmother;

(v) Father's widow;

(vi) Brother's widow;

(vii) Brother's son's widow;

(viii) Paternal uncle's widow and the widows of the paternal first cousins;

(ix) Daughters of descendants and collaterals within five degrees:—

(a) The son's daughter;

(b) The daughter's daughter;

(c) Brother's daughter;

(d) Sister's daughter;

who all inherit after the nine bandhus expressly enumerated in the Mitakshara;

---

(1) Sujan v. Jagiri, 1 L. 608. But the brother's daughter's son is a bandhu and is preferable to a son's daughter; Avudai v. Ramalinga, 97 I.C. 314: (1926) M. 1163.

(2) Saroo v. Bani, 62 I.C. (N.) 257; Dattatraya v. Gangabai, 44 B. 541 (She is preferred to sister's son's son).

(3) Nearm v. Andaram, 35 C.L.J. 34: 64 I.C. 145.

(4) Sheo Nandan v. Muni, 21 A. L. J. 288: 71 I.C. 1013: (1923) A. 398.

(5) Veera v. Padmanabha, 39 M. L. J. 417.

(6) Shib Sahai v. Saraswati, 37 A. 533.

(7) Saminatha v. Angammal, 45 M. 257.

(x) The father's sister, who comes in after all the gotraj sapindas but before the bandhus.

(4) Women inheriting under this rule take an absolute or a limited estate according as they belong to the family by birth or by marriage.

(5) In a case where the succession opens after the enactment of the said Act, the females therein mentioned will inherit as therein provided, and in respect of other females, the rules stated in the foregoing clauses shall apply.

2323. Analogous Law.—This section has been slightly altered so as to incorporate in it the alterations made in the law, in the case of female heirs, by the Hindu Inheritance (Amendment) Act, 1929. The effect of that enactment, so far as the special female heirs in Bombay are concerned, is that the females such as the sister who have already obtained a high place in the catena of heirs continue to inherit as such, but otherwise they inherit, as mentioned in the enactment, as heirs, ranking in the order of succession next after the father's father and before the father's brother, where the succession opens after the said enactment; but where it opened before that enactment, they inherit after the nine bandhus expressly named in the Mitakshara and other females not mentioned in the said enactment will continue to inherit as mentioned in the first 4 clauses of this section.

2324. Widows of Predeceased Sapindas.—It has already been stated that widows of gotraj sapindas are classed in Bombay as sagotra sapindas with their husband, and as such, possess the right to collateral succession, but not immediately after their husbands, as was at one time supposed,[1] but after all the male gotrajas are exhausted by any males existing in that line, within the limits to which the gotraj relationship extends.[2] The word "line" here means the same as gotra or continuation of the line of ascent or descent.

Clause (2).

For example, widows of the males in the paternal grandfather's line come after the males who are heirs in the same line, and similarly those in the paternal grandfather's line and the paternal great-grandfather's line. The males are exhausted before the females come in.[3] Now, since the line of heritable sapindas includes descendants up to the sixth degree, it follows that widows in any line will take in default of the males in that particular line to which their husbands belong. In this view, the paternal uncle's grandson is preferable to the paternal uncle's widow, since both are in the same line and male gotrajas are preferable to females.[4] In dealing with the line of gotraj sapindaship, the descendants must be

---

(1) Lakshmi Bai v. Jagrave, 6 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 152, explained and dissented from, per Telang, J., in Rachava v. Kalingappa, 16 B. 716 (719).

(2) Rachava v. Kalingappa, 16 B. 716 (719); Kashi Bai v. Moreswar, 35 B. 389 (392); Khandacharya v. Govindacharya, 13 Bom.L.R. 1005.

(3) Kashi Bai v. Moreswar, 35 B. 389 (492); Kashi Bai v. Sita Bai, 13 Bom. L.R. 552.

(4) Khandacharya v. Govindacharya, 13 Bom.L.R. 1005 (1008).

exhausted at each step of the ascent, before proceeding higher to bring other heirs into the competition.[1] In this view, a brother's widow is entitled to succeed in preference to the grandson of the paternal grand uncle of the propositus.[2] Widows of gotraj sapindas, inheriting to a male, take a limited woman's estate, but, it is said, they take an absolute estate, if the relation they inherit to was a female, in which case the person to inherit to them would be their own stridhan heir and not the heir of the last male owner.[3]

Sister.

2325. As already explained,[4] the sister had always a place in the catena of heirs in the Bombay and Madras presidencies. Her place is now made more secure there and elsewhere by the enactment of the Hindu Law Inheritance (Amendment) Act[5] which however does not affect her higher place in Bombay, namely, her place between the grandmother and the grandfather.[6]

The sister was an heir by virtue of the following text of Mayukh already quoted. (§ 2272.)

An unendowed sister has no prior right of succession over the endowed sister, such as an unendowed daughter has over an endowed daughter, a distinction based on express texts which cannot be extended by analogy to sisters.[7] Sisters take equally,[8] but in severalty, and not as joint tenants.[9]

Madras female heirs.

327. (1) In a case where the succession opened before the enactment of the Hindu Inheritance (Amendment) Act, 1929, in the Madras Presidency the following females are recognized as heritable bandhus, ranking after all male bandhus:—

(i) Sister.
(ii) Half sister.
(iii) Son's daughter.
(iv) Daughter's daughter.
(v) Brother's daughter.

(2) In a case where the succession opens after the enactment of the said Act, the females therein mentioned, will inherit as therein provided; and a brother's daughter will inherit as theretofore next after all male bandhus.

2326. Analogous Law.—Although Madras follows the orthodox rule that women do not inherit, unless they are expressly named in the texts, still the courts have liberally construed the texts, and let in certain female relations, holding "that any relative who is also a cognate may be treated as coming within the definition of bhinna gotra sapinda, and that the term sapinda, used in Chap. II, Sec. VI of the Mitakshara, in-

(1) Kashi Bai v. Sita Bai, 13 Bom. L.R. 552; Khandacharya v. Govindacharya, 13 Bom.L.R. 1005 (1008).
(2) Manu, IX-107.
(3) Narayan v. Waman, 46 B. 17, following Gandhi v. Jadeb, 24 B. 192 F.B.
(4) § 2272 and S. 327.
(5) Act II of 1929.
(6) Shidramappa v. Neelawa Bai, 57 B. 377.
(7) Bhagirathi Bai v. Baya, 5 B. 264 (267).
(8) Ib.
(9) Rindavai v. Anacharya, 15 B. 206.

cludes females."[1] It will be seen that while the courts in Bombay and Madras both recognize the right of certain female relations to inheritance, each gives a different reason in support of its view. In Bombay, females are admitted, because they are held to pass into their husband's gotra upon marriage and with them are entitled to be classed as sagotra sapindas, while in Madras, the term sapinda is construed regardless of sex, though it is conceded that female bandhus take after all male bandhus, a female bandhu nearer in degree being excluded by a male bandhu more distantly connected.[2] This view is supported by the following reasoning: The Mitakshara designates nine heritable bandhus. The Privy Council have held that list to be merely illustrative and not exhaustive, from which it follows that in regard to bandhus, the Mitakshara did not limit the right of inheritance to certain prescribed relationships of that nature; but since it lays down a definite order of succession prescribed by law for the several classes, it follows "that all relatives however remote, must be exhausted before the estate can fall to persons who have no connection with the family."[3] This made the way for all females easy and it was made easier by a judgment of Turner, C.J., who passed the whole case-law in review and disposed of the implied textual exclusion of the females in the following words: "It may, we think, be admitted—and herein is the reason why we consider it unnecessary to pronounce definitely on the sister's claim—that Vidnyaneshwar recognized the texts excluding females so far as to give priority to males, and he indicates with sufficient clearness the rules which are to be observed in ascertaining the order of succession; but his work does not profess to be a Code but a commentary of law already accepted, and which he assumes to be generally known. There is, therefore, much force in the observation of Mr. Justice Holloway that the rule of law ought not to be derived from the positive words of such a commentator, much less from his omissions."[4] The Privy Council may, perhaps, condemn this process of reasoning, but it is now too late to exclude the female heirs who have since 1875 been so recognized. As observed by Muthusamy Ayyar, J: "The course of decisions from that date proceeds on the principle that consanguinity may be recognized as the basis of title to succession, in the absence of preferential male heirs."[5]

On this principle the following female relations have been held to be be heirs:—

2327. Sister.—Before her statutory elevation, the sister was allotted a place amongst bandhus,[6] though her claim elsewhere was said to rest only upon custom.[7]

Clause (1) (i).

(1) Kutti v. Radhakrishna, 8 M. H. C.R. 88, explained, per Muttusami Ayyar, J., in Balamma v. Pullayya, 18 M. 168(177), followed in Venkatasubramaniam v. Thayarammal, 21 M. 263 (267).

(2) Venkata v. Suremani, 31 M. 321 (324).

(3) Kutti v. Radhakrishna, 8 M. H. C. R. 88 (93).

(4) Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada, 5 M. 241 (250).

(5) Nallanna v. Ponnal, 14 M. 149.

(6) Raghunath v. Munnan Missar, 20 A. 191; Kutti v. Radhakrishna, 8 M.H. C.R. 88; Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada, 5 M. 241; Mari v. Chinnammal, 8 M. 107 (130) F.B.; Nallanna v. Ponnal, 14 M. 149; Muliani v. Lala Mal, (1889) P.R. No. 180; Nanak Gir v. Kishan Kaur, (1919) P.R. No. 161; 53 I.C. 815; Puro v. Sulakhan, 76 I.C. 121: (1925) L. 82.

(7) Bhadia v. Bhagi, 10 N.L.R. 24; Madho v. Janki, 12 N.L.R. 148 (149).

And, being a female bandhu, she was postponed to her son, who is a male bandhu.[1] But, being a bandhu, she was preferred to a brother's daughter, who was no bandhu at all,[2] and in Bombay, she had precedence over a son's daughter,[3] and the brother's widow.[4]

2328. Half Sister.—The half sister is now equally in the line of heirs, though she too must abide her chance till all the male bandhus have passed out of the line.[5]

Clause (ii).

2329. Son's Daughter.—The son's daughter is entitled to inherit to her grandfather as a bandhu.[6]

Clause (iii).

2330. Daughter's Daughter.—The daughter's daughter has been allowed to come in on the ground of her consanguinity, which is recognized as the basis of title to succession, in the absence of preferential male heirs.[7] It will also probably let in the sister's daughter, though she has been held not to be a bandhu.[8] But as a mere relative, she has a place in the line of heirs before the property escheats to the Crown.[9]

Clause (iv).

2331. Brother's Daughter.—On the same principle, a brother's daughter would exclude the adopted son of the maternal uncle.[10]

Clause (v).

2332. Sister's Daughter.—A sister's daughter has also a place in the catena of heirs, though she comes in as a female relative and not as a bandhu, who will have precedence over her.[11] As such, the son's daughter's son has precedence over her,[12] though she herself has precedence over her sister's son son.[13]

2333. Father's Sister.—So the father's sister is a bandhu. Her son is expressly mentioned in the Mitakshara among the cognates related to the man himself,[14] but the maternal uncle is held to be preferable to him on account of his propinquity.[15] His mother must be equally a bandhu of the same class though she cannot inherit in preference to the mother's brother,[16] the maternal uncle,[17] or the maternal grandfather who ranks higher than the

(1) Kutti v. Radhakrishna, 8 M.H. C.R. 88 (93); Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada, 5 M. 241. In Vellanki v. Venkatta, 1 M. 174 (185) P.C., the question was raised but not decided.

(2) Puro v. Sulakhan, 76 I.C. 121: (1925) L. 82.

(3) Dattatraya v. Ganga Bai, 44 B. 541.

(4) Shidramappa v. Neelava Bai, 57 B. 377.

(5) Kumaravelu v. Virana, 5 M. 29.

(6) Nallanna v. Ponnal, 14 M. 149, (150).

(7) Ramappa v. Arumugath, 17 M. 182 (183), following Nallanna v. Ponnal, 14 M. 149 (150); Venkata v. Surenani, 31 M. 321 (324); Gangaram v. Ballia, (1876) B.P.J. 31; Ghunaji v. Tulsi, 20 N.L.R. 182 : 82 I.C. 457 : (1925) N. 98 (Mayukh case).

(8) Sundarammal v. Rangasami, 18 M. 193 (198, 199).

(9) Ramappa v. Arumugath, 17 M. 182; Bansidhar v. Ganeshi, 22 A. 338; contra S. 305.

(10) Venkatasubramaniam v. Thayarammal, 21 M. 763.

(11) Sundarammal v. Rangasami, 18 M. 193 (198).

(12) Dattatraya v. Ganga Bai, 44 B. 541.

(13) Ib.

(14) Mit., II-VI.

(15) Marudappa v. Collector, (1935) M. 1017 (1029, 1030).

(16) Narasamma v. Mangammal, 13 M. 10 (14).

(17) Girdharilal v. Government, 12 M. I.A. 448; Chinnammal v. Venkatachela, 15 M. 421.

maternal uncle.[1] Under the Bombay School, the father's sister is preferred to the maternal grandfather in matters of succession.[2]

2334. Preceptor, Pupil and Fellow-student.—The following texts support these heirs:—

Apastamb.—"If there be no male issue, the nearest kinsman inherits; or in default of kindred, the preceptor; or failing him the disciple."[3]

Mitakshara.—"If there be no pupil, the fellow-student is the successor. He who received his investiture or instruction in reading or in the knowledge of the sense of scripture from the same preceptor, is a fellow-student.[4]

2335. It has been held that this rule relating to the inheritance must not be regarded as obsolete or dead by reason of its rare application. The Crown's right of escheat is as rarely enforced, but nevertheless the rule exists, and must be applied when an occasion for its application arises.[5] The rule applies equally to shudras.[6]

2336. "On failure of these a Brahmin shall succeed."—The preceptor, the pupil and the fellow-student are heirs to the property of a householder. All these are teachers and associates of religious learning. The preceptor and the pupil are the teacher and the student of the Vedas, while a fellow-student is his fellow-learner under the same Acharya. As the Shudra cannot partake of religious knowledge, there is no intermediate heir to him between his bandhus and the Crown.

2337. The Crown.—The Crown is regarded as the ultima haeres in all systems, and the Mitakshara designates it as the last heir, except a Brahmin whose property shall never be taken by the king.[7] "On failure of heirs, the wealth of a Brahmin must be given to a Brahmin."[8]

2338. The Mitakshara declares with some emphasis that the property of a Brahmin shall not be taken by the King, and that "if there be no heir of a Brahmin's wealth, on his demise, it must be given to a Brahmin. Otherwise, the King is tainted with sin."[9] The effect of this clause had to be considered in the case of a zemindari, of which the last male holder, a Brahmin, had died, leaving a widow, who took a widow's estate, and upon her death, there was no heir of the husband to inherit the zemindari. It was contended that the estate of a Brahmin did not escheat to the Crown, and the Mitakshara was cited in support of the contention, but the Privy Council held that his property equally escheated to the Crown. In so holding, they said: "It appears to their Lordships that the passage quoted by the Mitakshara from Narad, in the very section which cites the prohibition of Manu, shows what the law in its utmost strictness was. That passage is, 'If there be no heir of a Brahmin's wealth, on his demise, it must be given to a Brahman, otherwise the King is tainted with sin.' In other words, the king is to take the property, but to take it subject to the duty, which he cannot neglect without sin, of disposing of it, at his discretion, amongst Brahmins of the kind con-

---

(1) Chinnammal v. Venkatachala, 15 M. 421.
(2) Madho v. Janki, 12 N.L.R. 148 : 36 I.C. 514; cf., Saguna v. Sadashiv, 26 B. 710.
(3) Apastamb cited in Mit., II-VII-1.
(4) Mit., II-VII-3.
(5) Sambasivam v. Secretary of State, 44 M. 704 (708, 709).
(6) Ib.
(7) Manu, IX-189; Mit., II-VII-5.
(8) Narad, cited in Mit., II-VII-5.
(9) Mit., II-VII-5.

templated by the preceding texts.[1] If this is so, their Lordships hold that the property vests in the King, subject to a trust in favour of Brahmins."

2339. As the question in the case was between the Government claiming the property by escheat and an adverse claimant, their Lordships had not to consider the further question as to the nature of the trust, whether the duty imposed upon the King was one of imperfect obligation or a positive trust affecting the property in his hands, or whether if a trust, it was or was not incapable of enforcement by reason of the uncertainty of its object; but they were inclined to the view that such a trust would fail for want of certainty of its object.[2] The Crown, by the general prerogative, will take the property by escheat, subject to any trusts or charges affecting it.[3] It is not, however, any more than the reversioner bound by any unauthorized alienations of the widow.[4] The right of an istemrari moukarari tenant in Bengal escheats to the Crown and not to the zemindar, on the ground that such tenure created an absolute interest in the tenant and reserved no such power to the zemindar.[5]

2340. Where the Crown claims by escheat against a person in possession, the burden lies on it to show that the last proprietor had died without heirs: and the defendant in possession has the right to defend his possession on the ground of an existing jus tertii.[6]

All property in India belonging to the King vests in the Secretary of State for India, in whom the escheated property will also vest as the King's representative. The Bengal and the Madras Regulations make provision for the superintendence of escheated property.[7]

328. The heir of a hermit (Vanprasth) is a spiritual brother or an associate in holiness, or an ascetic (Sanyasi or Yati), a virtuous pupil, and that of a professed student (Brahmachari), his religious preceptor.

Hermit's heir.

In default of these heirs, any one associated in holiness may inherit.

2341. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by the following texts:—

Yadnyavalkya.—"The heirs of a hermit, of an ascetic and of a professed student are, in their order, the preceptor, the virtuous pupil and the spiritual brother and associate in holiness."[8]

Mitakshara.—"5. A spiritual brother is one who is engaged as a brotherly companion (having consented to become so). An associate in holiness is one appertaining to the same hermitage. Being a spiritual companion, and belonging to the same hermitage, he is spiritual brother associate in holiness.

"4. The virtuous pupil is one who is assiduous in the study of theology, in retaining the holy science and in practising its ordinances. For, a person, whose conduct is bad, is unworthy of the inheritance, were he even the preceptor or (standing in) any other (venerable relation).

---

(1) Collector v. Cavaly, 8 M. I. A. 500 (553).

(2) Collector v. Cavaly, 8 M. I. A. 500 (524), followed in Sonet Koer v. Himmut, 1 C. 391 (399) P.C.

(3) Ib., p. 527; Cavaly v. Collector, 11 M.I.A. 619; Sonet Koer v. Himmut, 1 C. 391 P.C.

(4) Collector v. Cavaly, 8 M. I. A. 529.

(5) Somet Koer v. Himmut, I.C. 391 (402) P.C.

(6) Girdhari Lal v. Government, 12 M.I.A. 448 (469); Ganpat v. Secretary of State, 45 B. 1116.

(7) Beng. Reg. XIX of 1810, S. 7; Mad. Reg. VII of 1817, S. 6.

(8) Yad., III-47; see Manu, VI-15.

"3. The student (Brahmachari) must be a professed or perpetual one, for the mother and the rest of the natural heirs take the property of temporary students; and the preceptor is declared to be heir to a professed student, as an exception (to the claim of the mother and the rest).

"7 Are not those who have entered into a religious profession unconcerned with heritable property.[1]

"8. The answer is, a hermit may have property; for the text (of Yadnavalkya) expresses: 'The hermit may make a hoard of things sufficient for a day, a month, six months or a year, and in the month of Aswin, he should abandon (the residue of) what has been collected.' The ascetic too has clothes, books and other requisite articles; for a passage (of the Veda) directs that 'he should wear clothes to cover his privy parts,' and a text (of law) prescribes that 'he should take the requisite for his austerities and his sandals.' The professor, student likewise, has clothes to cover his body and he possesses also other effects.

"9. It was therefore proper to explain the partition or inheritance of such property."[2]

2342. To begin with, this section only relates to inheritance to persons therein named. It cannot be extended, by analogy, to persons who affect to belong to a religious order, but follow secular occupations. Then, again, it applies only to the twice-born classes to whom these orders were open. It cannot apply to the Shudras,[3] a Gossain, or a Bairagi, because the order of Bairagis is not confined to the members of the twice-born castes.[4] It is also pertinent to note that the sort of property, for which the chapter prescribes the rule of inheritance, is the personal belongings of the ascetic, such as his clothes and grain. The law cannot be diverted to apply to property acquired or possessed by quasi-ascetics and hermits, who do not belong to the class to whom the rules were intended to apply. As was observed in a case: "To become a religious ascetic and exclude his heirs from succession to property subsequently acquired, he must bona fide retire from all worldly affairs and in fact become, as it were, dead to the world, leaving all the property then vested in him to his legal heirs who succeed to it at once."[5] In order to entitle the heir to succeed to the deceased, he must shew that the latter had completely and permanently renounced the world. Such is the case of the mahant of a math, whose private effects would be subject to the ordinary law.[6] It must be confessed that the orders, here provided for, have long since ceased to exist, and the rules can only apply by analogy and should be applied with caution.

2343. Hermit.—The hermit, as such, does not now possess any property of value. Whatever he does, goes to his associates and not to one belonging to the same order, since the principle of succession is based entirely upon fellowship and personal association with the ascetic, and a stranger, though belonging to the same order of ascetics, is excluded.[7]

2344. Sanyasi or Yati.—Sanyasi means an ascetic or anchorite. Yati means a Bhiksu, a religious mendicant who lives upon the voluntary

(1) Yad., II-138; cited in Mit., II-VIII-1.

(2) Mit., II-VIII-1-9.

(3) Harish Chandra v. Atir Mohamed, 40 C. 545; Somasundaram v. Vaithilinga, 40 M. 846.

(4) Ram Das v. Baldeodasji, 39 B. 168 (174); Dharmapuram v. Virapandiya, 22 M. 302.

(5) Mudobun v. Kishen, (1852) S.D. A.B. 1089 (1093): 12 I.D. (O.S.) 840 (843); Khodeeram v. Rookhinee, 15 W. R. 197; Gouri Sunker v. Nider Singh, 18 C.W.N. 59.

(6) Dukharam v. Lachmun, 4 C. 954; Lok Nath v. Amar Nath, (1911) P.L. R. 24: 9 I.C. 541.

(7) Khuggender v. Sharupgir, 4 C. 543.

alms given to him.[1] The pupil is his heir, but the pupil here intended is the shishya as opposed to the chela, that is a pupil who has undergone the final ceremony which severs him from his family[2] but in Bombay, a designated chela was held entitled to succeed, though his guru had died before his formal initiation.[3] A pupil who deserts his master, cannot inherit to him.[4]

2345. Brahmachari.—The professed religious student may himself be the preceptor of another, to whose assets he will succeed. In one case such a case was supported on custom, which was held proved.[5]

2346. Heirs of Other Ascetics.—In another case; a religious mendicant died, leaving no heir except a pupil of the same spiritual teacher, who was held entitled to succeed in accordance with the opinion of the Pandits who said: "On the death of a religious mendicant, his spiritual teacher's pupil has the right of succession to his estates, and there is no relationship between them; but the person who becomes a follower of the spiritual teacher, is universally termed a religious brother by the fraternity of devotees. If such a person attend on the deceased at the time of death, and performs his exequial rites, and if the spiritual teacher himself disclaim all right of succession, such religious brother is entitled to the inheritance. This doctrine is justified by universal usage."[6] In still another case of succession to a Bairagi, his pupil was held to succeed in preference to his own brother, whose fraternal relationship was held to have effect, so long only as the proprietor continued in the order of a householder.[7]

---

(1) Gouri Sunkar v. Nider Singh, 18 C.W.N. 191 : 23 I.C. 287.

(2) Ramdhan v. Dalmir Puri, 14 C. W.N. 191. But Parbhu Dayal v. Latta Das, 29 O.C. 127; 92 I. C. 764: (1926) O. 293, places the preceptor before the pupil.

(3) Krishnagiri v. Shridhar, 46 B. 655.

(4) Soogun Chand v. Gopal Gir, 4 N. W.P.H.C.R. 101.

(5) Collector v. Jagatchunder, 28 C. 608 (610).

(6) 2 Mac. H. L. S. VII, Case 2, p. 91.

(7) Ib.

CHAPTER XXIV.

THE DAYABHAG SUCCESSION.

2347. Topical Introduction.—In the topical introduction to the Mitakshara succession, sufficient reference has been made to the wholly different standpoint from which the Dayabhag school views the law of succession. As pointed out there, the scheme of the Dayabhag law of succession is radically distinct from, and to some extent incompatible with, the scheme of the Mitakshara, in that while propinquity is the primary test in the latter school,[1] spiritual benefit is the sole test in the former system.[2] The Mitakshara does not wholly eschew the latter test but only regards it as a secondary test to be applied in settling the contest between persons of the same degree of propinquity.[3] But though the two schools approach the same question from two divergent standpoints, there is not much divergence in the result so far as the near relations are concerned, though the exclusion of a child widow and a sonless widowed daughter from inheritance furnishes, perhaps, apt illustrations of the subordination of propinquity and natural affection to the moloch of religious efficacy. Other daughters inherit because, though "daughters confer no benefit, they succeed because their sons do."[4] The logical sequence of this mode of computation might have led to other startling results. But "in most cases, propinquity, spiritual efficacy and natural love and affection run in the same lines, and no difficulty arises, but whenever they run in different lines, Jimut Vahan was compelled to ignore spiritual efficacy and had recourse to other principles or express texts,"[5] with the result that the claims of near relations are mostly safeguarded. But in the region of bandhus of the same class, this divergence becomes well marked, and in ascertaining the relative rank of bandhus, the courts are cautious against using the Mitakshara to supplement the Dayabhag. It has been held that the scheme of the Dayabhag is, as regards the law of succession, radically distinct from and to some extent incompatible with the scheme of the Mitakshara; so that the latter cannot be made to supplement the former.[6] For instance, under the Mitakshara, a bandhu ex parte materna is an heir, but under the Dayabhag, he cannot come in, because he is not a sakulya of the Propositus—a term which includes only agnates of the family, including, however, in that term the male descendants of the daughters of the family. As such, the uncle of the propositus, being his great-great-grandfather's daughter's son's son, though a heritable bandhu ex parte materna under the Mitakshara, is no heir at all under the Dayabhag, because he does not belong to his kula.[7] "Although the Dayabhag may be silent so far as express enumeration goes, it is not silent so far as the indication of the general principle

(1) Appandai v. Baghubali, 33 M. 439; Ganuo v. Beni, 14 N.L.R. 82: 43 I.C. 943.
(2) Dino Nath v. Chundi, 16 C.L.J. 14: 16 I.C. 349; Umashankar v. Nageswari, (1919) Pat. 162 F.B.
(3) Adit Narayan v. Mahabir, (1917) Pat. 12: 35 I.C. 687; Hari Har v. Jang Bahadur, 34 I.C. (Pat.) 183.
(4) Bamundoss v. Tarinee, 7 M.I.A. 169 (183).
(5) Akhoy v. Haridas, 35 C. 721 (726).
(6) Dina Nath v. Chundi Koer, 16 C. L.J. 14; Sambu Chandra v. Kartik Chandra, 54 C. 171 (178).
(7) Sambu Chandra v. Kartik Chandra, 54 C. 171.

according to which heirship is to be determined, is concerned, that general principle being clearly the principle of spiritual benefit."[1] Applying this test, a maternal great-great-grandfather's daughter's son,[2] and a father's maternal grandfather's great-great-grandson are no heirs, which they would have been if propinquity had been the primary test.[3] Applying the other test, mother's sister's son is entitled to succeed, in preference to a maternal uncle's son, since it is the order of enumeration in the Mitakshara.[4]

These and other analogues will be found examined in the ensuing commentary.

329. In this chapter, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context—"sapinda" means a sapinda as defined in section 312, but not more than three degrees removed, and includes cognate sapindas within that limit.

"Sapinda" defined.

330. "Sakulya" is a male agnate relation of the propositus four to six degrees remote from him, or from the common ancestor in the male line of ascent or descent.

"Sakulya" defined.

2348. Analogous Law.—The term "sakulya" occurs in the following texts :—

Manu.—"On failure of such kindred (i.e., sapindas), the sakulyas shall be the heirs or the spiritual preceptor, or the pupil."[5]

Dayabhag (citing the last).—"The distant kinsman (sakulya) is one who shares a divided oblation, as the grandson's grandson or other descendant beyond three degrees reckoned from him, or the offspring of the grandfather's grandfather or other remoter ancestor."[6]

Shrikrishna (referring to the last).—"The samanodaks used to be taken to be included in the term sakulya, because they also have sprung from the same family. Although both classes of heirs (near sakulyas and samanodaks, or remote sakulyas) are included in the same term, their order of succession is regulated by the degree of benefit conferred. This is the meaning."

The following texts of the Dayabhag define this term :—

"The paternal great-grandfather and grandfather, the father and man himself; his brothers of the whole blood, his son by a woman of the same tribe, his son's son and his great-grandson, all these partaking of undivided oblations are pronounced sapindas. Those who share divided oblations are called sakulyas. Male issue of the body being left, the property must go to them. On failure of sapindas or near kindred, sakulyas or remote kinsmen are heirs. "If there be none, the preceptor, the pupil or the priest takes the inheritance. In default of these, the king has the escheat."[7]

"If there be no such distant kindred, the samanodaks, kinsmen allied by a common libation of water, must be admitted to inherit as being signified by the term sakulya (conformably with Baudhayan's explanation of it). The distant kinsmen, that is, the descendants of the paternal grandfather's grandfather or other remoter ancestor, and such relatives, are denominated samanodaks."[8]

2349. The term "sakulya" literally means "belonging to the same kul or family." Originally, a sakulya was one contradistinguished from a stranger. But later on, the term underwent several changes. It has

(1) Dino Nath v. Chundi, 16 C.L.J. 14: 16 I.C. 349; followed in Shambo Chandra v. Kartick Chandra, 54 C. 171.
(2) Shambo Chandra v. Kartick Chandra, 54 C. 171.
(3) Dinanath v. Chandi, 16 C.L.J. 14.
(4) Appandai v. Baghubali, 33 M. 439.
(5) Manu, IX-187.
(6) Dayabhag, XI-VI-21.
(7) Baudhayan, cited in Dayabhag, XI-I-37.
(8) Dayabhag, XI-VI-23.

already been seen that the ancestor in the fourth, fifth and sixth degrees was treated as a sakulya, but this term does not occur in the Mitakshara. The term is used in the Dayabhag to apply to all persons who presented divided oblations to the deceased, who received divided oblations from them, and who presented divided oblations (to common ancestors) in which the deceased had a right of participation.[1] This is not all. The descendants of those ancestors to whom the deceased presented divided oblations, were also his sakulyas, because the last owner had also a right of participation in the pindas (undivided or divided) which these presented to common ancestors.[2] The kinsmen ex parte materna are excluded from sakulyas.[3]

Now, Sakulyas are divided into those who are near and those remote. While the former can be ascertained with some certainty, it is not possible to exhaust the enumeration of the latter.

The subject will have to be further considered in the sequel.

Heritable property.

331. All property (movable or immovable) owned by a person, whether joint or separate, passes by succession on his death.

2350. Analogous Law.—It has been stated before that the Mitakshare recognizes two modes of succession according to the nature of the property. But the Dayabhag school recognizes no succession by survivorship; the only succession it recognizes is that by descent, whether the property be co-parcenary or separate. Consequently, when the owner dies issueless, his estate whether comprising movable or immovable property, joint or separate, devolves upon his widow, to the exclusion of her husband's coparceners.[4] In other words, in all cases succession is by descent and not by survivorship.

Deformity as a disqualification.

332. (1) The following defects, if congenital, disqualify a person from inheritance, namely:—

(i) Idiocy;

(ii) Blindness;

(iii) Deafness;

(iv) Dumbness;

(2) And the following defects, if present at the time the succession opened, equally disqualify him from inheritance, namely:—

(v) Madness;

(vi) Sanious or ulcerous leprosy;

(vii) Permanent lameness;

(viii) Impotency;

---

(1) Dayabhag, XI-VI-15.
(2) Dayabhag, XI-I-38; Sarv. Inh. 833.
(3) Shambu v. Kartick Chandra, 54 C. 171.
(4) Durga Nath v. Chintamani, 51 C. 214 (219).

(ix) Other incurable diseases; and

(x) When the widow is the heir, her remarriage falling under the provisions of section 2 of the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act:

(3) Provided that the disqualification in all cases is personal only to the heir disqualified, and does not affect his natural issue, though it affects equally his adopted son and the widow, and other heirs.

Illustrations.

(a) A has three sons, B, C and D. B is born blind, C lost his legs in the war. B never was, while C ceases to be, a coparcener in A's ancestral estate.

(b) A, B and C are members of a joint family. A loses his visual organ. It entails his exclusion from the joint family.

(c) A, B and C are members of a joint family. A loses his visual organ, whereupon he adopts a son D. Both A and D are excluded from the joint family.

2351. Analogous Law.—Both the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag devote considerable space to persons excluded from inheritance.[1] So far as the Mitakshara is concerned, the Legislature has removed all disabilities except congenital lunacy and idiocy from the path of a coparcener or the heir, the only exceptions being persons who claim a right to a religious office or service or to the management of any religious or charitable trust.[2] The Act excludes persons subject to the Dayabhag law who remain still subject to the Shastric law, the reason for their exemption being that unlike the Mitakshara, Dayabhag makes inheritance dependent upon religious efficacy, whereas the Mitakshara makes it dependent upon propinquity. All the same, the exemption was made out of deference to Bengali opinion in the Assembly, and if that opinion favours the extension of the Act equally to them, there would be no difficulty in removing the exemption. But, for the present, the amended law is as above stated.

2352. This section, which was, before the enactment of the Hindu Inheritance (Removal of Disabilities) Act, 1928,[3] of a more general application, is now limited only to persons subject to the Dayabhag law or to those who succeed as managers of a religious or charitable trust. It is supported by the following texts:—

Baudhayan.—Granting food, clothes (and shelter) they shall support those who are incapable of transacting legal business, (viz.), the blind, idiots, those immersed in vice, the incurably deceased, and so forth. Those who neglect their duties and occupations; but not the outcast and his offsprings. Intercourse with an outcast shall not take place. But he shall support an outcaste mother without speaking to her.[4]

Manu.—"Eunuchs and outcasts, persons born blind or deaf, mad men, idiots, the dumb, and such as have lost the use of a limb are excluded from a share of the heritage."[5]

Narad (cited in the Mitakshara).—"An enemy to his father, an outcast, an impotent person, and one who is addicted to vice, have no shares of the inheritance, even though they be legitimate, much less, if they be sons of the wife by an appointed kinsman."[6]

Mitakshara.—"The masculine gender is not here used restrictively. It must be, therefore, understood that the wife, the daughter, the mother or any other female,

(1) Mit., II-X, §§ 1-15; Dayabhag, Ch. V, §§ 1-20.
(2) Hindu Inheritance (Removal of Disabilities) Act, 1928, S. 3.
(3) Act XII of 1928 (which came into force on the 20th September, 1928).
(4) II-2-3 §§ 37-42; 14 S. B. E. 230.
(5) Manu, IX-201.
(6) Narad, XIII-21; cited in Mit., II-X-3.

being disqualified for any of the defects which have been specified, is likewise excluded from participation."[1]

"Under the term 'others' are comprehended one who has entered into an order of devotion, an enemy to his father, a sinner in an inferior degree. . . . Narad also declares: 'An enemy to his father, an outcast, an impotent person and one who is addicted to vice, take no share of the inheritance, even though they be legitimate; much less, if they be sons of the wife by an appointed kinsman.'"[2] The specific mention of "legitimate" issue and "offspring of the wife" is intended to forbid the adoption of other sons.[3]

Yadnavalkya.—"An impotent person, an outcast and his issue, one lame, a mad man, an idiot, a blind man, and a person afflicted with an incurable disease, as well as others similarly disqualified, must be maintained; excluding them, however, from participation."[4]

2353. Disqualified Heirs.—The several mental and physical defects disqualifying a person from inheritance are based upon the Vedic text which declares: "Females and persons deficient in the organ of senses are deemed incompetent to inherit." The reason assigned is that disabilities of this life are the result of past sins; but the true reason is obvious. They took no hand in fighting and therefore took no hand in the estate (§§ 16-17).

The old reason has disappeared but the old disability remained, till it was removed by the Legislature. Even before the enactment removing them, it was doubted in some cases, whether infirmities, such as congenital leprosy,[5] or lameness,[6] blindness,[7] or a nasal tumour,[8] were sufficient to disqualify a person from inheritance. But a person suffering from congenital insanity or imbecility, and thus unfit to discharge the religious and other duties incumbent upon the heir, and, indeed unfit for the ordinary intercourse of life, stands upon a different footing,[9] but a mental disqualification admits of degrees, and the court would be loth to disinherit the heir, unless it is convinced that the disability was of a pronounced type and such as renders the person wholly devoid of understanding and incompetent to discharge the duties incumbent upon the heir,[10] which must be established by the clearest and most satisfactory evidence.[11]

Blindness Deafness and Dumbness must be congenital.

2354. Of these, it has been held that, in order to disqualify, the blindness, deafness and dumbness must be both congenital[12] and incurable at the time the succession

(1) Mit., II-X-8.

(2) Narad, II-13, 21; cited in Mit., II-X-3; Dayabhag, V-11, 13.

(3) Mit. X-11. The correct translation should be "forbid the inheritance of other descriptions of sons" (Colebrook's f.-n.)

(4) Mandlik, p. 223. Mitakshara denotes a whole chapter to the exposition of this text; Mit., II-X-1-15. Mayukh, IV-XI-4; Vivad Chintamani, 242; 3 Dig., Bk. V, Ch. V, p. 329.

(5) Kayarohana v. Subbaraya, 38 M. 250, approved in Ramabai v. Harnabai, 48 B. 363 P.C.

(6) Venkata v. Purshottam, 25 M. 133; but see Fithick v. Juggut Mohini, 22 W. R. 348.

(7) Yellavajhulu v. Yellavajhulu, 37 M. L.J. 405.

(8) Subba v. Venkatarama, 26 M.L.J. 508.

(9) Tirumamagal v. Ramaswami, 1 M. H.C.R. 214; Muthusami v. Meenammal, 43 M. 464; Ramabai v. Harnabai, 48 B. 363 P.C.

(10) Ran Bijai v. Bisheshar, 18 C. 111 (118) P.C.

(11) Surti v. Narain Das, 12 A. 530 (533).

(12) Dayabhag, V-V-9. The term 'born' is connected in construction with the words 'blind' and 'deaf'; Gungeshwar v. Durga, 15 C. 17 P.C.; Bakubai v. Manchabai, 2 B.H.C.R. 5; Vallabh Ram v. Hariganga, 4 B.H.C.R. (A. C.) 135; Bharmappa v. Ujjan, 46 B. 455 (457, 458); Murarji v. Parvatibai, 1 B. 177; Umabai v. Bhavu, 1 B. 57; Kalidas v. Krishna, 11 W.R. 11; Bharmappa v. Bharmagauda, 23 Bom. L.R. 1320; Mohesh v. Chunder, 23 W.R. 78; Pudiava v. Pavanasa, 45 M. 949 F.B., overruling Yellavajhula v. Yellavajhula, 43 M. 4 (16, 18); contra in Pratapgavri v. Mul Shankar, 26 Bom. L. R. 269, following Charu Chunder v Nobo Sundari, 18 C. 327.

opened.[1] The Mitakshara describes the blind as "destitute of the visual organ,[2] i.e., he must be stone-blind. Both a male and a female heir, e.g., the daughter, are disqualified for this and similar disabilities,[3] which, of course, must be strictly proved by those alleging them.[4]

2355. Want of Limb or Organ.—This must be such as to amount to serious physical disability. So in the Dayabhag, it is said that the disqualifying lameness must be such that "one cannot walk."[5] It must be also congenital.[6]

2356. Lunacy and Idiocy.—The Mitakshara comments on the term "madman" as one affected by any of the various sorts of insanity, proceeding from air, bile or phlegm, from delirium or from planetary influence, and, an "idiot" as a person deprived of the internal faculty, meaning one incapable of discriminating right from wrong.[7] It has been held that these definitions harmonize with the English view of lunacy and idiocy,[8] according to which idiocy is non compos mentis, but does not imply utter mental darkness.[9]

In order to disqualify, the lunacy or idiocy need not be congenital[10] or incurable, provided it exists when the succession opens.[11] But, then, it must at least be idiocy, and not a mere weakness of intellect, dullness or stupidity.[12] In one case, a boy bordering on idiocy was allowed to transmit a heritable right to his widow.[13] In the case of coparcenary property, where the interest of a coparcener vests immediately on his birth, the case would be different. If he then suffered from no disability, the estate would vest in him, and what vested in him then, could not be divested by his subsequent disability.[14] A lunatic, though disqualified to inherit, is not disqualified to possess property, of which he is possessed.[15]

2357. Leprosy.—In order to disqualify a person from inheritance, the leprosy must be of a virulent form.[16]. It is only the case of agonizing, sanious or ulcerous type of leprosy, and

---

(1) Muddun Gopal v. Khikhinda, 18 C. 341 (348) P.C.; Karalicharan v. Ashutosh, 50 C. 604; Savitri Bai v. Bhao Bhat, 51 B. 50; Nana v. Jogilal, 19 N.L.R. 69: 71 I.C. 566: (1923) N. 151.

(2) Mit., II-X-2.

(3) Bakubai v. Manchhabai, 2 B.H.C. R. 5.

(4) Karali v. Ashutosh, 50 C. 604; Budh Sagar v. Bishnu Sahai, 47 A. 327.

(5) Dayabhag, V-V-10.

(6) Venkata v. Purushottam, 26 M. 133; c.f., Futtick v. Juggut, 22 W.R.. 348.

(7) Mit., II-X-2.

(8) Tirumamagal v. Ramaswami, 1 M. H.C.R. 214 (215).

(9) 1 Gour's Penal Law, (5th Ed.), §§ 696-701.

(10) Bodhu Narain v. Omrao Singh, 13 M.I.A. 519 (531); Dwarka Nath v. Mahendra Nath, 9 B.L.R. 198; Braja Bhukan v. Bichan, 14 W.R. 330; Ram Sahye v. Laljee, 8 C. 149 (153), followed in Ram Soonder v. Ram Sahye, 18 C. 919 (922); Purna Chandra v. Gopal, 8 C.L.J. 369; Murarji v. Parvati, 1 B. 177; Deo Kishen v. Budh Prakash, 5 A. 509; Ram Singh v. Bhant, 38 A. 117; contra in Hotchand v. Manghanmal, 8 S.L.R. 279 F.B.: 29 I.C. 42; Muthusami v. Meenammal, 43 M. 464; contra in Murarji v. Parvati Bai, 1 B. 177 (obiter by Westropp, C.J.); Bapuji v. Dattu, 47 B. 707; Raja v. Bhimrao, 57 I.C. (N.) 647. (That idiocy must be congenital is unsound).

(11) Dwarkanath v. Denobundo, 18 W. R. 305; Deo Kishen v. Budh Prakash, 5 A. 509; Bapuji v. Dattu, 47 B. 707.

(12) Surti v. Narain Das, 12 A. 530.

(13) Amrit v. Manik, 12 B.H.C.R. 79; W. & B., H.L. Inter., p. 155.

(14) Muthusami v. Meenammal, 43 M. 464.

(15) Court of Wards v. Kupulmun, 19 W.R. 164.

16) Bhagaban v. Ram Prapana, 22 C. 843 (858) P.C.; Janardhan v. Gopal, 5 B. H.C.R. (A.C.) 145; Ananta v. Ramabai, 1 B. 554; Ranchod v. Ajoobai, 9 Bom. L.R. 1149 (1151); Raju v. Ramasami, 16 M.L.T. 254: 25 I.C. 963.

not of the anaesthetic type,[1] that creates the disqualification.[2] A person suffering from the anaesthetic form of leprosy, though considered incurable by medical men, is not disentitled to inherit. "Both the texts of the Hindu Law and the decided cases fully establish that it is only the agonizing, sanious or ulcerous type of leprosy that can be regarded as a ground of exclusion. It may be that it is only that type that was regarded as incurable by the Hindu writers. It is not safe to adopt the test whether the disease is curable or not. This is very much a matter of opinion, on which the medical profession itself might be divided. The test would, moreover, be an indefinite one for legal purposes, as what is at one time regarded as curable may, at other times, be regarded as incurable. Deformity and unfitness for social intercourse, arising from the virulent and disgusting nature of the disease, would appear to be what has been accepted in both the texts and the decisions as the most satisfactory tests."[3] But, however, practical or convenient, this was not the Shastric test, which seems to have regarded the disability as arising from permanent disability, which is clear from the concluding clause "other incurable disease," which seems to suggest that all other disabilities must be of a like nature.

2358. Impotency.—Procreation of a son being the one desirable purpose of life, impotency was naturally regarded as a serious disqualification, and eunuchs were debarred of all civil rights. The impotency may, of course, be both congenital and incurable. In this and similar cases, the courts require the very clearest proof of the disease before decreeing disinherison.[4]

2359. Other Incurable Diseases.—The other incurable diseases must be, in point of seriousness, ejusdem generis, that is to say, they must be of such a malignant type as to put the sufferer out of count as a member of society.[5] In one case, the disease alleged was the "drying up of the bones," some kind of atrophy, but the plea failed for want of cogent evidence.[6] It has been held that the disqualifying disease must be beyond the skill of medical science. Dropsy, as such, is not an incurable disease, nor is so a nasal tumour.[7]

2360. Outcast.—The texts provide for the exclusion of an outcast, but this was repealed by the Caste Disabilities Removal Act, 1850,[8] so that conversion or loss of caste is no longer any disqualification for inheritance (S. 308). The marriage of a man with a woman of lower grade in the same caste being, in the absence of custom, valid, there is nothing to

(1) Surendranath v. Asutosh, 27 C.W.N. 950: (1923) C. 33; Ramabai v. Harna Bai, 48 B. 363 (367, 368) P.C.

(2) Bhagaban v. Ram Praparna, 22 C. 843 (858) P.C.; Lakhi v. Bhairab, 5 B.S.R. 315; Bhobunnessuree v. Gouree Dass, 11 W.R. 535; Janardhan v. Gopal, 5 B.H.C.R. (A. C.) 145; Ananta v. Ramabai, 1 B. 554; Muttevilaya v. Parasakti, 1 M.S. D. 239; Rangayya v. Thanikachalla, 19 M. 74; Kayaharona v. Subharaya, 38 M. 250 (253); Kelan v. Durga, 4 C.L.J. 323; Karalicharan v. Ashutosh, 50 C. 604.

(3) Kayarohana v. Subharaya, 38 M. 250 (255); Janardhan v. Gopal, 5 B.H.C. R. (A.C.) 145, approved in Ramabai v. Harnabai, 48 B. 363 P.C.; Ranchod v. Ajoobai, 9 Bom. L.R. 1149 (1151).

(4) Issur Chunder v. Ranee, 2 W.R. 125 (126); Nullit v. Bagola, 21 W.R. 249.

(5) Murli v. Jai Singh, 5 A.L.J. 115.

(6) Issur Chunder v. Ranee, 2 W.R. 125 (126).

(7) Subba v. Venkatarama, 56 M.L.J. 208: 23 I.C. 528.

(8) XXI of 1850, S. 1; Bhujjunlal v. Gayaprashad, 2 N.W.P.H.C.R. 446; Taijsingh v. Konsilla, 1 Agra 90; Honamma v. Timanabhai, 1 Bom. 559; Gopal v. Dhungazee, 3 W.R. 206; Kuruthedatta v. Mele, 1 L.J. (N.S.) 236; Subbaraya v. Ramaswami, 28 M. 327; Kunnilal v. Govind, 33 A. 256 P.C., reversing O.A. Govind v. Kunnilal, 29 A. 487; Jabha v. Mehtab, 1867 P.R. No. 67; Goverdhan v. Piara, 1872 P.R. No. 6; Gurumuksh v. Mitta, (1872) P.R. No. 12.

disqualify him or his issue from inheritance.[1] Nor does the conversion of a Hindu woman to Mahomedanism affect her right of succession except to her Hindu husband.[2] Similarly, dancing girls, though outside the pale of the Hindu religion, still retain their Hindu Law, and their children retain that right, irrespective of their father, if they follow the Hindu religion and adopt its manners and custom. Where, therefore, a dancing girl had two sons, the grandson of one son was held entitled to sue as reversioner to the estate of the great-grandson of the other son.[3] An Englishman lived with a Brahmin woman who, however, lived apart from him. She had two sons by him. It was held that they were Hindus and would be classed as Shudras, and in the absence of preferential heirs, would inherit the property of their father and of one another.[4] And the fact that their mother lived in adultery, would not impair the right[5] (S. 302).

Clause (3).

The disqualification of a person disqualifies his widow[6] and adopted son and even his other heirs since a disqualified person has no jural existence, and having no rights of his own he can transmit no rights to his heirs.[7] But this does not mean that the heir cannot by his relationship with his claim to another relation.

Dayabhag heirs.

333. (1) Except as provided in the Hindu Women's Right of Property Act 1937, the heirs of an intestate deceased are in the first instance the same relations as are enumerated in section 313 (1) except—

(a) That the father takes before the mother;

(b) That as between married daughters, the daughter who has or one who is likely to have male issue is entitled to preference;

(c) and the right of the daughter to inherit is subject to her chastity at the time the succession opened.

(2) Failing the last, the heir is the nearest of kin drawn from the following classes of persons in the order named:—

(i) Sapindas;
(ii) Sakulyas;
(iii) Samanodaks;
(iv) Bandhus, other than those taking as sapindas;
(v) Preceptor;
(vi) Pupil;
(vii) Fellow student;
(viii) The Crown.

2361. Analogous Law.—The Dayabhag contains a long disquisition on the subject of succession[8] which generally follows the Mitakshara except upon the three points noted in this section. Both the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag enumerate the nearest heirs and then leave the more distant ones to be ascertained, by the test of propinquity, in the Mitakshara, and by that of spiritual efficacy in the Dayabhag. But since the two are closely co-related in the Hindu system it follows that they are for the most part merely the two convergent standpoints from which the question of heirship is viewed in each school. The several points of difference that have

(1) Har Prasad v. Kewal, 47 A. 169.
(2) Gansham Das v. Saraswati, 87 I. C. 621: (1925) M. 861.
(3) Visvanath v. Doraiswami, 48 M. 944; Ratna v. Krishna, (1937) M. 353.
(4) Mayna Bai v. Uttaram, 8 M.I.A. 425, on remand 2 M.H.C.R. 196.
(5) Venku v. Mahalinga, 11 M. 393, explaining Mayna Bai v. Uttaram, 8 M. I.A. 425, on remand 2 M.H.C.R. 196.
(6) Mit., X-II-14.
(7) Budhu v. Sahodra, (1931) Pat. 367.
(8) Chapter XI.

arisen are due to ratiocination or the mental attitude of the people reflected in their local usage.

The principle of this section was settled by the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court, in which Mitter, J., laid down the above as the heirs of the deceased owner subject to the Dayabhag law.[1] But though this is the net result of the law, the process of reasoning by which it is reached, requires examination. Under the Mitakshara system, propinquity is the governing rule of succession; but the Dayabhag law of succession is the religious law and succession is mainly, though not solely,[2] based upon the doctrine of spiritual benefit, which the heir is supposed to confer upon the deceased.[3] As was observed in a case: "Spiritual benefit, notwithstanding some authorities to the contrary, is not always the guiding principle of inheritance under the Bengal school of law. The theory of spiritual benefit cannot apply to a good many cases of inheritance under the Dayabhag school of law. Spiritual efficacy, as a principal guiding rule of succession, must fail in the case of all female relations. The widow, the daughter, the mother, and the paternal grandmother are said to inherit under express texts. It was necessary, in their cases, to have recourse to a different principle, and that principle must have been affinity and affection, which had led the more ancient sages to say that they come in the line of heirs. Yadnyavalkya's texts, as well as the texts of many sages, could not be either easily avoided or reconciled with the theory of spiritual efficacy in all cases. In most cases, propinquity, spiritual efficacy and natural love and affection run in the same lines, and no difficulty arises, but whenever they run in different lines, Jimut Vahan was compelled to ignore spiritual efficacy, and have recourse to other principles or express texts."[4] This too was pointed out in an earlier case, in which another Hindu Judge had said: "The succession of females according to Hindu Law is quite exceptional, and is not founded upon the ordinary rule, viz., that of spiritual benefit. It is true that in the case of the widow, she confers some spiritual benefit, but if that were the sole test, she would have ranked much lower than what she does now. Daughters confer no benefit, but they succeed because their sons do. Thus, it is evident that succession of females according to Hindus is not a regular succession, and is not based upon the ordinary theory of spiritual benefit."[5]

But spiritual benefit is frequently a test and even a conditio sine qua non. It is, therefore, necessary to enquire what it means.

For a commentary on the Hindu Women's Right of Property Act, 1937, see Appendix.

2362. Spiritual Benefit.—It has been pointed out before that Hindus, with other ancient oriental races, were given to ancestor worship (§ 5). It was believed that on death, man passed from the material world into a shadowy region, where his earthly cravings continued. He needed food and drink, and it was but natural that those who took his estate had to perform this office. This was regulated by the priests with elaborate ceremonies, and of them, one of the earliest prescribes them in the following texts:—

Apastamb (Abridged).—"1-3. Formerly men and gods lived together in this world. Then the gods, as reward for their sacrifices, went to heaven, but men were

(1) Gooroo Gobind v. Anund Lall, 13 W.R. 49 (59) F.B.

(2) Akshay v. Hari Das, 35 C. 721 (725).

(3) Kali Pershad v. Anand Roy, 15 C. 471 (480) P.C.

(4) Per S. C. Mitter, J., in Akshay v. Hari Das, 35 C. 721 (726).

(5) Per S. C. Mitter, J., in Ganga Pershad v. Shumbhoonath, 22 W.R. 393 (394).

left behind. Those men who perform sacrifices in the same manner as the gods did, dwell after death with the gods and Brahma in heaven. Now, seeing men left behind, Manu revealed this ceremony, which is designated by the word shradh, and thus, this rite has been revealed for the salvation of mankind. At that rite the manes (of one's father, grandfather, and great-grandfather) are the deities to whom the sacrifice is offered. But the Brahmans who are fed are the sacrificial fire (the mouth of the gods).

"22. That rite must be performed in the latter half of every month. Numerous and distinguished offspring, success in agriculture and trade, store of cattle, success in battle and the attainment of general prosperity are the regards which the sacrificer obtains if he performs the ceremony at stated periods.

"23-24. The substances (to be offered) at these (sacrifices) are sesamum, mash, rice, barley water, roots and fruit. But the satisfaction of the manes is greater, if food mixed with fat and if beef, buffaloes' meat and the flesh of other tame and wild animals is offered to them."[1]

This was the original shradh; but it has since undergone a change. Manu's description of it is more elaborate:—

Manu.—"82. Each day let him perform a shradh with boiled rice and the like, or with water or with milk, roots, and fruit; for this he obtains favour from departed progenitors."[2]

"207. The divine manes are always pleased with an oblation of empty glades, naturally clean, on the banks of rivers, and in solitary spots.

"214. Having walked in order from North to South, and thrown into the fire all the ingredients of his oblation, let him sprinkle water on the ground with his right hand.

"215. From the remainder of the clarified butter, having formed three balls of rice, let him offer them, with fixed attention, in the same manner as the water, his face being turned to the South.

"216. Then having offered those balls, after due ceremonies and with an attentive mind, to the manes of his father, his paternal grandfather and great-grandfather, let him wipe the same hand with the roots of kus (grass), which he had before used for the sake of his paternal ancestors, in the fourth, fifth and sixth degree, who are the partakers of the rice and clarified butter thus wiped of.

"218. Whatever water remains in his ewer, let him carry back deliberately near the ball of rice, and, with fixed attention, let him smell those cakes, in order as they were offered.

"220. If his father be alive, let him offer the shradh to his ancestors in three higher degrees; or let him cause his own father to eat, as a Brahman, at the obsequies.

"221. Should his father be dead, and his grandfather living, let him, in celebrating the name of his father, that is, in performing obsequies to him, celebrate also his paternal great-grandfather."[3]

In course of time the shradh became sub-divided, and it was possible to perform a shradh for an individual ancestor or, as before, for the benefit of all ancestors generally. The latter was known as Parvan or ancestral and the former as Ekodisht or individual.[4] These two shradhs have, in course of time, acquired a legal significance.

A Parvan Shradh is a shradh with a double set of funeral balls; three balls are offered to the father, paternal grandfather, and great-grandfather; and three to the maternal grandfather, his father, and his grandfather; and the crumbs of each set to the remoter ancestors, paternal and maternal.[5]

2363. Parvan Shradh.—This ceremony consists in the presentation of certain number of oblations, namely, one to each of the first three ancestors in the paternal line and maternal line respectively or, in other words, to the father, the grandfather, and the great-grandfather, the

(1) 2 S. B. E. 138-140; last verse is incorrectly translated therein, see Sarv. Inh., pp. 49, 50.
(2) Manu, III-82.
(3) Manu, III-207, 214-216, 218, 220, 221.
(4) 2 Dig., 339.
(5) Ib.

maternal grandfather, maternal great-grandfather and the maternal great great-grandfather.[1]

The performance of an obsequial shradh postulates three degrees of kinship to the deceased: (1) those who receive the entire rice balls; (2) those who receive the lepa or scrapings (or, rather, wipings) from the hand; and lastly, (3) those who have to be content merely with the libations of water. These facts determine the degree of relationship between the two. The pindas are offered to the three immediate paternal ancestors, that is, the father, grandfather and great-grandfather, and the three immediate maternal ancestors, that is, the maternal grandfather, the maternal great-grandfather and the maternal great-great-granfather. He who offers a pinda and to whom a pinda is offered, are the sapindas of each other.

Next to them in degree are those to whom the lepas or wipings are offered. He who offers the pinda lepa and he to whom it is offered are sakulyas of each other.

Lastly, there are those to whom are offered libations of water, and he who offers and he to whom they are offered are samanodaks of each other.

2364. This is the first principle. But there still remains another. It is a principle of religious law that the deceased ancestor receives not merely the oblation offered to him but also participates in the benefit of oblations, which, though not offered to him, are yet offered to the paternal ancestors to whom he himself was bound to offer them while he was alive. This widens the circle of relationship beyond those directly receiving the oblation.[2] Now, as to those who make these offerings, Vishnu Puran describes them thus:

"The persons who are competent to perform the obsequies of relations connected by the offerings of the cake, are the son, grandson, great-grandson, the brother, the descendants of a brother, of the posterity of one allied by funeral offerings. In the absence of all these, the ceremony may be instituted by those related by presentation of water only; or those connected by offerings of cakes or water to maternal ancestors. Should both families in the male line be extinct, the last obsequies may be performed by women, or the associates of the deceased in religious or social institutions, or by any one who becomes possessed of the property of a deceased kinsman."[3]

It is thus clear that the performance of the obsequies was a duty first charged on the inheritance. In process of time, by a curious inversion of reasoning, the two came to be regarded as cause and effect, and the performance of a shradh, instead of a mere duty of the heir, became the cause of his succession.

2365. Relations Competent to Perform Shradh.—But whatever may be the nature of connection between the shradh and succession, the crucial question was what relations were eligible to perform it.

Bhavdev mentions the following relations as eligible to perform each kind of Shradh:—

(1) Parvan.—
- (1) Son;
- (2) Grandson;
- (3) Great-grandson;
- (4) Daughter's son;

(1) Cole, Mis. Essays, 166; Sarv. Inh., 225.
94; Nirnai Sindhu, 120.
(2) Dayabhag, XI-I-38; Shrikrishna,
(3) Vishnu Puran, 318.

(5) Son's daughter's son;
(6) Grandson's daughter's son.

(2) Ekodisht.—
(1) Son—
(i) Eldest son;
(ii) Youngest son;
(2) Grandson;
(3) Great-grandson;
(4) Widow—
(i) Sonless;
(ii) Mother of a disqualified son;
(5) Daughter—
(i) Maiden;
(ii) Betrothed;
(iii) Married;
(6) Daughter's son.
(7) Brother—
(i) Youngest full brother;
(ii) Eldest full brother;
(iii) Youngest stepbrother;
(iv) Eldest stepbrother;
(8) Brother's son—
(i) Son of youngest uterine brother;
(ii) Son of eldest uterine brother;
(iii) Son of youngest stepbrother;
(iv) Son of eldest stepbrother;
(9) Father;
(10) Mother;
(11) Son's widow;
(12) Son's daughter, maiden;
(13) Son's daughter, married;
(14) Grandson's widow;
(15) Grandson's daughter;
(16) Grandson's married daughter;
(17) Grandfather;
(18) Grandmother;
(19) Sapindas ex parte paterna;
(20) Samanodaks ex parte paterna;
(21) Sagotras;
(22) Maternal grandfather;
(23) Maternal grandmother;
(24) Maternal uncle;
(25) Sister's son;[1]
(26) Sapindas ex parte materna;
(27) Samanodaks ex parte materna,
(28) Widow belonging to a different caste;
(29) An unmarried woman living as wife;
(30) Father-in-law;
(31) Son-in-law;
(32) Grandmother's brother;

---

(1) Preferred to a stepbrother; Sukha- mayee v. Manoranjan, 89 I.C. (C.) 827.

(33) Strangers—
(i) Pupils;
(ii) Priests;
(iii) Spiritual preceptor;
(iv) Friend;
(v) Father's friend;
(vi) Servants of the same caste living in the same village.[1]

Raghunandan gives the same list except that the two differ on the competency of the maternal grandmother (No. 23) and the great grandson's widow to perform these sacred rites. Raghunandan denies the competency of the former, Bhavdev of the latter.

2366. It will be thus seen that even in this table, the relations are grouped consonantly with their propinquity. The sapindas are allowed to come before the sakulyas, because undivided oblations are considered to be of higher spiritual value than divided ones; and the sakulyas are in their turn preferred to the samanodaks, because divided oblations are considered to be more valuable than libations of water. It is true, that the members of the last class are not competent, to offer either oblations of food or libations of water; but even in their case the doctrine of spiritual benefit is not forgotten. Thus, for instance, the lowest amongst them, namely, the learned Brahmin of the same village, is allowed to come in, upon the express ground that the virtue of the deceased proprietor is renewed by the acquisitions of fresh merit, through the circumstance of his wealth devolving on a Brahmin.[2]

2367. Sapindas.—The question still remains who are the sapindas? The whole doctrine of sapinda is contained in the following passage of the Dayabhag:—

Dayabhag.—"Since the father and certain other ancestors partake of three oblations as participating in the offering of obsequies, and since the son and other descendants to the number of three present oblations to the deceased (or to be shared by his manes), and he who, while living presents an oblation to an ancestor, partakes, when deceased, of oblations presented to the same person, therefore, such being the case, the middlemost of seven who, while living, offered food to the manes of ancestors, and when dead, partook of offerings made to them, became the object to which the oblations of his descendants were addressed in their lifetime, and shares with them, when they are deceased, the food which must be offered by the daughter's son (and other) descendants beyond the third degree. Hence those ancestors to whom he presented oblations, and those descendants who present oblations to him partake of an undivided offering in the form of (pinda) food at obsequies. Persons who partake of offerings are sapindas."[3]

It will be seen from this that if two Hindus are bound, during the respective terms of their natural life, to offer funeral oblations to a common ancestor, either of them would be entitled, after his death, to participate in the oblations offered by the survivor to that ancestor or ancestors, and hence it is that the person who offers those oblations, the person to whom they are offered and the person who participates in them are recognized as sapindas of each other.[4]

2368. The sapindas may thus be divided into three classes:—

(1) The ancestors of a person to whom he is bound to offer a pinda.

(2) His descendants who, on his death, will similarly offer a pinda to him.

(1) Bhavdev, (Cal. Ed.), 348.
(2) Dayabhag, XI-VI-26.
(3) Ib., XI-I-38.
(4) Gooroo Gobind v. Anund Lal, 13 W.R. 49 (60) F.B.

(3) Other relations who are bound to offer a pinda to the ancestors to whom he is similarly bound to offer a pinda.

(4) Five female designated relations, viz:—

(a) The widow;
(b) The daughter;
(c) The mother;
(d) The father's mother's mother;
(e) The father's father's father's mother.

The relations who fall into the first class are his three immediate paternal and maternal father, grand-father and great-grandfather—altogether 6 relations.

Those who fall into the second class are his son, grandson, and great-grandson and his daughter's son, son's daughter's son and grandson's daughter's son—altogether 6 relations.

The third class includes all collateral relations, who may be grouped as follows:—

Firstly.—The brother, brother's son, brother's son's son, paternal uncle, paternal uncle's son, paternal uncle's grandson, paternal granduncle, paternal granduncle's son, and paternal granduncle's grandson—altogether 9 relations.

Of these the brother has to offer 3 pindas, one to each of the three paternal ancestors of the deceased, who are also his paternal ancestors. The brother's son will, however, offer only 2 pindas, one to his grandfather, that is, the father of the Propositus, and the other to his great-grandfather, that is, P's grandfather. The uncle and the uncle's son will also offer 2 pindas, one to each of the two paternal ancestors of P, viz., G.-F. and G.-G.-F., who are equally their grandfather and great-grandfather. The remaining relations offer only 1 pinda each, the brother's son's son to P's father (F), the uncle's son's son to grandfather (G.-F.). In this case, the paternal ancestors of P are also the paternal ancestors of all the 9 relations.

Secondly.—Sister's son, father's sister's son, grandfather's sister's son, brother's daughter's son, brother's son's daughter's son, paternal uncle's daughter's son, paternal granduncle's daughter's son, paternal uncle's son's daughter's son, and paternal granduncle's son's daughter's son—altogether 9 relations, shown in the next diagram.

Here, the sister's son offers 3 pindas, one to each of the three paternal ancestors of the deceased, they being his own maternal ancestors. The father's sister's son and the paternal uncle's daughter's son offer one pinda each to the two paternal ancestors of the deceased, viz., his grandfather and great-grandfather, they being their maternal ancestors. The brother's daughter's son offers 2 pindas one to the father and the other to the grandfather of the deceased, they being his maternal ancestors. The remaining five relations offer each one pinda to one or other of the three paternal ancestors of the deceased, that ancestor being their maternal ancestor. All these are bandhus ex parte materna of the Mitakshara school. They are sapindas of the Dayabhag school.

Thirdly.—Maternal uncle, maternal uncle's son, maternal uncle's grandson, maternal granduncle, maternal granduncle's son, maternal granduncle's grandson, maternal great-granduncle, maternal great-granduncle's son, maternal great-granduncle's grandson—altogether 9 relations.

The maternal uncle offers 3 pindas, one to each of the three maternal ancestors of the deceased, they being his paternal ancestors. The maternal uncle's son, the maternal granduncle and the maternal granduncle's son offer each 2 pindas to two out of the three maternal ancestors of the deceased, these ancestors being their paternal ancestors. The remaining five relations offer one pinda each to one or other of the three maternal ancestors of the deceased, those ancestors being their paternal ancestors. This is a case where some or all of the maternal ancestors of the deceased are the paternal ancestors of the 9 relations mentioned above. These are the bandhus ex parte materna of the Mitakshara school.

Fourthly.—Maternal aunt's son, maternal grandaunt's son, maternal great-grandaunt's son, maternal uncle's daughter's son, maternal uncle's son's daughter's son, maternal granduncle's daughter's son, maternal granduncle's son's daughter's son, maternal great-granduncle's daughter's son, maternal great-granduncle's son's daughter's son—altogether 9 relations.

Out of these, the maternal aunt's son offers 3 pindas, one to each of the three maternal ancestors of the deceased, they being also his maternal ancestors. The maternal grandaunt's son, the maternal uncle's daughter's son, and the maternal granduncle's daughter's son offer each 2 pindas to 2 out of the 3 maternal ancestors of the deceased, those ancestors being also their maternal ancestors. The remaining 5 relations offer each one pinda to one or other of the 3 maternal ancestors of the deceased, these ancestors being their maternal ancestors. These relations are also bandhus ex parte materna of the Mitakshara school.

2369. Female Sapindas.—The five before-mentioned female relations are sapindas, being mentioned in the Dayabhag as the direct heirs.[1]

The total number of sapindas in thus 53, of whom the Dayabhag enumerates only 42. Of these, 5 relations specified in the clause are females, and no less than 10, who, though males, are mentioned as taking through females, i.e., 15 out of 42 enumerated heirs, are either themselves females or take directly through females.

Now since such relations are classed as bandhus who take after all the agnatic kinsmen are exhausted, it follows that the Dayabhag gives precedence to bandhus, by including them in the list of agnatic sapindas and, as such, so far as these relations are concerned, in the tables of succession the two systems differ; otherwise, they more or less agree, though they approach the question from opposite standpoints.

2370. Sakulyas.—After the sapindas, the sakulyas succeed. The term has been already defined in S. 329, as persons related to the deceased in an unbroken line of male descent in the fourth, fifth and sixth degree. This is a sub-division unknow to the Mitakshara, which classes all agnatic relations up to the sixth degree as sapindas.

The total number of sakulyas is 33, as will be seen from the table of sapindas elsewhere given.

2371. Samanodaks.—Like the sakulyas, the samanodaks are also agnatic relations related to the deceased from the seventh to the fourteenth degree. This is also the Mitakshara conception of this term, with the slight difference, not recognized by the Dayabhag, that even relations beyond the fourteenth degree are deemed to be so related if the pedigree be clearly proved.

The samanodaks number 147, as already stated.

Order of Succession among Sapindas, etc.

334. The order of succession among sapindas, sakulyas and samanodaks is governed by the following rules:—

(1) Except in the cases stated below, those who offer pindas to the deceased are preferred to those who offer them to any of his ancestors;[2]

(2) And those who offer them to the deceased are preferred to those who accept them from the deceased;[3]

(3) A person who offers pindas to a near ancestor is preferred to one offering pindas to an ancestor more remote, irrespective of the number of pindas offered by each of them;[4]

(4) Those who offer oblations to both the paternal and maternal ancestors are preferred to those who offer them only to the paternal ancestors;[5]

---

(1) Dayabhag, XI-1-II, IV; Gooroo Govind v. Anand Lal, 13 W.R. 49 (52) F.B.

(2) Gooro Gobind v. Anand Lal, 13 W.R. 49 (49).

(3) Gobind v. Mohesh, 23 W.R. 127.

(4) Dayabhag, XI-VI-5, 6; Pran Nath v. Surrut Chunder, 8 C. 460.

(5) Hurri Das v. Bamachurun, 15 C. 780 (790, 791).

(5) Those who are competent to offer pindas to the paternal ancestors of the propositus are preferred to those who are competent to offer them only to their maternal ancestors, irrespective of the number of pindas offered;[1]

(6) Agnatic sapindas in any line are always preferred to the cognate sapindas of the same line;[2]

(7) Between an agnate sapinda and a cognate sapinda of equal degree of propinquity, the former is preferred to the latter, even though the latter may offer more pindas in which the deceased would participate;[3]

(8) Subject to the above, those who offer a larger number of pindas of a particular description are preferred to those who offer a less number;[4]

(9) And where the number of such pindas is equal, those that offer to nearer ancestors are preferred to those offering to more distant ones.

Exception to clause (1).—Nothing contained to clause (1) affects the priority of the sons, grandsons, great-grandsons and daughter's sons of the propositus.

2372. Analogous Law.—The rules regulating the order of succession, though ostensibly based upon the doctrine of spiritual benefit, do not ignore propinquity, and, in fact, whenever they tend to divert succession from the natural line, other rules come in to check their course. Such are rules stated in clauses (2) and (5), which prefer males to females and nearer relations to more distant ones, lineal to collateral and those directly related to those indirectly related to the propositus. As a matter of fact, shorn of their religious mask, they result in designating the same heirs as the the Mitakshara, which fixed their order by a more rational process of reasoning.

The term "offer pindas" in the section does not mean offer them in fact, but rather entitled to offer them in law. Consequently if such relation joins a sect that observed no caste offers no pindas, the right of inheritance would still be judged by that test.[5]

Clause (1).

2373. Pindas to the Deceased Preferred.—The first clause lays down a rule which simply means that a nearer relation is preferred to one more remote, since it is only the nearest relations that give such pindas. They are the son, grandson and great-grandson of the deceased, his widow, daughter and daughter's son, who all offer pindas to the deceased, and are preferred to the father and the rest. But the son's daughter's son and the grandson's daughter's son are exceptions to this rule, being allotted a place amongst this class, though they offer no pinda to the deceased.

Clause (2).

2374. Another rule arising out of the last is that those who offer pindas to the deceased are preferred to those who accept them from him. Therefore, the son, grandson and great-grandson, who offer oblations to the deceased, are

(1) 3 Dig., 480; Raj Kishore v. Gobind, 1 C. 27; Sheo Soondary v. Pirthee Singh, L.R. 4 I.A. 147 (152).
(2) Ib.
(3) Gooro Gobind v. Anand Lal, 13 W.R. 49 (59) F.B.
(4) Gooro Gobind v. Anand Lal, 13 W. R. 49 (59) F.B.; Gobind v. Mohesh, 23 W. R. 117.
(5) Nilanaksha v. Bajanikanta, 58 C. 1392 (1396).

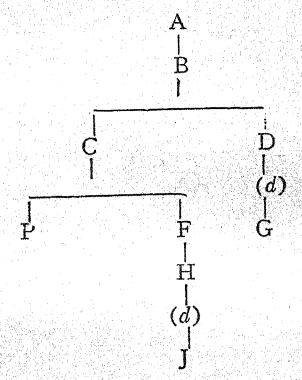
preferred to the father, grandfather and great-grandfather, who receive them from the deceased, the former succeeding before the latter. As in the Mitakshara, the son, grandson and great-grandson follow the rule of representation, and all inherit as a single heir, this being justified on the spiritual theory that their offerings have an equal spiritual value.

Clause (3).

2375. As a part of the same rule and, indeed, as a necessary corollary thereof, is the rule stated in this clause that he who offers oblations to the father of the deceased is superior to one who offers such oblations only to the grandfather and great-grandfather of the deceased.

So, in a case the family tree was as follows:—On P's death the contest lay between J who was his brother's son's daughter's son, and his uncle's daughter's son G, and the Court upheld J's claim, holding that he was scarcely to be distinguished from the brother's daughter's son included in the Daya Krama in the list of heirs, and on the ground that he offered oblations only to his (P's) grandfather and great-grandfather.[1] Even on the ground of propinquity, J, who is related to P through his father, would be preferred to G, who is related to him through his grandfather.



Clause (4).

2376. Then, again, those who offer oblations to both the paternal and maternal ancestors are superior to those who offer them only to the paternal ancestors. As such, a brother of the whole blood who presents six oblations to the ancestors of the deceased, three on the father's side and three on the mother's side, is preferred to a half brother who presents only three oblations to the common father,[2] and not likewise to the common maternal ancestors of the deceased, since his mother and the mother of the deceased were different persons.

The Dayabhag, moreover, expressly declares that the whole brother succeeds before the half brother.[3] But when there has been a separation, a half brother who becomes re-united, acquires the rank of a full brother as in the line of succession, which proves that the theory of spiritual benefit, placed by Jimut Vahan as regulating the order of succession, is not always an infallible guide, and at times looks like placing the cart before the horse when he subordinates natural affinity to the so-called religious efficacy.

Clause (5).

2377. Preference of Agnates.—The preference of agnates over cognates, characteristic of the Mitakshara system, extends even to the Dayabhag law. And the grounds for their preference are stated in clauses (3) and (4) drawn from the case in which Petharam, C.J., and Ghose, J., stated the rules as follows: "Between an agnate sapinda and a cognate sapinda

(1) Pran Nath v. Surrit, 8 C. 460.
(2) Dayabhag, XI-V-3, 12; Rajkishore v. Govind, 1 C. 24 (34) F.B.
(3) Dayabhag, XI-V-11, 12.

of equal degree of propinquity, the former is preferred to the latter, although the latter is the giver of a larger number of cakes in which the deceased would participate than the former, and also by the fact that agnate sapindas in any line are always preferred to the cognate sapindas of the same line. For instance, the father's son's son (i.e., a brother's son) of the deceased owner offers three pindas, one to his own father and the other two to the grandfather and great-grandfather respectively of the deceased, which two pindas only the latter participates. The father's daughter's son (i.e., a sister's son) offers three pindas, viz., to the father, grandfather and great-grandfather of the deceased, in all which pindas the latter participates. And yet the brother's son is preferential heir to the sister's son. Then, again, as between the father's great-grandson (i.e., brother's grandson) and father's daughter's son (i.e., sister's son) the former is the preferential heir, although he is more removed from the father of the deceased, and offers only one pinda (i.e., to the father) in which the deceased participates, whereas the father's daughter's son offers a larger number of pindas in which the deceased participates."[1]

Clause (6).

2378. Paternal Preferred to Maternal Sapindas.—Then, again, the relations who offer pindas to the paternal ancestors of the deceased are preferred to those who offer them only to his maternal ancestors, irrespective of the number of pindas offered, because those who offer to the paternal ancestors are of superior religious efficacy in comparison with the latter. This is supported in the Dayabhag as follows: "Now, the sapindas on the paternal line offer oblations to the paternal ancestors, which the deceased was bound to offer and in which he participates, and the sapindas in the maternal line offer oblations to the maternal ancestors, which the deceased was bound to offer, but in which he does not participate; so that, while they both confer spiritual benefit on the deceased, the former benefit him doubly by enabling him to participate in the oblations offered by them and by discharging a duty, that was incumbent on him, of offering oblations to certain ancestors, and the latter benefit him only in one way, namely, by offering certain oblations which he was bound to offer, and therefore, while both are entitled to inherit his estate, the latter succeed only on failure of the former."[2]

Clause (7).

2379. So, in a competition between the deceased's paternal grandfather's great-grandsons and his brother's daughter's sons, the former were held entitled to succeed in preference to the latter, because they offered an oblation to his grandfather and their great-grandfather in which the deceased participated, whereas the latter offered oblations to them as their maternal ancestors, although they offered two oblations as opposed to the only one offered by the former.[3] For the same reason, the father's brother's daughter's son[4] and the great-grandfather's daughter's son's daughter's son[5] are preferred to the mother's brother's son, even though the latter is specifically mentioned in the Dayabhag as an heir, and the former is not. On the same principle, the granduncle's daughter's son would succeed in preference to maternal uncle.[6]

---

(1) Huri Das v. Bama Churn, 15 C. 780 (791).
(2) Dayabhag, XI-VI-13, 20; Brajalal v. Jiban Krishna, 26 C. 285 (291).
(3) Gobind v. Mohesh, 23 W.R. 117 (120) F.B.
(4) Brajalal v. Jiban, 26 C. 285.
(5) Kailash v. Karuna, 18 C.W.N. 477.
(6) Kailash v. Karuna, 18 C.W.N. 477.

2380. Heir Fixed by the Number of Pindas Offered.—The rule that he who offers more pindas of the same description must be preferred to one who offers a less number of cakes of the same description which the deceased received or in which he participates, is subject to the preceding rules, under which it has been seen that a person who offers one oblation to the father of the deceased is preferred to another who offers two oblations to the grandfather and great-grandfather.[1] But subject to the other rules, Mitter, J., stated the two rules as follows: "Those who offer a larger number of cakes of a particular description are invariably preferred to those who offer a less number of cakes of the same description, and where the number of such cakes is equal, those that are offered to nearer ancestors are always preferred to those offered to more distant ones."[2] This is another way of securing propinquity. Under the rule, the brother comes before the uncle, because the former offers three oblations to the paternal ancestors of the propositus, while the latter offers only two. The pindas offered by the brothers are greater in number, and since the brother offers oblations to the father of the deceased while the uncle offers to his grandfather, he is preferable also under rule 3. The brother's son and the paternal uncle's son each offers to the father and grandfather of the deceased, besides offering an oblation to his own father; while the other offers to the grandfather and great-grandfather of the deceased, in addition to offering to his own father. Hence, though the number of pindas is the same in the two cases, still since the pindas offered by the brother's son are to the nearer ancestors of the deceased, the brother's son is preferable to the uncle's son.

Clauses (8), (9).

2381. The exception to rule 1, in favour of a son's and a grandson's daughter and brother's and nephew's daughter's sons of the propositus who claim succession in the order of proximity before the maternal grandfather, is justified on the ground of their special merit. Jagannath argues: "It must not be objected that, were it so, the son of a granddaughter would have a prior title, even though the father be living, inasmuch as he gives a funeral cake to the deceased himself. The oblations presented to the maternal grandfather and the rest are secondary, because they must follow funeral cakes offered to paternal ancestors; the son of a granddaughter can have no claim, so long as the giver or sharer of a principal oblation exists. Nor should it be objected as a consequence that the son of the late proprietor's daughter or of his father's daughter, and so forth, could have no title, if any kinsmen within the degree of sapinda were living. The Mahabharat showing that a daughter's son procures advantage even by his birth alone, it appears that he does confer important benefit. Sri Krishna Tarkalankar concedes this opinion."[3]

Exception to Rule (1).

2382. The son, the son's son and the son's son's son take as one heir by representation, as under the Mitakshara, in accordance with the following text:—

(1) Son.[4]

Dayabhag.—"The rule of distribution among sons extends equally to them and to grandson in the male line. There is not here an order of succession following the order of proximity according to birth. For those three persons, the son, grandson and

(1) Prannath v. Surut, 8 C. 460.
(2) Guru Gobind v. Anand Lal, 13 W. R. 49 (59) F.B.
(3) 3 Dig., 530.
(4) Dayabhag, X-I-31.

great-grandson, do not differ, in regard to the presenting of two oblations at solemn obsequies, one which it was incumbent on the ancestor to present, and the other which is to be tasted by his manes.[1]

In the Mitakshara country, the illegitimate son of a Shudra can inherit. But not so in Bengal, where an illegimate son of no caste can inherit. The Dayabhag repeats the same texts in favour of the right of a dasiputra to inherit,[2] but the courts have construed a dasiputra to mean the son by a female slave, which has become impossible since the abolition of the institution of slavery. The Dayabhag texts were examined by R. C. Mitter, J.,[3] in a case, in which it was held that it could not be broadly laid down that the illegitimate sons of a Shudra have a general right of inheritance to their father. All that could be said was that they may inherit in certain cases, though they have a right to maintenance in all cases.[4] In later cases, it was pointed out that the texts only warranted the claim of an illegitimate son begotton by a Shudra on a female slave, and that with the abolition of slavery, the text had become obsolete.[5] The difference between the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag schools is thus not due to different texts but to the difference in construction, the Calcutta court construing the term "dasi" literally as meaning a "slave," while the other courts construe it liberally as meaning a "mistress." But since the text is the same, the difference in construction does not appear to be justified, and it is submitted that the narrow view taken by the Calcutta Court requires re-consideration.

(2) Son's Son.[6] See § 2382 above.

(3) Son's Son's Son.[7] See § 2382 above.

(4) Widow.[8]

2383. The widow, unless she is childless,[9] obtains the estate as heir, and not in lieu of maintenance :—

Dayabhag.—"By this text relating to the order of succession, the right of the widow to succeed in the first instance is declared. It must not be alleged that the mention of the widow is intended merely for the assertion of her right to wealth sufficient for the subsistency. For, it would be irrational to assume different meanings of the same term used only once, by interpreting the word 'wealth' as signifying the whole estate in respect of brothers and the rest, and not the whole estate in respect of the wife. Therefore, the widow's right must be affirmed to extend to the whole estate."

The widow takes as the heiress of her husband, being entitled to all his interest, whether joint or separate, and as regards all property, whether movable or immovable.[10]. It is also well settled in Bengal that a widow, obtaining by inheritance her husband's share in joint property,

(1) Dayabhag, III-1-18; Ib., XI-1-32.
(2) Ch. IX-29, 30; Colebrooke's translation corrected, per R. C. Mitter, J., in Narain v. Rakhal, 1 C. 1, followed in Kirpal v. Sukurmani, 19 C. 94; Ramsaran v. Tekchand, 28 C. 194 (202).
(3) Narain v. Rahkal, 1 C. 1 (7).
(4) Ib.
(5) Kirpal v. Sukurmoni, 19 C. 91; Ram Saran v. Tekchand, 28 C. 194 (203).
(6) Dayabhag, III-1, 18; XI-1-34.
(7) Ib.; Gooroogobindo v. Hureemadub, 2 Hay. 401.
(8) Dayabhag, XI-1-6, 43; Cassinaut v. Hurrosoondry, 2 Morley's Dig., 198; Mohun Lal v. Sironmunee, 2 B.S.R. 40; 6 I.D. (O.S.) 389; Chunder Kant v. Bungshee, 6 W.R. 61; Deepo v. Gobinda, 16 W.R. 42; Durga Nath v. Chintamani, 31 C. 214.
(9) Bimola v. Dangoo, 30 I.C. (C.) 567, modifying, on review, contra in 19 W.R. 189.
(10) Dayabhag, XI-1; Cassinaut v. Hurrosoondry, 2 Mor. Dig., 198; Thakoor Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 13; Bhugwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M.I.A. 487; Durga Nath v. Chintamani, 31 C. 214 (218).

is entitled to separate possession by partition with her coparceners, unless there be a bar on equitable grounds.[1]

2384. The question whether the widow could be excluded from inheritance by custom, was raised and decided against the widow in an old case decided in 1847, in which the widow's suit for possession was resisted on the ground of a peculiar family custom excluding childless widows from succession to the properties of her husband and father or grandfather, as the case may be, and entitling her only to maintenance.[2]

It is clear that the widow in Bengal, as well as elsewhere, takes only a limited interest and that her interest is divested by the subsequent birth[3] or adoption of sons (S. 49).

Where there are several widows, they succeed jointly with the right of partition and survivorship inter se, and in this respect their position is similiar to the Mitakshara co-widows inheriting to their husband. (S. 290).

(5) Daughter.

2385. "Daughters confer no benefit, but they succeed because their sons do."[4] This is in accordance with the following text:—

Dayabhag.—"2. It is the daughter's son, who is the giver of a funeral oblation, not his son nor the daughter's daughter; for the funeral oblation ceases with him.

"3. Therefore, the doctrine should be respected which Dikshit maintains; namely, that a daughter who is mother of male issue, or who is likely to become so, is competent to inherit; nor one, who is a widow, or is barren, or fails in bringing male issue as bearing none but daughters, or from other cause."

By the law of Bengal, the unmarried daughter is first entitled to inherit, if there be no maiden daughter, then the daughter who has and the daughter who is likely to have male issue are together entitled to the succession. Daughters who are barren, or widows without male issue or mothers of daughters only, can, under no circumstances, inherit.[5]

Of daughters, then, only the following succeed:—

(1) Unmarried daughter.[6]

(2) Daughter with son or who is likely to have male issue.[7]

Daughters who are—

(1) Barren, or

(2) Widows, or

(3) Without male issue, as mothers only of daughters, are altogether excluded from inheritance.[8] A childless widow is excluded,[9] even though she may re-marry.

2386. Under the Widows' Re-marriage Act, it is competent to a widowed daughter to re-marry and beget sons after the death of her

---

(1) Soudamuney v. Jogesh Chunder, 2 C. 262; Janoki v. Mothura, 9 C. 580; Durga Nath v. Chintamoni, 31 C. 214 (218).

(2) Ibid.

(3) Russio Lal v. Purushmonee, 3 B. S.D.A. 205: 9 I.D. (O. S.) 430.

(4) Bamundoss v. Tarinee, 7 M.I.A. 169 (183).

(5) Per R. C. Mitter, J., in Gunga v. Shumbhonath, 22 W.R. 393 (394).

(6) Benode Kumari v. Purodhan, 2 W. R. 176 (177).

(7) Radha Kishen v. Ram Mundul, 6 W.R. 147.

(8) Malkundlal v. Manmohini, 19 C.W. N. 472: 26 I.C. 903; Itcha v. Nilmani, 15 I.C. (C.) 169.

(9) Raj Chunder v. Dhunmunee, 3 B. L.R. 482: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 1033; Taramonee v. Lukheemonee, Marsh 29; Bimola v. Dangoo, 30 I.C. (C.) 467, contra 19 W.R. 189 overruled.

father,[1] but if she re-married and begot a son before her father's death, then the estate would vest in her and would not be divested by the subsequent death of her son.[2] So, it has been held that the daughter would inherit the estate if she was a childless widow when the succession opened, provided she was of marriageable age, in which case she must be deemed to be likely to become the mother of male issue, because she could re-marry under the Act. But the Dayabhag did not contemplate re-marriage of widows such as has been legalized by the Act, and an ancient text cannot be construed in the light of subsequent legislation.

2387. Every married daughter is presumed to be likely to beget male children. If, therefore, she was married and was not past the child-bearing age, she would inherit to her father. It is then immaterial that she becomes a widow or turns out barren afterwards, since an estate once vested cannot be devested by subsequent disability.[3]

Daughters, like co-widows, take a joint estate, with the right of partition and survivorship. When once an estate vests in two daughters, their right of survivorship, which is a vested right, cannot be devested by one of the daughters becoming widowed or childless.[4]

2388. It has already been seen[5] that unchastity in a female heir disqualifies her from inheritance. This disqualification extends to all female heirs, and their re-marriage is, for this purpose, regarded as an act of unchastity, unless custom comes to their rescue and permits it without forfeiture; of course, the female would be disqualified from inheritance, if she was in the keeping of a man when the succession opened,[6] even though she might have afterwards married him.[7]

Unchastity a Disqualification.

2389. The daughter's son gives a funeral oblation to his maternal grandfather and is therefore his heir.[8]

(6) Daughter's Son.

Where a testator left only two issues, one a grandson through a predeceased daughter and another a daughter, a childless widow, the former was held entitled to perform the religious ceremonies in preference to the daughter, for the testator's spiritual benefit, on the failure of the executor of the will to perform the same, and to receive the income of the trust funds though he could not appropriate the corpus.[9] The daughter's son's son is not an heir under the Dayabhag law, though he is a bandhu under the Mitakshara. On the principle that those who offer pindas directly to the deceased are preferred to those who make offerings in which the deceased merely participates, the next persons to come in the list should be the son's daughter's son and the grandson's daughter's son and they have been assigned this place by Messrs. Sarvadhikari and Ghose,[10] while Mr. Sarcar places them after the mother's sister's

(1) Hindu Widow's Re-marriage Act (XV of 1856), S. 4; Makunda v. Mon Mohini, 19 C.W.N. 472.

(2) Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act (XV of 1856), S. 8; Binola v. Dangoo, 19 W.R. 139.

(3) Amritlal v. Rajonikant, 23 W. R. 214 (217) P.C.

(4) Strimuttu v. Dorasinga, 6 M.H.C. R. 310; Boidyanath v. Durga Churn, cited in Amrit Lall v. Rajoneekant, 23 W.R. 214 (218) P.C.

(5) S. 306, ante, and Comm.

(6) Mit., II-I-§§ 37-39; Dayabhag, XI-I-§§ 47, 48; Mayukh, IV-8 §§ 2, 6, 8, 9; Smriti Chandrika, XI-I-§§ 12-21; Vivad Chintamani, 289-291; Kery Kolitani v. Moneeram, 13 B.L.R. 1, affirmed O.A. 5 C. 776 P.C.

(7) Aili v. Aidew, 24 C.W.N. 173.

(8) Dayabhag, XI-II, 2-17-29; Gunga Pershad v. Shambhoonath, 22 W.R. 393.

(9) Sib Chunder v. Treeporah, Fulton 98: 1 I.D. (O.S.) 703.

(10) Sarv. Inh., 821; Ghose H.L. (3rd Ed.), 135 (136).

son,[1] though the judicial decisions relegate them to a place below the paternal great-grandfather's daughter's son.[2]

2390. This exhausts the heritable descendants of the deceased. After them come the ascendant sapindas agnates having precedence over the cognates in the following order :—

(7) Father.

2391. The father's right is equally supported by an express text :—

Dayabhag.—"If there be no daughter's son, the succession devolves on the father and not on the mother (before the father) nor at once on both parents. For, that is contrary to Vishnu's text: 'If there be none, it belongs to the father: if he be dead, it appertains to the mother.'[3]

"3. This is a result, too, of reasoning. The father's right of succession should be after the daughter's son and before the mother; for, the father offering two oblations of food to other manes in which the deceased participates, is inferior to the daughter's son who presents one oblation to the deceased and two to other manes in which the deceased participates."[4]

The Mitakshara places the mother before the father, and hence a long apologia in the Dayabhag for reversing the order of succession.

(8) Mother.

2392. The mother's claim is supported by the following text :—

Dayabhag.—"If the father be not living, the succession devolves on the mother; for, immediately after propounding the father's right to the estate, Vishnu's text declares: 'If he be dead, it appertains to the mother.' "

"2. This, too, is reasonable; for, her claim properly precedes that of the brothers and the rest; since it is necessary to make a grateful return to her, for benefits which she has personally conferred by rearing the child in her womb and nurturing him during his infancy, and also because she confers benefits on him by the birth of other sons who may offer funeral oblations in which he will participate.[5]

Ib. (XI-VI-3).—"Nor can it be pretended that the stepmother, grandmother and great-grandmother take their places at the funeral repast, in consequence of (ancestors being deified with) their wives; for the terms 'mother' (and grandmother and great-grandmother, etc.) (in such texts as the following) bear their original sense of his own natural mother, 'father's natural mother', and 'grandfather's natural mother' and it is by these terms that they are described as taking their places at the final repast. Thus it is said: 'A mother takes with her husband the funeral repast consisting of oblations to the manes; and the paternal grandmother with her husband, and the paternal great-grandmother with hers. But the introduction of stepmothers and the rest to a place at the periodical obsequies is expressly forbidden."[6]

It is thus clear that a stepmother has no right of succession to her stepson, and it has been so held.[7]

(9) Brother.

2393. The brother is expressly placed after the mother :—

Dayabhag.—"1. If the mother be dead, the property devolves on the brother; for Vishnu, having declared that 'If the father be dead, it appertains to the mother,' proceeds to say, 'On failure of her, it goes to the brothers.'

"3. That, too, is reasonable; for, the brother confers benefits on the deceased owner by offering three funeral oblations to his father and his other ancestors in

---

(1) Sar. H. L. (4th Ed.), 319, 320.
(2) Gobind Prashad v. Mahesh Chunder, 23 W.R. 117; Pran Nath v. Surrut, 8 C. 460 (463, 464); Huri Das v. Bamachurn, 15 C. 780 (793); Braja Lal v. Jiban Krishna, 26 C. 285 (291).
(3) Dayabhag, XI-III-1, 3.
(4) Dayabhag, XI-IV-3-6.
(5) Dayabhag, XI-IV-1, 2 (§§ 3-7 combat the contrary view that she should have precedence over the father).
(6) Dayabhag, XI-VI-3.
(7) Lalchi Priya v. Bhairabchandra, 5 B.S.R. 369: 7 I.D. (O.S) 612; Bhyrobee v. Nub Kissen, 6 B.S.R. 61: 7 I.D. (O.S.) 712; Alhadmoni v. Gokoolmoni, (1852) 8 S.D.A.B. 563: 12 I.D. (O.S.) 438.

which the deceased participates and he occupies his place as presenting three oblations to the maternal grandfather and the rest, which the deceased was bound to offer; and he is, therefore, superior to the brother's son, who has not the same qualifications. But deriving his origin from the mother, the brother, though he does possess these qualifications, is inferior to the mother; and his succession, therefore, very properly takes effect after her.[1]

"9. Here, again, a brother of the whole blood has the first title under the following text (§ 10), and even under the general rule for the brother's succession. The meaning is that the whole brother shall inherit in the first place: but if there be one, then the half brothers; for he also is signed by the word brother, being issue of the same father.

"10. The passage alluded to (§ 9), is as follows: A re-united brother shall keep the share of his re-united (co-heir) who is deceased or shall deliver it to (a son subsequently) born.

"15. Therefore, the half brother, who is again associated in coparcenary, shall not take the succession exclusively; but the whole brother (shares it), though not associated. Such is the meaning; and consequently, the whole brother, who is not re-united in parcenary, and the half brother who is associated, should divide the succession."[2]

2394. Thus, both by the text and on general principle, a brother of the whole blood is preferred to a brother of half blood, because the former offers oblations both to the paternal and maternal ancestors of the deceased, whereas the latter offers them only to the paternal ancestors, his maternal ancestors being different.[3] The preference of one over the other is, however, only limited to undivided property.[4]

A separated full brother is equal to a joint half brother, and they inherit in equal shares.[5]

Sister.

2395. It has been said before that the daughter is an heir, not because she confers any spiritual benefit, but because her son is an heir.[6] But the same argument does not bring in the sister whose son is an heir, though she herself is never the heir of her brother,[7] though in a case decided in 1830 it was held that a sister, enciente of a son, may take the heritage in trust for her son, to the exclusion of her paternal uncle's son.[8] In so holding, it was said: "The sister is the source of production of daughter's sons to the father and the medium of their relation. If, at the death of her brother Gorachand, no son of Chandra Mala existed, still (since the right of the father's daughter's son could not otherwise be established) she was entitled to enter on the succession and hold until production of her male issue. This, too, was analogous to the succession of the daughter to the estate of the father, who died leaving no male issue or widow. The sister's son, and not the sister, was entitled to the property; for he offered oblations (incompetent to the sister) at periodical obsequies."[9] Similar view was taken in another case decided in 1830, in which the sister was held

(1) Dayabhag, XI-V-1, 3.
(2) Dayabhag, XI-V-1, 3, 10, 15.
(3) Neelkisto v. Beer Chunder, 12 M.I.A. 523 (539-541); Sheo Sundary v. Pirthee Singh, L.R. 4 I.A. 147 (152), approving Rajkishore v. Gobind, 1 C. 27 F.B.; Susheela v. Bishampada, 60 C. 636 (639).
(4) Ishen Chunder v. Bhyrub Chunder, 5 W.R. 21; Rajkishore v. Gobind, 1 C. 27 F.B., approved in Sheo Soondary v. Pirthee Singh, L.R. 4 I.A. 147.
(5) Raj Kishore v. Gobind, 1 C. 27 F.B.; Sheo Soondary v. Pirthee Singh, L.R. 4 I.A. 147 (153).
(6) Per R. C. Mitter, J., in Ganga Pershad v. Shunbhoonath, 22 W.R. 393.
(7) Kirpa Mayee v. Damodar, 7 B.S.R. 226; Ram Dayal v. Maynee, 1 W.R. 227; Kalee Pershad v. Bhoirabee, 2 W.R. 180; Anund Chunder v. Teetooram, 5 W.R. 215; Rukkni v. Kadarnath, 5 B.L.R. (App.) 87.
(8) Karuna v. Jai Chundra, 5 B.S.R. 50.
(9) Karuna v. Jai Chandra, 5 B.S.R. 50 (54, 55): 7 I.D. (O.S.) 371 (375, 376).

entitled to hold possession as long as there was hope of her bearing a son.[1] But this view was not acceded to in later cases,[2] in which however, it was held that if the sister's son was conceived at the time the succession opened, he will succeed, but his mother had no right.

(10) Brother's Son.

2396. The right of the brother's son is provided by the following texts:—

Dayabhag.—"1. On failure of brothers, the brother's son is heir; for the text of Vishnu having declared, 'It goes to the brothers,' proceeds, 'After them it descends to the brother's sons.'

"2. Amongst these, the succession devolves first on the son of a uterine or whole brother; but if there be none, it passes to the son of the brother."[3]

Jagannath.—"The son of a uterine brother has the first claim because he confers benefit on the mother of the late proprietor; for it appears from a text cited by Jimut Vahan, Raghunandan and the rest that the father's natural mother also shares with her husband the funeral cake offered by a son's son; but those benefits cannot be conferred by the son of half brothers; however, on failure of other nephews, the son of a half brother may inherit."[4]

2397. As in the case of the brother, so in the case of the brother's son, a joint nephew is preferred to one separate,[5] and on the same principle, sons of brothers of the whole blood succeed before sons of brothers of the half blood,[6] and of two nephews of the whole blood, a re-united nephew succeeds before the one separated, and of the two nephews, one of the whole blood and the other of half blood, the latter, though united, succeeds equally with the former.[7] In other words, mutatis mutandis, the rules applicable to the brothers are equally applicable to the nephews, and it is so laid down in the Dayakram Sangrah:—

Dayakram Sangrah.—"3. Among brother's sons associated and unassociated, all of the whole blood, the succession devolves on the associated brother's son.

"4. In like manner, in the case of associated and unassociated brother's sons, all of the half blood, the succession devolves on the associated brother's sons of the half blood.

"5. But if the son of the whole brother were unassociated, and the son of the half brother associated, then they both inherit together."[8]

(11) Brother's Son's Son.

2398. The brother's grandson is preferred to the paternal uncle, as explained in the following text:—

Dayabhag.—"Accordingly (since superior benefits are conferred by such a successor) the brother's grandson, excludes the paternal uncle, for he is a giver of oblations to the deceased owner's father, who is the person principally considered.

"7. But the brother's great-grandson, though a lineal descendant of the owner's father, is excluded by the paternal uncle; for he is not giver of oblations, since he is distant in the fifth degree."[9]

In a competition between grand nephews of the whole and half blood, and those re-united and separate, the principle of preference is the same as is applicable to the brothers and nephews.

---

(1) Sumbochunder v. Ram Durga, 6 B. S.R. 291: 7 I.D. (O.S.) 885.

(2) Kesub Chunder v. Bishnu, (1860) 2 B.S. D.A. 340. To the same effect, Kalee Pershad v. Bhoirabee, 2 W.R. 180.

(3) Dayabhag, XI-VI-1, 2.

(4) 3 Dig., 519.

(5) Jandub v. Benodebehary, 1 Hyde. 214; Akshoy v. Haridas, 35 C. 721 (724).

(6) Dayabhag, XI-VI-2; Kylash Chunder v. Gooroo Churn, 3 W.R. 43, affirmed on review Gooroo Churn v. Kylash, 6 W. R. 93.

(7) Dayakram Sangrah, I-VIII-3-5, (Setlur), pp. 114, 115.

(8) Ib.

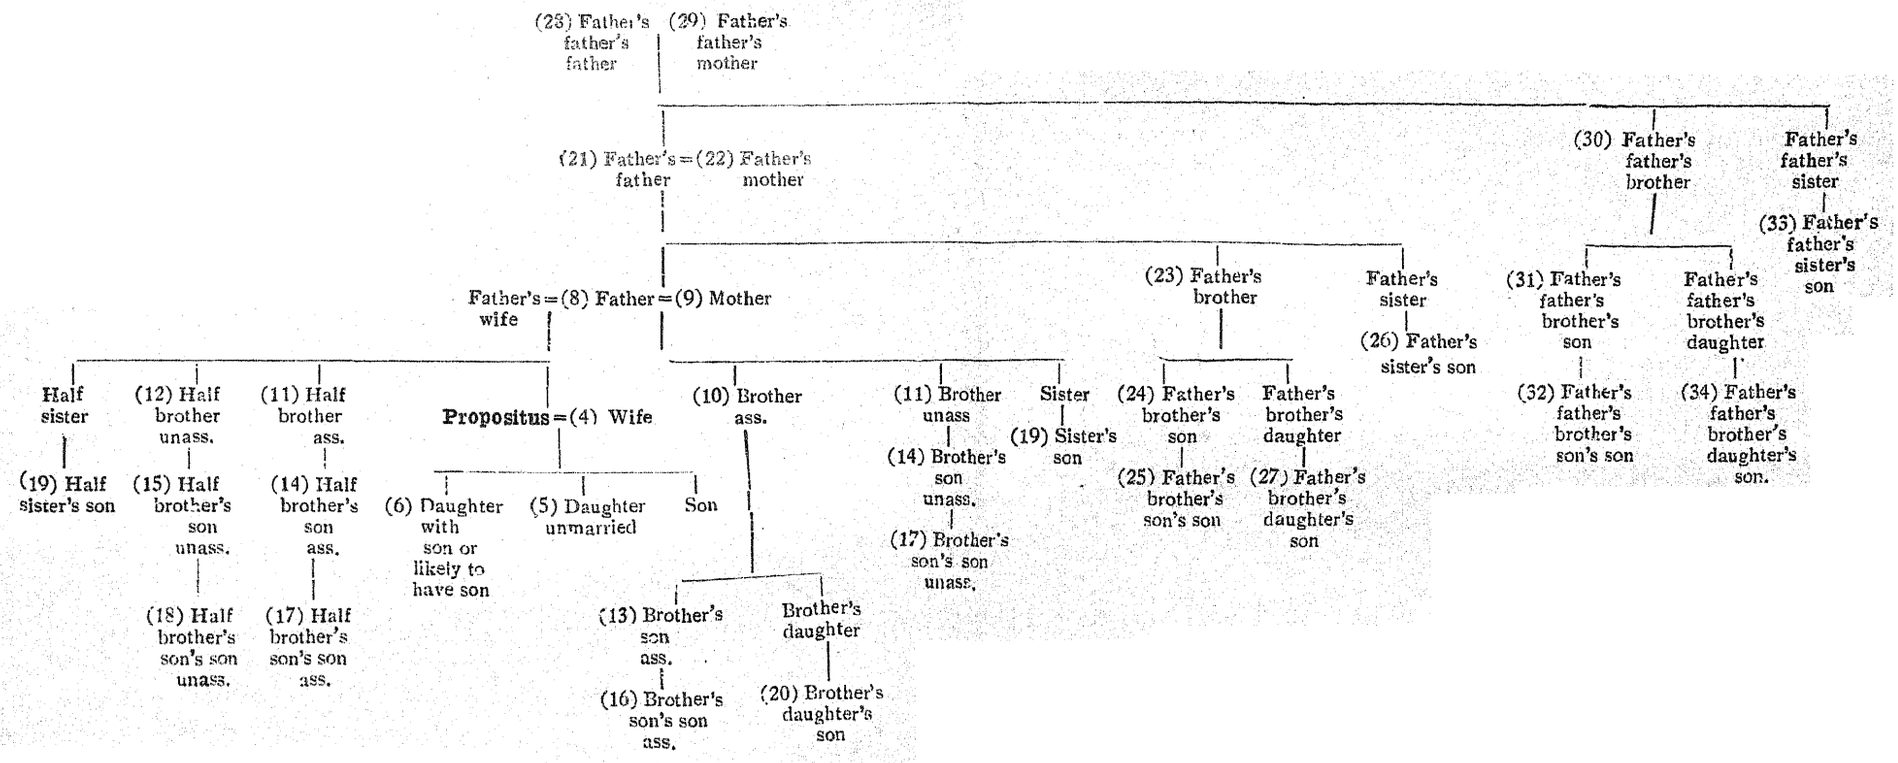
(9) Dayabhag, XI-VI-6, 7.

[To Face Page 1014.

DAYABHAG SAPINDAS



Though a grand nephew is an heir, a grand niece (brother's son's daughter) is not an heir.[1]

A brother's son's son's son, being in the fifth degree, is a sakulya and not a sapinda. As such, he cannot inherit, in preference to a brother's daughter's son, who is a sapinda.[2]

(12) Sister's Son.

2399. The father's daughter's son is expressly named in Dayabhag as an heir, in the following text:—

Dayabhag.—"8. But on failure of heirs of the father down to the great-grandson, it must be understood that the succession devolves on the father's daughter's son (in preference to the uncle), in like manner as it descends to the owner's daughter's son (on failure of the male issue), in preference to the brother."[3]

The position of the sister's son in the line of heirs in both textually recognized and judicially acknowledged.[4] As in the case of sons of brothers, no distinction is made in the case of sons of sisters of the whole blood and those of the half blood, both being equally entitled to succeed as provided in the following text:—

Dayakram Sangrah.—"According to Acharya Chudamani, the son of the proprietor's own sister, and the son of his half sister have an equal right of inheritance."

Neither a sister's daughter nor a sister's daughter's son is an heir.[5]

2400. The brother's daughter's son and the brother's son's daughter's son[6] are said to be next to inherit, but judicial authority places them lower down after No. 26, post.[7]

(13) Father's father;
(14) Father's mother;
(15) Father's father's son;
(16) Father's father's son's son;[8]
(17) Father's father's son's son's son.

2401. The grandfather's great-grandson is mentioned in the Dayabhag as an heir, but the brother's daughter's son is not so mentioned; and, therefore, the latter would be postponed to the former.[9]

(18) Father's sister's son.

He is also mentioned in the Dayabhag.[10]

(19) Father's father's father;[11]
(20) Father's father's mother;
(21) Father's father's father's son;

---

(1) Radha v. Doorga, 5 W.R. 131.

(2) Digumber v. Motilal, 9 C. 563 (567), followed in Guru Gobind v. Anund Lal, 13 W.R. 49 F.B.; contra in Kashee v. Raj Gobind, 24 W.R. 229 in which a Sakulya was held preferable to a cognate sapinda, dissented from as inconsistent with the Full Bench Case in 13 W.R. 49.

(3) Dayabhag, XI-VI-8.

(4) Rajchunder v. Goculchand, 1 B.S. R. 56: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 42; Katuma v. Jaichandra, 5 B.S.R. 50: 7 I.D. (O.S.) 371; Lakhi Priya v. Bhairab Chandra, 5 B.S. R. 369: 7 I.D. (O.S.) 612; Sumbuchunder v. Gungachurn, 6 B.S.R. 291: 7 I.D. (O.S.) 385; Guru Gobind v. Anand Lal, 13 W.R. 49 F.B.; Seeta Ram v. Fukeerchand, 15 W.R. 433; Ganesh v. Nilkomul, 22 W.R. 264.

(5) Kalee Pershad v. Bhoirabee, 2 W. R. 180; Krishna v. Secretary of State, 35 C. 631.

(6) Sarv. Inh., 822; Bhattacharya, H. L. (2nd Ed.), 504.

(7) Prannath v. Surrut Chunder, 8 C. 460: 3 Dig. 530.

(8) Dayabhag, XI-VI-9; Jugut Narain v. Collector, 4 C. 433-n; Oodoychurn, 4 C. 411 (413); Gopal v. Haridas, 11 C. 343.

(9) Jugut Narain v. Collector, 4 C. 413-n.

(10) Dayabhag, XI-VI-9.

(11) Sarv. Inh., 882, places before this the father's father's son's daughter's son, and the father's father's son's son's daughter's son.

(22) His son;[1]
(23) His son's son;[2]
(24) Paternal great-grandfather's daughter's son.[3]

2402. There is some conflict of views as to the order of the next following.[4]

(25) Son's daughter's son;
(26) Son's son's daughter's son;
(27) Brother's daughter's son;
(28) Brother's son's daughter's son.

As to these, Jagannath says: "It should be remarked that the son of a son's and of a grandson's daughter, and the son of a brother's and of a nephew's daughter, and so forth, claim succession, in the order of proximity, before the maternal grandfather; for they also confer benefits by the oblation of funeral cakes."[5]

(29) Paternal uncle's daughter's son;[6]
(30) Do. son's daughter's son;
(31) Paternal granduncle's daughter's son;[7]
(32) Do. son's daughter's son.

It has been held that the great-grandfather's son's daughter's son is entitled to succeed in preference to the maternal uncle.[8] They present an oblation to the deceased's paternal great-grandfather, in which the deceased participates.[9]

(33) The maternal grandfather.

Both the Dayabhag[10] and the Dayakram Sangrah place the maternal grandfather here.[11]

(34) Great-grandfather's son's daughter's son;[12]
(35) Mother's brother;
(36) Mother's brother's son;[13]
(37) Mother's brother's son's son.[14]

---

(1) Gopal Chunder v. Hari Das, 11 C. 343.

(2) Mahoda v. Kulcani, 1 B.S.R. 82.

(3) Dayabhag, XI-VI-9; Sarv. Inh., 823, places here the great-grandfather's son's daughter's son (No. 31) and the great-great-grandfather's grandson's daughter's son (No. 32).

(4) Sarv. Inh., places them earlier (Inh. 821); Sarkar places them after the maternal relations provisionally (H. L., 3rd Ed., 307, 308), while Mr. Ghose places them as in the text (H.L., 3rd Ed., 137, 138); Gobind Pershad v. Mohesh Chunder, 23 W.R. 117; Digumber v. Motilal, 9 C. 563; Huri Das v. Bama Churn, 15 C. 780.

(5) 3 Dig., 530.

(6) Gobindo v. Woomesh, (1864) W.R. 176; Guru Gobind v. Anand Lal, 13 W.R. 49 F.B.; Gopal v. Hari Das, 11 C. 343; Kedar v. Amrita Lal, 17 C.W.N. 492. He is preferred to a great-greatgrandfather's great-grandson; Kedar Nath v. Amrita Lal, 17 C.W.N. 492: 17 I.C. 283.

(7) Dayakram Sangrah, I-X-13 (Setlur, 117).

(8) Kailash Chandra v. Karuna, 18 C. W.N. 477, followed in Kedar Nath v. Hari Das, 43 C. 1 (11).

(9) Dayakram Sangrah, I-X-13 (Setlur, 117).

(10) Dayabhag, XI-VI-20.

(11) Dayakram Sangrah, I-X-14 (Setlur, 117).

(12) Great-grandfather's son's daughter's son is preferred to the maternal uncle; Kedar Nath v. Hari Das, 43 C. 1, though the latter is specially mentioned in the Dayabhag as heir and the former is not, and his precise position is not laid down in the cases; Kailash Chandra v. Karuna Kantha, 18 C.W.N. 477: 19 I.C. 677.

(13) Braja Lal v. Jiban Krishna, 26 C. 285.

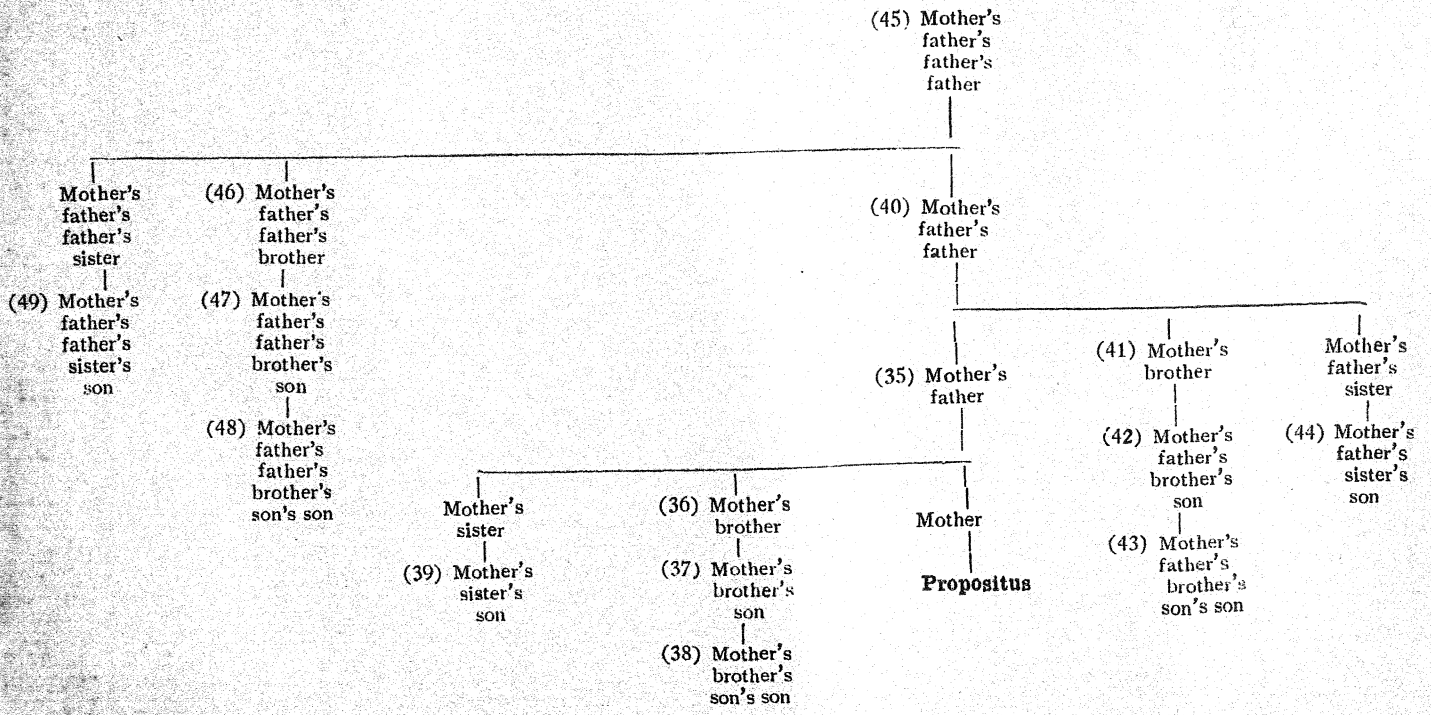
(14) Dayakram Sangrah, I-X-15 (Setlur, 117); Padmakumari v. Court of Wards, 8 C. 302 (310) P.C.

[To Face Page 1016.

DAYABHAG INHERITANCE

[Maternal relations presenting oblations which the deceased was bound to offer.]



The last three are the agnate descendants of the maternal grandfather, and, as such, relations in whose oblations the deceased participates. They are, therefore, preferred to the sakulyas.[1]

(38) Mother's sister's son.

As the mother of the deceased and the mother of the heir were daughters of the same father, and as the deceased left no nearer kinsmen vested with the right of offering the funeral oblations offered by the heir to his maternal grandfather, and as the deceased had no sapindas within three degrees, the mother's sister's son has the preference over lineal descendants from a common ancestor beyond the third degree.[2]

(39) The maternal great-grandfather;
(40) His son;
(41) His son's son;
(42) His son's son's son;
(43) His daughter's son.

Nos. 38 to 42 are supported by their enumeration in the same order in the Dayakram Sangrah.[3]

(44) The maternal great-great-grandfather;
(45) His son;
(46) His son's son;
(47) His son's son's son;
(48) His daughter's son.

This is in accordance with the express text of Dayakrama Sangrah,[4] which closed the list of sapindas with the last. Consequently, the daughter's son's son is excluded and is not an heir at all.[5] But the following are also sapindas, though not so included in that work:—

(49) The maternal grandfather's son's daughter;
(50) Maternal grandfather's grandson's daughter's son;
(51) The maternal great-grandfather's son's daughter's son;
(52) The maternal great-grandfather's grandson's daughter's son;
(53) The maternal great-great-grandfather's son's daughter's son;
(54) The maternal great-great-grandfather's grandson's daughter's son.

2403. Sakulyas.—In default of all sapindas, whether gotraj or bandhus the inheritance goes to the Sakulyas, in accordance with the following texts:—

Dayabhag.—"14. Accordingly, since the succession devolves on heirs down to the maternal uncle and the rest, in the order of oblations in which the deceased may participate, or which he was bound to offer, Manu, considering that purport as sufficiently indicated by the two passages above cited. 'To the nearest sapinda the inheritance next belongs,' proceeds thus: 'Then, on failure of such kindred, the distant kinsmen shall be the heir,' or the spiritual preceptor or the pupil.

(1) Roopchurn v. Anundlal, 2 B.S.R. 45: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 392; Kasee v. Goluck Chunder, (1848) B.S.D.A. 28.

(2) Deynath v. Muthoor Nath, 6 B.S.R. 30: 7 I.D. (O.S.) 688. According to Sarv. Inh. p. 823, Nos. 48 and 49 should next follow; but, for the reason given in this case, they should be postponed till after No. 47.

(3) Dayakram Sangrah, I-X-17, 18 (Setlur, 117); Braja Kishore v. Radha Gobind, 12 W.R. 339; Sarv. Inh., 823, places here Nos. 50 and 51.

(4) Dayakram Sangrah, I-X-19, 20 (Setlur, 117); Sarv. Inh., 823, places here Nos. 52 and 53.

(5) Nepal Das v. Probhas Chandra, 42 C.L.J. 221: 90 I.C. 499.

"15. The distant kinsman (sakulya) is the descendant of the paternal grandfather's grandfather or other remote ancestor. Such relatives are denominated samanodaks. Their order of succession is in the series, as exhibited. On failure of such heirs down to the samanodaks, the succession devolves on the spiritual preceptor, the pupil, etc."[1]

Dayakram Sangrah.—"22. The sakulyas, or remote kindred, are of two descriptions, first descending and second ascending.

"23. The first includes the great-grandson's son, and the rest down to the third degree in the descending line. The second includes the great-grandfather's father and other ancestors up to the third degree in the ascending line.

"24. Here the distant kinsmen in the descending line first obtain the inheritance, according to their respective order, since the deceased owner partakes of the remainder of the oblations which they present.

"25. In thier default, the distant kindred, as far as the third degree in the ascending line inherits, in due order."[2]

2404. Samanodaks.—In default of sakulyas, the samanodaks take in the same order.

Other heirs.

The rest of the heirs here enumerated follow the order of the Mitakshara. In one case it was held that a priest may be the heir of his deceased disciple.[3]

2405. Hermit's Heirs.—The heirs of hermits follow the Mitakshara text.

2406. Inheritance on Re-union.—The rules of succession amongst re-united relations have already been stated in S. 202. There is no difference in this respect between the two schools, since even under the Dayabhag law "the reason for inheritance by a re-united coparcener is not spiritual benefit, but a quasi-contractual relation and affection for each other."[4] Both the Smriti Chandrika[5] and the Virmitroday contain an exhaustive chapter on re-union,[6] from which the following table of succession is drawn:—

(1) Re-united full brother;
(2) Separated full brother;
(3) Re-united half brother;
} both share equally;

(4) Re-united father;
(5) Re-united uncle;
(6) Separated half brother;
(7) Separated father;
(8) Separated mother;
(9) Widow;
(10) Sister;
(11) Nearest sapindas;[7]
(12) Samanodaks and the rest as in the case of ordinary succession.[8]

---

(1) Dayabhag, XI-VI-14, 15; Dayakram Sangrah, I-X-21 (Setlur, 117).
(2) Dayakram Sangrah, I-X-23-25 (Setlur, 117, 118).
(3) Jugdanand v. Kessubnund, (1864) W.R. 146.
(4) Akshoy v. Hari Das, 35 C. 721, (726).
(5) Ch. XII (Setlur, 300, 307).
(6) Virmitroday, Ch. I-V (Setlur, 427, 438).
(7) Virmitroday, Ch. I-V (Setlur 434, 435).
(8) Ib. (Setlur, 436).

The heir to the estate of a re-united person must maintain his wives and support his daughters till they are married as well as perform the ceremony of their marriage.[1]

2407. No Heir.—Since, among the samanodaks, those only are entitled to the inheritance who are also sakulyas or allied to the family of the deceased; those allied ex parte materna do not inherit. Consequently, a person's cousin four degrees remote, being his maternal great-grandfather's daughter's son's son is no heir at all.[2]

---

(1) Virmitroday, Ch. IV-13 (Setlur, 436).

(2) Sambhu Chandra v. Kartic Chandra, 54 C. 171.

CHAPTER XXV.

WOMAN'S ESTATE.

2408. Topical Introduction.—It has been stated before that Hindu Law regards woman as inherently incompetent to hold property. And such rights as are conceded to her bear the signs of the struggles which mark their course. To begin with, all Hindu females started as slaves in their husband's household. They could be bought and sold, and were conceivably let out for enjoyment.[1] As such, they had no rights of property. But in course of time, they had to be conceded such rights by the force of usage. This led to the adaptation of old texts to new conditions. The commentators dared not declare the disabling texts obsolete: they were too sacrosanct to be directly confronted. They have, therefore, resorted to the sholastic method of exposition, aided by alleged texts ascribed to Brihat Manu and the rest, the authenticity of which is, at least, doubtful.

In the primitive age, women and children were alike. They were classed as chattels and possessed no right of property (§§ 16, 17). In course of time, the son's right was recognized, then the right of other male kinsmen, for they too contributed to the partriarchal strength. The one devouring passion, from which the ancient Aryan suffered, was the necessity of a son to continue his lineage. He was the priest of his soul. For this purpose, various devices were resorted to, and niyog was one amongst them: the appointment of a daughter (putrika) to procreate a son was another.

2409. At this stage of the social evolution, women were still chattels. They had still no rights of their own. The recognition of woman's right of inheritance is of comparatively recent origin. The Rigveda denied that the widow had any right to inherit to her husband. It gave the widow the right to inherit as the daughter to her parent.[2] But the daughter was made to beget a son by niyog.[3] The older lawgivers, such as Manu,[4] Gautam,[5] Vashisth[6] and Baudhayan[7] all give her the option of niyog but no inheritance, while Apastamb even forbids niyog though he recognizes the daughter's right of inheritance.[8] Visvarup, the commentator of Yadnavalkya who preceded the author of Mitakshara, denies that the widow, unless pregnant, had any right to succeed to her husband, or that the daughter, other than the appointed daughter, could succeed to her father. The practice of niyog limited the widow to obtain a son by her husband's younger brother, and failing him, by the nearest agnate. But in her dominating desire to beget a son, these restrictions were often disregarded. For the rule was that, on the husband dying issueless, the wife had merely the usufruct of her husband's property till she could

---

(1) Narad, XII-19, 33 S.B.E. 169; Vishnu, VI-15: 7 S.B.E. 43.
(2) Rigveda, M. II, S. 11, § 7: M.I.A. S. 128.
(3) Ib., M. III, S. 31, §§ 1, 2.
(4) Manu, IX-127, 130, 131, 133, 134, 136.
(5) Gautam, XXVIII-18, 19, 2 S.B.E. 301.
(6) Vashisth, XVII-16, 17.
(7) Baudhayan, P. 2, A. K. 3, S. 15.
(8) Apastamb, P. 2, P. 6, K. 14, S. 2-4: 2 S. B. E. 133.

beget a son. If she did, the son became the heir. If she could not, the estate passed to the husband's younger brother, or failing him, his nearest sapinda who was her guardian. The self-interest of these relations conflicted with their duty to the deceased to provide him with a son, with the result that niyog became, in course of time, a discredited institution, not because of its immorality but because of the jealousies it aroused.

2410. As the practice of niyog became obsolete, the hardship of the widow's lot became more manifest. Narad recognized the right of a daughter, though not appointed, to raise the issue to inherit to her father.[1] "A daughter, like a son," says Brihaspati, "springs from each member of a man. How then should any other person inherit her father's property while she lives."[2] The daughter's claim appears to have first come in for recognition, and she had precedence of the widow, presumably because she too, like the son, was born of the loins of her father.[3] But the widow could not be long ignored. She was already entitled to the usufruct of her husband's estate. By her steadfast perseverance she was obtaining a footing in society, and had obtained even the monopoly of certain callings, for, had not Vishnu ordained that "a debt contracted by the wife of a herdsman, distiller of spirits, public dancer, washer or hunter shall be discharged by the husband because he is supported by his wife."[4] But still Vishnu would not treat seriously any document "executed by a woman, or a child, or a dependent person, or one intoxicated or insane, or one in danger or in bodily fear."[5] A woman was an incompetent witness,[6] and was, in fact a chattel, and is so treated by Narad who says: "What is permitted, whether woman, beasts or the earth, that only should be enjoyed. He who enjoys them without leave, should be made to pay the profit of such enjoyment."[7] On the other hand, woman and the wife have been assigned an exalted position in the estimation of Manu, and Katyayan gave her the right to succeed to her husband,[8] and so did Harit.[9] And Yadnavalkya assigns her a place next only to the son, grandson, great-grandson, the son of the appointed daughter, such daughter herself, and the subsidiary sons. And this order is repeated in the Mitakshara, in which, however, the author enlarges her rights far beyond what even the Privy Council would accept. According to the Mitakshara, all property which the woman inherits, whether from a male or from a female, is designated her stridhan and should devolve upon her stridhan heirs. But the Privy Council have pointed out that property acquired by her from a male, whether by partition or by inheritance, cannot be so treated.[10]

2411. Woman's property thus became divisible into property over which she possesses only a limited power of disposal and that over which she possesses the absolute power of disposal. The former will be dealt with in this chapter; while the latter, which is spoken of as her own peculium or stridhan, will be the subject of another chapter. The two

(1) Narad, XIII-50.
(2) Brihaspati, XXV-56.
(3) Narad, XIII-50, 33 S.B.E. 201.
(4) Vishnu, VI-37, 7 S.B.E. 45.
(5) Ib., VII-10, 7 S.B.E. 47.
(6) Ib., VIII-2, 7 S.B.E. 48.
(7) Cited in Mayukh (Mandlik), p. 119.
(8) Cited in Mit., Ch. II, 1-57; Mayukh (Mandlik), p. 77.
(9) Cited in Mit., Ch. II, 1-59; Mayukh (Mandlik), p. 77.
(10) Thakoor Rai v. Deyee Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 139 (173); Bhugwandeen v. Myna Baee, ib., 487 (509); Sheo Shankarlal v. Debi Sahai, 25 A. 468 P.C.; Sheo Pertab v. Allahabad Bank, ib., 476 P.C., and cases cited post.

species of property differ throughout in their origin, enjoyment and ultimate devolution. The woman's rights at the present moment stand highest in Bombay and lowest in the orthodox Mitakshara country, Madras and Bombay take an intermediate place, but the general rule that women take only a limited estate applies equally to all. But as their Lordships have pointed out, this does not mean that woman is not the owner of her estate. All it means is that her power of alienation is limited,[1] whether she has or has not any heirs.[2]

2412. The conception of unqualified ownership with a limited power of alienation may not be consonant with the general law. But it is a necessary incident of a woman's estate. As such, it has given rise to certain rights which the reversioner may enforce during the lifetime of the female heir. What these rights are will be found set out in the sequel.

335. In the absence of an express grant, women are presumed to acquire only a limited estate in property acquired by partition and inheritance.[3]

Quality of a woman's estate.

2413. Analogous Law.—This section is drawn from decided cases which depart from the rule stated in the following text of the Mitakshara on the subject:—

Mitakshara.—That which was given by the father, by the mother by the husband, or by a brother . . . and also property which she may have acquired by inheritance, purchase, partition, seizure, or finding are denominated by Manu and the rest, woman's property."[4]

According to this text, all property inherited by a woman becomes her stridhan, over which she has unlimited power of disposal. This rule conflicts with the policy of the Mitakshara interpreted to exclude women, as far as possible, and, consequently, it has been held that, in spite of this text, women acquire only a limited estate in their inherited property.[5] In any other view, the estate in their hands would devolve upon their stridhan heirs, who are preferably female relations—which would be subversive of the entire scheme of Hindu Law, which places woman in a position of subordination and dependence, and gives her no more than a life-estate even when she succeeds to her husband or father.[6] The same rule applies to property obtained by a woman, whether by gift, devise or partition—the presumption being that they take only a limited estate, though, of course, that presumption may be

---

(1) Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly, 8 M.I.A. 529 (550).

(2) Ib., p. 553.

(3) Debi Mangal Prasad v. Mahadeo Prasad, 34 A. 234 P.C.; Thakoor Deyee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 139 (173-175); Bhugwan Deen v. Myna Bai, ib., 487 (504-514); Chotaylal v. Chunnoo Lal, 4 C. 744 (753-756) P.C.; Muttu v. Dorasingh, 3 M. 290 (301, 302) P.C. (Inheritance). Ramchandra v. Ramchandra, 45 M. 320 (327, 328) P.C. (Gift or devise), and see S. 245 and cases there cited.

(4) Mit., II-XI-2.

(5) Thakoor Deyee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 139 (173-175); Bhugwandeen v. Myna Bai, ib., 487 (504-514).

(6) Chotaylal v. Chunnoolal, 4 C. 744 (753-756) P.C.; Muttu v. Dorasingha, 3 M. 290 (301, 302) P.C.

rebutted by the use of words of sufficient amplitude conferring on them an absolute estate.[1]

2414. Woman's Estate.—The general quality of a woman's estate is its limited character, her restricted power of alienation and, on her death or surrender, its reverter to the line of the last male owner. These restrictions are imposed on women because of the state of their weakness, ignorance and dependence. The presumption as to a gift or devise in her favour conveying only a limited interest, has already been the subject of a previous discussion. The next section sets out the nature of restrictions upon her acquisitions by partition or inheritance. The question is independent of the nature of the property acquired or the person from whom she acquires it. If the property acquired be the self-acquisition of the husband, the widow will, nevertheless, acquire only a limited estate upon his dying issueless. If the property be the stridhan of her mother, the right she acquires is equally limited.

The only exceptions to which this rule is subject, are those set out in the next section.

Restrictions on woman's estate.

336. Subject to the provisions of section 315 the rights of a woman in her property acquired by partition or inheritance are limited as follows:—

(1) Her inherited[2] estate is liable to be devested upon the subsequent birth or adoption of a son[3] or upon her remarriage[4] but not for unchastity;[5]

(2) She is not entitled to alienate the corpus except for legal necessity or benefit as hereinafter provided,[6] but she is entitled to appropriate all its income and accumulations which she may dispose of at her discretion;[7]

(3) On her death her estate devolves on the next heir of the last male owner.

Exception 1.—Under the Bombay school of law females, belong to the family of the propositus by birth, take an absolute interest, while those who come into it by marriage take only a limited estate.[8]

Exception 2.—A Jain widow has absolute power of disposal over the self-acquired property of her husband inherited by her.[9]

Exception 3.—Nothing in this section applies to an estate acquired by a woman by deed or devise conferring on her an absolute estate.

---

(1) Ramchandra v. Ramchandra, 45 M. 320 (327, 328) P.C.

(2) Basant Kumar v. Ram Shankar, 59 C. 859 (880); Manek Lal v. Keshav, (1938) B. 71.

(3) Bhoobun Moyee v. Ram Kishore, 10 M.I.A. 279 (312), followed in Basenk Kumar v. Ram Shanker, 59 C. 859 (880). See Ss. 62, 299.

(4) Bhola Umar v. Kausilla, 55 A. 24 F.B. (and cases cited) contra Matungini v. Ram Button, 19 C. 289 F.B. see S. 316 (4) and comm.

(5) Moniram v. Keri Kolitani, 5 C. 776 (791, 792) P.C. See S. 299.

(6) See Ss. 122-124.

(7) Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433; Isri Dutt v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 324 P.C.; Sri Ram Jankiji v. Jagdamba, 43 A. 374 F.B.; Nirmala v. Deva Narayan, 55 C. 269; Dulhin Parbati v. Baijnath, 14 Pat. 518 (542, 543); Jagannadham v. Vighneshwarudi, 55 M. 216.

(8) Bhau v. Raghunath, 30 B. 229; Dhondi v. Radhabai, 36 B. 546.

(9) Madanji v. Tribhuwan, 36 B. 396.

Illustrations.

(a) A bequeaths his estate to his widow B whom he authorises to adopt. She adopts B. B cannot devest A of her bequest since B takes by inheritance and cannot defeat A's bequest to B.[1]

(b) A inherits an impartible estate from her husband. She takes a limited estate.[2]

(c) A, the mother, succeeds as heir to her son. A takes only a limited estate.[3]

(d) A, the daughter, inherits her father's estate. A's estate is limited.[4]

(e) A, a sister, inherits her brother's estate in Bombay. A takes an absolute estate, though elsewhere her estate would be limited.[5]

(f) A devises his estate to his wife B, expressly conferring on her the power of alienation. B takes an absolute estate.

2415. Analogous Law.—The position of women is summed up in the two texts one from the Veda and another from Katyayan, which are cited by all later commentators as the last word on woman's capacity and her rights:—

Baudhayan.—"The Veda declares: 'Therefore women devoid of the senses and incompetent to inherit.'"[6]

Katyayan.—"Let the childless widow, preserving unsullied the bed of her lord and abiding with her venerable protector, enjoy with moderation the property until her death. After her death, let the heirs take it. But she has not property therein to the extent of gift, mortgage or sale."[7]

Later texts emphasize her dependence and worthlessness except for the purpose of procreation. Her right of property has been of slow growth, and the present law is stated in the section.

2416. Woman Acquires a limited Estate.—Woman generally takes a limited estate. It is immaterial whether she takes as widow,[8] daughter[9] (except in Bombay),[10] mother,[11] or a grandmother[12] (except

(1) Basant Kumar v. Ram Shankar, 59 C. 859 (876-878).

(2) Muttu v. Dorasingha, 3 M. 290 P. C.; Venkayamma v. Venkata, 25 M. 678 P.C.

(3) Vrijibhukan Das v. Parbati, 32 B. 26.

(4) Chotaylal v. Chunoo Lall, 14 B. L.R. 235, affirmed O.A. 4 C. 744 P.C.

(5) Bhaskar v. Mahadeb, 6 B. H. C. R. (O.C.) 1.

(6) Baudhyayan, II-II-3-§ 46, 14 S. B. E., p. 231; Virmitroday (Setlur), 406; but West, J., in Vijiasarangam v. Lakshmen, 8 B. H. C. R. (O. C.) 244 (258), considered the Vedic text as probably an interpolation. See Topical Introduction, Ch. XXVIIII.

(7) Cited in Dayabhag, XI-I-56; Mayukh, IV-VIII-4 (Mandlik, p. 77); Vivad Chintamani (Setlur), 256; Smriti Chandrika, XII-1-28 (Setlur), 279; Virmitroday (Setlur), 406.

(8) Keerut Singh v. Koolahul Singh, 2 M.I.A. 529; Thakoor Deybee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 139; Bhugwandeen v. Myna Boee, 11 M.I.A. 487; Maniram v. Keri, 5 C. 776 (789, 790) P.C.

(9) Chotay Lal v. Chunnolall, 14 B. L. R. 235, affirmed O.A. 4 C. 744 P.C.; Muttu v. Dorasingha, 3 M. 290 P.C.; Venkayamma v. Venkata, 25 M. 678 P. C.

(10) Vinayak v. Luxumeebai, 1 B. H. C. R. 117, affirmed O.A. 9 M.I.A. 520; Bhaskar v. Mahadev, 6 B. H. C. R. 1; Haribhat v. Damodarbhat, 3 B. 171; Bharmangavda v. Rudrapgavda, 4 B. 181 (187); Bulakhi Das v. Keshav Lall, 6 B. 85; Jankibai v. Sundra, 14 B. 612; Kindabai v. Anacha, 15 B 206; Madhavram v. Dave, 21 B. 739 (745); Virupaksha v. Ganap, 34 B. 510.

(11) Vinayak v. Luxmee Bai, 1 B.H. C.R. 117, affirmed O.A. 9 M.I.A. 520; Sakharam v. Sitabai, 3 B. 353; Bharmangavda v. Rudrapgavda, 4 B. 181 (187); Tuljiram v. Mathuradas, 5 B. 662 (670); Virmitroday, IV-VIII-4, (Setlur) 97; Poorendra v. Hemangini, 36 C. 75 (84); Bachiraju v. Venkatappada, 2 M. H. C. R. 402; Kutti v. Radakrishna, 8 M. H. C.R. 88; Punchanund v. Lolshan, 3 W. R. 140 (Mithila case); Bijya v. Unpoorna, 1 B.S.R. 215: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 159; Nufur v. Ram Koomar, 4 B.S.R. 393: 7 I.D. (O.S.) 293; Hem Lutta v. Goluk Chunder, 7 B.S.R. 127: 8 I.D. (O. S.) 97; Jullesur v. Uggur Roy, 9 C. 725.

(12) Plukar v. Ranjit, 1 A. 661.

in Bombay),[1] it being immaterial whether the property is inherited from a male[2] or a female,[3] or whether the property is movable or immovable,[4] partible or impartible,[5] ancestral or self-acquired[6] or whether it is acquired by partition[7] or inheritance. As Lord Hobhouse put it: "It is not necessary now to state in any detail how impossible it is, whether with regard to the authority of other commentators or to other parts of the Mitakshara itself, to construe this passage[8] as conferring upon a woman, taking by inheritance from a male, a stridhan estate transmissible to her own heirs. The point is now completely covered by authority. In the case of Thakur Deybee v. Rai Baluk Ram,[9] such an interest was claimed on behalf of a widow in her husband's immovable property. In the case of Bhagwandeen Doobey v. Myna Baee[10] such an interest was claimed on behalf of a widow in her husband's movable property. In the case of Chotaylall v. Chunnoolall,[11] such an interest was claimed on behalf of a daughter in her father's property. All these cases were governed by the Mitakshara law. And in all it was held that the woman took only a restricted interest, and that, on her death, the property devolved on the line of the last male owner."[12] While, then, the widow can ordinarily inherit only a limited estate, there are instances of local custom which permits of her inheriting an absolute estate. Such a custom was proved in the case of Jain widows of Mangrole and Uplata.[13]

2417. Share on Partition.—Then as regards partition, the share obtained by a female on partition is presumed to be allotted to her in

(1) Gandhi v. Jadab, 24 B. 192; contra, per Ranade, J., in Madhavram v. Dave, 21 B. 739 (744).

(2) Dayabhag, XI-56-61; Mayukh, IV-VIII-4, (Setlur, 97; Virmitroday, III-I-3 (Setlur 376-380); Smriti Chandrika, XI-I-28 (Setlur, 279); Vivad Chintamani (Setlur, 256); Dayakram Sangrah, I-II-3-5 (Setlur, 110); Vyavastha Darpan (2nd Ed.), 124; Keerut Singh v. Koolahul Singh, 2 M.I.A. 331; Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly, 8 M.I.A. 529; Thakoor Deybee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M. I.A. 139; Bhugwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M. I.A. 487; Moniram v. Kerry, 5 C. 776 (789, 790) P.C.; Jamiyatram v. Jamna, 2 B.H.C.R. 10; Lakshmi Bai v. Ganpat, 4 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 150 (163); Bhaskar v. Mahadev, 6 B.H.C.R. 1; Bharmangavda v. Rudrapgavda, 4 B. 181 (187); Vrijbhukandas v. Parvati, 32 B. 2; Kattama v. Dorasagar, 6 M.H.C.R. 310; Vasudevan v. Secretary of State, 11 M. 157 (165); Gurunath v. Krishnaji, 4 B. 462; Tuljiram v. Mathuradas, 5 B. 662; Madhavram v. Dave, 21 B. 739.

(3) Dayakram Sangrah, II-III-6; Thakoor Deybee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M. I. A. 139; Bhagwan Deen v. Myna Baee, 11 M.I.A. 487; Sheo Shankar v. Debi Sahai, 25 A. 468 P.C., reversing O. A. Debi Sahai v. Sheo Shankar, 22 A. 353; Sheo Partab v. Allahabad Bank, 25 A. 476 P. C.; Chotay Lal v. Chunnoo Lal, 4 C. 744, affirmed O.A. 14 B. L. R. 235 (237); Senkamalathammal v. Velayuda, 3 M. H. C.R. 312; Venkatarama v. Bhujanga, 19 M. 107; Virsangappa v. Rudrappa, 19 M. 110; Raju v. Ammani, 29 M. 358; Prankishen v. Bhugwutte, 1 B. S. R. 4: 6 I.D. (O. S.) 8; Bhoobun v. Mudden, 1 Shome 1; Prankissen v. Nayanmoney, 5 C. 222; Hurr Dayal v. Grishchunder, 17 C. 911; Jagendra v. Phani Bhushan, 43 C. 64; Maddumala v. Lakshman, 20 C. W.N. 627.

(4) Thakoor Deybee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 139 (175); Bhugwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M.I.A. 487; Durga Nath v. Chintamoni, 43 C. 214; Narasimha v. Venkata, 8 M. 290.

(5) Muttu v. Dorasingha, 3 M. 290 P.C.

(6) Namasivaya v. Sivagami, 1 M. H. C.R. 374.

(7) Debi Mangal Prasad v. Mahadeo, 34 A. 234, reversing O.A. 32 A. 253 and contra in Chhiddu v. Naubat, 24 A. 67; Sripal v. Surajbali, ib., p. 82.

(8) Mit., II-XI-2, cited for the appellant.

(9) 11 M.I.A. 139.

(10) 11 M.I.A. 487.

(11) 4 C. 744 P.C.

(12) Muttu v. Dorasingha, 3 M. 290 (301) P.C.

(13) Maduji v. Tribhowan, 36 B. 396.

lieu of her right to maintenance, and is, therefore, subject to the same limitation incident to a woman's estate. This had been the subject of some conflicting decisions of the Indian courts, for, while in some cases[1] this view was followed, there were cases[2] in which the courts held the female to take an absolute estate. The question was examined and decided by the Privy Council, who held the rule applicable to the estate acquired by inheritance equally applicable to partition. "Of course, the members of a joint family effecting a partition may agree that a portion of the property shall be transferred to the widow by way of absolute gift, as part of her stridhan, so as to constitute a provision for her stridhan heirs, but in the absence of any such intention, their Lordships do not feel justified in putting property acquired by a widow, on partition of joint estate, upon a footing different from that on which property coming to her by way of inheritance, has been placed."[3]

2418. This was a Mitakshara case, but the same rule applies equally to Bengal.[4] As Wilson, J. said: "The nature of her, i.e., mother's right in the share, when allotted, was long a subject of controversy. Writers of high authority maintained that it vested in her absolutely and passed, after her death, to her heirs as stridhan. It is now settled in Bengal that this is not so, but that, on her death, it goes back, in some sense, to her husband's family."

This branch of the law has now been settled by a long course of decisions, which the courts will not unsettle by any appeal to the original texts.[5]

2419. But though a woman takes a limited estate, it is a proprietary estate in no way limited in interest,[6] though it is limited in use. She does not hold in trust for her reversioners.[7] "Her right is of the nature of a right of property, her position is that of owner, her powers in that character are, however, limited, but so long as she is alive, no one has any vested interest in the succession."[8] The interest which her reversioners possess in her estate is contingent and a mere spes successionis which, by relinquishment in her favour, has not the effect of enlarging her estate by converting it into an absolute estate,[9] the reason

(1) Baldeo v. Mahabir, 1 Agra, 155 (157); Judoonath v. Bishonath, 9 W.R. 61; Laljeet v. Raj Coomar, 20 W.R. 326; Beni Pershad v. Puran Chand, 23 C. 262 (279).

(2) Chhiddu v. Naubat, 24 A. 67 (74, 76); Sripal v. Surajbali, ib., p. 82.

(3) Debi Mangal v. Mahadeo, 34 A. 234 (243) P.C. overruling O. A. 32 A. 253 and contra in Chhiddu v. Naubat, 24 A. 67 (74, 76); Sripal v. Surajbali, ib., p. 82; Bhagwant Rao v. Punjaram, (1938) N. 1 (3).

(4) Sheo Dayal v. Judoonath, 9 W. R. 61 (62); Nobin Chunder v. Guripersaud, 9 W.R. 505; Unnopoornah v. Bhoobun, 15 C. 292 (307); Sashi Bhusan v. Hari, 25 C.W.N. 990.

(5) Chotay Lal v. Chunnoo Lall, 4 C. 744 (755, 756) P.C., affirming 14 B. L.R. 235.

(6) Vasonji v. Chandabibi, 37 A. 369 (378, 379) P.C.

(7) Hurrydoss v. Opoornath, 6 M. I. A. 433.

(8) Janaki v. Narayanasami, 39 M. 634 (637) P.C.

(9) Hemchunder v. Saramoyi, 22 C. 354 (363); Narasimham v. Nadhavaraduya, 13 M.L.J. 323; Dhoorjeti v. Dhoorjeti, 30 M. 201; Sham Sundar v. Acchan Kaur, 21 A. 71; Hargawan v. Baijnath, 32 A. 88. In Olati v. Varadarajulu, 31 M. 474 (478), a release, by a reversioner, of his reversionary right was held as not obnoxious to the provisions of S. 7 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act; but it was a case of compromise. In Kanuram v. Kashichandra, 14 C.W.N. 226: 2 I. C. 660, the reversioner had purchased half the estate from the daughter and relinquished his right on the other moiety, which was upheld inter partes; but such arrangement cannot, it is submitted, enlarge the female heir's limited estate by converting it into her stridhan.

being that her estate is limited because of her historical incompetence, and not because of the necessity of safeguarding the rights of her reversioners. Consequently, her estate is not enlarged by the fact that she has no reversioners, or that the Crown does not claim her estate, on her death, by escheat.[1]

2420. The widow is not in the question of a manager, because, she represents no one, and is in possession of an estate which is her own, whereas the manager of a joint family, is merely a co-parcener in an estate in which others are equally interested, and of whom he is a representative. Whatever, therefore, he does, he does with the assent, or implied, of the body of coparceners. In the widow's case, the coparceners are reduced to herself, and the estate centres in her. She can do what the body of coparceners can do subject always to the condition that she acts fairly to the expectant heirs.[2] But, all the same, she does not hold her estate for them. The latter do not get the estate through her.[3]

2421. Devesting of her Estate.—The estate which a Hindu woman takes, cannot be devested by any subsequent event. (§ 299.) The only case in which it is liable to be devested, is the subsequent birth of adoption of a son. Even in the latter case, where the husband is competent to make a valid bequest of his property, as where he is subject to the Dayabhag school, or is otherwise competent to dispose of his property by will, his devise of property to his widow cannot be devested by her adoption of a son, since the son succeeds by inheritance and cannot defeat his father's bequest, whether to his wife or to any other relation.[4] But of course, it is open to the testator to make a bequest liable to be devested upon the subsequent birth or adoption of a son to him.[5]

Clause (1) On birth or adoption of a son.

The estate of a Hindu widow may be devested on her re-marriage (§ 316 (4)) or retiremtnt from the world, as by turning a bairagi, or the like,[6] which amounts to her civil death. But if on her devesting she still continues to remain in possession such possession would continue to be treated as qualified and limited as it was before that event.[7]

2422. Her Alienation.—The provisions of his clause are general and apply equally to a female heir who is generally speaking, entitled to alienate the estate for legal necessity or benefit, as defined in Ss. 122-124. But within the ambit of these sections, there is room for the exercise of wide discretion, as already observed, the father being allowed the largest and the widow by no means the least; since, while the father and the manager are merely coparceners, the heiress is the sole owner for the time being, and, as such, she possesses absolute power of disposal over the income, which she does not hold in trust for any one. Even as regards the corpus, she is its absolute owner, but an owner shorn of some of the

Clause (2).

---

(1) Janardhan v. Anu, 10 I.C. 51.
(2) Chimmaji v. Dinkar, 11 B. 320 (324).
(3) Shib Shankar v. Soni Ram, 32 A. 33; affirmed O.A. 35 A. 227 P.C.
(4) Basant Kumar v. Ram Shankar, 50 C. 859 (878, 880); Manek Lal v. Keshav, (1938) B. 71.
(5) Bhupendra v. Amarendra, 43 C. 432 (439) P.C.
(6) Ameena v. Radhabinode, (1856) 12 S. D. A. B. 595 (602); 15 I. D. (O.S.) 78 (83, 84).
(7) Parbati v. Ram Prasad, 7 Luck. 320; § 2637.

attributes by reason of her sex and her position of perpetual dependence.[1] Nevertheless, she is entitled to alienate the corpus, when impelled by "necessity" or justified by "benefit" to the estate or to the spiritual needs of her husband. The father and the manager have to consider the needs of the coparceners. She has to consider no one's needs except her own; for though she may have a reversioner, he is entitled to no rights in praesenti, not even to maintenance. His right is merely a spes successionis, which depends upon his surviving the widow. As one with a possibility of succession he is entitled to the protection of his reversion, prevent its waste and restrain her acts prejudicing it; but beyond these rights elsewhere set out, he has no control over the management of the estate, and none at all over its income.

2423. All the same, her right of alienation has become more or less crystallised into definite principles, which, when applied to the case of the heiress, have acquired a special significance. As Lord Philimore remarked: "The word 'necessity,' when used in this connection, has a somewhat special, almost technical meaning."[2] "Necessity does not mean actual compulsion, but the kind of pressure which the law recognises as serious and sufficient."[3] Such compulsion may be the result of her own mismanagement, but it is nonetheless a justifying necessity.

Generally speaking, the heads of necessity, justifying an alienation by the widow are the same as apply to the manager of a joint family, added to which there are some which are peculiarly her own. The former have already been the subject of a general discussion. (§§ 1177-1182.)

As to the latter, the Privy Council recognised, as far back as 1861, that the widow possesses larger powers of dispositions upon acts which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of her husband,[4] and larger still upon acts which Hindu Law regards as spiritual necessity as distinct from those which are merely spiritually beneficial.[5]

2424. The right of female heirs is absolutely limited and not merely qualified by the existence of reversioners. Whether these do or do not exist, the qualification remains, because her estate is limited not by the rights of others but by the peculiar nature of her estate. Consequently, a transferee from her takes a qualified estate, because her power to transfer is limited. If there are reversioners, they may object, because her act prejudices their right. But if she has left no heirs, and her estate escheats to the Crown, it has the same right,[6] since the fetter upon her right is not placed for the protection of the material interests of her

(1) Bijia Gopal v. Krishna Mahishi, 34 C. 329 (333) P.C.; Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavalry, 8 M. I.A. 529; Bahadur Sing v. Sultan Hussain, 66 I.C. 455: (1922) O. 171; Mirza Sadiq Husain v. Mhd. Karim, 9 O.L.J. 456: (1922) O. 289.

(2) Ramsumran v. Shyam Kumari, 1 P. 741 P.C.

(3) Ib.

(4) Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly, 8 M. I. A. 529 (552).

(5) Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari, 44 A. 503 (511) P.C., affirming O. A. 41 A. 130.

(6) Two cases relating to this Zemindari went up to the Privy Council. The right of the Crown to take by escheat and the question of improper alienations were decided in the first, Collector v. Cavaly, 8 M.I.A. 529 (551); while in the second, the Crown was held to hold the estate subject to all valid charges created by the widow, Cavaly v. Collector, 11 M.I.A. 619; Vijayarangam v. Lakshuman, 8 B.H.C.R.(O.S.) 244 (265); Pandharinath v. Govind, 32 B. 59 (71); Tirath Ram v. Kanhan, 1 L. 588.

husband's relations,[1] but is dependent upon her sex. Consequently, the fetter on her power of alienation is not withdrawn by reason of a release of their right by all her reversioners in her favour. It does not amount to a surrender and a regrant alone can remove her restraint.[2] The power of the Hindu widow to alien her husband's property for religious or spiritual purpose is, therefore, equally circumscribed, though it should not be too rigidly construed. As such, the Privy Council have upheld her gift of a small portion of her inherited estate to an idol as being reasonable and proper according to the common notion of the Hindu community. They held that the gift, though not obligatory, was still a pious act such as the reversioner cannot challenge.[3] On the same ground, a sale by a woman of a reasonable portion of her husband's estate to pay off a debt incurred on the thread and marriage ceremony of her daughter's son was upheld even though the daughter's son was not so poor as to need her help.[4] But in some earlier cases, it is held that she has no power of alienation for any religious or spiritual purpose, but only for those which are recognized as conducive to her husband's good.[5] The fact that the property alienated was only of inconsiderable value would not legalize the transfer not otherwise legal.

2425. Restriction Applies to Movables.—The restrictions placed upon a woman's estate apply equally whether the property she has inherited is movable or immovable. It was decided by the Privy Council as far back as 1867[6] and their view has, of course, been since followed in all cases since decided both under the Mitakshara[7] and the Dayabhag law.[8]

2426. The question remains whether she has no larger powers in the Mayukh country. The question was adverted to by the Privy Council, who said: "The result of the authorities seems to be that although, according to the law of Western school, the widow may have a power of disposing of movable property inherited from her husband, which she has not under the law of Bengal, she is by the one law, as by the other, restricted from alienating any immovable property which she has so restricted, and that on her death, the immovable property, and the movable, if she has not otherwise disposed of it, pass to the next heirs of her husband. There is no trace of any distinction like that taken by the Pandit between ancestral and acquired property. In some of the earlier cases cited, the property was not acquired."[9] The Privy Council thus left the question

---

(1) Collector v. Cavaly, 8 M. I. A. 529 (550-552); Lalchand v. Manohri, 78 I.C. 717; (1925) L. 108.

(2) Nayakammal v. Munuswami, (1924) M. 819.

(3) Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari, 44 A. 503 P.C., approving Tapayya v. Ramakrishna, 34 M. 288 (291).

(4) Venkatasubba v. Ananda Rao, 57 M. 772.

(5) Sham Dei v. Birbhadra, 43 A. 463.

(6) Bhagwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M. I.A. 487 (513, 514).

(7) Goolap v. Phool, 1 Borr. 173; Bechur v. Lukmee, 1 B.H.C.R. 56; Vinayak v. Luxmee Bai, 1 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 117; Narsappa v. Sakharam, 6 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 215; Nana v. Manobai, 7 B. H. C. R. (A.C.) 153; Balvantrao v. Purushottam, 9 B.H.C.R. 99; Tuljaram v. Mathura Das, 5 B. 662; Harilal v. Pranvalabdas, 16 B. 229; Gadadhar v. Chandrabhaga, 17 B. 690 F.B.; Narasinha v. Venkatadhri, 8 M. 290; Buchi v. Jagapathy, 8 M. 304; Gopala v. Gopala, 44 M. 984 (988).

(8) Cassinaut v. Hurrosoondery, 2 Mor. Dig. 198; Durga Nath v. Chintamoni, 31 C. 214.

(9) Thakoor Deybee v. Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 139 (175).

open, and it was considered by a full bench, who had to consider her disposing power by will, which it negatived,[1] though it was recognized that the trend of cases in the Presidency was conflicting, for, while in some she was held to take an absolute interest in the movables,[2] there were cases in which she was held to possess no power to devise them by will.[3] The full bench case deciding against the validity of her testamentary alienation of movables, left the question of her alienation by a transfer inter vivos untouched, and this was considered and decided against her by a bench in 1907, who saw no distinction between a gift inter vivos and a gift by will,[4] adding. "Seeing the enormous wealth which Hindus in India hold in the form of movable property, e.g., Government paper, stocks and shares, which was unknown to the ancient text-writers and commentators, it is perhaps as well that the law should be as we hold it is, and that their widows should not have an uncontrolled power of disposition in respect thereof after the death of their husbands. Possibly, with the spread of education and the general emancipation of their women, they may be led to call in aid of the relief of the Legislature."[5] But in a more recent case, Tyabji, J., has upheld the woman's power of alienation by an act inter vivos on the ground that her absolute power over inherited movables cannot be larger than her power over movables, acquired in partition.[6]

In this view, a woman in Bombay is no exception to the general rule that women's estate in all inherited property, whether movable or immovable, partible or impartible, is qualified and limited.

In Sindh, however, which generally follows the view of the Bombay court, a woman is still held to possess an unfettered power of disposal in such such case.[7]

2427 Mithila Widow—Her Customary Rights.—Under the Mithila law, a childless widow, although she cannot alienate the immovable property, has an absolute right over the movable property inherited from her husband, and can alienate it in any manner she pleases, and she has also an absolute power to dispose of the profits of the estate during her life-time.[8]

2428. Power over Income and Accumulations.—But though a Hindu heiress is not entitled to impair the corpus, she possesses absolute power

(1) Godadhar v. Chandrabhaga, 17 B. 690 (710, 711) F.B.; Chamon Lal v. Doshi Ganesh, 28 B. 453.

(2) Mayaram v. Motiram, 2 B.H.C. R. 313; Chandrabhaga v. Kashi Nath, 2 B.H.C.R. 323; Lakshmi Bai v. Ganpat, 4 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 162; Bechar v. Lakshmi, 1 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 56; Vinayak v. Lakshmibai, 1 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 117 (124); Pranjivan Das v. Davkuverbai, 1 B. H. C. R. (O. C.) B. 285; Harila v. Pranvalav Das, 16 B. H. C. R. (O. C.) 244 (260, 271); Balwant Rao v. Purshottam, 19 B.H.C.R. (111) F. B.; Tuljiram v. Mathura Das, 5 B. 562; Bhagirathi v. Kunhujirao, 11 B. 285; Harila v. Pranvalav Das, 16 B. 229; Damodar v. Purmandas, 7 B. 155.

(3) Choonee Lal v. Jussoo, 1 Bor. 60; Dhoolubo v. Jeevee, 1 Bor. 75; Umroott v. Kulyandos, 1 Bor. 314.

(4) Pandhari Nath v. Govind, 32 B. 59 (74).

(5) Ib., p. 75.

(6) Chaman Lal v. Parvati, 58 B. 246 (253, 254), dissenting from Pandharinath v. Govind, 32 B. 59 (74).

(7) Halima v. Asibai, 4 S.L.R. 77; 8 I.C. 214; Ratnase v. Amerbabai, 9 I. C. (S.) 997.

(8) Vivad Chint. (Tagore), 261, 262, followed in 3 Dig. 468; Sreenarain v. Bhya Jha, 2 B. S. R. 29: 6 I.D. (O. S.) 380 (384); Dorga Dayee v. Poosun Dayee, 5 W.R. 141; Birajun v. Luchmi, 10 C. 392 (393); Suressur v. Mohesh Rani, 20 C.W.N. 31: 33 I.C. 983; Pheku v. Gena Lal, 96 I.C. 161; (1926) Pat. 481; Jagarnath v. Surajdeo, (1937) Pat. 483.

over all accumulations and income of her inherited estate. This is so, not because her estate is limited only to the personal enjoyment of the usufruct but because she has an estate vested in her life and, as such, she is entitled to the absolute usufructuary enjoyment of the whole of such property.[1] She has the right to assign or otherwise dispose of such accumulations,[2] which she may, of course, invest in the acquisition of other property which would prima facie be her stridhan, unles it is shown that despite such acquisition, she had intended to treat it as an accretion to her heritage.[3]

2429. But accumulations from income made by her are distinguishable from accumulations which she has inherited as part of the corpus. As already stated, these being a part of her inherited estate, she has no greater power of disposal over them than over the rest of her inherited estate.[4] But the case is widely different when they are her own savings, over which she doubtless possesses an absolute power of disposal. So, where the executor of the will of a testator made over to the widow of the latter an aggregate sum, consisting of accumulations of income accrued during eight years from her husband's death, undisposed of by his will, of which a greater part she invested, and after a lapse of 20 years she disposed of it as her own, the Privy Council held that the accumulations belonged to her as income derived from her widow's estate, over which she had full power of disposal.[5] The case would, however, have been different if the accumulation had been made under the will of her husband, in which case it would have devolved upon her as a part of the corpus. The case was decided on the ground that, on her husband's death, the estate vested in her, and that all income therefrom became hers which, though it passed to her with the estate when it was reduced to possession, was, nevertheless, the income of her estate and, as such, her own property.[6]

So, a decree obtained by a separated sister, in respect of certain payments made by her on account of her sister's sons and another, was held to be executable by her own personal representatives, and was not one which would pass to her sister by inheritance.[7]

The test, in such cases, would seem to be that any accumulation of income, made after the estate vested in the widow, still remains its accumulated income, over which the widow has full power of disposal. But if on the other hand, the accumulation was made before the estate vested in her, then it would be treated as a part of the corpus. This

---

(1) Kamavadhani v. Joysa, 3 M. H. C.R. 116.

(2) Kailasnath v. Biswanath, (1153) B.S.C.C., reported in Grose v. Amritamayi, 4 B. L.R. (O. C.) 1 (41-n).

(3) Ishri Dut v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 324 P.C.; Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 P.C.; Nirmala v. Deva Narayan, 55 C. 269; Parbati v. Baijnath, 14 Pat. 518; Jamuna Prsad v. Ram Padarath, (1937) Pat. 619.

(4) Grose v. Amritamayi, 4 B. L. R. (O.C.)1 (42); Soorjeemoney v. Denobundoo, 9 M.I.A. 123. See these cases explained in Ishri Dutt v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 324 (335, 336) P.C.

(5) Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 (441) P.C.; Ramasami v. Mangai Karasu, 18 M. 113 (119, 120); Saminatha v. Manikasami, 22 M. 356.

(6) Ishri Dutt v. Hansbali, 10 C. 324 (334) P.C., distinguishing contra in Bhabul Das v. Bholanath, L.R. 2 I.A. 256, as extrajudicial, ib., p. 337 and overruling Grose v. Amritamayi, 4 B.L.R. 1 (42).

(7) Sita Ram v. Dulam, 41 A. 359 (354, 355).

distinction was ignored in a case[1] animadverted upon by the Privy Council.[2]

2430. Female Owners in Bombay.—The rule that female heiresses take only a limited estate, is subject to an exception in favour of certain female heiresses in Bombay, where they are held to take an absolute estate, the rule being that all females who belong to a family by birth take an obsolute estate,[3] while those who belong to it by marriage take only a limited estate. Consequently, a mother,[4] a grandmother,[5] and a widow of the propositus[6] his daughter-in-law[7] and the wives of gotraj sapinda[8] take only a limited estate, whereas a daughter,[9] a sister,[10] a niece and grand-niece, and, in fact, any female relation born in the family of the propositus take an absolute estate by inheritance to him, so as to become a fresh root of descent. This had been the long established rule in Bombay ascertained by the court as far back as 1859,[11] which the court will not now disturb on the principle of stare decisis.[12]

Exception (1).

2431. Jain Widow.—Another exception to the rule is afforded by the Jain custom which vests in a childless Jain widow an absolute right in her husband's separate property.[13] But, otherwise, she takes the ordinary limited estate,[14] though there are instances of local custom which entitles her to inherit an absolute estate. Such custom was proved in the case of the Jain community of Magrole and Uplata in Kathiawar, where a widow, on the death of her husband, was found to become entitled absolutely to the properties left by him, which she had the power to dispose of either inter vivos or by will.[15]

Exception (2).

2432. Deed or Devise Excepted.—The rule that a Hindu woman can only inherit a limited estate is not inconsistent with her otherwise acquiring an absolute estate. Indeed, the incompetence of a woman by reason of her sex is held to be limited only to an estate acquired by ordinary succession,

Exception (3).

(1) Grose v. Amritamayi, 4 B. L. R. 1 (42).

(2) Ishri Dutt v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 324 (334) P.C.

(3) Bhau v. Raghunath, 30 B. 229; Dhondi v. Radhabai, 36 B. 546.

(4) Vinayak v. Lukmebai, 1 B. H. C.R. 117; Narsappa v. Sakharam, 6 B. H.C.R. (A. C.) 215; Sakharam v. Sitabai, 3 B. 353; Bharmangavda v. Rudrapgavda, 4 B. 181 (187); Tuljiram v. Mathuradas, 5 B. 662 (670); Madhavram v. Dave, 21 B. 739 (744); Vrijbhukandas v. Parvati, 32 B. 2.

(5) Dhondi v. Radhabai, 36 B. 546; contra in Gandhi v. Jadab, 24 B. 192.

(6) Janiyatram v. Jamna, 2 B. H. C. R. 10; Lakshmi Bai v. Ganpat, 4 B.H. C.R. 160 (163); Bhaskar v. Mahadeo, 6 B.H.C.R. (O. C.) 1; Gurunath v. Krishnaji, 4 B. 462.

(7) Gangadhar v. Chandrabhaga, 17 B. 690 F.B.

(8) Tuljiram v. Mathuradas, 5 B. 662; Gangadhar v. Chandrabhaga, 17 B. 690 F.B.; Dhondi v. Radha Bhai, 36 B. 546.

(9) Pranjivan Dos v. Dev Kuar, 1 B. H.C.R. 130; Navalram v. Nandkishore, 1 B.H.C.R. 209; Janki Bai v. Sundra, 14 B. 612; Bhan v. Raghunath, 30 B. 229 (236, 237); Gulappa v. Tayava, 31 B. 453.

(10) Vinayak v. Lakshmi, 1 B. H. C. R. 129; Dhondu v. Gungabai, 3 B. 369; Biru v. Khondu, 4 B. 214; Bhagirathi v. Baya, 5 B. 264.

(11) Pranjivandas v. Devkuwarbai, 1 B.H.C.R. 130 (133), followed in Bhau v Raghunath, 30 B. 229 (236, 237), approved in Balwant Rao v. Baji Rao, 48 C. 30 (43, 44) P.C.

(12) Dhondi v. Radhabai, 36 B. 546 (548); Balwant Rao v. Baji Rao, 48 C. 30 (43, 44) P.C.

(13) Harmobh v. Mandil, 27 C. 379 (390) (cases reviewed); Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 6 N.W. P. H. C. R. 382 (411), affirmed O.A. 1 A. 688 (705) P. C.; Shimbu v. Gayanchand, 16 A. 379; Madanji v. Tribhuwan, 13 Bom. L. R. 1121.

(14) Shimbhu v. Gayan, 16 A. 379.

(15) Madanji v. Tribhowan, 36 B. 396.

and not to one acquired by compromise,[1] gift, will[2] or by adverse possession. So, where on the death of her husband, his widow sued her husband's coparceners for possession of his estate, whereupon the coparceners compromised the suit by executing in her favour a deed of gift as a matter of favour, conveying to her certain properties, it was held that, though by suit she could only have obtained a life-estate, by the compromise she had obtained a larger estate which the language of the deed in her favour was susceptible of conveying.[3] The question is one of construction. In this case, the right of the widow was denied, and the property was conveyed as a matter of favour, which was held to distinguish cases in which the property was conveyed in settlement of her claim.[4] It has already been seen that it is open to a person to convey an absolute estate in favour of a female by gift or will, though the presumption is that they take a limited estate. But the natural presumption may be displaced by the use of such apt expressions as suffice to convey a heritable estate.[5]

Estate of joint heirs.

337. (1) Under the Mitakshara law, two or more joint female heirs take as joint tenants with the right of survivorship inter se;[6]

(2) But those subject to the Bombay[7] and the Dayabhag[8] laws as tenants-in-common;

(3) Any alienation by the former must be made either jointly by all or with their express or implied consent;[9]

(4) But an alienation by the latter may be made by any of the co-heiresses to the extent of her share.

2433. Analogous Law.—It has already been seen that one distinction between the Mitakshara and other schools is as to the interest taken by the heirs upon succession. Under the Mitakshara school, which favours and strives for joint estates, female heirs on succession take as joint tenants,[10] while those under the Mayukh[11] and the

(1) Natha Lal v. Baboo Ram, (1936) P.C. 103; Sambasiva v. Venkateswara, 31 M. 179; Parshottam v. Kesav Lal, 56 B. 164.

(2) Gift and wills are now subject to the general law enacted in the Transfer of Property Act, and the Succession Act respectively.

(3) Sambasiva v. Visvam, 30 M. 356 O.A. Sambasiva v. Venkataswara, 31 M. 179.

(4) Rabutty v. Shibchunder, 6 M. I. A. 1 (16); Dino Nath v. Gopal, 8 C.L. R. 571; Ganpat v. Ram Chunder, 11 A. 296; explained in Sambasiva v. Visvam, 30 M. 356 (360).

(5) Surjamani v. Rabi Nath, 30 A. 84 P.C.; Bishnath v. Chandrika, 55 A. 61 P.C.; Bhaidas v. Gulab, 26 C.W.N. 129 P.C.

(6) See S. 290, Bhugwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M.I.A. 487; Venkayyamma v. Venkata, 25 M. 675 (687, 688)) P.C.

(7) Vithappa v. Savitri, 34 B. 510 (513) and cases post.

(8) Janaki v. Mothuranath, 9 C. 580 (585) F.B.; Durga Nath v. Chintamoni, 31 C. 214.

(9) Bhugwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M.I.A. 487; Sri Gajapati v. Maharani, 16 M. 1 P.C.; Durga Deb v. Gita, 33 A. 443; Govind v. Chandrabhaga, 12 N. 100 (111, 112); Gaya Dei v. Tulsha Dei, 10 Luck. 587.

(10) Bhagwandeen v. Myna Bai, 11 M.I.A. 487 (515); Radhamani v. Alakajeswari, 16 M. 1 (10) P.C.; Venkayamma v. Venkata, 25 M. 678 (686-688) P.C.; Bangbutty v. Radha Kissno, Montr. 314; Jioyiamba v. Kamakshi, 3 M.H.C.R. 424; Gajapathi v. Gajapathi, 1 M. 290; Kathaperumal v. Venkabai, 2 M. 194 (195); Gurivi v. Chinnamma, 7 M. 93 (95); Ariyaputri v. Alamelu, 11 M. 304 (306); Ramakkal v. Ramasami, 22 M. 522; Balagobind v. Ram Kumar, 6 A. 431 (436); Ram Piyari v. Mulchand, 7 A. 114 (117); Mula Bai v. Maharaj Singh, 2 C.P.L.R. 166; Khulroo v. Saraswati, 5 C.P.L.R. 58; Chander v. Murat Singh, 7 C.P.L.R. 153.

(11) Bulakhi Das v. Keshav Lal, 6 B. 85 (88); Bhagirati Bai v. Kahnujirao,

Dayabhag[1] take as tenants-in-common in quasi-severalty. From the fact that the Mitakshara women inherit jointly, it follows that the right of enjoyment and alienation must till partition, remain joint. Consequently, one co-heiress cannot, without the consent of the other, alienate the join estate unless she does so agent or manager for the other. As was observed by the Privy Council: "They are, therefore, in the strictest sense, coparceners, and between the undivided coparceners, there can be no alienation by one without the consent of the other."[2] But this was not a case of alienation for legal necessity. In another case, their Lordships had to consider whether a mortgage by the senior co-widow, who managed the estate, which was presumably joint, for legal necessity but without the consent of the junior widow, was, on the former's death, enforceable against the estate, which the junior widow took by survivorship. Their Lordships found that the mortgage had not been executed by the senior widow qua manager, and that any mortgage executed by her, even for necessity, without the consent of the co-widow, could not be enforced against the latter, when the estate passed to her by survivorship.[3] These cases still left undecided the question whether a divided co-widow is entitled to alien her own interest for legal necessity, so as to bind the surviving co-widow. It has already been seen that no partition between co-widows can defeat their right of survivorship. (Section 181), from which it follows that no alienation by a divided co-widow, even if supported by legal necessity, can, on her death, bind her surviving co-widow. It has been so held in several cases, though the contrary has also been maintained on the analogy of coparceners, any one of whom may alien joint property for legal necessity.[4] But these cases happened to be cases of alienations by a co-widow, of her share, for legal necessity. But if the principle applicable to coparceners be followed, then a co-widow might alienate the whole estate for legal necessity, and even without her alienation, even her unsecured debts would be so recoverable.

In any case, it would be so where the co-widows have relinquished their right of survivorship, which they are entitled to do (§ 1504), or where a co-widow has surrendered her interest to the other, in which case, the latter would take as on survivorship.[5]

Accretion.

338. (1) Any accretion made by an heiress partakes of the nature of the estate to which it is added;[6]

(2) The question whether any property is an accretion to the parent estate is one of intention to augment it by treating it as part thereof;[7]

---

11 B. 285; Hari v. Vital, 31 B. 560; Vithappa v. Savitri, 34 B. 510; Rukhmani v. Keshav Lal, 9 Bom.L.R. 1293; Chinnaku v. Utam, 2 S.L.R. 59.

(1) Janoki v. Mathuranath, 9 C. 580 (585) F.B.

(2) Bhagwandeen v. Myna Bai, 11 M I.A. 487 (515).

(3) Gajapati v. Pasupati, 16 M. 1 (10, 11) P.C.

(4) Jai Narain v. Mannalal, 50 A. 489 (494), following Thakurmani v. Dai Rani, 33 C. 1079 (1089).

(5) Ramakkal v. Ramasami, 22 M. 522 (524); Sadalai v. Gomathi, (1912) 2 M.W.N. 911; Judubunsee v. Asaman, 14 W.R. 370; Dulhin Parbati v. Baijnath, 14 Pat. 518.

(6) Ishri Dutt v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 329 P.C.; Naba Kishore v. Upendra Kishore, 26 C.W.N. 322 : 65 I.C. 305 : (1922) P.C. 39.

(7) Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 (442) P.C.; Aviswarya v. Sivaji, 49 M. 116; Rukmabai v. Jaipal, 23 N.L.R. 108 : 100 I.C. 457; (1927) N. 122.

(3) But in the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, any purchase made out of income of an estate and left undisposed of at her death may be presumed to be an accretion thereto.[1]

Illustrations.

(a) A, a female heiress, receives the income of her husband's estate from the executor of his will, who holds the estate in trust for her and his other heirs. A purchases property out of the income so received and devises it to her own relation. A is entitled to do so, and the estate not being in possession, there is no question of accretion.[2]

(b) A receives an estate by way of maintenance, out of the profits of which she purchases a village B. B is A's stridhan at her absolute disposal.[3]

(c) A devises an estate to his widow B for life. Out of the profits of this estate, B purchases a property C. C is her stridhan at her absolute disposal.[4]

2434. Analogous Law.—The rule as to accretion follows the general rule of Hindu Law regarding the nature of interest which women take, whether by inheritance, gift or otherwise, in all of which cases, they are presumed to take only a limited interest, an interest, which is erroneously spoken as a life estate, which it is not, since it is an estate of inheritance. Consequently, it follows as a natural corollary that the unexpended profits of the corpus, which remain undisposed of, and the property into which they might be invested, must form an accretion to the estate, unless the life-holder indicates that she intends to treat them as her own. That she is entitled to do so follows from the fact that, while the female heir is not absolutely entitled to the corpus, she is so entitled to its income; but, nevertheless, since the undisposed of income follows the corpus, the presumption of its so doing is justified in the absence of anything to show to the contrary. The case is, however, different where the female takes under a gift or devise, in which case, her right to the corpus or to its income would depend upon the terms of the grant. If it confers an absolute estate upon her, there can be no question of accretion. If the estate conferred is limited, but she is expressly given an absolute right over the income, then the income would be hers, and all, it is converted into, would be prima facie hers also. It may be asked: What difference is there between the two cases, since in either case, the income is absolutely hers, and why should the presumptions in the two cases be different? The answer is that in the one case the natural rule that accessio cedit principale applies, whereas in the other case, there can be no room for accession, since the grantor had himself separated the income from the corpus.

2435. In dealing with the subject of accumulations, it has been seen that the heiress is entitled to all accumulations from income made to her estate since the estate vested in her. These, being in the nature of income, are absolutely at her disposal. The subject of accumulations is allied to accretion, and the reports teem with cases in which the question for decision was whether the property acquired by the widow is to be taken as incorporated into her heritage or is to be treated as her own. The whole question is one of intention. Did she intend to augment the estate or to benefit herself? It is settled that the heiress is entitled to appropriate

(1) Ishri Dutt v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 329 (337) P.C.; Sheolochan v. Saheb Singh, 14 C. 387 (393) P.C.; Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 (441) P.C.; Krishnakumari v. Rajendra Bahadur, 2 Luck. 43 : (1927) O. 240.

(2) Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 (442) P.C.; Subramania, v. Arunachalam, 28 M. 1.

(3) Subramaniam v. Arunachalam, 28 M. 1 (8).

(4) Guru Prasad v. Nafar Das, 3 B. L.R. (A.C.) 121; Mohini Mohan v. Rashbehari, (1937) C. 229.

and dispose of at her discretion, the income from her estate, however large, from which it follows that whatever she may expend without let or hindrance, she may also save or invest for her own use. This is also conceded. But then arises the question, suppose a widow comes into possession of the property of her husband, and receives the income, and does not spend it, but invests it in the purchase of other property, what is the presumption? Now, the Hindu Law presumes that a Hindu woman is incompetent to possess more than a limited estate—that she may possess an absolute estate is in the nature of an exception—and as regards the purchase out of the savings of her limited estate, law presumes that such purchase is impressed with the same incidents to which her main estate was subject.[1] But it is only a presumption which may be rebutted by evidence of intention showing that the purchaser intended to treat the acquisition as her own. This appears to be the trend of the leading cases on the subject, though, at first blush, they do not all appear to be reconcilable.[2]

2436. In one case, the widow had made such purchases from the profits of her estate. She gifted them to her daughter, describing them as her self-acquired property. Her reversioners sued for a declaration that the gift conveyed nothing beyond the donor's limited estate, but the suit was thrown out on the ground that the widow could treat the property as her own, and the fact that she described it as her self-acquisition and conveyed it, as such, by a gift inter vivos, was evidence that she did intend to treat it as such.[3] The Privy Council observed: "that it was not possible to lay down any sharp definition of the line which separates accretions to the husband's estate from income held in suspense in the hands of the widow, as to which she has not determined whether or not she will spend it."[4]

2437. But in another case in which the widow's power of absolute disposal was negatived on the following facts: (i) The purchases were of shares of land, in which the husband was a shareholder to a large extent, and which showed that the purchases were intended to make the estate compact. ((ii) Though they were purchased a short time after his death in 1857, no attempt to alienate them was made till 1873, i.e., for a period of 16 years. (iii) The object of the alienation was not the need or the personal benefit of the widow, but a desire to change the succession and to give the inheritance to her own heir in preference to her husband's heirs. (iv) Neither with reference to this object, nor, apparently, in any other way, had the widow made any distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases. "These are circumstances which, in their Lordships' opinion, clearly establish accretion to the original estate and make the after-purchases inalienable by the widow for any purpose which would not justify alienation of that original estate."[5]

---

(1) Ishri Dutt v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 324 P.C.; Sheolochan v. Saheb Singh, 14 C. 387 P.C.; Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 (443) P.C.; Wahid Ali v. Tori Ram, 35 A. 551 (554); Upendra v. Nobo Krishna, 23 C.W.N. 64: 48 I.C. 993; contra in Akkanna v. Venkayya, 25 M. 351; Vikrama v. Vikrama, 33 M.L.J. 665.

(2) Bhagabati v. Sohodra, 16 C.W.N. 834 : 13 I.C. 691.

(3) Hansbutti v. Ishri Dutt, 5 C. 512.

(4) Per Lord Hobhouse in Ishri Dutt v. Hunsbutti, 10 C. 324 (337) P.C.

(5) Ishri Dutt v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 324 (337) P.C.

2438. But in another case, in which the widow's power of absolute disposal was upheld by the same high tribunal, on the following facts. The wife had inherited her husband's estate under his will, the accumulations of which, amounting to Rs. 2,89,000, since her husband's death, were made over to her in 1866, most of which she soon afterwards invested in Government paper, which, 20 years later, she assigned to the Advocate-General and made a will, in which she described the rupee paper as her absolute property, whereupon the Privy Council held it to be her separate property even though she had blended it with other paper belonging to her husband.[1]

2439. What is the difference in principle between this case and the last, it may be asked.? The difference is clear. Since, while in the one case the corpus was in the hands of the widow, in the other case, it was in the hands of the executor, of which only the income was made over to the widow. Again, the nature of the investment in the one case gave a clear indication of augmenting the estate, whereas the investment in the other case was such as "any prudent person" would make of his savings. These two cases are, therefore, instructive in that they show what is an accretion and what is not.

2440. Evidence of Accretion.—In some cases, the Courts were inclined to the view that whatever acquisitions were undisposed of by the widow, must be taken to have been left as an accretion to the estate.[2] But the Privy Council reversed this decision upon other grounds without going into the legal question. It is often a question of some nicety to determine, in each individual case, whether the property in dispute is in the nature of accumulation, or is merely a saving held in suspense by the widow, intended to be appropriated for her personal use later on.

Clause (2).

2441. The question being, then, one of intention, evidence of such intention must be found in the circumstances of each case. But apart from intention the other way, the presumption is in favour of accretion, whether it comprises unexpended income, or the property acquired therefrom, or even additions made to the corpus by adverse possession.[3] Where, for instance, the widow constructed a house out of her savings upon land which she had inherited from her husband, it is a clear indication of her intention to treat the house as an accretion to the land.[4] The same presumption might arise where the widow purchases a share of land, of which she held a major portion as inherited from her husband, which would indicate an intention that the acquisition was made with the view of improving her estate by making it more compact and convenient for management.[5] So, where a howdah (seat on an elephant), which was originally a part of the estate of the husband, had been sold to a stranger in execution of a money-decree against the estate, but the widow re-purchased it, the court held the inference irresistable that she intended to treat it as a part of her husband's estate.[6] So, where the widow makes no distinction between the original estate and the after-purchase, the prima

(1) Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 P.C.

(2) Bhola Nath v. Bhagabatti, 7 B. L.R. 93, reversed O.A. Bhagbatti v. Bhola Nath, 24 W.R. 168 P.C.

(3) Lajwanti v. Safachand, 5 L. 192 P.C.; Chakradhar v. Shah Kant, 88 I.C. 767 : (1925) P. 460; Uhmrao Singh v. Pirthi, 86 I.C. 445 : (1925) A. 369.

(4) Fakira v. Gopilal, 6 C.L.R. 66 (68); Venkata v. Venkata, 31 M. 321.

(5) Ishri Dutt v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 324 (334) P.C.; reversing Hansbutti v. Ishri Dutt, 5 C. 512.

(6) Bhabati v. Sahodra, 16 C.W.N. 834 : 13 I.C. 691.

facie presumption is that it has been her intention to keep the estate one and entire, and that the after-purchases are an increment to the original estate.

2442. This was the view taken in a case in which the widow, having made purchases out of the savings of her husband's estate, had gifted the whole estate including the after-purchases by a single deed "for the preservation of the riasat and name of her husband, for the worship of the Thakur and for her husband's shradh." The court held that upon this deed of gift there was no doubt that the widow regarded herself as equally entitled to the two properties and in the same right as her husband's widow, which was only consistent with the after-purchases being treated by her as accretions to the original estate. "The transaction appears to indicate that her intention was not to create separate estates, one to go in one way, and another in another, but to keep the whole as one entire property."[1] So, there is a presumption that all unappropriated profits of the estate pass with the corpus to her reversioners. An Ainslie, J., said: "The fact that unappropriated profits do not pass as stridhan is to be explained on the theory that when the widow has left money accumulated, it was her intention to add such money to the estate and to abstain from exercising her full rights over them."[2]

But this presumption can only arise where the female takes by inheritance and not by devise. In the latter case, as grantee of the rents and profits for life, they vest in her absolutely as her own stridhan, and on her death, will go to her own heirs and not to the reversioner.[3]

2443. In one case, the widow, being in possession of her husband's estate, sued for and obtained a decree for pre-emption, whereupon the land acquired was, by reason of the mode of acquisition, held to become an accretion to her inherited estate.[4] But the mere facts that her right of pre-emption arose by reason of her inheritance and the pre-emption money was paid out of the income of her inherited estate, do not seem to be any evidence of her intention to treat her new acquisition as an accretion to the main estate. A case for accretion would, however, arise even where the widow, after her possession of her husband's estate for over fifty years, suffers it to be sold in execution of a money-decree against her and repurchases it herself out of the income of her husband's estate. Here it may be safely presumed that, inspite of the lapse of so long a period, the repurchase of the property belonging to her husband was, in the absence of other circumstances, presumably intended to restore the status quo ante.[5]

There can be no question but that the enlargement of the widow's estate from an inferior proprietary tenure to a full proprietary tenure, would not alter its incidents, to the derogation of other persons interested in the reversion,[6] and, contrariwise, the acquisition by her as proprietor of under tenures would not lead to the same result.[7]

---

(1) Sheolochun v. Saheb Singh, 14 C. 387 (393, 394) P.C., following Ishri Dutt v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 324 P.C.

(2) Hansbutti v. Ishri Dutt, 5 C. 512 (525), followed in Rivett Carnac v. Jiva Bai, 10 B. 478 (482); Bhagabatti v. Sahodra, 16 C.W.N. 834 : 13 I.C. 691.

(3) Guru Prasad v. Nafar Das, 3 B. L.R. (A.C.) 121 (123).

(4) Chela Ram v. Ishar Das, (1916) P.W.R. 41 : 32 I.C. 831.

(5) Niranjan v. Shib Prasad, 41 I.C. (C.) 370.

(6) S. 90, Trusts Act; Kashi Prasad v. Indar Kunwar, 30 A. 490 (495, 496).

(7) Shankar Singh v. Lal Bahadur, 82 I.C. 637 : (1926) O. 277; aliter—where she inherits Akad Kar lands and acquires therein occupancy right; Narain Singh v.

The fact that a property, though purchased by the widow, was described as the estate of her husband shows the intention to treat it as an accretion.[1]

2444. No Accretion.—There can be no question of accretion where the heiress is in possession of no estate,[2] nor where, being in possession, she holds it otherwise than as an heiress. It is only when she owns it as such that any question of accumulation or accretion can arise. Even then, since the question of accretion is one of intention, it follows that the heiress possesses the unfettered power of disposal over purchases made by her during her lifetime.[3] She may, in fact, by her express declaration, act or conduct, show that she does not intend to incorporate her acquisitions in her inherited estate.[4] It is only when her act or conduct is equivocal that any question of presumption or of intention can arise. If she disposes of her acquisition by a transfer inter vivos, the question of intention is reduced to the question of construction of the deed, and if it is unambiguous, her power cannot be questioned.[5] Her conduct may sometimes afford a clue to her intention, as where she purchased her brother's property at a court sale and then immediately reconveyed it to him, which was held to be clear evidence of her intention to benefit her brother, and the property could not, therefore, be treated as an accretion to her husband's estate.[6]

2445. Properties purchased on the credit of the husband's estate do not necessarily become accretions, though it is equitable that he who takes them must pay the charge.[7] So, again, where a female is granted, for her life, the rents and profits of an estate by will, they vest in her absolutely by way of assignment, and whether they are collected or not, they pass, on her death, to the heirs of her stridhan.[8] Such case is distinguishable from a maintenance grant, in which case, all her savings therefrom are her stridhan,[9] and all arrear is treated as a debt due to her, which her stridhan heirs can recover, and to whom, consequently, pass all properties purchased out of her grant.[10]

2446. Where the widow, who had inherited her husband's house, rebuilt it and sold it during her lifetime, it was held that it must be presumed that she rebuilt it out of her own money over which she had full control, and the resale by her was evidence of her intention that she did not intend to treat it as an accretion to her inherited estate.[11]

After the title had vested in the widow, her reversioner took wrongful possession of her estate. She sued him and obtained a decree for mesne profits, which she assigned to another and then died. The assig-

---

Sada Kaur, 6 L. 134; or acquires an occupancy right by payment of her own money; Prem Lal v. Bhag Chand, 19 N. L.R. 4 : 69 I.C. 669 : (1923) N. 34.

(1) Upendra v. Nobo Kishore, 23 C. W.N. 86 : 48 I.C. 993 (1002).

(2) Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 (442) P.C.

(3) Wahid Ali v. Tori Ram, 35 A. 551; Lokhan v. Dulari, 11 O.C. 310.

(4) Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 (443) P.C.

(5) Ishri Dutt v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 324 (337) P.C.

(6) Keshav v. Maruti, 46 B. 37.

(7) Oodey Singh v. Phool Chund, 5 N.W.P.H.C.R. 197.

(8) Guru Prasad v. Nafar Das, 3 B.L.R. (A.C.) 121 (123); Bhagbutti v. Bholanath, 1 C. 104 P.C.; Hansbutti v. Ishri Dutt, 5 C. 512 (521), reversed on facts O.A. Ishri Dutt v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 324 P.C.; Shib Saran v. Kesho Prasad, (1918) Pat. 86 : 42 I.C. 122 (126).

(9) Jwala Prasad v. Sukhdev, 51 I.C. (A.) 59.

(10) Subramanian v. Arunachelam, 28 M. 1 (8); Jwala Prasad v. Sukhdei, 57 I.C. (A.) 59.

(11) Ram Dayal v. Sumer Singh, 2 O.L.J. 466 : 32 I.C. 356.

nee sued out execution against the reversioner, in whom the estate became subsequently vested, and he contested the widow's right to alien her decree for mesne profits so as to enure beyond her lifetime; but the court held that the decree for profits was a decree for her income, which she was competent to assign and that, as there was no evidence that she had treated the decree as an accretion to the estate, the assignee was entitled to recover.[11]

2447. The fact that the purchase was made benami is clear indication of an intention to keep the purchases separate from the inherited estate.[2] The fact that the heiress acquires property by using no fund out of her inherited estate is a circumstance which must be taken into consideration in judging of her intention. But it is not conclusive of her intention one way or the other. A Hindu widow acquired a certain property by enforcing her right of premption, to which she was entitled by reason of her inheritance. She paid the price of pre-emption by mortgaging the pre-empted property. On the question arising whether this acquisition was an accretion to her husband's estate, the court held that prima facie it was not, as there was nothing to shew that she intended to incorporate it with her husband's estate.[3] The contrary intention was clearly evidenced by the purchase of her brother's estate at a court sale by a woman, who had inherited to her son, out of the savings of which estate she paid for her purchase, which, however, she reconveyed to her brother, which was evidence enough of her intention to present to her brother the estate which he had brought to the hammer.[4]

Income and its Savings.

2448. Since a woman cannot, outside the Mayukh country, acquire by partition[5] or inheritance,[6] anything beyond a limited estate, anything so acquired cannot be treated as her stridhan. But since she has an absolute right of disposal of its income, it follows that any savings made by her therefrom, would become her stridhan and devolve as such,[7] provided it does not become an accretion to the inherited estate. As has been seen before, the question is one of intention. (§§2435-2438.) Such intention may be inferred from the fact that the income was kept separate or otherwise appropriated in the purchase of property which the heiress treated as her own and as quite distinct from her inherited estate.[8] Apart from such intention, the income of an estate in her possession is not her stridhan, and if undisposed of, will go with the estate.[9] The

(1) Saminatha v. Manikkasami, 22 M. 356.

(2) Upendra v. Nobo Kishore, 23 C. W.N. 86 : 48 I.C. 933 (1002); Nirmala v. Deva Narayan, 55 C. 269 (275, 276).

(3) Sri Ram v. Jagadamba, 43 A. 375 F.B.

(4) Keshav v. Maruti, 23 Bom.L.R. 803 : 62 I.C. 954.

(5) Debi Mangal v. Mahadeo, 34 A. 234 P.C.; overruling O.A. Debi Mangal v. Mahadeo, 32 A. 253, also Chhiddu v. Naubat, 24 A. 67; Mathura v. Ganga Ram, 7 A.L.J. 69: 5 I.C. 519; Krishnalal v. Nandeshwar, 4 Pat.L.J. 38: 44 I.C. 146; Vinayak v. Laxman, 14 N.L.R. 56.

(6) Thakur Deybee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 139 (172-174); Bhugwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M.I.A. 487 (504, 513, 514); Chotay Lal v. Chunnoo Lal, 4 C. 744 P.C.; Sheo Shankar v. Debi Sahai, 25 A. 468 P.C.; Lal Sheo Pertab v. Allahabad Bank, 25 A. 476 P.C.; Janak Setty v. Mariala, 32 M. 521; Ramji v. Durga, (1918) P.R. No. 6 : 45 I.C. 90.

(7) Ranika v. Jamma, 15 A.L.J. 788: 42 I.C. 846.

(8) Sasiman v. Sibnarayan, 1 Pat. L. W. 375 : 39 I.C. 755.

(9) Sitaram v. Dulam, 41 A. 350; contra in Malan v. Kishore Chand, 71 I. C. 833 : (1923) L. 17.

fact that she bequeathed such property, describing it as her stridhan, was held to be clearly indicative of her intention to treat her savings as her own.[1] Property perchased out of savings becomes her stridhan, if it was so treated.[2]

It follows that the estate so acquired would descend to the acquirer's stridhan heirs.

2449. Presumption of Accretion.—It has already been stated before, that all additions made by a female to her limited estate, out of its savings, would prima facie be deemed to be accretions, unless there is anything to prove to the contrary. But, on this point, two views are possible, and both have the support of cases. The one view is that since a limited estate is the rule and an absolute estate an exception, all acquisitions must be presumed to partake of the character of the limited estate till the contrary is shown.[3] The other view is that the woman's incompetence only applies to her inherited estate, but has no reference to an estate acquired aliunde. Since a woman is not incompetent to acquire an absolute estate or title by deed, devise and adverse possession, there is no reason why any presumption should be made against her capacity to acquire an absolute estate out of saving, over which she possesses the absolute power of disposal.[4] In the view of the Madras High Court, an acquisition made by the heiress out of the income of her limited estate, must be presumed to be her stridhan in the absence of anything to show that she intended to treat it as an accretion. The income being her absolute property, so must be the estate into which it is converted.[5] But, of course, there can be no presumption of accretion where the widow is not in possession of her husband's estate.[6]

Clause (3).

2450. Referring to this question, the Privy Council said: "Where a widow comes into possession of the property of the husband and receives the income, and does not spend it but invests it in the purchase of other property, their Lordships think that prima facie it is the intention of the widow to keep the estate of the husband as an entire estate, and that the property purchased would prima facie be intended to be accretions to the estate. There may be, no doubt, circumstances which would show that the widow had no such intention, that she intended to appropriate the savings in another way."[7] This case is, then, an authority that a purchase out of savings is presumably an accretion. The contrary was contended by the appellant in another case, which their Lord-

(1) Sitaram v. Dulam, 41 A. 350.

(2) Bhagabutti v. Bholanath, 1 C. 104 P.C.; Ishri Dutt v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 324 P.C.; Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 P.C.; Veeraraghava v. Kota, 31 M.L.J. 465 : 33 I.C. 532.

(3) Gonda Koer v. Oodey Singh, 14 B.L.R. 159; Bhagbutti v. Bholanath, 24 W.R. 168 P.C.; Ishri Dutt v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 324 P.C.; Sheo Lochun v. Sahob Singh, 14 C. 387 P.C.; Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 P.C.; Ramanand v. Ramsaran, 7 I.C. (C.) 28 (29); Wahid Ali v. Tori Ram, 35 A. 551 (554).

(4) Akkanna v. Venkayya, 25 M. 351 (359, 360); Ramakrishna v. Rukmavati, 11 M. L. W. 112, dissented from in Ramanand v. Ramsaran, 7 I.C. (C.) 28 (29).

(5) Parthasarathy v. Venkatadri, 45 M. 190 (220); Aiyaswarya v. Sivaji, 49 M. 116 (149, 150); Akkanna v. Venkayya, 25 M. 351; Raja of Ramnad v. Sundara, 42 M. 581 P.C.; but contra in Nabakishore v. Upendra Kishore, 42 M.L.J. 253 P.C.

(6) Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 P.C.; Kulachandra v. Bama Sundari, 41 C. 870; Rukhmabai v. Jaipal, 23 N.L.R. 108 (115, 116).

(7) Sheo Lochun v. Saheb Singh, 14 C. 387 (393, 394) P.C.

ships did not concede. "It has been argued," they said, "that, assuming the purchases to have been made by the widow out of the proceeds of her husband's estate, nevertheless, they do not form an increment to that estate, but belong to the widow absolutely and are at her absolute disposal, either by gift in her lifetime or by will. It has been further argued that, even if the presumption be that such purchases are an increment to the husband's estate, it may be rebutted by clear proof of her intention to sever them from that estate and to treat them as made in her own right, whereupon she acquires the power to dispose of them, and that such intention is proved in this case.....In the present case, their Lordships are of opinion that Khushal Kuar, who always maintained the validity of her son's adoption as heir to her deceased husband, and treated him as entitled to succeed to her husband's property, must be presumed to have intended to make her purchase an accretion to that property; nor do they see any evidence to rebut this presumption."[1]

2451. In another case, the question of presumption being raised, the same high tribunal said: "The appellant's counsel contends that the savings of a Hindu widow must be presumed to have been made for the benefit of her husband's estate. Without examining the precise result of the decisions, it is sufficient to say that, in this case, there is no room for any such presumption."[2]

2452. But there are cases on the other side of the line, in one of which it was said: "The acquirer of property intends to retain dominion over it, and in the case of a Hindu widow, the presumption is nonetheless so, when the fund with which the property is acquired is one which, though derived from her husband's property, was at her absolute disposal. In the case of property inherited from the husband, it is not by reason of her intention, but by reason of the limited nature of a widow's estate under the Hindu Law, that she has only a limited power of disposition. But her absolute power of disposition over the income derived from such limited estate being now fully recognized, it is only reasonable that, in the absence of an indication of her intention to the contrary, she must be presumed to retain the same control over the investment of such income. The mere fact that properties thus acquired by her are managed and enjoyed by her, without any distinction, along with properties inherited from her husband, can in no way affect this presumption. She is the sole and separate owner of the two sets of properties, so long as she enjoys the same, and is absolutely entitled to the income derived from both sets of properties.[3]" The cogency of this reasoning was admitted by the Calcutta High Court who, however, felt constrained to hold that the subject was concluded the other way by authority."[4] It should be noted that the presumption will only arise when it is proved or admitted that the after-acquisitions were made with the savings of the inherited estate. There is no presumption that anything in the possession of the widow belongs to her husband, and he who claims the property as heir of the husband must show that any property so claimed by him belonged to the husband.[5] This was the underlying

(1) Gonda Kuar v. Oodey Singh, 14 B.L.R. 159 (164, 166) P.C., distinguishing Soorjemoney v. Denobundoo, 9 M.I.A. 123 P.C.

(2) Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 (442) P.C.

(3) Akhanna v. Venkayya, 25 M. 351 (359, 366).

(4) Ramanand v. Ramsaran, 7 I.C (C.) 28 (29).

(5) Bajai Bahadur v. Indarpal, 26 C. 871 (875) P.C.; Jadunath v. Ramnarain, 11 I.C. 434; Keshav v. Maruti, 23 Bom. L.R. 803.

thought in the case in which the widow, who had succeeded as heir to her son, had purchased her brother's property at a court auction out of the savings of her income from her inherited estate. The property she had purchased she re-conveyed to her brother. On her death, this property was claimed to be an accretion to her son's estate, but the court overruled the contention, holding that there was no evidence of any intention, on the part of the widow, to treat her acquisition as an accretion, to her son's estate; and that the fact of her reconveying it to her brother, rather proved the contrary.[1] In another case, the widow had made some purchases, out of her savings, in the name of her daughter, whereupon the court held that, while the mere purchase did not raise the presumption that the widow intended to make a gift of her purchases to the daughter, still it would be so presumed if there was evidence that, since their purchase, the properties have been in the exclusive possession of the daughter.[2] But this rule, based on the analogy of advancement, has scarcely any application here, and it is apprehended that such purchase is, at any rate, good evidence of her intention to segregate her new acquisition.

2453. Woman as Donee.—It has been said that the presumption as to accretion is inapplicable to an estate acquired by the female as the legatee or donee, or otherwise than by inheritance (§ 2442). If she is devised an estate, with express power to appropriate the profits, these and the purchases made therefrom will naturally by her stridhan, which she can dispose of at her pleasure and which, on her death, will pass to her own stridhan heirs.[3]

Testamentary incapacity.

339. (1) A woman has no power (even with the consent of her presumptive reversioner) to dispose of, by will, all or any of the limited estate inherited by her.[4]

(2) But she may bequeath its income both realised and unrealised[5] which is absolutely her own.

2454. Analogous Law.—The law of Wills is, as previously remarked, a development of the law of gifts. And as a woman has no power to make a gift, except to relations when supported by religious necessity, it follows that she can have no power to make a will of her limited estate, which does not survive her death.[6] This is manifest. But it was at one time held that, though she had an absolute power of disposal

(1) Keshav v. Maruti, 23 Bom.L.R. 803.

(2) Charusila v. Mrinalini, 64 I.C. (C.) 531 (533), following Ram Narain v. Mhd. Hadi, 26 C. 227 P.C.

(3) Bhagbuti v. Bholanath, 24 W.R. 168 P.C.; 1 C. 104. (Short note only); Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 (441) P.C.; Narsingh Rao v. Mahalakshmi, 50 A. 375 (392) P.C. Guru v. Nafar, 11 W. R. 497; Nagatkumaru v. Marakathammal, 1 M. 166; Subramania v. Arunachelam, 28 M. 1 F. B.; Veeraraghava v. Kola Reddi, 3 M. L.J. 465; 33 I.C. 322; Krishna Kumari v. Rajendra Bahadur, 2 Luck 43: (1927) O. 240.

(4) Gobardhan v. Onoop Roy, 3 W.R. 105; Sarat Chandra v. Charusila, 55 C. 918 (933, 934).

(5) Mahini Mohan v. Rashbehari, I. L.R. (1937) C. 229 (232); Akanna v. Venkayya, 25 M. 325; Vikrama v. Vikrama, 33 M.L.J. 665; contra, Sarat Chandra v. Charusila, 55 C. 918 (933, 934). Sridhar v. Kalipada, 16 C.W.N. 106; Wahid Ali v. Tori Ram, 35 A. 551 (555); Rivet v. Carnac Jevibai, 10 B. 478; Sasiman v. Sibnarayana, 1 Pat. L.W. 375 : 39 I.C. 755.

(6) Gobardhan v. Onoop Roy, 3 W. R. 105.

over her income in her lifetime,[1] she could not, except in Madras,[2] dispose of it by will,[3] even with the consent of her reversioners.[4] But the case is, of course, different where the estate was received by her otherwise than by inheritance e.g., a gift from her father, in which case her power of disposal must depend upon the nature of the estate gifted to her.[5]

Incidents of a woman's estate.

340. Except as otherwise provided by any law for the time being in force, the incidents of a woman's inherited estate are as follows:—

(1) She is entitled to absolute possession of the estate which vests in her by right of inheritance;[6]

(2) She is entitled to its beneficial enjoyment, its rents and profits and income which is her own and not liable for her husband's debts.[7]

(3) She may grant leases and do other acts in the ordinary course of management;[8]

(4) She may transfer all or any portion of the estate for her life or until her estate is determined earlier, as for example, by surrender or by her re-marriage;[9]

(5) Her interest therein may be seized and sold in execution of a decree against her.[10]

2455. Analogous Law.—From what has been stated before; it is obvious that a woman is, like any other heir, the owner of the estate which she acquires by inheritance, but with this difference that, she being a woman, her rights over her property are necessarily limited. This section lays down the extent of her rights. The next section will define the extent of her powers.

2456. 'Except as otherwise provided.'—Under S. 307 of the Succession Act,[11] an executor or administrator has, subject to the provisions of that section, power to dispose, as he thinks fit, of all or any of the property, for the time being vested in him under S. 211. As such, the court may permit him to dispose of any such immovable property by mortgage or sale, and without such permission he may not lease it for a term exceeding five years. As a woman may be appointed an executor or administrator under the provisions of this Act, she is competent to make an absolute alienation under S. 307, irrespective of the existence of legal necessity.[12] As administratrix, a Hindu female has the same power as any administrator under the law, and the fact that her powers

(1) Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433.

(2) Vikrama v. Vikrama, 33 M.L.J. 665; Akanna v. Venkayya, 25 M. 351.

(3) Nihalkhan v. Hur Churn, 1 Agra 219; Sarat Chandra v. Charusila, 55 C. 918 (933, 934), dissented from in Mohini Mohan v. Rashbehari, I.L.R. (1937) C. 229 (232), See cases cited supra.

(4) Durga Sundari v. Ram Krishna, 12 I.C. (C.) 591.

(5) Mohini Mohan v. Rashbehari, (1937) C. 229 (232) : I.L.R. (1937) 2 C. 97 (100), following Guru Prasad v. Nafar Das, 3 B.L.R. 121.

(6) Karimuddin v. Gobind, 31 R. 497 P.C.

(7) Jagannadhan v. Vighneswarudu, 55 M. 216; Sarat Chandra v. Charusila, 55 C. 918 (but she can bequeath her income), Mohini Mohan v. Rashbehari, (1937) C. 229 (232).

(8) Ramsumarau v. Shyan Kumari, 49 I.A. 342 : (1922) P.C. 356; Rajendra v. Peyari Mohan, 94 I.C. (C.) 321.

(9) Moni Ram v. Kerry, 5 C. 775 P.C.; Ram Krishna v. Kausalya, (1935) C. 689 (694).

(10) Chidambaramma v. Hussainamma, 39 M. 565.

(11) XXXIX of 1925.

(12) Kamikhya v. Hari, 26 C. 607. The law was the same under Act XXVII of 1860; Bhugwan v. Luchmee, 2 W. R. (M. A.) 19; Loganada v. Ramaswami, 1 M. H. C. R. 284.

are circumscribed by her personal law, does not stand in the way of her exercising her statutory powers.

2457. Entitled to Possession.—Possession is the first right of ownership, and being an owner, the heiress is entitled to possession. In other words, she owns and possesses the estate.[1] "Her absolute right to the fullest beneficial life-interest appears long to have been recognized. She takes, as heir, a proprietary estate in the land, absolutely for some purposes, although in some respects subject to special qualifications."[2] Her reversioners have no vested interest in her estate. All they have is a spes successionis.[3] Where there are more than one widow, the estate of their husband devolves upon all of them conjointly, and as a rule, all must act and sue together for its recovery from a stranger, though should one co-widow be recalcitrant, it is open to the other to sue for its recovery, impleading the other co-widow as a defendant, and if the latter is agreeable to be arrayed as a co-plaintiff, there is nothing to prevent the court from impleading her as a co-plaintiff. In any case, the estate cannot be suffered to be imperilled by her contumacy.[4]

Clause (1).

2458. Entitled to Beneficial Enjoyment.—From the fact that she is the owner of her estate it follows that she is entitled to its beneficial enjoyment, and to the fullest enjoyment of the movable and immovable property that she has inherited and all its income,[5] which is absolutely hers to spend as she likes, and except in the case of spoliation and waste destruction of the corpus, she cannot be restrained, if, in the ordinary course of her enjoyment, the property diminishes in value. The mere fact that her operation was novel does not show that it was an improper act destructive of the estate. She is entitled to make the most profitable use of her land, being entitled to it, to her own advantage, in the manner and for the purposes to which it is naturally best suited. She is entitled to lease all or any portion of the estate for her life, and in permanency, if justified by necessity. As such, the widow had, in one case, leased out two of her villages in which railway company quarried stones and paid Rs. 5,000 as compensation to the lessees. The reversioners sued for this money, on the ground that there had been a virtual conversion of a part of the corpus of the estate from land into money, to which they were entitled as the ultimate owners of the estate. But the court threw out their suit, holding that the villages belonged not to them but to the widow, who had the right to lease them out, which she did, and that the compensation paid to the widow's lessees was in the nature of profits from the lawful use of the land rather than the proceeds of the conversion of the landed heritage into money.[6]

Clause (2).

On the same principle, there can be no doubt that the widow would be entitled to extract minerals, cut down timber or make such other reasonable use of the estate as is not inconsistent with her beneficial enjoyment.

(1) Karimuddin v. Gobind, 31 A. 497 P.C., reversing O.A. 25 A. 546.

(2) Venkata v. Narasingappa, 3 M. H. C. R. 116 (117), citing Collector v. Cavaly, 8 M. I. A. 550; The Shivaganga case, 9 M.I.A. 604; Chidambaram v. Meenakshiammal, 52 I.C. (M.) 842.

(3) Anandi Bai v. Rajaram, 22 B. 984; Janaki v. Narayanaswami, 39 M. 634 (638) P.C.

(4) Seshayyar v. Saraswati, (1920) M.W.N. 721.

(5) Sarat Chandra v. Charusila, 55 C. 918.

(6) Subba Reddi v. Chengalamma, 22 M. 126 (131).

Right to Income.

2459. As a qualified owner of the estate, the widow is entitled to appropriate all its income, without being in any way accountable to her reversioners.[1] The fact that she wasted it upon extravagance, is not waste of the corpus, which alone the reversioner is entitled to restrain. She is not the executor or trustee of the estate or of any of its income. As such, she is not bound to pay thereout any debt which is not a charge upon the estate. Hence, where the husband died indebted to the wife, and the latter entered upon possession of his estate as his heir, she is under no obligation to pay herself out of the income which she receives as owner. Nor is there any case for merger.[2] It would seem, then, that if she alienated any portion of the corpus to pay herself, her reversioner could not challenge the alienation on the ground that she could have averted the sale by recouping herself out of its income. But, of course, this does not mean that the widow can appropriate all the gross receipts of the estate without paying thereout the assessment and all other charges which are payable by the owner. These she must meet out of her receipts, but if they do not leave her a surplus for her own maintenance, it is a case of necessity justifying an alienation of the corpus.[3] (§ 2489.)

Clause (3).

2460. Right to Grant Lease.—As such; she has the right to grant leases for such term as may be reasonable or prudent, and in any case, for her own life.[4] The court has upheld a patni lease granted by her[5] but in each case the question is one of prudence or necessity[6] and general benefit,[7] which of course, is not proved by the mere proof of the fact that the lease[8] was given on a fair market rent, since the first question that arises in such cases is not so much whether the lease was fair as why it was necessary or beneficial to the estate.

2461. A Hindu widow has not less power to grant leases than the manager of an infant heir,[9] and it will not be set aside, if it is found to be for the benefit of the estate and one by which the reversioners are found to have been benefited.[10] The same principle applies alike to all qualified owners of property, whether a female heir, a Mitakshara father or the manager of an infant or the shebait of an idol. As the Privy Council observed: "Their Lordships in no degree depart from the principles laid down in the case of Hanooman Pershad Pandey v. Mt. Babooee Munraj Koonwaree,[11] which has been so often cited. They have applied these principles in recent cases, not only to the case of a manager for an infant which was the case there, but to transactions on all fours with the present, namely, alienations by a widow, and to transactions in which a father, in derogation of the rights of his son under the

(1) Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 P.C.; Sheonandan v. Damodar, (1924) Pat. 711 : Bisunath v. Ramnath, 89 I.C. 581: (1925) O. 529.

(2) Jagannadham v. Visgneswarudu, 55 M. 216; Chidambaram v. Meenakshiammal, 52 I.C. (M.) 842.

(3) Ramsumram v. Shyam Kumari, 49 I.A. 342: 69 I.C. 71 (72): (1922) P.C. 356; Arura v. Shivdev, (1922) L. 61; Radha Ram v. Kushi Ram, 66 I.C. 343: (1922) L. 204.

(4) Palaniappa v. Devasikamoney, 40 M. 709 (720) P.C., (case of shebait whose rights are similar) Mohunkoomar v. Zoramun, 1 Hay 272; Raichurn v. Suroopchunder, 9 W.R. 598.

(5) Madhusudan v. Rocke, 25 C. 1 (7) P.C.

(6) Sankar v. Bejoy, 13 C. W. N. 201; Felaram v. Begalanand, 14 C. W. N. 895.

(7) Dayamani v. Srinibash, 33 C. 842: Bishwanath v. Ram Prasad, 10 Pat. 572.

(8) Naba Kishore v. Upendra Kishore, 26 C.W.N. 322: 65 I.C. 305: (1922) P.C. 39.

(9) Dayamani v. Srinibash, 33 C. 842.

(10) Ib., p. 845.

(11) 6 M. I. A. 393.

Mitakshara law, has made an alienation of ancestral family estate."[1]

2462. Even a lease in excess of her powers is only voidable and not void,[2] that is to say, it is good till it is avoided. "If it was ipso facto void, it could not, of course, be confirmed, and the acceptance of rent would be evidence only of the creation of a new tenancy. A Hindu widow is not a tenant for life, but is owner of her husband's property, subject to certain restrictions on alienation, and subject to its devolving upon her husband's heirs upon her death. But she may alienate it subject to certain conditions being complied with. Her alienation is not, therefore, absolutely void, but it is prima facie voidable at the election of the reversionary heir. He may think fit to affirm it or he may, at his pleasure, treat it as a nullity without the intervention of any court, and he shows his election to do the latter by commencing an action to recover possession of the property. There is, in fact, nothing for the court to set aside or cancel as a condition precedent to the right of action of the reversionary heir."[3]

2463. The article in the schedule to the Limitation Act, applicable to such suit, is Art. 141,[4] that is to say, the suit may be brought at any time within 12 years of the death of the limited owner.

2464.—Transfer Good for Life.—Being the owner entitled to possession for life, the heiress is entitled to transfer her right of possession to another at her discretion without reference to her reversioners,[5] upon which transfer the transferee acquires a good title for the term of her life, unless her estate is forfeited earlier by her re-marriage,[6] or abandonment of the word.[7]

Clause (4).

2465. Her Interest Attachable.—From the fact that she is entitled to transfer her estate for life, it follows that what she may voluntarily do, she may equally be coerced into doing by the process of law.[8] On such sale, her own heirs will be entitled to represent her and recover the surplus.[9]

Clause (5).

Valid alienation of the estate.

341. (1) A woman may alienate her estate so as to bind the reversioners for legal necessity or for its benefit;[10]

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, such alienation may be made for any of the purposes or objects stated in the next following clauses;

---

(1) Kameswar v. Run Bahadur, 6 C. 843 (847) P.C.

(2) Modhusudan v. Rocke, 25 C. 1 P. C., explained in Sadai v. Serai, 28 C. 532 (539), followed in Bijoy v. Nil Ratan, 30 C. 990, reversed O.A., on the question of limitation, Bijoy v. Krishna, 34 C. 329 (333) P.C.

(3) Bijoy v. Kirshna, 34 C. 329 (333) P.C.

(4) Ib.

(5) Venkata v. Narasingappa, 3 M. H. C. R. 116; Moniram v. Kerry, 5 C. 776 P.C.

(6) Moniram v. Kerry, 5 C. 776 P. C.; Sohodra v. Roy Jung, 8 C. 224 P. C.; Matungini v. Ram Rutton, 19 C. 289 (291) F.B.; Rasul v. Ram Sarun, 22 C. 589 (595); Murgayi v. Virama, 1 M. 226; Koduthio v. Medu, 7 M. 321; Sreeramulu v. Kristamma, 26 M. 143; Vithu v. Govinda, 22 B. 321 (331).

(7) Hobzoonissa v. Pulury, (1856) B. S. D. A. 595.

(8) S. 60 (1), Civil Procedure Code, 1908; Kanri v. Ammakannu, 23 M. 504.

(9) Chooney v. Ram Kinkur, 28 C. 155.

(10) Ss. 122-124.

(3) For the performance of shradh and such other religious ceremonies as constitute spiritual necessity of the last full owner;[1]

(4) For the performance of such other pious or religious acts as are conductive to his spiritual benefit,[2] provided that the immovable property alienated for this purpose is in every case reasonable and of moderate extent;[3]

(5) For the payment of the debts of the last full owner even though barred by time;[4]

(6) The payment of Government revenue and all other public charges accruing due in respect thereof and any arrears of rent in default of payment of which the property may be summarily sold;[5]

(7) Cost of obtaining letters of administration or a succession certificate of the property of the last full owner;[6]

(8) Costs of litigation necessary for preserving and defending the estate;[7]

(9) Costs of its preservation and repairs;[8]

(10) Maintenance of herself and those whom the last full owner was bound to maintain;[9]

(11) Marriage of female relations of the last full owner whom he was bound to marry, such as his sister, daughter, son's and grandson's daughter, and the like;[10]

(12) Customary ceremonial gifts to a reasonable extent on the occasion of marriage of such relations;[11]

(13) Customary small gifts on other ceremonial occasions;[12]

(14) And generally on all such occasions and for such purposes as the circumstances of the disposition may warrant and is consistent with the law regulating it.[13]

Exception.—Nothing herein applies to a woman continuing the trade or business of her husband, who is entitled to incur debts and make alienations in the ordinary course of prudent management of her business, subject only to the further provisions of sections 148 and 153.[14]

---

(1) Collector v. Cavaly, 8 M. I. A. 529 (550, 551); Raj Lukhee v. Gokool Chunder, 13 M.I.A. 209; Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari, 44 A. 503 (510-513) P.C.

(2) Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari, 44 A. 503 (510, 513) P.C. (case-law reviewed); Tatayya v. Ramakrishnamma, 34 M. 284 (case-law reviewed).

(3) Ib., Panachand v. Manohar Lal, 42 B. 136 (143) (case-law reviewed); Kemblal v. Ajodhya, 43 C. 574 (581).

(4) Chimnaji v. Dinkar, 11 B. 320; Bhagwat v. Nivratti, 39 B. 113; Udaichunder v. Ashutosh Das, 21 C. 190.

(5) Srimohan v. Brij Behary, 36 C. 753; Lalta Prasad v. Darshan Singh, 74 I.C. (A.) 839.

(6) Srimohun v. Brijbehary, 36 C. 753.

(7) Karimuddin v. Gobind, 31 A. 497 (506) P.C.; Debi Dayal v. Bharn Pertap, 31 C. 433 (441).

(8) Bhoogaraju v. Addepalli, 35 M. 560 (564); Makhan Lal v. Gayan Singh, 33 A. 255 (construction of a will).

(9) Sailabala v. Baikuntha, (1926) C. 486 (maintenance of her mother-in-law and the husband's widowed sister).

(10) Sailabala v. Baikuntha, (1926) C. 486.

(11) Ib., (gift up to one-fourth of the husband's estate justifiable—Texts and cases cited); Vuppueuri v. Garimilla, 34 M. 288; Churaman v. Gopi, 37 C. 1; Bhagwati v. Ram Jatan, 45 A. 297 (dowry of whole estate worth Rs. 500 upheld).

(12) Srimohan v. Brijbehary, 36 C. 753.

(13) Cossinath v. Hura Sundari, 2 Morley's Dig. 198 P.C., cited in Churaman v. Gopi, 37 C. 1 (7); Sailabala v. Baikuntha, (1926) C. 486 (488).

(14) Sakrabhai v. Maganlal, 26 B. 206 F.B.

2466. Analogous Law.—The leading principle applicable to female heirs applies alike to all qualified owners, whether male or female, to the guardian of infant heirs, the shebait of an idol or temple, and to trustees generally.[1] The only difference between them is one of degree, but the cardinal principle is, in each case, identical. As such, they are all entitled to alienate the corpus of the estate owned or managed by them for legal necessity or benefit. But these terms must necessarily vary with the nature and purpose of the obligation and of the property and the character of the control. For instance, an elephant may be a prime necessity to an idol, but it would be voted a cumbrous luxury in the hands of a widow. Similarly, the widow is justified in charging the estate for an act done in discharge of the religious and pious obligation to her deceased husband, which would not be justified in any other relation. Subject to the necessary variations to be presently considered, her liability is generally on a par with those of other limited owners of property.

2467. Women's Legal Necessity.—The subject of legal necessity, with reference to a woman's estate, must not be understood as forming a class apart from the general law of necessity, which justifies an alienation of his estate by a limited owner. The same principles equally govern all transactions by a female heir, only modified by the peculiar religious obligations which Hindu Law casts on the female relations, both as regards their pious duty to the deceased, as also the mode of life enjoined on them in their widowhood. The question of legal necessity must, moreover, largely depend both upon the nature and extent of the estate taken by the heiress and the nature and extent of disposition. As Gifford, L.J., said, it is absolutely impossible to define the extent and limit of the power of the widow to dispose of her husband's property for religious purposes, because it must depend upon the circumstances of the disposition, whenever such disposition shall be made and must be consistent with the law regulating such disposition.[2] One thing is certain: the woman's authority to alienate the corpus of her heritage for legal necessity has nothing to do with its ordinary income, to which she is absolutely entitled. She is not a trustee of the estate and is not bound to expend one pice of that income to redeem an incumbrance of her husband's on the estate or to pay off his debts, though she is bound to pay them, being conducive to the spiritual benefit of the deceased,[3] but not out of the income of the estate any more than out of her stridhan. If, therefore, she has no other means of discharging them, she is entitled to alienate the estate.[4]

Clause (1).

2468. The law of legal necessity may be divided into two classes. The first is spiritual necessity, the necessity for worldly purposes falls into the other class. It is only in cases falling into the former class that the widow possesses larger powers. As observed by Turner, L.J.: "The widow cannot, of her own will, alien the property, except for special purposes. For religious and charitable purposes of those which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of her husband, she has a larger power of disposition than that which she possesses for purely worldly purposes.

(1) Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 39 A. 437 (443) P.C.

(2) Cossinaut v. Hurrosoondry, 2 Mor. Dig. 198, cited in Khub Lal v. Ajodhya, 43 C. 574 (584).

(3) Udai Chander v. Ashutosh, 21 C. 132

190; Bhagwat Bhaskar v. Nivaritti, 39 B. 113; Kondappa v. Subha, 13 M. 189; Bishwanath v. Ram Ratan, 12 O.L.J. 406 : 89 I.C. 581 : (1925) O. 529.

(4) Bishwanath v. Ram Ratan, 12 O. L.J. 406 : 89 I.C. 581 : (1925) O. 529.

To support an alienation for the last, she must show necessity."[1] But in one sense both are cases of legal necessity,[2] since both are recognized by and subject to the control of law, though the term "legal necessity," when applied to worldly purposes, doubtless involves some pressure from without, necessitating the raising of money for the protection or preservation of the estate.[3] But spiritual necessity involves no pressure, since the expenditure incerred thereon is purely optional. The question, in this case, is, therefore, only one of propriety. But this is rather the test of its legality, since all expenditure is not necessary, and all necessary expenditure is not legal. To be legal, it must receive the sanction of law.

Now, law recognizes and sanctions certain heads of expenditure, whether, because it is incurred on religious or charitable objects, or because it is incurred for worldly purposes. In each case, it is subject to the general rule that it must be moderate and reasonable, and incurred bona fide on the objects permitted by law. Law does not tolerate extravagance in the name of religion or piety. "The test, in cases of this description, where a deed by a limited owner, with a qualified power of alienation, is impeached, is, whether the purposes for which the alienation was made are proper or legitimate. . . . The test is: Is the transaction fair and proper, lawful and valid, and justified by Hindu Law? Necessity is only one of the phases of the test of propriety."[4] There is, however, one difference between necessity which is spiritual and that which is secular, since in the one case no pressure on the estate need be proved to justify the alienation. All that has to be proved is its validity. The purposes which constitute such necessity are enumerated in clauses 3 and 4. The remaining clauses deal with secular necessity, though some of them, as for instance, the case of marriage and customary ceremonial gifts, are other instances of religious necessity.

2469. It is laid down by the Privy Council that a widow, entering upon her husband's estate as his heir, has, as regards the management of his estate, not less powers than the manager of an infant's estate,[5] and referring to this dictum, Sergeant, C.J., said: "As widow, like a manager of the family, must be allowed a reasonable latitude in the exercise of her powers, provided she acts fairly to her expectant heirs.[6] For example, she may pay off a mortgage before it is due,[7] and sell a portion of the estate rather than mortgage the whole, though the latter course might be more beneficial to her reversioners and though it would be prejudicial to her by reducing her income, since she does not hold the property for the benefit of the reversioners, nor is she bound to raise money on her personal security."[8] As Peacock, C.J., said: "If a widow elects to sell when it would be more beneficial to mortgage, the sale could not be set aside as against the purchaser, if the widow and the purchaser are both acting honestly."[9] If there is a necessity, it is for the widow to decide how to act, and there is no rule of law which obliges the widow to proceed in any particular way, and the only question for the court to consider is whether she has exceeded her power, and these are always to be measured

(1) Collector v. Cavaly, 8 M. I. A. 529.
(2) Basangauda v. Basangauda, 39 B. 87 (98-99).
(3) Ganap v. Subbi, 32 B. 577.
(4) Khubal v. Ajodhya, 43 C. 574 (584-585).
(5) Kameswar v. Run Bahadur, 3 C. 843 P.C.
(6) Venkaji v. Vishnu, 18 B. 534 (536).
(7) Ib.
(8) Singam v. Draupadi, 31 M. 153 (155).
(9) Phool Chand v. Rughoobuns, 9 W. R. 108.

by the necessities of the case.[1] Moreover, a sale is at times more advisable than a mortgage,[2] and it is not blot on the sale that the widow, having to raise Rs. 670 sold the property for Rs. 995,[3] or that she sold her father's house for Rs. 19,500 to pay off his debts amounting to Rs. 7,775, the house being, of course, unsaleable piecemeal.[4] The case is otherwise where the property is mortgaged, as she is not bound to borrow more than her actual wants,[5] and, in this matter, though she should not inticipate her wants, still, it does not mean that she must let the wolf in before she turns him off the door. It is merely a dictate of prudence, and she will be so judged.

2470. An alienation made by the widow as guardian of her adopted son, will be held valid against her, if the adoption is found to be invalid.[6] The heiress being the owner of her estate is entitled to do all acts in the course of her management, which, though not necessarily prudent or beneficial to the estate, are, nevertheless, incidental to her management by which her reversioner would be bound. The grant of leases by the settlement of new tenants on lands vacated by them is one such act. She may enter into a covenant for their renewal, but since such covenant operates as a future contract its validity will be judged by necessity and usefulness.[7]

2471. Benefit.—An alienation by an heiress for the "benefit" of the estate is subject to the general principles set out in section 119, with the modification that the heiress, having no coparceners and being the sole proprietor of her estate, the only benefit she has to study is that of the estate and of her reversioners.[8] The Privy Council have held the principle applicable to the manager of an infant equally applicable to alienations by a widow.[9] The title to her husband's estate having vested in his widow, she was dispossessed by her reversioners, with whom she effected a compromise granting a lease of some of her properties to one of them for 60 years. On her death, the next reversioner sued to eject the lessee, but the Privy Council upheld the lease as made for the benefit of the estate and intended to injure no one.[10]

2472. Spiritual Needs.—In the first place, she is entitled to charge or alienate her inherited estate for the performance of religious rites which are conducive to the spiritual welfare of the deceased.[11]

Clause (3) Shradh.

As the Privy Counsil said: "For religious or charitable purpose, or

(1) Naba Kumar v. Bhabasundari, 3 B.L.R. 375.

(2) Kamikhaprasad v. Jagadamba, 5 B.L.R. 508 (520).

(3) Chatranarayan v. Uba, 1 B.L.R. 201 (202); Felaram v. Bagalonand, 14 C. W.N. 895; so held in other cases; Jainarain v. Bhagwan, 44 A. 683; Sanmukh v. Jagarnath, 46 A. 531; Daulat v. Sankatha, 47 A. 355; Medai v. Narain, (1922) M.W.N. 804 P.C.

(4) Balkrishna v. Hiralal, 41 A. 338.

(5) Lalit Pandey v. Sridhar, 5 B.L.R. 176.

(6) Parbhu Lal v. Mylne, 14 C. 401 (418).

(7) Cf., Mahendra v. Kailash, 32 C. W.N. 439: 47 C.L.J. 376.

(8) Dayamani v. Srinibash, 33 C. 842 (845).

(9) Kameswar v. Run Bahadur, 6 C. 843 P.C.

(10) Bijoy v. Nil Ratan, 30 C. 990 remanded O.A. Bijoy v. Krishna, 34 C. 329 P.C.O.A. after remand Bijoy v. Girindra, 41 C. 793 P.C.

(11) Dayabhag, XI-1 61; Collector v. Cavaly, 8 M.I.A. 529 (551); Junmejoy v. Russomoyee, 10 W.R. 309; Raj Lukhee v. Gokool Chunder, 12 W.R. 47 P.C.; Chumun Lall v. Gunpat Lall, 16 W.R. 52; Gunpat Lall v. Toorun, 16 W.R. 52; Muteeram v. Gopal, 20 W. R. 187; Lakshminarayan v. Dasu, 11 M. 288; Tatayya v. Ramakrishna, 34 M. 288 (290).

those which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of her husband, she has a larger power of disposition than that which she possesses for purely worldly purposes. To support an alienation for the last, she must show necessity."[1] But there must be necessity in any case. If the late owner has left sufficient funds, out of which his spiritual wants could have been met, it will not justify an alienation of the estate, merely because the proceeds were spent on his shradh. But the gift of land or house, comprising only a small portion of the inherited estate, by the widow to the officiating priest on the occasion of shradh ten years after the demise of the husband, was, in one case, upheld on the ground of spiritual benefit.[2]

Assuming, however, that the heiress has no inherited funds for that purpose, the questions then arise: (i) What are the religious purposes which justify the alienation of his estate, and (ii) to what extent is it justifiable?

2473. First, as regards the religious purposes. On this point, the Dayabhag says: "Even a gift or other alienation is permitted for the completion of her husband's funeral rites."[3] The order in which these rites are performed, is as follows: Upon the death of a person his body is, as is well-known, consigned to the flames. At this time, gifts have to be made to Maha Brahmin, that is to say, a Brahmin of lower order who receives only funeral offerings. The nature of the gifts vary, but they consist of all such things as a man requires below—house, cattle, costs and clothes, ornaments and food. Those who are brought up within the pale of the orthodox creed, know too well the exactions of these priests.

On cremation of the body, the ashes are collected and required to be thrown into the Ganges. This is called the Gangajali ceremony and may take place on the 13th day of the death, or any time later as may be convenient. It is a religious necessity.[4]

The relation, who goes to the Ganges to consign to its holy waters the last remains of his departed relation, is enjoined to proceed to Gaya, a place where special merit attaches to the performance of shradh,[5] the feeding of Brahmins and gifts to the Gayawal priests.[6]

In the Maratha country, a similar sanctity attaches to a shradh performed at Pandharpur,[7] while Rajahmundry serves the same purpose to the people of the Dravid country.[8] While Sethubundh is mentioned as a place endowed with sanctity,[9] a pilgrimage to Benares is not conducive to the spiritual welfare of anyone but the pilgrim, and is, therefore, not a head of justifiable necessity.[10] And as regards Gaya, while a feast given there is necessary, a feast given upon one's return home has no religious significance and cannot be justified on the ground of necessity.[11]

(1) Collector v. Cavaly, 8 M. I. A. 529 (551); Latur Rai v. Bhagwan Das, (1936) Pat. 80.

(2) Gopalji v. Manbirbi, (1919) Pat. 396.

(3) Dayabhag, XI-I-6.

(4) Nanak Singh v. Sant Singh, (1907) P.W.R. 19.

(5) Mahomed Ashruf v. Brijessuree, 19 W.R. 426; Tarini v. Bholanath, 21 C. W.N. 190 (191); Udaichunder v. Ashutosh, 21 C. 190; Mahadev v. Neelamani, 20 M. 269 (272).

(6) Bisen Dayal v. Jaiseri, (1918) Pat. 323 : 48 I.C. 748; cf., Puran v. Jai Narain, 4 A. 482 (484).

(7) Ganput v. Tulsiram, 36 B. 88.

(8) Vuppulari v. Garimilla, 34 M. 288.

(9) Tatayya v. Ramakrishnamma, 34 M. 288 (291).

(10) Hari v. Bajrang, 13 C.W.N. 544 (547).

(11) Makhanlal v. Gayan Singh, 33 A. 255; contra in Dinonath v. Harish, 18 C. W.N. 1303 : 24 I.C. 670.

2474. It is not every relation that can perform these obsequial rites. The duty to perform them in the first instance devolves on and may be performed by the nearest relations, such as the son, widow, the daughter, her son, younger brother, sister's son, the father, the mother, elder brother, daughter-in-law, sister, then any other sapinda or samanodak, then follow the sapinda of the mother, or samanodak of the father, and then the sagotra, disciple, ritwik (priest) preceptor, son-in-law, and lastly, any friend.

Where a person is unable to perform the shradh personally, he may do so vicariously through another, who must, however, be eligible to perform it,[1] though amongst the Uriyas, a custom was proved to appoint a Brahmin to perform these rites.[2]

Shradh of the Other Relations.

2475. It is equally obligatory on the heiress not only to perform the shradh of the last owner but also the shradh of his other relations which he himself was under a duty to perform. So, the widow must perform the shradh of not only her husband but also the shradh of his other relations, such as, for instance, his grandfather, great-grandfather, mother,[3] including her own[4] paternal aunt, brother's wife and other relations whose maintenance was charged on his estate.

Justifiable Cost.

2476. The next question, one of some nicety, is the amount of such expenditure. It is evident that the amount must be reasonable and must not disappoint the just claims of other claimants and creditors. As observed by the Privy Council: "No case has gone the length of holding that the power of disposition for pious and religious purposes is unqualified."[5] In one case, out of the income of Rs. 6,000 a year the court allowed about a year's income for the peformance of all these ceremonies.[6] But the tendency of the courts is to check extravagance and reduce all such expenditure to a minimum, and it is apparent that if, in the last case, Rs. 6,000 had been the value instead of the income of the estate, the court would not have tolerated its annihilation for the spiritual benefit of the deceased.

Clause (4).

2477. Spiritual Benefit.—Spiritual necessity, often spoken of as the spiritual benefit of the husband, is another head of necessity which justifies the alienation of inherited immovable property. On this point the Mitakshara is silent, but the Mayukh contains the following text:—

Vyavhar Mayukh.—"The prohibition of sale or other disposition of immovable property by a widow, without the consent of takers of the heritage, is given on (the authority of) Madhav. As for the text of Katyayan, 'After the death of the husband, the widow preserving (the honour of the family) should obtain the share of her husband so long as she lives; but she has no ownership therein in respect of (its) gift, mortgage or sale,' that is a prohibition of gift of money to the bandi

---

(1) Tatayya v. Ramakrishnamma, 34 M. 281 (291).

(2) Lakshminarayana v. Dasu, 11 M. 288 (289).

(3) Jummejoy v. Russomoyee, 11 B.L. R. 420-n; Srimohan v. Brij Behari, 36 C. 753.

(4) Srimohan v. Brijbehary, 36 C. 752 (756) following Rajchandra v. Sheeshoo Ram, 7 W.R 146.

(5) Collector v. Cavaly, 8 M. I. A. 529 (551).

(6) Khublal v. Modhya, 43 C. 574; Dalal Kunwar v. Ambika Partap, 25 A. 266 (271); Ram Surat v. Hitanandan, 10 Pat. 474.

(bards), charan (triflers) and the like. Gifts for religious or spiritual objects and mortgage, and the like, for that purpose, are, of course, permitted; (as is plain) from the aforementioned text (of Prajapati) commencing with sthavaram jangamam, etc., and from the text of Katyayan, 'A widow always engaged in meritorious observances and fasts, constant in the duties of celibacy, intent upon restraining (her passions) and making holy gifts, shall reach the heavenly abodes even if she has no son.' "[1]

2478. It has been held that this text does not authorize the giving away of the bulk of the inherited estate to a Brahmin for the spiritual benefit of the deceased, and that "while the widow has wider powers of disposition over property inherited from her husband, in making gifts for religious purposes, which are calculated to benefit her husband spiritually, those powers must be exercised within the proper and reasonable limits in dealing with the immovable property of her husband."[2] For instance, it will not support an alienation amounting to a fourth of the estate,[3] though small gifts of land are customary and permitted.[4] It is also pertinent to observe that the term "spiritual necessity" must be strictly limited to purposes which the law recognizes as warranting such alienation. Any gift out of a religious or pious motive is not a gift constituting a spiritual necessity. Where the gift is of an inconsiderable portion of the estate, the court will not be too strict in examining the purpose, but where it forms a considerable portion of the estate the gift cannot be justified, unless it is brought strictly within the rule of spiritual necessity.[5] In some of these cases, a distinction is drawn between acts, of which the religious merit is solely acquired by the female heir, and acts, of which the religious merit accrues to the deceased or is shared by the female heir with him. But this distinction is not supported by the text and the sole ground, which justifies the heiress to alienate any portion of the inherited estate, is the spiritual necessity of the last owner.[6] In other cases, the alienation may be good if supported by legal necessity, but it cannot be supported under this head.[7] (§§ 2468 2469.)

2479. The question then arises: What acts constitute the spiritual necessity of the deceased owner? The performance of his shradh and its

(1) Mayukh (Mandalik), 77, 78 cited and explained in Panachand v. Manohar Lal, 42 B. 136 (143, 144, 152).

(2) Panachand v. Manoharlal, 42 B. 136 (154); Khublal v. Ajodhya, 43 C. 574 (580): Indar Bux v. Sheonaresh, (1927) O. 450.

(3) Munshi Lal v. Shiv Devi, 4 L. 336, dissenting from Ram Chandra v. Ganga, 4 B.S.R. 147 (154): 7 I.D. (O. S.) 110 (115), in which an alienation of three-sixteenths of the estate was held justified.

(4) Baldeo Prasad v. Raja Fatch Singh, 46 A. 533; Thal Kuar v. Amar Nath, (1925) L. 2.

(5) Mukhoda v. Kullcani, 1 B.S.R. 82: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 62; Ram Chunder v. Ganga Gobind, 4 B.S.L.R. 7, I.D. (O.S.) 110; Kartik Chunder v. Gour Mohun, 1 W.R. 48; Runjeet v. Mhd. Waris, 21 W.R. 49; Ram Kawal v. Ram Kishore, 22 C. 506; Churaman v. Gopi, 37 C. 1; Harmanage v. Ram Gopal, 17 C. W.N. 782; Khub Lal v. Ajodhya, 43 C. 574 (581); Jagiban v. Deo Shankar, 1 Borr. 394; Kupur v. Sebak Ram, 1 Borr. 405 (448); Chunilal v. Jussoo, 1 Borr. 55 (60); Bhaskar v. Mahadev, 6 B.H.C. R. (O.C.) 1; Panachand v. Manohar Lal, 42 B. 136 (150, 151); Gopalla v. Narayana, (1850) M.S.D.A. 74; Rama v. Ranga, 8 M. 552; Lakshminarayana v. Dasu, 11 M. 288; Vuppulari v. Garimalla, 34 M. 288; Gudimetta v. Ballozu, 23 M. L.J. 233; Puran v. Jai Narayan, 4 A. 482; Vishwanath v. Narayan, 31 N. (Supp.) 18.

(6) Khub Lal v. Ajodhya, 43 C. 574 (581-583), approved in Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari, 44 A. 503 (512) P.C.; Ram Kawal v. Ram Kishore, 22 C. 506; Puran v. Jai Narain, 4 A. 482; Sham Devi v. Birbhadra, 43 A. 463; Munshi Lal v. Shiv Devi, 4 L. 336; Chancal v. Chiman Lal, 30 Bom.L.R. 655: (1928) B. 238.

(7) Sham Devi v. Birbhadra, 43 A. 463; Gobind v. Lakrani, ib., 515.

attendant obsequial rites are, doubtless, such necessity. They are, in fact, a recognized head of necessity and have been dealt with in clause (3). But over and beyond these objects, there are other items of expenditure which, though not treated as of the same degree or urgency are, nevertheless, regarded as bordering on necessity. Such was held to be the excavation of a tank, to complete the equipment of a temple, which the deceased died leaving incomplete. His widow raised Rs. 520 by the grant of two perpetual leases, with a view to completing the walls of the temple buildings and to excavate and consecrate a tank in connection with the temple. The court held these leases to be supported by necessity, holding that excavation of the tank was itself a meritorious act,[1] but this alone, it is submitted, would not have justified the alienation of that estate apart from its utility to the estate.[2]

Religious and pious gifts.

2480. While the performance of shradh and sapindkarm are directly conducive to a man's spiritual benefit, Hindu Law does not require that such ceremonies should be accompanied by a gift of land to the priests. But where the performer of shradh delivered, as gift, an inconsiderable portion of land, the court upheld it as a disposition or expenditure which was reasonable or proper according to the common notions of the Hindus.[3]

2481. The question is one of custom. For instance, it is customary, amongst the Uriya Zemindars to appoint a Brahmin to perform funeral and annual ceremonies. The Brahmin so appointed is styled a "Puo Brahmin." As such, the widows of a Zemindar conveyed a small piece of land to him on a rent of Re. 1-8-0 per annum. It was conceded that the gift was made rather for future than for past services. The court upheld the gift as supported by an indispensable religious necessity. But the fact that the land was only small in extent was also emphasized.[4] But, all the same, there can be no doubt that the powers of an heiress to alienate property for the spiritual benefit of the last owner, cannot be weighed in golden scales. As was observed in a case: "It is unquestionable, then, that the widow has a larger power of disposition for religious or charitable purposes, or for purposes which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of her husband, than that which she possesses for purely wordly purposes. An exhaustive enumeration of these religious or charitable purposes is neither possible nor necessary."[5]

2482. The Privy Council have upheld the dedication, by the widow, of a small portion of her husband's landed estate to the priests of a temple, though she was in affluent circumstances and could have endowed the temple out of her current income,[6] overruling the cases which had failed to distinguish spiritual from secular necessity.[7] Hindu Law

---

(1) Khub Lal v. Ajodhya, 43 C. 574 (584), cited with approval in Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari, 44 A. 503 (512) P.C.; Ram Surat v. Hitanandan, 10 Pat. 474.

(2) Runjeet v. Mhd. Waris, 2 W.R. 49; Makhanlal v. Gayansingh, 33 A. 255.

(3) Tatayya v. Ramakrishnamma, 34 M. 288 (291); Khublal v. Ajodhya, 43 C. 574; Vishwanath v. Narayan, (1935) N. 217.

(4) Lakshminarayana v. Dasu, 11 M. 288.

(5) Khublal v. Ajodhya, 43 C. 574 (580).

(6) Sardar Singh v. Kunj Bihari, 44 A. 503 P.C.

(7) Kartick Chunder v. Gour Mohun, 1 W.R. 48; Huro Mohun v. Aulak Monee, 1 W.R. 252; Raj Chunder v. Sheshoo, 7 W.R. 146; Mhd. Ashruf v. Brijassuree, 19 W.R. 426; Mutteram v. Gopal, 20 W.R. 187; Runjeet v. Mhd. Waris, 21 W.R. 49, overruled in Sardar Singh v. Kunj Bihari, 44 A. 503 (509) P.C.

regards the gift of land as specially meritorious, and a gift, otherwise justifiable, does not depend for its validity upon the presence of pressure.[1]

2483. The only question that arises in such cases is, then, the purposes which Hindu Law regards as justifying such gifts. It seems clear that such gift must not be unconnected with the spiritual welfare of the husband or the deceased full owner.[2] She can make no alienation for her own spiritual benefit,[3] nor that of any other relation, e.g., her mother-in-law.[4] Again, a distinction exists, and must be observed, between the spiritual necessity and the mere spiritual benefit of the deceased. This distinction was adverted to by the Privy Council in a case, to which reference has already been made.[5]

2484. This introduces the question: What is a spiritual necessity, as distinguished from a mere spiritual benefit of the deceased full owner? It is clear that all ceremonies in the nature of obsequial and post-obsequial periodical rites are of this nature. Such, for instance, is shradh, on the occasion of which the gift of land is not only commended but treated as a part of the ceremonial.[6] No other post obit ceremony is considered to be a spiritual necessity. But the question of spiritual efficacy remains. On this point, there is bound to be some divergence of views. To this class belong pilgrimages and sacrifices made by the widow or the daughter, which are unquestionably pious acts, and regarded as indirectly beneficial to the husband or the father, as the case may be, but they are not ceremonies which fall into first category as indispensable for his spiritual benefit. For this purpose, law allows alienation of only a small portion of the inherited estate.[7]

2485. The question what ceremonies must fall into this group, must largely depend upon Hindu sentiment and custom. In one case, the Pundits consulted defined religious purposes somewhat loosely as including "dowry to a daughter, building temples for religious worship, digging tanks and the like."[8] This case was followed in Calcutta, where the court upheld a mortgage by the widow to excavate a tank in connection with a temple founded by her husband.[9]

2486. But whatever the act, the courts insist that the allegation of land for this purpose must be confined within very narrow limits. In one case, the widow of a Raja, in possession of a large estate, yielding an

---

(1) Sardar Singh v. Kunj Bihari, 44 A. 503 (510) P.C.; following Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly, 8 M. I. A. 529 (550, 551); Rajlukhee v. Gokool Chunder, 13 M.I.A. 209.

(2) Ram Kaval Singh v. Ramkishore, 22 C. 506, explained in Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari, 44 A. 503 (510, 511) P. C.

(3) Puran Dai v. Jai Narain, 4 A. 482, followed in Tatayya v. Ramakrishnamma, 34 M. 288 (291), cited under S. 119, ante, q.v.; Thakur Prasad v. Mt. Dipa, 10 Pat. 352; Ram Lal v. Kunwar Rajpal, 4 O.W.N. 498.

(4) Ram Kawal Singh v. Ram Kishore, 22 C. 506, explained in Tatayya v. Ramakrishnamma, 34 M. 288 (291).

(5) Sardar Singh v. Kunj Bihari, 44 A. 503 (511) P.C.

(6) Vuppulari v. Garimilla, 34 M. 288 (290); Lakshminarayana v. Dasu, 11 M. 288.

(7) Rama v. Ranga, 8 M. 552 (553, 554).

(8) Cossinaut v. Hurrosoondry, 2 Mor. Dig. 198 : 3 I.D. (O.S.) 907, affirmed on O.A. 1 I.D. (O.S.) 292 P.C.

(9) Khublal Singh v. Ajodhya, 43 C. 574, cited with approval in Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari, 44 A. 503 (512) P.C.

annual income of Rs. 60,000, visited Puri where she made a vow, in fulfilment of which she gifted to its priests a small share in a zemindari valued at Rs. 2,500, half the income from which was to be expended on the bhog (food offering) of the god Jagannath and the other half to be appropriated by the two donee priests. She added: "I have made a charitable gift and shankalp of the property for the salvation of my husband and his family members and for my own salvation." The priests had since sold the land. On the widow's death, her reversioner sued the transferee for its possession on the sole ground that the widow had no power to make the gift, which both the High Court and the Privy Council upheld, on the ground that it represented only 1|75th of the estate and was made for the continuous benefit of the soul of the deceased owner and was in accordance with Hindu religious sentiment and religious belief,[1] but the gift of about one-third of the entire estate would in any case be treated as excessive.[2]

Pious Acts Authorized by the Owner.

2487. It was implied in these cases, and it is the law that if the last owner authorizes an act, the heir would be entitled to execute the power. For instance, where the testator authorized his wife to build a house, establish therein the god Mahadev, the widow was held entitled to carry out his wishes, and any alienation made of the corpus would be within her power and one which the reversioner could not avoid on her death.[3] As previously stated, in carrying out the behests of a testator, the donee of the power acts as an agent of the donor, and as such, his power is not his own, but that of the testator who authorized him.

Gift Disallowed.

2488. If regard be had to the principle already stated before (§ 122), namely, that the power of the female heir to alienate the corpus of her inheritance is limited by the rule that it must, at least, be for the spiritual benefit of the husband or father, to whom she has inherited, and that, as such, it must be only a small portion of the estate, there will be no difficulty in seeing why the courts disallowed the following gifts: the gift of a house not for the spiritual benefit of her husband, but made only "in honour of the god Vishnu"[4] such was her endowment of an idol[5] or of a charitable institution[6] or digging a tank,[7] unless it be to complete an endowment which the husband had made.[8] Of course, she had no right to reduce the rent of her tenant, on the ground that he had assisted her in a litigation in which she had to defend her own title.[9] This was a gift inspired by no piety but made "at suggestion of her own will and pleasure."[10]

---

(1) Sardar Singh v. Kunj Bihari, 44 A. 503 (513) P.C., affirming O.A. 41 A. 130.

(2) Radha Madhab v. Rajendra, 12 Pat. 727.

(3) Hari Kumari v. Mohun Chandra, 12 C.W.N. 412; Bishwanath v. Durga, 1 I.C. (C.) 260.

(4) Puran Dai v. Jai Narain, 4 A. 482, followed in Tatayya v. Ramakrishnamma, 34 M. 288 (291).

(5) Kartick Chunder v. Gour Mohun, 1 W.R. 48; Harmange v. Ram Gopal, 17 C.W.N. 782 : 19 I.C. 417.

(6) Munshi Lal v. Devi, 4 L. 336.

(7) Runjeet v. Mhd. Waris, 21 W.R. 49.

(8) Khublal Singh v. Ajodhya, 43 C. 574.

(9) Lachmi Prosad v. Jugmohan, 18 C.L.J. 633 : 22 I.C. 594.

(10) Per Lord Gifford in Bysack v. Cossimaut, 1 I.D. (O.S.) 292 P.C.

Clause (5).

2489. Payment of Debts.—The payment of debts of the last owner is another recognized head of justifiable necessity, for which the heiress may alienate the corpus. She is not bound to pay them out of its current income, which she has the right to appropriate to her own use.[1] But she cannot alienate the estate, if she has received sufficient other property wherewith to discharge them. (§ 2459.)

2490. In the case of the heiress, whether she is the widow or daughter-in-law[2] or mother[3] of the last owner, it is a pious obligation which she is bound to discharge, even though the debt be barred by time[4] released by any enactment, such as the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act.[5] But she is not bound to pay debts which the deceased owner had repudiated before his death,[6] or which had been agreed to be discharged by a third party.[7] In other words, her liability must, in each case, be existing and legal, though the creditor's remedy for its enforcement may have been lost by reason of the law of limitation.[8]

Nor can she pay interest in excess of the principal, in the area subject to the rule of damdupat.[9]

2491. It has been seen that the manager of a joint family is not competent to revive or pay a time-barred debt (§§ 1192-1193). In this respect the female heir has a greater liability by reason of her pious duty which, however, only arises qua heir[10] and, on the death of the last owner, and never in his lifetime.[11] Any payment, made by the wife, of the debt of her husband during his lifetime, is a voluntary payment,

---

(1) Jagannadhan v. Vighneswardu, 55 M. 216; Bhushan Rao v. Subbayya, (1936) P.C. 283; Boddu v. Goli, (1913) M.W.N. 275: 18 I.C. 953; Ramasami v. Mangaikarasu, 18 M. 113.

(2) Bhau v. Gopala, 11 B. 325.

(3) Rustam v. Moti Singh, 18 A. 474; Ramasami v. Vengidusami, 22 M. 113.

(4) Bhala v. Parbhu, 2 B. 67 (73, 74); Chimnaji v. Dinkar, 11 B. 320; Bhau v. Gopala, ib. 325; (obiter in) Bhagwat v. Nivratti, 39 B. 113; Kondappa v. Subho, 13 M. 189; Udai Chunder v. Ashutosh, 21 C. 190; Tarini Prasad v. Bhola Nath, ib., 190-n; Khogendra Narain v. Santo Lal, 62 I.C. (C.) 669 (672); Sheoram v. Sheoratan, 43 A. 604 (606); Ram Kishan v. Chedi Rai, 44 A. 628; Gajadhar v. Jagannath, 22 A.L.J. 601 F.B. : 80 I.C. 684 (689); Gauri Shankar v. Sheonandan, 46 A. 384 (388).

(5) Bhau v. Gapala, 11 B. 325.

(6) Lukmeeram v. Khooshalee, 1 Borr. 412; Bhola v. Parbhu, 2 B. 67; Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai, 2 B. 494 (499); Chimnaji v. Dinkar, 11 B. 320; Bhau v. Gopala, 11 B. 325; Bhagwat v. Nivrutti, 39 B. 113; contra in Melgirappa v. Shivappa, 6 B.H.C.R. 270; Hemchand v. Tara, 1 B.S.R. 481; Tibeck v. Poolman, 7 W.R. 450; Udaichunder v. Ashutosh, 21 C. 190; Tarini v. Bholanath, 21 C. 190-n; Mahesher v. Ratnasingh, 23 C. 766 P.C.; Debidayal v. Bhanpartap, 3 I. C. 433; Felaram v. Bhagalanand, 14 C. W.N. 895; Soorjoo v. Krishnan, 1 N. W.P.H.C.R. 46; Kalkasingh v. Sheoraj Singh, 40 C. 347; Kondappa v. Subbo, 13 M. 189; Subbammal v. Avudayammal, 30 M. 3; Kandasami v. Rajagopalasami, 7 M.L.T. 363 : 5 I.C. 382.

(7) Nathu v. Tulsha, 16 A.L.J. 443; 45 I.C. 728; Bhawani v. Himmat Bahadur, 33 A. 342 P.C.

(8) Kandasami v. Rajagopalasami, 7 M.L.T. 363 : 5 I.C. 382; Kondappa v. Subba, 13 M. 189; Santu Ram v. Dodan Bai, 103 I.C. 706 : (1927) L. 657; Govinda v. Krishnaji, 94 I.C. 1002: (1926) N. 341.

(9) Ramachandra v. Radha, 10 N.L. R. 91 : 26 I.C. 598.

(10) Namasivaya v. Sivagami, 1 M.H. C.R. 374.

(11) Himat Bahadur v. Bhawani, 30 A. 352, affirmed O.A. Bhawani v. Himmat Bahadur, 33 A. 342 P.C.

and the husband's property cannot be made liable for payment of such debts after his death.[1]

Even where the wife takes the estate as a devisee under her husband's will, she may charge his estate, if he has directed that she should pay his debts out of his estate.[2] As already remarked, the trade debts of a joint family stand on the same footing. (S. 138), and the heiress is entitled to alienate the estate for the purpose of discharging them.[3]

2492. The duty of the wife to pay her husband's debts, rests upon the broad equity that he who takes the benefit must also bear the burden.[4] As observed in a Bombay case: "She took the estate as an aggregate, assets and debts together. Her first duty was to pay her deceased husband's debts, and to pay them, as far as she could, equally, according to the obligation with which the succession had devolved on her. She may be regarded as, in some degree, a trustee, or, at any rate, under a legal obligation for this purpose, and not at liberty to deal capriciously with the estate, which she may alienate at all only for some special purposes indicated by the law. She ought not in performing the duty cast upon her, to prefer one valid claim to another, as her husband might have done, because from him the favoured creditor could have obtained as much by his diligence. On the widow, no pressure could be exercised, except through the estate, and she was bound, pressure or no pressure, to distribute amongst the creditors. There could not here have been a legal necessity, such as is prescribed as an indispensable consideration by the Judicial Committee.[5] A purchaser from a widow must see that she exercise her power of sale strictly,[6] or at least, satisfy himself by reasonable enquiry, that a sufficient cause for alienation exists."[7]

2493. Payment of Barred Debt.—Hindu Law knows of no bar of limitation extinguishing the debtor's liability to discharge his debts. The payment of all debts of the last owner is, therefore, another recognized head of justifiable necessity for which the heiress may alienate the corpus. The principle underlying that rule is that she is under a pious obligation in a reasonable measure to promote the spiritual benefit of her husband whose estate she has inherited; and one of the ways in which this benefit can be promoted is by getting him released from the penalty or sin of leaving his debts unpaid.[8] And she is now entitled to bind her reversioner by her payment acknowledgment of such debts.[9] Though the heiress may pay the time-barred debts of the last owner,

---

(1) Himmat Bahadur v. Bhawani, 30 A. 352, affirmed O.A. Bhawani v. Himmat Bahadur, 33 A. 342 P.C.

(2) Panamchand v. Narayan, (1894) B.P.J. 167.

(3) Gogarnath v. Jaikishun, (1916) 1 P.L.J. 16 : 34 I.C. 375.

(4) Karimudin v. Gobind, 31 A. 497 (506) P.C.

(5) Raj Lukhee v. Gokool Chunder, 13 M.I.A. 209; Goolab Singh v. Kurun Singh, 14 M.I.A. 176.

(6) Rajchunder v. Buboram, 1 Full. 133.

(7) Rangilbhai v. Vinayak, 11 B. 666 (679).

(8) Tulshi Prasad v. Jagmohanlal, 57 A. 422; Tarini Prasad v. Bolanath, 21 C. 190 note; Ashutosh v. Chidam Mandal, 57 C. 904; Bhagwat v. Vivratti, 39 B. 113; Kondappa v. Subha, 13 M. 189; Santu Ram v. Dodan Bai, 9 L. 85; Gajadhar v. Jagannath, 40 A. 775 F.B.

(9) S. 21 (3) (a), Limitation Act (as amended by Act I of 1927); Daroga Rai v. Basdeo, 16 Pat. 45 (51) superseding contra held in Soni Ram v. Kanhayalal, 35 A. 227 (234, 235) P.C.; affirming O.A. 32 A. 33.

a payment of interest or principal as required by S. 20 of that Act would have the same effect.[1]

2494. Payment of Public Charges.—The payment of land revenue cesses and other public charges is a case of general necessity[2] (§ 2469), and arises out of the very necessity of preserving the estate from forfeiture and sale since such payments are ordinarily the first charge on the land and their non-payment renders the estate itself liable to extinguishment. As the Privy Council observed: "The preservation of the estate and the costs of litigation for that purpose are objects which justify a widow in incurring debt and alienating a sufficient amount of the property to discharge it."[3] Where, however, the amount of cess creates only a personal liability, as it does under the Public Demands Recovery Act in Bengal,[4] its payment would, nevertheless, be a justifiable necessity,[5] the more so, if a decree is passed against the heiress as representing the estate.[6]

Clause (6).

2495. It is immaterial that, with better management, the Government revenue need not have threatened the very existence of the estate.[7] All that is necessary is that there should be some pressure on the estate, and a danger to be averted.[8] The validity of sale for non-payment of revenue is not affected by any rule of Hindu Law,[9] and it is the duty of the heiress to sell a portion to save the rest. But she must not anticipate her wants. Necessity implies pressure, such as an attachment of the property or, at least, the presence of a decree or other coercive process of law making the alienation inevitable,[10] and the alienation must, of course, be bona fide and not a devise to defeat or deceive the reversioner.[11] Since the public charges are primarily payable out of current income, it is the duty of the heiress to pay them therefrom.[12] She cannot save the income of the estate, for her own benefit and charge the estate for assessment. If this were allowed, many an estate would never reach the hands of the reversioner. Such was held to be the case where the widow had sold her family land to pay for the rent due on an expropriatary tenure arising in her favour on sale of a zemindary. It was held that the tenure was no saving of the family estate, since its devolution was subject to a local Act, which would probably exclude the re-

(1) Chegamull v. Govindaswami, (1928) M. 972 (975).

(2) S. 110 (2), ante; Lalta Prasad v. Darshan Singh, 74 I.C. (A.) 839.

(3) Karimuddin v. Govind, 31 A. 497 (506) P.C.; reversing O.A. Govind v. Abdul Qayyum, 25 A. 546; Srimohan v. Brijbehary, 36 C. 753 (757).

(4) Shekaat Hosain v. Sasi Kar, 19 C. 783; Mahanund v. Banimadhub, 24 C. 27; Rup Ram v. Iswar, 6 C.W.N. 362.

(5) Sri Mohan v. Brij Behary, 36 C. 753 (757).

(6) Karimuddin v. Gobind, 31 A. 497 P.C.

(7) Hunoomanpersad v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (423).

(8) Horonath v. Indra, (1859) S. D. A.B. 207; Sreenath v. Ruttun, (1859) S.D.A.B. 421; Hurry Mohan v. Gonesh, 10 C. 823 (837) F.B.; Hurronath v. Randhir, 18 C. 311 (315) P.C.; Sri Mohan v. Brij Behary, 36 C. 753; Indar Kuar v. Lalta Prasad, 4 A. 532; Dhiraj Singh v. Mangaram, 19 A. 300 (302); Ghansham v. Badiya, 24 A. 547.

(9) Anundomoyee v. Mohendra, 15 W. R. 264.

(10) Gopaul v. Gour Monee, 6 W. R. 52; Baijnath v. Bissen, 19 W.R. 79.

(11) Phul Chand v. Jodha, 6 A.L.J. 547.

(12) Veerabadra v. Marudaga, (1911) M.W.N. 799; Ramanand v. Ram Saran, 7 I.C. (C.) 27.

versioner. Moreover, the saving, if any, was onerous, and entailed the sale of other lands, to which the reversioner might have succeeded.[1]

2496. Costs of Litigation.—The cost of necessary litigation is another head of legal necessity, but the litigation must be necessary and the cost reasonable, for, as Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J., observed, though "costs of litigation are a recognized head of legal necessity, that does not mean that a widow, engaged in a litigation, has an unlimited power of borrowing."[2]

Clauses (7), (3).

The heiress is entitled to alienate the estate for defraying the cost of obtaining the Succession Certificate or Letters of Administration,[3] and reasonable cost of litigation[4] in recovering or preserving the estate or in defending her title.[5]

It would not justify a sale of land to embark on a speculative suit which the deceased owner had given up as lost,[6] though the case might be different where the reversioner had entered upon a litigation for which he was responsible.[7]

This aspect of the subject has been already considered (§§ 1058, 1059)

2497. Preservation and Repairs.—The obligation of a person in possession of an estate to protect and preserve it, is cast even on mortgagees and trustees. As such, she has the right, and is subject to the duty, of alienating the estate, only when it is necessary for its preservation and repairs. She cannot charge the estate for the purpose of improving it,[8] or of constructing a new house, unless it was a necessity. She may, of course, construct such a house out of her current income, and may even charge her future income for it; but if she charges the estate, she must show that it was necessary to shelter the household, as that the old house had become uninhabitable, or the like.[9] Apart from such or similar pressing necessity she cannot alienate the estate for the purpose of building costly houses, and excavating tanks or wells, unless they were necessary for irrigation or were proved to be otherwise beneficial to the estate.[10]

Clause (9).

The question must, in each case, depend upon its own circumstances.[11]

2498. Self-maintenance.—Maintenance of the heirs herself and other dependent members of the family whom the deceased owner was bound to maintain, is another head of legal necessity, generally explained elsewhere.[12] Prima-

Clause (10).

(1) Ishwari v. Babunandan, 47 A. 563 (569).

(2) Bhimareddi v. Bhaskar, 6 Bom. L.R. 628, followed in Radha v. Nauratan, 3 Pat.L.J. 522 : 46 I.C. 627.

(3) Sri Mohan v. Brij Behary, 36 C. 753.

(4) Bhimareddi v. Bhaskar, 6 Bom.L. R. 628.

(5) Karimuddin v. Gobind, 31 A. 497 (506) P.C.; Pannalal v. Bamasundari, 6 B.L.R. 732; Phool Coer v. Dobee Pershad, 12 W.R. 187; Ram Coomar v. Ichamayi, 6 C. 36; Amjad Ali v. Moniram, 12 C. 52 Debi Dayal v. Bhup Pertap, 3 I.C. 433 (441).

(6) Indar Kuar v. Lalta Prasad, 4 A. 532.

(7) Arjan Singh v. Indar Singh, (1911) P.L.R. 233 : 12 I.C. 429.

(8) Ganapa v. Subi Sanna, 32 B. 577.

(9) Bhogaraju v. Addepalli, 35 M. 560.

(10) Makhan Lal v. Gayan Singh, 33 A. 255.

(11) Bejoy v. Girindra, 13 C. W. N. 236: 8 C.L.J. 458.

(12) S. 110 (2), ante.

rily, she must maintain herself out of its profits, and if her interest therein is so limited, sale cannot alienate the corpus in any case.[1] Otherwise, if the income is insufficient, she is entitled to sell the estate for her own maintenance.[2]

Her right to sell the estate depends upon the right in which she holds the estate. If she is entitled only to the rents and profits, she cannot charge or alienate the corpus. But if she has the woman's estate, then she is entitled to alienate it for all those purposes which law recognizes as legally necessary, amongst which her own maintenance is one such purpose. The fact that she was living with another man, who presumably maintained her, does not curtail her right to find her own maintenance in her heritage, since the estate having once vested in her, subsequent unchastity cannot curtail her right to its enjoyment. Of course, the fact that she was in the keeping of another man, who maintained her, might be proved as a fact to establish the absence of necessity.[3]

2499. The question of alienation raises the question of the quantum of maintenance. That the widow is entitled to maintain herself in a fair degree of comfort has been already seen. (§ 102). The same rule applies to all female heirs. The term maintenance not only comprises the bare cost of living but also the cost incurred in the performance of such religious rites as are usual or might be customary. Such are, for instance, the performance of the annual shradh, the distribution of charities and the observance of fasts and festivals and, in fact, compliance with all such caste usages as might be reasonably expected from the heiress in her position.[4] The rule applies to all females heirs, whether a widow succeeding to her husband or daughter inheriting to her father.[5] The heiress must not forestall her wants, but this does not imply that she cannot alienate the estate except for her past maintenance. All it means is that she must not alienate it, except when there is urgent necessity in the near future.[6]

If the purpose is obvious, the means adopted by the widow may not be of the best. But they should not be too narrowly scrutinized. So, where the widow could not maintain herself, because she had no means to cultivate the land, she was held justified in mortgaging it, so as to enable her to resume cultivation and so maintain herself.[7]

2500. Maintenance of Dependants.—The heiress is not bound to pay for the maintenance and the marriage of relations of the last owner, out of the current income of the estate, for which the estate is legally chargeable.[8] Section 93 specifies the persons whom a person is personally

---

(1) Gobind Dass v. Ranchord, 3 N.W. P.H.C.R. 324; Jagat Ram v. Mohesh, (1882) A.W.N. 57.

(2) Santosh Kumar v. Ganesh, 31 C. W.N. 65; Sakharam v. Jankibai, (1878) B.P.J. 139; Nellaikumaru v. Marakathammal, 1 M. 166; Soorjoo v. Krishnan, 1 N.W.P.H.C.R. 46; Kuthalinga v. Shanmuga, 50 M.L.J. 234 : 92 I.C. 989; (1926) M. 464; Rajendra Nath v. Peary Mohan, 94 I.C. 321 : (1926) C. 854.

(3) Amjad Ali v. Moniram, 12 C. 52.

(4) Ratansi v. Umerbai, 9 I.C. (S.) 997.

(5) Gnalimetla v. Bollozu, 23 M. L. J. 233 : 16 I.C. 139.

(6) Vellappa, In re, (1912) 1 M.W.N. 196 : 13 I.C. (M.) 640.

(7) Oadey Singh v. Phoolchand, 5 N. W.P.H.C.R. 197 (200).

(8) Hurry Mohun v. Ganesh, 10 C. 828; Amjad Ali v. Moniram, 12 C. 52; Debi Dayal v. Bhan Pertab, 31 C. 433 (443); Baij Nath v. Mangla Prasad, 90 I.C. (Pat.) 732.

liable to maintain. On his death, the liability to maintain them continues chargeable to his estate and the heiress is entitled to alienate the estate for that purpose.[1] So it has been held that the expenses incurred by the widow for the marriage of a daughter are recoverable from the father's estate[2] (§ 1049). The maintenance of the grandsons is also a moral, though not a legal obligation for which the heiress may alienate the estate.[3]

A man is not either legally or morally bound to maintain his mother-in-law. No more is his widow, who is not justified in alienating her husband's estate, in order to maintain her.[4]

Gift on Marriage. (Clause 12.)

2501. Marriage Gifts.—The mother is entitled to contract a debt for the marriage of her daughter, because marriage is a sacrament, and that of a daughter a necessity.[5] Since the gift of land on the occasion of marriage is customary,[6] and in accordance with Hindu sentiment, law upholds such alienation, provided it is a bona fide provision for marriage and is moderate in extent and value. The courts have, accordingly, upheld such gifts, even when made by the widow to the daughter[7] or the son-in-law[8] on the occasion of their marriage or Gowna[9] or Dwiragaman or second marriage,[10] upholding even post-nuptial gifts when otherwise justifiable.[11]

But the expenses of the marriage of the son,[12] a daughter's daughter[13] or a nephew[14] are not a legal necessity.

2502. The question what is a reasonable gift on these occasions, is a question of fact, which has to be decided with due advertence to all the circumstances of the case. Ordinarily, it must approximate not more than a fourth[15] of the father's estate; but it is the ordinary, and not the invariable rule, since there may be cases justifying a much larger expenditure. In one case, where the marriage was in accordance with the wishes of the father, and the ancestors of the reversioners took part in it and attested the deed of gift, the court upheld a gift of a twelve-

---

(1) Sailabala v. Baikuntha Nath, 91 I.C. 186: (1926) C. 486.

(2) Preaj Narain v. Ajodhya Pershad, 7 B.S.R. 602: 8 I.D. (O.S.) 456; Chunilal v. Gunput Lall, 16 W.R. 52 (53); Chudammal v. Nadamuni, 6 M.L.T. 158: 3 I.C. 77; Rustam v. Motising, 18 A. 474.

(3) Chumanlal v. Gunput Lall, 16 W.R. 52; Mokhan Lal v. Gayan Singh, 33 A. 255.

(4) Arjan Singh v. Indar Singh, (1911) P.L.R. 233: 12 I.C. 429.

(5) Gopalachariar v. Sami Reddi, (1926) M. 517; Kamla Prasad v. Lalji, 9 Pat. 721. (§§ 1049, 1050.)

(6) Tatayya v. Ram Krishnamma, 34 M. 288 (291).

(7) Churaman v. Gopi, 37 C. 1 (12); Udai Dat v. Ambika Prasad, 100 I.C. 503: (1927 O. 110; Madho Prasad v. Dhamraj, 95 I.C. 574: (1926) O. 425.

(8) Sundaram v. Krishnasami, 28 I.C. (M.) 992; Kudutamma v. Narasimha, 17 M.L.J. 528; Subba Naiker, Inre, 30 I.C. (M.) 781; Jowalaram v. Hari Kishen, 5 L. 70; Bhagwati v. Ram Jatan, 45 A. 297; Ram Sumran v. Gobind, 5 Pat. 646 (697).

(9) Churaman v. Gopi, 37 C. 1; Sailabala v. Baikuntha Nath, 91 I.C. 186: (1926) C. 486.

(10) Damodar v. Senabutty, 8 C. 537.

(11) Fugulia v. Vettor, 13 I.C. (M.) 475; Sundaramayya v. Sitamma, 35 M. 628.

(12) Rajagopalachariar v. Sami Reddi, 50 M.L.J. 221: 93 I.C. 49 (51): (1926) M. 517.

(13) Narainbati v. Ramdhari, 20 C.W.N. (Pat.) 734: 34 I.C. 277.

(14) Bhura v. Ramrao, 8 N.L.R. 154: 17 I.C. 366.

(15) Churaman v. Gopi Sahu, 37 C. 1; Dayabhag, III-2-36, XI-1-66.

annas share of the estate.[1] The consent of the next reversioner to a gift would as much be evidence of its propriety as it would be evidence of the propriety of any other alienation though for value.[2]

Clause (13).

2503. Other Ceremonial Gifts.—Small customary gifts on other ceremonial occasions are sanctioned by the usages of all communities. Such is the gift of a small area of land on the occasion of the father's[3] or the performance of the mother's shradh.[4]

But such customary small gifts must not be confused with a general pious or religious gift, to a priest for instance, which a Hindu widow has no power to make beyond what is acknowledged as conducive to the spiritual benefit of her husband.[5] (§ 1041.)

Exception.

2504. Trading Business.—The limitations on the woman's power of transfer do not extend to a trading business, which is only subject to the general rules stated in sections 148 and 153 (§ 1018). As was observed in a case: "If the business of the husband was, let us say, that of a cloth merchant, the widow would be entitled to carry it on, and she could only do so, by selling, buying again, and again selling. The very existence of the business creates the necessity; it is inherent in its proper conduct."[6] So, where, in the course of her business, the widow acquires and transfers land, it must be regarded as an ordinary, and even at times, it may be the necessary, incident of her trade, and her alienations cannot be subjected to the scrutiny of Hindu Law and if, in such cases, the question of necessity is at all relevant, it is to be found in the prudent conduct of her business.[7]

In other respects also, the widow's alienations would be upheld if they were prudent and made in the course of beneficial management.[8] (§§ 2422-2423.) But all such alienations must be judged upon their own merits. It vests her alienees with an uncertain title, but such is the law. The heiress cannot alienate the corpus of her estate because she is unable to manage it, even though its price might yield her a larger return.[9] But this is not an inflexible rule, since the widow would be well justified in selling off her estate if inconveniently situate, and purchasing another which gave her a better return.[10]

---

(1) Sailabala v. Baikuntha, 91 I.C. 186: (1926) C. 486.

(2) Kesho Prasad v. Chandrika Prasad, 2 Pat. 217; Kushi Bai v. Maura Khan, (1923) N. 265; contra in Ram Dayal v. Mithoo Lal, 71 I.C. 287: (1923) A. 410.

(3) Vapuluri v. Garimalla, 34 M. 288; but see Narainbati v. Ramdhari, 20 C. W. N. (Pat.) 734: 1 Pat. L. J. 81.

(4) Srimohan v. Brijbeary, 36 C. 753.

(5) Govind v. Lakhrani, 43 A. 515.

(6) Pahalwan v. Jiwan, 42 A. 109 (114); Radha v. Kanhaiya, (1907) A. W. N. 156; Petumdoss v. Ramdhone, (1848) Taylor 279; Ramlal v. Lakshmi Chand, 1 B.H.C.R. (App.) 51; Sakrabhai v. Magan Lal, 26 B. 206 (211).

(7) Ib., p. 115.

(8) Dasrath v. Danvir Singh, (1927) P. 219; Sumitra Bai v. Hirbaji, 97 I. C. 983: (1927) N. 25.

(9) Srinivasa v. Alamelu, 101 I.C. (M.) 571.

(10) Mahalakshmamma v. Ramaswami, 50 M.L.J. 651: 94 I.C. 950: (1926) M. 641; Ramalinga v. Parvathammal, 95 I.C. 759: (1926) M. 1122.

342. When heiress is a ward of court.

Where the Court of Wards or any other guardian is in possession of a woman's estate, its power of alienation is equally subject to the provisions of section 341.[1]

2505. Analogous Law.—The Court of Wards, of any other guardian of the female heir, can only possess the power which she could herself exercise if she were competent to contract. As her powers of alienation are those stated in section 341, her guardian possesses no greater power.

343. Surrender of woman's estate.

(1) The heiress may surrender her entire interest to the next reversioner, male or female,[2] or to any one or more of such reversioners with the consent of the rest, provided that where the next reversioner is a female, it may be surrendered to the male reversioner next in order with her consent.[3]

(2) Such surrender does not affect the validity of her prior alienations.[4]

Explanation.—A surrender is not rendered invalid under this section merely because the surrender reserves a portion of the estate for her own maintenance or conveys a part thereof to another in compromise of his claim or otherwise, provided the transaction, considered as a whole, is not a device to divide the inheritance.[5]

Illustrations.

(a) A Hindu widow conveys the bulk of her estate to her daughter, but inadvertently omits to convey an insignificant part thereof to her. The surrender is not invalid because the part conveyed was not her entire estate.[6]

(b) A claims the widow's estate by devise from her husband. She compromises his claim by conveying a small part of her estate to him and the residue to her reversioner. The surrender is not invalid because it is not a surrender of her entire estate.[7]

(c) A widow conveys her estate to the next reversioner conditional upon his maintaining her. The surrender is not invalid because it is conditional upon her maintenance.[8]

(d) A widow conveys her estate to the next reversioner who reconveys a moiety thereof absolutely to her. The surrender is invalid, being a device to divide the inheritance.[9]

2506. Analogous Law.—The power of a Hindu widow to surrender her estate was at one time the subject of judicial conflict, it being held in one set of cases that since surrender has the effect of altering the natural devolution of her husband's estate, the heir to which cannot be legally determined till after her death,[10] it is both illegal and opposed to the policy of law, while in others, the courts upheld the surrender as being the relinquishment of her own estate,[11] and this view has received

(1) Ramajogayya v. Jagannadhan, 42 M. 185 F.B.

(2) Sitanna v. Viranna, (1934) P.C. 105 (108), approving Sartaji v. Ramjas, 46 A. 59; Ram Krishna v. Kausalya, (1935) C. 689 (692).

(3) Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 (533) P.C., approving Debi Prasad v. Golap, 40 C. 721 F.B.; Shantikumar v. Mukundalal, 62 C. 204; Narayanaswami v. Rama Ayyar, (1930) P.C. 297 (headnote erroneous—nothing decided).

(4) Lachmichand v. Lachho, 49 A. 334; Prafulla v. Bhabani, 52 C. 1018.

(5) Angamuthu v. Varatharajulu, 42 M. 854 F.B.; Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanukdhari, 47 C. 466 (483, 484) P. C.; Ram Adhar v. Ram Manohar, 45 A. 610.

(6) Vadlamudi v. Vadlamudi, 52 I.C. (M.) 749.

(7) Sureshwar v. Maheshrani, 48 C. 100 P.C.

(8) Angamuthu v. Varatharajulu, 42 M. 854 F.B.

(9) Prafulla v. Birendra, 97 I. C. 236: (1926) C. 1211.

(10) See cases set out in Hindu Code 3rd Edn.), f.-n. (18) at p. 1473.

(11) See cases cited in Hindu Code (3rd Edn.), f.-n. (19) at p. 1473.

the support of the Privy Council.[1] As such, it may vest the estate in a male or a female reversioner.[2]

2507. In other words, there can be no surrender, unless it relates to the whole interest in the whole estate.[3] The effect of such surrender is to vest in the next heir the inheritance which he would take if she, at the time, were to die.[4] A surrender by a widow to those who are entitled to the estate is looked upon, in the Hindu Law, as meritorious, since it restores the property in its natural channel.[5] A surrender is not an alienation,[6] and it does not require the presence of consideration or legal necessity to support it.[7] It is not a transfer, but a relinquishment by the heiress, of her anomalous estate. A full owner has nothing to relinquish. He can only alienate it by a formal transfer, executed in accordance with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act.[8]

The various requirements of such surrender are noted in the section, but require to be more particularly emphasized.

2508. Surrender must Comprise the Entire Interest.—In the first place, the surrender must relate to the entire interest then vested in the heir. It cannot be made after reserving any portion by the widow.[9] As observed by the Privy Council, this is some security to the widow, from whom no reversioner can obtain the estate piecemeal. Of course, the fact that the heiress cannot surrender any but the whole estate does not limit her right of alienation. So, where a widow sold half the estate to the then reversioner, and he executed an instrument giving her the other half of the property, the court upheld the transaction by which each obtained absolutely a moiety of the estate.[10] But it is submitted that whatever might be the effect of such transfer inter partes, it could not affect the ultimate reversioner, or alter the heiress's estate into an absolute estate. Though the doctrine of acceleration of the inheritance by surrender by the widow primarily refers to a male, it makes no exception against a female reversioner, and the widow may, consequently, surrender her estate to her daughter, in the form of a gift[11] or otherwise, provided it conforms to the rule here stated. But this does not preclude the possibility of exclusion of a small and inappreciable portion of the estate,[12]

(1) Beharilal v. Madholal, 19 C. 236 (241) P. C.; Bajrangi v. Manokarika, 30 A. 1 P.C.

(2) Sitamma v. Viranna, 57 M. 749 P.C.

(3) Marudamuthu v. Srinivasan, 21 M. 128 F.B.; Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 23 C.W.N. 777 (808): 42 M. 523 (536) P.C.; Debi Prasad v. Golap, 40 C. 721 F.B.; Shanti Kumar v. Mukund Lal, 62 C. 204.

(4) Noferdoss v. Modhu Soondari, 5 C. 732 (735, 736).

(5) Per Jackson, J., argued in Noferdoss v. Modhu Soondari, 5 C. 732 (734); Moti v. Lal Das, 41 B. 93 (103); Nachiappa v. Rangasami, 28 M. L. J. 1 (8): 26 I.C. 757; Chinnaswami v. Appaswami, 42 M. 25.

(6) Mulugu v. Mudigonda, 31 M.L.J. 406: 36 I.C. 407; Munugarra v. Munugara, 34 M.L.J. 229: 42 I.C. 939; Man Singh v. Nawlakhbati, 2 Pat. 607 (635), O.A. 5 Pat. 290 P.C.

(7) Moti v. Lal Das, 41 B. 93 (105); Sham Rathi v. Jaichha, 39 A. 520.

(8) Udebhan v. Rang Rao, 59 I. C. (N.) 451.

(9) Behari Lal v. Madho Lal, 19 C. 236 P.C.; Nobo Kishore v. Hari Nath, 10 C. 1102 F. B.; Kanu Ram v. Kashi Chandra, 14 C.W.N. 226: 2 I.C. 660; Mohananda v. Baikantha, 45 I.C. (C.) 872; Rangappa v. Kampti, 31 M. 365 (369, 370); Mulugu v. Mudigonda, 31 M. L.J. 406: 36 I.C. 407; Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 P.C.; Janaki v. Debi Prasad, 2 Pat. L. J. 490.

(10) Kanu Ram v. Kashi Chandra, 14 C.W.N. 226: 2 I.C. 660.

(11) Rup Ram v. Rewti, 32 A. 582; Gowri v. Gopal, 25 I.C. 503.

(12) Vadlamudi v. Vadlamudi, 52 I.C. (M.) 749; Ram Krishna v. Kausalya, (1935) C. 689.

or prevent her from stipulating for and reserving or obtaining some property for her own maintenance,[1] or transferring a portion of the estate to a reversioner in settlement of his claim for immediate possession, as for instance, in compliance with a clause in the will of the last owner.[2]

2509. The Bombay High Court at one time took the financial view that any consideration was sufficient to convert a surrender into an alienation,[3] but later cases of the same court dissented from this view,[4] till it was overruled by the Privy Council.[5] A surrender may still be a good surrender, even though the widow has made an adequate provision for her own maintenance, or provided for the payment of her legal debts and the discharge of other liabilities; provided it is not a device to divide the estate with the reversioner.[6] As Shankaran Nair, J., said: "I am unable to agree with the view that the validity of the surrender of her interest or title to the reversioner depends upon the motive of the widow or upon any question of any benefit that may accrue to her or to any other person. Such might have been the case if the widows were holding the property in trust for any purpose or for the benefit of the actual reversioner, at the time of her death."[7] In other words, the estate is her own, and there is nothing to prevent her from surrendering it upon terms. For intance, there is nothing wrong in her surrendering the estate, subject to a reasonable provision for her maintenance, which might be charged on the estate, so that it is enforceable even when the estate has passed to a transferee.[8] By surrender she may convert this estate into an annuity,[9] in which case, subject to the payment of an annuity, the transferee would acquire an absolute interest.[10] This raises another question upon which the courts seem divided. If the widow can surrender upon terms, can she not alienate her estate to a person other than the next presumptive reversioner with his consent, since by such act, she relinquishes no interest other than her own, for as Garth, C.J., puts it: "If it is once established as a matter of law that a widow may relinquish her estate in favour of her husband's heir for the time being, it seems impossible to prevent any alienation, which the widow and the next heir may thus agree to make. And it seems equally impossible to deny that, for a long series of years, the court has treated and considered such alienation lawful."[11] But in Bombay, such an alienation would be judged as such, and upheld if it is for consideration to which the consent

(1) Bhagwati Koer v. Dhanukdhari, 47 C. 466 P.C.; Sureshwar v. Mahesrani, 48 C. 100 P.C.; Chinnaswami v. Appaswami, 35 M.L.J. 512; Kareti v. Kareti, 24 M. L.J. 533; Challa v. Palury, 31 M. 446; Angamuthu v. Varatharajulu, 42 M. 854 F.B.; Ramachandra v. Nagamuthu, 53 I.C. (M.) 785; Ram Odhar v. Ram Manohar, 45 A. 610.

(2) Sureshwar v. Maheshrani, 48 C. 100 P.C.

(3) Adiappa v. Tontappa, 44 B. 255 (260), following Sriramulu v. Andalammal, 30 M. 145 (148).

(4) Rama v. Dhondi, 47 B. 678 (683, 684); Gangadhar v. Prabhudha, 56 B. 410 (425, 426).

(5) Sureshwar v. Maheshrani, 48 C. 100 P.C.; Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 P.C.

(6) Sureshwar v. Maheshrani, 48 C. 100 (108) P.C.; Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 (536) P.C.; Indra Narain v. Sarbasova, 41 C.L.J. 341: 87 I.C. 930: (1925) C. 743.

(7) Challa v. Palury, 31 M. 446 (450); Subbalakshmi v. Narayana, 58 M. 150.

(8) Chamaru v. Sonakoer, 14 C. L. J. 303: 11 I.C. (C.) 301, and cases cited therein; Chinnaswamy v. Appaswamy, 42 M. 25; Angamuthu v. Varatharajulu, 42 M. 854 F.B.; Gouri Bai v. Gaya Bai, 22 N.L.R. 169: 97 I. C. 995: (1927) N. 44.

(9) Bejoy v. Girindra, 8 C. L. J. 458.

(10) Hem Chunder v. Sarnamoyi, 22 C. 354 (361).

(11) Nobo Kishore v. Hari Nath, 10 C. 1102 (1108) F. B.

of the next reversioner would merely furnish presumptive evidence of necessity.[1]

2510. Again, while the doctrine of surrender postulates the renunciation of all her rights, it does not follow that it should be done by a single act and not by a series of successive acts;[2] and in any case, it must, of course, be accompanied by delivery of possession. Till this is done, she is entitled to recall her act.[3] Again, where the estate vests jointly in two or more widows, there is nothing to prevent one co-widow from surrendering her interests, since it is the whole interest she possesses, though it is not the whole estate which passes to the reversioner.[4]

2511. Prior Dispositions Unaffected.—It goes without saying that surrender takes effect as from the moment it is made, and has no retrospective effect upon any prior alienation made by the heiress,[5] unless it affected the bulk of the estate, in which case the surrender would be illusory. If, therefore, she has gifted her whole estate or, what comes to the same thing, substantially her whole estate to one, there is nothing left to surrender. Such a case arose where the widow conveyed 18 acres and a house to her nephew, and three years later surrendered her remaining 2 acres to her next reversioner, the daughter, after which she adopted the plaintiff, who sued to eject the daughter, which the court decreed, holding that the prior disposition of the bulk of the estate had rendered the subsequent surrender inoperative, since it contravened the rule laid down by the Privy Council that it must relate to "the whole estate."[6] The case might be different if the previous gift related only to a portion of the estate.[7]

The questions of surrender and alienation have, in fact, to be regarded from two entirely different standpoints. The qutstion in the one case is: Was it the surrender of the entire interest in the entire estate to he nearest reversioner, in which case, the question of necessity is immaterial; while the question in the other case is: Was the alienation justified by necessity, it being immaterial who the alienee was, and whether the property alienated was the whole or only a part of the woman's estate.[8]

2512. Position of the Heiress After Surrender.—The doctrine of surrender owes its origin to the desire to relieve women of the management of property.[9] The surrendering heiress is sometimes spoken of

---

(1) Tukaram v. Yesu, 55 B. 46 (57); In Narayanaswami v. Ram Ayyar, 53 M. 692 (700) P.C., this question was raised but left undecided as to the consent of the next reversioner was found not proved.

(2) Venkata v. Venkata, 41 M. L. J. 208.

(3) Man Singh v. Nawalakbati, 2 Pat. 607 (636, 637), O.A. 5 Pat. 290 P.C.

(4) Medai Delavoy v. Medai Delavoy, 92 I.C. (M.) 355; contra in Anna v. Jaggu, (1925) M. 153 (because a co-widow cannot surrender the whole estate).

(5) Lachmi Chand v. Lachho, 49 A. 334; Karuppa v. Irulayee, 52 M. L. J. 195: 100 I.C. 580: (1927) M. 459; Prafulla v. Bhabani, 52 C. 1018 (Question not finally considered, as court held that there was no valid surrender).

(6) Sakharam v. Thama, 51 B. 1019 (1022).

(7) Prafulla v. Bhabani, 52 C. 1018.

(8) Rangaswami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 P.C.

(9) Nachiappa v. Rangasami, 28 M. L. J. 1 (8): 26 I.C. 757.

as having committed suicide, or as being civilly dead."[1] These are mere figures of speech and do not involve the assumption that the heiress has thenceforward no civil rights, or that she was ever in the position of one who suffers civil death, as by her remarriage, or abandonment of worldly pursuits. "A woman who surrenders is clearly not civilly dead for any other purpose than for the purpose of bringing in the next reversioner as heir, at once, to her husband's estate. She continues to own her own stridhan, and the obligation of all persons, who take her husband's estate, to maintain her, which is an absolute obligation thrown by the Hindu Law, cannot be destroyed by her surrender thereof. She does not become a sanyasi, because she surrenders her husband's estate. She is entitled to acquire properties, to retain her stridhan and to bring suits, and she remains competent to enter into contractual and other legal obligations."[2]

2513. In this case, the surrender by the widow and a reconveyance of the moiety were made on the same day, and it was not pleaded, though sought to be argued for the first time in appeal, that they were parts of the same transactions, which the court did not permit. But it is clear that the two contemporaneous deeds could not be treated as independent transactions. When it is so, there is nothing to prevent the reversioner from conveying an absolute estate to the heiress out of property surrendered to him.[3] And even where he conveys it as a part of the same transaction, both he and his legal representative claiming through him would be equally estopped.[4] The principle of this case has been carried even further in another case, in which it has been held that where a widow conveys the whole of her limited estate to the next reversioner, in consideration of an undertaking by such reversioner that he would reconvey a portion of such property to a person named by the widow, the conveyance is valid and is not vitiated by such agreement; and other reversioners cannot impeach the title of such reversioner and that of the person to whom the property is thus conveyed.[5] This view is supported on the ground that the title having vested in the reversioner, it was open to him to convey any portion of his estate to any person he liked, and the fact that he had previously agreed to convey it to the widow's nominee, as a consideration for his own surrender, did not vitiate his conveyance.

The rule that the surrender must comprise the entire estate, does not mean surrender of all interest in some of the estate, though in favour of the whole body of the reversioners.[6]

It has been held in Patna that, on surrender, the widow so far effaces herself that she is not even competent to sue for the recovery of rent due before her surrender.[7]

---

(1) Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanukdhari, 37 M.L.J. 513 P.C.

(2) Chinnaswami v. Appaswami, 42 M. 25.

(3) Hem Chunder v. Sarnamoyi, 22 C. 354; Rangappa v. Kamti, 31 M. 366 F. B.

(4) Rangappa v. Kamti, 31 M. 866 F. B.; Yeshwanta v. Antu, 58 B. 521 (532).

(5) Challa v. Palury, 31 M. 446.

(6) Debi Prasad v. Golap, 40 C. 721 F.B.; Suressur v. Mohesh, 20 C.W.N. 142; Marudamuthu v. Srinivasa, 21 M. 128 (152); Rangappa v. Kamti, 31 M. 366 (370); Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 (536) P.C.; contra in Kanuram v. Kashi, 14 C.W.N. 226, must be considered as overruled by the Privy Council in the last cited case.

(7) Phulbati v. Farman, 2 Pat. L. J. 606: 63 I.C. 448.

Nevertheless, any contract between the heir and the reversioner for the reservation or transfer of any property or benefit is not illegal, and where the transferee assigns any land to the heir, the right in which and the terms whereupon she would take the lands, must depend upon the terms of the transfer. If they convey to her an absolute estate, she will take it in that right.[1] And it is conceivable that a surrender may fail as a surrender, but the transaction may still be valid as a family arrangement.[2]

Limits of the Rule.

2514. But there are obvious limits to this rule. The surrender must be a bona fide surrender, not a device to divide the estate with the reversioner.[3] The question whether it is the one or the other must depend upon the quantum of consideration, its purpose and other circumstances of each case. In one case, the estate of two co-widows was assumed by the Court of Wards, who took possession of the estate and allowed the widows a monthly maintenance allowance of Rs. 625 each. They then purported to surrender their estate to the next reversioner. The Patna court held the surrender void as contravening S. 60 of the Court of Wards Act,[4] which rendered them incompetent to create "any charge upon, or interest in the property, or any part thereof."[5] In dismissing the appeal, their Lordships of the Privy Council held the transaction equally void under Hindu Law as unsupported by "necessity."[6] It is submitted that reference to necessity was irrelevant in judging of the validity of a transaction which the High Court had rightly held to be only one of relinquishment as distinct from alienation. Apart from the statutory bar, the transaction was, however, void, as lacking in bona fides, the surrender being made to remove the control of the Court of Wards, and in consideration of Rs. 2,000, promised by way of a monthly maintenance allowance to the two widows or their survivor. As such, the case was analogous to that in which the Calcutta High Court held the surrender a mere device to divide the inheritance. In that case, the widow had surrendered her zemindari, yielding an annual income of Rs. 3,000, and, on the next day, the reversioner executed a deed to the widow agreeing to pay her Rs. 3,000 in cash, and Rs. 1,800 annually for the rest of her life. The court held the surrender void, which it clearly was, since it was an alienation for consideration, the validity of which must depend upon the presence of necessity.[7] The same view was taken in another case in which the widow had taken the major portion of the consideration of Rs. 900 in cash out of which she had paid only Rs. 400 for her husband's debt.[8] On the other hand, the surrender is, nonetheless, valid, even though the widow had given half the estate to the daughter, because it appeared that the daughter had claimed tht whole under the will, of which she had obtained a probate.[9]

---

(1) Suressur v. Mohesh, 20 C.W.N. 142.

(2) Sambasiva v. Ramaswami, 48 M. L. J. 353: 86 I.C. 772: (1925) M. 803.

(3) Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 423 P.C.; Gangadhar v. Prabudha, 56 B. 410.

(4) Beng. Act. IX of 1870.

(5) Ib., S. 60; Man Singh v. Nowlakhbati, 2 Pat. 607.

(6) Man Singh v. Nowlakhbati, 5 Pat. 290 (304, 305) P.C.

(7) Prafulla v. Birendra, 30 C. W. N. 1011: 97 I.C. 236: (1926) C. 1211; cf. Siva Subramania v. Pirama, 49 M.L. J. 128: 90 I.C. 1024: (1925) M. 1111.

(8) Shanti Kumar v. Mukundalal, 62 C. 204.

(9) Chowdhury Sureshwar v. Maheshrani, 41 C.L.J. 433 P.C.

2515. It must be in Favour of the Next Reversioner.—Secondly, such surrender can only be made in favour of the next reversioner and not in favour of any of the reversioners near or remote,[1] except that there is no objection to her surrendering her estate in favour of the second reversioner with the consent of the first reversioner.[2] The position is the same as if the heiress had surrendered in favour of the first reversioner, and he, in his turn, had assigned his interest in favour of the second reversioner. So, a gift to the daughter's son with the consent of the daughter has been upheld.[3] But the contrary has been laid down by the same court in several cases.[4] in some of which the language used is fatal to her very right.[5] The question was considered by the Calcutta High Court, who held the rule to be well established that "the widow may convey to the next reversioner, or to a third party with the consent of the next reversioner, the whole or any portion of the estate, and the transferee will acquire an absolute interest."[6] Following this view, the court upheld a surrender in favour of the next reversioner and a stranger holding it to be a surrender to the reversioner, with an alienation by the reversioner to the stranger.[7] So, it has been held in Madras that the surrender need not be definitely to the next heir if that next heir agrees to be passed over.[8]

At any rate since the surrender in favour of the next reversioner is unobjectionable, there is nothing to prevent the surrender being made in favour of a female reversioner, such as the daughter.[9]

2516. Form Immaterial.—Since the sole essence of surrender is self-effacement, and law prescribes no form in which it might be effected, the process by which it is effected may be in form a surrender, or relinquishment, or abandonment of her rights, provided that there is a bona fide and total renunciation of the widow's right to hold the property.[10] Again, a surrender may be effected either by a single act or a series of acts, provided that the several acts were done in pursuance of the same intention. Such was the case of the mother who had in 1870 settled two-thirds of her estate upon her two daughters, and twenty years later in 1890, after the death of her daughters, transferred the third, which she had reserved for herself, to her daughter's sons. On the mother's death, the son of one of her daughter's sons sued to recover the property which had been sold in execution of a decree against his father on the ground that the latter's title, as the mother's alienee, could not enure beyond the mother's life-

(1) Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 P.C.; Sureshwar v. Maheshrani, 48 C. 100 P.C.; Hem Chunder v. Sarnamoyi, 22 C. 354; Manjaya v. Sheshgiri, 49 B. 187 (192).

(2) Pratapchunder v. Joy Monee, 1 W.R. 98; Basangavda v. Basangavda, 39 B. 87 (99).

(3) Raja Dei v. Umed Singh, 34 A. 207; Chinnaswamy v. Appaswami, 42 M. 25; Narayanaswami v. Ram, 53 M. 692 (700) P.C.

(4) Ramphal v. Tulakuari, 6 A. 116 F.B.; Mada Abdulla v. Ram Lal, 34 A. 129 (surrender in favour of sister's son, with the consent of the next reversioner, void), but the same bench held contra in Raja Dei v. Umed Singh, ib., p. 207.

(5) Ramphal v. Tulakuari, 6 A. 116 (120) F.B.; Madan Mohan v. Puran Mal, ib., p. 288.

(6) Hem Chunder v. Sarnamoyi, 22 C. 354 (361); Ananda v. Indra Bhusan, 12 C.W.N. 49.

(7) Abhoya v. Ram Kinnar, 89 I. C. (C.) 770.

(8) Mulugu v. Mudigonda, 31 M. L. J. 406: 36 I.C. 407; Satyalakshmi v. Jagannadham, 34 M. L. J. 229: 43 I.C. 939; Chinnaswami v. Appaswami, 42 M. 25.

(9) Udhar Singh v. Ranee Kuar, 1 Agra 234; Bhupal v. Lachman, 11 A. 253; Rup Ram v. Rewati, 32 A. 582.

(10) Bhagwati v. Dhanukdhari, 12 M. L.W. 105: 59 I.C. 445 P.C.

time, but his suit was thrown out by the court on the ground that the transfer of 1890 was not an alienation, but a surrender made in pursuance of an intention which led to the transaction of 1870, and that, therefore, the mother's death gave the plaintiff no right to question its propriety.[1]

2517. Since there is nothing in the Transfer of Property Act requiring that a surrender should be made in writing, it follows that a surrender need not be in writing, though, if it is once reduced to writing, it would require to be registered in accordance with the general provisions of S. 17 (b) of the Registration Act.

Alienation voidable.

344. An alienation of property, whether purporting to be for value or otherwise, is voidable at the instance of a reversioner and not void.[2]

2518. Analogous Law.—An improper alienation by the heiress can only be questioned by the reversioner affected thereby, and by no other person, has long been held,[3] following the view that the heiress is the owner and not a mere trustee of the estate, and that the curb upon her power of alienation is in the interest of the reversioner, who alone can complain of any prejudice to his rights. The reversioner may protect himself from an improper alienation by giving notice of his objection to the alienee, in which case, however, it will not affect a subsequent transferee without notice, who will be bound by a decree declaratory of the reversioner's right as unaffected by the alienation. The reversioner, again, may take his chance by suing to eject the alienee, on the widow's death, as provided in Art. 141 of the Limitation Act, in which case, his suit will, in itself, be evidence of his election.[4]

Alienation of whole estate with consent of all reversioners.

345. (1) An alienation, whether for value or otherwise, of the whole of the estate, made with the consent, express or implied, of the general body of the presumptive male reversioners, and, in special cases, of as many of them as is reasonably possible, is conclusive as against the next reversioner.[5]

Alienation with the presumptive reversioner's consent.

(2) An alienation, purporting to be for legal necessity, or for the benefit of the estate, made to another with the consent of the presumptive male reversioner, shall be presumed to have been so made against the next reversioner, unless the latter proves the contrary:[6]

---

(1) Sureya Rao v. Suryanarayana, 41 M. L. J. 208; Maru v. Hanso, 48 A. 485.

(2) Modhu Sudan v. Rooke, 25 C. 1 P.C. Bijoy Gopal v. Krishna, 34 C. 329 (333) P.C.; Ramgowda v. Bhau Saheb, 52 B. 1 (7) P.C.; Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 (538) P.C.

(3) Modhu Sudan v. Rooke, 25 C. 1 P.C.; Bijoy Gopal v. Krishna, 34 C. 329 (333) P.C.; Ramgowda v. Bhau Saheb, 52 B. 1 (7) P.C.; Kesheo Prasad (Maharaja) v. Chandrika, 2 Pat. 217; Jabedali v. Prasanna Kumar, 27 C. W.N. 433: (1923) C. 423: Bahadur Singh v. Sultan Husain, (1922) O. 171.

(4) Bijoy Gopal v. Krishna, 34 C. 329 P.C.

(5) Manjaya v. Seshagiri, 49 B. 187; Debi Prasad v. Golap Bhagat, 40 C. 721 (753) F.B., dissenting from Pulin Chandra v. Bholai Mandal, 35 C. 939 (in which presumption was held to be irrebuttable) approving Hemichunder v Sarnamoyi, 22 C. 354.

(6) Debi Prasad v. Golap Bhagat, 40 C. 721 (753) F.B., approved in Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 (534, 536) P.C.

Consent Binds Representatives.

Provided that the son, or other personal representative, and all members of the family, of which the person consenting was then the manager, shall be bound by his consent.[1]

Illustrations.

(a) A, a widow, gifts the whole of her husband's estate inherited by her to a stranger B, with the consent of the bulk of the then presumptive reversioners. On A's death, her next reversioner, C, seeks to eject B on the ground that A's alienation was unsupported by legal necessity, and that B's consent did not affect him. B's consent binds C.

(b) A, widow of B, with the assent of his brother, sells her estate to her brother C who redeems a mortgage created by B. D, a distant cousin of B's takes no action during his lifetime. On A's death, the estate vests in D. It is for the court to decide whether D's laches did not amount to acquiescence in the propriety of the sale.

(c) A, widow of B sells her whole estate to a stranger, C, to defray the expenses of the marriage of B's daughter, D. B's sister, the then presumptive reversioner, consents to the sale. On A's death, the estate vests in B's distant cousin, E, who sues to eject C. C pleads his sale good as supported by the next reversioner D. D's consent is of no avail, since D, being a female, could not, by her consent, raise any presumption of the necessity of the sale to C.

(d) A, widow of B, makes a gift of her whole estate to her brother C, with the consent of B's brother, D. A distant cousin of B's protests against the gift. On A's death, the estate vests in D. D is entitled to avoid the gift.

(e) A gifts a part of her inherited estate to B with the consent of B's brother C. On A's death, the estate vests in C's son D, who seeks to avoid the gift. D cannot do so, since C's consent binds him.

2519. Analogous Law.—As will be presently seen, vague though this branch of the law is, and still in a fluid state of formation, owing to its uncertainty and insufficiency, which calls for the intervention of the Legislature, since judicial expansion has reached its limits, and has failed to define precisely the extent of the heiress's power of alienation, and the reversioner's control over it, still the rules emerging from the case law have become sufficiently concrete to be capable of succinct enunciation.

The extent of the right of alienation of a woman, inheriting to a male, depends upon the nature of her estate. At one time it was suggested that, in the case of the widow, she held it as a mere trustee for her husband's heirs, and that, as such, she had no right of her own therein. But this extreme view was soon abandoned in favour of that now held that the widow takes the estate as an heir and as an owner, though her ownership is qualified by reason of her sexual disability to inherit such estate as her stridhan, entailing the result that, being a life-owner, she is necessarily precluded from alienating it for purposes other than those which Hindu Law regards as necessary or proper, which may be proved or presumed from the fact, that her reversioners, interested in the expectancy, assent to, or permit, the alienation. Now, it is clear that if the whole estate had vested in the widow and the body of reversioners for the time being, then their mere consent would suffice to convey an absolute estate in the alienee irrespective of whether the alienation was for value or necessity, but since so long as the widow is alive her reversioners have only a spes successionis, it follows that she and they together are equally incompetent to prescribe for a higher title than they themselves possess in the estate.[1] At the same time, their concurrence must count for something, and it is obviously equitable that they must be held bound by their consent. But consent to what? Any alienation, even if it be a gift, unsupported by consideration, or necessity? After wavering between the two views the courts have, it seems, now become reconciled to that stated in the section. There remained the question of its effect upon the next reversioner as to which the cases have latterly adopted the rule, also stated in the section.

(1) Ramgowda v. Bhau Saheb, 52 B. 1 P.C., affirming O.A. Bhau Saheb v. Ramgauda, 25 Bom.L.R. 818: 76 I.C. 937; Rengan v. Palaniyandi, 56 M.L.J. 66: (1928) M. 1101; Bhagwan Singh v. Ujagar Singh, (1928) P.C. 20: Babu Singh v. Rameshwar, 7 Luck. 360: (1932) O. 90 (95).

2520. Alienation with Reversioner's Consent.—The rules formulated in this section have, only recently, emerged out of a chaos of cases which, in the absence of any textual authority, and faced with the statutory doctrine of estoppel, gave scope for the enunciation of dicta from which a somewhat hurried retreat became necessary when the true conditions governing restraint upon alienations rendered strict adhesion to the narrow doctrine almost impossible. Stripped of questions more to less ancillary the confusion seems to have centred round two points: (a) the limits of alienation with consent, and (b) the extent of the consenting authority. As to the first, inspite of certain dicta to the contrary, the prevailing view till recently was that apart from surrender to the next presumptive reversioner the alienor could not prescribe for a larger title than what she herself possessed in the estate except where her alienation was made for legal necessity or benefit to the estate and that the consent to such alienation whether of the next presumptive reversioner, or of the community of all reversioners could not, apart from necessity, convey an absolute title in favour of the alienee, thus excluding the possibility of an alienation without necessity, temporal or spiritual. In this view, consent merely created a presumption of necessity which was not conclusive. Even within these limits, the question of consent remained: who could give a valid consent to raise such presumption—the next presumptive reversioner, or the general body of heirs, and in either case, could the consent be deemed free if the consenting party had himself received a benefit therefrom? The narrowest doctrine provided for such sublime altruism was to make any alienation itself impossible. It gave the alienee no protection from the fact of consent and he had to rest his title upon the sheet anchor of necessity. It is true that if he could rope in all the reversioners he had some measure of security but it was by no means long lived, since other reversioners were sure to spring out of the loins of their consenting forbears, and as they claimed the reversion in their own right, the alienee had but a poor security, since his armour stood to be penetrated by an afterborn son of a father, who, it may be, had indicted his assent to an alienation by the widow or other limited female owner. An alienee would pay but little for so insecure a title and, in the end, his title rested upon uncertainties against which he had no redress.

The logical evolution of the present rule was foreseen as far back as 1856, when the late Supreme Court of Bengal who held that, as the widow was at any time entitled to relinquish her estate in favour of the next presumptive reversioner, there was no reason why she should not alien it in favour of his nominee. If the rule had rested here it would not have aroused the controversy it did, on account of the interplay of other doctrines, in which the quality of her estate itself became a subject of re-examination; which led, in its train, to the re-examination of the whole question of her relation with the reversioner. The earliest view that the widow inheriting to her husband held her heritage as a trust for her husband's heirs was the first to be combated by the Privy Council who held the estate as her own, held in her own right, unlimited as to its enjoyment by it and only limited as regards her power of alienation. This led to the deduction that the estate which she conveyed to the reversioner was a surrender and not relinquishment which she was entitled to make only by parting with it as a whole or almost so. Surrender then became distinct from alienation and the two became subject to principles wide apart which in their train became a prolific source of conflicting deductions upon which the several courts, and the courts among themselves, became sharply divided.

(1) Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. v. Golap Bhagat, 40 C. 721 F.B. 523 (534) P.C.; approving Debi Prasad

Historical Retrospect.

2521. The root cause of this uncertainty and conflict was the decisions of the Privy Council who were reluctant to state the law more precisely than what they were compelled to by the immediate exigency of the cases they had to decide. But, even in so doing, they did not, at times, remember the distinction between a gift and an alienation for value, nor did they advert to the precise meaning of the term "heirs" the effect of whose consent they were considering. For example, while in some cases they upheld a gift by the widow because it was made with the consent of her "heirs"[1] in other cases they called for the consent of the general body of heirs[2] and treated it as no more than evidence of property.[3] The whole question was examined in great detail in a case decided in 1918 in which Lord Dunedin referred to "different currents of judicial opinion, and, as in this case, and some others, the actual differences in judicial determination,"[4] and set out what he conceived to be the result of the decided cases in the following words:—

(1) An alienation by a widow of her deceased husband's estate, held by her, may be validated, if it can be shown to be a surrender of her whole interest in the whole estate in favour of the nearest reversioner or reversioners at the time of the alienation. In such circumstances the question of necessity does not fall to be considered. But the surrender must be a bona fide surrender, and not a device to divide the estate with reversioner.

(2) When the alienation of the whole or part of the estate is to be supported on the ground of necessity, then, if such necessity is not proved aliunde, and the alienee does not prove inquiry on his part, and honest belief in the necessity, the consent of such reversioners as might fairly be expected to be interested to quarrel with the transaction will be

(1) Rany Sremuty v. Rani Koond, 4 M.I.A. 292 (319, 320); Bajrangi v. Manokarnika, 30 A. 1 (17-21) P.C.

(2) Raj Lukhee v. Gokool Chunder, 13 M.I.A. 209 (228); Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 (534-536) P.C.; Varjiram v. Ghelji, 5 B. 563; followed in Vinayak v. Govind, 25 B. 129; Radha Shyam v. Jog Ram, 17 C. 896; Ram Phal v. Tula Kuari, 6 A. 116.

(3) Collector of Masulipatam v. Venkata, 8 M. I. A. 529; Raj Lakhee v. Kokool Chunder, 13 M.I.A. 209; Bijoy Gopal v. Girindranath, 41 C. 793 P.C.; Hari Kishen v. Kashi Pershad, 42 C. 876 (886, 887) P.C.; Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 (534-536) P. C.

(4) Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 (531) P.C.

held to afford a presumptive proof which, if not rebutted by contrary proof, will validate the transaction as a right and proper one.[1]

2522. Consent binds the heirs.—The principle of the rule that a consent by a presumptive reversioner not only binds his son and descendants, but all those who were joint with him at the time[2] was settled as far back as 1856, in a case decided by the late Supreme Court of Bengal in which Sir James Colville, C.J., said: "that a consent to the widow's disposition given by a reversionary heir, who afterwards dies in her lifetime, is binding on his immediate descendants. Such a rule seems to be reasonable and convenient, since otherwise, every disposition by a widow would be in certain circumstances voidable, and he could hardly ever make a good title to the property. But it cannot, I think, be put generally on the doctrines of estoppel, since the sons or other descendants of the deceased reversioner claim not through him, or as the representatives of his interest, but as the nearest collateral heirs of the person from whom the widow inherited then living."[3] This view has since been affirmed by the Privy Council[4] whose decision leaves no doubt that the consent of the presumptive reversioner binds his sons and personal representatives as well as the members of the family of which he was then the manager, and it creates a presumption of propriety against the next reversioner though there is no privity between them.[5]

Cl. 2, Proviso.

In some cases the disability to contest such alienation is spoken of as arising out of the doctrine of estoppel[6] but the rule appears to be one of wider equity and convenience and would operate even though the condition essential to constitute a statutory estoppel was wanting[7] These cases leave no doubt that, in order to bind the next reversioner, the consenting party must be the presumptive—not a remote—reversioner, and that as he is disqualified from unravelling the transaction, so is the next reversioner. The reversioner may consent or he might equally ratify an alienation after it is made.[8] In one case, however, the Privy Council held that in order to be operative the reversioner must have become in titulo to reduce the estate to possession[9] but their later view appears to be that, though a reversioner, having a mere spes successionis, is precluded from transferring his own contingent interest, but that does not preclude him from consenting to a transfer by the female owner.[10]

346. (1) It is sufficient if the consent, as is referred to in sections 344 and 345 is express or implied, and it may be given contemporaneously with or subsequently to the alienation.

Meaning of consent.

(1) Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 (536) P. C.

(2) Bhagwan Singh v. Ujagar Singh, (1928) P.C. 20.

(3) Jadomoney v. S. Mookarjee and Co., (1856) 1 Boulnois, 120 (135): 3 I. D. (O.S.) 72 (81).

(4) Rangowda v. Bhau Saheb, 52 B. 1 (7, 8) P.C.; affirming O.A. Bhau Saheb v. Ramgawad, 25 Bom.L.R. 818: 76 I. C. 937.

(5) Debi Prosad v. Golap Bhagat, 40 C. 721 (782) F.B.; Trilochun v. Umesh Chunder, 7 C.L.R. 571; Raja Bullubh v. Oomesh Chunder, 5 C. 44.

(6) Basappa v. Fakirappa, 46 B. 292 (301).

(7) Ramakottayya v. Viraraghavayya, 52 M. 556 (562) F. B.; Akkawa v. Sayad Khan, 51 B. 475 (486) F. B., following Basappa v. Faikrappa, 46 B. 292.

(8) Bajrangi v. Manokarnika, 30 A. 1 (21) P.C.

(9) Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 (538, 539) P.C.

(10) Ramgowda v. Bhau Saheb, 52 B. 1 P.C.

(2) A consent so given is not rendered invalid by reason of the fact that the person consenting had himself received a benefit from the transaction:

Provided that no consent shall be deemed to be valid:

(a) if it is given without full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction;

(b) if it is given or obtained collusively or fraudulently with intent to defeat the claims of a future reversioner; or

(c) if it is not given in good faith with intent to confirm the transaction.

Explanation.*—A reversioner may be debarred though he may not be estopped by the operation of the doctrine of estoppel.

Illustrations.

(a) A, a widow, gifts her inherited estate to B, in which C afterwards acquiesces. On the succession opening, C seeks to set aside the alienation on the ground that his consent given later could not validate an alienation already made, and that, in any case, since B, being a volunteer, was in no way damnified by his consent, it did not suffice to estop him from ejecting B. C cannot eject B since his ratification of the alienation in favour of B had the same legal effect as if he had previously given his consent, and as to estoppel C's disability arose from his conduct independent of the rule of estoppel.

(b) A, a widow divides her estate into three portions, one of which she gifts to her brother B to which C, the then presumptive reversioner, in consideration of the portion being given to him, consents, the remaining third A retains for her life. On A's death D the next reversioner seeks to eject both B and C, on the ground that C's consent was collusive. D is entitled to set aside the arrangement under which B and C had divided the inheritance.

2523. Consent and Ratification.—The consent requisite to create the presumption or to validate the transfer, may be express or implied, and given at the time of the transfer, or the same may be ratified by any subsequent act or acquiescence: omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato priori acquiparatur.[1] The question of consent is one of fact and one which depends upon the circumstances of each case. Such consent may be given by the reversioner joining in the conveyance as a consenting party,[2] or he may execute an independent consent deed,[3] or by attesting the deed, noting thereon that he approved of the transfer[4] or by other evidence showing that the reversioner, being aware of the transfer, had either consented to, or acquiesced in it. Where the next reversioner is a minor, consent for him may be given by his guardian.[5]

The mere fact that the reversioner has attested the deed is held by the Privy Council to be no proof of consent, since it is no proof that the attestor knew of the contents of the deed.[6] And even if he did, and had, in fact, joined in the alienation, it would not, it is said, estop him

---

(1) "A subsequent ratification (or confirmation) has a retrospective effect and is equivalent to a prior command"—cited and followed in Bajrangi v. Manokarnika, 30 A. 1 (21) P.C.; Narayana v. Rama, 38 M. 396 (402).

(2) Kissen Geer v. Busgeet Roy, 14 W. R. 379.

(3) Mohan Lal v. Siromonee, 2 B.S.R. 401; Bajrangi v. Manokarnika, 30 A. 1 P.C.

(4) Madhu Sudan v. Mohendra, 2 Boul. 40; Anantoo v. Ram Rup, 87 I.C. 315: (1925) A. 692.

(5) Suleman v. Perichevla, 86 I.C. (M.) 195: (1925) M. 670 is not contra, being decided upon its own facts.

(6) Hari Kishen v. Kashi Pershad, 42 C. 876 P.C.; Banga Chandra v. Jagat Kishore, 44 C. 186 (199) P.C.

afterwards from disputing its validity.[1] But as their Lordships pointed out, while, as a rule, the reversioner's election to hold the deed good could be effective only after he became in titulo to reduce the estate to possession and knew of the alienation, still "something might be done even before that time which amounted to an actual election to hold the deed good."[2] In that case, not only the person consenting would be bound by his own consent, but even those after-born, who claimed through him, would be bound.[3] In this view, the presumptive reversioner is bound by his consent, even though given before the succession had opened.[4] And even if the presumptive reversioner be a female, she would be bound by her consent and precluded from challenging the validity of the transaction, on the ground of election.[5] The fact is that the law of estoppel is a rule of general law, and if its conditions are fulfilled, the reversioner or no reversioner both are equally bound by it.

2524. Intelligent Consent.—Since the reversioner's consent dispenses with the proof of legal necessity, it follows that, in order to have that effect, his consent must be given after full knowledge of the facts and an intelligent appreciation of its nature and effect upon his own right. A person who is too young[6] or too old[7] to appreciate the nature and effect of his consent, is naturally out of the question. So, the Privy Council said: "In order to raise such a presumption, the consent of the deceased's kindred to his widow's or daughter's alienation, must be shown to be given with a knowledge of the effect of what they were doing and an intelligent intention to consent to such effect."[8]

Clause (3).

This case, then, shows that the presumption arising under the rules is only one which the court may make, due regard being had to all the circumstances of the case, and that where it appears that the executant was a pardanashin, and the consenting reversioner a man just come of age and not free to form an independent judgment, it will refuse to act on the presumption and call upon the alienee to establish his case by proof of legal necessity. As their Lordships observed in another case: "When a stringent equity, arising out of an alleged consent by the reversioner, is sought to be enforced against them, such consent must be established by positive evidence that, upon an intelligent understanding of the nature of the dealings, they concurred in binding their interest, and that such consent should not be inferred from ambiguous acts or be supported by dubious oral testimony."[9]

2525. In this case, the estate of one Shyamlal Singh was inherited by his widow Nawab Kumari, who mortgaged them, by two deeds, to one

(1) Swaminatha v. Swaminath, 99 I.C. 772: (1927) M. 458; contra in Puran Das v. Duli Chand, 96 I.C. 668: (1926) A. 684. Thakur Prasad v. Mt. Dipa, 10 Pat. 352.

(2) Rangaswami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 (538, 539) P.C.

(3) Ib., p. 538.

(4) Gur Narain v. Sheolal, 46 C. 566 P.C.; Basappa v. Fakirappa, 46 B. 292; Akkava v. Sayadkhan, 51 B. 475 F.B.; Mahadeo v. Mata Prasad, 44 A. 44; Feteh Singh v. Thakur Rukmini, 45 A. 339; dissented from in Rajagopalachariar v. Sami Reddi, 50 M.L.J. 221: 93 I.C. 49 (51, 52): (1926) M. 517.

(5) Akkava v. Sayadkhan, 51 B. 475 F.B.

(6) Sham Sundar v. Achan Kuar, 17 A. 125, O.A.: 21 A. 71 P.C.

(7) Deputy Commissioner v. Anseri, 9 O.C. 104 (An alienation by a widow aged 40, with the consent of the next reversioner aged 85, held to be worth nothing).

(8) Achan Kuar v. Thakurdas, 17 A. 125, affirmed O.A. Sham Sunder v. Achan Kunwar, 21 A. 71 (80, 81) P.C.; Hari Kishen v. Kashi Pershad, 42 C. 876 (886) P.C.

(9) Hari Kishen v. Kashi Pershad, 42 C. 876 (886) P.C.

Bhagat, who obtained a decree, in execution of which he purchased them. The plaintiffs, who were Shyamlal's brother's son and, as such, Nawab Kumari's reversioners, sued the mortgagee-purchaser for possession of the properties, on the ground that the mortgagor had no right to alien them beyond her own lifetime. The defence was legal necessity and consent by the reversioners. As to the latter, the only fact relied on was that some of Shyamlal's nephews had purchased the stamp and wrote out the mortgagor Nawab Kumari's name and that two of them were attesting witnesses to the deed. But the nearest reversioner at the time was Shyamlal's brother Raghubir, and the acts of the nephews were held to be insufficient to create the presumption of legal necessity, as there was no act done by the nephews, from which their intelligent concurrence could be inferred.[1] But the case would probably have been differently decided, if the nephews had been the next reversioners.

2526. Value of Recitals.—Recitals in deeds are by themselves not sufficient evidence of legal necessity, though they are evidence as between the parties to the conveyance and those who claim under them. If they remain unchallenged, for a long time, by persons whose interest is adversely affected by them, they would furnish evidence, upon which the court may find the fact as more consistent with probability.[2] Such was the case of one Brij Narain, who died childless in 1845, leaving him surviving his two widows G and J. G died in June, 1890 and J in 1902. During their lives they disposed of all the properties inherited by them from their husbands, by deeds executed at intervals, which all contained recitals of facts, which, if true, justified the sales. On the death of J, the plaintiff, a remote reversioner, sued for possession of the estate, challenging the sales, two of which he had himself attested, as supported by legal necessity, of which the recitals were the only material evidence. Referring to them, the Lord Chancellor said: "But in such a case as the present, their Lordships do not think that these recitals can be disregarded, nor, on the other hand, can any fixed and inflexible rule be laid down as to the proper weight which they are entitled to receive. If the deeds were challenged at the time, or near the date of their execution, so that independent evidence would be available, the recitals would deserve but slight consideration and certainly should not be accepted as proof of the facts. But as time goes by, and all the original parties to the transaction and all those who could have given evidence on the relevant facts have grown old or passed away, a recital consistent with the probability and circumstances of the case, assumes greater importance and cannot lightly be set aside; for it should be remembered that the actual proof of the necessity which justified the deed is not essential to establish its validity. It is only necessary that a representation should have been made to the purchaser that such necessity existed, and that he should have acted honestly and made proper enquiry to satisfy himself of its truth. The recital is clear evidence of the representation, and, if the circumstances are such as to justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed its truth, then when proof of actual enquiry has become impossible, the recital, coupled with such circumstances, would be sufficient evidence to support the deed. To hold otherwise would result in deciding that a title becomes weaker as it grows older, so that a transaction, perfectly honest and legitimate when it took place, would ultimately be incapable of justification, merely owing to the passage of time."[1]

(1) Hari Kishen v. Kashi Pershad, 42 C. 876 (885) P.C.

(2) Banga Chandra v. Jagat Kishore, 44 C. 186 (196) P.C.

2527. Bona Fide Consent.—Again, the consent to be given must be bona fide consent, that is to say, consent given with the object of validating a transfer as supported by legal necessity. The fact that the reversioner receives a consideration for so doing, does not invalidate his consent, though it may affect his bona fides and weaken the presumption, otherwise arising, as to the legality of the transfer.[2] And so far as the consenting reversioner is concerned, he will be estopped.[3] But a consent given or obtained by collusion or fraud, in order to validate a transaction otherwise invalid or unsupported by legal necessity, is of no effect, and would not support the transaction, even though consented to by the next reversioner.[4] Since it is not the law that consent takes the place of legal necessity, but is only evidence of its existence, and if it appears or is shown that it did not exist, the presumption arising as to its existence, can no longer alter the fact.

Next reversioner when transferee.

2528. From the fact that consent of the next reversioner raises a presumption of legal necessity, it follows that such consent must be to an alienation made to some one other than the consenting reversioner himself. If the transfer is made in his favour, he cannot, of course, consent to the propriety of a transfer in his own favour; he must, therefore, either prove legal necessity or surrender, and in the latter case, the alienation will be subject to the special rule governing it.[5] (§ 343.)

Power cannot be delegated.

2529. The power of the next reversioner to consent to a transfer is personal to him, and cannot be delegated by him to his executor.[6]

2530. Gift Excluded.—Since consent is merely presumptive evidence of legal necessity, it follows that consent cannot validate a transfer which is not supported plainly by legal necessity,[7] or which is in favour of the next reversioner and does not amount to the acceleration of inheritance.[8] Consequently, a gift by the widow, though consented to by the next reversioner, cannot convey an absolute estate,[9] unless the gift itself is supported by legal necessity. Such, for example, is the gift on the occasion of the daughter's marriage, which, as already stated, is supported by law as conducive to the spiritual benefit of the father, and would then be good, if consented to by the joint body of reversioners.[10]

---

(1) Banga Chandra v. Jagat Kishore, 44 C. 186 (196) P.C.

(2) Bajrangi v. Mankoarnika, 30 A. 1. P.C.; Gangappa v. Subbu, 6 M.L.T. 260.

(3) Muthuveera v. Vythilinga, 32 M. 206.

(4) Kolondaya v. Vedamutu, 19 M. 337.

(5) Kudappa v. Rongala, 86 I.C. 4: (1925) M. 384.

(6) Hayes v. Harendra, 31 C. 698 (702).

(7) Tukaram v. Yesu, 55 B. 46.

(8) Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 P.C.: 50 I.C. 498; Bhawani v. Chait Ram, 39 A. 1 P.C.; Ramphal v. Tula Kuari, 6 A. 116; Bakhtavar v. Bhagvana, 32 A. 176; Abdulla v. Ram Lal, 34 A. 129; Raja Dei v. Umed Singh, 34 A. 207; Parvati v. Dayabahai, 44 M. 488; Hunsraj v. Moghibai, 7 Bom.L.R. 622; Ananda v. Indra, 12 C.W.N. 49; Drigpal v. Harihar, 24 O.C. 245: 64 I.C. 80.

(9) Rangasami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 P.C.: 50 I.C. 498; Ismail v. Jagannath, 19 I.C. (A.) 258; Abdulla v. Ram Lal, 34 A. 129: 8 A.L.J. 1318; Beni Madho v. Jagat Singh, 10 A.L.J. 33; Pilu v. Babaji, 34 B. 165.

(10) Abhesang v. Raisang, 14 Bom.L.R. 602.

Consent cannot legalize the creation of an estate unknown to the law. So where the widow and the mother of the owner provided for descent of their estate, on their death, to the natural brothers of the adopted son, and the deed was contented to by the next reversioner, it was held that his consent could not legalize the devolution of the estate in a line different from that prescribed by the law.[1] But in such a case, the consenting reversioner would be personally estopped from questioning the propriety of the gift. So, where a widow made a gift of a portion of her husband's property to her husband's brother's grandson, with the consent of the next reversioner, another brother of her husband, the gift was held valid and such as could not be impeached by the consenting brother.[2]

2531. Consent of Female Reversioner Immaterial.—In order to let in the operation of this rule, the consent must be of the next male reversioner, since females ordinarily take only a limited estate, and they cannot, by their consent, confer an absolute title which, by reason of their sex, they are themselves precluded from taking.[3] This exception applies equally to Bombay, irrespective of the rule that certain females take there an absolute estate.[4] But though the next female neversioner may not consent to a surrender to a remote reversioner, there is nothing to prevent her from joining the heiress in conveying the estate to her own son.[5]

2532. When Next Reversioner a Minor.—It would seem that when the next reversioner is a minor, his consent may be obtained through his guardian,[6] though, in this case, the minor, on attaining majority, may repudiate his guardian's consent.

2533. Alienation Otherwise Valid.—The rule here stated is only a rule of evidence, dispensing with the proof of legal necessity, where it may be presumed from the consent of the next reversioner. But where such consent fails, the transaction may, nevertheless, be good and be upheld by proof of legal necessity aliunde. And where it is good, apart from legal necessity, it will be upheld, even though the parties misunderstood their rights. So, where the widow and the mother of the last owner effected a partition, providing for the devolution of their estate, by inheritance on the natural brothers of the son whom the widow had adopted, and this deed was signed by the next reversioner, it was held that the deed was divisible into two parts—that which effected the division of the estate inter partes required no consent of the next reversioner and was, therefore, valid without their consent, but that which provided for the descent of the estate, in a line different from that prescribed by law, was a thing which the widow could not do either with or without the reversioner's consent, which, therefore, did not estop him, who could, therefore, recover on his title, as if he had never consented.[7]

---

(1) Rup Narain v. Gopal, 36 C. 780 (797) P.C.

(2) Basappa v. Fakirappa, 23 Bom.L. R. 1040; Babu Singh v. Rameshwar, 7 Luck. 360.

(3) Goolab Singh v. Puran Singh, 14 M.I.A. 176 (199); Madan Mohan v. Puran Mal, 6 A. 288; Nobo Kishore v. Hari Nath, 10 C. 1102; Abinash v. Hari Nath, 32 C. 62; Bepin Behari v. Durga Charan, 35 C. 1085 (1090); Waliul Hasan v. Gopal, 6 C.W.N. 905 (908).

(4) Varjiban v. Ghelji, 5 B. 563. Vinayak v. Govinda, 25 B. 129.

(5) Chinnaswami v. Appaswami, 42 M. 25.

(6) Waliul Hasan v. Gopal, 6 C.W. N. 905; Chandi v. Jangi, 8 O.C. 21; Bhogaraju v. Adapalli, 10 M.L.T. 179.

(7) Rup Narain v. Gopal, 36 C. 780 (797) P.C.

An alienation by a female heir, though not supportable as a surrender, may yet be held binding as a compromise of a claim[1] or as a family settlement. (S. 173.).

2534. Estoppel by Consent.—From the fact that consent is evidence of necessity, and even creates a presumption, it is clear that it is strong evidence against the consenting reversioners,[2] and it may amount to an estoppel against them and their legal representatives.[3] The widow entered into an arrangement with her three daughters and their sons, dividing her entire estate among them, and the three daughters acted up to this arrangement for 38 years, after which one of them sued the purchaser of the property from another, on the widow's death, by her right of survivorship. Her claim was decreed by the Subordinate Judge, but it was dismissed on appeal, both the High Court and the Privy Council holding the plaintiff bound by the family arrangement, to which she was a party and which she had not repudiated for so long.[4] A reversioner is not estopped by taking the mortgage of the property from the heiress's donee, since such mortgage is not inconsistent with his reversionary right. As the Privy Council said: "Now, at the time of the mortgage, the plaintiff did not know whether he would ever be such a reversioner in fact as would give him a practical interest to quarrel with the deed of gift. Why should he not take all that the mortgagors could give or propose to give? To hold that, by so doing, he barred himself from asserting his own title to part of what was mortgaged, seems to their Lordships a quite unwarranted proposition."[5] In another case, a transfer had been consented to by the then contingent, who afterwards became and claimed as the next reversioner. The transferee pleaded estoppel against him; but the Privy Council held that there was no estoppel, because the transferee must have known that the reversioner had then a mere expectancy and that his joining in the sale could not, therefore, have materially influenced either the vendor's or the vendee's conduct in the matter.[6] The case would, of course, have been different, if the party consenting were then the presumptive reversioner, in which case, not only he but his successors in title would have been bound.[7] So, again, the case is quite different where, on demise of the widow, the reversioner receives rent of a leasehold created by her, in which case, since the acceptance of rent is only compatible with affirmance of the lease, the reversioner cannot afterwards treat it as a nullity.[8]

2535. Equities on Avoidance.—Apart from estoppel, it is obviously equitable that where an alienation was made with the consent of the next reversioner, who received a substantial benefit from the transaction, it is not open to the reversioner or to his descendants to impugn the alienation while retaining the benefit.[9] So, again where a mortgagee, with possession from a widow, spent money in improving the property, and the reversioner

(1) Suressur v. Mohesh, 20 C.W.N. 142.

(2) Krishna v. Sambasiva, 11 I.C. 24; Mata Prasad v. Devi Sukhlain, 58 I.C. (A.) 576; Bhup Singh v. Jhumman Singh, 44 A. 95.

(3) Annagouda v. Bhausaheb, 52 B. 1 P.C.; Babu Singh v. Rameshwar, 7 Luck. 360: (1932) O. 90 (95).

(4) Haroli v. Bhagwan Singh, 50 I.C. (A.) 812 P.C.

(5) Rangaswami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 P.C.

(6) Gur Narain v. Sheo Lal, 46 C. 566 (579) P.C.; Parvati v. Dayabhai, 44 B. 488.

(7) Mahadeo v. Mata Prasad, 44 A. 44; Ramdhin v. Mathura Singh, 10 A. 407; Shib Chandra v. Dub Ken, 28 C.L.J. 123; Venkata Row v. Tuljaram, (1917) M.W.N. 80; Shanmugha v. Kayappa, (1920) M.W.N. 679.

(8) Jitan v. Bhagwan, 3 Pat.L.J. 780.

(9) Bhausaheb v. Ramgauda, 25 Bom. L.R. 813: (1923) B. 471.

sued for its recovery, on the death of the widow, the mortgagee was held entitled to remove what he had placed on the property, at his own expense.[1]

347. When an alienation made by an heiress is found to be partially supported by legal necessity or benefit and binding on the reversioner, it may be set aside or upheld in accordance with the rules laid down in section 135, or otherwise as hereinbefore provided.

Alienation for partial necessity.

2536. Analogous Law.—The High Courts had for some time disclosed a singular lack of unanimity on the effect of an alienation supported only by partial necessity, till the Privy Council, in 1926, reminded them of their own previous decision of 1874 and re-affirmed it overruling the arithmetical rule into which the courts in India had drifted by treating the validity of such alienation as one of ratio overlooking the other circumstances bearing upon it.[2] In that case, the widow had sold certain property for Rs. 3,500, out of which Rs. 3,000 was supported by legal necessity. On a review of the law on the subject, the Privy Council upheld the sale, holding that the sale, being substantially supported by legal necessity, could not be challenged merely because a small portion of the consideration was not proved to be supported by legal necessity. Their Lordships reiterated this view in another case in which the manager had sold the property for Rs. 43,500, even though the necessity extended to more than Rs. 38,000.[3] The question to be considered in such cases is not one of arithmetical calculation, the real question to be considered is whether the sale itself was justified by necessity, if the purchaser has acted honestly and made due enquiry as to the existence of necessity and whether, having regard to the character of the property, excessive sale could have been avoided. It would manifestly be impossible, and possibly prejudicial to the interest of the estate, if the widow were to be held bound, in every instance, to sell property for exactly the sum required for necessity.[4] So, where the widow permanently leased a tank for a premium of Rs. 174, reserving the annual rent of 8 annas only, to pay off the debt of Rs. 100, the court upheld the lease, holding it was supported by necessity.[5] Even where the necessity did not exceed Rs. 7,775, the court upheld the sale of a house for Rs. 19,500, on the ground that it was not saleable piecemeal.[6] Again, proof that the bulk of the alienation was supported by legal necessity may be evidence that the remainder was also presumably so supported. A mere failure to prove any part of the consideration as supported by necessity, is not necessarily tantamount to proof that it was unsupported by it.[7]

---

(1) Siddappa v. Pandurang, 47 B. 696.

(2) (1926) reported in 1927. Sri Krishen Das v. Nathu Ram, 49 A. 149 P.C., following Masitullah v. Damodar Prasad, 48 A. 518 P.C.; Medal Delavoi v. Nainar Tevan, 27 C.W.N. 365 P.C., overruling contra in Govind Singh v. Baldeo Singh, 25 A. 330; Ram Dei Kunwar v. Alen Jafar, 27 A. 494, followed in Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal, (1927) P.C. 121.

(3) Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal, (1927) P.C. 121.

(4) Vithu v. Mendri, 5 N.L.R. 172 (176).

(5) Felaram v. Bagalanand, 14 C.W.N. 895: 6 I.C. 207.

(6) Balkrishna v. Hiralal, 41 A. 338; Gokaran v. Sham Lal, 3 L. 426, following Chatranarayan v. Uba Kunwari, 1 B.L.R. 201; Felaram v. Bagalanand, 6 I.C. (L.) 207; Naman Kal v. Har Bhagwan, 2 L. 357; Kannu v. Amirthammal, 26 I.C. (M.) 418.

(7) Jai Singh v. Darbara Singh, 6 L. 137 (Three-fourths supported by legal necessity and transfer challenged after 20 years).

Case for Terms.

2537. A case for terms may arise under section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act, to which reference must be made for further information.[1] It may also arise where the alienee, whether purchaser or not, has advanced money which, though supported by necessity, has been alienated for a grossly inadequate consideration or the transaction cannot be upheld or set aside without awarding compensation. The cases on the point present infinite variety, and though they cannot all be reduced to a principle, they are, nevertheless, all intended to thwart transparent injustice.

---

(1) See 1 Gour's Law of Transfer, (5th Ed.), §§ 892-914.

CHAPTER XXVI.

REVERSIONERS AND THEIR RIGHTS.

2538. Topical Introduction.—Under the English Law of Real Property, "a reversion is where the residue of the estate always doth continue in him that made the particular estate, or where the particular estate is derived out of the estate."[1] It is so called because the land returns to the grantor on the determination of the particular estate. So, if an estate in fee simple be granted to A for life, and the remainder to B, the estate of A is the estate in possession and is called the "particular estate,"[2] and B's estate is called a "remainder."[3] But if the grant be to A for life, with no subsequent estate to another, the latter continues in the grantor and is called a reversion.[4] The ultimate estate is always an estate in fee simple, and is called a remainder or reversion, as it is granted out or continues in the grantor.[5]

2539. The term "reversioner" is born of Anglo-Indian law. It is not to be found in the Sanskrit texts. The term owes its origin to the close similarity between the rights of a Hindu reversioner and those of the English reversioner or remainderman. Even the Hindu widow was, at one time, spoken of as a life-tenant; but it was soon perceived that she was not a tenant but the owner, and her estate, not a tenancy, because there was no one else in whom the ownership could vest on her estate coming into being. The only person in whom the estate could possibly vest is the reversioner, but his estate was not a vested interest at all, but a mere contingency, and that, therefore, full ownership must remain in the widow whose estate was one of complete ownership qualified by use. These qualifications were partly necessitated by reason of her sex and her presumed incapacity to exercise all the rights of ownership, and partly by a feeling that the natural course of devolution of property was in the male line, and that females, though allowed to come in, did so by sufferance, on whose death the succession should revert to the natural line from which it had become diverted into the female line. This is the doctrine of reverter referred to by the Privy Council,[6] and it explains both the term reversioners as also their rights.

2540. The female heiress being the owner of her inheritance and the reversioner having nothing but a spes successionis, this chapter deals with the extent of that interest and of the protective equity to which it is held entitled. The right of the reversioner to protect his reversion is now beyond dispute, but it is a right necessarily limited and should not be extended beyond the necessities of the case. The cases have defined with some particularity, its nature, and scope.

2541. The woman's estate acquired by inheritance or partition being thus limited, those interested in the reversion become naturally interested

(1) Co. Litt., 22 (b).
(2) Ib., 143 (a).
(3) Ib., 49 (a).
(4) Ib., 22 (b).
(5) Fearne's Contingent Remainders (9th Ed.), p. 3, note (4); 24 Hals. § 403.
(6) Sheo Partab v. Allahabad Bank, 25 A. 476 (489) P.C.

in the estate, and it is clear that they are entitled to some protective equity during the continuance of the life-estate, as they are entitled to the definition of their right upon its determination.

348. Reversioner is a person (whether a male or a female) who is entitled to inherit an estate on determination of the intervening life-estate vested in a female heir to the full owner last deceased.

Reversioner defined.

2542. Who is a Reversioner.—The term "reversioner" is directly borrowed from the English Law of Real Property, under which the fee simple tenant granting a life-estate retains its reversion or return to himself.[1] Under Hindu law, a woman is merely an impediment in the natural law of succession. Except in the case of stridhan and certain female heirs in the Bombay Presidency,[2] a woman inheriting to a male takes only a life-estate, and on her death succession reverts to the natural heirs of the owner as if the owner had just then died. Till then, the inheritance is regarded as in suspense, and real inheritance takes effect only on the determination of such estate. It will be seen, that so long as such estates intervene the reversioner has no estate at all, but a mere spes successionis, a mere possibility or hope of succession which ripens into a vested estate on the determination of the intervening estate by the death, surrender or re-marriage of the female heir, if her re-marriage entails forfeiture of her estate.

All such heirs, near or remote, of the deceased full owner, are, during the period of their suspense, called reversioners, the one nearest to him in the line of heirs being his presumptive nearest or next reversioner, others who would inherit on failure of the next reversioner being merely presumable or remote reversioner.

2543. Reversioner's Title.—The reversioner, suing for possession has, in the first instance, to prove his title. This does not mean that he must categorically disprove the existence of all possible heirs, for such a thing would, in many cases, be impossible. All that he can be expected to prove, and must prove, is that, to the best of his knowledge, there are no nearer heirs. It is then for those who claim on the ground of nearer kinship, to come forward and establish their relationship.[3]

349. (1) So long as the estate is vested in the heiress, the interest of her reversioners to succeed to it is a mere spes successionis and is incapable of being the subject of any contract, surrender or disposal.[4]

Reversioner's interest.

(2) One reversioner does not derive his title from another but all derive their title equally from the last full owner.[5]

2544. Analogous Law.—In proving his status as next reversioner, he has to prove two propositions, one positive, and another negative. The first that he is a reversioner and the second that there is no one nearer to him. This he can only prove reasonably, because it is impossible to prove an absolute negative.[6]

---

(1) Lat. revertor re back verto to turn —turning back coming back, return.
(2) S. 326 ante.
(3) Javitri v. Gendan Singh, 25 A.L.J. 500: 102 I.C. 167.
(4) Amrit Narayan v. Gaya Singh, 45 C. 590 (603) P.C.
(5) See § 2550.
(6) Raghunath v. Kamsalya, (1937) M. 607 (608).

2545. From the fact that the heiress takes a full estate, though her interest is qualified, it follows that the estate vests in her for the time being,[1] and that the heirs expectant on her demise have no vested interest but merely a hope of succession.[2] This interest is a mere chance dependent upon their being alive at her death. As such, it is not property and possesses none of its attributes. It cannot be transferred[3] or be the subject of any contract or devise.

As the Privy Council observed: "A Hindu reversioner has no right or interest in praesenti in the property which the female owner holds for her life. Until it vests in him on her death, should he survive her, he has nothing to assign or to relinquish or even to transmit to his heirs. His right becomes concrete only on her demise; until then it is a mere spes successionis. His guardian, if he happened to be a minor, cannot bargain with it on his behalf or bind him by any contractual engagement in respect thereto,"[4] from which it necessarily follows, that he cannot, by the surrender of his expectancy is favour of the life-tenant, block out the interests of any who might, at the date of the widow's death, be the next reversioner,[5] though he would be himself personally estopped by his conduct, and be bound by his previous act, if he turns out to be the next reversioner when the succession opens.[6] But a person, consenting to a surrender as reversioner to A, may challenge it as reversioner to B. Such was the case of one Motilal who had consented to the surrender of his uncle Sashi Mohan's estate by the latter's mother, which he afterwards challenged as reversioner to Sashi Mohan's two brothers, since deceased.[7] It is thus clear that where the reversioner is a minor, his guardian cannot enter into any binding agreement with respect to his reversion on his behalf. But if the reversioner is adult and contracts with reference to his future rights, his contract would be indistinguishable from any other contract relating to future property, and though there cannot be a disposal of a non-existent property, there is nothing to prevent its being made the subject of a valid contract, though, being a contract relating to a contingency, it has to be closely watched.

2546. So, where the widow entered into an arrangement with the nearest reversioner for the time being, by which she conveyed part of her widow's estate to the reversioner, and he, in turn, purported to give her an absolute estate in the remainder, it was held to be an arrangement

---

(1) Janaki v. Narayanasami, 39 M. 634 (637) P.C.; Sham Sundar v. Achhankuar, 21 A. 71 P.C.

(2) Nund Kishore v. Ram Tewary, 29 C. 355 P.C.; Janaki v. Narayanasami, 39 M. 634 (637) P.C.; Manickam v. Ramalinga, 29 M. 120; Chiruvolu v. Chiruvolu, 29 M. 390 (399); Muthuveeru v. Vythilinga, 32 M. 206; Bhogaraju v. Adepalli, 35 M. 560; Jagannath v. Dibho, 31 A. 53; Hargawan v. Baijnath, 32 A. 88; Gumanan v. Jehangira, 40 A. 518; Parvati v. Govind, 13 N.L.R. 188: 42 I. C. 837.

(3) S. 6 (a), Transfer of Property Act; Nund Kishore v. Kanee Ram, 29 C. 355; Amrit Narain v. Gayasingh, 45 C. 590 P.C.; Manickam v. Ramalinga, 29 M. 120; Pindiprolu v. Pindiprolu, 30 M. 486 (489); Ramaswami v. Ramaswami, 30 M. 255 (262, 263); Midnapore Zemindari Co. v. Appayasami, 41 M. 749 (776, 777); contra in Rychurn v. Peary Monee, Marsh 622, is no longer sound.

(4) Amrit Narayan v. Gaya Singh, 45 C. 590 (603) P.C.; Ananda v. Gour Mohan, 48 C. 536; Bhagwati v. Jardan, 2 Pat.L.J. 471; 62 I.C. 933.

(5) Ganga Bai v. Hari, 45 B. 1167 (1169).

(6) Shunmugha v. Koveppa, (1920) M.W.N. 679: 60 I.C. 635.

(7) Motilal v. Eastern Mortgage, etc., Co., 61 I.C. 486 (487) P.C.: 25 C.W.N. 265.

which did not bind the actual reversioner.[1] The reversioner has nothing to renounce[2] and nothing that could be seized in execution of a decree against him.[3] In case of insolvency, it is not his property which could be made available to his creditors,[4] and an agreement amongst presumptive reversioners to divide it when it fell in, would at least be an agreement to divide future property, which will convey no title, in praesenti,[5] though, being an agreement, it might be specifically enforced upon the estate becoming vested in the reversioner. So, where the owner died, leaving his estate to his widow B, who devised it to her daughter C, who, in her turn, devised it to her husband D. On B's death, her reversioner E claimed the estate, but subsequently compromised his claim with D, by which D gave certain lands to E in consideration of E's withdrawing his claim to the rest of the property. On a suit by B's mortgagee against D, the question arose whether D was a legatee or assignee of the reversion. In the former case, he would take subject to the mortgage. In the latter, he would not take any rights. It was held that D's compromise with E may amount to E's waiver of his reversionary right, but it could not amount to an assignment clothing D with the status of a reversioner, and that, therefore, D could not dispute the validity of B's mortgage on the ground of legal necessity.[6]

2547. So, in another case, on the death of a widow, disputes having arisen between the husband's agnate and the daughter as to the latter's right to succeed to her mother, the question was referred to arbitrators, before whom the daughter's husband, purporting to act as well for her as for her infant son A, came to an agreement with the agnates, by which some movable property and two small fractional shares of certain lands, which stood in her and her mother's name, were given to her, and all right to the immovable property of her father was abandoned in favour of the agnates. Her infant son was absolutely ignored in the compromise. The arbitrators passed an award on the basis of this compromise, and later on, a decree was passed upon the basis of the award in spite of the daughter's opposition. In a suit by A, inter alia for a declaration that the compromise did not bind him, it was held that the bargaining of the reversionary interest of A, in the guise of an arbitration, was ineffective and null and void; that even if A had an existing right in the property, his father had no power to enter into an arrangement which wiped out all the interest of the minor without consideration; and that as the conditions which make a decree against a Hindu widow binding on the estate, were wanting in this case, the decree against A's mother did not bind him.[7]

2548. But here the reversioner was a minor, and reference to arbitration on his behalf a subterfuge to divide the estate. But if the rever-

(1) Meenatchi v. Rajam, 11 M.L.J. 335.

(2) Dhoorjeti v. Dhoorjeti, 30 M. 201; Amrit Narayan v. Gaya Singh, 45 C. 590 (603) P.C.

(3) S. 90 (m), C. P. C. In Chidambaramma v. Hussainamma, 39 M. 565, it was held that sale for her husband's debts, made against the widow, binds the reversionary interest; but it does not justify its seizure and sale as such.

(4) S. 2 (e), Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907); S. 52, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909); Babu v. Krishnarav, 21 B. 319.

(5) Amrit Narayan v. Gaya Singh, 45 C. 590 P.C.

(6) Ramaswami v. Ramaswami, 30 M. 255 (262, 263); Pindiprolu v. Pindiprolu, 30 M. 486 (492); Midnapore Zemindari Co. v. Appayaswami, 41 M. 743 (776, 777).

(7) Ram Shankar v. Ganesh, 29 A. 451 (455, 456), following Mewa Kunwar v. Hulas Kunwar, L.R. 1 A. 157 (166); Gobind v. Abdul Qayyan, 25 A. 546 (575); Bache v. Dharam Das, 28 A. 352.

sioner is an adult and contracts with reference to his future rights, his contract would be indistinguishable from any other contract relating to future property, and though there cannot be a disposal of non-existent property, there is nothing to prevent its being made the subject of a valid contract, though, being a contract relating to a contingency, it has to be closely watched.

2549. But in another case, the compromise related to an impartible estate. The owner had bequeathed it absolutely to his widow, whom his reversioner sued for possession, on the ground that the will was invalid, but compromised his suit with the widow acknowledging her as the "gaddinashin" for her life, and on her death, the estate should fall on the reversioner or any of his representatives then alive. The reversioner predeceased the widow, and his own widow sued for possession of the estate on the strength of the compromise, which the court decreed, though no attempt was made to distinguish its earlier cases.[1] But the decision was apparently based on the rule that a compromise of a disputed claim bound the parties and their representatives. In other words, while a reversionary right cannot be transferred, surrendered or renounced, it is an interest which may support a compromise. This was the ratio decidendi of another case, in which the court upheld a similar compromise, on the ground that it amounted to an arrangement which is not the transfer of an expectancy prohibited by S. 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, but the settlement by parties litigating on doubtful rights, in which the parties define their respective interests, and which the courts upheld for the sake of preserving the peace of families.[2] But the case is different, where the effect of the reversioner's compromise of his suit with the widow was to settle the succession for the future, which the court could not uphold. Such was the case of the plaintiff, a remote reversioner who, having sued the widow and her daughter for possession of the estate, on the ground of waste, compromised his suit with them, it being agreed that the widow was to retain the estate for life, and on her death, the plaintiff and the daughter were to divide it equally. Subsequently to this compromise, the widow and the daughter made a gift of the entire estate to the daughter's son, whereupon the plaintiff sued them to avoid the gift made in contravention of the compromise, which, he maintained, amounted to a family settlement binding upon all reversioners, but the court threw out his suit, holding that the plaintiff could not, in the guise of a compromise, settle the succession, and that as the two females were entitled to surrender their limited estates to the next reversioner, their gift to him had the effect of accelerating his succession, which could not be avoided by the plaintiff.[3]

Clause (2).

2550. Reversioner's Title.—It is settled law that one reversioner does not derive title from another but from the last full owner,[4] so that, strictly speaking, he is

(1) Harpal Singh v. Lekhraj, 30 A. 406.

(2) Olati v. Varadarajulu, 31 M. 474; Hardei v. Bhagwan Singh, 50 I.C. (A.) 812 P.C.

(3) Sita Bai v. Ram Deo, 57 I.C. (A.) 712.

(4) Chhidu v. Durga, 9 M.I.A. 543; Jumoona v. Bamasoonderi, 1 C. 289 P.C.; Ishri Datt v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 324 P.C.; Bhagwanta v. Sukhi, 22 A. 33 P.B.; Chhidu v. Durga, ib. 382; Shib Shankar v. Soni Ram, 32 A. 33 (41), affirmed O.A. Soni Ram v. Kanhaya Lal, 35 A. 227 P.C.; Chhidu Singh v. Durga Dei, 32 A. 382; Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh, 40 A. 593 P.C.; Sakyabani v. Bhavani, 27 M. 588; Govinda v. Thayammal, 28 M. 57; Chiruvolu v. Chiruvolu, 29 M. 390 (408) F.B.; Chinnaveerayya v. Lakshmi, 22 M.L.J. 375; Abinash v. Hari Nath, 32 C. 62 (71); Manokarni v.

not bound by any representation made by, or any adjudication had between, the last limited owner, and one reversioner and another,[1] though, on the last point, the courts have extended the principle of res judicata as equally extending to the reversioner, but as pointed out before, it is so on the ground of public convenience. But the same rule cannot apply to admissions, as to which the Privy Council observed: "According to Indian law, the claimants of 1847 were but expectant heirs, with a spes successionis. The appellants claim is their own right as heirs of Mohar when the succession opened, and it would be a novel proposition to hold that a person so claiming is bound by contracts made by every person through whom he traces his descent."[2] Reversioners do not even derive their title through their parents, and any statement made by the latter is not, therefore, admissible against them.[3] "There is no privity of estate between one reversioner and another, as such, and, therefore, an act or omission by one reversioner cannot bind another reversioner who does not claim through him."[4] Consequently, the fact that one has consented to an alienation by the heiress, does not estop another from contesting it.

But, in Madras, it has been held that the daughter's sons inherit jointly, under the ordinary law of inheritance, with the right of survivorship so that there is the right of representation inter se.[5]

A reversioner (though not presumptive) has been held entitled to redeem property sold in execution of a decree against the female heir as provided in Or. XXI, R. 89 of the Code of Civil Procedure.[6] But the same laxity is not permissible in one claiming estate, since it is incumbent on a plaintiff, seeking to succeed to property as a reversioner, affirmatively to establish the particular relationship which he puts forward, and he is also bound to satisfy the court that, to the best of his knowledge, there are no nearer heirs, but he cannot be expected to do anything more, and it is for those who claim that their kinship is nearer, to prove their relationship.[7]

2551. Limits of His Rights.—The act which entitles the reversioner to sue, must be an act which endangers the reversion directly and immediately, and not indirectly and remotely.

As already stated, an act in the nature of a preparation does not give the reversioner the right to sue. So, it has been held that a reversioner cannot sue for a declaration that an authority to adopt given by the husband is forged,[8] or that a will made by the heiress bequeathing her estate to certain persons, purporting to be in pursuance of an oral direction given

---

Haripada, 18 C.W.N. 718 P.C.; Govinda v. Thayammal, 28 M. 57; Veerayya v. Gangamma, 36 M. 570 contra Chhagan Ram v. Motigavri, 14 B. 572, overruled by the contrary held by the Privy Council.

(1) S. 43, Specific Relief Act; Venkatanarayana v. Subbammal, 38 M. 406 (411, 412) P.C.

(2) Bahadur Singh v. Mohar Singh, 22 A. 95 (107, 108).

(3) Manokarni v. Haripada, 18 C.W.N. 718 P.C., 24 I.C. 311; Govinda v. Thayammal, 28 M. 57; Veerayya v. Gangamma, 36 M. 570.

(4) Govinda v. Thayammal, 28 M. 57 (60, 61).

(5) Krishnier v. Lakshmiammal, 18 M. L.J. 275, following Venkayyamma v. Venkata, 25 M. 678 P.C., explained in Veerayya v. Gangamma, 36 M. 570 (573, 574).

(6) Pankhabati v. Nonihal Singh, 18 C.W.N. 778: 21 I.C. 207; Brij Kishore v. Pratap Narain, 4 Pat.L.J. 369: 51 I. C. 359.

(7) S. 3, Evidence Act; Javitri v. Genden Singh, 48 A. 779; Badri v. Saraswati, 103 I.C. 329: (1927) A. 687; Rama Row v. Kuttiya, 40 M. 654, followed in Pandu v. Abdul Kadar, 56 I. C. (N.) 693 (695).

(8) Sreepada v. Sreepada, 35 M. 592, contra in Bobha v. Bobha, 35 M.L.J. 144, followed in Surayya v. Annapurnamma, 42 M. 699.

by her husband, is invalid,[1] since such a will might be cancelled by her at any time. But, though this was conceded,[2] the Privy Council did not reverse the decisions of the two courts below, concurrently made in the deliberate exercise of a discretion entrusted to them by law. But such cases illustrate the practice of the Privy Council. They do not affect the rule.

2552. Estoppel of Reversioner.—But though the reversioner cannot contract or compromise his right, and no right accrues by reason of such contract or compromise, it may create an estoppel, which may preclude the reversioner from making a claim by reason of his contract or compromise, and if he was a party to a bona fide family arrangement, it may not only bind him, but also his heirs.[3] Here the right arises not by reason of the contract, but by reason of the family arrangement or estoppel, the principle of which is one of universal application (S. 176). So, where a person (A) governed by the Mitakshara, died leaving a widow and a daughter surviving her. The widow's right to succeed was disputed by the widows of his predeceased brothers and by the plaintiff Kanhailal, his sister's son, who claimed to have been adopted by one of those widows to her deceased husband. In 1892, a compromise, to which all the four ladies and the plaintiff were parties, was made under which all the ladies took each a fourth of the estate. The plaintiff took nothing immediately, but his adoption and his right to succeed to his mother were recognised, whose share he later os acquired by relinquishment. Then A's daughter died, leaving a daughter of her own, and later still, A's widow died. The plaintiff and his brother Ramsarup claimed, as next reversioners, the whole of A's property allotted to the three ladies, other than his own mother, by the compromise. His suit was dismissed by the courts in India, but he pressed his claim on the ground that his reversionary right could not be the subject of a valid compromise. But their Lordships threw out his appeal, holding the plaintiff estopped by his own act in 1892 in inducing the ladies to a compromise, in which his mother, and by her relinquishment, he himself, obtained a fourth of the estate, and secured from them the recognition of his adoption.[4] In another case, the widow had executed three deeds on the same day, by one of which she gifted certain properties to her brother; by another she sold half of certain lands to one Annagowda (A) who was then her next reversioner, the other half of these lands being sold to her own son-in-law. On her death, he became her next reversioner and survived her by six years, but did not question her alienations to her own relations. On his death, however, his son and grandson sued to dispossess the alienees, but both the High Court and the Privy Council threw out their suit, holding that the three transactions must be treated as parts of the same arrangement and the two transfers must, therefore, be presumed to have been made with A's consent by which his heirs were bound.[5] It has been held in other cases that there was nothing in law to prevent a Hindu widow in possession making a valid gift of the estate with the consent of a reversioner who

(1) Umrao v. Badri, 37 A. 422; Ram Bhajan v. Gurucharan, 1 A.L.J. 468.

(2) Jaipal v. Indar Bahadur, 26 A. 238 (243) P.C.

(3) See Ch. on "Family Arrangements."

(4) Kanhai Lal v. Brij Lal, 40 A. 487 P.C., distinguishing Somsuddin v. Abdul Hussein, 31 B. 165. To the same effect, Shunmugha v. Koyappa, (1920) M.W.N. 679: 60 I.C. 635; Mahadeo v. Mata Prasad, 44 A. 44; Fateh Singh v. Thakur Rukmini, 45 A. 339 F.B.; Mati Shah v. Gandharp Singh, 48 A. 637, distinguishing Ananda Mohan v. Gour Mohan, 48 C. 536.

(5) Ramagowda v. Bhausaheb, 52 B. 1 P.C.

would be personally bound by his act,[1] though other reversioners remained free to question it.[2] In one case, it was held that in the case of a compromise, in which the reversioner takes part and from which he receives some bentfit is exceptional, the doctrine of estoppel could not be extended to compel the reversioner to make good his transfer on his subsequently coming into possession of the property, because "the principle plainly has no application where the contract of assignment refers to property which has been expressly rendered inalienable by the Legislature."[3] But this view appears to be erroneous, because the Legislature has not made the property inalienable, but declared it inalienable by one who has no interest therein beyond a mere contingency. If, therefore, the principle underlying S. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act is inapplicable, it is not because the property is inalienable but because the reversioner's erroneous representation of his authority to transfer such property is futile, since the transferee must know that he has no interest therein beyond a mere possibility of succession and that such possibility cannot be transferred. It, therefore, follows that a contract of transfer it in futuro is equally void and unenforceable, though it may give the party wronged a right to compensation.

2553. Spes Successionis.—A mere spes successionis cannot be transferred. Such is the chance of an expectant reversionary heir to an estate in possession of a female heiress. Even under the English Law, a mere chance of succeeding to an estate was a bare possibility incapable of assignment[4] though equity would enforce a contract to convey the estate when it fell in.[5] But the Privy Council have held "that the principle of English Law which allows a subsequently acquired interest to feed, as it is said, the estoppel, does not apply to Hindu conveyances."[6] It is equally clear that the same rule would hold good in cases governed by S. 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, since that clause prohibits the sale of a chance directly, it equally prohibits its sale circuitously and moreover such a contract, if permitted, would defeat the law, namely, S. 6 (a), and would, therefore, be illegal within the meaning of S. 23 of the Contract Act. The result then is that such expectancies can neither be sold[7] nor their sale contracted for.[8]

Clause (2).

No declaration by reversioner of his rights.

350. A reversioner cannot maintain a suit merely to obtain a declaration of his reversionary rights.[9]

(1) Diveah v. Koond Luta, 4 M.I.A. 292; Hoolab Singh v. Kurum Singh, 14 M.I.A. 176; Bullubh Sen v. Omesh Chunder, 5 C. 44; Sia Dasi v. Gur Sahai, 3 A. 362, cited and followed in Ramadhin v. Mathura, 10 A. 407 (410); Rangaswami v. Nachiappa, 42 M. 523 (538) P. C.; Binda Kuar v. Lalita Prasad, (1936) P.C. 304.

(2) Ramphal v. Tulakuari, 6 A. 116; Bakhtawar v. Bhagwana, 32 A. 176.

(3) Anandi Mohan v. Gour Mohan, 48 C. 536; Jotilal v. Benimadho, (1937) Pat. 280.

(4) Jones v. Roe, 3 T.R. 88 (93): 100 E.R. 470; In re Parsons. Stockley v. Parsons, 45 Ch. D. 51.

(5) Wiseman v. Roper, 1 Ch. R. 158; Wethered v. Wethered, 2 Sm. 183: 57 E. R. 757; Lyde v. Mynn, 1 Myl. & K. 683: 39 E.R. 839; contra, per Lord Eldon, in Carleton v. Leighton, 3 Mer. 667: 36 E. R. 255; Harwood v. Tooks, 2 Sim. 192: 57 E.R. 761.

(6) Doolichund v. Brojo Bhookun, 6 C.L.R. 528 (532, 533) P.C. s. c., 10 C.L.R. 61 P.C., cited and followed in Ram Nirunjun v. Prayag, 8 C. 138 (144).

(7) Dhoorjeti v. Dhoorjeti, 30 M. 201.

(8) Sham Sundar v. Acchan Kunwar, 21 A. 71 (79, 80) (P.C.); Sumsuddin v. Abdul, 31 B. 165; Dhoorjeti v. Dhoorjeti, 30 M. 201; Kokaralapudi v. Kannukuri, 28 M.L.J. 660: 39 I.C. 241 contra Gitabai v. Balaji, 17 B. 232 (decided before the Transfer of Property Act was extended to Bombay); Nasirul Haq v. Fyazul Rahman, 33 A. 457; Ram Nirunjun v. Prayag, 8 C. 138.

(9) Janaki v. Narayanasami, 39 M. 634 P.C.; Sheoparsan v. Ramnadhan, 43 C. 694 P.C.

2554. Analogous Law.—Since a reversionary right is a mere contingency, it follows that a reversioner cannot sue for a declaration of his contingency, that is to say, sue that he would be entitled to succeed the heiress in case he should survive her,—a contingency which may never happen and about which the courts will, therefore, entertain no suit. In one case, the presumptive reversioner sued to restrain waste, failing which he applied for the declaration of his right as such reversioner, but the Privy Council threw out his suit, holding "that it was impossible to predicate at this moment who is the next reversionary heir of the deceased proprietor. If a court of a law proceeded to make any declaration of right upon that subject, such a declaration would be subject to being rendered valueless by the development of events. It would not, after events had developed, be even of authority in regulating or declaring the rights of the present respondents as against any other claimant to the character of reversionary heir. Accordingly, a declaration of right, granted at the present state, would appear to be stamped with something in the nature of futility."[1] But, though a reversioner is not entitled to establish his own status as a reversion, there is nothing to prevent his establishing his relationship to the last owner if it is challenged. And as will be presently seen, he is entitled to restrain waste.

Prevention of waste improper act and alienation.

351 (1) Subject to the provisions of the next section, the presumptive reversioner is entitled to restrain the heiress, or her alienee from committing waste or any other act endangering the reversion,[2] and such right may be exercised by a contingent reversioner if the act complained of is alleged to have been done in collusion with the presumptive reversioner.[3]

(2) And he may restrain her by an injunction from making an improper alienation and obtain a declaration that any alienation made by her would be voidable by him on her death;[4]

(3) He may obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption prejudicing his reversion is invalid or never in fact took place;[5]

(4) He may oppose the grant of probate to the limited owner if prejudicial to the reversion.[6]

2555. Analogous Law.—The principle of this section has received statutory recognition in illustrations to cls. (e) and (f) of the Specific Relief Act.[7] The right of the reversioner to restrain waste is not a personal right nor is his suit a personal suit, which he is entitled to maintain as the presupmtive reversioner. As observed by the Privy Council: "A reversionary heir, although having only those contingent interests which are differentiated little, if at all, from a spes successionis, is recognized by the court of Law as having a right to demand that the estate

(1) Janaki v. Narayanasami, 39 M. 634 (637, 638) P.C. To the same effect, Sheo Parsan v. Ramnadhan, 43 C. 694 (705) P.C.; Kathama Nachiar v. Dorasinga, 6 M.H.C.R. 310, affirmed O.A. 23 W.R. 314 (322) P.C., followed; Parvati v. Govind, 13 N.L.R. 187: 42 I. C. 337; Mankuar v. Lachman, (1886) A. W.N. 244; contra in Manmatha v. Rohilli, 27 A. 408; Udu v. Durgadin, 5 O.C. 360, must be treated as overruled by the Privy Council.

(2) Janaki v. Narayanasami, 39 M. 634.

(3) Anand Kunwar v. Court of Wards, 6 C. 764 P.C.

(4) S. 42, Ill. (d), (e), Sp. Relief Act; Suraj Mal v. Nathwa, 45 A. 255.

(5) S. 42, Ill (f), Sp. Relief Act; Venkatanarayana v. Subbammal, 38 M. 406 P.C.

(6) Khettramoni v. Shyama Churene, 21 C. 539.

(7) Obala v. Kandasami, 47 M. 181 (189) P.C.

be kept free from waste and free from danger during its enjoyment by the widow or other owner for life. But the reversionary heir thus appealing to the court, truly for the conservation and just administration of the property, does so in a representative capacity, so that the corpus of the estate may pass unimpaired to those entitled to the reversion . . . . This representation is in law founded upon a different set of considerations from those which would seek to stamp the character of reversionary heir upon one individual. The latter operation, attempted during the enjoyment of the life-estates, would necessarily be premature, and might, as stated, be futile. The former is justified by the considerations of keeping the estate intact for the persons to whom, as reversioners, it shall ultimately, and at the proper time, be determined that the estate shall go."[1]

It is thus settled that the reversioner's suit is a representative suit, and even as such, it is permitted, because the waste committed might otherwise be past remedy, and as regards an improper alienation, all evidence might disappear if a suit were only permitted when the succession opened. As the Privy Council observed in another case: "Suits of that kind form a very special class, and have been entertained by the courts ex necessitatie rei. It seems, however, to their Lordships that if such a suit as that is brought, it must be brought by the reversioner with that object, and for that purpose alone, and that the question to be discussed is solely between him and the widow, that he cannot, by bringing such a suit, get, as between him and a third party, an adjudication of title which he could not get without it."[2]

Clause (1).

2556. Waste.—It is not every waste that the reversioner may sue to restrain. As previously remarked, the heiress does not hold the estate in trust for him. She holds it in her own right, subject only to the rights of the reversioner. What those rights are, have by now become well settled, and the general principle was thus stated by the Privy Council: "It is not sufficient to say that there is one person entitled in possession, and another entitled in remainder, in order to induce the court to interfere to take the property out of the hands of the individual who is in possession of it; but it is necessary to show that there is danger to the property, from the mode in which the party in possession is dealing with it, in which case, and in such case only, the court will interfere."[3] In an old case, Peel, C. J., said: "The Hindu female is rather in the position of an heir taking by descent, until a contingency happens. . . . Therefore, a bill filed by the presumptive heir in succession, against the immediate owner who has succeeded by inheritance, must show some case approaching to spoliation, which must enable the court to see that there is probable ground for apprehending that unless an injunction be granted to restrain some threatened or a pending act, ultimate loss to the heirs, who may come into possession by a succession, will ensue. It is not enough to make out that some gift has been made, or some disposition taken place, or that such is about to be made or to take place, which the law would not support. The estate of the female owner, her own personal estate might be large and adequate to repay ten times over the alleged spoliation, and there might not be the remotest prospect of loss, and the thing alienated might have no specific peculiar value."[4]

(1) Janaki v. Narayanaswami, 39 M. 634 (637, 638) P.C.

(2) Kathama Nachiar v. Dorasingha, L.R. 2 I.A. 169 (191), cited in Sheo Parsan v. Ramnadhan, 43 C. 694 (705) P.C.

(3) Hurryydoss v. Upoornath, 6 M.I.A. 433.

(4) Hurrydoss v. Dossee, 2 Tay. & B. 279 (287): 2 I.D. (O.S.) 744 (749).

So, in an old case, the Privy Council formulated the following rules as applicable to limited owners: "That when the husband dies intestate and without issue, the widow is entitled to the absolute possession of the property descended from him, to enjoy it during her lifetime, and to dispose of it under certain restriction, that the extent and limit of her power of disposing of the property are not definable in the abstract, but must be left to depend upon the circumstances of the disposition when made, and must be consistent with the law regulating such disposition. That there is no distinction in this respect between the movable and immovable property descended."[1]

2557. The term "waste," as used in this connexion, must, then, be understood to mean spoliation, or such damage as endangers the inheritance. The reversioner has no right to rush into court upon a mere possibility. So, where the widow had received Rs. 55,466 in the Company's 5 per cent. rupee paper, which they redeemed at par, paying to the widow the amount in cash, which she retained for about three months awaiting an advantageous investment, whereupon the reversioner rushed into court with an allegation that the widow intended to misappropriate the amount, upon which the widow denied that the reversioner had any cause of action. The latter, however, argued that it was an ordinary quia timet suit, and the Privy Council held that the mere retention of money did not make the heiress guilty of devastavit or showed the slightest intention of committing waste, and that, therefore, the reversioner's suit was rightly thrown out.[2] But the case was held to be different where, upon acquisition of land, the widow withdrew the compensation awarded in respect thereof, under the pretence of absolute ownership, which she would not have been allowed, if she had disclosed her limited title. The court, thereupon, ordered her to invest the money as required by S. 32 of the Land Acquisition Act.[3] The two classes of cases are distinguishable. She had the right to the money in the one case, which she had not in the other. Where she has the right, "the general apprehension of danger that, if personal property be entrusted to a Hindu widow, there is every probability of its being parted with, and if so, it may not be recovered, is an element which cannot be allowed to exist or considered consistently with the views of the Privy Council case last cited.[4] The danger must be established, not as a matter of probable speculation, but as one of reasonable certainty to the satisfaction of the court.[5] It must be remembered that the reversioner is merely entitled to his reversion, in whatever state he finds it. The heiress is not the guarantor of its state or condition. As owner, she is entitled to make full beneficial use of it, by opening mines and working them,[6] and tapping other new sources of income. She is not to be deterred from any compassionate regard to the rights of her successor, from making full use of her property. Nor can the successor complain of its deterioration as waste, or its exhaustion as a danger to his reversion, since both these contingencies are fully consistent with the prudent exercise of the rights of ownership.

---

(1) Per Lord Gifford in Cossinauth v. Hurrosoondery, Morton 85: 1 I.D. (O.S.) 945.

(2) Hurry Doss v. Upoornath, 6 M.I.A. 433 (447).

(3) Mrinalini v. Abinash, 11 C.L.J. 533: 6 I.C. 508; Gambirmal v. Hamirmal, 21 B. 747; contra in Bindoo v. Bolie, 1 W.R. 125.

(4) Cassinath v. Hurrosoondery, Morton 85: 1 I.D. (O.S.) 945.

(5) Biswanath v. Khantomini, 6 B.L.R. 747 (751); Lalla Futtah Bahadur v. Mt. Pranputter, 13 B.S.D.A. 382 (383): 15 I.D. (O.S.) 760.

(6) Subba v. Changalamma, 22 M. 126.

2558. Improper Alienation.—The reversioner is entitled to restrain the heiress from alienating her property for unauthorized purposes. The reversioner may either restrain her, as well as her intended alienee, from proceeding with the alienation, or if the alienation is made, he may obtain a declaration that it was made without legal necessity and was, therefore, void beyond the heiress's lifetime.[1] But no improper alienation made by the widow would justify her dispossession, as appears to have been, perhaps too readily, assumed in a case of a Mahomedan life-tenant of Bhag property;[2] though, on the other hand, if the widow is found to have grossly mismanaged the estate, reducing its value to the next reversioner, the latter would be entitled to press on her dispossession by the estate being placed in the hands of a Receiver for management.[3] In one such case, in which the senior widow's management showed "reckless dealing with property and the lavish expenditure of large sums for purposes which afford no satisfactory explanation," the Privy Council justified the appointment of a Receiver to manage the estate, as made in the exercise of a very sound discretion.[4]

Clause (2).

2559. Disputing Adoption.—The reversioner is entitled to dispute the factum and validity of an adoption made by the heiress, because it has the effect of defeating his rights,[5] but a reversioner cannot sue for a declaration that an authority to adopt given by the husband is fabricated, for it is only a preparation and does not of itself affect the reversionary right.[6]

Clause (3).

2560. Limitation.—The reversioner's suit "to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption is invalid, or never in fact took place," must be instituted within six years of "when the alleged adoption becomes known to the plaintiff."[7] Now, what is the meaning of the term "plaintiff" in this connexion? Does it mean the actual suitor, or does it include all those who would be bound by the result of the suit? It has been so held in Madras where six years after an alleged adoption, a remote reversioner sued for the declaration of its invalidity, and supported his suit on the ground that the next reversioner, though he knew of the invalidity, had collusively and fraudulently failed to challenge it. But the court held that since such a suit is a representative suit, limitation against the next reversioner ran against the whole body of reversioners, and on the next reversioner being barred, the other reversioners became also barred, and that fraud did not stop time running or gave a new cause of action to

(1) S. 42, Ills. (d) & (e) Specific Relief Act; Raj Lukhee v. Gokool Chunder, 13 M.I.A. 209; Goolab Singh v. Kurun Singh, 14 M.I.A. 176; Mahomed Shamsool Hooda v. Shewuk Ram, 22 W.R. 609 P.C.; Jumoona v. Bamasoonderi, 1 C. 289 P.C.; Radha v. Kour, (1864) W.R. 148; Gobindamani v. Shamlal, (1864) W.R. 153 F.B.; Oodey Chand v. Dhummonee, 3 W.R. 183; Chuttar v. Wooma, 8 W.R. 273; Grose v. Amritamayi, 12 W.R. 13; Bistobehari v. Baijnath, 16 W.R. 49; Chottoo v. Jemab, 6 C. 198; Hemchunder v. Surnamoyi, 22 C. 354; Balbhadra v. Bhawani, 34 C. 853; Suraj Mal v. Nathwa, 45 A. 255.

(2) Ahmed v. Bai Bibi, 44 B. 727 (732).

(3) Garuva v. Ragammal, 8 M.L.J. 189: 7 I.C. 534.

(4) Jiji Amba (Ex parte), 13 M. 390 (394) P.C.

(5) Anand Kunwar v. Court of Wards, 6 C. 764 P.C., approving Bhikji v. Jagannath, 10 B.H.C.R. 351; Kattama v. Dorasingha, 23 W.R. 314 P.C.; Venkatanarayana v. Subhammal, 38 M. 406 P.C.; Ramabai v. Rangrav, (1894) B.P.J. 287: 19 B. 614; Anyaba v. Daji, 20 B. 202; Gyanendro v. Lobongomunjori, 11 C.L.R. 198; contra in Juggendronath v. Rajendronath, 7 W.R. 357, overruled by the Privy Council in Anand Kunwar v. Court of Wards, 6 C. 764 P.C.

(6) Sreepada v. Sreepada, 35 M. 592.

(7) Art. 118, Limitation Act (IX of 1908).

the other reversioners.[1] But this view, though not solitary, has not remained uncontested,[2] and it has been held (it is submitted, rightly) that when the article speaks of the "plaintiff," it uses it in its ordinary sense, and the nature of his suit does not restrict the prescribed period, the starting point for which is his own knowledge and not that of some one else, though the latter might be equally or even more interested in contesting the adoption; but since one reversioner does not derive his right to sue from or through another, he is in no way prejudiced by the latter's failure to contest an adoption. In any case, the failure of a suit under this article, does not entail its failure under Art. 125, though a Bombay Full Bench have so held.[3]

Clause (4).

2561. "May oppose probate."—On a similar principle, a reversioner has been held entitled to oppose the grant of a probate, and he may intervene when he finds the heiress guilty of collusion between herself, and her adopted son. So, where one S, alleging himself to be the adopted son of M, applied for the probate of the will of his father, and the latter's widow had first opposed the application, but subsequently withdrew her opposition to probate being granted to S, whereupon her daughter K applied for leave to oppose the grant of probate, on the ground that her mother had colluded with the applicant, which the court granted, holding that the daughter was the reversioner and her rights would be prejudiced by the grant of a probate without hearing her, as the widow, who had at first contested the application, had withdrawn her opposition, and there was reason to suspect that she was in collusion with the son.[4]

2562. Administration Suit.—A reversioner is entitled to sue for administration if a dedication of property, to which a reversioner is entitled, is not valid, and the executors proposed to carry out the dedication. Such an act would entitle the reversioner to seek the assistance of the court and have the property properly administered.[5] When a person, entitled to an estate in reversion, brings a suit against the executors of the estate for administration, and subsequent thereto, an administration suit is brought by one executor against his co-executors and a consent decree obtained without the reversioner being made a party, such a reversioner will be entitled to bring his suit to a hearing, and upon a second decree being made, the accounts and enquiries, already had under the first decree, will be adopted in the second decree, so far as can be applied, and the reversioner who brought the first suit will be entitled to the conduct of the proceeding.[6]

Reversioner's suit.

352. (1) A suit to obtain any of the foregoing reliefs must be brought in the first instance by the presumptive reversioner[7] but if owing to his

(1) Polepeddi v. Polepeddi, 44 M. 218. To the same effect, Ayyadorai v. Solai, 24 M. 405.

(2) S. 2 (8), Limitation Act (IX of 1908); Govinda v. Thyammal, 14 M.L.J. 209; Abinash v. Harinath, 32 C. 62; Bhagwanta v. Sukhi, 22 A. 33 F.B.

(3) Shrinivas v. Hanmant, 24 B. 260 F.B.

(4) Khettramoni v. Shyama Churn, 21 C. 539.

(5) Hem Chunder v. Sarnamoyi, 22 C. 354; Rojomoyee v. Troyluckho, 29 C. 260 (272).

(6) Rojomoyee v. Troylukho, 29 C. 260 (272, 273), following Zambaco v. Cossavetti, L.R. 11 Eq. 439; Mellore v. Surre, 21 Ch. D. 647.

(7) Raj Lukhee v. Gokool Chunder, 13 M.I.A. 209; Kooer Goolab Singh v. Rao Kurum Singh, 14 M.I.A. 176 (186); Jumoona v. Gokool, 1 C. 289 P.C.; Mata Prasad v. Nageshar, 47 A. 883 (894, 895) P.C.

minority, poverty,[1] collusion, consent, ratification, waiver of his right as reversioner, estoppel or limitation, he is unable or unwilling, without sufficient cause to sue, then[2] it may be brought by the reversioner next to him in succession but in that case the court may join the presumptive reversioner as a party to the suit.[3]

(2) A suit instituted by the presumptive reversioner may, on his death, or otherwise on proof of latches or collusion with the heiress whose acts are impugned, be continued by the next presumable reversioner.[4]

(3) Where the immediate reversioner is a female, the nearest male reversioner may maintain such suit without having to show any of the causes mentioned in clause (1).[5]

(4) Any adjudication made in such suit is res judicata as against the heir when the reversion opens.[6]

Clauses (1), (2).

2563. Analogous Law.—A suit to enforce what may be called the reversioner's equity set out in the last section, belongs, in the first instance, to the presumptive reversioner. He and he alone is entitled to sue. As the Privy Council observed: "Although a suit of this nature may be brought by a contingent reversionary heir, yet that, as a general rule, it must be brought by the presumptive reversionary heir, that is to say, by the person who would succeed, if the widow were to die at that moment. They are also of opinion that such suit may be brought by a more distant reversioner, if those nearer in succession are in collusion with the widow or have precluded themselves from interfering. They consider that the rule laid down in Bhikaji Appaji v. Jagannath Vital[7] is correct. It cannot be the law that any one who may have a possibility of succeeding on the death of the widow, can maintain a suit of the present nature, for, if so, the right to sue would belong to every one in the line of succession, however remote. The right to sue must, in their Lordships' opinion, be limited. If the nearest reversionary heir refuses, without sufficient cause, to institute proceedings, or if he has precluded himself, by his own act or conduct, from suing, or has colluded with the widow, or concurred in the act alleged to be wrongful, the next presumable reversioner would be entitled to sue.[8] In such a case, upon a plaint stating the circumstances under which the more distant reversionary heir claims to sue, the court must exercise a judicial discretion in determining whether the remote reversioner is entitled to sue, and would

(1) Mata Prasad v. Nageshar, 47 A. 883 (895) P.C.

(2) Anand Kunwar v. Court of Wards, 6 C. 764 P.C.; Abinash v. Harinath, 32 C. 62 (65).

(3) Venkatanarayana v. Subbammal, 38 M. 406 (414) P.C.; Lakshmi v. Anantharama, (1937) M. 699 (703) F.B.

(4) Anand Kunwar v. Court of Wards, 6 C. 764 P.C.; Abinash v. Harinath, 32 C. 62 (65).

(5) Abinash v. Harinath, 32 C. 62 (66); Ram Yad v. Rambihara, (1919) 54 I.C. (Pat.) 357; Kandasami v. Akkammal, 13 M. 195; Balgobind v. Ramkumar, 6 A. 431; Hanuman v. Jofa Kunwar, (1906) A.W.N. 207; Lakupati v. Rambodh, 37 A. 350 (352); Deoki v. Jwala Prasad, 50 A. 678 (683, 684) (left to judicial discretion. Contra Madari v. Malki, 6 A. 428; Ishwar Narain v. Janki, 15 A. 182 Female reversioner cannot be ignored; Viranwali v. Kundan Lal, 9 L. 106 (109, 110) coparcener's suit can be converted into one by a reversioner.

(6) Katama Nachiar v. Raja of Shivagunga, 9 M.I.A. 539; Venkatanarayana v. Subbammal, 38 M. 406 P.C.; Janaki v. Narayanasami, 39 M. 634 P.C.; Kesho Prasad v. Sheo Pergash, 44 A. 19 (29) F.B.

(7) 10 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 351.

(8) Goolab Singh v. Kurum Singh, 14 M.I.A. 176.

probably require the nearest reversioner to be made a party to the suit.[1] "Such a suit brought by the presumptive reversioner is in a representative capacity and on behalf of all the reversioners. The act complained of is to their common detriment, just as the relief sought is for their common benefit. On the death, therefore, of the presumptive reversioner, the next presumable reversioner would clearly be entitled to continue the action instituted by the deceased plaintiff, unless there is anything in the processual law of India to preclude him from so doing."[2] Again, "there is nothing to preclude a remote reversioner from joining or asking to be joined in the action brought by the presumptive reversioner or even obtaining the conduct of the suit on proof of laches on the part of the plaintiff, or collusion between him and the widow or other female whose acts are impugned. It is the common injury to the reversionary rights which entitles the reversioner to sue. Apart, therefore, from the question whether the next presumable heir is the legal representative of the deceased presumptive reversioner, there remains the outstanding fact of identity of interest on the part of the general body of reversioners, near and remote, to get rid of the transaction which they regard as destructive of their rights."[3] As such, they are all bound by the result of the suit, whether favourable or unfavourable to them.[4] But if the plaintiff in the previous suit was not a reversioner at all, any decision given therein would not operate as res judicata on the real reversioners[5] (§ 2550).

2564. The right of suit belongs to all reversioners, in their order of succession, without regard to sex.[6] So, the daughter may sue during the lifetime of her mother, if her reversionary rights are seriously threatened.[7] So, where the widow abandoned possession of her husband's estate, alleging that her husband was not separate but a member of the joint family, the daughter was entitled to sue, and was put in physical possession of the estate as manager during the widow's lifetime.[8] So, where the daughter was found to have colluded with the widow, the next presumable reversioner was held entitled to sue both.[9] So, where the widow and the plaintiff's father jointly made an alienation, the son was held entitled to maintain the suit for its cancellation, even though his father and not he was the immediate reversioner.[10]

Clause (3).

2565. The existence of an immediate female reversioner, such as the daughter, is no obstacle to the next presumptive male reversioner avoiding an improper alienation, since the one takes only a life-estate, while the other takes an absolute

(1) Anand Kunwar v. Court of Wards, 6 C. 764 (772, 773) P.C.; Sita Saran v. Jagat, 49 A. 815: 25 A.L.J. 636: 102 I.C. 296.

(2) Venkatanarayana v. Subbammal, 38 M. 406 (411) P.C.; Janaki v. Narayanasami, 39 M. 634 P.C.; Keshoprasad Singh v. Sheo Prasad, 44 A. 19; affirmed O.A., 46 A. 831 (836) P.C.; Maha-prasad v. Nageswar, 52 I.A. 398: (1925) P.C. 272; Challagundla v. Mudalli, 35 M.L.J. 57 (71) F.B.; Susheela v. Bishunpada, 60 C. 636; contra in Sakhahari v. Bhavani, 27 M. 588; Chinna v. Lakshminarasamma, 37 M. 406; Arunachallam v. Vellaya, 23 M.L.J. 719.

(3) Venkatanarayana v. Subbammal, 38 M. 406 (412, 413).

(4) Venkatanarayana v. Subbammal, 38 M. 406 P.C.; Janaki v. Narayanasami, 39 M. 634 (638) P.C.; Kesho Prasad Singh v. Sheo Prasad, 44 A. 19, affirming O.A. 46 A. 831 (836) P.C.; Maha Prasad v. Nageshar, 52 I.A. 398: (1925) P.C. 272.

(5) Kalicharan v. Bageshra, 23 A.L.J. 653: 89 I.C. 374: (1925) A. 585.

(6) Ss. 39, 54, Ill. (m), Specific Relief Act (I of 1877); Gokulananda v. Iswar, 15 Pat. 379.

(7) Golab v. Shib Sahi, 2 Agra 54.

(8) Gunesh v. Lal Mutee, 17 W.R. 11.

(9) Jwala Nath v. Kulloo, 3 Agra 55 F.B.; Gauri Dat v. Guru Sahai, 2 A. 41.

(10) Retoo v. Lalljee, 24 W.R. 399.

interest. Moreover, as observed in a case, "that in the case in which, upon the death of a full owner, the estate successively passes through the hands of a series of female heirs, who take only a qualified estate, before the property vests in another full owner, they may rightly be regarded, in the aggregate, as the holders of a limited interest which intervenes between the full ownership of the original owner and the ultimate taker."[1]

2566. It may be also suggested that since such suit is a representative suit, the female owner cannot represent the interest of the male reversioners, who have, therefore, a cause of action of their own, which is unaffected by her intervention.

The contrary was laid down in some earlier cases of the Allahabad Court, where it was held that apart from collusion or connivance, the existence of an intermediate female reversioner was an obstacle to the maintainability of the suit by the next presumptive male reversioner.

But since the suit is a representative suit, a reversioner, entitled, after the death of a tenant for life, to a share in the inheritance, cannot lay claim to any definite share, nor can he sue to set aside a transaction affecting the inheritance, so far only as it would affect his probable share. For instance, suppose he is one of six reversioners complaining of an adoption. He cannot sue only of his one-sixth share and pay court-fee thereon, alleging that he sues only to the extent of his interest.[2] The reversioner cannot oust the heiress because she denies his title,[3] but if she disclaims all interest in the estate, the court may place the reversioner in possession as manager for her lifetime.[4]

The nearest or any other reversioner must, of course, prove his relationship to the last full owner if it is denied, and unless he proves his own title as reversioner entitled to sue, the defendant cannot be called upon to justify her alienation.[5]

Minority.

2567. The minority of the nearest reversioner justifies a reversioner more remote to maintain such suit.[6]

Collusion, Consent and Ratification.

2568. The question of consent has already been examined before. Connected with it is the question of collusion. Collusion implies that the presumptive reversioner had improperly joined with the heiress in destroying the reversion, which enables the remote reversioners to vindicate their rights.[7] So, where the immediate reversioner consented to a

---

(1) Abinash v. Harinath, 32 C. 62 (66); Narayan v. Chengalasuma, 10 M. 1; Kandasami v. Akkammal, 13 M. 195; Raghupati v. Tirumalai, 15 M. 422; Chunder Koomar v. Dwarkanath, (1859) B.S.D.A. 1623; Balgobind v. Hirumanee, 2 W.R. 255; Balgobind v. Ram Kumar, 6 A. 431; Raja Dei v. Umed Singh, 34 A. 207; Lakshpati v. Rambodh Singh, 37 A. 350; Jaint Singh v. Gosain, 16 A.L.J. 493: 46 I.C. 85; Ramyad v. Rambihari, (1919) 4 Pat.L.J. 734: 54 I.C. 357; contra in Radha Kishen v. Bakhtowar, 1 Agra 1; Madari v. Malki, 6 A. 428; Ishwar v. Janki, 15 A. 132; Booma Sundree v. Bama Soondwee, 10 W.R. 301.

(2) Keshava v. Lakshminarayana, 6 M. 192.

(3) Naulakhi v. Jai Mangal Singh, (1885) A.W.N. 279.

(4) Ganesh v. Lalmuthu, 17 W.R. 11.

(5) Bhabuti v. Khetal Singh, 21 I.C. 274; Dalgan v. Parsidh, 11 I.C. 202; Bhola v. Chandi, 5 I.C. 666; Rameshwar v. Ganpati, (1936) L. 652.

(6) Lachmi Narain v. Maihro, (1909) P.W.R. 109: 4 I.C. 957.

(7) Naikram v. Soorujbuns, (1859) B.S.D.A.B. 891; Sita Saran v. Jagat, 49 A. 815.

gift by a widow, it did not prevent a remote reversioner from impeaching it.[1] Ratification is a consent given to an act ex post facto.

2569. The circumstances in which a remoter reversioner may maintain a suit, have been stated in the section. But a question arises, how is he to satisfy the court that the presumptive reversioner was unable or unwilling to sue?

Where such reversioner has joined in the alienation, it is not difficult to prove his complicity. But in other cases, it is apprehended that this fact need not be proved with the accuracy of a plea. It will suffice if there is a verified declaration against the presumptive reversioner who is impleaded as a party defendant. It will, then, be obvious whether he is interested in upholding the suit or opposing it. If a remote reversioner sues without joining the nearest reversioner,[2] or proving why the nearest reversioner is precluded from maintaining the suit,[3] his suit is liable to be dismissed. So would be the suit instituted by the plaintiff as next reversioner when he was merely a remote reversioner, and there was no allegation of any collusion and the like against them.[4] In such cases, the court may allow an amendment of the plaint, if it is not too late, and would not alter the nature of the suit.[5]

2570. Not only the actual reversioner who consents to a transfer, but his legal representative also, is precluded from maintaining a suit for its cancellation,[6] and where several persons join in a conveyance and convey "the whole and entire property absolutely," it must be taken that they have exercised every power which they possess, and that they have parted with their whole interest, whether in possession or in expectation. Where, therefore, the widow and the immediate next reversioner made such alienation in favour of a third person, the reversioner would be prevented from afterwards avoiding the transfer.[7]

So, a reversioner may ratify a transfer. So, where a tenure granted by the widow was recognized, after her death, by the reversioner, who received rent from the holder of the tenure, such receipt was held to amount to ratification of the tenure, precluding a suit for setting it aside on the ground of the widow's incompetency.[8]

2571. Relief.—The relief admissible in such suit must necessarily depend upon the nature of the claim. If it relates to an adoption, it may challenge its factum or validity, or both. If to an alienation, it may deny its validity on the ground that it was wholly unsupported by necessity. Where it is so, it is open to the court to cancel the alienation altogether[9] or to declare only its partial invalidity.[10] If it is partially supported by necessity, it is open to the court to declare it valid to that extent and

---

(1) Bakhtawar v. Bhagwana, 32 A. 176.

(2) Rughoobar v. Bhekaree, 22 W.R. 472; Sita Saran v. Jagat, 49 A. 815: 25 A.L.J. 636: 102 I.C. 296.

(3) Jhandu v. Tarif, 37 A. 45 P.C.

(4) Meghu Rai v. Ram Khelawan, 35 A. 326.

(5) Avula v. Avula, (1913) M.W.N. 383: 18 I.C. 213.

(6) Rangappa v. Kanti, 31 M. 366 F. B.

(7) Trilochun v. Umesh, 7 C.L.R. 571.

(8) Mahesh v. Ugrakant, 24 W.R. 127. As to what is ratification, see Bejoy v. Girendra, 13 C.W.N. 201: 4 I.C. 513.

(9) S. 39, Specific Relief Act.

(10) Pramotha v. Bhuban, 25 C.W.N. 585.

charge the sum upon the property of which it may order payment.[1] The uncertainty regarding the person who would be entitled to succeed the widow is no ground for refusing a declaration regarding the character of the alienation, and the declaration may be that the alienation is invalid as a whole, but that on equitable ground, the alienee should have a charge declared in his favour for the binding portion of the consideration.[2] In some cases, it has been held that the plaintiff cannot obtain a declaration of the invalidity of an alienation partially supported by legal necessity, unless there is an offer in the plaint to reimburse the alienee to the extent the alienation was for necessity.[3] But it is submitted that the right of reimbursement is merely an equity which the court awards as a portion of its relief, and that it is always open to the court to grant such relief as the plaintiff may be found entitled.[4]

When Owner Ousted.

2572. In a reversioner's suit in the lifetime of the limited owner, the latter cannot be ejected, since whatever may be the effect of her improper alienation, it does not entail forfeiture of her own estate.[5] And all that the reversioner is entitled to, and can claim, is to have his possible interest protected. As such, he is not entitled to a remedy more extensive than is requisite to protect his rights. His reversionary interest is not accelerated by an alienation which the heiress may make in fraud of his presumptive right. All that the reversioner is ordinarily entitled to, is a declaration that the female owner's act is null and void, as far as it may affect the interest of the person entitled as reversioner, and if there were a danger, lest from the nature of the property, the corpus should be wasted, the utmost he can claim is a decree for its protection by the appointment of a Receiver or by such other means as the court might deem suitable.[6] But though this is the rule, cases may arise where her own conduct may lead to her own dispossession. So, where the daughter who was entitled to her father's estate, acquiesced in the possession of her father's relatives, holding them out as the rightful heirs, the court awarded her possession, but added a clause that if she declined to accept possession, the reversioner was to be put into possession as manager of the property on her behalf, and that he would then act under the orders and directions of the Trial Court, filing accounts in, and paying the income to her through, such court.[7] In another case, the order of the court appointing a Receiver was upheld by the Privy Council. In that case, the property in question, a large and valuable zemindari, was seized by Government, but afterwards restored to the widows of the last holder. Within four years of this restoration, the two junior widows sued the senior widow, complaining of various acts done to the detriment of their rights, and more especially,

(1) Paparayudu v. Rattamma, 37 M. 275; Gobind v. Baldeo, 25 A. 330; Partapa v. Altar Singh, (1913) P.R. 34: 20 I.C. 289.

(2) Paparayudu v. Rattamma, 37 M. 275.

(3) Poolchund v. Raghoobuns, 9 W. R. 108; Sugeeram v. Juddoobun, 9 W.R. 284; Muteeram v. Gopal, 20 W.R. 187; Gobind v. Baldeo, 25 A. 330; Subramania v. Ponnusami, 8 M. 92; Singam v. Draupadi, 31 M. 153; Gouri v. Tirumaya, 18 M.L.J. 17; Dina Nath v. Hrisikesh, 20 C.L.J. 285 (290).

(4) Garikipati v. Garikipati, 37 M. 275; Vithu v. Mendli, 5 N.L.R. 172.

(5) Lall Soonder v. Hurry Krishen, Marsh. 113; Jwala Nath v. Kulloo, 3 Agra 55; Kishnee v. Khealee Ram, 2 N. W.P.H.C.R. 424; Haradhun v. Issur Chunder, 6 W.R. 222; Shib Koeree v. Joogun, 8 W.R. 155.

(6) Jwala Nath v. Kulloo, 3 Agra 55 (59) F.B.

(7) Adi Deo v. Dukharan, 5 A. 532 (542); Radha Mohun v. Rama Dass, 24 W.R. 86 note. (The view of the case on the subject of limitation has been overruled by the Legislature.)

that she had, without their consent adopted a son, to whom she had transferred the entire estate. The senior widow upheld the adoption and alleged that the other widows had no right beyond a claim for maintenance. The court found the senior widow's management reckless, and her expenditure lavish, and that the adopted son could not supersede the widows. But, though it held the widows entitled to the estate, it refused to remove the manager, as they were old and incompetent. The widows appealed, but the Privy Council held that it was a matter of discretion with the court as to the removal of the Receiver, and looking to the case, the court had exercised a very sound discretion in not removing him.[1] The courts have, in other cases, upheld the appointment of a manager in a case of proved waste endangering the reversion.[2] It will not interfere in an attempt at a false adoption and the mutation of names in favour of the so-called adopted son.[3] As the court remarked: "Certain specified acts of misconduct by her operate, according to Hindu Law, to destroy her estate and to vest the property in the reversionary heirs, and according to several decisions, the courts also have jurisdiction to interfere to prevent the waste or destruction or the fraudulent alienation of property by her, if a sufficient case is made to justify this interference. In such cases, the widow has been deprived not of her interest but of all control over the property, which has been placed, for its preservation, in the hands of others (sometimes, in the hands of the reversioners themselves) as managers on her behalf."[4]

2573. Decision Res Judicata.—Since the reversioner's suit is a representative suit, in which he represents fully the whole reversion, it follows that a decision given in his suit operates as res judicata against the other reversioners.[5] This is the logical outcome of the identity of interest on the part of the general body of reversioners, near and remote, to get rid of the transaction which they regard as destructive of their right."[6] In this view, "it is impossible to resist the conclusion that if the right litigated is a common right, and if that litigation has been honestly conducted, the other reversioners are affected by the law of res judicata. This is a logical result of the decision of the Judicial Committee."[7] But a reversioner suing or sued in one character, say as lessor or lessee, is not debarred by the rule of constructive res judicata from defending his right as reversioner in a suit instituted against him and the widow on a previous sale by her to the plaintiff.[8] Though the reversioner sues as a representative of his class and for their mutual benefits, any costs awarded against him must be met

Clause (4).

---

(1) Jijiamba (In re), 13 M. 390 (394) P.C.

(2) Moharance v. Naddu Lall, 10 W. R. 73.

(3) Komul Mones v. Alhadmonee, 1 W. R. 256.

(4) Ib., p. 257.

(5) Brojo Kishore v. Sreenath, 9 W.R. 463 (465); Chiruvolu v. Chiruvolu, 29 M. 390 (401) F.B.; Challagundla v. Madala, 41 M. 659 F.B., overruling contra in Sakhyahani v. Bhavani, 27 M. 588; Govinda v. Thayammal, 28 M. 57; Venkatanarayana v. Subbammal, 28 M. 406 (412); Veerayya v. Gangamma, 36 M. 570; Narayana v. Rama, 38 M. 396; Garikipati v. Rattamma, (1912) M.W. N. 1176 (1179); Kesho Prasad v. Sheopargash, 44 A. 19 (26, 27) F.B., overruling contra in Chhiddu Singh v. Durga Dei, 22 A. 382 F.B.; Darbari v. Govind Ram, 43 A. 558; Thakur Prasad v. Mt. Dipa, 10 Pat. 352.

(6) Venkatanarayana v. Subhammal, 38 M. 406 (413) P.C.

(7) Challagundla v. Madala, 41 M. 659 F.B., explaining and following Venkatanarayana v. Subhammal, 38 M. 406 (413) P.C.; Janaki v. Narayanasami, 39 M. 634 P.C.

(8) Debendranath v. Nagendranath, 60 C. 1158 (1165).

by him and his personal representatives even though they have received no personal assets of the female owner.[1]

2574. Procedure.—The reversioner, though entitled, is not bound to file one suit challenging all alienations.[2] As he is not entitled to eject her transferees during her lifetime, the only suit he can institute is one for a declaration that the alienations, being unsupported by necessity or for any other cause, do not bind the reversioner.[3] But since a will is, at any time, revocable, the reversioner cannot sue to declare the invalidity of her will.[4] A suit instituted by the presumptive reversioner, may, on his death, be continued by his son[5] or the next reversioner.[6]

Burden of proof.

353. (1) In a suit between the reversioner and the heiress's alienee for possession of property comprised in her estate, it lies on the latter to prove that the former is bound by the transfer to him as supported by legal necessity.[7]

(2) In a suit between a pardanashin heiress and her transferee, it lies on the transferee to prove not only that the deed was executed by, but was explained to, and really understood by the former, who had executed it by the free and independent exercise of her will.[8]

2575. Analogous Law.—It is general rule that a transferee from a limited owner must establish that his transfer was competent. As such, in a suit between the reversioner and a female heiress's transferee, the former is entitled to succeed by reason of his natural title, unless it is displaced by proof of a better one in the transferee.[9] As between the grantor and the grantee, the rule is, however, different, since the grantor cannot derogate from his own grant.

But the case of a pardanashin woman is exceptional, because a pardanashin naturally labours under a special disability, and is, therefore, entitled to the same special protection which law confers on the weak, the ignorant and the infirm.[10] As the Privy Council observed: "The lady was a pardanashin lady, and the law throws around her a special cloak of protection. It demands that the burden of proof shall, in such a case, rest not with those who attack but those who found upon the deed, and the proof must go so far as to show, affirmatively and conclusively, that the deed was not only executed, but was explained to, and was really understood, by the grantor. In such cases, it must also, of course, be established that the deed was not signed under duress, but arose from the free and independent will of the grantor. The law, as just stated, is too well settled to be doubted or upset."[11]

Clause (1).

2576. Reversioner and Limited Owner's Transferee.—The first clause deals with the burden of proof in a suit between the reversioner and the alienees of the

(1) Kameshwar v. Beni Madho, 11 Pat. 430.
(2) Bansolochan v. Jagannath, (1924) A. 838; Gutha v. Rama Katayya, 96 I.C. 132: (1926) M. 508.
(3) Tehl Kuar v. Amarnath, 79 I.C. 670: (1925) L. 2.
(4) Ib.
(5) Hur Lal v. Hari Singh, (1931) A. 630.
(6) Jadubansi v. Mahpal Singh, 38 A. 111 (115); Premmoyi v. Preonath, 33 C. 636.
(7) Obala v. Kandasami, 47 M. 181 (188, 189) P.C.
(8) Kali Baksh v. Ram Gopal, 36 A. 81 P.C.; Savitri v. F. A. Savi, 12 Pat. 359 (independent advice not necessary).
(9) Obala Kondama v. Kandasamy, 47 M. 181 P.C.
(10) Kamini v. Krishna, 39 C. 933 (946).
(11) Kali Baksh v. Ram Gopal, 36 A. 81 (89) P.C.; Sajjad Hussain v. Wazir Ali, 34 A. 455 P.C.

last limited owner. As the reversioner does not claim through or under the limited owner, he is not bound by her recitals and acknowledgment of transfer, which have to be proved by the transferee. This he may do in any of the following ways:—

(1) By proof of consent of the then presumptive reversioner, raising a presumption of necessity.

(a) Such consent may be proved by the attestation of the deed by him, if it is shown that it was made after it had been read to him;

(b) It may be proved by subsequent conduct such as ratification or acquiescence;

(2) By independent evidence of payment of consideration and proof of necessity;

(3) By proof that, after reasonable enquiries, he was satisfied of the necessity.

2577. Pardanashin Transferor.—Where, moveover, the transferor is a pardanashin, her transferee has to prove in a suit, whether by the grantor or her reversioner, that the transfer was made by her on an intelligent appreciation of its nature and effect, and that no advantage was taken of her disability.[1]

Clause (2).

It is sometimes insisted on that a pardanashin lady must have independent advice, but as pointed out by the Privy Council,[2] this is not an absolute rule of law. Advice is merely a means to secure that which is essential, namely, an intelligent appreciation of the transaction. It is not the formal execution which so much matters, since, if they are proved to have understood the deed, the fact that they assented to it from behind a screen, would not vitiate it for want of due execution, as required by S. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act.[3]

Improper alienation.

354. An alienation by the heiress in excess of her powers is not void, but voidable at the election of the reversioner.[4]

2578. Analogous Law.—It is now settled[5] that an alienation by the heiress, without legal necessity, is not void but merely voidable at the instance of the reversioner, who may ratify it or treat it as a nullity. But except as against the reversioner, it is valid and cannot be avoided by a third party.[6] (§ 2580.)

(1) Keshublal v. Radharaman, 17 C.W.N. 991 (995).

(2) Mahomed Buksh v. Hosseini, 15 C. 684 P.C.; Kali Buksh v. Ram Gopal, 36 A. 81 (91) P.C.; Sabitri v. F. A. Savi, 12 Pat. 359.

(3) Padarath v. Ram Narain, 37 A. 474 (481) P.C.

(4) Ramgowda v. Bhausaheb, 52 B. 1 (7) P.C.; Bijay Gopal v. Krishna, 34 C. 329 (333) P.C.; Madhu Sudan v. E. H. Rooke, 25 C. 1 (8) P.C.

(5) Ramgowda v. Bhausaheb, 52 B. 1 P.C.; Madhu Sudan v. Rooke, 25 C. 1 P.C.; Bejoy Gopal v. Krishna, 34 C. 329 (338) P.C., reversing O.A. Bejoy Gopal v. Nil Ratan, 30 C. 990; Kishori Lal v. Bhusai, 14 C.W.N. 106; Indra Narain v. Sarbasova, 41 C.L.J. 341: 87 I.C. 930: (1925) C. 743; Upendra Nath v. Shibadasi, 88 I.C. 898: (1925) C. 1053; Deonandan v. Udit Narain, 18 C.W.N. 940; Sitaram v. Khamdu, 22 Bom.L.R. 1155: 59 I.C. 480; Chavhan v. Ram Sarup, 20 O.C. 232: 42 I.C. 27; Ajodhia Prasad v. Mt. Sanjhari, 6 Luck. 710.

(6) Deonandan v. Udit Narain, 18 C.W.N. 940; Jagat Chandra v. Biswa Mahar, 55 I.C. (C.) 743; Sitaram v. Khandu, 22 Bom.L.R. 1155; Kesho Prasad v. Chandrika, 2 Pat. 217; Saiyid Mahomed v. Parbati, 9 O.L.J. 312; Bahadur Singh v. Sultan Husain, 66 I.C. 456: (1922) O. 171; contra in Sheikh Muhammad v. Ramachandra, 90 I.C. (N.) 74.

2579. Mode of Avoidance.—Even as regards the reversioner, such transfer can only be avoided, if it is unsupported by legal necessity and if he has not consented to or ratified it. A reversioner is not bound to sue for its cancellation immediately after it is made. He may wait till the reversion falls in. He is then put upon his election whether to ratify or avoid it. If he elects to treat it as a nullity, he may sue the alienee for possession, and it is then on the latter to make good his alienation by proving both its factum and validity.[1] Even where the reversioner challenges it in a suit of his own, the burden of proof is still on the alienee. He has still to prove that his alienor was justified in making the alienation or that he had, after reasonable inquiries, ascertained the existence of legal necessity and bona fide believed in its existence. If he proves this, his title cannot be shaken, even though, in fact, there was no necessity.[2]

2580. Who may Avoid It.—None but the reversioner is entitled to impeach an alienation made by the heiress, though, on her death, if there is no reversioner, and the Crown takes the inheritance as the ultima hæres, it has the same right of impeaching an unauthorized alienation.[3] The estate of a widow under the Punjab customary law is subject to the same restrictions, and the heir who succeeds to her by custom, is entitled to challenge her alienations, in the same way as any other reversioner.[4] The same right belongs to an execution-purchaser who has acquired the entire estate, and not merely the limited estate of the female owner.[5] As against all but the reversioner, her transfer stands good. So, where the heiress mortgaged her property which was sold in execution to another, who sold it to the plaintiff who sued her transferees for possession, whereupon the latter challenged the mortgage as unsupported by necessity, the court held that as the defendant was not the reversioner but a mere assignee of the mortgagor's right, he could not be permitted to challenge the plaintiff's title.[6] The question whether the reversioner's election is not personal to him, and can be availed of by his transferee, can only admit of one answer. The transfer being not void, but merely voidable at the instance of the reversioner, the latter is the only person competent to challenge it.[7] In any case, his transferee cannot challenge it where he himself had waived his right by laches or acquiescence inferred from his silence and failure to avoid it for a considerable period. And there may be equities to adjust, even if the transfer is set aside (§ 2535).

Succession of reversioners.

355. (1) On the death of the heiress her limited estate devolves on her next reversioner then alive.

(2) Reversioners take per capita.[8]

(3) Where the next reversioner disclaims the estate, it devolves on the reversioner next to him in succession.

(1) Bijoy Gopal v. Krishna, 34 C. 329 (333, 334) P.C.

(2) S. 38, Transfer of Property Act; Hanooman Persad v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (424); Bijoy Gopal v. Krishna, 34 C. 329 (333) P.C.; Ramgawda v. Bhausaheb, 52 B. 1 (7) P.C.; Tirupatiraju v. Venkayya, 45 M. 504 (510) F.B.

(3) Collector v. Cavaly, 8 M.I.A. 529; Deonandan v. Udit Narayan, 18 C.W.N. 940 (941); Bijoy Gopal v. Krishna, 25 C. 1; Madhu Sudan v. Rooke, 11 C.W.N. 424.

(4) Gobinda v. Nandu, 5 L. 450 (453).

(5) Raj Kishen v. Jaheeroor-ul-Huq, (1864) W.R. 351; Brojo Kishore v. Sreenath, 9 W.R. 463.

(6) Deonandan v. Udit Narayan, 18 C. W.N. 940.

(7) Kesho Prasad v. Chondrika, 2 P. 217; Saiyid Mhd. Hadi v. Parbati, 9 O.L.J. 312; Mirza Sadiq Husain v. Mhd. Karim, 9 O.L.J. 456; (1922) O. 289; contra in Sheikh Muhammad v. Ramachandra, 90 I.C. (N.) 74.

(8) Katama Nachiar v. Raja of Sivagunga, 9 M.I.A. 539 (609).

Explanation.—The term "death" in clause (1) includes civil death as by remarriage or abandonment of worldly affairs which determines the estate.

2581. Analogous Law.—On death or remarriage of the female heir, the estate reverts to the natural line of heirs. Hence the term "reversioners," who are heirs of the last full owner, if he had lived up to, and died simultaneously with the female owner.[1] If the next reversioner disclaims the inheritance, it falls on one who stands next to him in the line of succession.[2] Reversioners take per capita and not per stirpes.

It has already been seen that the succession may be accelerated by the remarriage of the female owner, or her renunciation of wordly affairs[3] or of the estate.[4]

Reversioner's rights on succession.

356. On the estate vesting in the reversioner he acquires the following rights:—

(1) He is entitled to possession of the estate together with all its accumulations, accretions and incidents as on the death of the heiress;[5]

(2) He is entitled to dispute all unauthorized acts of the female heir;[6]

(3) He is entitled to represent the estate, and as such, may continue the suit instituted by or against the heiress;

(4) He may execute all decrees obtained by her as representing the estate, as he is liable to satisfy all such decrees obtained against her.[7]

Illustration.

A Hindu widow in possession of her husband's estate made several alienations before her death. The reversioner can sue for possession of the estate joining the several alienees leaving them to plead and prove the validity of their alienations.[8]

2582. Analogous Law.—On the death of the limited owner, her reversioner, whether a male or a female, becomes entitled to all the estate of the full owner, including all its accumulations, accretions and incidents. As such succession is by descent and not by survivorship, the heir is bound to take out a succession certificate, if any of the property inherited by him require a succession certificate.[9]

Clause (1).

2583. When the succession opens, it is the right of the next reversioner to obtain possession. If he is dormant, and fails to take possession, it does not pass the title to a remoter reversioner, entitling him to sue for possession.[10] The next reversioner is entitled to the estate, with all its increments and incidents. So, where a widow had mortgaged a shop, which she had inherited

(1) Abinash v. Probodh, 15 C.W.N. 1018; Gooshaeen v. Pursotum, ib., p. 238.

(2) Ladooiah v. Sanvaley, 3 Agra 191; 10 I.C. 356.

(3) Hafzoonissa v. Padhabinode, (1856) 12 S.D.A.B. 559: 15 I.D. (O. S.) 78 (84).

(4) S. 343 (Surrender of woman's estate).

(5) Bejoy Gopal v. Krishna, 34 C. 329 (333, 334) P.C.; Sulin Mohon v. Raj Krishna, 60 I.C. (C.) 826. As to accretion see S. 338.

(6) See Supra; Premmoyi v. Preonath, 23 C. 636; Mahadeo v. Sheokaran, 35 A. 481.

(7) Mahadeo v. Sheokaran, 35 A. 481.

(8) Bejoy Gopal v. Krishna, 34 C. 329 (333, 334) P.C.

(9) Ss. 370-390, Succession Act; Abinash v. Probodh, 15 C.W.N. 1018: 10 I.C. 357.

(10) Bind Bahadur v. Returaji, 20 A. L.J. 702: 68 I.C. 776.

from her husband without any necessity, and the property being destroyed by floods, the mortgagee re-built it with his own money, which he continued to treat as the property mortgaged to him. On the widow's death, her reversioner sued for possession, while the mortgagee claimed his cost of re-building, by way of compensation, but the court decreed possession without compensation, holding that the re-building of the shop by the mortgagee did not confer on him any higher equity than if it had been re-built by the widow. "Had she re-built by borrowing the amount it would have been binding on the reversionary estate, only if there had been legal necessity for the purpose and the widow had mortgaged the estate therefor."[1] Such a case is indistinguishable from one in which one builds a house upon the land of another. He cannot make him pay for it. For, as the Privy Council observed: "It is not in every case, in which a man has benefited by the money of another, that an obligation to repay the money arises. To raise an equity of that kind, there must be an obligation, express or implied, to repay."[2] Such an obligation would be implied if the mortgage had been wholly or even partially for legal necessity. So, if the heiress had borrowed money for the purpose of increasing her estate, the reversioner cannot take the acquisition and repudiate the debt.[3] The equity against the reversioner would, of course, be stronger if he had encouraged the building,[4] or if the builder had bona fide believed that he was absolutely entitled to the property and improved it by adding to its market value.[5] The building of a costly temple is not such improvement as the reversioner has to pay for.[6]

But in such case the builder will be permitted to remove his embellishments,[7] unless he had treated the heiress as their owner, in which case he has no equity even to remove them.[8]

As to accretions, see Section 338.

Clause (2).

2584. "He may dispute unauthorized acts."—The reversioner may challenge all unauthorized acts of the widow. For instance, he may treat her improper alienation as null and void, and enter upon the property, ignoring her conveyance. He is not bound to have it set aside.[9] As stated before, it will be then on the alienee to make good his title or claim compensation or any other equity to which he may feel himself entitled.

Clause (3).

2585. Her Legal Representative.—He is entitled to continue as a legal representative in all proceedings pending at her death and relating to his estate.[10]

---

(1) Vrijbhukandas v. Dayaram, 32 B. 32.

(2) Ram Tubal Singh v. Bisseswar, 23 W.R. 305 P.C.; Gadeppa v. Apaji, 3 B. 237.

(3) Oodey Singh v. Phool Chund, 5 N. W.P.H.C.R. 197; Shewak Ram v. Bhowani, 5 C.L.R. 140.

(4) Dettaji v. Kalbha, 21 B. 749.

(5) S. 51, Transfer of Property Act; Abhoy Churn v. Attarmoni, 13 C.W.N. 931.

(6) Kidar Nath v. Nathu Mal, 40 C. 555 (564) P.C.

(7) Narayan v. Bholagir, 6 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 10; Vinayak Rao v. Vidyakar, 9 Bom.L.R. 404; Premji v. Cassum, 20 B. 298; Shiddappa v. Pandurang, 47 B. 696.

(8) Vrijbhukandas v. Dayaram, 32 B. 32 (36).

(9) Sulin Mohan v. Rajakrishna, 25 C. W.N. 420: 60 I.C. 826.

(10) Rikhai Rai v. Sheo Pujan Singh, 33 A. 15; Jadubansi v. Mahpal, 38 A. 111; Chintamony v. Mohesh Chundra, 23 C. 454; Premmoyi v. Preonath, ib., p. 636.

2586. As such, he may execute decrees obtained by her as representing the estate,[1] as others are entitled to execute against him, as such representative, their decrees obtained against her. He is not, of course, bound by any proceedings erroneously continued against the heiress's personal representative.[2]

Clause (4).

His liabilities.

357. On succession, the reversioner becomes subject to the following liabilities:—

(1) He is bound by all alienations made by the heiress supported by legal necessity or benefit of the estate;

(2) He is liable to pay for the reasonable expenses of her shradh in proportion to the estate which he has inherited;

(3) He is liable to pay all her debts and for her wrongs, to the extent provided in the next two following sections.

2587. Analogous Law.—An alienation by an heiress, for necessity, being authorized by law, necessarily binds the reversioner. The reasonable expenses of her shradh are chargeable on the inheritance in the hands of the reversioner, who is liable to contribute a reasonable amount in proportion to the estate inherited by him.[3]

2588. His liability to pay her debts depends upon their nature and necessity. The question was put to the shastris in a case and they replied: "Supposing the proprietor's widow, who succeeded him, to have contracted the debts for the payment of rent due to Government, or other necessary disbursements to save the estate, or for the purpose of promoting her husband's spiritual welfare, or for the support of the family, or for the due execution of any conditions made by her husband, and to have died prior to the liquidation of such debt, the proprietor's heirs, that is, his brother and brother's sons, are bound to discharge the debt. And if the amount was borrowed for the purpose of being appropriated to any other purposes than those specified, such debt must be satisfied by him who becomes possessed of her jewels and other movable property."[4] Other cases have been decided conformably to this opinion, it being held "that if wives, who, with the consent of their husband, assume the management of his family affairs, contract a debt, the liquidation of such debt rests with the husband; otherwise he is not answerable for it."[5]

Debts of the heiress.

358. Reversioners are not bound to pay the debts of the heiress other than her trade debts incurred in respect of a family business[6] or those not supported by legal necessity or benefit,[7] or by such inquiry as is referred to in section 38 of the Transfer of Property Act.[8]

2589. Analogous Law.—Section 357 defines the extent of the reversioner's liability to pay the debts of the previous female holder. This section defines the limit of his liability. It is settled law that the reversioner is bound by an alienation made by the heiress for legal necessity or benefit. But it is not as well settled whether he is equally bound to pay

---

(1) Mahadeo v. Sheokaran, 35 A. 481.
(2) Kailash v. Girija, 39 C. 929.
(3) Ramdhari v. Permanund, 19 C.W. N. 1183 (1187).
(4) Mac. H. L. Case 7, pp. 248, 249.
(5) Mac. H. L. Case 4, pp. 246, 247.
(6) Sakrabhai v. Maganlal, 26 B. 206 F.B.; Barada Prosad v. Krishna Chandra, (1934) C. 414 (Case-law reviewed) See § 2504.
(7) S. 341.
(8) Maharaja of Bobbili v. Zamindar of Cochin, 35 M. 108.

her debts similarly supported, though this would appear to be the case.[1] In Bombay, it has been held that he is liable for the unsecured trade debts of the widow incurred for the purpose of a family business,[2] but in so holding Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J., who delivered the judgment of the Full Bench, addressed himself to the general question and was inclined to hold that the reversioner was liable to pay the legal debts of his predecessor.[3] And this is in accord with the view of the Madras Court,[4] but the Allahabad[5] and the Patna Court[6] and some cases of the Calcutta Court[7] have laid down the contrary.

The difference between the two points of view lies in the fact that, though the debt might be supported by legal necessity, still the reversioner is not liable under a decree passed against the heiress unless there was something in the creditor's suit to show that he had claimed to bind the estate she held as distinct from her personally. In the view of the Bombay and Madras courts, this will be presumed, but in the view of the other courts, it must be specifically pleaded and proved and cannot be the subject of a mere presumption.

2590. Personal Claim.—Some claims are, from their very nature, personal to the heiress, and any sale made to satisfy them cannot convey any interest beyond that of the limited owner. Such is a claim for rent accrued due after the death of the last full owner,[8] or one made in respect of a debt advanced on the personal security of the widow.[9] And though, ordinarily, a money decree against the heiress does not bind the reversioner,[10] still where it is a decree in respect of a debt due from the last owner, it is a decree passed against the heiress as representing the estate, and, as such, will bind the reversioners,[11] provided the suit was so framed as to bind them.[12] But where the suit is for maintenance, which is a personal obligation binding on the heiress as such, the decree will only affect her own interest.[13] So, the mere fact that the debts were incurred by the widow and the reversioner, does not necessarily make the decree realizable out of the entire estate, since they may have both contracted the debt without representing the estate.[14]

---

(1) Ramcomar v. Ichamoyi, 6 C. 36 (39); Hurry Mohun v. Gonesh, 10 C. 823 F.B.

(2) Sakhabhai v. Magan Lal, 26 B. 206 (215) F.B.; Popat v. Damodar, (1934) B. 390.

(3) Ib., (215, 216) F.B.; Dhondu v. Mishrilal, 60 B. 311 F.B.

(4) Eegella v. Mimushakari, 33 M. 492; Veerabhadra v. Marudaga, 34 M. 188; Maharaja of Bobbili v. Zemindar of Chundi, 35 M. 108.

(5) Shiamanand v. Har Lal, 18 A. 471; Dhiraj Singh v. Mangal Ram, 19 A. 300; Kallu v. Faiyaz Ali, 30 A. 394.

(6) Sheikh Ghasib v. Canchanan Singh, 15 Pat. 798 (808, 809); distinguishing the Bombay Full Bench case of Dhondu v. Mishri Lal, 60 B. 311 F.B.; on the ground that it failed to notice the P.C. Case, Lalit Mohan v. Dayamoyi, (1927) P.C. 41, affirming O.A. Dayamoyi v. Lalit Mohan, (1925) C. 401; Ramsewak v. Jamuna Prasad, (1937) Pat. 667.

(7) Prosunno v. Umedur, 13 C.W.N. 353; Giribala v. Srinath, 12 C.W.N. 769.

(8) Kristo v. Hem Chunder, 16 C. 511; Brajalal v. Jiban, 26 C. 285; Sadat Ali v. Hara Sundari, 16 C.W.N. 1070; Bireswar v. Kamal Kumar, 17 C.W.N. 337; Rameswar v. Provabai, 19 C.W.N. 313.

(9) Kallu v. Faiyazali, 30 A. 394; Krsto Moyee v. Prosonno, 6 W.R. 304.

(10) Ram Shewak v. Sheo Gobind, 8 W.R. 519; Narana v. Vasteva, 17 M. 208.

(11) Mohenia v. Ram Kishore, 23 W.R. 174; Brajalal v. Jiban, 26 C. 285 (300).

(12) Lalit Mohan v. Dayamoyi, (1927) P.C. 41; affirming O.A. Dayamoyi v. Lalit Mohan, (1925) C. 401; Sheikh Ghasit v. Pancham Singh, 15 Pat. 798 (809).

(13) Baijun v. Brij Bhookun, 1 C. 133 P.C.; Baijun v. Brij Bhookun, 24 W.R. 306.

(14) Mohenia v. Gouri Nath, 2 C.W.N. 162 (165).

2591. Sale for Arrears of Revenue.—The question what interest the purchaser takes on a sale held for arrears of revenue, must, for its answer, depend upon the terms of the revenue law under which the sale is held. So, on a sale held under Act XI of 1859, the question arose what interest the purchaser took by his sale. It was contended that the effect of S. 52 was to convey the estate subject to all encumbrances, but the court held that reading that section along with S. 13, the sale had the effect of conveying the entire estate.[1]

Wrongs of the heiress.

359. The reversioner is bound to pay for the tortious acts of the heiress committed for the benefit of the estate.[2]

2592. Analogous Law.—That the heir is personally liable for damages to which another becomes entitled on account of the tortious acts of his predecessor, is a branch of the general law, that he who takes the benefit, must equally bear the burden. But the extent of the heir's liability in such cases is neither unqualified nor unlimited. As Bowen, L. J., observed in a case: "The only cases in which apart from questions of breach of contract, express or implied, a remedy for a wrongful act can be pursued against the estate of a deceased person who has done the act appear to us to be those in which property, or the proceeds or value of property belonging to another, have been appropriated by the deceased person and added to his own estate or moneys. In such cases, whatever the original form of action, it is in substance brought to recover property, or its proceeds or value, and by amendment, could be made such, in form as well as in substance. In such cases the action, though arising out of a wrongful act, does not die with the person. The property or the proceeds or value which, in the lifetime of the wrong-doer could have been recovered from him, can be traced after his death to his assets and recaptured by the rightful owner thereon. But it is not every wrongful act by which a wrong-doer indirectly benefits that falls under this head, if the benefit does not consist in the acquisition of property, or its proceeds or value. Where there is nothing among the assets of the deceased that in law or in equity belongs to the plaintiff, and the damages which have been done to him are unliquidated and uncertain, the executors of a wrong-doer cannot be sued merely because it was worth the wrong-doer's while to commit the act which is complained of and an indirect benefit may have been reaped thereby."[3]

But in this respect the liability of the reversioner would seem to be greater, since he is equally liable for the heiress's torts committed for the benefit of the estate, though they may not have resulted in any benefit to it. In one case, the plaintiff, as reversioner, sued the widow for possession and mesne profits of certain property wrongly taken possession of by the widow's husband. He obtained a decree and, in execution, obtained possession of the property, but the decree for mesne profits remained unsatisfied, which he sought to enforce against her reversioners. It was held that the property of the husband in the hands of the reversioner was liable.[4] In another case, the widow had taken possession, in good faith, of certain property, from which she was ejected by a suit in

(1) Debi Das v. Bipro Charan, 22 C. 641 (643).

(2) Lachmi Narain v. Sham Sunder, 1 I.C. (A.) 116.

(3) Phillips v. Homfray, 24 Ch. D. 439.

(4) Lachmin v. Sham Sundar, 1 I.C. (A.) 116.

which mesne profits were also decreed. The decree-holder sued out execution against the reversioners, impleading them as her legal representatives, and they were held liable for mesne profits, because the widow had acted for the benefit of the estate.[1]

360 Decree against the heiress. The reversioners are bound by a decree passed against the heiress as representing the estate, unless it is shown that it was a decree obtained by collusion or fraud or that there had not been a fair trial of the rights in the suit.[2]

Explanation 1.—The decree in this section includes all proceedings consequent upon such decree including a sale in execution thereof.[3]

Explanation 2.—A decree passed against the heiress on a matter personal to her is not a decree passed against her as representing the estate.[4]

Explanation 3.—A decree otherwise valid is not rendered invalid merely by reason of the fact that it had been obtained by consent or compromise.[5]

Illustrations.

(a) A, widow, sues B for a declaration of the invalidity of his adoption. Her suit is dismissed on the ground that B's adoption was valid. On A's death, her daughter sues B for possession of the estate on the ground that B's adoption is invalid. The question is res judicata.[6]

(b) A, a widow, sues B for a declaration of the invalidity of B's adoption. Afterwards A compromises her claim with B and suffers a decree to be passed declaring B's adoption valid. On A's death, her daughter C sues B for possession of the estate, alleging the invalidity of B's adoption. The question whether the matter as to B's adoption is res judicata depends upon whether the decree in the previous suit had been obtained after a fair contest.[7]

(c) A, the mother of the last owner, obtains a decree for maintenance against his widow B. In execution she attaches and brings to sale the right, title and interest of B. The seller takes only the widow's estate as the decree was a personal decree against B.[8]

(d) A, the creditor of the last owner, sues and obtains a decree against the latter's widow B, in execution of which he sells the right, title and interest of B. The sale passes the entire estate and not merely B's life-estate.[9]

2593. Analogous Law.—A decree obtained against the heiress may be executed against the reversioner as her legal representative, who is bound by all proceedings taken against her, since he is the person "on whom the estate devolves" on her death.[10] It is true that the heiress takes a limited estate, and on her death, her reversioners do not succeed by any right derived through her, since they are the heirs of the last full owner. Now, the rule of res judicata, enacted in S. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, makes an adjudicated final only as between the same parties to the

(1) Lalji v. Kurki, 14 C.L.J. 90, following Ramkishore v. Kalli Kanto, 6 C. 479; Premmoyi v. Preonath, 23 C. 636.

(2) Jugul Kishore v. Jotendro, 16 C. 985 P.C.; Nagendrabala v. Panchanan, 20 C. 136 (case-law reviewed).

(3) Jugul Kishore v. Jotendro, 10 C. 985 P.C.; Jeban Krishna v. Brojo Lal, 30 C. 550 (555) P.C.

(4) Ib.

(5) Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna, A. 593 P.C.

(6) Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh, 40 A. 593 P.C.

(7) Ibid.

(8) Baijan v. Brij Bhukhan, 1 C. 133 (139,140) P.C. explained in Jugul Kishore v. Jotendra, 10 C. 985 (992).

(9) Jugul Kishore v. Jotendra, 10 C. 985 (990) P.C.

(10) S. 2 (11), Civil Procedure Code.

suit "or between parties under whom they or any of them claim."[1] But they are nevertheless her legal representatives because between her and them there is the privity of estate. But since the reversioners do not claim under the heiress, the rule of res judicata is, strictly speaking, inapplicable to them.[2] But both convenience and policy have sanctioned a qualified rule deduced from the underlying principle of res judicata, under which they are held bound, if (i) the heiress in the previous suit represented the estate, (ii) there was a bona fide litigation, and (iii) the decree was obtained on a fair trial of the matter in suit. These three conditions being fulfilled, there is no reason why the reversioners should be suffered to re-agitate the same matter which has already been decided against their predecessor in estate.[3]

2594. Moreover, it is the general rule, now enacted as a part of the statute law, that any person against whom a judgment is used as barring the re-trial of the same question, may show that it had been obtained by fraud or collusion,[4] added to which the reversioner is not bound by a decree obtained against the widow unless it appears or is shown that the character in which she was sued was such that she represented the entire interest and that, as such, she was charged with the double duty of protecting the dual interest—her own and that of her reversioners.[5] (§ 2605.)

The working of these rules in practice may now be examined.

2595. Representative Suit.— In the first place, then, the suit must be one in which the heiress was arrayed as representing the entire estate. It is not necessary that she should be so described. But what is necessary is that from the subject-matter and character of the suit, it must appear that she had been so sued. Such is necessarily the suit in which she sues for recovery of the inheritance,[6] or attacks the factum of validity of an adoption which, if good, would divest her estate.[7] But, on the other hand, where the decree for rent of a temporary tenure was obtained against the widow of a tenure-holder as administratrix of her husband's estate, it was held that the description of the widow as administratrix in the decree was not conclusive evidence against the reversionary heir, that the estate in his hands was not bound by the decree and that the decree, being in respect of a temporary tenure, was personal to the widow and could not, therefore, be executed against the reversioners.[8] So, a decree for rent of the estate in the hands of the daughter for the year of her possession is a personal decree. So is the decree for maintenance of a relation not charged on any estate.[9]

2596. Bona Fide Litigation.—Secondly, the decree must have been obtained on a bona fide litigation between herself and her adversary. There

(1) S. 11, C.P.C.

(2) Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh, 40 A. 93 P.C.

(3) Katamma v. Raja of Shivagunga, 9 M.I.A. 539; Jugal Kishore v. Jotendra, 10 C. 985 (991) P.C.; Munni v. Tirloki Nath, (1931) P.C. 114; Modi Malappa v. Subbayya, (1937) B. 458 (460).

(4) S. 44, Ev. A.

(5) Per Lord Romilly in Nugender v. Maminee, 11 M.I.A. 361; Kaiama Nachiar v. Raja of Shivganga, 9 M.I.A. 539 (604).

(6) Brojo Nath v. Jugeswar, 9 C.L.J. 346: 1 I.C. 62.

(7) Risal Singh v. Bulwant Singh, 37 A. 496, O.A. 40 A. 593 P.C.

(8) Baijan v. Brij Bhookun, 1 C. 133 P.C.; Kristo v. Hem Chunder, 16 C. 511; Brajlal v. Jiban, 26 C. 285, affirmed O. A. Jiban v. Brajlal, 30 C. 550 P.C.; Bireswar v. Kamal Kumar, 17 C.W.N. 337: 16 I.C. 437.

(9) Baijan v. Brij Bhookun, 1 C. 133.

is no bona fide litigation where one person sues to eject the widow and the latter absents herself or admits his claim. In neither case is there anything on record to show that the litigation was bona fide or that any question raised therein was fairly tried.[1] But this should not be treated as a general rule. For, it is conceivable that the case may be too righteous to admit of any contest, and consequently, the mere fact that the heiress did not contest the suit, does not suffice to take the suit out of res judicata. It depends upon its own facts. The court has to examine the record, if necessary, to see whether the litigation was bona fide notwithstanding that the heiress did not appear or did not consider worth her while to contest the suit.[2]

2597. Fair Trial.—Thirdly, the decree must have been obtained on a fair trial of the matters in suit. What is then a "fair trial"? It is apprehended that all that it means is that the heiress should have prosecuted her case with a reasonable diligence, furnishing all available evidence, withholding and suppressing none, and that the record should evince no collusion or secret compact or compromise presenting to the court an appearance which masks the reality of the case. A fair trial is perfectly consistent with any natural disadvantage from which the heiress may suffer. It is even consistent with a special disadvantage which may impair the force of her pleading. So, where the adoptive mother sued her adopted son for a declaration of the invalidity of his adoption, on the ground of want of authority from her husband, and the court upheld the adoption,[3] and where, in a subsequent suit by her reversioner for ejectment of the son, the latter pleaded res judicata, by reason of the previous decision, which the reversioner resisted on the ground that the previous suit was decided on a personal estoppel against the widow and the latter, in suing the defendant, did not represent the estate but only herself; the Privy Council overruled both the contentions holding that the previous suit had been expressly decided without recourse to the doctrine of estoppel, and that as to the second contention their Lordships held that, "notwithstanding the personal estoppel under which she laboured, the widow did represent the estate on the question of fact as to whether defendant had or had not been validly adopted."[4]

In other words, without representing the estate, the question of the validity of the defendant's adoption to her husband would be meaningless. It was, however, conceded that as a litigant she had laboured under a personal disadvantage in the previous suit by reason of her own adoption, but this did not suffice to remove the bar of res judicata, as it could not be said, in the language of the leading case, that there had not been a "fair trial of the right in that suit."[5] "In the absence of all authority, their Lordships cannot decide that a Hindu lady, otherwise qualified to represent an estate in litigation, ceases to be so qualified, merely owing to personal disability or disadvantage as a litigant, although the

---

(1) Sant Kumar v. Deo Saran, 8 A. 365; Sachit v. Budhua, 8 A. 429; Gobind v. Khumni Lal, 29 A. 487 (494); Mahadei v. Baldeo, 30 A. 75; Ghelabhai v. Javer, 37 B. 172; Jevan v. Vetha, 9 Bom.L.R. 885.

(2) Gur Nanak v. Jai Narain, 34 A. 385; Subbammal v. Avudaiyammal, 30 M. 3.

(3) Dharam Kuar v. Balwant Singh, 30 A. 549, O.A. 31 A. 398 P.C.

(4) Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh, 40 A. 593 P.C.

(5) Katama Nachiar v. Raja of Sivaganga, 9 M.I.A. 539.

merits are tried and the trial is fair and honest. The principle is that reversioners must risk that, so that there may be an end to litigation."[1]

Another question in this connection arises whether the reversioners are bound by a consent decrees passed against the widow. It is said that a Hindu widow, who is a limited or qualified owner, cannot confess judgment and be party to a consent decree so as to bind the reversioners,[2] but the decisions of the Privy Council[3] have rendered this view no longer tenable; and the sole test by which the decrees and compromises of limited owners are to be judged, is whether they were fair and suffered or made with due regard to the interests of the reversioners. So, the mere fact that the heiress did not contest the suit, or having contested it, filed an appeal which she afterwards withdrew,[4] does not render the decree ineffectual against the reversioners.

2598. Heiress Represents the Estate.—Since the estate vests in the female heir in her own right, it follows that she is entitled to represent it in all transactions concerning it.[5] Where, for instance, a suit is pending or a decree is passed with reference to the estate, she is, on the death of the last owner, entitled to continue or to defend the proceeding as his legal representative.[6] If a decree is executed against the estate of the deceasded, without joining her as his legal representative, subsequent proceedings do not affect the estate which she has inherited, and nothing passes by any sale of the estate made in the proceeding to which she was no party.[7] Co-widows are, as a rule, regarded as a single juridical person and must act together. But where a widow sued for the recovery of her husband's estate, both for herself and her co-widow, impleading the latter as a defendant, the court was held entitled to pass a decree for the entire property, if the co-widow was agreeable to such a course during the trial.[8] Since a Hindu widow represents the estate, any adjudication made in such suit might be availed of by her co-widow, though she had opposed it in the suit. As such, an adjudication in favour of a widow, claiming to represent the estate of her husband against an alleged adopted son, would enure for the benefit of her co-widow, even if the latter had disclaimed all interest in the estate and supported the adoption in that litigation, in her capacity of guardian of the adopted son.[9] There cannot be an acceleration of the right of a male reversioner by means of transactions between two or more joint female heirs without the knowledge or consent of the reversioner. A reversioner's cause of action does not arise under Art. 141 of the Limitation Act, until the death of all the limited owners, if there are more than one.[10]

Decree Against Her.

2599. Since the heiress represents the estate, any decree, fairly and properly obtained against her in regard to the estate is, in the absence of collusion or

(1) Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh, 40 A. 593 (604) P.C.

(2) Raja Lakshmi v. Katyayan, 38 C. 639 (643), following Roy Radha v. Nau Ratan, 6 C.L.J. 490 (525); Sheo Narain v. Khurgo, 10 C.L.R. 337; Sant Kumar v. Deo Saran, 8 A. 365; Gobind v. Khunnilal, 29 A. 487; Mahadei v. Baldeo, 30 A. 75, Jeram v. Veerbai. 5 Bom.L.R. 885; Rama v. Daji, 20 Bom.L.R. 947: 48 I.C. 125.

(3) Khunnilal v. Gobind, 33 A. 356 P. C.; Hiran v. Sohan, 18 C.W.N. 928 P.C.

(4) Ghelhabai v. Javer, 37 B. 172.

(5) Bhau v. Govind, (1878) B.P.J. 60.

(6) Natha v. Jamni, 8 B.H.C.R. (A. C.) 37; Hari v. Minakshi, 5 M. 5.

(7) Ramasami v. Sabu Kai, 8 M. H. C. R. 186; Siva v. Palani, 4 M. 401 (403); Subbhanna v. Venkata Krishnan, 11 M. 408; Jatha v. Venkatappa, 5 B. 14; Akoba v. Sakharam, 9 B. 429; Alukmonee v. Banee Madhub, 4 C. 677.

(8) Ramachari v. Saraswati, (1920) M.W.N. 721: 60 I.C. 246.

(9) Sukhdeo v. Bhulai, 16 N.L.R. 911.

(10) Muthiala v. Budhagunta, 39 M.L. J. 567: 60 I.C. 135.

fraud, binding on the reversionary heir, and where the merits are tried and the trial is fair and honest, a Hindu lady, otherwise qualified to represent the estate in litigation, does not cease to be so qualified, merely owing to a personal disability or disadvantage as a litigant.[1]

Unfair Trial.

2600. A converse case was decided by the same Board in a case in which the reversioners having disputed the daughter's right to succeed, the matter was referred to the arbitrators between the daughter and her son Amrit, then a minor, represented by his father on the one side and the reversioners on the other, but before they could decide, the parties effected a compromise, by which the reversioners were to receive the estate, the arbitrators were requested to give, and they in fact gave, their award in accordance with the compromise, which was filed in court and embodied into a decree. On the death of the daughter, her son sued the reversioners for possession, but the reversioners pleaded the award in bar of his claim which, Amrit pleaded, was a nullity, as secured by fraud during his minority and when he was not properly represented. The High Court overruled his contention, but, on appeal, the Privy Council reversed the decision of the High Court, holding that Amrit had merely a spes successionis, during the lifetime of his mother, and it could not be the subject of any contract or compromise. The action of Amrit's father, therefore, in referring to the arbitration any matter connected with his son's reversionary interest, was null and void. Moreover, the compromise was not beneficial, to the minor, and, therefore, not binding on him. The decree following the award did not determine or affect his reversionary rights. The minor was not even a party to the proceedings which culminated in the compromise being reduced to a decree. There had not then been a fair trial of the minor's rights in the previous suit, and it did not operate as res judicata to his claim.[2]

This was, then, a case in which there could have been no bona fide litigation and no settlement or compromise. Such was also the case of the widow who sued to recover her husband's estate. After partially examining some of her witnesses, she declined to proceed further with their examination and summoned the defendant, and on his failure to attend, her suit was dismissed. The widow did not appeal against that order. On her death, her daughter's sons sued the same defendant to recover the same property, and he pleaded the previous suit as res judicata. The High Court held that, in view of the circumstances disclosed by the facts of the previous disposal, it was obvious that the facts of the previous case should be closely examined, to see whether there had been a fair trial. Apparently, there was not, because the widow did not fairly prosecute her case and did not appeal against its closure. She was bound to protect not only her own interest but also the interests of the person who was to take after her death.[3]

(1) Katama Nachiar v. Raja of Shivganga, 9 M.I.A. 539; Jogul Kishore v. Jotendro, 10 C. 985 P.C.; Pratap Narain v. Triloknath, 11 C. 186 P.C.; Hurrinath, v. Mothoor Mohun, 21 C. 8 P.C.; Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh, 40 A. 593 P.C.; Mata Prasad v. Nageshar, 47 A. 883 P.C.; Munni Bibi v. Triloki Nath, (1931) P.C. 114; Vaithilinga v. Sriranga-thanni, 48 M. 883 P.C.; Jharula v. Jalandar, 39 C. 887; Mohendra v. Shamsunnessa, 19 C.W.N. 1280; Nand Kumar v. Rhada, 1 A. 282; Sachit v. Budhna, 8 A. 429; Hanuman v. Bhaganti, 19 A. 357 (371); Madan Mohan v. Akharyar, 20 A. 241; Ghelabai v. Javer, 37 B. 172; Bhogaraju v. Addepalli, 35 M. 560; Ganpat v. Bindeshari, 100 I.C. 481: 4 O.W.N. 140.

(2) Amrit Narayana v. Gaya Singh, 45 C. 120 P.C.

(3) Branomoye v. Kristo, 2 C. 222 (224, 225).

Explanation (3).

2601. Compromise Decree.—Since the decree is to be made on a fair trial of the matter in suit, a question arises, and has been considered in several cases, whether a compromise decree binds the reversion. It was at one time held that it did not,[1] since a compromise was a contract, and a decree on a compromise was indistinguishable from an alienation inter vivos, which did not bind the reversion. How could it then become (it was said) more binding by the mere fact that it was embodied in a decree? But a compromise decree may still be a fair decree more favourable to the reversion than what a decree might have been if passed on contest. It cannot, therefore, be asserted as a general rule that no compromise binds the reversioner. The more correct rule would appear to be that, though the reversioner, as such, cannot ipso facto reject a decree passed on a compromise, the question whether he is or is not bound by such a decree, depends upon whether it answers the general test: Was it bona fide and made with due care and caution in the interest of the estate? Moreover, a compromise may amount to a family settlement, and the reversioner will then be bound by it. It is immaterial whether it is called a compromise, for even a compromise is valid, if it is a fair settlement of rival claims. It has been so held by the Privy Council,[2] in which the reversioner had contended, on the strength of the earlier cases, that a compromise was indistinguishable from an alienation, but the Privy Council overruled this contention, holding that the compromise had been made under the advice of the District Officer, and that as a settlement of the family dispute, it bound the reversioners.

These cases have overruled the contrary held by the Indian Courts and settled the rule that a decree passed on a fair compromise will equally bind the reversioners if it is a fair settlement,[3] the burden of proving which is said to rest on the alience,[4] but it is not an alienation or subject to its restrictions.[5]

Compromise Out of Court.

2602. A compromise out of Court stands on the same footing and its validity is subject to the same test, viz., it is valid and would bind the reversioners, if it is a fair and bona fide compromise made by the female owner for the protection or benefit of the estate and not merely

(1) Sunt Kumar v. Deo Saran, 8 A. 365; Gobind v. Khunnilal, 29 A. 48; Mahandli v. Baldeo, 30 A. 75; Indro Kuar v. Abdool, 14 W.R. 146; Imrit v. Roop Narain, 6 C.L.R. 60 (81); Sheo Narain v. Kanurao, 10 C.L.R. 337; Radha Kissen v. Nauratan, 6 C.L.J. 490 (525); Rajlakshmi v. Katyayani, 38 C. 638 (673), followed in Tirupatiraju v. Venkayya, 45 M. 504 (511) F.B.; Jeram v. Veeraven, 5 Bom.L.R. 885; Rama v. Daji, 20 Bom.L.R. 947: 48 I.C. 125.

(2) Khunni v. Govind, 33 A. 356 (367) P.C.; Hiram Bibi v. Sohan Bibi, 18 C. W.N. 929: 24 I.C. 309; Hardie v. Bhagwan Singh, 50 I.C. (A.) 812 P.C.; Thakur Prasad v. Mt. Dipa, 10 Pat. 352.

(3) Beharilal v. Daud Husain, 35 A. 240; Kambinayani v. Kambinayani, 33 M. 473; Kumarasami v. Subramania, 31 M. L.J. 87; Kadakkrai v. Nadakkannu, (1921) M.W.N. 342: 62 I.C. 752, explained in Tirupatiraju v. Venkayya, 45 M. 504 F.B.; Rama v. Narayanasami, 51 M.L.J. 313: 96 I.C. 483: (1926) M. 609.

(4) Tirupatiraju v. Venkayya, 45 M. 504 F.B.

(5) Gur Nanaka v. Jai Narain, 34 A. 385; Hiran v. Sohan, 18 C.W.N. 929 P. C., following Khunnilal v. Gobind, 33 A. 356 P.C., overruling contra in Sohan v. Hiran, 1 I.C. (A.) 180, overruled O.A. Hiran v. Sohan, 18 C.W.N. 929 P.C.; Kambinayani v. Kambinayani, 33 M. 473; Kadakkrai v. Nadakkannu, (1921) M. W.N. 342: 62 I.C. 752; Beharilal v. Daud Husoin, 35 A. 240; Mohendra v. Shamsunnesa, 20 C.L.J. 157 (163), approved in Ram Sumran v. Shyam Kumari, 1 P. 741 (748) P.C.; Upendra v. Bindeseri, 20 C.W.N. 210.

for her personal advantage.[1] Moreover, the reversioner who has taken part in such compromise, and benefited himself thereby, would be stopped from disputing its validity. So, where the last owner's sister's son, A, disputed the right of the widow, B, to inherit her husband's estate but compromised his claim, by which the property was immediately divided amongst the widow and other members. A took share under the compromise but he was thereby recognized as the adopted son of another deceased uncle whose widow had taken a share, which she some six years later surrendered to him. On the death of B, four years later, A and his brother claimed the entire property as reversioners, but the Privy Council threw out A's claim, holding that A, having entered into and taken the benefit of the compromise, was precluded from claiming as the reversioner.[2]

Compromise When Invalid.

2603. But though the limited owner's right to compromise a claim is now beyond controversy, it must be a compromise, and not merely an alienation in the guise of a compromise. Every compromise presupposes a bona fide claim, and if there was no claim, there could be no compromise.[3] This is no exception to the rule that a compromise is binding if it is fair and made with due regard to the interests of the reversioners.

Alienation Distinguished.

2604. Since an alienation by the female heir stands upon a somewhat different footing, the distinction between a compromise and an alienation is of some importance. Apart from the obvious difference which exists between a transfer and a settlement of a doubtful claim, the latter implies the hushing of an antecedent title claimed through or under the last male holder.[4]

Explanation (2).

2605. Decree Against her Personally.—Again, since the heiress alone represents the estate, it has been held that in order to operate as res judicata, the decree should have been passed not personally, but as one representing the estate,[5] nor against some only of her representatives. So, where the widow executed a mortgage, on foot of which the mortgagee sued and obtained a decree against her, she preferred an appeal, but while her appeal was pending, she died, and the appeal was continued not by the reversioners but by the widow's personal representatives. It was dismissed and the mortgagee obtained possession. The reversioner sued him for possession, challenging his mortgage as fraudulent and without legal necessity. His suit having failed, he sued him again for redemption, on the ground that he was not bound by any proceedings continued since the death of the widow, and this contention was upheld by the High Court who held that since the decree of the trial judge merged in that of the court of appeal, and since that court had passed a decree against the widow's personal representatives, who could not represent the estate, there was no decree which bound the reversioner, and since there was a valid mortgage, as held in the previous suit against the reversioner, the latter was entitled to redeem it.[6]

---

(1) Mohendra Nath v. Shamsunnessa, 19 C.W.N. 1280: 27 I.C. 954 P.C., followed in Ramsumran v. Shyam Kumari, 1 Pat. 741 P.C.; Bhagwati v. Jagdam, 2 Pat.L.J. 471.

(2) Kanhai Lal v. Brij Lal, 40 A. 487 P.C.

(3) Anupnarain v. Mahabir, 3 Pat.L.J. 83: 48 I.C. 95.

(4) Bhagwati v. Jagdam, 2 Pat.L.J. 471.

(5) Lalit Mohan v. Dayamoyi, 45 C. L.J. 404: (1927) P.C. 41: 15 Pat. 798; Aurabinda v. Monorama, 55 C. 903 (911); Sheikh Ghasif v. Panchaman Singh, 15 Pat. 798.

(6) Kailash v. Girija, 39 C. 925 (930); Jathu Naik v. Venkatapa, 5 B. 14, explained in Devji Sambhu, 24 B. 135 (141, 142); Kanku v. Jadav, 43 B. 869.

In another case, the widow had mortgaged her husband's land in 1857. In 1865 she sued for its redemption, but her suit was dismissed, on the ground that she had, in a deposition made in 1859, admitted that her right had become extinguished by the operation of the clause for foreclosure. Her suit was dismissed, wrongly, because the High Court had, in the previous year, adopted the equitable rule against the literal construction of such clauses.[1] The widow appealed, but her appeal was disposed of as "adjusted." She died in 1902, and her reversioner sued, within twelve years of her death, for redemption, which was allowed by the court holding that the dismissal of her suit on her previous admission created, only a personal estoppel which did not bind her reversioners.[2] Of course, where the decree is personal to the heiress, all that can be sold in execution is her right, title and interest in the property. It does not affect the reversioner's interest, which will, however, pass if the decree is made against her as representing the estate.[3]

2606. Questions for Execution.—Where a decree is passed against a widow or other limited owner, the question whether it is or is not executable against the reversioner, is one relating to execution, which it is competent to the executing court to inquire into. The decree-holder may then show that the decree is such as binds the estate in the hands of the reversioner, while the latter may show that it does not. This inquiry, being essentially one for execution, cannot be relegated to a separate suit. If the decree binds the estate, so does the sale held in execution of such a decree. But decrees are often passed without specifying the interest affected, in which case, the question whether on the sale of the right, title and interest of the widow in execution of a decree, the whole interest or only her own interest in the family estate passes, depends on the nature of the suit in which the execution of the decree takes place. If the suit is on a personal claim against the widow, then merely the widow's limited estate is sold. If, on the other hand, the suit is against the widow in respect of the family estate, or upon a cause not merely personal against her, then the whole of the inheritance passes by the execution sale. In order to ascertain the quantum of interest affected by the decree, it is permissible to examine the judgment upon which the decree is passed.[4] So, where the plaintiff sued for and obtained a decree for her maintenance against the widow, in execution of which she attached whatever right and interest the judgment-debtor had in the estate, the court held it to be a personal decree, and, as such, one which in the execution sale conveyed only the life-interest of the widow. "The real question is what was liable to be sold under the decree, and what, in fact, was sold. The purchaser may have made a mistake. He may have thought that the court was selling something which they did not sell, but he was informed distinctly by the notification that the court was selling the interest of the defendant in the estate, and that besides that interest no other interest was being sold. It appears, therefore, to their Lordships that what was intended to be sold was the widow's interest only and not the absolute estate."[5] But the mere fact that the pro-

Explanation (1).

(1) Ramji v. Chinto, (1864) 1 B.H. C.R. 199.
(2) Kanku v. Jadav, 43 B. 869.
(3) Ishwari Prasad v. Babu Nandan, 47 A. 563; Moti Shah v. Chandharp, 48 A. 637.
(4) Jugul Kishore v. Jotendro, 10 C. 985.
(5) Baijun v. Brij Bhookun, 1 C. 133 (139, 140) P.C., explained in Jugul Kishore v. Jotendro, 10 C. 985 (992) P. C.

clamation advertised for sale of the right, title and interest of the heiress is not conclusive, since it is still a question for enquiry as to what that interest is, and in many cases, although the right, title and interest of the widow had been sold, the whole interest in the estate was held to have passed and the reversionary heir bound by it.[1]

2607. The question, in such cases, depends, as already stated, upon the nature of the suit. As Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., said: "Now, the cases make it clear that the courts, in determining the effect of an execution-sale, look to the substance of the whole matter and have declined to hold themselves fettered by any incorrect description, or by any informality in procedure, which can have no practical influence on the result. And so, it has constantly happened that where justice and equity require such a determination, it has been held that a greater or other interest in the property has passed than would be warranted by a strict adherence to the words of the sale notification or certificate in execution proceedings. Similarly, the whole estate of a deceased debtor has been held to be bound by proceedings in execution of a money-decree, though the actual heirs were not, in so many words, bound by the decree, but were substantially represented in the suit. And one can well understand how the courts, and more particularly the Privy Council, have declined to apply the more rigid test of English practice to proceedings in this country."[2] So, where the decree was passed against the widow, in respect of the rent of the estate due for a period when her husband was alive, the court held the sale to convey the absolute estate and not merely the interest of the widow against whom the decree was passed.

In some cases, the widow was held even to have sufficiently represented her minor sons living, who were held bound by the decree passed against her, unless they could show that the decree was not binding on the estate in their hands, by reason of the debt not being one for which the estate was liable.[3] The matters for consideration in such cases are:—

(1) What property could have been brought to sale in a properly constituted suit;

(2) What property was actually intended to be sold and bought; and

(3) Has there been such an error in the constitution of the suit or the conduct of the proceedings that effect cannot properly be given to the intention or, to state conversely, has there been a substantial representation of those interested in the property intended to be sold and bought?[4]

Explanation (2).

2608. Personal Decree.—Explanation 2 merely states the rule of construction, viz., that the nature of the decree must be determined by the nature of the cause of action. If it was personal to the widow, so is the decree. If it affected the entire estate, so does the decree. If the cause of action was personal, the fact that the decree was passed both against the heiress and her reversioners, would not make the entire estate liable.[5]

---

(1) Jugul Kishore v. Jotendro, 10 C. 985 (992) P.C.; Nagendrabala v. Panchanan, 60 C. 1230.

(2) Deoji v. Shambhu, 24 B. 135 (139).

(3) Achut v. Manjunath, 21 B. 539.

(4) Devji v. Sambhu, 24 B. 135 (146); Jhari Koeri v. Bijai Singh, 45 A. 613, explaining Jugal Kishore v. Jotendro, 10 C. 985; Jiban Krishna v. Brojo Lal, 30 C. 550, dissenting from Kristo Gobind v. Hem Chandar, 16 C. 511, following Sitaram v. Khandu, 45 B. 105; Kesho Prasad Singh v. Chandrika Prasad, 2 Pat. 217.

(5) Nobin Chandra v. Hemchandro, 19 C.W.N. 265.

361. (1) A suit to avoid an alienation may be brought by the presumptive reversioner within twelve years and by a presumable reversioner within six years from the date thereof.[1]

Limitation to avoid an alienation.

(2) And a suit for possession of the reversionary estate may be instituted as provided in the next section.[2]

2609. Analogous Law.—Art. 125 of the Limitation Act prescribes the period of limitation applicable to the suit of the nearest reversioner, which allows twelve years calculated from the date of alienation. But a remote reversioner must bring his suit within six years, under the general Art. 120, calculated from the same date.[3] Of course, neither the presumptive nor the presumable reversioner is bound to sue the heiress or the alienee during the former's lifetime. Their right of suit is a concession made with a view to having the question tried before evidence is lost by lapse of time.

But since the reversioner's suit is a representative suit, the cause of action arises on the date of the alienation, jointly and simultaneously for the entire body of the reversioners. If, therefore, an alienation by an heiress is not impeached in a declaratory suit, instituted, within the period of twelve years prescribed by Art. 125 of the Limitation Act, by the reversioners then in existence, a presumptive reversioner, though born after the lapse of twelve years from the date of the alienation, will be debarred from bringing a suit for a declaration in respect of it.[4] A collusive suit may, for the purpose of limitation, be treated as a private alienation, provided it is the necessary result of some collusive arrangement made by her to use the court as a medium of transfer, or in other words, if she intended to transfer the property and used the court-sale as a means to effect her purpose.[5] Otherwise, the alienation cannot be held to be made by the heiress within the meaning of Art. 125, and the only other article applicable would be Art. 120 and not Art. 125.

2610. On the death of the heiress, the reversioner gets another cause of action for recovery of possession of his estate for which he is entitled to institute a suit within twelve years of the heiress's death. If he has failed to set aside her alienation within the period mentioned in clause (1) he can ignore it in his suit for possession, and so drive the alienee to justify his alienation.[6]

Clause (2).

362. (1) The reversioner is entitled to sue for possession of immovable property, to which he becomes entitled on the death of a female limited owner, at any time within twelve years from her death, as provided in Art. 141 of the Limitation Act; or in case of its forfeiture, within the same period calculated from when the forfeiture is incurred, as provided in Art. 143 of the Limitation Act;[7]

Limitation for possession.

---

(1) Arts. 125, 120, Limitation Act.
(2) Ib. Art. 141.
(3) Guntupalli v. Guntupalli, 24 M.L.J. 183: 18 I.C. 710.
(4) Challagundla v. Madala, 41 M. 659 F.B.
(5) Ranga Rao v. Ranganayaki, 35 M.L.J. 364; Sheo Singh v. Jeoni, 19 A. 524; Ramsarup v. Ramdey, 29 A. 239.
(6) S. 356, Ill. (a).
(7) Subbi v. Ramkrishna, 42 B. 69 (77).

(2) Where, however, the property to be recovered is movable, he must sue within six years from the same event, under Art. 120 of the Limitation Act:[1]

(3) Provided that where the heiress had at any time set up an adverse title against the reversioner, his claim will be barred by her adverse possession for twelve years.[2]

2611. Analogous Law.—The starting point of limitation for recovery of the estate is, since the Limitation Act of 1871, the death of the heiress, prior to which possession adverse to the heiress was held to constitute possession equally adverse to the reversioner. And if adverse possession commenced against the former, it was held to continue to run as such against the latter.[3] In other words, under the Limitation Act (XIV of 1858), the starting point of adverse possession was its commencement against the heiress, and its starting point under the later Acts has been her death,[4] the nature and extent of the alienation (whether for life or absolute)[5] and the sex of the reversioner being both immaterial.[6]

As regards movables the reversioner's suit for possession would be subject to Art. 49 of the Limitation Act[7] though in some cases the Privy Council have held Art. 120 as more appropriate.[8]

2612. Limitation for Possession.—The special starting point of limitation applicable to a reversioner suing for possession of the immovable property allowing him 12 years from the death of the widow is an exception to the general rule that adverse possession has the effect of extinguishing all rights.[9] Under S. 1 (12) of the Limitation Act, 1859,[10] which prescribed 12 years for the recovery of any interest in immovable property, to which no other provision of that Act applied, and as there was no other provision in that Act corresponding to Art. 141, the courts were constrained to hold the general article as equally applicable to a reversioner suing on the death of a Hindu widow.[11]

Clause (1).

A special provision shifting the starting point for limitation from the date of adverse possession to the death of the female was inserted

(1) Runchordas v. Parvatibai, 23 B. 725 P.C.

(2) Sham Koer v. Rupan Koer, 29 C. 664 P.C.; Mahabir v. Adhikari, 23 C. 942 P.C.

(3) Amirtolall v. Rajooneekant, 23 W. R. 214 P.C.

(4) Runchordas v. Parvati, 21 B. 646, affirmed O.A. 23 B. 725 P.C.; Bijoy Gopal v. Krishna, 34 C. 329 P.C.; Persut v. Palut Roy, 8 C. 442; Srinath v. Prosunno Kumar, 9 C. 934; Harihar v. Dasarathi, 33 C. 257; Meeraw v. Girjanundan, 12 C.W.N. 857; Mukta v. Dad, 18 B. 216; Rakhmabai v. Keshav, 31 B. 1; Ram Kali v. Kedarnath, 14 A. 156; Hanuman v. Bhagauti, 19 A. 357; Amrit v. Bindesri, 23 A. 448, dissenting from Tikaram v. Shama Charan, 20 A. 42; Sreeramula v. Krishnamma, 26 M. 143.

(5) Ranchor Das v. Parbati Bai, 23 B. 725 (736) P.C., affirming O.A.; 21 B. 646 (670) Cursondas v. Vundrabandas, 14 B. 482 (488).

(6) Ranchordas v. Parvati Bai, 23 B. 725 P.C.; Jhumman v. Tiloki, 25 A. 425; Ram Dei v. Abu Jafar, 27 A. 494; Ram Singh v. Bhani, 37 A. 117; Sambasiva v. Ragava, 13 M. 512.

(7) Mahomed Riasat Ali v. Hasin Banu, 21 C. 157 P.C.; Runchordas v. Parvatibai, 23 B. 725 (736) P.C., affirming O.A. 21 B. 646; Aurabinda v. Monorama, 55 C. 903 (916) (either Art. 49 or Art. 120 applicable).

(8) Mahomed Riasat v. Hasin Banu, 21 C. 157 (163) P.C., Runchordas v. Parvati Bai, 23 B. 725 (736) P.C. affirming O.A. 21 B. 646.

(9) Ganpatibhatta v. Ramkrishnabhatta, 42 B. 69; Shambhu Prasad v. Mahadeo, 55 A. 554.

(10) S. 1, Cl. (12), Act (XIV of 1859).

(11) Nobin Chunder v. Guru Persad, B. L.R. (Sup. Vol.) 1008; Amrit Lal v. Rajonee Kant, 15 B.L.R. 10 P.C.; Vaithialinga v. Srirangath, 48 M. 883 (904) P.C.

in the Limitation Act of 1871,[1] and it has been reproduced in the later Acts[2] under all of which the reversioner whether a male or a female[3] is entitled to sue within twelve years from the date of the death of the female, although she may have been out of possession for more than twelve years.[4]

2613. But since remarriage under the Act or complete renunciation of the world by the female have the same effect, limitation, in the one case, starts from the date of the forfeiture under Art. 143,[5] and in the other the renunciation of the world which is said to amount to civil death,[6] and, the reversioner's right to sue is taken to commence thereupon. A remarriage which involves no forfeiture will, of course, give the reversioner no right to possession, and consequently, no right to eject a trespasser.[7] For so long as she is not naturally or civilly dead, or her estate otherwise forfeited, no act or alienation by, or adverse possession against, the female heir affects the reversioner whose right to possession accrues only on her death, and it is consequently, only from that date that adverse possession can affect his right.[8]

The death of the female being the sole starting point, any act such as that she had set up an adoption and transferred the estate purporting to be absolutely in favour of the alleged adoptee or a transferee for or without value, would not start limitation against the reversioner, since none of these acts amounts to civil death of the female or entails the forfeiture of her estate giving the reversioner the present right to possession which he needs to protect by suit.[9] Where the estate vests in two or more female limited owners, with the right of survivorship inter se, limitation under Art. 141 would start from the death of the last survivor. The fact that one co-widow had surrendered her interest in favour of another, does not accelerate succession and has no effect upon the reversioner's right.[10] But while no adverse possession against the widow affects the reversioner's limitation, adverse possession by her affects his right. A decision against the widow who fails to recover her estate within twelve years of her husband's death, only affects her title and cannot operate as res judicata against the reversioner.[11] The case is, however, different if the trespass commenced against the last full owner, in which case, the limitation having started against all comers, the intervention of the widow could not

---

(1) Art. 142, Act IX of 1871; Ram Singh v. Bhim, 38 A. 117; Tulsa Bai v. Bhagwat Prasad, 11 A.L.J. 333: 20 I. C. 179; Mahran v. Quarutullah, (1909) P.L.R. 121: 3 I.C. 984.

(2) Art. 141 (Act XV of 1877 and Act IX of 1908).

(3) Ranchordas v. Parvati Bai, 23 B. 725 P.C.; Jhumman v. Tiloki, 25 A. 425; Ram Dei v. Abu Jafar, 27 A. 494; Ram Singh v. Bhani, 37 A. 117; Sambasiva v. Ragava, 13 M. 512.

(4) Bankey Lal v. Raghunath, 51 A. 188 F.B.; Amrit Dhar v. Bindesri, 23 A. 448; Jhumman v. Tiloki, 25 A. 435; Gajadhar v. Parbati, 33 A. 312.

(5) Doraiswamy, In re, 12 M.L.J. 152: 15 I.C. 602; Nathu v. Nai Bahu, 11 N.L.R. 86.

(6) Nobo Kishore v. Hari Nath, 10 C. 1102 (1108) F.B.; Hem Chunder v. Sarnamoyi, 22 C. 354 (361).

(7) S. 2, Act XV of 1856.

(8) Curson Das v. Vundravan Das, 14 B. 482 (488), affirmed O.A. Vundravan Das v. Curson Das, 21 B. 646 (670), O. A. Ranchordas v. Parvati Bai, 23 B. 725 (736) P.C.; Ram Shewak v. Sheo Gobind, 8 W.R. 519; Hanuman v. Bhagauti, 19 A. 357.

(9) Bhagwati v. Murarilal, 15 C.W.N. 524: 7 I.C. 427; Curson Das v. Vundraban Das, 14 B. 482 (486), affirmed O.A. Vundraban Das v. Curson Das, 21 B. 646 (670), O.A. Ranchordas v. Parbati Bai, 23 B. 726 (736) P.C.; contra in Ramkrishna v. Tripara Bai, 33 B. 88; in Sreeramulu v. Krishtamma, 26 M. 143, both Arts. 141 and 144 held applicable.

(10) Mutaiyala v. Buradagunta, 39 M. L.J. 567.

(11) Ramchandra v. Kakutur, 32 M. L.J. 627: 42 I.C. 228.

arrest its operation, and if the widow is barred, so would be the reversioner.[1] So, again, where the widow sets up an adverse title on her own account, in which case, limitation against the reversioner commences to run as from the date of her assertion of such title, and he would be barred, unless he sues for possession within twelve years from that date, as provided in Art. 144 of the Limitation Act.[2]

2614. Limits of the Rule.—Art. 141 applies only to a reversioner succeeding to the estate of a female limited owner. It does not apply to cases in which the Hindu female had been in possession of the full estate and where the heir succeeds as her heir.[3] So, where a Dayabhag father died, leaving him surviving his two daughters and a daughter-in-law, being the widow of a predeceased son, who entered upon possession to the exclusion of the two daughters who were his rightful heirs. She sold the estate to the plaintiff, and the possession of these two was adverse for more than twelve years, which extinguished the title of the two daughters, after which one of them got into possession of the property, whereupon the plaintiff sued her and her sons. The court held that it could not decide on the title of the sons who had a mere contingency during the life of their mother, whom the plaintiff was entitled to oust on the ground of adverse possession. It was contended for her that since her sister had died within twelve years of the suit, and she had succeeded to her moiety by survivorship, the starting point for limitation against her was not the date of the daughter-in-law's adverse possession but her sister's death; but the court had no difficulty in holding that since the surviving sister succeeded not as reversioner to her sister but by survivorship, she could not claim the benefit of Art. 141 and was consequently subject to the ordinary rule regarding adverse possession.[4]

2615. Suit for Movables.—A suit for the recovery of movables or for compensation for wrongfully taking or injuring or wrongfully detaining the same is subject to Art. 49 of the Limitation Act.[5] But this Article has been held to apply only to a claim in respect of a specific movable property, and is inapplicable to a suit to establish a right to inherit the property of a deceased person,[6] or to recover it as such, to which Art. 120 would apply.[7] The question which of the two Articles should apply depends upon the nature of the claim made.

Clause (2).

---

(1) Mohendra Nath v. Shamsunnessa, 19 C.W.N. 1280: 27 I.C. 954.

(2) Jowala Buksh v. Dharum Singh, 10 M.I.A. 511 (535); Satgur v. Raj Kishore, 24 C.W.N. 394 P.C.; Sham Koer v. Dab Koer, 29 C. 664 P.C.; Lachan Koer v. Anant Singh, 22 C. 445 P.C.; Mahabir v. Adhikari, 23 C. 242; Kedar Nath v. Jatindra, 9 C.L.J. 236: 4 I.C. 44; Amrit v. Bindsri, 23 A. 448; Jhumman v. Tiloki, 25 A. 435; Gajadhar v. Parbati, 33 A. 312.

(3) Gobinda v. Dinanath, 23 C.W.N. 977: 56 I.C. 141; Malratijun v. Amrita, 42 B. 714; Municipal Council v. Foster, 41 M. 538; Soumya v. Kandasami, 17 I.C. (M.) 136; Chira Singh v. Gajraj, 18 O. C. 289: 33 I.C. 371.

(4) Sachindra Kishore v. Rajani, 18 C.W.N. 904: 27 I.C. 250.

(5) Aurabinda v. Manorama, 55 C. 903 (916), contra in Ranchordas v. Parvatibai, 23 B. 725 (736) P.C., not followed.

(6) Mahomed Riasat v. Hasin Banu, 21 C. 157 (163) P.C.

(7) Ranchordas v. Parvatibai, 23 B. 725 (736) P.C., affirming O.A. 21 B. 646. (But in this case the applicability of Art. 49 was neither argued nor considered. It appears to have been overlooked altogether.)

2616. The reversioner's suit for possession may be barred by the adverse possession of the heiress,[1] as where the widow sets up her title to ownership of the property, of which she was given possession as only a maintenance grantee;[2] or as a limited owner. The subject will be more fully discussed under S. 364 (6).

Clause (3).

---

(1) Vaithilinga v. Srirangath, 48 M. 883 (904) P.C.; Sham Koer v. Dab Koer, 29 C. 664 (671) P.C.; Mahabir Pershad v. Adhikari, 23 C. 942 P.C.; Lachhan Kunwar v. Manorath Ram, 22 C. 445 (450) P.C.; Kedar Nath v. Jatindra, 9 C.L.J. 236: 4 I.C. 44.

(2) Sham Koer v. Dab Koer, 29 C. 664 (671) P.C.; Satgur v. Raj Kishore, 42 A. 152 P.C.

CHAPTER XXVII.

STRIDHAN.

2617. Topical Introduction.—The law of stridhan is most difficult, as it is the least settled branch of Hindu Law. In its forefront stands its etymological definition by Vidnyaneshwar, and its repudiation by the Privy Council. The term "stridhan" literally means "woman's property," and Vidnyaneshwar defined it as such. But as has been seen before, woman's property is a generic term, and embraces property which a woman may acquire by inheritance or partition, or it may come to her by gift from her parents, husband or his or her other relations. Yadnyavalkya employed the term "stridhan" to denote the quality of the right in property which she obtained mostly by gift over which she had the absolute power of disposal. In describing such property he mentioned that which was obtained by gift from her husband "et cetera" ("adi"). Vidnyaneshwar seized hold of this word and explained "et cetera" to include all her other estate, however acquired, with the result, that if his explanation were accepted, all that woman acquires by inheritance and partition would fall into the same category as her bridal gifts, with the further result that they would all be at her absolute disposal and on her death pass to her own heirs. Now, as Vidnyaneshwar's scheme of woman's right was limited and followed the earlier conception of her dependance and cautious concession of enjoyment, the Privy Council would not allow the enlargement of her rights as the result of a single text, and one wholly out of keeping with the general tenor and purpose of his general scheme. In the very first case, which they had to try they repelled the logical deduction pressed upon them.[1]

2618. In later cases[2] they reiterated and reinforced their earlier stand-point with the result that Vidnyaneshwar's definition of stridhan stands repudiated, add the term stridhan must now be limited to comprise only such property as the woman acquires otherwise than by inheritance and partition, and over which she possesses plenary powers of disposal. Leaving out of account then all other property, stridhan has but a limited significance. It is a legal concept—a term of art and bears only the meaning assigned to it in S. 364 where all the sources of her acquisition of such property are set out.

2619. This stridhan the owner may dispose of by a gift inter vivos, or by will. But before the legislative intervention liberalizing her rights acquired by gift or devise but sexual capacity was held to limit the estate of the donee at the devisee as the case may be, but now that disability remains limited to an estate acquired by inheritance.

---

(1) Thakoor Deybe v. Rai Bulukram, 11 M. I.A. 139 (175).

(2) Bhugwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M. I.A. 481; Chotay Lall v. Chunno Lall, 4 C. 744 P.C.; Sheo Shunkar v. Debi Sahai, 25 A. 468 P.C.; Sheo Pertab v. Allahabad Bank, ib., 476 P.C.; Debi Mangal v. Mahadeo, 34 A. 234 P.C.; overruling O. A. Debi Mangal v. Mahadeo, 32 A. 253, also Chhiddu v. Naubat, 24 A. 67 (74, 76).

This is, again, anomaly, but when law creates artificial barriers, anomalies do creep in, and they abound in the law relating to succession, which follows no uniform general rule, but depends upon, at least six disturbing factors: (1) The kind of stridhan; (2) the fact whether the owner was a maiden or married; and (3) if married, whether she had children, or (4) was childless; (5) even the mode of her marriage; and (6) lastly, the school to which she is subject. Even in the case of the heirs when they are daughters preference is given to unmarried and indigent daughters over daughters who are married and well off; while the Bengal law discriminates between daughters who have a son or are likely to beget a son and those who are widowed and sonless.

It might be supposed that in the face of these numerous distinctions it would not be possible to generalize upon the law of succession to stridhan. And the text writers do not attempt it. But if the subject is analysed, it will be seen that there is a possibility of reducing it to a system.

In the first place, though stridhan is acquired in a variety of ways, an examination of the subject will show that all its sources are reducible to two main heads. Stridhan which the older Smritikars describe in detail, and which is all they provide for, has come to be understood as the technical or proper stridhan. It forms an inconsiderable part of woman's absolute estate. It, however, follows the special rules of devolution upon which there is the greatest conflict. Other stridhan, described in clauses 1-7 of S. 364, is subject to a more general rule, because it has only latterly become recognized, and its law of succession is not tramelled by any textual directions. It is then possible to formulate the general rules subject to which this description of stridhan passes. Both as regards its enjoyment and the law of its succession, it is not a wide departure from the general law. It is, however, natural that the mother's estate should first go to her female issue. As remarked in a case: "The law of succession, therefore, generally follows the female line."

363. (1) "Stridhan," unless otherwise expressed or necessarily implied, means the woman's property acquired by her otherwise than by inheritance or partition, over which she possesses full power of disposal, and which, on her death, devolves upon her own heirs.

"Stridhan" defined.

(2) It includes property into which it is converted by sale, exchange or otherwise.

Illustrations.

(a) A possesses two properties B and C as her stridhan. She makes a gift of B to D and devises C to E. Both the gift and the devise are valid as the properties being A's stridhan, she possessed the absolute power of disposal over them.

(b) A inherits the property B from her husband. She accumulates its income which she bequeaths to C by will. The bequest is void as though A possessed the absolute power of disposal over B's income, it was not her stridhan. She could not, therefore, bequeath it.

2620. Analogous Law.—The following texts support the rules stated in the section:—

Manu 194.—"What was given before the nuptial fire, what was given on the bridal procession, what was given in token of love, and what was received from a brother, a mother, or a father, are considered as the six-fold separate property of a married woman.[1]

Yadnyavalkya.—"What has been given to a woman by the father, the mother, the husband or a brother, or received by her at the nuptial fire, or presented to her on her husband's marriage to another wife as also any other separate acquisition is denominated a woman's property."[2]

Mitakshara (citing Manu).—"The enumeration of six sorts of woman's property by Manu is intended not as a restriction of a greater number, but as a denial of a less.

"That which was given by the father, by the mother, by the husband, or by a brother; and that which was presented (to the bride) by the maternal uncles and the rest (as paternal uncles, maternal uncles, etc.) at the time of the wedding before the nuptial fire; and a gift on a second marriage, gratuity on account of supersession as will be subsequently explained ('To a woman whose husband married a second wife let him give an equal sum as a compensation for the supersession) and also property which she may have acquired by inheritance, purchase, partition, seizure or finding are denominated by Manu and the rest woman's property.'"[3]

Dayabhag.—"20. Over that which has been received by her from any other but the family of her father, mother or husband or has been earned by her in the practice of mechanical art (as spinning or weaving) her husband has dominion and full control. He has a right to take it, even though no distress exists. Hence though the goods be hers, they do not constitute woman's property; because she has not independent power over them.

"21. But in other description of property excepting these two, the woman has the sole powers of gift, sale or other alienation.''[4]

2621. What is Stridhan.—With the exception of the Mitakshara all texts use the term "stridhan" to denote the property of a woman over which she has absolute power of disposal. Yadnyavalkya uses it in that sense, and illustrates his meaning by enumerating certain well-known kinds of that property, adding the word 'adya' i.e., 'and the like,' or 'et cetera' as meaning that his enumeration is merely illustrative and not exhaustive. The author of Mitakshara takes advantage of this incomplete enumeration and explains the word "adya" to mean all other property acquired by a woman whether by inheritance or partition. It might at first be supposed that Vidnyanashwar, an ascetic and expositor of the conservative thought was striving to enlarge the rights of woman by conferring upon women absolute power of disposal over property, even acquired by them by inheritance or partition. But this does not appear to have been his object, though by enlarging the meaning of the term and giving it a wider significance he clearly intended all such property to descend to the woman's special heirs. This was in itself a serious innovation and was not submitted to by the other commentators and the courts who held that it did not descend in the special line prescribed for stridhan, strictly so called,[5] and that in this respect there was no distinction between a woman's property

---

(1) Manu, IX-194 cited in Mit., II-XI-4.

(2) Yad., II-144.

(3) Mit., II-XI-5.

(4) Dayabhag, IV-I-21. IV-II-26 contains a long disquisition on the woman's stridhan explanatory of texts of Manu and Katyayan.

(5) Thakoor Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 139; Bhagwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M.I.A. 47; Chotay Lall v. Chunnoo Lall, 4 C. 744 P.C.; Muttu v. Dorasinga, 3 M. 290 P.C.; Chelikani v. Chelikani, 25 M. 678 P.C.; Sheo Shankar Lal v. Devi Sahai, 25 A. 468 (473) P.C. reversing O.A. Debi Sahai v. Sheo Shankar Lal, 22 A. 353.

inherited from a male and that which she inherited from a female,[1] and that on this point there is no distinction between the Mitakshara and the Mayukh[2] or the Bengal laws.[3] In other words, property acquired by inheritance and partition[4] by a woman is not her stridhan and Vidnyaneshwar is not to be followed when he defines stridhan as including such property.[5]

2622. Ignoring, then the wider definition of the term "stridhan", contained in the Mitakshara, as incorrect, there remains its original connotation, and in that sense, the term has now come to be recognized, and will be used throughout in this chapter. Stridhan is sometimes spoken of and defined as property of a woman over which she possesses the unfettered power of disposal. But all property over which she possesses such power is not necessarily her stridhan. For example, she possesses an absolute power of disposal over the income of her inherited estate; but it is not her stridhan, because, on her death, it devolves upon the heir of the last owner, and not on her own stridhan heir. Only such property over which she exercises uncontrolled dominion when alive and which, on her death, devolves on her own heirs in her stridhan.[6] On the other hand, a sister in Bombay inheriting to her brother takes his property as her stridhan, because she has an absolute power of disposal over it during her lifetime and on her death it devolves upon her own heirs, namely, her own daughters.[7]

2623. This being then the test, in order to determine whether any property is a woman's stridhan or peculium, the question to inquire is not so much how it was acquired as what power of disposal she possesses over it. It is conceded that the following six kinds of property are undoubtedly her stridhan.

(1) Nuptial gifts (Katyayan 1-2).

(2) Gifts through affection made by the father-in-law, the mother-in-law and by the elders (Katyayan 3).

(3) Gifts by the father,[8] mother, brother[9] (Katyayan 3-6), the husband[10] or his relations.[11] It is equally conceded that this list is not exhaustive. Consequently, it has been held that whatever a woman acquires by her own exertion[12] or by adverse possession[13] becomes her stridhan. Property absolutely gifted or devised to the wife become her stridhan if it

(1) Vijiarangam v. Lakshman, 8 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 244 (272); Manilal v. Rewa, 17 B. 758 (761); Vira Sengappa v. Rudrappa, 19 M. 110 (118); Sheo Sankar Lal v. Debi Sahai, 25 A. 468 (473) P.C.; Sheo Partab v. Allahabad Bank, 25 A. 476 P.C.

(2) Vijiarangam v. Lakshman, 8 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 244 (260); Narmada v. Bhagwantrai, 12 B. 505; Manilal v. Rewa, 17 B. 758 explained in Sheo Shankar Lal v. Debi Sahai, 25 A. 468 (474) P.C. reversing O.A. Debi Sahai v. Sheo Shankar Lal, 22 A. 353.

(3) Huri Dayal v. Grish Chunder, 17 C. 911 (916).

(4) Debi Mangal v. Mahadeo, 34 A. 234 P.C. overruling O.A. 32 A. 253 and contra in Chhiddu v. Naubat, 24 A. 67: Sri Pal v. Surajbali, ib. 82.

(5) Janakisetty v. Miriyala, 32 M. 521 (524); Sengamalathammal v. Valayudu, 3 M.H.C.R. 312.

(6) Phukar Singh v. Ranjit Singh, 1 A. 661.

(7) Bhaskar v. Mahadeb, 6 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 1.

(8) Guruprasad v. Nafar Das, 11 W.R. 497; Muthapudayan v. Ammani, 21 M. 58.

(9) Manu IX-194; Munia v. Puran, 5 A. 310 F.B.

(10) Radha v. Bisheshur, 6 N.W.P.H.C.R. 279; Thakro v. Goran, 10 A. 197 P.C.; E. v. Satnarayan, 53 A. 437.

(11) Hurry Mohun v. Shonatun, 1 C. 275.

(12) Narmada v. Bhagwantrai, 12 B. 505; Subramanian v. Arunachellam, 28 M. 1 F.B.

(13) Kantai v. Ameri, 32 A. 189; Mohim Chunder v. Kashi, 2 C.W.N. 161; Magli v. Ludli, 13 I.C. 644.

was so intended.[1] So are the arrears of maintenance due to her.[2] Where it was shown that a childless Jain widow was by custom, entitled to deal with the property inherited by her, at her pleasure, it was held that that property becomes her stridhan.[3] It has already been stated that there is no presumption that property in possession of a woman is her stridhan (S. 335, Com.).

2624. Not Stridhan.—But property acquired by inheritance is not her stridhan notwithstanding the contrary laid down by the Mitakshara,[4] it being immaterial whether the person to whom she inherits was a male or a female, her husband or any other relations,[5] or whether the property is movable[6] or immovable. A maiden daughter inheriting the stridhan of her mother does not acquire it as her own stridhan.[7] Such is also the estate of one co-widow's stridhan.[8]

The case is, of course, the same when she inherits from her father.[9] So again, while nuptial gifts are stridhan, gifts made after marriage, such as ornaments made by the father to his daughter subsequent to her marriage are not her stridhan.[10] Savings from the income of a widow's life estate are not her stridhan, and if she has not disposed of them in her life, they follow the estate.[11] Under the Mithila law, immovable property, taken as a gift by the wife from her husband is heritable but not alienable, except for necessary purposes, even with the consent of the husband.[12] In this view she has only a disqualified right in her stridhan.

What property is stridhan.

364. The following property constitutes a woman's stridhan:—

(1) Property inherited by female heirs born in the family and subject to the Bombay School of Law.[13]

(2) Income and its savings from property inherited by female heirs elsewhere, not being an accretion thereto.[14]

---

(1) Thakro v. Ganga, 10 A. 187 P.C.

(2) Court of Wards v. Mohessur, 16 W.R. 76.

(3) Hukum Chand v. Sital Pershad, 50 A. 232.

(4) Debi Mangal v. Mahadeo, 34 A. 234 (238) P.C.; Janakisetti v. Miriyala, 32 M. 521; Sengamalathammal v. Velayuda, 3 M.H.C.R. 312; Panchhnund v. Lalshan, 3 W.R. 140; Janki Setty v. Miriyala, 6 M.L.T. 196.

(5) Debi Mangal v. Mahadeo, 34 A. 234 P.C.; Sheo Shankar v. Debi Sahai, 25 A. 468 P.C.; Sheo Pertab v. Allahabad Bank, 25 A. 476 P.C.; Chotaylall v. Chunnolall, 4 C. 744 P.C.; Bhagwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M.I.A. 487; Sengamalathammal v. Velayuda, 3 M.H.C.R. 312; Viragangappa v. Rudrappa, 19 M. 110; (Madras Law the same); Sooryudu v. Hanumayya, 32 M. 521; Muthu v. Dora, 8 I.A. 99 (rule applicable to Carnatic) contra in Sri Pal v. Surajbali, 24 A. 67 (82) overruled by the contrary held by the Privy Council.

(6) Chandan v. Ishri, (1884) A.W.N. 67.

(7) Sheo Shankar v. Debi Sahai, 25 A. 468 (474) P.C.; Sooryudu v. Hanumayya, 32 M. 521; Janakisetty v. Miriyala, 6 M. L.T. 196.

(8) S. 355, Aviswary Anandaji v. Sivaji, 49 M. 116 (152); Raghavalu v. Kausalya, (1937) M. 607.

(9) Chotay Lall v. Chunnoo, 22 W.R. 496.

(10) Gopal v. Ram Chandra, 28 C. 311 following Jadu Nath v. Bussunt, 19 W.R. 264.

(11) Ishri v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 324; Apparao v. Gopala, 31 M. 321.

(12) Hitendra v. Rameshwar, 4 P. 510.

(13) Mayukh, IV-X-26; Vijiarangam v. Lakshuman, 8 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 244 (261); Bhagirathi Bai v. Kanhujirav, 11 B. 285 (303, 310); Gandhi v. Jadab, 24 B. 192; Gulappa v. Tayawa, 31 B. 453.

(14) Sheo Lochan v. Saheb Singh, 14 C. 387 (393, 394) P.C.; Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 (442) P.C.; Raja Bahadur v. Indarpal, 26 C. 871 878) P.C.; Nabakishore v. Upendrakishore, 26 C.W.N. 322 (325) P.C.; Akhanna v. Venkayya, 25 M. 351 (359, 360).

(3) Property acquired by grant, gift, or devise from a relation or a stranger which confers an absolute power of disposal.[1]

(4) Property given for the purpose, or in lieu of maintenance, not being property allotted on partition to a wife or widow.[2]

(5) Accretions to and purchases made out of such property.[3]

(6) Property acquired by adverse possession.[4]

(7) Property acquired by self-exertion.[5]

(8) Wedding gifts, and more particularly the following[6]:—

(i) Yautuk including—

(a) Adhyagnik stridhan—gifts made before the nuptial fire, i.e., at the actual marriage ceremony, and

(b) Adhyavahnik stridhan—gifts received at the time of the marriage procession.

(ii) Sulk—or gratuity.

(9) Adhyavedanik—or the compensation given by the husband to his wife on his marrying another wife.[7]

(10) Anvadheyak—or gifts made after marriage by her relations or by her husband's relations.[8]

2625. Analogous Law.—All the clauses of this section are drawn from the decided cases. Of the ten clauses, clauses 8-10 alone are referred to in the texts cited under the last section as constituting stridhan, but as the court remarked: "We are not prepared to hold that the rules of Hindu Law are so inelastic as to be capable of application only to such description of interests in the property as formed the subject-matter of transactions at the time when the rules were first formulated. Indeed, if the rules of Hindu Law were so narrowly construed and applied, it would be impossible to administer them because, in any case, the courts, would be called upon to hold a preliminary enquiry as to when a particular rule was first laid down and also as to what kinds of interest in property were recognized at that time."[9] Moreover, the six-fold description of property was never intended to be exhaustive.

The rest are generally described or necessarily implied. The woman's stridhan was formerly the battle ground for interminable logamachies being a topic on which, according to Kamalakar, "the lawyers fight tooth and nail,"[10] and Jimut Vahan himself was glad to close the subject with these words: "Thus has been explained the most difficult subject of succession to a childless woman's stridhan."[11]

---

(1) Manu, IX-200; Doorga v. Tejoo, 5 W.R. (M.A.) 53; Court of Wards v. Mohessur, 16 W.R. 76; Judoonath v. Bassunt, 19 W.R. 264; Salemma v. Lachman, 21 M. 100; Subramaniam v. Arunachelam, 28 M. 1.

(2) Doorga v. Tejoo, 5 W.R. (M.A.) 53; Nellai Kumaru v. Marakathammal, 1 M. 166; Subramania v. Arunachalam, 28 M. 1.

(3) Appa Rao v. Gopala, 31 M. 321.

(4) Lajwanti v. Safachand, 5 L. 192 P.C.; Kanhai Ram v. Amri, 32 A. 189; Mohini Chunder v. Kashi Kant, 2 C.W.N. 161; Maghli v. Ladli, 13 I.C. 644; Prattipati (In re), 11 M.L.T. 261: 15 I.C. 403.

(5) Katyayan cited in Dayabhag IV-1-10 explained in Salemma v. Lutchmana, 21 M. 100 (102).

(6) Dayabhag, I-II-13, 14; May. VI-X-17; Sm. Ch., IX-III-13 Ib., cl. (a) Manu, IX 194; Narad, (Jolly) 95; Mit., II-XI-2; Churamun v. Gopi, 13 C.W.N. 994 (996) Ib., Cl. (1) (b) Manu, IX-194; Bistoo Pershad v. Radha, 16 W.R. 115 (ii) Mit., II-XI-6.

(7) Mit., II-XI-6.

(8) Manu, IX-194; Mit., II-XI 57; Basanto v. Kamakshya, 33 C. 25 P.C.; Ram Gopal v. Narain, 33 C. 315; Gopal v. Ram Chandra, 28 C. 311; Sitabai v. Wasant Rao, 3 Bom. L.R. 201.

(9) Ram Gopal v. Narain, 33 C. 315 (319).

(10) W. & B. H. L. (3rd Ed.) 145; Bannerji's Marriage and Stridhan, (4th Ed.). 290.

(11) Ib., Dayabhag, IV-III 42 (Cole-

2626. Bombay Females.—It is now settled that females outside Bombay, to whatever school subject, do not acquire an absolute estate in property inherited by them whether from a male or a female, or obtained on partition (§§ 2416-2417). But as has been seen before, in Bombay female relations born in the family take an absolute estate in the property inherited from a male other than the husband, and all females inheriting stridhan take the property so inherited as their stridhan which devolves upon their own heirs. (S. 380.)

Clause (1).

2627. Income and Its Savings.—A Hindu widow may dispose of by gift or will the savings of her limited estate.[1] The heiress being the owner[2] of her inherited estate, it follows that the income she receives therefrom is her own, and she may keep or invest it at her discretion.[3] Not being a trustee of the estate, she is not bound to capitalize her savings, nor can the reversioner call her to account for the unexpended surplus in her hands. This view of the law has now been settled after some conflict on the subject of the woman's power over her income. In some earlier cases even the Privy Council said: "If she took the estate only of a Hindu widow, one consequence, no doubt, would be that she would be unable to alienate the profits, or that at all events whatever she purchased out of them would be an increment to her husband's estate."[4] Four years later this view was modified in a case in which it was said: "It, therefore, becomes unnecessary to decide what might have been the effect of a distinct intention on her part, if it had been proved, to appropriate it herself and to sever from the bulk of the estate such purchases as she had made with the view of conferring them on her adopted son."[5] But in a later case decided in 1883 Sir Arthur Hobhouse pointed out that the ownership by the widow of her husband's estate clearly gave her the right to expend or to save its income, adding: "That it is difficult to specify the point of time at which the widow loses her control over the unexpended portion of her income from her husband's estate. If she may spend or give away the whole, may she not put some by? If she saves one year or month, may she not spend those savings the next year or month? If she may save and spend again may she not place her savings so as to get some income from them"?[6] He then added: "It was not possible to lay down any sharp definition of the line which separates accretions to the husband's estate from income held in suspense in the hands of the widow as to which she has not determined whether or no she will spend it."[7] "The true test to be applied to cases of this description is to determine from the surrounding circumstances the intention of the widow. Did she intend to treat the disputed property as part and parcel of the estate of her husband or did she treat it as a brooke's translation omits the words quoted in the text).

Clause (1).

---

(1) Navaneetha Krishna v. Collector, (1935) M. 1017.

(2) Vesonji v. Chanda Bibi, 37 A. 369 P.C.

(3) Soorjeemoney v. Dinobundho, 9 M.I.A. 123, explained in, Ishri Dutt v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 324 (335) P.C.; Lachmun v. Kallichurn, 19 W.R. 292 P.C.; Venkata v. Venkata, 1 M. 281 affirmed, O.A. 2 M. 333 P.C.; Saodamini v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 P.C.; Nabakishore v. Upendra Kishore, 26 C. W.N. 322 (325) P.C.; 65 I.C. 305; Charusila v. Mrinalini, 64 I.C. (C). 531; Keshav v. Maruti, 46 B. 37; Subramaniam v. Arunachelam, 28 M. 1 (5); Shyam Narain v. Jadu Nath, 25 O.C. 41.

(4) (1870) Bhabut Daee v. Bholanath, 1 C. 104 P.C.

(5) (1874) Gonda v. Oodey Singh, 14 B.L.R. 159 P.C.

(6) Ishri Dutt v. Hansbutti, 10 C. 324 (334) P.C.

(7) Ib., p. 337.

temporary saving liable to be applied by her subsequently for her own purposes."[1]

2628. Apart from such cases already discussed, (§§ 2435-2439) it is now settled that the female heir is entitled to treat and dispose of in her lifetime the savings from her income as her own stridhan.[2] But while the courts are now agreed on this point, some of them seem to shudder at the consequence of their view. For if the property so acquired is at her absolute disposal, there is no reason why she should not be entitled to dispose of it by deed or will, and failing which, why its devolution should not follow the usual course of her stridhan.[3] (§ 2453).

But the same latitude is denied by the other courts who, while conceding to her the unfettered power of disposal inter vivos, deny to her the right of bequest,[4] and even hold that the estate so undisposed of should be treated as an accretion to the corpus and follow the line of its devolution. It has, consequently, been held that where her agent had realized income, but failed to account for it to her, he was liable to account for it to the reversioner.[5] And so where a widow in possession of her husband's estate did not collect a mortgage debt due to her during her lifetime, it was held to become an accretion to the estate.[6] But, on the other hand, where the widow had mortgaged with possession her husband's estate, but, on her death, her reversioners took possession of the properties, and realized the rents that had accrued due during the widow's lifetime, the moneys so realized were held to be assets of the widow in the hands of the reversioners, and, as such, liable to satisfy the claim of the mortgagees.[7]

2629. In another case, the widow purchased certain lands out of the savings of her estate, which she had inherited from her husband, and which she sold during her lifetime. On her death, her reversioner sued to eject her alienee on the ground that the properties were accretions to the estate. The trial Judge upheld the alienee's contention, which, however, was reversed by the High Court who upheld the reversioner's contention. The alienee appealed to the Privy Council who said: "Now there can, their Lordships think, be no doubt that whatever stridhan she possessed was due to the accumulated savings from the income of the property, which she received from her husband's estate, and though, it is true, that when that property had been received, it would be possible for her to so deal with it that it would remain her own, yet it must be treated and shown to have been so dealt with, and in this case, there is no sufficient evidence of this having been done."[8] Their Lordships mentioned two facts

(1) Bhakabati v. Sohoodra, 16 C.W.N. 834: 13 I.C. 691 (693).

(2) Sowdaminee v. Administrator-General, 20 C. 433 P.C.; Naba Kishore v. Upendra Kishore, 26 C.W.N. 322 (325) P.C.: 65 I.C. 305; Subramaniam v. Arunachalam, 28 M. 1 (5); Keshav v. Marwti, 46 B. 37; Ahkanna v. Venkayya, 25 M. 351; Nihal Khan v. Hur Churn, 1 Agra 219; Puddo Monee v. Dwarka Nath, 25 W.R. 335 (340); Narain v. Jadu Nath, 25 O.C. 41 and cases cited supra.

(3) Subramaniam v. Arunachelam, 28 M. 1 (5); followed in, Veeraraghava v. Kota, 3 M.L.W. 422: 33 I.C. 532; Pethasari v. Sendamarai, 8 M.L.T. 284: 8 I.C. 385; Aviswaryanandaji v. Sivaji, 49 M. 116: (1926) M. 84; Latur Rai v. Bhagwan Das, (1936) Pat. 80.

(4) Sarat Chandra v. Charusila, 55 C. 918 (933, 934) (dissented) from in Mohini Mohan v. Rashbehari, I.L.R. (1937) C. 229 (232); Sridhar v. Kalipada, 16 C.W.N. 106; Wahid Ali v. Tori Ram, 35 A. 551 (555); Rivet Carnac v. Jevibai, 10 B. 478; Sasiman v. Sibnarayana, 1 Pat. L. W. 375; 39 I.C. 755 contra Vikrama v. Vikrama, 33 M.L.J. 665; Akanna v. Venkayya, 25 M. 351. See § 2453.

(5) Sridhan v. Kalipada, 16 C.W.N. 106.

(6) Hadi v. Parbati, 9 O.L.J. 312.

(7) Chhannu v. Raj Kuar, 9 O.L.J. 24.

(8) Naba Kishore v. Upendra Kishore, 26 C.W.N. 322 (325) P.C.: 65 I.C. 305.

in support of their view, first, that some of the property comprised the acquisition of the rights of tenants belonging to her inherited estate; and secondly, that in her own recitals in the sale-deed she had justified the sale on the ground of necessity. This case is then a further reiteration of the rule now sufficiently settled that all savings of the female heir from the income of her inherited estate, and the property to which they may be converted become her stridhan, and are, as such, at her absolute disposal.

2630. A case on the other side of the line was decided on the following facts. A widow had purchased out of her savings her brother's property at a court sale and reconveyed it to him. On her death, the reversioner sued to dispossess the brother, but the court dismissed his suit, holding that the conduct of the widow clearly showed that she did not intend that the property should form an accretion to her husband's estate.[1]

These cases are only reconcilable on the ground that the widow being the owner of two estates one limited and another unlimited, the close inter-relation between the two makes it essential that there should be something to show that the one was intended to be maintained distinct from the other, and that where such evidence is lacking, the two may well be treated as one, which will then follow the usual course of devolution. A more correct view of the law suggests the rule that all savings and property into which they are converted, being her stridhan, it should be so treated even for the purpose of devolution, unless the reversioner can show that the last female owner had made it an accretion to her inherited estate. And it has been so held in Madras[2] and was even conceded in a decision of the Privy Council,[3] though the tendency of the courts has been rather in the direction of presuming accretion casting the onus of proving the contrary upon her stridhan heirs [S. 336 (5)].

2631. Grant and Gift.—It is now settled that a grant or gift to the wife made by the husband or any of his or her relations conferring upon her an absolute power of disposal is her stridhan.[4] Such is also a gift received from a stranger.[5] This is in accordance with the recognized texts:—

Clause (3).

Narad.—"What has been given by an affectionate husband to his wife, she may consume as she pleases when he is dead, or may give away excepting immovable property."

Vyas.—"What has been given to a woman by her husband she may consume as she pleases."[6]

Vivad Chintamani.—"177. Katyayan thus explains the first three kinds (of stridhan). 'What is given to a woman at the time of their marriage, before the sacred fire, is denominated by sages their property bestowed before the nuptial fire; (adhyagni) what is given means what is presented by any person.'"

(1) Keshav v. Maruti, 46 B. 37.

(2) Akkamma v. Venkatadri, 46 M. 351; Parthasarathy v. Venkatadri, 46 M. 190 (220); Aviyaswarya v. Sivaji, 49 M. 116 (149, 150) Kailasanatha v. Vadivansi, 58 M. 488 (508, 509).

(3) Rajah of Ramnad v. Sundara, 42 M. 581 P.C.; Jaadamba v. Wazir Narain, 2 Pat. 319 P.C. (Acquisitions by male treated as separate acquisitions); contra in Naba Kishore v. Upendra Kishore, 42 M.L.J. 253 (256) P.C.: 65 I.C. 305 (307).

(4) Hitendra Singh v. Rameshwar, 4 P. 510; Bhupendra v. Goonendra, 32 C.W.N. 133; Venka Reddi v. Hanumant Gonda, 57 B. 85.

(5) Muthukaruppa v. Sellathammal, 39 M. 298.

(6) Cited in Sm. Ch., IX-11 and in Venkata v. Venkata, 1 M. 281 (287); Bhujanga v. Ramayamma, 7 M. 387.

"191. Apastamb thus speaks of the gifts of affectionate kindred: 'Ornaments are the exclusive property of a wife, and so is wealth given to her by kinsmen or friends, according to some lawgivers..'"

Her power over movables being thus admitted, the question arises whether the texts control her power of disposal over immovables. It has been held that her power in this respect is subject only to the general law that whatever is absolutely given to the wife by the husband, whether movable or immovable, is equally at her disposal by gift or devise at her discretion[1] and that the same rule applies to property acquired by her by grants, gifts or devise from any other relation, such as her father,[2] mother,[3] son,[4] brother,[5] husband's father's sister's son,[6] or a complete stranger[7] such as the Government.[8]

So where a widow at a partition by her husband's undivided brothers was given a share which they agreed she should hold absolutely with a power of free alienation, it was held that the grant so made became her stridhan.[9] Jewels made out of family funds for the exclusive use of a female member become her stridhan.[10]

Property granted or gifted to a woman by her husband or his or her own relation is called saudayik[11] over which she possesses unfettered power of disposal by gifts or devise even during coverture as will be presently seen.[12] The case is not different where the grant comprises the income of the estate.[13]

2632. It has been seen before, that any property acquired by deed or devise, that is to say, otherwise than by inheritance or partition,[14] may be stridhan if it is taken absolutely.[15] Such would be the assignment of a life-policy by the husband to her.[16] Such was held to be the case of

(1) Luchmun v. Kallichurn, 19 W.R. 292 P.C. followed in Venkata v. Venkata, 2 M. 333 (335) P.C., affirming O.A. 1 M. 281; Thakoo v. Ganga Prasad, 10 A. 197 P.C. Kesserbai v. Hunsraj, 30 B. 431 P.C. reversing O.A. Hunsraj v. Kasserbai, 6 Bom. L.R. 17; Jairam v. Kesowjee, 4 Bom. L.R. 555; Kurdaram v. Hinibhai, (1879) B.P.J. 8; Jeewun v. Sona, 1 N.W. P.H.C.R. 66; Radha v. Bisheshar, 6 N.W. P.H.C.R. 279; E. v. Sat Narain, 52 A. 437 (441); Bhujanga v. Ramayama, 7 M. 387; Kashee Chunder v. Gour Kishore, 10 W.R. 139.

(2) Mutappudayan v. Ammani, 21 M. 58; Guru Prosad v. Nafar Das, 11 W.R. 497; Judoonath v. Bussunt, 19 W.R. 264; Pura Sundara v. Biraj Nopani, 37 C. 362. Ameer Singh v. Kanh Singh, (1870) P.R. 56.

(3) Churamon v. Gopi, 37 C. 1; Janaki v. Mirivala, 32 M. 521.

(4) Doorga v. Tejoo, 5 W.R. (Mis.) 53.

(5) Gosaien v. Kishanmunnee, 6 B. S. R. 90; Basanta v. Kanikshya, 33 C. 23 P.C.; Munia v. Puran, 5 A. 310.

(6) Hurry Mohun v. Shonatun, 1 C. 275.

(7) Suleman v. Lachman, 21 M. 100.

(8) Suleman v. Lachman, 21 M. 100; Subharaya v. Mudali, 23 M. 47; Gosaein v. Kishenmunee, 6 B.S.R. 90; Doorga v. Tejoo, 5 W.R. (M.R.) 53 contra Narad, 1, 28; Dayabhag, IV-1-20; Virmitrodai, V-1-4 (Setlur 442); Sm. Ch., IX-1-16; Ramdulal v. Joymoney, 2 Mor. Dig. 65 which declare the wife's immovable property as subject to the control of the husband as no longer tenable.

(9) Subbayya v. Chirumamella, (1914) M.W.N. 875: 25 I.C. 412; Amibai v. Musso, 4 S.L.R. 271: 10 I.C. 982.

(10) Alamelu v. Numberumal, 15 M.L. T. 352: 23 I.C. 824.

(11) Lit Sau Love day given: Love offering, through love.

(12) Bhau v. Raghunath, 30 B. 229 (240), Muthukaruppa v. Selathammal, 39 M. 298.

(13) Guruprasad v. Nafar Das, 11 W.R. 497; Mohini Mohan v. Rashbehari, (1937) C. 229.

(14) Thakoor Deyhee v. Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 182; Bhagwandeen v. Myna Bai, Ib., 487; Chotay Lall v. Chunoo Lall, 4 C. 544 P.C.; Sheo Sankar v. Debi Sahai, 25 A. 468 P.C.; Sal Sheo Pertab v. Bahadur, ib., 476 P.C.; Debi v. Mahadeo, 34 A. 234 P.C.

(15) Kunj Behari v. Premchand, 5 C. 684; Ram Narain v. Peary Bhagat, 9 C. 830; Bhobotarini v. Peary Lal, 24 C. 646; Annaji v. Chandrabai, 17 B. 503; Moti Lal v. Rati Lal, 21 B. 170; Parshottam v. Keshav Lal, 57 B. 164.

(16) Shamdas v. Savitribai, (1937) S. 181.

an Oudh Taluqdar whose estate had been confiscated in 1858 by the British Government by virtue of Lord Canning's proclamation. The estate belonged to one Rai Charan Singh, and at the time of its confiscation, it was in the possession of his junior widow Kublas Kuar, upon whom the Government finally conferred it by a sanad, which declared that, in the event of her dying intestate, the estate should descend to the nearest male heir, according to the rule of primogeniture, and that all her successors should have full power to alienate the estate. On the question arising whether the estate became Kubla's stridhan descendible to her own heirs, the Privy Council held that the sanad was a fresh grant and had made Kublas an absolute owner of the estate. They added: "If the interest which Kublas, as the widow of her deceased husband, originally took in the property had remained unaltered, she would have had no power of alienation either in her lifetime or by will. The estate would have descended to the heirs of her husband, and not to her heirs; but her interest as widow and that of the reversionary heirs were absolutely destroyed, and put an end to, by the confiscation under Lord Canning's proclamation, by which it was declared that 'the whole proprietary right in the soil is confiscated to the British Government, which will dispose of that right in such manner as to it may seem fitting.' In disposing of that right by the sanad, the Government granted to Kublas and her heirs male, according to the law of primogeniture the full proprietary right and title to the estate."[1] It was contended that upon her acquisition Kublas became a trustee for those who would have been entitled to it, if it had not been confiscated, to which their Lordships replied: "To hold that such a trust arose would reduce to a nullity the confiscation, and disposal by the Government of the property confiscated. The power of alienation by sale, mortgage or gift, or bequest was wholly inconsistent with an intention on the part of Government to create a trust for the benefit of the reversionary heirs of her husband."[2] In another case, the land in dispute formed part of the emoluments attached to the office of Mantem in a Government village. The husband was the Mantem, but was dismissed for embezzlement and his wife appointed in his place. On her death the question arose whether her daughter or her husband was the preferential heir. In other words, was the property her stridhan or not. It was held that inasmuch as the land had been granted to her by Government, it became her own earnings, or was a gift from a stranger, and as such, became her stridhan descendible to her own daughter in preference to the husband.[3] Such was held to be the nature of an absolute grant made to a woman in whose favour a service grant was enfranchised.[4]

2633. But stridhan inherited by female heirs does not become the latter's stridhan. The female heirs take only a limited woman's estate in the property. The fact that property inherited as stridhan does not make it stridhan of the heir[5] results in the consequence that upon the latter's death succession must be traced from the last owner and not from the last holder.[6] But this is the general rule which admits of many exceptions, one of which is the case of a daughter, sister or niece in Bombay, who

(1) Brij-Indar v. Janaki, 1 C.L.R. 318 (322) P.C.
(2) Ib., p. 323.
(3) Salemma v. Latchmana, 21 M. 100 (105).
(4) Venkataramadas v. Pachigolla, 43 M.L.J. 153 following Venkata v. Veerabhadrappa, 44 M. 643 P.C.
(5) Sheo Shankar v. Debi Sahai, 25 A. 468 P.C. Prankissen v. Noyanmoney, 5 C. 222; Huri Dayal v. Grish Chunder, 17 C. 911; Jogendra v. Phani Bhushan, 43 C. 64.
(6) Madhumala v. Laxman, 20 C.W.N. 627: 22 I.C. 518.

inherits an absolute estate, and which is treated as her stridhan for the purpose of further devolution.[1]

Where the husband during his lifetime always represented that certain immovable property belonged to his wife, it was held that purchasers from her could not be equitably turned out of the property in favour of his heirs, since his heirs would be as much bound by the representations of the owner as the owner himself.[2]

Clause (4).

2634. Property given for Maintenance.—Property given for the purpose, or in lieu of maintenance[3] not being property allotted on partition to a wife or widow[4] is stridhan. So Devala cited in the Dayabhag says: "Her sustenance, her ornaments, her perquisite, and her gains, are the separate property of a woman."[5] In this view, arrears of maintenance due to a widow at her death do not revert to the estate from which they were to be derived, on the ground that they were not separated from the corpus of that estate during her life.[6] So property purchased by a widow out of her maintenance is her absolute property.[7]

So where a sum of money was given to a widow without restriction in lieu of maintenance by her deceased husband's family, it was held that it became her stridhan which she was competent to dispose of inter vivos or by will.[8] Maintenance is a personal right and all arrears due to a woman on account of maintenance constitute her stridhan.[9]

Property which comes from father to a daughter before her marriage under a testamentary devise is her stridhan according to the text of Katyayan. "That which has been given to her by her kindred goes, on failure of kindred, to her husband."[10]

Clause (5).

2635. Accretions and Purchases.—Accretions made to stridhan themselves become stridhan.[11] One Autar Singh had purchased a Darpatni mahal in the name of his wife, whom her declared to be its owner. In several suits relating to the estate, he made similar averments. The wife sold the estate to another whom Autar's adopted son sued to eject. Autar's widow pleaded a gift of the estate to her by her husband which was not proved. It was falsely recited in her sale-deed that the consideration of Rs. 3,200 was her stridhan, but it was found that she was poor and had no money of her own. The purchaser had no notice of it, whereupon the Privy Council held the plaintiff bound by his father's disclaimer and misrepresentation. They said: "It appears to their Lordships that there was a misrepresentation on the part of the father in allowing the property to be taken by the wife

(1) Gulappa v. Tayawa, 31 B. 453; Kasear Bai v. Hunsraj, 30 B. 431 P.C.

(2) Luchmun v. Kalichurn, 19 W.R. 292 (296) P.C.

(3) Doorga v. Tejoo, 5 W.R. (M.A.) 53; Nellaikumaru v. Marakathammal, 1 M. 166; Subramaniam v. Arunachellam, 28 M. 1.

(4) Court of Wards v. Mohessur, 16 W. R. 76; Debi v. Mahadeo, 34 A. 234 P.C.

(5) Dayabhag, IV-1-15.

(6) Court of Wards v. Mohessur, 16 W.R. 76.

(7) Pethasari v. Sendamarai, 8 M.L. T. 284: 8 I.C. 385; Girja Bai v. Babu Lal, 93 I.C. 624: (1926) N. 342.

(8) Chandranath v. Ramjai, 6 B.L.R. 303; Doorga v. Tejoo, 5 W.R. 53; Neelai Kumaru v. Marakathammal, 1 M. 166.

(9) Court of Wards v. Mohessur, 16 W. R. 76.

(10) Judoo Nath v. Bussunt, 19 W.R. 264 (265); Muthu v. Sellathammal, 16 M. L.T. 587: 26 I.C. 785; Janakisetty v. Miriyala, 32 M. 521.

(11) Luchmun v. Kalichurn, 19 W.R. 292.

under a deed of sale representing that the purchase money was her stridhan and in all his acts, both public and private, during his lifetime representing that the property was his wife's. After the representation on the part of the father, his heirs were no more entitled to recover, than the father who had been, in his lifetime. And it appears to their Lordships that the minor claiming by descent from the father is equally bound by those representations and that he cannot, as heir to his father, set up that that property belonged to the father when the father could not in his own lifetime under similar circumstances have set up that the property belonged to him."[1]

2636. In another case, the wife had received money presents from her husband from time to time, and on his death, partly out of such property and partly from other funds raised by the pledge of jewels admitted to be her stridhan, the wife purchased an estate which she devised to the defendants whom her reversioner sued to eject. The defence was that the defendant's alienor had acquired the estate by her own exertions and was, therefore, her stridhan. All the courts upheld the defence and the contrary contended for was disposed of by the Privy Council in the following words: "It is suggested that where the funds are shown to have come wholly or in part from the husband and to have been afterwards invested in land by his widow, the same law which governs the devolution of immovable estate derived from the husband is to govern that acquisition, but their Lordships cannot find any trace of authority to support such a distinction. It is clearly the law that, from the time the funds were given to the widow by the husband, they became her stridhan and that she had full power of disposition over them. Years after the death of the husband she chooses to invest them in land. Can it be contended with any plausibility that that was land which was derived from the husband. Their Lordships can see no ground for establishing this subtle distinction, or for thus arbitrarily interfering with the power of investment and application and disposition which the general law gives to a Hindu female over her stridhan."[2] These last words are significant. They were used with reference to the plea of perpetual dependance of woman, and the restraint upon her power of alienation, analogous to that imposed upon a Hindu father by his sons,[3] for which in the opinion of their Lordships there was no justification as a Hindu woman was, as regards her own property, subject only to the general law.

The subject has already been examined in the preceding discussion.

2637. Adverse Possession.—The acquisition of title by adverse possession is the creature of law which is independent of Hindu Law. The title so acquired is absolute without reference to the sex of the acquirer.[4] A female may acquire a complete title against all comers including her own reversioners. But in such case, the question depends upon whether she took such possession as representing her husband's estate, or in her own right, and the ordinary presumption would be against her, though it is open to her legal

Clause (6).

(1) Luchmun v. Kalichurn, 19 W.R. 292 (297) P.C.

(2) Venkata v. Venkata, 2 M. 333 (335) P.C. affirming O.A. 1 M. 285; following Luchmun v. Kalichurn, 19 W. R. 292 P.C.

(3) Venkata v. Venkata, 1 M. 285 (286).

(4) S. 28 and Art. 144, Limitation Act. Brij Indar Bahadur v. Janki Koer, 1 C.L.R. 318 P.C. Mohin Chander v. Kashi Kant, 2 C.W.N. 161; Kashi Ram v. Amri, 32 A. 189.

representatives to show that her animus possidendi was adverse.[1] The fact that she obtains possession to the exclusion of the rightful heirs would make her possession prima facie adverse, unless it is otherwise explained away or accounted for.[2] So the possession by the widow of a portion of the joint family estate in lieu of her maintenance is not adverse to the other members of the family,[3] and she cannot render it adverse even by an assertion of her unqualified title thereto.[4] But the fact that the widow claimed the estate as the heir of her husband would not qualify her title,[5] and since a widow ordinarily takes only a limited estate, her acquisition of property by adverse possession against strangers would ordinarily be deemed to be an accretion to her estate. In other words, it does not ipso facto become her stridhan descendible to her special heirs.[6] But this is only a presumption limited to the widow and cannot be extended to all females, and, even in the case of a widow, it is subject to rebuttal, since she is not debarred from acquiring an absolute estate if she had asserted such title to the estate and intended to hold it otherwise than an accretion to it. In short, while her adverse possession against the reversioner clothes her with an indefeasible title,[7] her adverse possession against a stranger may or may not be an accretion to her limited estate according to her intention. But where of two joint brothers A and B, A died leaving a widow C and a fortnight later B died leaving his mother D as his sole heir. C however, took possession of the estate as against the mother and continued in possession for 12 years, it was held that C's possession was adverse to D and that on the expiry of the statutory period, the estate became her stridhan descendible to her own heirs.[8] So where on the death of the father-in-law, his daughter-in-law, being the wife of predeceased son, assumed possession to the exclusion of his grandson and his wife, her possession was held to be adverse to reversioners who, on her death, could not lay claim to her estate.[9]

It was contended in this case that property acquired by a female by adverse possession is not her stridhan, but the court had no difficulty in overruling this contention by reference to precedents, apart from which reference to S. 28 combined with Art. 144 of the Limitation Act is a sufficient answer.

2638. Acquisition by Self-exertion.—The prototype of this clause is Katyayan's text cited in the Dayabhag.[10]

Clause (7).

Katyayan.—"The wealth which is earned by the mechanical arts or which is received through affection from any other [but the kindred] is always subject to her husband's dominion. The rest is pronounced to be the woman's property."

---

(1) Suraj Balli v. Tilakdhari, 7 Pat. 163; Prattipati (In re), 11 M.L.T. 261: 15 I.C. 403; Parbati v. Ram Prasad, 7 Luck. 320.

(2) Jowala Buksh v. Dharune Singh, 10 M.I.A. 511 (535); Lachhan Kunwar v. Manorath Ram, 22 C. 445 P.C.; Sham Koer v. Dah Koer, 29 C. 664 P.C.; Satgur v. Raj Kishore, 42 A. 152 (157) P.C. and cases cited in § 1150.

(3) Bhagwani Kuar v. Mohan Singh, 23 A.L.J. 589: 88 I.C. 385: (1925) P.C. 132.

(4) Bhagwan v. Mohan Singh, (1925) P.C. 132 (135, 136) P.C.; followed in Rashik Lal v. Radha, I.L.R. (1937) A. 424 (428); Bhagwan Din v. Ajudhia, 87 I.C. 1021, (1925) O. 729.

(5) Satgur v. Raj Kishore, 42 A. 152 (157) P.C.; explained in Umau Shankar v. Aisha, 45 A. 729 (735); Lachhan Kunwar v. Manorath, 22 C. 445 (449) P.C.

(6) Lajwanti v. Safachand, 5 L. 192 P.C.; followed in Chakradhar v. Shah Kant, 88 I.C. 767: (1925) P. 460; Jag Mohan v. Prayag, 87 I.C. 473: (1925) P. 523; Dungar Singh v. Maid Kunwar, (1933) A. 822; Mahan v. Purho, 11 L. 424; Parbati v. Ram Prasad, 7 Luck. 320.

(7) Lachhan Kunwar v. Manorath, 22 C. 445 (449) P.C.; Sekkara v. K. Ramoraju, 86 I.C. 296: (1925) M. 1066.

(8) Maghli v. Ladli, 13 I.C. (A.) 644.

(9) Kanhi Ram v. Amri, 32 A. 189 (193) following Brij Indar v. Janki, 1 C.L.R. 318 P.C.; Mohni v. Kashi, 2 C.W.N. 161).

(10) Dayabhag, IV-I-19.

Devala.—"Her subsistence, her ornaments, her perquisites and her gains are the separate property of a woman."[1]

Dayabhag explains the mechanical arts to mean "spinning and weaving" which was the only occupation of women when the texts were composed. The woman, being regarded as the chattel of her lord, all her exertions went to his benefit. But the text does not say so. It merely exempts from stridhan the product of mechanical labour pronouncing the "rest to be the women's property." All products of her individual skill and industry will, therefore, constitute her stridhan.[2] Such was the case of the woman who purchased certain immovable property and re-mortgaged it as security for the price, which she afterwards paid presumably out of its income.[3] So where the wife had acquired her husband's office and its emoluments since enfranchised, it was held that the land became her stridhan which she may dispose of at her discretion, and which on her death devolves on her heirs.[4] So where a widow in possession of her husband's estate, exercised, in virtue of such possession, her right to pre-empt another property, the price of which she paid by mortgaging a part of the pre-empted property, her acquisition was held to be her separate property in the absence of any intention to show that she intended to treat it as a part of her husband's estate.[5] So whatever is acquired with profits earned by both husband and wife in a joint trade is their joint property, and on the death of the wife, her heirs are entitled to inherit her share.[6]

Gains of Prostitution.—The question whether the gains of prostitution by a woman married or unmarried constitute her stridhan has been on a review of authorities answered in the affirmative by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court,[7] a view also taken in other cases,[8] though the contrary has also been held elsewhere.[9] It has been held in Madras that all self-acquisitions of a dancing girl by the practice of her calling are her stridhan and on her death her heir, e.g., her daughter would inherit an absolute estate, but that if she reverted to the life of a householder, both her acquisitions, as those of her female heirs by inheritance from her would constitute the female's limited estate.[10]

2639. Wedding Gifts.—Wedding presents given to a woman in the shape of jewels, clothes and the like, at the time of her marriage, are her separate property intended to be enjoyed by herself, and there is no presumption that they form part of the family property.[11]

Clause (8) (i).

Clauses (8) to (10) deal with stridhan specially mentioned in the old texts and which is, therefore, sometimes called technical or proper stridhan, all else being non-technical or improper stridhan. This stridhan is, generally speaking, wedding gifts, though the classical writers discriminate and describe it

(i). Yautak.

(1) Cited in Dayabhag Ch. IV-Seth. I-§ 15; Virmitroday Ch. V Pt-I-§ 7; Madaviya (Burnell's Tr.) P. 46; Saraswati Vilas § 276.

(2) Subramaniam v. Arunachalam, 28 M. 1 F.B.; Tadiboyina v. Debha Kutti, 28 M.L.J. 495: 29 I.C. 184.

(3) Tadiboyina v. Debha Kutti, 28 M. L.J. 495; 29 I.C. 184.

(4) Salemma v. Lutchmana, 21 M. 100 (102).

(5) Sri Ram v. Jagadamba, 43 A. 374 F.B.

(6) Ramakrishna v. Goundan, 38 M. 1036.

(7) Hiralal v. Tripura, 40 C. 650 (661, 662) F.B.

(8) Mandaram v. Mandaram, 24 M.L.J. 223: 18 I.C. 601; Jagannath v. Narayan, 34 B. 553 (559).

(9) Maharana v. Thakur Pershad, 14 O. C. 234: 12 I.C. 778; Ramprasad v. Subu, 4 N.L.R. 31 (33). In Chandrabhaga v. Vishwanath, 9 L.R. 102 (107, 109) the real question appears to have been misunderstood.

(10) Balasundaram v. Kamakshi, (1936) M. 958.

(11) Thayalambal v. Krishna, 32 I.C. (M.) 955.

with particular minuteness. Of these yautak[1] and its analogous ayautak are thus described:

Manu.—"Property given to the mother on marriage (yautak) is the share of her unmarried daughter."[2]

Dayabhag (Citing the last).—"Here yautak signified property given at a marriage, the word yut derived from the verb yu to 'mingle' imports 'mingling' and 'mingling' is the union of men and women as one person, and that is accomplished by marriage. For a passage of the scripture expresses: 'She becomes identified with his bones, flesh with flesh, skin with skin.'[3] Therefore, what has been received at the time of the marriage is denominated yautak."[4]

Smriti Chandrika.—"Yautak is wealth given by any one to the bride and bridegroom while seated together at a marriage or the like. It is said in the Nighantu [dictionary] that the word yautak is derived from being then joined together [yut]. The meaning is that wealth given to the bride and bridegroom is denominated yautak, the term yautak deriving its origin from yut (mingling)."[5]

Dayakram Sangrah.—"The order of succession requisite to be observed in regard to women's peculiar property generally, whether yautak or 'ayautak' on a failure of heirs, including all yet enumerated, will be hereafter declared. But at first we treat of the order of succession in regard to wealth not received by women at the time of nuptial termed ayautak."[6]

Ayautak.

2640. The gift is ayautak if made before or after the marriage, though in fulfilment of promise made at the marriage, since ayautak refers to the time when the gift is made, and not to the time when it is promised.[7] So where at the time of the marriage of a woman, subject to the Dayabhag law, her brother promised to give her some land as dowry, which he gave seven years later, the court held it to be her ayautak stridhan which on her death devolved on her brother in preference to her husband.[8] The burden of proving that property purchased by a woman, long after her marriage was ayautak property, because the purchase was made from a special fund obtained during her nuptial ceremony is on the person who asserts it.[9]

Adhyagni: Adhyavahani

2641. Gifts are further subdivided into (a) adhyagni or gifts made before the nuptial fire, i.e., at the actual marriage ceremony,[10] and (b) into adhyavahnik or gifts at the time of the marriage procession, or at a time during the continuance of the marriage rites before or after the crucial ceremony of marriage. "Given before the nuptial fire" is, however, only a term to signify all gifts made during the continuance of the marriage ceremony.[11] So the pandits opined in a case.[12] "A gift of ornaments or other effects to a woman of any one of the four classes, at the time of her marriage, by a member of the family, either of a husband or her parents or by a stranger is, by law termed adhayagni stridhan, or in other words, the woman's peculiar property bestowed before the nuptial fire. It becomes her exclusive property and the husband's mother or other persons have no right to share it with her.[13]

(1) Lit. "Conjugal"—from Yut (Lat. Jugam) a yoke.
(2) Manu, IX-131.
(3) Veda.
(4) Written both as "Yautak" and "Yautauk".
(5) Sm. Chand., IX-III-13; (Setlur 266).
(6) Dayakram Sangrah, II-IV-1 (Setlur 129).
(7) Mahendra v. Giris Chandra, 19 C. W.N. 1287: 31 I.C. 561; Muthukaruppa v. Sellathammal, 39 M. 298.
(8) Mahendra v. Giris Chandra, 19 C. W.N. 1287: 31 I.C. 561.
(9) Deldlumey v. Pranbati, 22 C.W.N. 990: 45 I.C. 879.
(10) Manu, IX-194; Mit., II-XI-2; Churamun v. Gopi, 37 C. 1.
(11) Bistoo v. Radha, 16 W.R. 115.
(12) Case 2 in Macn. H.L. 108, 109; 3 Dig. 559, 560.
(13) See this term explained in Viramitroday, Ch. V-1-3, (Setlur 440). So in Dayakram Sangrah, II-II-3 (Setlur 121). Gifts "at the time of the marriage"

2642. The term "sulk" is explained in the Mitakshara as gratuity for the receipt of which a girl is given in marriage.[1] Sulk was originally the bride-price received by the father on the marriage of his daughter, but as the property over children ceased, kanyadan or the gift of a daughter was exalted to a virtue. The price was still received but treated as the wife's dowry. Virmitrodai cites Vyas who describes it as "what is given to bring to her husband's house is called the fee or sulk."[2] Evidently, the sulk differed according to the needs of the wife and the means of the husband. So we have the following description of it by Katyayan: "Whatever has been received as a price of work on houses, furniture and carriages, milking vessels and ornaments is denominated sulk or a fee."[3] Citing this, the Dayabhag explains it as "the price of labour, since its purpose is to engage a labourer"[4] or "what is given by way of bribe or the like to induce her to go to the house of her husband,"[5] or rather to induce the father to part with her to go to her husband. Virmitrodai, speaking of the sulk, says: "Both these descriptions of property belonged to the woman, for to her alone they are given."[6]

(ii). Sulk (Gratuity).

2643. Adhyavedanik.—Solatium on re-marriage or adhyavedanik is another species of stridhan, being compensation given by the husband on his marrying another wife. The Mitakshara explains it as a "gratuity on account of supersession,"[7] paid as provided by Yadnyavalkya:—

Clause (9).

Yadnyavalkya.—"To a woman whose husband marries a second wife, let him give an equal sum [as compensation] for the supersession, provided no separate property has been bestowed on her, but if any had been assigned, let him allot half."[8]

Mitakshara (citing the last).—"She is said to be superseded over whom a marriage is contracted. To a wife so superseded as much should be given on account of the supersession as is expended [in jewels and ornaments, or the like] for the second marriage provided separate property had not been previously given to her by her husband or by her father-in-law. But if such property had been already bestowed on her, half the sum expended on the second marriage should be given. So much, therefore, should be paid as will make the wealth already conferred on her equal to the prescribed amount of compensation. Such is the meaning."[9]

2644. That adhyavedanik gifts by the husband to the wife on the occasion of his remarriage are not unusual was admitted by the Privy Council who said: "It is not unusual for a husband upon his being about to marry a second wife to make a present to his first wife and if he does so, the property so presented becomes her stridhan according to the doctrine above laid down."[10] In that case the question arose with reference to a village measuring 679 bighas 2 biswas, which the wife, in her evidence stated, had been gifted to her in 1847, by her husband on the eve of his second marriage. There was no actual proof of that fact, but the Privy Council thought it not improbable "that the husband when about to marry a second wife, should have stated to his first wife that he would appropriate that

---

(Yautak) are explained as made between "the time occupied by the ceremony commencing with the performance of funeral obsequies for the departed ancestors, and concluding with the prostration of the husband at the feet of his wife."

(1) Mit. II-IX-6.
(2) Virmitroday, V-I-3 (Setlur) 441.
(3) Cited in Dayabhag, IV-III-19.
(4) Ib., p. 20.
(5) Ib., p. 21.
(6) V-I-3 (Setlur 441).
(7) Mit., II-XI-2.
(8) Yad., II-143; cited in Mit., II-XI-34.
(9) Mit., II-XI-35; Virmitrodai, V-1-43 (Setlur) 441.
(10) Thakro v. Ganga Prasad, 10 A. 197 (203) P.C.

part of the property, which he had purchased in his own name, as a present, to her in consideration of his being about to marry the second wife."[1]

The latter had gifted the share to her own daughters in 1878 from which the plaintiff, the son, sued to eject them alleging that the defendant's mother was permitted to hold the share benami for her husband. The Privy Council threw out the suit holding the wife's version more probable and that it constituted the share her stridhan over which she had full disposing power.

2645. Anvadheyak.—Anvadheyak is a post-marital gift made by her husband[2] or the husband's relations or by her own and is comprised in the six-fold stridhan specified in the text,[3] and is described as follows :—

Clause (10).

Dayabhag.—"Katyayan defines a gift subsequent. What has been received by a woman from the family of husband at a time posterior to that of marriage is called a gift subsequent, and so is that which similarly received from the family of her kindred. Whatever is received by a woman after her nuptial either from her husband or from her parents through the affection of her giver, Bhrigu pronounces to be a subsequent."[4]

Anvadheyak stridhan may then include property received from the parents[5] or from a brother.[6] It includes all jewels presented to her for ordinary use but not family jewels lent to her for occasional use only.[7]

365. (1) Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, stridhan in the provinces subject to the Bombay school means and includes property acquired by a woman in partition or by inheritance otherwise than from her husband.

Stridhan in Bombay.

(2) For the purpose of succession, the Mayukh subdivides stridhan into (a) technical or proper and (b) non-technical or improper.

Technical and non-Technical stridhan.

(3) Technical or proper. Stridhan means and includes—

(a) a woman's marriage presents, and

(b) gifts and bequests made to her by the blood relations.

(4) Non-technical or improper stridhan means and includes—

(a) property inherited by her from a male;

(b) or received from a stranger;

(c) her own earnings, and

(d) her maintenance grant.

(5) Succession to stridhan, technical and non-technical, follows the special rules laid down in the Mayukh, and hereafter set out in sections 370 and 380 (2).

2646. Analogous Law.—The Bombay view of stridhan is the subject of a long disquisition in the Mayukh from which the following passage is abstracted :—

---

(1) Thakro v. Ganga Prasad, 10 A. 197 (203, 204).

(2) Jagannath v. Narayan, 34 B. 553.

(3) Manu, IX-194; Mit., II-X-5-7.

(4) Dayabhag, IV-1-2; Cited in Virmitrodai, V-1-3 (Setlur) 441.

(5) Sitabai v. Wasontrao, 3 Bom. L.R. 201 dissenting from Harry Shankar v. Krishnarao, Bombay unreported S. N. 84 of 1876.

(6) Basanta v. Kamikshya, 33 C. 23 (27) P.C.; Mahendra v. Girishchandra, 19 C.W.N. 1287: 31 I.C. 561.

(7) Devala cited in Dayabhag, IV-1-15; May., IV-X-6; Sm. Ch., IX-1-11; Rukman v. Gungaram, (1883) P.R. 81.

Mayukh[1] (Abstracted).—"Stridhan is of two kinds: (i) technical and (ii) non-technical. Technical stridhan is the property expressly recognized as stridhan by the older sages such as Katyayan, Manu and Yadnavalkya, that is (a) gifts from strangers at marriage called Yautak,[2] and (b) gifts from relations made at any time called ayautak."[3]

Non-technical stridhan comprises every other kind of property belonging to a woman and more particularly that mentioned in clause[4].

2647. Stridhan in Bombay.—Women subject to the Mayukh are allowed larger rights over property inherited by them from any relation other than the husband.[4] Such property is their stridhan.[5] The Mayukh subdivides stridhan property into paribhashik or technical, and aparibhashik or non-technical, also called stridhan proper and stridhan improper, the course of devolution being dependent upon whether it is stridhan of the one kind or of the other.[6] The paribhashik, technical or proper stridhan, comprises that expressly mentioned in the sacred texts, while the aparibhashik, non-technical or improper stridhan is that otherwise recognized. Generally speaking, the one devolves on the female heirs in preference to the males, while in the other the preferable heirs are, in the first instance, the son, the grandson and the great-grandson, and failing them, the daughter. The subject will have to be further discussed in the sequel, (S. 372).

366. A woman cannot alien or devise her Stridhan other than saudayik[7] during coverture without her husband's consent.

Husband's control.

2648. Analogous Law.—The following texts define the term saudayik :—

Katyayan.—"Whatever is obtained by a married woman or damsel from the house of her husband or her father or from her brother or parents is called saudayik."

Ib.—"Having obtained saudayik wealth, women have independent power over it, because it was given them for maintenance out of affection. The independence of a woman in respect of saudayik is ever celebrated both as regards sale and gift, even in respect of immovables."[8]

Vivad Chintamani (citing the last).—"The word 'husband' is also connected with 'house'; the word 'Sardha' is an incorrect reading. 'Brother' is used illustratively. The meaning, therefore, is that what is obtained by a married or unmarried woman from her father or his family or from her husband or his family is called her saudayik. The allotment for maintenance that follows is an extension of this. The same author thus states her power of disposal over it."[9]

Manu.—"A woman should never make (any) expenditure out of the family property belonging to several or even (out of) her own wealth without the assent of her husband."[10]

---

(1) Contains an extended disquisition citing all texts; Mandlik, pp. 91-99.

(2) From yuta—joined together; yuyum—a yoke. Dayabhag, 1-II-13, 14. Mayukh IV-X-17; Smriti Chandrika IX-III-13.

(3) That not "Yautak."

(4) Manibhai v. Shankarlal, 54 B. 323 (325); Hunsraj v. Keserbai, 6 Bom. L.R. 17; the same rule obtains in Berar which is subject to the Mayukh; Krishna v. Bayaji, 87 I.C. 1010: (1925) N. 342.

(5) Bhaskar v. Mahadev, 6 B.H.C.R. (O. C.); Hari v. Damodar, 3 B. 17; Babaji v. Balaji, 5 B. 660; Gulappa v. Tayawa, 31 B. 453; contra Dalpat v. Bhagwan, 9 B. 301 (303).

(6) Manilal v. Rewa, 17 B. 758; Hunsraj v. Monghibai, 7 Bom. L.R. 622; Dayaldas v. Savitri Bai, 34 B. 385.

(7) Bhau v. Raghunath, 30 B. 229 (240); Venkatareddi v. Hanmant Gouda, 57 B. 85.

(8) Cited in Mit., Ch. II-I, § 2; Virmitroday, I, 215, p. 1; Mayukh (Mandlik's Tr.) pp. 93, 94; Vivad Chintamani (Setlur) 255, 256.

(9) Ib.

(10) IX-199.

Viramitrodaya.—"In the disposal of woman's property, however, females have no independence without the permission of their husbands."[1]

This section may be regarded as laying down an exception to the general rule applicable to all stridhan due to the woman's subjection to her husband during her coverture.[2] Moreover, the general spirit of Hindu Law is not to allow women independence as regards disposition of property. In the case of females, property or ownership has reference, to the right of possession and the right of enjoyment. The third element of ownership, namely, the power of disposition, is not recognized by Hindu lawyers. The right of absolute disposal did not enter into Vidnyaneshwara's conception of the essentials of ownership, and is a later development.

2649. The one case in which this question was decided arose on the following facts. The parties hailed from Nasik where the right to a vritti or a religious office, to which were attached monetary emoluments, vested in one Gangabai who had inherited it from her deceased husband. She transferred her right by a gift inter vivos to her daughter, and granddaughter, Krishna Bai, who bequeathed it, during the lifetime of her husband Bhau, to one Raghunath who obtained probate of the will, but was prevented by Bhau from officiating and receiving the emoluments of the vritti. The devisee sued the husband for an injunction and other reliefs, and the question was whether Krishna Bai could, during the lifetime of her husband, make a valid will of her stridhan. For the purpose of the case it was assumed that the property she had received by gift from her grandmother constituted her stridhan, but it was held that, under Hindu Law, a woman during coverture had no power, without her husband's consent, to dispose of her stridhan inter vivos or by will.[3] This case is a clear authority for the rule formulated in the section, though its validity might be questioned on the grounds that it is of the essence of stridhan that the owner should possess full power of disposal and any fetter placed on her power of disposal would be inconsistent with the right of ownership. This right was conceded in a later case in which the wife had lived apart from her husband who had remarried and had practically abandoned her.[4]

2650. Husband's Right to Seize Wife's Property.—The wife's subjection to her husband is evidenced by a right conferred on the husband to seize the property of his wife in case of extreme necessity as prescribed in the record of the following texts :—

Katyayan.—"Neither the husband nor the son, nor the father, nor the brothers can assume the power over a woman's property to take it or bestow it."[5]

Mitakshara.—"In a famine, for the preservation of the family or at a time when a religious duty must indispensably be performed, or in illness or "during restraint" or confinement in prison or under corporal penalties, the husband being destitute of other funds and, therefore, taking his wife's property, is not liable to restore it. But if he seize it in any other manner or under other circumstances he must make it good."[6]

---

(1) VI-Pt. I, 5 (Sarkar's Tr.), p. 224 cited per curium in Bhau v. Raghunath, 30 B. 229 (238).

(2) Manu, V-147-149; Narad, IX-1, 2; 7 S.B.E. 49; West and Buh. (3rd Ed.), 318-320; Mandlik, p. 93; Jolly's H.L. 253; Bannerjee's Marr. and Stridhan, (4th Ed.), 340; Vijiarangam v. Lakshman, 8 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 244 (265, 266); Bhau v. Raghunath, 30 B. 229 (240).

(3) Bhau v. Raghunath, 30 B. 229 (240) following Vijiarangam v. Lakshman, 8 B. H.C.R. (O.C.) 244 (264); Mit., I-I, §§ 20, 25; West & Buh. (3rd Ed.) p. 92.

(4) Bhagwanlal v. Divali, 27 Bom. L.R. 633: 88 I.C. 750: (1925) B. 445.

(5) Cited in Sm. Ch., IX-II-13.

(6) Mit., II-XI-32; Dayabhag, IV-I-19-25; Mayukh, IV-X-7-10; (Mandlik's Tr.) p. 94; Viv. Chint. (Setlur) 225; contra Sm. Ch., IX-II-14 (Setlur) 261.

The texts on the subject of the husband's right to seize his wife's stridhan are conflicting, and those that recognize the rights are, it is submitted, obsolete. Civil law cannot recognize what criminal law will punish as robbery, and the tendency of the courts is to encourage no usurpation of property by appeal to the jus maritii. At any rate, the husband's control over his wife's saudayik is, as stated before, S. 27 (6), limited, and merely suspends her right which is set free on his death, irrespective of whether the stridhan had been acquired by her during her maiden-hood or coverture.[1]

367. Save as provided in the last section, the owner of stridhan possesses the power to dispose it of inter vivos or by will.[2]

Disposal by will.

2651. Analogous Law.—The following texts are held to support this section.

Narad (cited in Smriti Chandrika).—"What has been given by an affectionate husband to his wife, she may continue as she pleases when he is dead, or may give it away excepting immovable property."[3]

Vyas.—"What has been given to a woman by her husband she may consume as she pleases."[4]

2652. The limitation on the wife's power of disposal over her stridhan is stated in the last section, but it appears to be one of questionable legality. The true rule appears to be that the woman owning stridhan possesses the full and unfettered power of disposal inter vivos or by will. Consequently, the testamentary power of a Hindu female over her stridhan, being commensurate with her power of disposal over it in her lifetime, and both being absolute, no distinction can be taken as regards a widow's power of disposal by will over the immovables which constitute her stridhan.[5] This is another right which the woman owes to the absence of any text limiting her testamentary power over her stridhan property.[6] Of course, the text limits her power over inherited estate,[7] and it has been held that her testamentary power in respect of technical stridhan obtained from her husband is limited to movables.[8] But the language of the Privy Council, in the cases already cited, does not appear to warrant this distinction, and it is possible to invest money so received into land over which her power of disposal by will is admitted.[9] And no property can be stridhan which does not possess its essential incident, namely, the unfettered power of disposal.[10]

368. On the death of a maiden, her stridhan is inherited by her heirs in the following order:—

Succession to maiden's stridhan.

(1) Brij Indur v. Janki Koer, 1 C.L.R. 318 P.C.; Venkata v. Venkata, 1 M. 281 (286).

(2) Venkata v. Venkata, 2 M. 333 P.C.; Motilal v. Ratilal, 21 B. 170.

(3) IX-II-page 10.

(4) Cited in ib., and in Venkata v. Venkata, 1 M. 281 affirmed O.A. 2 M. 333 P.C.

(5) Luchmun Chunder v. Kalli Churn Singh, 19 W.R. 292 P.C.; Venkata v. Venkata, 1 M. 281 affirmed O.A. 2 M. 333 P.C.; Mulchand v. Bai Mancha, 7 B. 491; Motilal v. Ratilal, 21 B. 170 (173); Koonjbehari v. Premchand, 5 C. 684.

(6) Venkata v. Venkata, 1 M. 281 (286) affirmed O.A. 2 M. 333 P.C.; Madavarayya v. Tirthasami, 1 M. 307; Nallai Kumaru v. Marakathammal, 1 M. 166.

(7) Gadadhar v. Chandrabhagabai, 17 B. 690 F.B.; Motilal v. Ratilal, 21 B. 170; Gurivi v. Chinnamma, 7 M. 93.

(8) Venkata v. Venkata, 2 M. 333 P.C. explained in Hoorbai v. Sooleman, 3 Bom. L.R. 790 (792).

(9) Venkata v. Venkata, 2 M. 333 P.C.

(10) Brij Indar v. Janki, 1 C.L.R. 318 (325) P.C.; Behary Lal v. Juggo, 4 C. 1 (6); Nellai Kumaru v. Marakathammal, 1 M. 166.

(1) Uterine brothers.
(2) Mother.
(3) Father.
(4) The father's sapindas.[1]
(5) The mother's sapindas.
(6) Her own sapindas.[2]

2653. Analogous Law.—The following texts support this section :—

Baudhayan.—"The wealth of a deceased damsel, let the uterine brethren themselves take. On failure of them shall it belong to the mother, or if she be dead, to the father."[3]

Mitakshara (citing the last).—"Should a damsel anyhow affianced, die before the completion of the marriage, what is to be done in that case. The author replies: "If she die [after troth plighted], let the bridegroom take back the gifts which he has presented; paying, however, the charges on both sides." 30. If a betrothed damsel die, the bridegroom shall take the rights and other presents, or the nuptial gratuity which had been previously given by him [to the bride] "paying, however, the charges on both sides" that is, clearing or discharging the expense which has been incurred both by the person who gave the damsel and by himself, he may take the residue. But her uterine brothers shall have the ornaments for the head, and other gifts which may have seen presented to the maiden by her maternal granfather [or her paternal uncle], or the relations, as well as the property, which may have been regularly inherited by her. For Baudhyayan says, "The wealth of a deceased damsel, let the uterine brethren themselves take. On failure of them, it shall belong to the mother; or if she be dead, to the father."[4]

The Virmitrodai contains an elaborate discussion on the subject of succession to maiden's stridhan,[5] but most of it is of little practical value.

2654. Maiden's Heirs.—The heirs of a maiden's stridhan are, as stated in the section, her uterine brothers, mother, and father and failing them, the nearest relations.[6] "It has been held that these relations must mean the father's sapindas, since his sapindas are also the mother's sapindas by virtue of her identity with her husband of half of his body.[7] But this identity is limited to his legitimate relations. For even if the husband be a shudra, the fact that his illegitimate son is his heir (S. 314), does not make him his married wife's sapinda, so as to entitle him to inherit her stridhan.[8] After the father's sapindas, the mother's sapindas, and after these her own sapindas take in succession. Thus, a father's paternal uncle's son is entitled to succeed in preference to the father's sister,[9] and a sister is preferred to the father's brother's son,[10] the father's sister to his gotraj sapindas five or six degrees removed[11] the father's mother's sister to a maternal grandmother[12] and a stepmother to a mother's sister."[13] In the case of a prostitute, her sister is her heir in preference to the Crown.[14]

(1) Only legitimate—See S. 314 (5), Subramania v. Rathnavelu, 41 M. 44 F.B.; Ayiswarya v. Sivaji, 49 M. 116 (136, 137, 154, 155).
(2) Janglubai v. Jetha, 32 B. 409 (413); Narayan v. Lakshman, 51 B. 784.
(3) Cited in Mit., II-XI-30.
(4) Mit., II-XI-29, 30.
(5) Ch. V (Setlur) 438-456.
(6) Gurdial Singh v. Bhagwan Devi, 8 L. 366 (371).
(7) Dwarka Nath v. Sarat Chandra, 39 C. 319 (323); Janglubai v. Jetha, 32 B. 409 (413).
(8) Subramania v. Rathnavelu, 41 M. 44 (72) F.B.; Ayiswarya v. Sivaji, 49 M. 116 (136, 137, 154, 155).
(9) Sundaram v. Ramasamia, 43 M. 32; Kamala v. Bhagirathi, 38 M. 45; Janglubai v. Jetha, 32 B. 409; Tukaram v. Narayan, 36 B. 339.
(10) Dwarka Nath v. Sarat Chandra, 39 C. 319.
(11) Tukaram v. Narayan, 36 B. 339 (359) F.B.
(12) Janglubai v. Jetha, 32 B. 409; Gandhi v. Jadab, 24 B. 192 (212).
(13) Kamala v. Bhagirathi, 38 M. 45.
(14) Narayan v. Lakshman, 51 B. 784.

Succession to stridhan of woman with children.

369. (1) Except as otherwise hereinafter provided, the stridhan of a woman married in the Brahm form with children devolves on her following relations:—

(i) Unmarried daughters;
(ii) Married daughter who is poor or childless;
(iii) Married daughter who is well-to-do whether she has children or not;
(iv) Daughter's daughter;[1]
(v) Daughter's son;
(vi) Son;
(vii) Son's son;
(viii) Husband;
(ix) His nearest sapindas;
(x) Her own blood relations.

(2) The heirs of a woman married in the Asur or some other unapproved form of marriage are her—

(i) Mother;
(ii) Father;
(iii) Father's sapindas.

2655. Analogous Law.—This section is drawn from the Mitakshara in which this order of succession is set out and explained.[2]

2656. Unmarried Daughter.—The first heir to a mother's stridhan is her unmarried daughter, and she is so declared in the Mitakshara.[3]

Clause (1), (i).

A question arises, and has been raised, whether a betrothed daughter is unmarried. The Mitakshara uses the expression apratta (अप्रत्ता) to designate an unmarried daughter, and it has been held that reading contextually it means that the daughter must also be unbetrothed.[4] But it is submitted that the term "appratta" means really a virgin and would include a betrothed but unmarried daughter.

2657. Married Daughter.—The succession of a married daughter is provided in the following text:—

Clause (2), (ii-iii).

Mitakshara.—"Hence, if the mother be dead, daughters take her property in the first instance, and here, in the case of competition between married and maiden daughters, the unmarried take the succession; but on failure of them the married daughter; and here again in the case of competition between such as are provided for and those who are endowed, the unendowed take the succession first, but on failure of them those who are endowed. Thus Gautam says, a woman's property goes to her daughter unmarried or unprovided[5] or provided, as is implied by the conjunctive particle in the text. Unprovided are such as are destitute of wealth or without issue."[6]

Referring to this text Sir Gurudas Banerjee writes: "I think Vidnyaneshwar's meaning is that the rich daughters, whether they have children or not, should all be excluded by the indigent daughters, whether they are childless or have children. And I presume that the childless daughters would be preferred to those having issue, only when the com-

(1) Preferred to Son's Son; Ram Kali v. Gopal Dei, 48 A. 48; but no preference of unmarried over married.—ib.
(2) Mit., II-XI-13-25.
(3) Ib.; Ram Kali v. Gopal Dei, 48 A. 648.
(4) Sreenath v. Surbo, 10 W.R. 438 (490); contra Bannerji's stridhan, (4th Ed.), 367.
(5) Gautam, 22, 28. The Sanskrit word is अप्रातष्ठिता which means unprovided.
(6) Mit., II-XI-13.

petitors are not poor, and their means and circumstances are equal. In the case of daughters who are poor in different degrees, no hard and fast rule can be laid down, but a court of justice should take into account the circumstances of each case, and order distribution accordingly."[1] It will be noted that no preference is ordered by the Mitakshara, as it is by the Dayabhag, to a daughter who has, or is likely to have, male issue over a daughter who is barren or a childless widow,[2] while in Mithila the distinction between the rich and poor is immaterial. The difference in the three schools is due to the interpretation of the word "apratishthits" in Gautam's text which has been translated "unprovided for," "without wealth" by some, and "without children" by other commentators. It is now settled that the former is the Mitakshara and the latter the Dayabhag view. In the first view, however, a minute enquiry into the question of comparative poverty is not called for. When the difference in wealth is marked, the whole property passes to the poorest daughter.[3] Since the distinction is based on a special text which is limited only to the succession amongst daughters inter se, it cannot be extended to other female relations, e.g., sisters by analogy.[4] Where several daughters inherit jointly they take as tenants-in-common without any right of survivorship.[5]

As stated in the sequel, unchastity and illegitimacy are no bars to succession to stridhan, though being a prostitute the daughter is regarded as neither married nor unmarried, and therefore, takes only in default of them.[6] But the contrary has been laid down in Allahabad, where it is pointed out that consanguinity and not any theoretical spiritual benefit is the sole rule of succession to stridhan.[7]

2658. Daughter's Daughter.—After the daughters the daughter's daughter takes the succession under an express text,[8] which further provides: "If there be a multitude of those [grand-daughters] children of different mothers and unequal in number, shares should be allotted to them through their mothers, as directed by Gautam. Or the partition may be according to the mothers and a particular distribution may be made in the respective sects."[9] That is, daughter's daughters inherit per stirpes and not per capita.[10] Daughters of predeceased daughters do not take anything in competition with daughters though the Mitakshara does not altogether ignore them. "But if there be daughters as well as daughter's daughters, a trifle only is to be given to the grand-daughters. So Manu declares: 'Even to the daughters of those daughters something should be given as may seem fit from the assets of their maternal grandmother, on the score

Clause (2), (iv).

(1) Bannerji's Marriage and Stridhan (4th Ed.), 367.

(2) Wooma v. Gokoolanund, 3 C. 587 P.C.

(3) Wooma v. Gokoolanund, 3 C. 587 593) P.C.; Totawa v. Basawa, 23 B. 229; Poli v. Narotum, 6 B.H.C.R. 183; Bahubai v. Manchhabai, 2 B.H.C.R. 5; Audh Kumari v. Chandra Dai, 2 A. 561; Danno v. Darbo, 4 A. 243 (245); Simmani v. Muttammal, 3 M. 265 (269).

(4) Bhagirathi v. Baya, 5 B. 264.

(5) Karuppai v. Sankaranarayanan, 27 M. 300 (303, 314) F.B.; Parson v. Somli, 36 B. 424 contra Sengamalathammal v. Velayuda, 3 M.H. C.R. 312, (317); Venkatarama v. Bhujunga, 19 M. 107.

(6) Advayapa v. Rudrava, 4 B. 104; Tara v. Krishna, 31 B. 495.

(7) Ganga v. Ghasita, 1 A. 46 (49, 50); Nagendra v. Benoy, 30 C. 521; Angammal v. Venkata, 26 M. 509.

(8) Mit., II-XI-15; Ram Kali v. Gopal Dei, 48 A. 648; Amarjit v. Alguchaabe, 51 A. 478; Subramanian v. Arunachelam, 28 M. 1; Dhanna Mal v. Parmeshari, (1928) L. 9.

(9) Mit., II-XI-16; Manu, IX-193; Sm. Ch. IX-III-21.

(10) Subramaniam v. Arunachelam, 28 M. 1.

of natural affection.' "[1] But this trifle is not a share and not claimable as such. In regard to such succession daughter's daughters whether married or unmarried take equally in preference to son's son.[2]

2659. Daughter's Son.—Yadnavalkya's text contains no provision regarding the rights of a daughter's son and Vidnyaneshwar expressly mentions him as the next heir and supports his view on a text of Narad which says: "Let daughters divide mother's wealth or, on failure of daughters, their male issue."[3] According to the Smritichandrika the daughter's sons take like daughter's daughters,[4] but only after the latter.[5] As such, they would take per stirpes.[6] They are, of course, preferred to a son who comes after them.[7]

Clause (1), (iv).

The question whether a daughter's son would also include an adopted son, and if so, what would be his share in competition with an auras son has not yet arisen, but it is submitted that since such succession is solely based upon affinity, in which the question of spiritual benefit has no place, and since an adoption is more an act of the husband than of the wife, an adopted son is no heir to his grandmother's stridhan[8]

2660. Son.— The son is next assigned a place in the line of succession both by Yadnyavalkya[9] and Vidnyaneshwar.[10] The view of the Dayabhag school will be noticed later. The son in this connection means only a legitimate son,[11] and certainly not a son born of adulterous intercourse.[12] And though this would be the view of Hindu law where the widow of the predeceased husband remarries, still her remarriage being now legalized, her son by her former husband will inherit equally with her son by her second husband, since both are her sons.[13] The question whether the son here includes also an adopted son has been answered both ways in the decided cases, it being held that, since the highest Hindu authorities place a son on adoption in the category of an auras son[14] he must be so treated for succession to stridhan (§ 706). On the other hand, the contrary has been laid down in other cases[15] in one of which the Pandits opined: "If a man appoints another his adopted son, that person so adopted stands in relation to him of his son, and offers up his funeral oblations and is heir to his estate, but the person so appointed does not become the adopted son of the adopter's wife, nor does he offer funeral oblations to her, nor succeed to her property."[16] So, in Bomaby, it has been held that "a son adopted by a widow with her husband's consent will not inherit her property, which will go to her father's brothers."[17] Of course, a woman cannot adopt a son to herself, and such adoption confers no right of inheritance on the adoptee.[18] A woman's step-son is not in the same position as her own son, though he Clause (1), (vi).

(1) Manu, IX-193; Mit., II-XI-17.
(2) Ram Kali v. Gopal Dei, 48 A. 648.
(3) Narad. XIII-1; Mit., II-XI-18; Mayukh, IV-X-20.
(4) IX-III-25.
(5) Sham Behari v. Ram Kali, 45 A. 715.
(6) Banerji's Stridhan, (4th Ed.), p. 37.
(7) Dhauna Mal v. Parameshri, (1928) L. 9.
(8) Banerji's Stridhan, (4th Ed.), p. 375.
(9) Yat., II-118.
(10) Mit., II-XI-19; Karuppai v. Sankhara, 27 M. 300 F.B.
(11) Ayiswarya v. Sivaji, 49 M. 110: (1929) M. 84.
(12) Jagannath v. Narayan, 34 B. 553.
(13) Bapu v. Kashinath, (1934) B. 113.
(14) Datt. Ch. (Suth.) 219; Dayakram Sangrah, V-I-1; Macn. H.L. 39, 40, followed Teencowree v. Dinonath, 3 W.R. 49; Sham Kuar v. Gaya Din, 1 A. 255 F.B.; Anandi v. Hari, 33 B. 404 (410).
(15) Sree Narain v. Bhya Jha, 2 B.S.R. 29 (34): 6 I.D. (O.S.) 380 (384) (a Mithila case).
(16) Ib., p. 34: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 380 (384).
(17) 2 S.A.R. 178 cited in 1 Norton's L.C.H.L. 101.
(18) Narendra v. Dina, 36 C. 824.

comes in after the husband as his sapinda.[1] It has been held that co-heirs inheriting stridhan take as tenants-in-common, with no right of survivorship[2] because this is a succession to obstructed heritage, but the Privy Council point out that this is by no means an infallible test, nor indeed, universally true.[3] Still, both under the Mitakshara and the Mayukh, sons inheriting property from their mother succeed to them not as joint tenants but as tenants-in-common without benefit of survivorship.[4]

Clause (1), (vii).

2661. Grandson.—Failing sons, son's sons inherit;[5] grandsons by different sons inherit per stirpes and not per capita.[6] If the adopted son takes a share he will share equally with an auras son.[7]

Clause (1), (vii, ix, x).

2662. Husband's Nearest Sapinda.—On failure of the grandson, her husband and other nearest sapindas inherit,[8] that is to say, the estate devolves as if she had died issueless.[9] As such, her husband is a preferential heir to his son by another wife.[10] Failing her husband's sapindas,[11] stridhan devolves on her own blood relations.

Clause (2).

2663. The heirs of a woman, married in an unapproved form, are those of a maiden, the reason being that by such marriage the woman does not pass into the gotra of her husband, but retains that of her father, and her heirs are those of an unmarried female.[12] As such, her sister takes before her sister's son,[13] or her paternal uncle.[14]

Succession of stridhan of issueless woman.

370. (1) The stridhan of an issueless woman devolves on her husband if she was married to him in the Brahm form, which will be presumed, and failing him, on his nearest sapindas in the order of their succession to him, and failing them, on her own blood relations.[15]

(2) But if she was married to him in the Asur form (or some other unapproved form) it devolves on her mother, then on her father, and then on the father's or mother's nearest sapinda in the order of their succession to them.[16]

2664. Analogous Law.—The rule here stated is deduced from the following texts:—

---

(1) Bhimacharya v. Ramacharya, 33 B. 452 (462).

(2) Karuppai v. Sankara, 27 M. 300 F.B.; Parson v. Somli, 36 B. 424; but see Mit., I-IV-2; 3 Dig. 603; Katama Natchiar v. Raja of Shivganga, 9 M.I.A. 543 (615); Venkayamma v. Venkataramanayamma, 25 M. 678 (687) P.C.

(3) Venkayamma v. Venkataramanayamma, 25 M. 678 (687) P.C.

(4) Karuppai v. Sankara, 27 M. 300 F. B.; Kanakammal v. Ananthamathi, 37 M. 293; Parson v. Somlu, 36 B. 424; Ganpat v. Secretary of State, 45 B. 1106 (1111); Jumma Das v. Kunwar Bai, (1925) A. 447.

(5) Gautam, XII-32; Yad., II-50; Mit., II-XI-24; Sham Behari Lal v. Ram Keli, 45 A. 715 P.C.; Raman v. Jagjivan Das, 41 B. 618.

(6) Sm. Chand, IX-III-25.

(7) Nagin Das v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 P.C.

(8) Mit., II-XI-25; Tukaram v. Narain, 36 B. 339.

(9) Mit., II-XI-9; Umrao Kuar v. Sarabjit Singh, 85 I.C. 618: (1925) O. 620.

(10) Bhimmacharya v. Ramacharya, 33 B. 452 (462).

(11) Kanakammal v. Ananthamathi, 37 M. 293; Ganpat v. Secretary of State, 45 B. 1106; Motichand v. Kunwar Kalika, 48 A. 663 (665).

(12) Kesserbai v. Hunsraj, 30 B. 431 (451) P.C.; Janglubai v. Jetha, 32 B. 409 (412, 413).

(13) Raju v. Ammani, 29 M. 358.

(14) Govind v. Savitri, 43 B. 173.

(15) Vithal v. Balu, 60 B. 671 (676).

(16) Mit. II-XI-2; Vijiarangam v. Lakshuman, 8 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 244; Dwarka Nath v. Sarat Chandra, 39 C. 119.

Mitakshara.—"If a woman die 'without issue', that is, having no progeny, in other words, having no daughter, nor a daughter's daughter, nor daughter's son, nor son, nor son's son, the woman's property, as above described, shall be taken by her kinsmen, namely, her husband and the rest as will be (forthwith explained).

"10. The kinsmen have been declared generally to be competent to succeed to a woman's property. The author now distinguishes different heirs according to the diversity of the marriage ceremonies. 'The property of a childless woman married in the form denominated Brahm, or any of the four (unblamed modes of marriage) goes to her husband; but if she have progeny, it will go to her (daughter's) daughter, and in other forms of marriage (as the Asur, etc.) it goes to her father and mother on failure of her own issue.'[1]

"11. Of a woman dying without issue as before stated and who has become a wife by any of the four modes of marriage denominated Brahm, Daiv, Arsh and Prajapatya, the whole property as before described, belongs, in the first place, to her husband. On failure of him it goes to her nearest kinsmen (Sapinda) allied by funeral oblations. But in the other forms of marriage called Asur, Gandharb, Rakshash and Paishach, the property of a childless woman goes to her parents, that is to say, her father and mother. The succession devolves first and the reason has been before explained,[2] on the mother, who is valuably exhibited (first) in the elliptical phrase pitrigami implying goes (gacheti) to both parents (pitaram), that is to the mother and to the father. On failure of them their next of kin take the succession."[3]

2665. Meaning of Words.—"Issueless woman" means without legitimate issue.[4] But a woman with an adopted son is not issueless, though she is issueless if she is possessed of only a stepson, i.e., son of the husband by a co-wife.[5] A woman is issueless if her issue had predeceased her.[6]

2666. Stridhan on Brahm Marriage.—It has already been seen that of all the eight forms of marriage, only two forms, the Brahm and the Asur survive (§ 337). The question of stridhan succession then depends upon whether the woman was married in one form or the other. And since law presumes that, in the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, all marriages are performed in the Brahm form[7] (§ 451) it follows that clause (1) lays down the normal rule of devolution of stridhan and clause (2) only applies to exceptional cases.

Clause (1).

The same presumption applies equally to Shudras if the parties belong to a respectable family. Such a presumption was made in the case of Kamathis who were held to be "an intelligent and respectable section of the Hindu community"[8] and there is no room for any other presumption in the case of non-Hindus such as the Cutchi Memons who follow the Hindu law without following the Hindu religion,[9] though the special rules as to the devolution of stridhan do not apply to Khoja Mahomedans.[10] "The legal consequences of the classes of marriage, the approved and the disapproved, in relation to inheritance, vary according as their leading characteristics are blameworthy or not and suggest the inference that it is the quality and not the form of the marriage that decides that course of devolution; where the marriage is approved, the husband and his side come in, when disapproved, they do not."[11]

(1) Yad., II-146.
(2) Mit., II-XI-2.
(3) Mit., II-XI-10, 11; Kishan v. Sheo Paltan, 23 A.L.J. 981: 90 I.C. 358.
(4) Jagannath v. Narayan, 34 B. 553.
(5) Gangadhar v. Hiralal, 43 C. 994.
(6) Chandrabhaga v. Vishwanath, 9 N. L.R. 102: 20 I.C. 557.
(7) S. 28; Jagannath v. Ranjit Singh, 25 C. 354 following Thakoor Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 139; Gojabhai v. Shahajirao, 17 B. 114; Jagannath v. Narayan, 36 B. 553 (559); Girdharilal v. Government, 1 B.L.R. 44 P.C.; Authi Kesavalu v. Ramanujam, 32 M. 512.
(8) Jagannath v. Narayan, 34 B. 553 (559).
(9) Moosa v. Haji Abdul, 30 B. 197 (203).
(10) Karim v. Pardhan, 2 B.H.C.R. 276.
(11) Moosa v. Haji Abdul, 30 B. 197 (203); Govind v. Daulat, 6 N.L.R. 3; 5 I.C. 426.

2667. Husband's Sapindas.—Assuming, however, that all marriages are of the approved form and class, the wife's stridhan goes to the husband and his nearer sapindas in the order laid down in the Mitakshara with reference to the succession to the property of a male, that is to say, the husband takes the property as his own, and is then competent to transmit it to his own heirs as his self-acquired property.[1] It does not go to the wife's parents or relations at all, except in the last resort in competition with the Crown.[2]

It is, however, said that the order of proximity in the case of the husband's sapindas, must be in accordance with Brihaspati's text quoted in the sequel (§ 2672).

2668. According to the text of Mitra Misra, on failure of these, the inheritance devolves on the stepson, his sons and grandsons, because under such circumstances, these offer the natural oblations, and pay the debts, and because it has been ordained in this manner in the above text of Manu.[3] Then on the failure of these, though sapindas, such as a father-in-law, may be living, the sister's son and the rest have a right to inherit, according to the scale of their nearness mentioned in the text of Brihaspati, the property of their mother's sister and the rest, by virtue of the special text (of Brihaspati) which cannot have any other application. This order not only accords with the text of Brihaspati but also with that given in the Mayukh[4] and the Smriti Chandrika,[5] but being in conflict with that indicated in the Mitakshara, the latter must prevail,[6] and has been upheld by the Privy Council who held that the co-widow was entitled to succeed to the property of a woman dying without issue, in preference to her husband's brother or husband's brother's son on the ground that a wife was a sapinda of her husband, and therefore, on failure of the husband, the co-widow was his nearest sapinda and entitled to the property in suit.[7] Referring to Brihaspati's text their Lordships said: "They are of opinion that the text of Brihaspati should be read distributively as regards the property of woman married according to one of the approved forms and the property of those married in one of the lower forms. In the one case those of the heirs enumerated in Brihaspati who are blood relations of the husband, viz., the husband's sister's son, the husband's brother's son and the husband's brother will succeed to the women's property and in the other cases the relations of the father will succeed. In the diversity of opinion amongst the text-writers whether Brihaspati's series of heirs take in the order in which they are enumerated, their Lordships think that the better opinion is that the order of succession is not indicated."[8]

2669. According to this view, Kamlakar enumerates the following relations as ranking next to the husband:—

(1) The stepson.

(2) The stepgrandson.

---

(1) Thakoor Deybee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 135 (175); Champat v. Shiba, 8 A. 393 (395); Ganesh v. Ajudhit, 28 A. 345; Jagannath v. Ranjit Singh, 25 C. 354 (366); Marya Pillai v. Sivabhagyathachi, 36 M. 116; Kanakammal v. Ananthamathi, 37 M. 292; Marya v. Sivabagyanthachi, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 168; Mathosri, v. Sivaji, (1920) M.W.N. 501: 59 I.C. 265.

(2) Kanakammal v. Ananthamathi, 37 M. 293; Ganpat v. Secretary of State, 45 B. 1106; Motichand v. Kunwar Kalika, 48 A. 663 (665).

(3) Manu, IX-183.

(4) May., IV-X-30 explained in Kesserbai v. Hunsraji, 30 B. 431 P.C.

(5) Sm. Ch., IX-III-36.

(6) Bannerji's Stridhan (4th Ed.), 387.

(7) Kesser Bai v. Hunsraj, 30 B. 431 P.C. affirming O.A. Kesser Bai v. Monghibai, 5 Bom. L.R. 244 reversing 6 Bom. L.R. 17; Krishnai v. Shripati, 30 B. 333.

(8) Kesserbai v. Hunsraj, 30 B. 431 (451) P.C.

(3) The rival wife.
(4) The stepdaughter.
(5) The husband's other gotraj sapindas, and
(6) Bandhus, in the order, in which they inherit his property.

This view is endorsed by the Bombay Court[1] in a case in which the stepgrandson was held entitled to a woman's stridhan in preference to a co-widow or to the husband's brother's son, and a co-widow was preferred to the grandchildren of the father-in-law's brother, because she was the nearest sapinda of the deceased husband,[2] and the whole brother of the husband to his half brothers[3] or to the deceased woman's stepbrother.[4] So in Madras the stepson is preferred to the sister's son,[5] and following the same rule the grandson of a co-widow is preferred to a nephew and co-widow[6] and so the Privy Council preferred a co-widow to the husband's brother or the husband's brother's son,[7] and the same high tribunal in another case confirmed the rights of the collateral heirs of the husband,[8] and the Allahabad Court maintained the rights of a collateral relation who was the near sapinda of the brother of the deceased husband in preference to the brother of the deceased,[9] and in Madras, the husband's brother's daughter's son is placed before the sister's daughter's son.[10] But as compared with the collateral sapindas of the husband his co-wife's daughter is held entitled to preference.[11] Some modern text-writers, however, favour the right of the deceased's stepdaughter as against the collateral relations of the husband.[12] In the Punjab, the husband is held to be the preferential heir to the woman's parents, sisters and other heirs.[13]

Since the husband's sapindas succeed to the stridhan of his wife, there can be no distinction between his natural and adopted son as both are the sapindas of their father and would take equally.[14]

2670. On the failure of the husband's heirs, her own blood relations are held to come in before the Crown.[15] There is no textual authority for this view, though it is otherwise abundantly justified. As such, on the death of one such widow the court divided her estate equally between the brother and sister.[16] Of her own relations, the mother takes precedence of the brother, but a brother's widow, though a sagotra sapinda, is not entitled to succeed as heir in Madras,[17] though she would be so entitled in Bombay.

---

(1) Gojabai v. Shahajirao, 17 B. 114; approved in Kesserbai v. Hansraj, 30 B. 431 P.C.
(2) Krishnaji v. Shripati, 30 B. 333.
(3) Paramappa v. Shiddappa, 30 B. 607.
(4) Gunamani v. Prasanna, 23 C.W.N. 1038; Debi Prasanna v. Harendra, 37 C. 863 (Dayabhag case).
(5) Sm. Ch., IX-III-38; Brahmappa v. Papama, 13 M. 1-8.
(6) Jagannath v. Rumjit Singh, 25 C. 354 (367).
(7) Kesserbai v. Hunsraj, 30 B. 431 P. C.
(8) Thakoor Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 139 (175).
(9) Champat v. Shiba, 8 A. 393.
(10) Venkatasubramaniam v. Thayarammah, 21 M. 263.
(11) Marya v. Sivabhagya, 36 M. 116.
(12) Golap Shastri's H.L. (4th Ed.), 580; Bhattacharya's H. L., 580; Bannerjees Marriage and Stridhan, (4th Ed.), 389; but see Marya v. Sivabagyathachi, 36 M.116 (118, 119).
(13) Manni v. Purat Singh, (1909) P.R. 39: 1 I.C. 720.
(14) Padma v. Court of Wards, 8 C. 302 P.C.; Joy Kishore v. Panchoo, 4 C. L.R. 538 (555); Gangadhar v. Hira Lal, 43 C. 944 (956).
(15) W. & B., p. 544; Kanakammal v. Ananthamathi, 37 M. 293; Ganpat v. Secretary of State, 45 B. 1106; Vithal v. Balu, 60 B. 671 (676).
(16) Vithal v. Balu, 60 B. 671 (676).
(17) Kanakammal v. Ananthamathi, 37 M. 293.

Mithila law.

2671. The same principle governs the Mithila country where the text of Brihaspati has been deserted in favour of the Mitakshara[1] according to which the husband's brother's son[2] is preferred to the husband's sister's son[3] and they both are preferred to his paternal great-grandfather's great-grandson.[4]

The Mitakshara is silent as to who are to take on a total failure of the husband's heirs. In Bombay, it is suggested that in that case the father's sapindas next inherit.[5] This view is deduced from a text quoted in the Mitakshara that "on failure of relations on both sides (the husband's and the parent's) the king becomes the supporter and master of a female" and is endorsed by Sir Gurudas Banerji who, however, adds "that it is not clear whether the paternal kinsmen should come after the husband's sapindas or after his samanodaks."[6]

Clause (2).

2672. Heirs of Asur Marriage.—The Asur form of marriage has been already described. Asuras were the aborigines of India before the Aryan settler by whom Asur marriage was regarded as demoniacal. Its leading characteristic is the payment of a price for the purchase of the bride from her father,[7] as distinguished from a present made to the bride.[8] In spite of the textual objurgations against it, it is quite commonly practised amongst Hindus of all castes, amongst Brahmins in Bengal[9] as amongst the Brahmins and other high caste residents of western,[10] and southern India where Sir Thomas Strange doubted whether any other form was observed.[11] Many variations of the Asur form have come into vogue, and if the question were ever put to the text, whether a given marriage was Brahm or Asur, it might not always be easy to furnish the answer. What would, for example, be the class of a Gandharba[12] a Santigrihit[13] of a Katar marriage in which the wife is held to occupy a distinctly inferior position to a married wife. And there are several other marriages which defy classification according to the orthodox view of marriage.

Turning next to the heirs to stridhan of a woman married in the Asur form, it has already been seen that Mitakshara expressly mentions the mother, the father the father's next of kin, and the mother's next of kin in the other of succession.[14] In this view, after the parents the heirs to her stridhan would be, her sister's son, her husband's sister's son, her husband's brother's son, her brother's son, her son-in-law and her husband's younger brother in accordance with the following text:—

---

(1) Bachha v. Jugmohan, 12 C. 348 (356, 357); Mohun Pershad v. Kishen Mohun, 21 C. 344; Kamla Prasad v. Murti Manohar, 13 Pat. 550 (559).

(2) Basha v. Jugmohan, 12 C. 348 (356, 357).

(3) Kamla Prasad v. Murli Manohar, 13 Pat. 550 (584).

(4) Mohun Pershad v. Kishen Mohun, 21 C. 344.

(5) 1 W. and B., p. 243.

(6) Marriage and Stridhan, (4th Ed.), 406.

(7) Manu, III-31; Chunilal v. Suraj Ram, 33 B. 433.

(8) Jaikisondas v. Harikisondas, 2 B. 9 (15).

(9) Bannerji's Marriage and Stridhan (4th Ed.), 83.

(10) Steel's Law of Caste, 159.

(11) 1 Str. H. L., 43.

(12) Hajmu v. Bhadoorun, referred to in (1846) B.S.D.A. 340; 7 B.S.R. 355 (356); Mokund v. Bissessuree, (1853) B. S. D.A. 159; Fanindra v. Rajeswar, 11 C. 463 P.C.

(13) Prandhur v. Ramchander, (1861) B.S.D.A. 166; Durrapsing v. Buzzurdhun, 2 Hay 335.

(14) Mit., II-IX-II; Vijiarangam v. Lakshuman, 8 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 244; Dwarka Nath v. Sarat Chandra, 39 C. 119.

Brihaspati.—"The mother's sister, the maternal uncle's wife, the paternal uncle's wife, the father's sister, the mother-in-law and the wife of an elder brother are pronounced similar to mothers. If they have no son born in lawful wedlock, nor daughter's son, nor his son, then the sister's son and the rest shall take their property."[1]

As already observed, the Privy Council have held that this text of Brihaspati, is illutrative and not exhaustive and that it should be read distributively as regards the property of women married according to one of the approved forms, and the property of those married in a disapproved form; in the one case, those of the heirs enumerated in the text who are blood relations of the husband will succeed, and in the other case the relations of the father will succeed.[2] Under the Mayukh, however, the kinsmen enumerated by Brihaspati take in the order named by him. With this difference there is no other difference[3] between the Mitakshara and the Mayukh order of succession to the stridhan of a woman married in either form. Amongst the distant kinsmen gotrajas take precedence over bandhus.[4] But the wives of gotraj sapindas and samanodaks possess the right of inheritance co-extensive with those of their husbands after whom they are entitled to take.[5] According to the custom in Agambadia caste, the stridhan property of a widow, without issue, goes to her parents in preference to the husband's kindred.[6]

Devolution of Sulk.

371. (1) Both under the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag systems, sulk goes first to the uterine brothers, then to the mother, then to the father, and in default of them, it goes to the heirs of the other stridhan:

(2) Provided that in the Dayabhag country, the heir ranking next after the father is the husband.

2673. Analogous Law.—This and the next section state special rules governing the devolution of certain classes of technical stridhan. The rule here stated is with the variation noted in clause (2) applicable alike to the Mitakshara[7] and the Mayuk[8] schools.

The texts on this point somewhat differ as will be apparent from the following:—

Gautam[9] (one reading).—"The sister's fee belongs to the uterine brothers after the death of the mother."[10]

Ib. (another reading).—"The sister's fee belongs to the uterine brother; after them it goes to the mother, and next to the father. Some say before her."[11]

Ib. (another reading).—"The sister's fee belongs to her uterine brothers, if her mother be dead. Some (declare, that it belongs to them) even while the mother lives."[12]

---

(1) Cited in May., I-XV-30.
(2) Kesar Bai v. Hunsraj, 30 B. 431 P. C.
(3) Krishnaji v. Shripati, 30 B. 333; Kesar Bai v. Hunsraj, 30 B. 431 P.C.; Parmappa v. Shiddappa, 30 B. 607.
(4) 1 W. & B., p. 215.
(5) Lakshmi Bai v. Jayaram, 6 B.H.C. R. (A.C.) 152; Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai, 2 B. 338.
(6) Vellaichami v. Mamundi, 23 I.C. (M.) 124.
(7) Mit., II-XI-14.
(8) May., IV-X-32; Sitabai v. Wasantrao, 3 Bom. L.R. 201.
(9) "भगिनीशुल्कं सादयोणामूर्ध्वं मातुः"
(10) Gautam, XXVIII-23, as cited in Mit., II-XI-14. Same Translation in May., IV-X-32.
(11) Gautam, XXVIII-23 as cited in Dayabhag, IV-III-27; Virmitrodai (Sarkar) 242; Sm. Ch., IX-III-32, 33; Vivad Chint. (Tagore) 270.
(12) Gautam, XXVIII-25, 26; 2 S. B. E. 303.

But the variation in the reading is immaterial, since the brother being mentioned first, he was probably intended to take first, and this is the view now generally held.[1]

After the brother and the mother the course of devolution follows the other stridhan.

2674. Mithila.—In the Mithila country after the brother and the mother, the father takes, which is also consistent with one reading of the text before cited accepted by the Vivad Chintamani which is a local authority in the Mithila country.

2675. Dravid Departure.—In the Dravid country where the Smriti Chandrika is a special local authority, the variation in the reading before noticed is accepted, so that the sulk is first inherited by the mother and then by the full brother.

Devolution of certain other stridhan.

372. In the Mayukh and the Dravid countries, the following classes of stridhan follow a special line of devolution:—

(1) Yautak stridhan goes to the maiden daughters in the first instance.

(2) Anvadheyak, Adhiavedanik and Pitri-Dutt stridhans are shared equally by (i) the sons and unmarried daughters, and (ii) the sons and married daughters, and failing them, they are inherited by the daughter's children and son's son:

Provided that in the case of stridhan mentioned in the last clause, widowed daughters are excluded and the widows of gotraj sapindas do not inherit any stridhan.

2676. Analogous Law.—The first clause stating that the yautak stridhan goes first to the unmarried daughters alone, and not to the sons, is in accordance with Manu,[2] followed both in the Mitakshara[3] and the Mayukh.[4]

As to Anvadheyak stridhan,[5] Manu declares that it shall be in inherited by her children[6] but Mitakshara's gloss upon it, however, is that sons inherit only in default of daughters. The Mayukh dissents from this view holding both sons and daughters its equal participants,[7] and it has been so held[8] the son taking in preference to a grandson of a predeceased son[9] while a stepson is no heir at all.[10] As amongst daughters the unmarried are preferred to the married.[11] The same rule extends to Southern

(1) 2 Vyavastha Chandrika, 423, 550; Bhattacharya's H.L., (2nd Ed.), 578; Cunn. H. L., p. 119.
(2) Manu, IX-139.
(3) Mit., II-XI-13.
(4) Manu, IX-139 cited and followed in May., IV-X-17.
(5) Manu, IX-195; May. I-V-X-14 (Mandlik) 95.
(6) Means a gift to a woman from her husband or his family subsequent to her marriage. Hurry Shankar v. Krishnarao Cited in Dayal Das v. Savitri Bai, 34 B. 385 (389).
(7) Mandlik's Hindu Law, p. 95 Explained in Dayal Das v. Savitri Bai, 34 B. 385 (389, 390).
(8) Ashabai v. Haji Tyeb, 9 B. 115 (126) followed in Sitabai v. Wasant Rao, 3 Bom. L.R. 201 (208); Dayal Das v. Savitri Bai, 3 B. 385; Jagannath v. Narayan, 34 B. 553 (558).
(9) Dowlatram v. Narainbas, 14 S.L.R. 231: 60 I.C. 929.
(10) Bhimacharya v. Ramacharya, 33 B. 452; Lal Singh v. Girdhari Das, 14 S.L.R. 224: 60 I.C. 263.
(11) Dayal Das v. Savitri Bai, 34 B. 335.

India[1] except that widowed daughters are excluded from inheriting it[2] and the widows of gotraj sapindas do not take as they do under the Mayukh.[3] Consequently, neither the brother's widow[4] nor the daughter-in-law[5] will take as heir.

2677. Pitri-Dutt.—Is a species of anvadheyak and follows the same rule.[6]

2678. Ayautak.—The rule of succession regarding ayautak stridhan appears to be the same, in areas outside the influences of the Mayukh and the Dravid schools. Thus according to the Calcutta High Court, sons and the maiden daughters take equally the ayautak stridhan, married daughters being postponed.[7]

373. The heirs to the sulk, ayautak, anvadheyak and gifts received during maidenhood of an issueless woman, subject to the Dayabhag law, are, in the first instance, her—

Dayabhag Succession of Sulk and Anvadhayak.

(1) brothers of the whole blood;

(2) mother;

(3) father;

(4) husband;

and it then follows the line of succession applicable to other stridhan, a brother's son being entitled to succeed in preference to a step-daughter's son.[8]

2679. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by an express text of the Dayabhag,[9] the scheme of which is thus explained: "For the purposes of inheritance Jimut Vahan divides stridhan property into two broad classes, namely, ayautak, or property given to a female at a time other than that of marriage, and yautak or property given to a female at the time of marriage. The rules laid down for these two classes which are mutually exclusive are subject to modifications in the cases of (a) maiden's property, and (b) pitri-dutt or property given by the father, for which special rules are laid down. . . If we refer to S. 3 which deals with succession to the stridhan property of a childless woman, we find it laid down in para. 29 that 'the property goes first to the whole brother; if there be none, to the mother; if she be dead, to the father; but on failure of these it devolves on the husband.'' This passage in our opinion contains the rule laid down by Jimut Vahan regarding the order of succession to the ayautak stridhan of a childless woman. No doubt, the passage comes immediately after a discussion upon the question of the right of inheritance to the kind of stridhan called sulk or gratuity, but we do not think that

---

(1) Sm. Chand., IX-III-1-11; Muttu v. Dorasingha, 3 M. 290; Sengamalathammal v. Valaynda, 3 M.H.C.R. 312 (313, 316); Sm. Chand., I-X III-1-11; Venkatarama v. Bhujanga, 19 M. 107.

(2) Sm. Chand., I-X-III-9.

(3) Bandam v. Bandam, 4 M.H.C.R. 180; Thayammal v. Annamalai, 19 M. 35.

(4) Thayammal v. Annamalai, 19 M. 35; Kanakammal v. Ananthamathi, 37 M. 293.

(5) Bandam v. Bandam, 4 M.H.C.R. 180.

(6) Jagannath v. Narayan, 34 B. 553 (558).

(7) Delanney v. Pranbari, 22 C.W.N. 990: 45 I.C. 879.

(8) Krishnabihari v. Sarojinee Dasi, 60 C. 1061.

(9) Dayabhag, IV-III-25-28.

the passage can be restricted in its application to that kind of stridhan alone."[1]

2680. Ayautak: Anvadheyak.—The terms ayautak and anvadheyak are not mutually exclusive since a gift may be ayautak, because it was given to a woman by her father after her marriage,[2] and it may be anvadheyak, because it is a post-nuptial gift.[3]

Dayabhag Devolution of Stridhan.

374. The stridhan of women subject to the Dayabhag law, other than sulk, ayautak and pitri-dutt and other special classes of stridhan, hereinafter provided for, devolves on the following heirs:—

(1) The son and unbetrothed daughter;[4]
(2) Married daughter having or who is likely to have a son;
(3) Son's son;
(4) Daughter's son;
(5) Son's son's son;
(6) The son of a rival wife;
(7) Her son's son;
(8) A barren daughter or sonless widowed daughter;
(9) The parents;
(10) Brother;
(11) The husband.

2681. Analogous Law.—The Dayabhag law on the subject of this section is supported by the following texts:—

Devala.—"A woman's property is common to her sons and unmarried daughters, when she is dead; but if she have no issue, her husband shall take it, her mother, her brother or her father."[5]

Dayabhag (citing the last).—"Here it is expressly declared that the mother's goods are common to the son and unmarried daughter and if the maiden daughter were exclusively entitled to the whole of her mother's estate [notwithstanding the existence of the brother] the special text of Manu and others [which will be cited] concerning [yautak] wealth given at the nuptials, would be unmeaning, since she should have the right to all cases indiscriminately."[6]

2682. Son and unbetrothed Daughter.—The next heir to the mother's stridhan is her son and "unbetrothed" daughter.[7] The Sanskrit word for "unbetrothed" (apratta)[8] is so understood. The fact that the daughter is betrothed but not married is immaterial since both fall into a class apart.[9] But this view is combated, by Jagannath who writes: "Shri Krishna Tarkalankar and others hold that unmarried daughters whether verbally betrothed or not, shall at the same time take equal shares. Does it not appear from the separate mention of them in the text of Gautam, that their title is successive? To this we reply, since it is acknowledged that the succession

Mithila Law.

(1) Ram Gopal v. Narain Chandra, 33 C. 315 (321, 322) followed in Mahendra v. Girish Chandra, 19 C.W.N. 1287: 31 I.C. 561.

(2) Ram Gopal v. Narain Chandra, 33 C. 315 (320).

(3) Daya., Ch. IV, Sec. III, §§ 15, 16.

(4) Ornaments presented before or after marriage, go to the son in preference to the daughter; Bhupendra v. Goonendra, 32 C.W.N. 133.

(5) Cited in Dayabhag, IV-II-6.

(6) Dayabhag, IV-II-7.

(7) In Basanta v. Kamikshya, 33 C. 23 (27) P.C., it was conceded that an "unmarried daughter" succeeds to the Ayautak Stridhan, in the absence of a son.

(8) Sanskrit, "अप्रत्त"

(9) Sreenath v. Surbo, 10 W.R. 488 (490): "The daughter not verbally betrothed, whom the legislator calls a virgin daughter."—3 Dig. 591.

of a daughter who has been betrothed is barred by the claim of one who has not been affianced, both cannot have an equal right to inherit with their brother; one who has an equal title with the preferable heir, cannot be reduced to an equal succession with one who would have been excluded by that heir; for stronger and weaker claims cannot, in the same circumstances, be equal. But as a son, who would be debarred by the existence of his own father, has an equal claim to the patrimony with his paternal uncle who had an equal right with his father, likewise in the present instance, a betrothed daughter who would have been debarred by a daughter not betrothed has an equal title with a son who had an equal title with a daughter who was not betrothed."[1]

Clause (2).

2683. "Married daughter having or who is likely to have an issue."—The meaning of this phrase has already been examined in the preceding pages, while dealing with the general law of inheritance.

Clause (3).

2684. Son's Son.—The son's son takes precedence of a daughter's son for it is reasonable, since the married daughter is debarred from the inheritance by the son, that the son of the debarred daughter shall be excluded by the son of the person who bars her claim.[2]

Clause (4).

2685. Daughter's Son.—The daughter's son takes next, for as the text of Manu expresses: "Even the son of a daughter delivers him in the next world, like the son of son."[3] But a daughter's daughter's son is no heir.[4]

Clause (5).

2686. Son's Son's Son.—The son's grandson is placed on the authority of Shri Krishna.[5]

Clause (6).

2687. Son of a Rival Wife.—His claim was affirmed in an old case decided in 1836[6] on the authority of the court Pandit, who cited Dayakram Sangrah in support of his opinion. Golap Shastri assigns him even a higher place—between (3) and (4).[7]

Clauses (7) and (8).

2688. Grandson and Great-grandson.—According to the Dayabhag, barren and widowed daughters should come in after the daughter's son, but both Shri Krishna[8] and Raghunandan support the order given here, and Shri Krishna's views are considered as preferable in this matter.

Clause (9).

2689. Barren or Widowed Daughter.—A barren or sonless daughter is placed here for reasons last given. According to the Dayabhag, her place is after the daughter's son in the list of heirs.[9]

Clauses (10)-(12).

2690. Other Heirs.—In default of her children, her step-sons or their male issue, the heirs to succeed are the heirs of a childless woman, viz., her father, mother,

(1) 3 Dig. 590.
(2) Dayabhag, IV-II-11.
(3) Manu, IX-139; cited in Dayabhag, IX-II-10; Dayatattwa, X-7 (Setlur, 500).
(4) Dintarini v. Ambica Prasad, 105 I.C. (C.) 841.
(5) Dayabhag, IX-II-12; See Colebrooke's note.
(6) Chund v. Kishenmunee, 6 B.S.R. 90 (95): 7 I.D. (O.S.) 734 (738).
(7) Sarkar's H.L. (3rd Ed.), 415.
(8) Dayatattwa, X-8; (Setlur) 500; Dayakram Sangrah, II-IV-7 (Setlur) 130; Bannerjee's Marriage and Stridhan (4th Ed.) 439.
(9) Dayabhag, IV-II-12.

brother and husband.[1] And it has been held that a woman's half sister's son is entitled to preference over the daughter's son of the great-grandson of the grandfather of the woman's husband.[2]

2691. Heirs to Ayautak.—The brother succeeds to the ayautak stridhan property of a married woman governed by the Dayabhag law in, preference to the husband irrespective of the form of the marriage.[3] Similarly in a competition between the father and the husband and the son of a co-wife the father is entitled to preference,[4] while sons are given preference to married daughters in the succession to pitri-dutt ayautak stridhan,[5] so is a brother's son in preference to a step-daughter's son.[6] A sister's son is no heir under the Dayabhag law.[7]

Succession to childless woman.

375. Except the sulk and anvadheyak stridhans, the heirs to the stridhan of a childless woman are—

(a) If married in Brahm form—

(1) Husband.[8]
(2) Brother.
(3) Mother.
(4) Father.[9]

(b) If married in Asur form—

(1) Mother.
(2) Father.
(3) Brother.
(4) Husband.[10]

(c) After whom in whatever form married her heirs are—

(5) Husband's younger brother.[11]
(6) Son of husband's elder or younger brother.[12]
(7) Sister's son, including step-sister's son.[13]
(8) Husband's sister's son.
(9) Brother's son.
(10) Daughter's husband.[14]
(11) Father-in-law.
(12) Husband's elder brother.[15]
(13) Her father-in-law's great-grandson in the male line.
(14) The paternal grandfather of her husband or his issue.[16]

---

(1) Basanta v. Kamikshya, 33 C. 23 (27) P.C.

(2) Sashi Bhusan v. Rajendra, 40 C. 82.

(3) Mahendra Nath v. Girish Chandra, 19 C.W.N. 1287: 31 I.C. 561.

(4) Baikunta v. Kasinath, 16 I.C. (C.) 55.

(5) Prasanna v. Surat Soshi, 36 C. 86.

(6) Krishnabihari v. Sarojenee, 60 C. 1061.

(7) Satish Chandra v. Haridas, (1934) C. 399.

(8) Dayabhag, IV-III-2-24; Bisto Pershad v. Radha, 16 W.R. 115; Suraj Deo Narain v. Ramdewan, 103 I.C. 869: (1927) Pat. 392; Bhagwan Das v. Gajadhar, 9 N.L.J. 221.

(9) Dayakram Sangrah, II-III-16, 17 (Setlur) 128.

(10) Ib.

(11) Who comes before widow's step-brother; Debiprasanna v. Harendra, 37 C. 863. In Toolsey v. Luckymoney, 4 C. W.N. 743, Sale, J., placed a brother's son before the husband's younger brother of the half blood.

(12) This order is supported by Dayabhag, IV-III-31, as explained in Kesserbai v. Hunsraj, 30 B. 431 (451, 452) P. C.; Bachha v. Jugmon, 12 C. 348 (353).

(13) Dashrathi v. Bipin Bihari, 32 C. 261 P.C.; Sashi Bhusan v. Rajendra, 40 C. 82 P.C.

(14) In Gossain v. Kishenmunee, 6 B. S. R. 90: 7 I.D. (O. S.) 734, the son of a co-wife was preferred to the son of the daughter's son of the woman's paternal great-grandfather.

(15) Dayabhag, IV-III-39; Dayakram Sangrah, II-VI-10 (Setlur) 133; Dayatattwa, X-39 (Setlur) 504.

(16) 3 Dig. 623 citing Vishnu Puran.

(15) The paternal great-grandfather of her husband or his issue of the husband in order of propinquity.

(16) The Sakulyas[1]

(17) The Samanodaks.[2]

(18) The Samanpravars.

(19) The Crown.[3]

Heirs to property given by the father.

376. The heirs to stridhan given by the father are in the first instance—

(1) The full brother.

(2) The mother.

(3) The father.

(4) The husband.

2692. Analogous Law.—This section is based on the Dayabhag[4] and supported by judicial precedents.[5]

Heirs to Yautak.

377. 1. The yautak is in the first instance taken by—

(1) Unbetrothed daughters.

(2) Betrothed daughters.

(3) Married daughters who have[6] or are likely to have son.

(4) Barren and sonless widowed daughter.[7]

(5) The son.[8]

(6) Daughter's son.[9]

(7) The son's son.[10]

(8) The son's son's son.[11]

(9) The son of a rival wife.[12]

(10) Grandson of a rival wife.[13]

(11) Great-grandson of a rival wife.[14]

2. In default of the abovementioned heirs, her heirs are her—

(a) If she was married in an approved form;

(12) Husband;

(13) Brother;

(14) Mother;

(15) Father;

---

(1) Dayakram Sangrah, II-V-11 (Setlur) 133.

(2) Ib., II-V-13 (Setlur) 133. In Ib., § 12 it is said that if the woman be a Brahmin the heirs are "inhabitants of the same village," but this view is overruled by the Privy Council in Collector v. Cavaly, 8 M.I.A. 500.

(3) 3 Dig. 623, Jagannath placed next mother's Sapindas and Samanodaks; but does not mention Samanpravars.

(4) Dayabhag, IV-III-10, 29; contra Raghunandan, Dayatattwa, X-10, 11, 26 who places the husband first except as regards the property given by parents during maidenhood, and Sri Krishna, who places him first also as regards gifts subsequent. Dayakram Sangrah II-V-3, 4. See this subject discussed per Dwarka Nath Mitter, J., in Jadoo Nath v. Busunta, 19 W.R. 264 (266, 267).

(5) Judoonath v. Busunto, 19 W.R. 264; Hurry Mohan v. Sonatun, 1 C. 275; Gopal v. Ramachandra, 28 C. 311; Ram Gopal v. Narain, 33 C. 313.

(6) "Married daughters who have a son" includes a widowed daughter having a son; Charu Chunder v. Satish Chunder, 18 C. 327.

(7) Ib.

(8) Dayabhag, IV-II-25; Dayakram Sangrah, II-III-8.

(9) Dayakram Sangrah, II-III-9.

(10) Ib., § 10.

(11) Ib.

(12) Ib., § 11.

(13) Ib., § 13.

(14) Manu, X-131; Gautam, XXVIII-21, Yadnavalkya, II-117; Bassanta v. Manikshya, 33 C. 23 (27) P.C.

(b) If she was married in an unapproved form;

(12) Mother;
(13) Father;
(14) Brother;
(15) Husband;
(16) Husband's younger brother;
(17) Husband's brother's son;
(18) Sister's son;
(19) Husband's sister's son;
(20) Brother's son;
(21) Daughter's husband;
(22) Husband's heirs.

2693. Analogous Law.—Succession to yautak, under the Bengal school, follows the orthodox texts in favouring the exclusive succession of daughters, the only difference being in the order in which the daughters take. This, as explained before, arises from the significance attached to the word "apratta" and "apratisthit", which are interpreted to mean "unaffianced" and "not actually married."[1]

A widowed daughter having a son, himself disqualified to inherit, will still count as a married daughter having a son.[2]

378. Disqualified heirs. (1) Persons disqualified from ordinary inheritance by reason of their disabilities mentioned in sections 304 to 307 (both inclusive) are equally disqualified to inherit stridhan.

(2) But unchastity does not disqualify a woman from inheriting it.[3]

2694. Analogous Law.—The following texts support this section.

Manu.—"Impotent persons and outcasts are exeluded from a share of the heritage; and so are persons born blind and deaf as well as mad men, idiots, the dumb and those who have lost a sense (or limb)."[4]

Mitakshara (citing the last).—"The masculine gender is not here used restrictively in speaking of an outcast and the rest. It must be, therefore, understood that the wife, the daughter, the mother or any other female being disqualified for any of the defects which have been specified is likewise excluded from participation."[5]

This passage however refers to succession to a male. And the question arises whether it is equally a disqualification to succession to stridhan. On this point, it was observed in a case: "According to the Hindu lawyers, such and other infirmities are the signs of original sin, and it is the sin which is the cause of disinheritance, and this is used as a ground for bringing men to repentance. The stridhan heir, would not be affected by this, and the widow, though dumb, may recover this portion of the property, the daughter cannot."[6]

---

(1) Dayabhag, IV-II-23; Dayakram Sangrah, II-II-5, 7.

(2) Charu Chunder v. Nobe Sundari, 18 C. 337.

(3) Mynabai v. Uttaram, 8 M.I.A. 400 (425, 426), on remand, 2 M.H.C.R. 196 (203, 204); Ganga v. Ghasita, 1 A. 46 F. B., followed in Nogendra v. Benoy Krishna, 30 C. 521; Angammal v. Venkata, 26 M. 509.

(4) Manu, IX-201.

(5) Vallabhram v. Hariganga, 4 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 135 (139). See Bannerjee's Marriage and Stridhan (4th Ed.), 369, 370.

(6) Mit., II-X-8, explained in Vallabhram v. Hariganga, 4 B.H.C.R. (A. C.) 135.

Clause (2).

2695. Neither unchastity, as distinct from prostitution,[1] nor illegitimacy disqualifies an heir to stridhan: the reason for the one is the absence of any express disqualifying text,[2] while the other is supported by express texts in its favour quoted under the next section. It will be seen that under the Mitakshara law of inheritance to males only the unchaste widow is disqualified from inheriting to her husband, though under the Dayabhag such disqualification is more general (S. 306).

But so far as regards inheritance of stridhan this disqualification is generally absent, whether the heir be subject to the Mitakshara or the Dayabhag Law. In this respect, therefore, the rule stated in Clause (2) of the section affects the Dayabhag, more than it does the Mitakshara.

For further commentary to Clause (2), see §§ 2697, 2698.

Inheritance by illegitimate children.

379. (1) Illegitimacy is no bar to succession to stridhan of which the heirs rank in the following order[3]:—

(a) Legitimate daughter;

(b) Legitimate son;

(c) Illegitimate daughter;

(d) Illegitimate son;

(e) Other blood relations of the Propositus in their order of propinquity.

(2) Provided that where the tie of marriage is not legally severed on the wife's immorality, her husband and his sapindas take in preference to her own blood relations.[4]

(3) On failure of the issue, legitimate or illegitimate, a child validly adopted by a woman inherits her stridhan in preference to her other heirs.[5]

2696. Analogous Law.—Abundant texts[6] exist in the early smritis recognizing one's natural affspring, and there is no authority against the existence of heritable blood between the woman and her offspring. As such, Hindu Law recognizes children whether legitimate or illegitimate as en-

---

(1) Nogendra v. Benoy Krishna, 30 C. 521 (526).

(2) The text of Narad cited in Mitt. II-§ 10; Dayabhag, V-§ 13; Dayakram Sangrah, Ch. III—to the effect that vice disqualifies an heir is too vague and therefore obsolete; Ganga v. Ghasita, 1 A. 46 (47, 48) F.B.

(3) Myna Bai v. Uttaram, 2 M.H. C.R. 196; Kojiyadu v. Lakshmi, 5 M. 149; Ganga Jati v. Ghasita, 1 A. 46 F.B.; Advyappa v. Rudrava, 4 B. 104; Hiralal v. Tripura, 40 C. 650 (672) F.B.

(4) Subbaraya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171; Debi Prasanna v. Harendra, 37 C. 868; Gunamani v. Debi Prosanna, 23 C.W.N. 1038; Hiralal v. Tripura, 40 C. 650 (674) F.B.; Bisheshur v. Mata Gholam, 2 N.W.P.H.C.R. 300; Narain Das v. Tirlok Tiwari, 29 A. 4; Contra blood relations preferred to husband and his sapindas—Sivasungu v. Minal, 12 M. 277; Narasanna v. Gangu, 13 M. 133; Kaminey Bewah, (In re), 21 C. 697; Ram Prasad v. Mt. Subu Bai, 4 N.L.R. 31; Chandrabhaga v. Vishwanath, 9 N.L.R. 102: 20 I.C. 557; Maharani v. Thakur Prasad, 14 O.C. 234: 12 I.C. 778.

(5) Chalakonda v. Chalakonda, 2 M.H. C.R. 56; Kamalakshi v. Nagarathnam, 5 M.H.C.R. 161; Venku v. Mahalinga, 11 M. 393; Muttukannu v. Paramasami, 12 M. 214.

(6) Manu, IX-35, 38.

titled to inherit to their mother[1] in the absence of legitimate issue.[2] But the rule is obviously inapplicable to the illegitimate issue of a married woman, on which we find the following text:—

Asahaya.—"When the widow having son possesses stridhan blinded by sexual passion forsakes the son, and takes to another husband with her, stridhan is taken by the other husband, and not by the son."

"But she who having no stridhan takes to another man with the property left by her husband that property is not taken by the other husband. To that personal wealth the sons are entitled."[3]

2697. Principle.—The law of succession to and by the unchaste females is a subject upon which the textual authority is meagre, and judicial authority, after a certain point, conflicting. But the subject is one which should not be suffered to rest in this state of uncertainty. So far as regards the general law or succession, it has already been seen that illegitimacy and unchastity are barriers against inheritance, since, except in the case of a Shudra, the illegitimate son of a twice born male and his unchaste widow and daughter are all excluded from inheritance. (S. 302). So far the law is well settled, but it is settled on the authority of texts which only refer and relate to inheritance to a male. There is no similar textual prohibition extending to the inheritance to a female. The question being thus left unfettered by authority, it was left to be decided on the basis of equity and justice, which it was held supported the natural claim of the children to inherit to their mother.[4]

And between them legitimacy and the fact that succession to stridhan preferably followed the female line established the precedence of legitimate offspring and the daughter.

And the further paucity of the texts distinguishing an inherited stridhan and that acquired otherwise by the owner, dispensed with the necessity of discriminating between the two classes of stridhan which both became subject to the same law of inheritance, except in Bombay, where the technical stridhan is held to follow the special line of shastric devolution.[5]

2698. But this raised the question of the comparative rights of the husband and his sapindas and the owner's own blood relations. One view was that since in the view of Hindu Law marriage was a sacrament and created an indissoluble union upon marriage from which there could be no divorce, neither unchastity nor prostitution sufficed to sever the marital tie, and therefore, the right of the husband and his sapindas to inherit to the wife remained unaffected by her lapse from virtue, while the other view was that the wife's continued immorality and the abandonment of her husband sufficed to sever the conjugal relationship, and with it the right of inheritance. "That she ceased to be her husband's heir was clear from the textual authorities. But here again the texts were silent on the husband's disqualification to inherit to his wife. And the same parity of

---

(1) Myna Bai v. Uttaram, 2 M.H.C.R. 196 (203); Arumagiri v. Ranganayaki, 21 M. 40; Dundappa v. Bhimava, 45 B. 557; Kasturi v. Late, 16 N.L.R. 221: 56 I.C. 952.

(2) Meenakshi v. Muniandi, 38 M. 1144.

(3) Narad Tit, II-V-20.

(4) Myna Bai v. Uttaram, 8 M.I.A. 400 (425, 426), on remand, 2 M.H.C.R. 196 (203, 204).

(5) Dayal Das v. Savitri Bai, 34 B. 285; Jagannath v. Narayan, 34 B. 553 (558).

reasoning which admitted the right of her blood relations, were, it was argued, protected the right of the husband and his relations to inherit to her.

This view, however, concedes that where a divorce is sanctioned by custom, and prostitution entails a divorce, then the husband and his sapindas would walk out of the line of her heirs.[1]

It will be observed that in so far as the law now permits illegitimate children to succeed to their mother's stridhan Hindu Law sanctions one more anomaly, in that while a male is incompetent to transmit his property, even if self-acquired, to his illegitimate sons and unchaste wife and daughter, the latter possess greater rights in that they are competent to transmit their stridhan to their own offspring, even though illegitimate and unchaste. In this respect woman, who otherwise possesses very limited rights under Hindu Law, has acquired larger rights than are allowable even to man, the reason being that equity has filled in a lacunæ in Hindu Law and created rights out of all proportion to her other rights.

Clause (1).

2699. Prostitute's Children.—The rule is more applicable to professional prostitutes than to woman who have become degraded by unchastity. In the case of the former attached as devadasis to pagodas, the courts both in Bombay[2] and in Madras[3] have recognized the right of their illegitimate issue to inherit, daughters taking before sons. This is so by custom, if not by law.[4] But it is said that the pagoda girls should not be taken to determine the general law of their class, since they take more by custom than by law,[5] which creates no preference of daughters over sons as heirs.[6]

The question is, however, one upon which one cannot feel certain, since there are two views possible, and both are supported by a strong body of judicial opinions, since while on the one hand, it is held that "with prostitutes the tie of kindred being broken, none of their relations who remain undegraded in caste, whether offspring or not inherit from them. Their issue after their degradation succeed."[7] On the other hand, it has been held that "no tie of blood can be destroyed by unchastity, whatever personal disability may be imposed by express provisions of the law upon the person who has become unchaste; consequently, while inheritance is a right arising out of consanguinity, the unchastity or degradation of the Propositus or Proposita as the case may be, will not divert the descent of property, save where there is an express provision."[8] This

(1) Jagannath v. Narayan, 34 B. 553 (558).

(2) Jaya Madhav v. Manjunath, 19 Bom. L.R. 320.

(3) Kamakshi v. Nagarathnam, 5 M. H.C.R. 161; Narasanna v. Gangu, 13 M. 133; Arunagiri v. Ranganayaki, 21 M. 40; Subharaya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171 (177); Meenakshi v. Muniandi, 38 M. 1144.

(4) Venku v. Muttukannu, 12 M. 214.

(5) Meenakshi v. Muniandi, 38 M. 1144.

(6) S. Taleb Ali v. S. Abdul, 29 C. W.N. 624: 89 I.C. 141: (1925) C. 748.

(7) Strange's Manual, § 363, p. 89: Tara Munee v. Mottee, 7 B.S.R. 325: 8 I.D. (O.S.) 247; Kamineymoney (In re), 21 C. 697; Tripura v. Harimati, 38 C. 495; Myna Bai v. Uttaram, 2 M.H.C. R. 196 (203); Sivasangu v. Minal, 12 M. 277; Narasanna v. Gangu, 13 M. 133 (134); Maharana v. Thakur Pershad, 14 O.C. 234: 12 I.C. 778; Satish Chunder v. Mahabali, 21 O.C. 272: 48 I.C. 750; Ramchandra v. Subhu Bai, 4 N.L.R. 31; Chandra Bhaga v. Vishvanath, 9 N.L.R. 102: 20 I.C. 557.

(8) Hiralal v. Tripura, 40 C. 650 (675) F.B.; overruling, Tara Munnee v. Mottee, 7 B.S.R. 325: 8 I.D. (O.S.) 247; Ram Nath v. Durga, 4 C. 550; Kamineymoney (In re), 21 C. 697; Ramananda v. Taikishori, 22 C. 347; Sana Moyee v. Secretary of State, 25 C. 254; Sundari v. Pitambari, 32 C. 871, dissenting from Sivasangu v.

view seems unquestionably right; for there is no authority for the proposition that when a woman had lapsed into prostitution, she becomes civilly dead, with the result that the tie of relationship which connects her to her kindred is completely severed. It has accordingly been held that the stridhan of a degraded married woman would follow the natural line of succession applicable to her stridhan.[1] As such the courts have upheld the claims of the husband,[2] step-son,[3] brother's son,[4] the daughter,[5] the mother[6] and the sister.[7]

2700. Degraded Married Woman's Heirs.—This clause describes the heirs of a married woman. It does not accord with the text cited (§ 2696) which refers to the devolution of property possessed or acquired by a fallen married woman with or without issue. The subject requires examination. The following contingencies are possible: (i) The status of such women who had fallen before the succession opens; (ii) is she a qualified heir to her husband, and (iii) her father; (iv) the devolution of her property on her death; (v) her heirs to inherited estate; and (vi) her heir to her self-acquisition; (vii) the status of her bastard issue in relation to her legitimate issue; (viii) their rights, if any, inter se. The first three questions have already been dealt with in the preceding pages.[8] As regards the effect of her unchastity upon her heirs it is clear that unchastity does not amount to civil death, and it has no effect upon the enjoyment of her own inherited estate or upon the course of devolution of her estate. It is clear that where such woman is possessed of any property which she has acquired or inherited from her male relations such as the father or the husband its devolution would be unaffected by her taking to a course of immorality, since immorality does not destroy the kinship, and kinship determines the right to inheritance. Upon her death,[9] there are no doubt numerous texts[10] which represent the unchaste wife as civilly dead, but these are treated as mere moral objurgations which have no legal value.[11] If she remarried and her remarriage entails forfeiture of her interest in her husband's property as provided in S. 2 of the Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act,[12] then her reversioners will take the estate. In this case Hindu Law condones unchastity but no remarriage, because it involves no change of gotra and while penitence and reformation is possible in the one case it is not in the other. In a Calcutta Full Bench case the question was whether a brother's son was an heir to a degraded widow in respect of the gains of her prostitution. The case was one under the Dayabhag law, but the ultimate decision rested upon

Clause (2).

Minal, 12 M. 277; Narasanna v. Gangu, 13 M. 133, following Bisheshur v. Mata Gholam, 2 N.W.P.H.C.R. 300; Ganga v. Ghasita, 1 A. 46 F.B.; Narain v. Tirlok, 29 A. 4; Adeyappa v. Rudrava, 4 B. 104; Tara v. Krishna, 31 B. 495 (511); Jagannath v. Tripura, 34 B. 553 (559); Kojiyadu v. Lakshmi, 5 M. 149; Subharaya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171; Bhutnath v. Secretary of State, 10 C.W.N. 1085; Sundari v. Nemye, 6 C.L.J. 372; Tripura v. Harimati, 38 C. 493; Ram Prasad v. Subhu Bai, 4 N.L.R. 31; Meenakshi v. Muniandi, 38 M. 114; Mandaram v. Mandaram, 24 M.L.J. 223: 18 I.C. 601; Jagannath v. Narayan, 34 B. 553 (559).

(1) Hiralal v. Tripura, 40 C. 650 F. B.

(2) Narain v. Trilok, 29 A. 4.

(3) Subaraya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171.

(4) Hiralal v. Tripura, 40 C. 650 F.B.

(5) Tara v. Krishna, 31 B. 405.

(6) Bhanga v. Din Mahomed, (1922) 44 P.L.R. 8.

(7) Narayan v. Lakshman, 51 B. 784: (1927) B. 456.

(8) S. 254.

(9) Debi Mangal, v. Mahadeo Prasad, 33 A. 234 P.C.

(10) Manu, XI-183-186; Gautam, XX §§ 4-7, §§ 10-14; 2 S.B. E. 278, 279; Baudhyayan, II-I-36; 14 S.B.E. 216; Vasisth, XV-§§ 12-16; 14 S. B. E. 77; Yadnavalkya, III-295 (Mandlik) (270).

(11) Hiralal v. Tripura, 40 C. 650 F. B. (and cases there cited).

(12) Act XV of 1856.

a more general principle, for while the court held the property acquired by a prostitute as her stridhan,[1] and her brother's son her heir under an express text of Dayabhag,[2] still as regards its applicability to a prostitute it was held that a woman does not cease to be a Hindu or exempt from the Hindu Law by reason of her prostitution,[3] and this is the view also taken in other cases.[4]

2701. In this view the self-acquisition of a woman, married or unmarried whether made out of a moral calling or by prostitution would constitute her stridhan, and devolve upon her stridhan heirs (§ 2657). The same conclusion was reached in an Oudh case,[5] but in this the ratio decidendi is in conflict with the Calcutta Full Bench. In that case the widow of a Halwai by whom she had a son became the mistress of a Brahmin by whom she had a daughter. Her paramour's brother had gifted some land to her, and the question arose whether on her death the land descended to her legitimate son's nephew or her illegitimate daughter, and the court held for the daughter under the rule of justice, equity and good conscience; but it also held that her acquisition of land by prostitution was not her stridhan, the very reverse of which has been laid down by the Calcutta High Court who had, however, before them the case of a widow.

But suppose a married woman with her husband and sons alive took to immoral ways and acquired property and had legitimate issue, who is to succeed to her illegitimate or her legitimate issue or both? If the former it would offend against the laws of morality. If the latter it would be unjust to her illegitimate issue. The succession of both may offer a solution, but it is still not unexceptionable.

2702. According to a Madras case in such a contest, and indeed in all cases, an illegitimate child of a prostitute cannot support his title to succession in preference to or along with a legitimate son, or even a stepson,[6] either under Hindu Law or on the ground of equity.[7] It has in fact no right of inheritance to either parent at all. This view proceeds on the ground that the illegitimate children of dancing-girls are allowed to succeed to their mother solely by custom,[8] but that custom cannot by analogy be extended to all prostitutes;[9] and that, apart from custom, neither Hindu Law nor equity favours their succession. As for the Hindu Law, it is pointed out, that although it speaks of the twelve kinds of sons, they refer to a primitive age long since past, and which was spoken of as past even in the Rigveda 3,000 years ago. At any rate, the Privy Council have held that, except an auras and an adopted son, the other sons have long since been obsolete,[10] and as the dasi-putra has only a place amongst Shudras, there is no textual authority to favour the succession of

(1) Hiralal v. Tripura, 40 C. 650 (661, 662) F.B., citing Dayabhag, Ch. IV, Sect. I § 18; Brij Indar v. Janki Koer, 1 C.L.R. 318.
(2) Dayabhag, Ch. IV, S. III § 37.
(3) Hiralal v. Tripura, 40 C. 650 (663) F.B.
(4) Jagannath v. Narayan, 34 B. 553 (559), followed in Meenakshi v. Muniandi, 38 M. 1144 (1154).
(5) Maharana v. Thakur Pershad, 14 O.C. 234: 12 I.C. 778. To the same effect Ram Prasad v. Subu, 4 N.L.R. 31 (33); Chandrabhaga v. Vishwanath, 9 N.L.R. 102 (107, 109).
(6) Subharaya v. Ramasami, 20 M. 171.
(7) Meenakshi v. Muniandi, 38 M. 1144 (1154).
(8) Venku v. Mahalinga, 11 M. 393; Muttukannu v. Paramasami, 12 M. 214.
(9) Meenakshi v. Muniandi, 38 M. 1144 (1154); Guddati v. Ganpati, 23 M.L.J. 493.
(10) Jeebnath v. Court of Wards, 14 W.R. 409 P.C.

illegitimate children.[1] What then remains but equity and equity cannot, it is said, favour illegitimate children against the legitimate.[2] But it was conceded that in the absence of legitimate children the illegitimate children would be heirs,[3] though later on a more unqualified statement was made denying to illegitimate children any right of inheritance, and the contrary held in Bengal was explained on the ground that those were cases decided under the Dayabhag law and were therefore inapplicable to the Mitakshara country. But the Calcutta cases did not proceed upon any dissenting text of the Dayabhag, but on the broad ground that the self-acquisition of a woman whether married or unmarried constituted her stridhan and would consequently devolve upon her own stridhan heirs.

2703. The question who are her stridhan heirs remains. Her own issue are certainly her heirs, but does the term "issue" include the illegitimate issue? This is the crux of the question, and it must be confessed that unless they come in under the capacious rule of equity they have no other right of inheritance.[4] And in the singularly meagre state of textual authority on the subject, the courts have decided the cases before them in accordance with the rule of justice, equity and good conscience.[5] This was the guiding test in a case in which the sister's son of a prostitute claimed the estate against her husband's brother's son. The court held that while the tie of blood could not be severed by unchastity, it was sufficient to sever the tie of marriage, and that the wife's desertion of the husband for purpose of prostitution for some 30 years and the latter's abandonment of the former was tantamount to her divorce which left the sister's son connected with her by marriage as her sole heritable heir.[6] That unchastity does not sever the tie of blood was held by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court,[7] who however refrained from deciding the difficult question whether it sufficed equally to sever the tie by marriage. But in either view the preferential heirs of such married woman are her own blood relations, and in view of the Calcutta High Court the fact of marriage does not alter the rule applicable to unmarried prostitutes.

2704. General Result Stated.—From the foregoing discussion it will be clear that the self-acquisition of a prostitute whether maiden or married are classed as her stridhan (§ 2701) and that the right of illegitimate children of prostitutes of the dancing class to inheritance to their mothers is now recognized, but it is recognized as one arising out of custom and not under Hindu Law. In some cases the same rule is held to apply to other prostitutes, at any rate unmarried prostitutes, but this is regarded as an

(1) Meenakshi v. Muniandi, 38 M. 1144 (1152), following Annoya v. Chunan, 33 M. 366.

(2) Meenakshi v. Muniandi, 38 M. 1144 (1152) dissenting from contra in Taramuni v. Motee, 7 S.D.A.R. 273.

(3) Myna Bai v. Uttaram, 2 M.H.C.R. 196 O.A. Myna Bai v. Dotaram, 8 M.I.A. 400 (425); Meenakshi v. Muniandi, 38 M. 1144 (1153).

(4) Kamineymony (In re), 21 C. 697; Maharana v. Thakur Pershad, 14 O.C. 234: 12 I.C. 778; Satish Chunder v. Mahabali, 21 O.C. 272: 48 I.C. 750; Chandrabhaga v. Vishwanath, 9 N.I.R. 102: 20 I.C. 557; Taramunee v. Motee, 7 S.D.A.R. 273; Myna Bai v. Uttaram, 2 M.H.C.R. 196, O.A. remanded on a different point Myna Bayee v. Otturam, 8 M.I.A. 400 (425); Sivasangu v. Minal, 12 M. 277; Narasannu v. Gangu, 13 M. 133; Subharaya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171 (177, 178); contra in Meenakshi v. Muniandi, 38 M. 1144 (1153).

(5) Ram Prasad v. Subu, 4 N.L.R. 31. To the same effect Maharani v. Thakur Pershad, 14 O.C. 234: 12 I.C. 778.

(6) Ram Prasad v. Subu Bai, 4 N.L.R. 31 (37) dissenting from contra in Surnomoyee v. S-S, 25 C. 254; Sundari v. Nemye Charan, 6 C.L.J. 372; Narain Das v. Tirlok, 29 A. 4.

(7) Hiralal v. Tripura, 40 C. 650 (677) F.B.

unwarranted extension of the custom. But upholders of the illegitimate children's right support it on equity which the other side do not recognize as tending to encourage immorality. The case of married women makes the question more difficult, for in their case the rights of the illegitimate children come into conflict with their legitimate issue. No case has gone so far as to deny to the one his legal right, though in the absence of the legitimate issue there are cases which would award the inheritance to the illegitimate issue and other blood relations of the degraded married woman in preference to her husband or his other sapindas. In the case of a married woman the order of succession to her would then be (a) her legitimate issue, firstly daughters and then sons; (b) her illegitimate issue in the same order; then, (c) either her husband and his sapindas or her own blood relations—a point upon which judicial opinions do not agree. But it seems that of the two the husband and his relations have undoubtedly a superior legal right, though her own blood relations may as plausibly appeal to equity in support of their claim.

2705. No Heirs.—The illegitimate children are at all allowed to succeed is a concession to custom. As such, their succession is limited to their own parent, since they have no right to collateral succession. Consequently, the illegitimate son of a Shudra is not entitled to inherit his married wife's stridhan.[1] But the rule cannot tolerate the recognition of other illegitimate concession, such as, for example, an illegitimate daughter of the sister of the deceased prostitute. In fact a sister's daughter is no heir to stridhan in any case.[2]

And following this view, it has been held that if a married woman deserts her husband and becomes the mistress of another man, her daughter born in lawful wedlock, who has since the degradation of her mother lived with her does not cease to be the daughter of her mother for the purpose of inheriting her stridhan by reason of the mother's expulsion from caste. The daughter of such a daughter is entitled to succeed to the stridhan of the degraded woman in preference to her illegitimate sons.[3] This is obvious, because even if the sons were legitimate they would be excluded by the daughter's daughter, and they can acquire no better right by reason of their illegitimacy.

2706. Right of Adopted Children.—Where adoption of a daughter is permitted by usage (§ 771) it confers on the adopted child a right which is second only to the natural child. This is recognized in another connexion (§ 701). It then follows that in the absence of the natural issue, whether legitimate or illegitimate, the next rightful claimant to succession is the adopted child.

Clause (3).

380. (1) Save as otherwise herein provided, stridhan inherited by a female heir does not become her own stridhan, since a female can inherit only a woman's limited estate therein, which on her death reverts to the heirs of her last predecessor-in-title:[4]

Female heir's estate in Stridhan.

(1) Ayiswary v. Sivaji, 49 M. 116 (136, 137), following Subramania v. Rathnavelu, 41 M. 44 (72) F.B.

(2) Secretary of State v. Shahman, 6 I.C. (A.) 210.

(3) Mandatam v. Mandatam, 24 M.L.J. 223, following Subharaya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171 (177), dissenting from, contra in Sivasangu v. Minal, 12 M. 277 (281); Narasanna v. Gangu, 13 M. 133; Taramunee v. Mottee, 7 S.D.A. 273; Kamineymoney (In re), 21 C. 697.

(4) Sheo Partab v. Allahabad Bank, 25 A. 476 P.C.; Pandharinath v. Govind, 32 B. 59.

(2) Provided that in the country subject to Bombay School of Law, females belonging to the family of the Proposita, by birth, take by inheritance an absolute interest in the stridhan, which they possess as such, and which, on their death, devolves upon their stridhan heirs.[1]

2707. Analogous Law.—The rule here stated contravenes the express text of the Mitakshara which runs as follows:—

Mitakshara.—"1. After briefly propounding the division of wealth left by the husband and wife ('Let sons divide equally both the effects and the debts, after the demise of their two parents'), the partition of a man's goods has been described at large. The author, now intending to explain fully the distribution of a woman's property, begins by setting forth the nature of it: 'What was given to a woman by the father, the mother, the husband, or a brother, or received by her at the nuptial fire, or presented to her on her husband's marriage to another wife, as also any other separate acquisition, is denominated a woman's property.'"

"2. That which was given by the father, by the mother, by the husband, or by a brother, and that, which was presented (to the bride) by the maternal uncles and the rest (as paternal uncles, maternal aunts, etc.), at the time of the wedding, before the nuptial fire, and a gift on a second marriage, or gratuity on account of supersession, as will be subsequently explained ('To a woman whose husband marries a second wife, let him give an equal sum as a compensation for the supersession,' § 34) and also property which she may have acquired by inheritance, purchase, partition, seizure or finding, are denominated by Manu and the rest, 'woman's property.'"

"3. The term (woman's property) conforms, in its import, with its etymology, and is not technical: for, if the literal sense be admissible, a technical acceptation is improper.

"4. The enumeration of six sorts of woman's property by Manu: What was given before the nuptial fire, what was presented in the bridal procession, what has been bestowed in token of affection or respect, and what has been received by her from her brother, her mother, or her father, are denominated the sixfold property of a woman and is intended, not as a restriction of a greater number, but a denial of a less."[2]

According to this definition all property which a woman inherits becomes her stridhan with all the incidents which belong to such property, and make it descendible as such in the special line prescribed for stridhan strictly so called.

2708. The Privy Council, have, however, in a series of cases held this definition of stridhan as too wide. They first made it clear that property inherited by a woman from a male was not her absolute property, and that it passed on her death not to her stridhan heir's but to the heirs of the male person from whom she inherited it.[3]

They then extended the same rule to property inherited by a female from a female[4] which was inevitable, since a woman upon inheriting to a male could not acquire absolute right, how could she acquire such right upon inheriting to a female.[5] This rule has often been expressed

---

(1) Bhau v. Raghunath, 30 B. 229 (236, 237), and cases cited in § 2711.

(2) Mitt., Ch. II., Sec. XI-§§-1-4.

(3) Thakoor Dayhee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 139; Bhugwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M.I.A. 487; Chotay Lall v. Chunoo Lall, 4 C. 744 P.C.; Mutta Vaduganadha v. Dorasinga, 3 M. 290 P.C.; Chelikani v. Chelikani, 25 M. 678 P.C.; Sheo Shankar Lal v. Debi Sahai, 25 A. 468 (473) P.C.; Sheo Partab v. Allahabad Bank, 25 A. 476 (492) P.C.

(4) Sheo Shankar Lal v. Debi Sahai, 25 A. 468 (474) P.C.

(5) Sheo Shankar v. Debi Sahai, 25 A. 468 (475) P.C. overruling, O.A. Debi Sahai v. Sheo Shankar, 22 A. 353; Sheo Partab v. Allahabad Bank, 25 A. 476 P. C. Prankissen v. Mt. Bhagwatee, 1 B.S. R. 4; Gangopadhyaya v. Sarbona, 2 B.L. R. (A.C.) 144; Sengamalathammal v. Velayuda Mudali, 3 M.H.C.R. 312 (314).

by saying that what has once descended as stridhan does not so descend again.[1]

Clause (2).

2709. This rule is another corollary flowing from the general dependence of women who are presumably incompetent to exercise unlimited right of ownership over property whether they acquire it by gift, bequest, partition or inheritance. And it is immaterial whether the property acquired by them was stridhan of the last owner or was itself a limited estate. If a stridhan, its fullest enjoyment is limited to its owner for the time being. Upon its descent to another it ceases to be stridhan. Since if the heir be a female the stridhan loses its all especial attributes and descends to her as her ordinary woman's limited estate,[2] and in its turn passes not to her stridhan heirs but to the heirs of her predecessor-in-title.[3]

2710. This is the logical outcome of the view now settled, that a female heir inheriting property from a male takes only a limited estate; how can she then inherit a larger estate from a female, since stridhan property can in no way be superior to other property held in full proprietary right. But though the female heir to stridhan takes only a limited estate, her heirs to it are not traced from the last male holder, but from the last female holder of the stridhan who possessed the absolute right of disposal. Consequently, where the stridhan of a mother was inherited by her daughter, the latter's heir is the mother's daughter's daughter and not her son's son.[4] But in their case no preference is given to a daughter's unmarried daughter over a daughter's married daughter, since such preference is only applicable to her own daughter.[5]

Clause (2).

2711. Exception.—The only exception to this rule is that now recognized in the country where the Mayukh law supplements and in part supersedes the Mitakshara, where all females whether belonging to the family of the Proposita by birth or married therein take and transmit an absolute interest in their stridhan.[6]

It was so held in a Full Bench case, in which the grandmother had inherited from her grand-daughter upon her death three days after her mother who had inherited to her husband.[7] It was agreed that in Western

---

To the same effect, Vijiarangam v. Lakshman, 8 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 244 (272); Manilal v. Bai Rewa, 17 B. 758 (761); Venkata v. Bhujanga, 19 M. 107; Virasangappa v. Rudrappa, 19 M. 110 (118); Chotay Lal v. Chunnoolall, 14 B.L.R. 235 O.A. 4 C. 744 P.C.

(1) Sheo Shankar v. Debi Sahai, 25 A. 468 (474) P.C. approving; Hari Dayal v. Grish Chunder, 17 C. 911 (916).

(2) Sheo Shankar v. Debi Sahai, 25 A. 468 P.C.; Sheo Partab v. Allahabad Bank, 25 A. 476 P.C.; Sham Behari Lal v. Ram Kali, 45 A. 715; Ram Kali v. Gopal, 48 A. 648; Prankrissen v. Noyanmoney, 5 C. 222; Huri Dayal v. Hurish Chunder, 17 C. 911; Jogendra v. Phani Bhushan, 43 C. 64 (68).

(3) Sheo Partab v. Allahabad Bank, 25 A. 476 (492) P.C.

(4) Subramaniam v. Arunachelam, 28 M. 1; Huri Dayal v. Grish Chunder, 17 C. 911, followed in Sham Bihari v. Ram Kali, 45 A. 715, explaining Sheo Partab v. Allahabad Bank, 25 A. 476 (489) P.C.; Lakshmi Narain v. Sumarni, 46 A. 439; Dhauna Mal v. Parmeshri, (1928) L. 9.

(5) Ram Kali v. Gopal, 48 A. 648 (654).

(6) Bhau v. Raghunath, 30 B. 229 (237); Gulappa v. Tayawa, 31 B. 453; Pandharinath v. Govind, 32 B. 59; Daulat Rao v. Govind Rao, 5 N.L.R. 13; 1 I.C. 243; Laxman v. Bhau, 48 I.C. (N.) 116 (Rule extends to Berar where the Mayukh is dominant).

(7) Gandhi v. Jadab, 24 B. 192 F.B.

India, daughters, sisters and nieces took an absolute estate when inheriting from a male and it was held that the same rule should be applied to all women when they inherited stridhan from a female, including even females who inherit as gotraj sapindas from females.[1]

381. The heirs to a stridhan take in severalty without the benefit of survivorship, even if they be members of a joint family.

Heirs take in severalty.

2712. Analogous Law.—It has already been stated that since the inheritance of stridhan is "obstructed," heirs take as tenants-in-common and not as joint tenants with benefit of survivorship.[2] (§ 1021).

---

(1) Narayan v. Waman, 46 B. 17 (21-23).

(2) Karuppai v. Senkara, 27 M. 300 (308) F.B.; Parson v. Somti, 36 B. 424.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

SUPPLEMENTARY PROVISION.

Shastras subject to equity.

382. (1) Questions should not be decided solely on the texts of the shastras but must be made conformable to reason.

(2) Where upon any matter the authority of the shastras is conflicting, it should be decided in conformity with the rules of equity.

2713. Analogous Law.—The two clauses merely paraphrase the following texts:—

Brihaspati.—"Decision should not be based only on the Shastras. By an unreasonable judgment there is loss of Dharm."[1]

Artha Shastra.—"Where the texts of the Shastras are at variance with equity with which Dharm always agrees, equity must prevail, the reading of the conflicting text of Dharm Shastras being considered to be erroneous."[2]

2714. Principle.—Shastric rules are merely general directions—neither framed with the studied accuracy of an Act of Parliament, nor intended to possess inflexible rigour of the laws of the Medes and the Persians. It is true that some of the Shastras profess to be revealed, but even they recognize the paramountcy of reason, justifying their infallibility on the ground that they referred to an age long past.

Rules in cases not expressly provided for.

383. In cases not provided for by this Code, or by any other law for the time being in force, the courts shall act according to justice, equity and good conscience.

2715. Analogous Law.—The principle of this section underlies the following text:—

Gautam.—"48. In cases for which no rule has been given, that course must be followed of which at least ten Brahmins who are well instructed, skilled in reasoning and free from covetousness, approve.

"49. They declare that an assembly shall consist at least of the ten following members, viz., four men who have completely studied the four Vedas, three men who belonging to the three orders enumerated first, and three men who know three different institutes of law.

"50. But on failure of them the decision of one Shrotriya, who knows the Vedas and is properly instructed in the duties, shall be followed in doubtful cases.

"51. For such a man is incapable of unjustly injuring or unjustly favouring created being."[3]

2716. The Hindu Law as administered by the courts is the law as stated in the sacred books which is both imperfect and incomplete. This was recognized by the Smritikars who add a general statement to their

---

(1) Cited in 1 Ghose H. L. (3rd Ed.), p. 34.

(2) Kautilya's Artha Shastra, Bk. III, Ch. 1, Tr. 3, Ghose's H. L. (3rd Ed.), 471.

(3) Gautam, XXVIII-48-51; 2 S. B. E., pp. 306, 307.

texts, to the effect that upon matters not therein expressly provided for, the law to be administered is, that which the learned men propound is good law. This is paraphrased in the several Indian enactments as the rule of justice, equity and good conscience (§ 182). Acting upon this rule the Judges have built up a strong body of case-law, which has, to that extent, supplanted the rules deducible from the sacred texts. The Privy Council have recognized the force of equity in a case for which the Hindu Law, as such, provided no solution. The question in that case was whether a person could accelerate his own succession by his own wrong, e.g., where he commits the murder of his predecessor-in-title. As already stated before, the Privy Council held that both he and his descendants were debarred from all succession.[1]

Res judicata.

384. Cases not subject to the statutory rule of res judicata are still subject to a similar rule of Hindu Law.[2]

2717. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by the following texts:—

Katyayana.—"If a person though defeated at law sue again, he should be answered, you were defeated formerly. This is called the plea of former judgment."[3]

The law of res judicata is based on the principle that there must be finality to a matter once fairly and fully settled by a court of law, otherwise there would be no security to title. S. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code enacts that rule, but the Privy Council have held it to have a wider stretch outside its limits.[4] The section here framed is intended to cover a part of that ground as in conformity with the texts of Hindu Law, cited by the Privy Council in the undernoted case,[5] which gave the same finality to a decision, by a probate court. In this case, the reversioner having opposed the grant of probate of the will of one Bashu Singh, inter alia on the ground that he was his reversioner, which the probate court found against him, he was precluded by the rule of res judicata from maintaining a separate suit for a declaration that he was the next reversioner and, as such, entitled to the estate of Bashu Singh on the death of his surviving widow. But his suit was thrown out on the ground that his status had been previously negatived by the probate court.

---

(1) Kenchava v. Girimallappa, 48 B. 569 (575) P.C.

(2) Sheo Parsan v. Ramnadhan, 43 C. 694 (706) P.C.

(3) Cited per Manlik in Mayuk, p. 11, Mit., Bk. II, Ch. I (Ed. Gharpure, p. 11); Sheo Parson v. Ramnadhan, 43 C. 694 (706) P.C.

(4) Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari, 3 A. 633 P.C.; followed in Hook v. Administrator-General, 48 C. 499 (507, 508); Munni Bibi v. Trilok Nath, 53 A. 103 P.C.; Mg. Sein v. Ma Pan, 10 R. 322 P.C.; Kallipada v. Durjapada, 57 I.C. 24: (1930) P.C. 22.

(5) Sheo Parson v. Ramnadhan, 43 C. 694 (706) P.C.

APPENDIX.

CONTENTS.

		PAGES.
1.	The Anand Marriage Act (VII of 1909) ..	1179
2.	The Arya Marriage Validation Act (XIX of 1937) ..	1179
3.	The Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850) ..	1180
4.	The Hindu Disposition of Property Act (XV of 1916) ..	1181
5.	The Hindu Gains of Learning Act (XXX of 1930) ..	1183
6.	The Hindu Law of Inheritance (Amendment) Act (II of 1929) ..	1184
7.	The Hindu Law of Inheritance (Removal of Disabilities) Act (XII of 1928) ..	1186
8.	The Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) as amended by the Indian Limitation (Amendment) Act (I of 1929) Section 10 and Articles 48-A, 48-B, 134, 134-A, 134-B and 134-C ..	1186
9.	The Partition Act (IV of 1893) ..	1187
10.	The Special Marriage Act (III of 1872) as amended by Act (XXX of 1923) ..	1192
11.	The Indian Succession (Amendment) Act (XVII of 1929) ..	1202
12.	The Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act (XV of 1856) ..	1203
13.	The Hindu Women's Right to Property Act (XVIII of 1937) ..	1205

[N.B.—In the following pages Arabic figures in the section refer to commentary, Arabic figures in the commentary refer to foot-notes].

THE ANAND MARRIAGE ACT (VII OF 1909).

[22*nd October*, 1909.

An Act to remove doubts as to the validity of the marriage ceremony common among the Sikhs called Anand.

WHEREAS it is expedient to remove any doubts as to the validity of the marriage ceremony common among the Sikhs called Anand: It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short Title and Extent.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE ANAND MARRIAGE ACT, 1909; and

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

Validity of Anand marriages.

2. All marriages which may be or may have been duly solemnized according to the Sikh marriage ceremony called Anand shall be, and shall be deemed to have been, with effect from the date of the solemnization of each respectively good and valid in law.

3. Nothing in this Act shall apply to—

Exemption of certain marriages from Act.

(a) any marriage between persons not professing the Sikh religion, or

(b) any marriage which has been judicially declared to be null and void.

Saving of marriages solemnized according to other ceremonies.

4. Nothing in this Act shall affect the validity of any marriage duly solemnized according to any other marriage ceremony customary among the Sikhs.

Non-validation of marriages within prohibited degrees.

5. Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to validate any marriage between persons who are related to each other in any degree of consanguinity or affinity which would, according to the customary law of the Sikhs, render a marriage between them illegal.

THE ARYA MARRIAGE VALIDATION ACT (XIX OF 1937).

[14*th April*, 1937.

An Act to recognise and remove doubts as to the validity of the inter-marriages current among Arya Samajists.

WHEREAS it is expedient to recognise and place beyond doubt the validity of inter-marriages of a class of Hindus known as Arya Samajists; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and extent.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE ARYA MARRIAGE VALIDATION ACT, 1937.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India including British Baluchistan and the Sonthal Paraganas, and applies also to all subjects of His Majesty within other parts of India, and to all Indian subjects of His Majesty without and beyond British India.

Marriage between Arya Samajists not to be invalid.

2. Notwithstanding any provision of Hindu Law, usage or custom to the contrary, no marriage contracted whether before or after the commencement of this Act between two persons, being at the time of marriage Arya Samajists shall be valid or shall be deemed ever to have been invalid by reason only of the fact that the parties at any time belonged to different castes or different sub-castes of Hindus or that either or both of the parties at any time before the marriage belonged to a religion other than Hinduism.

Both the Anand and the Arya Marriage Acts are validating Acts intended to validate all marriages contracted by the Sikhs between persons who are Sikhs and those who profess the Arya Samaj faith respectively. As previously stated both these faiths are converting off-shoots of Hinduism; they are open to converts from any caste or creed, though in practice, the bulk of them are Hindu converts and follow Hindu law, but observe no caste and inter-marry with Hindus.

But the Acts were enacts to legalize the two classes of sectarian marriages between persons who have joined those sects.

THE CASTE DISABILITIES REMOVAL ACT (XXI OF 1850).

[11*th April*, 1850.

An Act for extending the principle of section 9, Regulation VII, 1832, of the Bengal Code throughout the territories, subject to the Government of the East India Company.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is enacted by section 9, Regulation VII, 1832, of the Bengal Code that "where in any civil suit the parties to such suit may be of different persuasions, when one party shall be of the Hindu and the other of the Muhammadan persuasion, or where one or more of the parties to the suit shall not be either of the Muhammadan or Hindu persuasions, the laws of those religions shall not be permitted to operate to deprive such party or parties of any property to which, but for the operation of such laws, they would have been entitled; and whereas it will be beneficial to extend the principle of that enactment throughout the territories subject to the Government of the East India Company; It is enacted as follows[1]:—

Law or usage which inflicts forfeiture of, or affects, rights on change of religion or loss of caste to cease to be enforced.

1. So much of any law or usage now in force within the territories subject to the Government of the East India Company as inflicts on any person forfeiture of rights,[2] or property, or may be held in any way to impair or affect any right of inheritance,[3] by reason of his or her renouncing, or having been excluded from the communion of, any religion, or being deprived of caste,[4] shall cease to be enforced as law[5] in the Courts of the East India Company, and in the Courts established by Royal Charter within the said territories.

(1) Extent and Scope of the Act.—Both Regulation VII of 1832 and Act XXI of 1850 applied to Oudh from the date of its annexation on the 13th February, 1856.

Consequently, a person converted before that date was held not entitled to the benefit of the Act.[1]

The persons relieved by the Act are those who (1) have renounced their religion; (2) have been excluded from the communion of a religion, and (3) those who have been deprived of caste.[2]

(2), (3) The Act applies whether the conversion or exclusion took place before or after the accrual of the right.[3] The phrase "forfeiture of rights" refers to rights apart from property, e.g., of guardianship; while the "right of inheritance" would include survivorship. But only these two rights are safeguarded,—not any other right, e.g., a title to hold property as shebait or mahant.

(4) The language of S. 1 of this Act is ambiguous on one point, namely, whether it is intended to remove the disqualification of the person who changes his religion or is deprived of caste or whether it removes the disqualification arising from any other person, e.g., his ancestor changes his religion or is deprived of caste. The latter view is wider, the former narrower, limiting the removal to the convert personally. In the one view, if suppose, A, the father, becomes a convert to Mahomedanism, but his children remain Hindus, would they inherit to him under Hindu Law inspite of A's conversion, or would they be altogether excluded, because under Mahomedan law; to which A becomes personally subject, an infidel cannot be his heir. The wider view was taken in the Allahabad case of Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu,[4] and the narrower view in the Madras case of Vaithilinga v. Ayyathorai,[5] followed in the Lucknow case, of Mitar San v. Maqbul Hasan,[6] which was upheld on appeal by the Privy Council, the result being that, in the case supposed, while A, who became a convert, would not forfeit the property he had inherited as a Hindu or be disqualified to inherit to his relations, his own heirs would be determined by the Moslem law of succession, since with the change of religion he must be presumed to adopt its personal law also.[7] Consequently, where a Christian claimed to be a reversioner of his collateral Hindu relative, through his Christian grandfather, the court rejected his claim on the short ground that, since this Act only removes only personal disqualifications arising from the three cases enumerated above, it could not assist the plaintiff whose father and grandfather were both Christians.[8]

(5) "Shall cease to be enforced as law."—The disability, if any, incurred; cannot receive recognition or protection of the court—not that it ceases by reason of the Act. Since a declaratory suit is a suit declaratory in form but results in the enforcement of a right, through the medium of the court, the clause is wide enough to cover such relief

---

THE HINDU DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY ACT (XV OF 1916).

[28*th September*, 1916.

An Act to remove certain existing disabilities in respect of the power of disposition of property by Hindus for the benefit of persons not in existence at the date of such disposition.

WHEREAS it is expedient to remove certain existing disabilities in respect of the power of disposition of property by Hindus for the bene-

---

(1) Mitar Sen v. Maqbul Hasan, 3 Luck. 154: (1928) O. 138, O.A. (1930) P.C. 251.

(2) Vaithilinga v. Ayyathorai, 40 M. 1118 (1119) approved in Mitar Sen v. Maqbul Hasan, (1930) P.C. 251; contra Valinaksha v. Rajanikanta, 58 C. 1392 (1398, 1399) holding that head (3) is not dependent of the previous clauses and must relate back to renunciation of religion is submitted unsound.

(3) Ram Pergash v. Dahan Bibi, 3 Pat. 152 (179).

(4) Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu, 11 A. 100, followed Rupa v. Sardar Mirza, 1 L. 376.

(5) Vaithilinga v. Ayyathorai, 40 M. 1118.

(6) Mitar Sen v. Maqbul Hasan, 3 Luck. 154: (1928) O. 138, O.A. (1930) P.C. 251.

(7) Khunnilal v. Govind Krishna, 33 A. 356 (366) P.C.

(8) Vaithilinga v. Ayyathorai, 40 M. 1118 (1120), approved in Mitar Sen v. Maqbul Hasan, (1930) P.C. 251 (252); Sundarammal v. Ameenal, (1927) M. 72; Abdul Aziz v. Mahbub Singh, (1936) A. 202; Chidambaram v. Nyein Me, 6 R. 243; Bhagwan v. Digbijai Singh, 6 Luck. 487: (1931) O. 301.

fit of persons not in existence at the date of such disposition; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and extent.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE HINDU DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY ACT, 1916.[1]

(2) It extends, in the first instance, to the whole of British India, except the Province of Madras[2] Provided that the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, extend this Act to the Province of Madras.

(1) This Act was intended to supersede a rule of Hindu Law to which the Privy Council had referred in Tagore v. Tagore[1] to the effect that no gift or devise was valid under that law, if the beneficiary was not in existence when the disposition took effect. Madras had already passed a local Act (Madras Act I of 1914) rescinding that rule, but as that rule could not be rescinded without prescribing some limit to such dispositions, both the local and this Act extended certain sections of the Transfer of Property Act and the Succession Act to them. But as by the amendment of these Acts in 19292 the provisions herein specified have been included in the larger provisions of those amending Acts, the only reason why this Act remains unrepealed is to legalize such dispositions as have taken place under it, as the Acts of 1929 are not retrospective and their larger provisions could not be safely made retrospectively applicable to the dispositions made under this Act.

(2) The Madras Act I of 1914 was passed by the local council which was held to possess no jurisdiction to alter a law applicable to the city of Madras subject to the original jurisdiction of the Madras High Court. Consequently, the Central Legislature extended the provisions of the local Act to that area by enacting The Hindu Transfers and Bequests (City of Madras) Act (VIII of 1928).

Dispositions for the benefit of persons not in existence.

2. Subject to the limitations and provisions specified in this Act, no disposition of property by a Hindu, whether by transfer inter vivos or by will, shall be invalid by reason only that any person for whose benefit it may have been made was not in existence at the date of such disposition.

Limitations and conditions.

3. The limitations and provisions referred to in section 2 shall be the following, namely:—

(a) in respect of dispositions by transfer inter vivos, those contained in sections 13, 14 and 20 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and

(b) in respect of dispositions by will, those contained in sections 100 and 101 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865.

Failure of prior disposition.

4. Where a disposition of property fails by reason of any of the limitations referred to in section 3, any disposition intended to take effect after or upon failure of such prior disposition also fails.[3]

(3) Section 4 is repealed by Act XXI of 1929 in that it is a rule of interpretation covered by S. 8 of the Transfer and S. 35 of the Succession Act.

Application of this Act to the Khoja community.

5. Where the Governor-General in Council is of opinion that the Khoja community in British India or any part thereof desire that the provisions of this Act should be extended to such community, he may, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare that the provisions of this Act, with the substitution of the word "Khojas" or "Khoja," as the case may be, for the word "Hindus" or "Hindu" wherever those words occur, shall apply to that community in such area as may be specified in the notification, and this Act shall thereupon have effect accordingly.

(1) Tagore v. Tagore, 14 B.L.R. 60 P.C.

(2) See Act XVIII of 1929.

THE HINDU GAINS OF LEARNING ACT (XXX OF 1930).

[25th July, 1930.

An Act to remove doubt as to the rights of a member of a Hindu undivided family in property acquired by him by means of his learning.

WHEREAS it is expedient to remove doubt, and to provide an uniform rule, as to the rights of a member of a Hindu undivided family in property acquired by him by means of his learning; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and extent.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE HINDU GAINS OF LEARNING ACT, 1930.[1]

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

(1) This Act owes its inception to Mr. R. Jayakar[1] and was passed to supersede the rule of Hindu Law as interpreted by the Privy Council in the undernoted case.[2]

The two Mitakshara texts[3] lay down that (1) whatever is gained with the nucleus of the family fund is partible,[4] and (2) what is the "gains of learning" of a member of a joint family acquired "without detriment to the father's estate" are not partible. It raised two questions as to what those words meant. The first question has been already dealt with in the Code (S. 115).

Dealing with the second question, the Privy Council held that the text excluded a general education, but was intended to refer to special education. Consequently, where a person had received such education at the family expense, but had; by his skill as a pleader, made money it was his self-acquisition,[5] but otherwise where he had received education qualifying him to enter the Indian Civil Service.[6] The question of "detriment" is again a question of the condition of the family. If it be rich, the imparting of the special education would not be to its detriment, which it will be if it is poor. With the opening of new professions of law, medicine and Civil Service, these questions began to agitate not only the acquirer but his relatives. The Act was consequently passed to insure that whatever the education and whatever its detriment to the joint family property, all that a man makes and acquires shall be his self-acquisition.

The Act does not deal with the general law of presumptions, namely, that property that a member possessed as a member of a coparcenary shall be presumed to be joint. While he is alive, his separate possession and control may suffice to rebut that presumption, but that presumption may have to be rebutted by his widow and descendants.[7]

Definitions.

2. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(a) "acquirer" means a member of a Hindu undivided family, who acquires gains of learning;

(b) "gains of learning" means all acquisitions of property made substantially by means of learning, whether such acquisitions be made before[2] or after the commencement of this Act and whether such acquisitions be the ordinary or the extraordinary[3] result of such learning; and

(2) The Act is, therefore, retrospective, and applies to gains whenever made.

(3) i.e., arising in the natural course or otherwise.

---

(1) Assembly Debates dated 15th July, 1930, pp. 427-464.

(2) Metha Ram v. Rewachand, 45 C. 666 P.C.

(3) Mit. I-IV-1, 31.

(4) Anand Rao v. Vasant Rao, 5 C. L.J. 338 P.C.; Lala Bahadur v. Kanhaya Lal, 29 A. 244 (254, 255) P.C.

(5) Metharam v. Rewachand, 45 C. 666 (684, 685) P.C.

(6) Gokal Chand v. Hukum Chand, 2 L. 40 P.C.; Hanso Pathak v. Harmardil, 56 A. 1026.

(7) Assembly Debates pp. 448-449, (1930).

(c) "learning" means education, whether elementary, technical, scientific, special or general, and training of every kind which is usually intended to enable a person to pursue any trade, industry, profession or avocation in life.[4]

(4) The term "learning" is retained because it is to so used in the text. It includes, training of every kind, apprenticeship or the like.

Gains of learning not to be held not to be separate property of acquirer merely for certain reasons.

3. Notwithstanding any custom, rule or interpretation of the Hindu Law, no gains of learning shall be held not to be the exclusive and separate property of the acquirer merely by reason of—

(a) his learning having been, in whole or in part imparted to him by any member, living or deceased, of his family, or with the aid of the joint funds of his family, or with the aid of the funds of any member thereof; or

(b) himself or his family having, while he was acquiring his learning, be maintained or supported, wholly or in part by the join funds of his family, or by the funds of any member thereof.

4. This Act shall not be deemed in any way to affect—

(a) the terms or incidents of any transfer of property made or effected before the commencement of this Act;

(b) the validity, invalidity, effect or consequences of anything already suffered or done before the commencement of this Act;

(c) any right or liability created under a partition, or an agreement for a partition, of joint family property made before the commencement of this Act; or

(d) any remedy or proceeding in respect of such right or liability; or to render invalid or in any way affect anything done before the commencement of this Act in any proceeding pending in a Court at such commencement, and any such remedy and any such proceeding as in herein referred to may be enforced instituted or continued, as the case may be, as if this Act had not been passed.

THE HINDU LAW OF INHERITANCE (AMENDMENT) ACT (II OF 1929).

[21*st February*, 1929.

An Act to alter the order in which certain heirs of a Hindu male dying intestate are entitled to succeed to his estate.

WHEREAS it is expedient to alter the order[1] in which certain heirs of a Hindu male dying intestate[2] are entitled to succeeded[3] to his estate; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

This Act owes its enactment to the present writer who had introduced it (after its previous rejection) in the Legislative Assembly on 22nd March, 1928.1

(1) Alter the order.—The addition of new heirs is an alteration in the order of succession.2 The legal effect of this and similar Acts, amending the Mitakshara, is to write those Acts into it by way of correction.

(2) Dying intestate.—Male who has died before the Act came into force or may die thereafter.3 Though the Act applies primarily to a male dying intestate, yet it

(1) Assembly Debates, dated 22nd March 1928, pp. 1924-1926.

(2) Mahabir v. Radha, (1933) O. 231 (235).

(3) Rajpali v. Sarju Rai, (1936) A. 507 F.B.; Lakshmi v. Anantharama, (1937) M. 619 F.B.

will equally regulate succession to the stridhan of a woman when it devolves upon her husband and his heirs. Consequently, if such heir is to be found after the Act comes into force, it will be found in the Mitakshara as amended by the Act.[1]

(3) Certain heirs.....are entitled to succeed.—That is to say, if an heir had to be looked for after the Act is in force, he must be found from the Mitakshara read with the Act. For example, if a male dies leaving him surviving an intermediate female heir, e.g., his widow, daughter or the mother; on her death his heir has to be found and must be found under the Act. In such case, there is no question of retrospectively, since the sole question is whether the Act was in force when the succession opened, if it was, it must apply.[2]

Short title, extent and application.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE HINDU LAW OF INHERITANCE (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1929.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, including British Baluchistan and the Sonthal Parganas, but it applies only to persons who, but for the passing of this Act, would have been subject to the law of Mitakshara in respect of the provisions herein enacted, and it applies to such persons in respect only of the property of males[4] not held in coparcenary and not disposed of by will.[5]

(4) "Property of males, etc."—including property that was inherited by the husband from his wife which became his separate property.[3]

(5) "Not disposed of by will", i.e.; a valid will and includes property not only not so disposed of, but also that which cannot be so disposed of.[4]

Order of succession of certain heirs.

2. A son's daughter, daughter's daughter[6] sister[7] and sister's son[8] shall, in the order so specified, be entitled to rank in the order of succession next after a father's father and before a father's brother.

Provided that a sister's son shall not include a son adopted after the sister's death.

(6) "Daughter's daughter,"—by two wives are included in the term.

(7) "Sister",—includes a half sister.[5] (§§ 2274, 2275).

(8) "Sister's son,"—natural or adopted by her husband or by her with his authority (if necessary) after his death, but not a son adopted by the husband after his wife's death, though in the eye of law, he would become equally her son. The proviso is inserted to discourage mercenary adoptions. Following the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court, a bench of the same court has held a "sister's son" to exclude a half-sister's son;[6] but this view has not obtained currency in the other courts.[7]

Savings.

3. Nothing in this Act shall—

(a) affect any special family or local custom having the force of law, or

(b) vest in a son's daughter, daughter's daughter or sister an estate larger than, or different in kind from, that possessed by a female in property inherited by her from a male according to the school of Mitakshara law by which the male was governed, or

---

(1) Charjo v. Ainanath, (1937) L. 196 (199, 200).

(2) Pokhan v. Mt. Manoa, 16 Pat. 215 F.B. (five Judges); Lakshmi v. Anatharama, I.L.R. (1937) M. 948 F.B.; overruling Gavarammal v. Manickammal, 57 M. 718. To the same effect Rajpali v. Surju Rai, 58 A. 1041; Shib Das v. Nand Lal, 13 L. 178; Shakuntala v. Kaushalya, 17 L. 356; Charjo v. Dinanath, (1937) L. 196.

(3) Charjo v. Dinanath, (1937) L. 196.

(4) Pokhan v. Mt. Manoa, 16 Pat. 215 F.B.

(5) Gurunditta v. Mt. Diwani, (1937) L. 11 (14); Amrut v. Mt. Thagan, I.L.R. (1938) N. 115 F.B. contra Ramadhar v. Sudeshra, 55 A. 725 F.B.: (1937) A.L.J.: 11 Luck. 148.

(6) Sahodra v. Ram Babu, (1937) A. 655 (sed quaere).

(7) See f.n. (5) supra.

(c) enable more than one person to succeed by inheritance to the estate of a deceased Hindu male which by a customary or other rule of succession descends to a single heir.

THE HINDU LAW OF INHERITANCE (REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES) ACT (XII OF 1928).

An Act to amend the Hindu Law relating to exclusion from inheritance of certain classes of heirs, and to remove certain doubts.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Hindu Law relating to exclusion from inheritance of certain classes of heirs, and to remove certain doubts; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title, extent and application.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE HINDU LAW OF INHERITANCE (REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES) ACT, 1928.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, including British Baluchistan and Sonthal Parganas.

(3) It shall not apply to any person governed by the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law.

This Act like Act II of 1929 was re-introduced by the present writer in the Assembly (after its previous rejection) on the 22nd March, 1928.[1]

Persons not to be excluded from inheritance or rights in the joint family property.

2. Notwithstanding any rule of Hindu Law or custom to the contrary, no person governed by the Hindu Law, other than a person who is and has been from birth a lunatic or idiot shall be excluded from inheritance or from any right or share in joint family property by reason only of any disease, deformity, or physical or mental defect.

The disqualification is personal. It does not affect the issue.

The retention of a congenital lunatic or idiot as a disqualification was acceded to by the author on the ground that such person without reason cannot be a member of a coparcenary entitled to joint mess, worship and residence, while he is equally unfit to perform the spirtual service that is expected of the heir.[2]

Saving and exception.

3. Nothing contained in this Act shall affect any right which has accrued or any liability which has been incurred before the commencement thereof, or shall be deemed to confer upon any person any right in respect of any religious office or service or of the management of any religious or charitable trust which he would not have had if this Act had not been passed.

THE INDIAN LIMITATION ACT (IX OF 1908).

As amended by the Indian Limitation (Amendment) Act (I of 1929).

Suits against express trustees and the representatives.

S. 10. Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, or against his legal representatives or assigns (not being assigns for valuable consideration), for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property or the proceeds

---

(1) See Assembly debates, dated 22nd March, 1928, pp. 1917, 1918.

(2) For the history and scope of this section and ensuing Articles see §§ 2062-2073.

thereof, or for an account of such property or proceeds, shall be barred by any length of time.

(For the purposes of this section any property comprised in a Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist religious or charitable endowment shall be deemed to be property vested in trust for a specific purpose, and the manager of any such property shall be deemed to be the trustee thereof.)[1]

Articles added by Act I of 1929.

Description of Suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
48-A. To recover movable property conveyed or bequeathed in trust, deposited or pawned, and afterwards bought from the trustee depositary or pawnee for a valuable consideration.	Three years.	When the sale becomes known to the plaintiff.
48-B. To set aside sale of movable property comprised in a Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist religious or charitable endowment, made by a manager thereof for a valuable consideration.	Three years.	When the sale becomes known to the plaintiff.
134 To recover possession of immovable property conveyed or bequeathed in trust or mortgaged and afterwards transferred by the trustee or mortgagee for a valuable consideration.	Twelve years.	When the transfer becomes known to the plaintiff.
134-A. To set aside a transfer of immovable property comprised in a Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist religious or Charitable endowment made by a manager thereof for a valuable consideration.	Twelve years.	When the transfer becomes known to the plaintiff.
134-B. By the manager of a Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist religious or charitable endowments to recover possession of immovable property comprised in the endowment which has been transferred by a previous manager for a valuable consideration.	Twelve years.	The death, resignation or removal of the transferor.
134-C. By the manager of a Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist religious or charitable endowments to recover possession of movable property comprised in the endowment which has been sold by a previous manager for a valuable consideration.	Twelve years.	The death, resignation or removal of the seller.

THE PARTITION ACT (IV OF 1893).

[9th March, 1893.]

An Act to amend the Law relating to Partition.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the law relating to partition; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

(1) Added by Act I of 1929.

Title, extent, commencement and saving.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE PARTITION ACT, 1893. *

Construction of Act.—This Act provides one mode of partition, that is no partition at all, since instead of the property being divided in specie it is sold and might be sold to a stranger. Recourse must, therefore, be had to it, only when all other modes of partition fail, and the Act itself must be strictly construed.[1] Further it does not apply where revenue paying estates are subject to the several revenue laws dealing with their partition. Such are the Zemindaries in Bengal, Behar and the United Provinces and all Malguzari estates there and elsewhere. Where, however, the quantum of interest sought to be partitioned is a mortgage thereon, such partition might be made under this Act, if the local revenue Acts do not provide for the partition of such interest.[2] But this was a case in which both the mortgagor and the mortgagee had applied for such partition. The mortgagee is not entitled to obtain partition of his rights by instituting a suit therefore, if it will result in destroying the intrinsic value of the property sought to be partitioned.[3] On the other hand, where the plaintiff wanted partition of a shop in specie, which the defendant opposed on the ground that it was impracticable and would cause him injury, the court made the partition holding that it would cause him no injury in the legal sense of the term.[4]

Many cases have been decided in which the courts have used their power under S. 3, many in which they have not, but these cases were decided upon their own facts and furnish no rules for general guidance. If they did they would crystallize into set rules what the Legislature had intended to remain fluid and open to decision in each case.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India; [*]

(3) [* * * *]

(4) But nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect any local law providing for the partition of immovable property paying revenue to Government.

Power to Court to order sale instead of division in partition suits.

2. Whenever in any suit for partition[1] in which, if instituted prior to the commencement of this Act, a decree for partition might have been made, it appears to the Court that, by reason of the nature of the property to which the suit relates, or of the number of the shareholders therein or of any other special circumstance, a division of the property cannot reasonably or conveniently be made, and that a sale of the property, and distribution of the proceeds would be more beneficial for all the shareholders, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the request of any of such shareholders interested individually or collectively to the extent of one moiety or upwards, direct a sale of the property and a distribution of the proceeds.

(1) In any suit for partition.—The suit may relate to a general or partial partition, but it must comprise the property sought to be sold. Three conditions are essential to justify a sale: (1) An application for a sale by one or more shareholders, representing at least a moiety of interest in the property; (2) an independent decision by the court that no partition of the property can reasonably or conveniently be made;

---

* For Statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gazette of India, 1892, Pt. V, p. 46; for Report of the Select Committee, see ibid., 1893, Pt. V; p. 51; and for Proceedings in Council, see ibid., 1893, Pt. VI, pp. 38 and 49.

For Civil Rules of Practice made by the High Court, Madras, under this Act, the Code of Civil Procedure and certain other Acts for observance by the Subordinate Civil Courts of that Presidency, except the Madras Small Cause Court, see Fort St. George Gazette, 1905, Supplement, p. 1.

The Act has been declared in force in Upper Burma (except the Shan States) by the Burma Laws Act (XIII of 1898), Bur. Code.

(1) Ram Prasad v. Mukundi, (1929) A. 443.

(2) Banke Lal v. Shanti Prasad, 35 A. 387 (388).

(3) Mahabir v. Mahadeo, (1927) A. 686.

(4) Govind v. Naraindas, (1882) P.R. No. 29.

and (3) its sale would be more beneficial to all the shareholders. An order passed under this section is deemed to be a decree and is, therefore, appealable.[1] A property is not reasonably or conveniently partible if it is wholly impartible, e.g., a family house, a party wall,[2] a tank, a well, a motor car, an elephant or the like. The property may be either movable or immovable, but recourse cannot be had under this section.

The duty of ordering partition under this section vests in the court, which has to perform a judicial act, and it cannot be swayed by the consent of the parties;[3] nor can the court ignore the several provisions of the Act, when it decides to sell, e.g., fixing of a reserved price as provided in S. 6. But if in spite of that default the property fetches an adequate price, the sale would not be set aside[4] since the reservation is intended to ensure that result.

Procedure when sharer undertakes to buy.

3. (1) If, in any case in which the Court is requested under the last foregoing section to direct a sale, any other shareholder applies for leave to buy at a valuation the share or shares of the party or parties asking for a sale, the Court shall order a valuation of the share or shares in such manner as it may think fit and offer to sell the same to such shareholder at the price so ascertained, and may give all necessary and proper directions in that behalf.

(2) If two or more shareholders severally apply for leave to buy as provided in sub-section (1), the Court shall order a sale of the share or shares to the shareholder who offers to pay the highest price above the valuation made by the Court.

(3) If no such shareholder is willing to buy such share or shares at the price so ascertained, the applicant or applicants shall be liable to pay all costs of or incident to the application or applications.

Partition suit by transferee of share in dwelling-house.

4. (1) Where a share of a dwelling-house belonging to an undivided family[1] has been transferred[2] to a person who is not a member of such family and such transferee sues for partition,[3] the court shall,[4] if any member of the family being a shareholder[5] shall undertake[6] to buy the share of such transferee, make a valuation of such share in such manner as it thinks fit and direct the sale of such share to such shareholder, and may give all necessary and proper directions in that behalf.

(2) If in any case described in sub-section (1) two or more members of the family, being such shareholders severally undertake to buy such share, the Court shall follow the procedure prescribed by sub-section (2) of the last foregoing section.

(1) Undivided Family.—This section deals with a special case of the purchase of a share of a dwelling-house by a stranger, and three conditions are specified before recourse is had to a sale under that section. (1) The suit must relate to the partition of a dwelling-house, as distinct from a shop or business premises. It is not necessary that the whole of the house should be so used, but it would suffice if a part at least is so used. (2) Such house must belong to an undivided family, that is, two or more relations must own jointly, not that they should be in actual possession of it, though a house, wholly let out to tenants, could not be treated as a dwelling-house within the

---

(1) S. 8.
(2) Mamsa Ram v. Nanak Chand, (1934) L. 893, contra Hardand Das v. Sundar, 64 I.C. (R.) 949 (a party wall and a staircase partitioned).
(3) Mumtaz Jahan v. Mannulal, (1934) L. 965.
(4) Dost Mahomed v. Mhd. Shariff, (1933) S. 40.

meaning of this section;[1] and (3) a share of it must have been transferred by a voluntary or involuntary act to a stranger who must sue for partition.[2] It is not necessary that the transferee who purchased the share should himself have sued for it, for a transferee is nonetheless a transferee, though he may not be its immediate purchaser. The transfer again may not be of the corpus, for it may be a house built on another's land and it may, again, be held by the family on a lease. The term "transfer" is, in this sense, not to be treated as limited to a sale. The phrase "undivided family" in S. 4 is not limited to members of a Hindu undivided family. All it means is that the dwelling-house is the joint property of the members of a family[3] Hindu, or Moslems, undivided qua the house in dispute.[4]

(2) The word "transferred" means transferred by a voluntary or by an involuntary act, e.g., in execution of a decree.[5] As such, an auction-purchaser of a share of a house is competent to sue for partition.[6] The term "transfer" is defined in S. 5 of the Transfer of Property Act to be a voluntary transfer, but it is definitive limitation for the purpose of that Act. It does not alter its ordinary meaning and that section cannot be referred to limit the meaning of that term in this section.[7] At the same time, reference should be made to S. 44 proviso of the Transfer of Property Act, which enacts a similar rule giving the purchaser the right of partition.

(3) The right conferred by this section cannot be enforced by a qualified member, unless the transferee sues for partition. It may be that in a suit by another, the transferee may apply for the separation of his share. It would then suffice to consituate such suit as the section contemplates.[8]

(4) This section like the rest of the Act provides a solution where the parties do not agree to the amicable partition of their property. It is, therefore, always open to them to adopt another method of partition or solution of their dispute, by consenting to a sale otherwise than that provided in the Act.[9]

(5) The next question is who is entitled to exercise his right "as a member of the family being a shareholder". The question of membership of a family is not one of technical law, since women who have no share in the joint family property are still members of the family, but it gives them no right to pre-empt, unless they are presumed or are actual shareholders in the house.[10]

(6) The section does not indicate the stage when a member is to give his undertaking, which he may be permitted to do at any time before the final allotment is made. But the proper time for this application is before the preliminary decree[11] unless one of the defendants wished to continue and apply to have his name substituted in place of the stranger plaintiff who had been bought out.[12] In an ordinary partition suit, the plaintiff is only so pro forma, since all co-sharers possess mutual rights against one another, and such, they are all plaintiffs and defendants at the same time;[13] and consequently, if in such a case a stranger purchaser applies for partition, it will suffice to let in the right of a co-sharer member to buy him out under this section. Even that right has been treated as not too late, if it is made even in appeal;[14] but this proceeds on a lacunae in the section and the liberal construction of it in the interest of a co-sharer member, but on this point two opinions are possible and two opinions have been taken on the ground that since the section is a statutory interference with

---

(1) Subramanya v. Sheik Ghannu, (1935) M. 628 (632), distinguishing Kshirode Chandra v. Saroda Prosad, 7 I. C. (C.) 436; Vaman v. Vasudev, 23 B. 73.

(2) Subbamma v. Veerayya, (1932) M. 15.

(3) Sultan Begum v. Debi Prasad, 30 A. 324 F.B.; Kshirode v. Saroda Prosad, 7 I.C. (C.) 436; Latifunessa v. Abdul Rahman, (1934) C. 202; Fatma v. Gulamnabi, (1936) B. 197; Gangi v. Atmaram, (1936) L. 291.

(4) Sohoni v. Raj Kumar, 54 A. 840; Fatma v. Gulamnabi, (1936) B. 197; Sivaramayya v. Venkata, (1930) M. 561.

(5) Gangi v. Atmaram, (1936) L. 281 (293).

(6) Sohoni v. Rajkumar, 54 A. 840.

(7) Ib., pp. 843, 844.

(8) Laxman v. Lahanabai, 165 I.C. (N.) 930.

(9) Mahamooda v. Nainoo, (1937) C. 384.

(10) Laxman v. Lahanabai, 165 I.C. (N). 930: 19 N.L.J. 241 (The widow of a coparcener was permitted to buy overlooking the fact that S. 4 requires she must also be a shareholder).

(11) Khanderao v. Balkrishna, 23 Bom. L.R. 1083: 64 I.C. (B.) 917.

(12) Ib.

(13) Satyabhama v. Jatindra Mohan, (1929) C. 269.

(14) Pran Krishna v. Surath Chandra, 45 C. 873; Kshirode Chunder v. Saroda Prosad, 12 C.L.J. 525; Satyabhama v. Jatindra Mohan, (1929) C. 269.

the transferee's legal right, it should be strictly construed so as to limit such interference.[1]

The section is enacted in the interest of the transferors, defendants in the stranger's suit, giving them the right of pre-emption. But any such person applying to the court for valuation "must undertake to buy the share" whereupon the procedure prescribed by the section is to be followed. If, therefore, he fails in his undertaking he cannot complain, if the court forfeits his right of pre-emption[2] or compels him to make good his undertaking.[3] If he does purchase, the transferee cannot claim mesne profits as from the date of his purchase.[4]

Representation of parties under disability.

5. In any suit for partition a request for sale may be made or an undertaking, or application for leave, to buy may be given or made on behalf of any party under disability by any person authorized to act on behalf of such party in such suit, but the Court shall not be bound to comply with any such request, undertaking or application unless it is of opinion that the sale or purchase will be for the benefit of the party under such disability.

Reserved bidding and bidding by shareholders.

6. (1) Every sale under section 2 shall be subject to a reserved bidding[1] and the amount of such bidding shall be fixed by the Court in such manner as it may think fit and may be varied from time to time.

(2) On any such sale any of the shareholders shall be at liberty to bid at the sale on such terms as to non-payment of deposit or as to setting off or accounting for the purchase-money or any part thereof instead of paying the same as to the Court may seem reasonable.

(3) If two or more persons, of whom one is a shareholder in the property, respectively advance the same sum at any bidding at such sale, such bidding shall be deemed to be the bidding of the shareholder.

(1) Reserved bidding.—It has already been seen, that the court must fix the reserve to ensure sale for an adequate price, and prevent its being cornered by a combine. Where, however, the court failed to make a reserve; but the price fetched was adequate, the sale was upheld in spite of its disobedience to a statutory condition.

Again, where, parties agree to a consent decree for partition by which certain properties are to be sold by the Commissioner at his discretion, but the court directed that he should fix a reserve, which he failed to do, the court held that the direction of the court was ex majore cautelum and its non-observance did not vitiate the sale.[5]

Procedure to be followed in case of sales.

7. Save as hereinbefore provided, when any property is directed to be sold under this Act, the following procedure shall, as far as practicable, be adopted, namely:—

(a) if the property be sold under a decree or order of the High Court of Calcutta, Madras or Bombay in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, or of the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon, the procedure of such Court in its original civil jurisdiction for the sale of property by the Registrar;

---

(1) Ilias Ahmad v. Bulaqi Chand, 39 A. 672 (674); Subramanya v. Sheik Ghannu, (1935) M. 628.

(2) Subramanya v. Sheik Ghannu, (1935) M. 628 (630).

(3) Ilias Ahmad v. Bulaji Chand, 39 A. 672 (674).

(4) Subramanya v. Sheik Ghannu, (1935) M. 628 (634), S. 44 proviso, 1 Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), §§ 831, 832, pp. 503, 504.

(5) Mahmooda v. Nainoo, (1937) C. 384.

(b) if the property be sold under a decree or order of any other Court, such procedure as the High Court may from time to time by rules prescribe in this behalf, and until such rules are made, the procedure prescribed in the Code of Civil Procedure in respect of sales in execution of decrees.

Orders for sale to be deemed decrees.

8. Any order for sale made by the Court under sections 2, 3 or 4 shall be deemed to be a decree[1] within the meaning of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

(1) Appealable orders.—This section merely enacts that all orders passed by a court under section 2, 3 or 4 shall be treated as decrees within the meaning of S. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, and would be appealable as such. The forum of appeal would be determined by the valuation of the suit in accordance with the provisions of the Court-Fees and the Suits Valuation Acts.[1]

Saving of power to order partly partition and partly sale.

9. In any suit for partition the Court may, if it shall think fit, make a decree for a partition of part of the property to which the suit relates and a sale of the remainder under this Act.

Application of Act to pending suits.

10. This Act shall apply to suits instituted before the commencement thereof, in which no scheme for the partition of the property has been finally approved by the Court.

THE SPECIAL MARRIAGE ACT (III OF 1872).*

[22*nd March*, 1872.

Amended on 30*th July*, 1923.

An Act to provide a form of marriage in certain cases.

Topical Introduction.—This Act was passed to meet the objection of the Brahmos to be compelled to contract their marriages under the Brahminical law before an idol or by Brahmins, in whom they did not believe. When the Act was passed, all concerned believed that a declaration by a party that he did not profess any of the religions enumerated in S. 2 would suffice to take him out of the place of Hindu law generally, including that of coparcenership and succession. But in 1903, the Privy Council declared that persons belonging to the dissenting sects, such as Sikhism or Brahmoism were still Hindus and, as such, subject to Hindu law.[2] It led to other discussions in which followers of other dissenting sects such as Brahmoism, Arya Samaj and Jainism, were likewise held to remain Hindus.

The present writer felt that, following the lead of all other civilized countries, India should possess a non-religious civil marriage law, and he introduced a Bill in the Central Legislature,[3] which aroused convulsing opposition from the Mahomedan and Parsi communities throughout India with the result that the author was left with no option but to modify it to the form in which it was enacted as Act XXX of 1923.—

---

(1) Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870); Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887).

* Short title, The Special Marriage Act, 1872. See the Indian Short Titles Act, 1897 (XIV of 1897), General Act; Vol. IV.

There was no Statement of Objects and Reasons; the Bill as introduced was published in the Gazette of India, 1868, p. 1403; for the Report of the Select Committee, dated 21st December, 1871, see Ibid., 1871, Pt. V, p. 519; for discussions in Council, see ibid., 1868; Supplement, pp. 890 and 1197; ibid., 1871; Extra Supplement, pp. 16 and 42; ibid., 1872. Supplement, pp. 2, 57, 193 and 261. The Amending Act XXX of 1923 was introduced by the present writer in the Legislative Assembly on 23rd March, 1921, (Assembly Debates of that date pp. 1551-1552) and dated 22nd March, 1923 pp. 3898-3927, as an independent Civil Marriage Bill. After strenuous struggle it was enacted as Act XXX of 1923.

(2) Bhagawan Koer v. J. C. Bose, 31 C. 11 P.C.

(3) Assembly Debates (1923), pp. 3436, 3893-3927.

This Act was to be treated as an amendment to the original Act, enacted in 1872, but marriages performed under it and the rights of parties so married remain distinct as will be evident from the notes of cases appended to the Act.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to provide a form of marriage for persons who do not profess the Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Muhammadan, Parsi, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion, [and for persons who profess the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion]* and to legalize certain marriages the validity of which is doubtful; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Local extent.

1. This Act extends to the whole of British India.

[Commencement.] Rep. by the Repealing Act, 1874 (XVI of 1874).

Conditions upon which marriages under Act may be celebrated.

2. Marriages may be celebrated under this Act between persons neither of whom professes the Christian or the Jewish, or the Hindu or the Muhammadan, or the Parsi or the Buddhist, or the Sikh or the Jaina religion, [or between persons each of] whom professes one or other of the following religious, that is to say, the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh, or Jaina religion] upon the following conditions:—

(1) neither party must, at the time of the marriage, have a husband or wife living:

(2) the man must have completed his age of eighteen years, and the woman her age of fourteen years, according to the Gregorian calendar:

(3) each party must, if he or she has not completed the age of twenty-one years, have obtained the consent of his or her father or guardian to the marriage:

(4) the parties must not be related to each other in any degree of consanguinity or affinity which would, according to any law to which either of them is subject, render a marriage between them illegal.

1st Proviso.—No such law or custom, other than one relating to consanguinity or affinity, shall prevent them from marrying.

2nd Proviso.—No law or custom as to consanguinity shall prevent them from marrying, unless a relationship can be traced between the parties through some common ancestor, who stands to each of them in a nearer relationship than that of great-great-grandfather or great-great-grandmother, or unless one of the parties is the lineal ancestor, or the brother or sister of some lineal ancestor, of the other.

Who Can Marry.—Under unamended section 2, both parties must declare that neither of them professes the enumerated religions. The question is what does the word "profess" imply. It has been held that the word "profess" is distinct from the term born, or accepted as a member of the religion which he professes for the purposes of the Act. As Greaves, J., observed: "A declaration under the Act cannot be taken as an abjuration for all purposes of Hinduism, but merely as a statement for the purposes of the Act itself."[1] A person declaring that he does not, at the time of his signing the declaration required by Act III of 1872, profess any of the religions therein named cannot be convicted of making a false declaration under S. 199 of the Indian Penal Code,[2] since the profession of a religion whether in the negative form under unamended S. 2 or in its positive form under its amended provision is a matter of individual conscience and belief and no one can dessect his mind to prove its falsity. It may be that a person has openly joined a dissenting sect, like Sikhism or Brahmoism, Preamble, S. 2.

---

* Inserted by Act XXX of 1923.

(1) Jnanendra Nath Ray, In re, 49 C. 1069 (1072).

(2) Walter v. E. (1934) O. 155.

formed to abjure some of the accepted tenets or practices of Hinduism, but it would not suffice to remove him form the fold of Hinduism. As the Privy Council observed: "In matters of mere belief, we are disposed to think that a mere profession of Brahmoism does not necessarily make a man cease to be a Hindu unless he also abjures the social rules of Hinduism and declares himself not to be a Hindu."[1] It may be added, that Chamars who eat cow-flesh do not cease to be Hindus, and the social practices of Hinduism are so varied that no departure from them would make a man a non-Hindu. Hence it follows that a Hindu married under the unamended Act would, despite his declaration, be still subject to the Hindu law of succession.[2]

As this law was hard on women and otherwise antiquated, the amending Act was enacted to provide for the law of succession in accordance with the provisions of the Succession Act.[3] But this law of succession can only be availed of by those who marry under the terms of the amended Act which came into force on the 30th July, 1923.[4]

Amending Act of 1923.

But under the amending Act it is still necessary to declare that both parties to the marriage profess any of the four named religions, namely, Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain religion. One party to the marriage may be a Hindu, and another a Buddhist, but the two must profess one or other of the four religions. If they do not, they cannot be married under the amended Act, though they may both belong to the same religion. A Confusion is not a Buddhist, and he cannot, therefore; marry under this Act;[5] though the Buddhist law is very liberal and treats an agreement coupled with consummation as establishing a legal marriage.[6]

S. 2 (3). "Consent of his or her father or guardian".

Necessity of Consent.—Though either party may have attained the age of majority under the Indian Majority Act, 1875, still this law enacted in 1872 prescribed the age of 21 which was then the English law of majority.

Now, since a person attains the age of majority on his or her completing the age of 18 years, this clause reproduced in the form of a declaration prescribed in the second schedule of the Act requiring a person who had not completed the age of 21 years to declare that he or she had obtained the consent of his or her father or guardian, as the case may be, cannot be complied with, as it may be that the father is dead and there can be no guardian to consent. In a case decided by the Calcutta High Court, a girl aged 17 married her tutor over 21, under the provisions of the amended Act. They signed a form that contained no clause requiring consent of the father or other guardian. They were duly married, but their marriage was declared null and void in view of the provisions of S. 2 (3),[7] the court observing at the same time that the Legislature should consider the working of the Act and with that view sent a copy of their judgment to Government, who sought to add to the declaratory form the necessity of stating the age of the parties. The present writer opposed the amendment on the ground that clause (3) itself was an anachronism, as a person between 18 and 21 may have no father alive and can have no guardian to apply to for consent, whereupon the Government withdrew their bill, though it was passed unchallenged in the Council of State, and promised to consider the weighty objections raised against it.[8]

In the case under reference, the bride was 17, but if she had completed her eighteenth year, the very point here made would have confronted the learned judges, and it would have been difficult for them to hold that the marriage was a nullity.

S. 2 (4).

Consanguinity.—Since the parties remain subject to their personal law in spite of the declaration, it follows that their marriage must be in accordance with the law of consanguinity of either of them.

---

(1) Bhagwan Koer v. Bose, 31 C. 11 (19) P.C., followed in Jnanendra Nath Ray, In re, 49 C. 1069 (1072-1074).

(2) Bhagwan Koer v. Bose, 31 C. 11 P.C.; Jnanendra Nath, In re, 49 C. 1069; Vidya Gavri v. Haran Das, (1928) B. 74.

(3) S. 23.

(4) Vidyagavri v. Haran Das, (1928) B. 74; Punyabrata v. Monmohan, (1934) Pat. 427; Thukku Bai v. Attavar, 58 M. 1004.

(5) Ma Kyin Mya v. Mg. Sit Han, (1937) R.L.R. 103: (1937) R. 245.

(6) Ma Hla Me v. Mg. Hla Bow, 8 R. 425: (1931) R. 29, followed in Ma Kyin Mya v. Mgsit Han, (1937) R.L.R. 103. (1937) R. 245.

(7) Basana Sen v. Aghore Nath, 56 C. 628.

(8) Assembly Debates dated 6th March, 1930, pp. 1363-1367.

But even as regards consanguinity the strict rules of Hindu law are relaxed in proviso (2) which shuts out such restrictions as arise from the difference of caste or the fiction of adoption. Under the former proviso, a man can marry his cousin whom he could not have married under Hindu law.

Appointment of Marriage Registrars.

3. The Local Government may appoint one or more Registrars under this Act, either by name or as holding any office for the time being, for any portion of the territory subject to its administration. The officer so appointed shall be called "Registrar of Marriages under Act III of 1872," and is hereinafter referred to as "the Registrar." The portion of territory for which any such officer is appointed shall be deemed his district.

One of the parties to intended marriage to give notice to Registrar.

4. When a marriage is intended to be solemnized under this Act, one of the parties must give notice in writing to the Registrar before whom it is to be solemnized.

The Registrar to whom such notice is given must be the Registrar of a district within which one at least of the parties to the marriage has resided for fourteen days before such notice is given.

Such notice may be in the form given in the first schedule to this Act.

Notice by a party.—The party that gives notice must have resided for fourteen days in the district before such notice is given. Though a notice given by one of the parties is sufficient, it does not prevent both the parties giving separate notices. "Such notice may be in the form given in the first schedule to this Act"—or it may be in any other form, e.g., a letter; provided it contains all the particulars of the set form.

S. 4.

Notice to be filed and copy entered in the Marriage Notice Book.

5. The Registrar shall file all such notices and keep them with the records of his office, and shall also forthwith enter a true copy of every such notice in a book to be for that purpose furnished to him by the Government, to be called the "Marriage Notice Book under Act III of 1872" and such book shall be open at all reasonable times, without fee, to all persons desirous of inspecting the same.

Objection to marriage.

6. Fourteen days after notice of an intended marriage has been given under section 4, such marriage may be solemnized, unless it has been previously objected to in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

Any person may object to any such marriage on the ground that it would contravene some one or more of the conditions prescribed in clause (1), (2), (3) or (4) of section 2.

The nature of the objection made shall be recorded in writing by the Registrar in the register, and shall, if necessary, be read over and explained to the person making the objection, and shall be signed by him or on his behalf.

Procedure on receipt of objection.

7. On receipt of such notice of objection the Registrar shall not proceed to solemnize the marriage until the lapse of fourteen days from the receipt of such objection, if there be a Court of competent jurisdiction open at the time, or, if there be no such Court open at the time, until the lapse of fourteen days from the opening of such Court.

Objector may file suit.

The person objecting to the intended marriage may file a suit in any Civil Court having local jurisdiction (other than a Court of Small Causes) for a declaratory decree, declaring that such marriage would contravene some one or more of the conditions prescribed in clause (1), (2), (3) or (4) of section 2.

Certificate of filing of suit to be lodged with Registrar.

8. The Officer before whom such suit is filed shall thereupon give the person presenting it a certificate to the effect that such suit has been filed. If such certificate be lodged with the Registrar within fourteen days from the receipt of notice of objection, if there be a Court of competent jurisdiction open at the time, or, if there be no such Court open at the time, within fourteen days of the opening of such Court, the marriage shall not be solemnized till the decision of such Court has been given and the period allowed by law for appeals from such decision has elapsed; or, if there be an appeal from such decision, till the decision of the Appellate Court has been given.

If such certificate be not lodged in the manner and within the period prescribed in the last preceding paragraph, or if the decision of the Court be that such marriage would not contravene any one or more of the conditions prescribed in clause (1), (2), (3) or (4) of section 2, such marriage may be solemnized.

If the decision of such Court be that the marriage in question would contravene any one or more of the conditions prescribed in clause (1), (2), (3) or (4) of section 2, the marriage shall not be solemnized.

Court may fine when objection not reasonable.

9. Any Court in which any such suit as is referred to in section 7 is filed may, if it shall appear to it that the objection was not reasonable and bona fide, inflict a fine, not exceeding one thousand rupees, on the person objecting, and award it, or any part of it, to the parties to the intended marriage.

Declaration by parties and witnesses.

10. Before the marriage is solemnized, the parties and three witnesses shall, in the presence of the Registrar, sign a declaration in the form contained in the second schedule to this Act. If either party has not completed the age of twenty-one years, the declaration shall also be signed by his or her father or guardian, except in the case of a widow, and, in every case, it shall be countersigned by the Registrar.

Signing of Declaration.—S. 10.—See Supra, "Except in the case of a widow,"—because her previous marriage dispenses with the guardian's consent to her re-marriage, but she must have still completed her fourteenth year. But since she has to consent to this marriage, while her previous marriage might have been under Hindu law, it is apprehended that she may so consent even though she is a minor. S. 375 of the Indian Penal Code legalizes her consent at that age to sexual intercourse with the husband exempting him from the charge of rape.

Marriage how to be solemnized.

11. The marriage shall be solemnized in the presence of the Registrar and of the three witnesses who signed the declaration. It may be solemnized in any form, provided that each party says to the other, in the presence and hearing of the Registrar and witnesses, "I, [A], take thee, [B], to be my lawful wife (or husband)."

Place where marriage may be solemnized.

12. The marriage may be celebrated either at the office of the Registrar or at such other place, within reasonable distance of the office of the Registrar, as the parties desire: Provided that the Local Government may prescribe the conditions under which such marriages may be solemnized at places other than the Registrar's office, and the additional fees to be paid thereupon.

Certificate of marriage.

13. When the marriage has been solemnized, the Registrar shall enter a certificate thereof in a book to be kept by him for that purpose and to be called the "Marriage Certificate Book under Act III of 1872," in the form given in the third schedule to this Act, and such certificate shall be signed by the parties to the marriage and the three witnesses.

Transmission of certified copies of entries in marriage certificate book to the Registrar-General of Births, Deaths and Marriages.

13-A. The Registrar shall send to the Registrar-General of Births, Deaths and Marriages for the territories within which his district is situate, at such intervals as the [Local Government,] * from time to time directs, a true copy certified by him, in such form as the [Local Government] * from time to time prescribes, of all entries made by him in the said marriage-certificate book since the last of such intervals.

Fees.

14. The Local Government shall prescribe the fees to be paid to the Regirtrar for the duties to be discharged by him under this Act.

The Registrar may, if he think fit, demand payment of any such fee before solemnization of the marriage or performance of any other duty in respect of which it is payable.

The said Marriage-Certificate Book shall at all reasonable times be open for inspection, and shall be admissible as evidence of the truth of the statements therein contained. Certified extracts therefrom shall on application be given by the Registrar on the payment to him by the applicant of a fee to be fixed by the Local Government for each such extract.

Penalty on married person marrying again under Act.

15. Every person who, being at the time married, procures a marriage of himself to be solemnized under this Act, shall be deemed to have committed an offence under section 494 or section 495 of the Indian Penal Code as the case may be; and the marriage so solemnized is void.

Bigamy.—This section is defectively worded, since, if strictly construed, it would prevent a man marrying the same woman twice, first under his personal law and secondly under the statute, though such marriages are solemnized by people who wish to reconcile themselves to their community and retain their personal predilection. What the section forbids is bigamy, polygamy and polyandry, that is to say; if a person, being once married, say to one person A again marries during the lifetime of A, another person, say B; under this Act, his or her second marriage under the Act would be void, and the parties concerned would expose themselves to a prosecution under sections 494 and 495 of the Indian Penal Code.

S. 15.

Such cases apart, a question has often been raised as to the legal effect of a couple first undergoing the ceremony of marriage under Hindu law, and then contract-

* Sec. 13-A.—S. 13-A was inserted by S. 29 of the Births, Deaths and Marriages Registration Act (IV of 1886). The words "Local-Government" were substituted for "Governor-General in Council" by Act XXXVIII of 1920.

ing a marriage under the Act, or vice versa. Now, since Hindu law is polygamous; it permits a man say A to first marry B, and then C, D and so on ad infinitum. Consequently, A's first marriage to B under that law offers no bar to their marriage under the Act, but S. 2 (1) prohibits a statutory marriage where in consequence of a previous marriage the relationship of husband and wife had already been contracted. And since the Act does not define "Marriage", and the general law treats Hindu marriages as legal marriages in India, though not outside of it, whereas in many countries no marriage other than a statutory marriage receives legal recognition, it follows that the previous solemnization of a marriage in accordance with the rites of the Hindu religion offers an effective bar to the solemnization of the same marriage under this Act, and a marriage so solemnized would under the terms of this section be void.

Efficacy of two marriages.

But should the statutory marriage precede the religious marriage, then both marriages would be legal, since Hindu law does not prohibit such marriages, though the performance of that marriage would be otiose and create no right, or entail disabilities inconsistent with the previsions of the amended law; but if the earlier marriage was contracted under the unamended law, as it is still possible to do, then the law of succession would be the Hindu law, though the parties would be limited to monogamy and possess the right of divorce as provided in S. 17.

Punishment of bigamy.

16. Every person married under this Act who, during the lifetime of his or her wife or husband, contracts any other marriage, shall be subject to the penalties provided in sections 494 and 495 of the Indian Penal Code for the offence of marrying again during the lifetime of a husband or wife, whatever may be the religion which he or she professed at the time of such second marriage.

Indian Divorce Act to apply.

17. The Indian Divorce Act shall apply to all marriages contracted under this Act, and any such marriage may be declared null or dissolved in the manner therein provided, and for the causes therein mentioned, or on the ground that it contravenes some one or more of the conditions prescribed in clause (1), (2), (3) or (4) of section 2 of this Act.

Divorce.—Turning to the reference in this section to the Indian Divorce Act, it will be seen that S. 2 of that Act had limited its provisions only to a petitioner who professed the Christian religion. The present writer was responsible for an amendment enlarging its provisions by an amending Act[1] enabling a non-Christian petitioner to obtain a divorce from his Christian wife, and though S. 2 of that Act still retains that qualification it must be deemed to be further modified by the enactment of this section.

S. 17.

Law to apply to issue of marriages under Act.

18. The issue of marriages solemnized under this Act shall, if they marry under this Act, be deemed to be subject to the law to which their fathers were subject as to the prohibition of marriages by reason of consanguinity and affinity, and the provisos to section 2 of this Act shall apply to them.

Marriage of Issue.—This provision is intended to enlarge the field of choice for the issue of persons married under this Act; otherwise, if they remained subject to the Hindu law of marriage, that law might fail to provide a spouse to one who has been out of his caste, and if the Act did not apply to him, he would not have been able to marry at all.

S. 18.

Saving of marriages solemnized otherwise than under Act.

19. Nothing in this Act contained shall affect the validity of any marriage not solemnized under its provisions; nor shall this Act be deemed directly or indirectly to affect the validity of any mode of contracting marriage; but, if the validity of any such mode shall hereafter come into question before any Court, such question shall be decided as if this Act had not been passed.

(1) Act XXX of 1927; Assembly Debates dated 19th September, 1927, pp. 4616-4617.

Saving of other marriages.—This section merely declares that statutory provision herein made for marriages must be supposed to shake the validity of religious marriages which will continue to be judged in the light of facts and circumstances independently of the Act.

S. 19.

20. [Registry of marriages contracted before passing of Act.] Rep. by the Repealing Act (XII of 1876).

Penalty for signing declarations or certificates containing false statements.

21. Every person making, signing or attesting any declaration or certificate prescribed by this Act, containing a statement which is false, and which he either knows or believes to be false or does not believe to be true, shall be deemed guilty of the offence described in section 199 of the Indian Penal Code.

As to the clause regarding the parties' religion, see supra.

S. 21.

Effect of certain marriages on co-parcenary.

22. The marriage under this Act of any member of an undivided family who professes the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion shall be deemed to effect his severance from such family.

Rights of succession in certain cases of marriage under Act.

23. A person professing the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion who marries under this Act shall have the same rights and be subject to the same disabilities in regard to any right of succession to any property as a person to whom the Caste Disabilities Removal Act, 1850, applies:

Provided that nothing in this section shall confer on any person any right to any religious office or service, or to the management of any religious or charitable trust.

Rights retained and lost.—This section creates a statutory severance of a person married under this Act from the joint family of which he might have been till then a member. The orthodox members of the Select Committee had proposed this clause as a deterrent against persons resorting to such marriages. But the present writer accepted it as a happy release from a continued union in which embarrassing situation might be created by the orthodox members of his family, contesting his right in his property by survivorship or inheritance, in which case the misfortunes of the widows married under the amended Act and their children would be aggravated because of the persons marrying under the amended Act, having to declare that they professed the Hindu religion, and since the lex loci is construed by the Privy Council in a limited sense as noted under that Act, a Hindu marrying under the Act does not stand to gain by continuing to remain a member of the coparcenary. But so far as his own rights are concerned, he remains entitled to all those rights of inheritance to his other relations, near and remote as if he had never married under the Act.

Ss. 22-23.

The proviso to S. 23 provides that "nothing therein shall confer any right to any religious office." This clause was added at the insistence of a Madras Advocate who failed to see that the Act of 1850 confers no right: all it does is to preserve them from forfeiture.

Succession to the property of parties married under Act.

24. Succession to the property of any person professing the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion, who marries under this Act, and to the property of the issue of such marriage, shall be regulated by the provisions of the Indian Succession Act, 1865.

Succession.—This section was inserted to confer the supreme blessing of giving to a person, married under the Act, the modern equitable law of succession as enacted in the Succession Act, though by so enacting, the Legislature has brought into existence an amusing legal paradoy, since those who marry by declaring that they are non-Hindus still remain subject to the Hindu law of joint family and succession, but those who marry professing to be Hindus go out of it to the English law of Succession. But all the same their wives and descendants would feel happy that their property is not usurped by a distant gotraj or even a more distant bandhu.

S. 24.

Person marrying under Act not to have right of adoption.

25. No person professing the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion who marries under this Act shall have any right of adoption.

Adoption by father of person marrying under Act.

26. When a person professing the Hindu Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion marries under this Act, his father shall, if he has no other son living, have the right to adopt another person as a son under the law to which he is subject.]*

No Adoption:—Section 25 was inserted as another deterrent. But adoption is an archaic institution given up by all civilized countries and none of those who had married under the unamended Act are known to have lapsed into making an adoption. Section 26 was another shot from the orthodox benches who had joined forces to maim the Bill that they could not kill.

Ss. 25, 26.

FIRST SCHEDULE.

(See section 4.)

NOTICE OF MARRIAGE.

To , a Registrar of Marriages under Act III of 1872 for the District.

I hereby give you notice that a marriage under Act III of 1872 is intended to be had, within three calendar months from the date hereof, between me and the other party herein named and described (that is to say):—

Names.	Condition.	Rank or profession.	Age.	Dwelling-place.	Length of residence.
A. B.	Unmarried Widower.	Landowner.	Of full age.	....	23 days.
C. D.	Spinster.	....	Minor.	....	....

Witness my hand, this day of 187 .

(Signed) A. B.

SECOND SCHEDULE.

(See section 10.)

DECLARATION TO BE MADE BY THE BRIDEGROOM.

I, A B, hereby declare as follows:—

1. I am at the present time unmarried:

* Ss. 22 to 26 are added by Act XXX of 1923.

2. I do not profess the Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Muhammadan, Parsi, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion [or (as the case may be) I profess the Hindu, or the Buddhist, or the Sikh, or the Jaina religion:]*

3. I have completed my age of eighteen years:

4. I am not related to C D [the bride] in any degree of consanguinity or affinity which would, according to the law to which I am subject, or to which the said C D is subject, and subject to the provisos of clause (4) of section 2 of Act III of 1872, render a marriage between us illegal:

[And when the bridegroom has not completed his age of twenty-one years;

5. The consent of my father [or guardian, as the case may be] has been given to a marriage between myself and C D, and has not been revoked:]

6. I am aware that, if any statement in this declaration is false, and if in making such statement I either know or believe it to be false, or do not believe it to be true, I am liable to imprisonment, and also to fine.

(Signed) A B [the bridegroom].

DECLARATION TO BE MADE BY THE BRIDE.

I, C D, hereby declare as follows:—

1. I am at the present time unmarried:

2. I do not profess the Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Muhammadan, Parsi, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion [or (as the case may be) I profess the Hindu, or the Buddhist, or the Sikh, or the Jaina religion:]*

3. I have completed my age of fourteen years:

4. I am not related to A B [the bridegroom] in any degree of consanguinity or affinity which would, according to the law to which I am subject, or to which the said A B is subject, and subject to the provisos of clause (4) of section 2 of Act III of 1872, render a marriage between us illegal:

[And when the bride has not completed her age of twenty-one years, unless she is a widow:

5. The consent of M N, my father [or guardian, as the case may be] has been given to a marriage between myself and A B and has not been revoked:]

6. I am aware that, if any statement in this declaration is false, and if in making such statement I either know or believe it to be false, or do not believe it to be true, I am liable to imprisonment, and also to fine.

(Signed) C D [the bride].

Signed in our presence by the above-named A B and C D:

G H.
I J. } [three witnesses].
K L.

[And when the bridegroom or bride has not completed the age of twenty-one years, except in the case of a widow]:

Signed in my presence and with my consent by the above-named A B and C D:

M N, the father [or guardian] of the above-mentioned A B (or C D, as the case may be].

(Countersigned) E. F.
Registrar of Marriages under Act III of 1872 for the District of

Dated the day of 18 .

THIRD SCHEDULE.

(See section 13.)

REGISTRAR'S CERTIFICATE.

I, E F, certify that, on the of 18 appeared before me A B and C D, each of whom in my presence and in the presence of three credible witnesses whose names are signed hereunder, made the declarations required by

*The words "or (as the case may be) ....religion" in both the declarations were inserted by Act XXX of 1923, S. 5.

Act III of 1872, and that a marriage under the said Act was solemnized between them in my presence.

(Signed) E.F.,
Registrar of Marriages under Act III of 1872 for the District of

(Signed) A. B.,
C. D.

G H.
I J.
K L. } [three witnesses].

Dated the day of 18 .

FOURTH SCHEDULE.

[Rep. by the Repealing Act (XII of 1876).]

THE INDIAN SUCCESSION (AMENDMENT) ACT (XVII OF 1929).

[1*st October*, 1929.

An Act further to amend the Indian Succession Act, 1925, for certain purposes.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Indian Succession Act, 1925 for the purposes hereinafter appearing: It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called THE INDIAN SUCCESSION (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1929.

Amendment of S. 2, Act XXXIX of 1925.

2. After clause (b) of S. 2 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act), the following clause shall be inserted, namely:—

"(bb) 'District Judge' means the Judge of a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction".

Amendment of S. 57, Act XXXIX of 1925.

3. (1) Sub-section (1) of section 57 of the said Act shall be re-numbered as section 57, and after clause (b) and before the proviso, the word 'and' and the following clause shall be added, namely:

"(c) To all wills and codicils made by any Hindu Buddhist, Shikh or Jain, on or after the 1st day of January, 1927, to which those provisions are not applied by clauses (a) and (b)".

(2) Sub-section (2) of section 57 of the said Act shall be omitted.

Amendment of S. 213, Act XXXIX of 1925.

4. In sub-section (2) of section 213 of the said Act, for the word "class" the word "classes" and for the words and figures "sub-section (1) of section 57" the words, letters and figures "clauses (a) and (b) of section 57" shall be substituted.

Repeals.

5. The enactments specified in the schedule are hereby repealed.

THE SCHEDULE.

ENACTMENTS REPEALED.

(See section 5).

Year.	No.	Short title.
1926	XXXVII	The Indian Succession (Amendment) Act, 1926.
1928	XXI	The Indian Succession Second (Amendment) Act, 1928.

THE HINDU WIDOWS' REMARRIAGE ACT (XV OF 1856).

An Act to remove all legal obstacles to the marriage of Hindu widows.

WHEREAS it is known that, by the law as administered in the possession and under the Government of the East India Company, Hindu widows with certain exceptions[1] are held to be, by reason of their having been once married, incapable of contracting a second valid marriage, and the offspring of such widows by any second marriage are held to be illegitimate and incapable of inheriting property; and Preamble.

WHEREAS many Hindus believe that the imputed legal incapacity, although it is in accordance with established custom, is not in accordance with a true interpretation of the precepts of their religion, and desire that the civil law administered by the Courts of Justice shall no longer prevent those Hindus who may be so minded from adopting a different custom in accordance with the dictates of their own conscience; and

WHEREAS it is just to relieve all such Hindus from this legal incapacity of which they complain, and the removal of all legal obstacles to the marriage of Hindu widows will tend to the promotion of good morals and to the public welfare; it is enacted as follows:—

(1) The Act recognizes that widows were entitled to re-marry, but their re-marriage was exceptional and not generally permissible. The language of the preamble shows that the Act was limited to such persons as feel within the rule and not its exception.[1]

Marriage of Hindu widows legalized.

1. No marriage contracted between Hindus shall be invalid, and the issue of no such marriage shall be illegitimate, by reason of the women having been previously married or betrothed to another person who was dead at the time of such marriage, any custom and any interpretation of Hindu law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Rights of widow in deceased husband's property to cease on her re-marriage.

2. All rights and interests which any widow may have in her deceased husband's property by way of maintenance, or by inheritance to her husband or to his lineal successors, or by virtue of any will or testamentary disposition conferring upon her, without express permission to remarry only a limited interest in such property, with no power of alienating the same, shall upon her re-marriage cease and determine as if she had then died; and the next heirs of her deceased husband, or other persons entitled to the property on her death, shall thereupon succeed to the same.

(1) Cf. "it is just to relieve all such Hindus".

This clause speaks of "any widow" which, if read with the preamble, must mean "any such widow" as the preamble speaks of. Consequently, the clause does not affect the re-marriage of a person amongst whom re-marriage was customary and the forfeiture of whose estate inherited from the husband would then be regulated by custom.[1] But if "any woman" in S. 2, which is the enacting section, cannot be limited by any statement in the preamble then, the clause relating to forfeiture would apply equally to all widows who re-marry even after their conversion to an alien faith, e.g., Islam, including those whose re-marriage was sanctioned by custom,[2] without entailing forfeiture. The argument that the widow inherits as the surviving half of the husband, and therefore, forfeits when she re-marries overlooks the fact that where her re-marriage is customarily permissible, custom prefers the reality to a metaphor, and must be left to decide the question of forfeiture. A widow does not forfeit her estate on her subsequent unchastity. Can re-marriage of the surviving half be treated as any thing worse than unchastity under Hindu Law? The majority of the High Courts hold the enacting section as uncontrolled by the preamble, but it is the normal rule of construction and the preamble is used to extend or limit the operative words in a statute.[3]

Rights of widow in deceased husband's property to cease on her re-marriage.

3. On the remarriage of a Hindu widow, if neither the widow nor any other person has been expressly constituted by the will or testamentary disposition of the deceased husband the guardian of his children the father or paternal grandfather or the mother or paternal grandmother of the deceased husband, or any male relative of the deceased husband may petition the highest Court having original jurisdiction in civil cases in the place where the deceased husband was domiciled at the time of his death for the appointment of some proper person to be guardian of the said children, and thereupon it shall be lawful for the said court, if it shall think fit, to appoint such guardian who when appointed shall be entitled to have the care and custody of the said children or of any of them during their minority in the place of their mother; and in making such appointment the court shall be guided, so far as may be by the laws and rules in force touching the guardianship of children who have neither father nor mother: Provided that, when the said children have not property of their own sufficient for their support and proper education whilst minors, no such appointment shall be made otherwise than with the consent of the mother unless the proposed guardian shall have given security for the support and proper education of the children whilst minors.

Nothing in this Act to render any childless widow capable of inheriting.

4. Nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to render any widow who, at the time of the death of any person leaving any property, is a childless widow, capable of inheriting the whole or any share of such property if, before the passing of this Act,

(1) Bhola Umar v. Kausilla, 55 A. 24 F.B., cases of the other High Courts distinguished. See pp. 35, 36, after Full Bench decision 58 A. 1054; Tapoo v. E, (1937) S. 42; Narain v. Mohan Singh, (1937) A. 343; Bhola Umar v. Kausilla, 58 A. 1034.

(2) Matungini v. Ram Rutton, 19 C. 289 F.B. (Majority, case of marriage after conversion); Raghunath v. Laxmibai, 59 B. 417 (421) (re-marriage on conversion to Islam. But in cases of conversion the woman is protected by the Lex Loci Act (XXI of 1850); Vitta v. Chatakonda, 41 M. 1078 F.B. (no unanimity on any point); Parji v. Mangla, (1930) L. 1023; Suraj Jote v. Attar Kumari. 1 Pat. 706.

(3) Targnand v. Board of Trade. 11 A.C. 286; Powell v. Kempton Park Race Course Co., (1899) A.C. 143, (185). See cases cited in 1 Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), 16, 17; London and County Council v. Bermondsey Bioscope Co., 80 L.J.K.B. 144.

she would have been incapable of inheriting the same by reason of her being a childless widow.

Saving of right of widow marrying, except as provided in sections 2 to 4.

5. Except as in the three preceding sections is provided a widow shall not, by reason of her re-marriage, forfeit any property or any right to which she would otherwise be entitled; and every widow who has re-married shall have the same rights of inheritance as she would have had, had such marriage been her first marriage.

Ceremonies constituting valid marriage to have same effect on widow's marriage.

6. Whatever words spoken, ceremonies performed or engagements made on the marriage of a Hindu female who has not been previously married, are sufficient to constitute a valid marriage, shall have the same effect if spoken, performed or made on the marriage of a Hindu widow; and no marriage shall be declared invalid on the ground that such words, ceremonies or engagements are inapplicable to the case of a widow.

Consent to re-marriage of minor widow.

7. If the widow re-marrying is a minor whose marriage has not been consummated, she shall not re-marry without the consent of her father, or if she has no father or her paternal grandfather, or if she has no such grandfather, or her mother, or failing all these, of her elder brother, or failing also brothers, of her next male relative.

Punishment for abetting marriage made contrary to this section.

All persons knowingly abetting a marriage made contrary to the provisions of this section shall be liable to imprisonment for any term not exceeding one year or to fine or to both.

And all marriages made contrary to the provisions of this section may be declared void by a Court of law: Provided that, in any question regarding the validity of a marriage made contrary to the provisions of this section, such consent as aforesaid shall be presumed until contrary is proved, and that no such marriage shall be declared void after it has been consummated.

Consent to re-marriage of major widow.

In the case of a widow who is of full age, or whose marriage has been consummated, her own consent shall be sufficient to constitute her re-marriage lawful and valid.

THE HINDU WOMEN'S RIGHT TO PROPERTY ACT (XVIII OF 1937).

[14*th April*, 1937.

An Act to amend the Hindu Law governing Hindu Women's right to property.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Hindu Law as to give better rights to women in respect of property; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and extent.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE HINDU WOMEN'S RIGHTS TO PROPERTY ACT, 1937.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, including British Baluchistan and the Sonthal Parganas but excluding Burma.

This Act owes it inception to Dr. G. V. Deshmukh who introduced it in the Assembly on 26th September, 1938. It is at the present moment (31—3—1938), subject to an Amending Bill sponsered by Government.

Application.

2. Notwithstanding any rule of Hindu Law or custom to the contrary, the provisions of section 3 shall apply where a Hindu dies intestate leaving a widow.[1]

(1) Though the Act is intended to amend the Hindu Law governing Hindu women's right to property, that right depends upon the single contingency of a man predeceasing his wife. (See S. 2). If, therefore, he died leaving him surviving no widow, all his decendants and heirs specified in S. 3 are left unprovided for except to the limited extent provided in Hindu Law.

If, however, any such contingency favours the heirs, they get equal shares regardless of sex, the daughters sharing equally with the son.

The Act omits to consider the case of a widow who, upon her remarriage forfeits her heritage under S. 2 of the Widows' Remarriage Act.

Devolution of Property.

3. (1) When a Hindu governed by the Dayabhaga school of Hindu Law dies intestate, his property, and when a Hindu governed by any other school of Hindu Law or by customary law dies intestate leaving separate property, that separate property shall, subject to the provisions of sub-section (3), devolve upon his widow along with[2] his lineal descendants,[3] if any, in like manner as it devolves upon his son:

Provided that the widow of a predeceased son shall inherit in like manner as a son if there is no son surviving of such predeceased son, and shall inherit in like manner[4] as a son's son if there is surviving a son or son's son of such predeceased son:[5]

Provided further that the same provision shall apply mutatis mutandis to the widow of a predeceased son of a predeceased son.[5]

(2) When a Hindu governed by any school of Hindu Law other than the Dayabhag school or by customary law dies intestate having at the time of his death an interest in a Hindu joint family property, his widow shall, subject to the provisions of sub-section (3),[6] have in the property the same interest as he himself had.

(3) Any interest devolving on a Hindu widow under the provisions of this section shall be the limited interest known as a Hindu woman's estate[6] provided however that she shall have the same right of claiming partition as a male owner.

(4) The provisions of this section shall not apply to an estate which by a customary or other rule of succession descends to a single heir or to any property to which the Indian Succession Act, 1925, applies.

(2) "along with" suggests a joint tenancy and not tenancy-in-common that appears to be intended.

(3) "Lineal descendants" upto any decree (?) Under Hindu Law such male descendants take only upto the third degree. The words also include all descendants, male and female, but omits to include or exclude those adopted into or out of the family. But though S. 2 repeals "any rule of Hindu law or custom to the contrary" it is apprehended that adopted persons would presumably come in or go out in accordance with the tenor of the general law.

(4) "In like manner"—it is not the manner but the extent of the devolution that is intended. It was probably intended to mean "to the same extent as it devolves upon a son." As under the General Clauses Act the singular includes the plural, it follows that if the owner left two more wives, they will all count as so many sons and the same rule would determine the share of the daughter-in-law and the granddaughter-in-law.

It is further not clear whether the descendants will take per stirpes or per capita. It would set a premium upon fecundity if they took per capita, and the Act does not suggest the contrary.

(5) These two provisos add that the daughter-in-law would take the share in case she is the widow of the owner's predeceased son, but the extent of her share would depend upon whether the predeceased son had left any son or a son's son. She would take the share of her husband, if the latter predeceased his father and left no son at the time of the father's death when the succession opened, but her share will be reduced to that of a son's son if the predeceased son died leaving him surviving a son or a son's son.

The same provision is extended to the widow of the predeceased grandson.

(6) "Subject to the provisions of sub-section (3)" which is limited to the widow.

Under S. 3 (3), the widow's estate is limited, but what about the estate taken by the other female heirs?

If strictly construed, this provision would be hard on the women subject to the Bombay school who take an absolute estate as gotraja sapindas.

Savings.

4. Nothing in this Act shall apply to the property of any Hindu dying intestate before the commencement of this Act.

GENERAL INDEX

GENERAL INDEX.

PAGE.

A

Aboriginal races.
- Hindu Law applicable to .. 63
- How they are absorbed into Hinduism .. 63
- See also Hinduism, Hindu Law, Hindus.

Absent co-parcener.
- Right of, to re-open partition .. 665, 667
- No bar to partition .. 677

Account (s).
- Right of co-parcener to claim. 444, 448
- No liability of manager of Hindu family to submit, 444, 448
- Exception in case of fraud or agreement .. 448
- Manager of family firm not liable to .. 475
- Manager of debutter, duty to keep .. 845

Accretion.
- To ancestral property, regarded ancestral. 360, 362, 366
- To separate property .. 379
- Impartible by .. 698
- Conditions necessary for 710, 711
- Intention essential .. 710, 711
- To impartible estate, how far self-acquisitions .. 710
- To impartible estate, presumption regarding such .. 711
- Do. devolution of such .. 711
- Do. difference between Mahomedan and Hindu Law .. 711
- To Woman's estate. 1034-1036
- Power of heiress to dispose. 1035-1036
- By heiress, how treated for purposes of inheritance .. 1035
- Question of intention. 1035, 1036
- By heiress, presumption regarding 1036, 1041
- Evidence of .. 1037
- Presumptions regarding, by heiress, arise when estate got by inheritance and not by devise .. 1043

PAGE.

Accretion—(contd.)
- By heiress, when she is not in possession of estate .. 1039
- By heiress, when the purchase was made benami. 1039, 1040
- To stridhan is stridhan only .. 1137

Accumulation (s).
- In Religious and charitable endowments .. 845
- Widow's power over. (See Woman's Estate.)

Acknowledgment.
- Of barred debts, by manager, not valid .. 456
- Exception in the case where the father is manager .. 456
- By father—of debts. 543, 544
- By guardian 294, 296, 302

Acquiescence.
- What constitutes. 242, 263
- Effect of—in cases of adoption. 244, 263
- Effect of—in building on common land by coparcener. 410, 411
- Of reversioner, in alienation by heiress .. 1072

Acquisition (s)—See also Joint Family: Self-acquisition.
- Of father, in the hands of the son. 360, 361
- Of ancestral property lost to the family .. 362
- Gifts by strangers .. 378
- Presumption regarding, in Mitakshara .. 434
- When become joint family property. 367, 370
- Gifts by Government .. 371
- Presumption regarding, in coparcenary, in Mitakshara. 436, 437
- Presumption regarding, in Dayabhag .. 435
- Such presumption conditional on existence of nucleus .. 435
- Acquirer entitled to double share on partition .. 569

PAGE.

Acquisition (s)—(contd.)
Women, absolute rights of, in .. 1139
Acquisitions by prostitution follow special line of succession .. 1140

Acts and Regulations.
See Table of Acts and Regulations.

Adhivednik.
What is .. 1157

Adhyagni.
What is .. 1141

Adoption.
General Principles.
Greek and Roman adoptions .. 5, 6
Special works of authority on. 73
Adoption of children of either sex in early Hindu Law .. 165
Modern adoption confined to a son .. 165
Definition of adoption (S. 34). 165
Texts on the law of adoption. 165
What is an adopted son .. 165
Secular and religious motives for adoption. 159, 165, 167
Motive immaterial. (S. 53). 175, 180, 229
Adoption must be unconditional and irrevocable. (S. 55) .. 231
Creates a status .. 231
Cannot be cancelled by adopter or adoptee .. 231
Peculiarity of, among Gosavis. 62
Simultaneous adoptions of different boys by the same adopter not valid .. 167
Two persons cannot adopt the same boy. 177, 215, 219
Divesting of which estate by (S. 40) .. 212
Prohibition of adoption under usage .. 172
Under statute .. 175
Who may adopt.
Who may adopt. (S. 35) .. 167
Adopter must be issueless .. 167
Meaning of issue .. 167
Issue includes son, grandson and great-grandson .. 167
Females no bar .. 167
Nephew and daughter's son no bar to adoption .. 167
Illegitimate son no bar .. 167
One whose son has married under the Special Marriage Act is deemed issueless .. 166
One whose son is disqualified, civily or presumably dead is issueless and can adopt, effect of Act XII of 1928. 168

PAGE.

Adoption—(contd.)
Who may adopt. (S. 35)—(Contd.)
Existence of children born of illegal dagger alliance, a bar .. 167
Adopter must possess sound mind. (S. 35) .. 166
Who is of sound mind .. 169
Adopter must have attained. the age of discretion (S. 35) 166
What is age of discretion .. 170
Indian Majority Act not applicable .. 170
Adopter must not suffer from mental or physical disability which disqualifies him from inheritance. (S. 35) Effect of Act XII of 1928 .. 171
Degradation of adopter, its effect .. 170
An ascetic or Sanyasi cannot adopt .. 173
A lunatic may adopt .. 173
A bachelor or widower may adopt .. 173
Adoption during pregnancy of wife valid .. 173
Adoption during pollution valid .. 174
Assent of the wife unnecessary, and her opposition ineffective. (S. 35) expl.) .. 174
Widow estopped from disputing her husband's adoption. (S. 47) .. 207
Adoption by delegated authority.
Wife can adopt only with husband's assent. (S. 36) .. 175
Status of co-wives with reference to the adopted boy .. 175
No independent right but under delegated authority. 178
Right of adoption cannot be delegated except to a wife or widow .. 176, 196
Origin of the rule .. 177
Right to perform consequential ceremonies may be delegated .. 177
Power and limits of delegation .. 177
Conditional delegation, condition must be strictly fulfilled. 178
See construction of authority.
Adoption by the widow. (S. 38)
No independent right but under delegated authority .. 178
Origin of the rule. 178, 179
Express authority essential under Bengal and Benares. 179, 182

PAGE.

Adoption—(contd.)

Adoption by the widow. (S. 38) (contd.)

In Madras, in the absence of authority consent of husband's sapindas held sufficient. 179, 180

See Dravid Widow's Adoption.

In Maharastra, authority presumed in every case where no express prohibition. (S. 40). 179, 180

See Maharastra Widow's adoption.

In Mithila, no adoption by a widow except in kritrim form .. 179, 215

In Punjab—tribal and territorial custom prevails .. 179

Adoption discretionary. 176, 182, 183

Age of female adopter. 183, 184

Effect of Majority Act .. 184

Husband's prohibition to adopt. 181

What prohibition necessary. 181

Prohibition may be express or implied. .. 181

Dravid widow's adoption. (S. 39).

Genesis of the Dravid rule .. 186

Assent of husband's kinsmen necessary for adoption .. 186, 187

Maharastra widow's adoption (S. 40).

Can adopt, in the absence of prohibition, on presumed authority, irrespective of whether her husband was separate or joint .. 191, 192

Genesis of her power .. 191

Consent of kinsmen. (S. 39).

Whose consent necessary. 187, 190, 191

Father-in-law's consent in undivided family. 185, 187, 191

Consent of husband's mother sufficient where no other available .. 189

Consent of manager. 185, 187, 191

Consent of sapindas .. 187, 188

Unanimous consent whether necessary .. 187, 188

Consenting Sapindas to be sui juris .. 189

Consent of majority of Sapindas, sufficient .. 187, 188

Consent as evidence of propriety of adoption .. 189

Consent of co-widow unnecessary .. 190

What is valid consent .. 189, 190

Mere presence at the ceremony is not consent .. 189

PAGE.

Adoption—(Contd.)

Consent of kinsmen. (S. 39)—(contd.)

Consent given for consideration, validity of .. 190, 206

Consent obtained by fraud, undue influence, coercion, etc. 189, 190, 206

Ratification expost facto.

Not tantamount to consent .. 189

Got by misrepresentation, whether adoption valid .. 206

Not so, where circumstances have materially changed .. 190

Consent whether revocable .. 190

Authority to adopt.

Authority conferred only on wife .. 176, 196

Creates no obligation on the widow .. 192

Can be given to wife alone .. 192

Form of authority. (S. 42) .. 193

May be expressed or implied .. 193

May be oral or in writing .. 193, 194

If in writing and non-testamentary it must be registered .. 193

Construction of authority .. 178

Authority must be strictly pursued .. 192, 194

Inference from husband's conduct .. 193

Authority with a condition .. 193

Stranger cannot limit widow's power .. 195

Proof of authority .. 195, 202

Liberal construction of .. 194

Authority conferred by will 194

See Wills.

Hindu Wills Act, effect of .. 195

Successive adoptions when permissible. (S. 43). 196, 202, 203

Direction to adopt a persona designata. 194, 195, 197, 198, 199

Joint Authority .. 176, 199

Joint authority to two widows, effect of death of one .. 193, 197

Provision for obtaining consent of others .. 199, 200

Limited authority .. 200

Illegal authority .. 196, 200

Abuse of .. 202

Vagueness, authority, void for. 196, 201

Revocation of authority .. 196, 202

Presumption of revocation .. 202

Authority conferred on co-widows, exercise by (S. 45). 203, 204

PAGE.

Adoption.—(contd.)

Grounds which vitiate an adoption. (S. 46).

Adoption must be voluntary. 205
Voidable adoption .. 205
Ratification, when possible .. 205
Corrupt adoption .. 205
Agreements to pay or receive money for adoption, void. 205, 206
Adoption by fraud .. 207
The fraud proved must be the fraud pleaded .. 207
Adoption by delegated authority (S. 37) .. 176

Limitation on widow's power of adoption. (S. 48).

Change in the law .. 208
Spiritual and not secular considerations, which limit widow's power .. 208, 209
Widow's power not subject to the rule regarding the vesting of estates .. 209
Or on the attainment of ceremonial competency, .. 209
Or on her inheriting the property from her husband .. 209
Adopted son can divest the estate vested in other coparceners or other than the adopting widow .. 210
Widow's power terminated if the son dies leaving a widow with a power to adopt, or a son natural or adopted .. 210, 217
Her adoption cannot defeat her husband's devise, or the disposal of property to a bona fide transferee for value .. 211
Her right not affected by the presence of a daughter or daughter's son .. 211
Competition between the mother-in-law and the daughter-in-law .. 211
No revival of determined power. 212

Who may give in adoption (S. 50) 212
Texts on the subject .. 213
Right to give confined to parents .. 213, 214
Father's power to give .. 213, 214
Such power not controlled by the mother .. 213
Father's right not affected by age or conversion .. 213
Other disqualifications no bar to give .. 214
Mother's right .. 214
Mother, limits of the rights of. 213, 214
Re-marriage and conversion of mother, effect of .. 214

PAGE.

Adoption—(contd.)

Who may give in adoption. (S. 50)—(contd.)

Delegation of right. (S. 37). See Adoption by delegated authority.

Who cannot give in adoption.

Excepting parents no person can give .. 213, 214
Brother .. 215
Paternal grandfather .. 215
Step-mother .. 214
Adoptive father .. 214
Adoptive mother .. 214

Persons eligible for adoption. (S. 51)

The boy must belong to adopter's caste. 215, 216, 218
Justification of the rule .. 218
Saunaka allows adoption from a different caste, but rule has fallen into desuetude.. 218
Position of adopted son from different caste—entitled to maintenance only .. 216
In Sudras, boy of different sub-caste permitted .. 218
May not he be of the same gotra or a sapinda .. 216, 221
The boy must not be an orphan .. 215
Such adoption void and cannot be supported by factum valet .. 219
Void because, no giving and taking .. 219
Valid if permitted by custom. 219
The boy must not have been adopted by another .. 215, 219
But may be adopted if first adoption was invalid .. 219
Nephew may be adopted by two brothers according to Nand pandit, but no exception in law .. 219
Age of the adoptee immaterial, in Bombay, Punjab and among Jains .. 215, 224
Among Jains may be older than adopter .. 215
Age immaterial in Madras, provided the adoptee is unmarried and is a sapinda.. 220, 221
A married man and having children can be adopted in Bombay .. 220
Except Bombay adoption of married man not permitted. 215, 220
Boy after investiture becomes ineligible for adoption in Bengal and Benares school. 215, 221

PAGE.

Adoption—(Contd.)

Persons eligible for adoption. (S. 51)—(contd.)

But not in Madras, Bombay, Punjab, and among Shudras among whom there is no investiture .. 215, 221

Age for investiture, crossing the prescribed limit not illegal .. 221

But father alone enters the adopted family and not his issue before adoption .. 220, 252

Prohibited relations for adoption .. 215, 216

Textual rules to adopt, first sapinda, next sagotra and strangers last, held merely monitory .. 216, 221

Daughter's son, sister's son, and mother's sister's son cannot be adopted, according to Sakala's and Saunaka's texts and approved by P.C. 222

Doctrine of factum valet does not apply .. 222

Saunaka's rule explained by Nand Pandit .. 216

Underlying principle, Niyog explained .. 217

Relations prohibited by .. 217

Niyog theory only monitory in Bombay .. 217

Modern rule of marriage in place of Niyog which is obsolete .. 217

These do not coincide, but are not in conflict .. 217

The rule applies to adoption by a male but not by a female .. 217, 225

The rule does not apply to adoption by Shudra .. 217

Custom overrides the rule .. 217, 222

In Punjab, .. 217, 223

In South India. 217, 222, 223

In Southern Maratha Country. 223

Adoption of daughter's son, sister's son, and mother's sister's son, where valid and where not valid .. 222, 223

Adoption of sister's son's son valid .. 223

Adoption of brother or step-brother .. 223

Invalid in Madras .. 224, 225

Invalid in Patna .. 225

Valid in Bombay .. 225

PAGE.

Adoption—(Contd.)

Persons eligible for adoption. (S. 51)—(contd.)

Valid in Sudras .. 225

Nand Pandit, on. 216, 217, 223, 224

Adoption of uncle paternal and maternal, not valid .. 224

Of their son, or son's son valid. 225

Adoption of father's first cousin held valid in Bombay.. 224, 225

Adoption of brother's or cousin's son or grand-nephew, valid .. 224

Adoption of wife's brother valid .. 224, 225

Wife's brother's son or grandson valid .. 225

Wife's sister's daughter's son valid in Madras .. 225

Brother's daughter's son valid in Punjab and South India. 225

Invalid in Bengal .. 225

Of maternal aunt's daughter's son valid .. 225

Eldest son may be adopted.. 230

Ante-adoption agreements. (S. 55)

Rights of the adoptee may be limited or postponed to any reasonable extent warranted by custom. (S. 55) .. 231

Conditions imposed by the adopter, validity of .. 231, 232

What agreements may be entered into with the natural father .. 232

Conditions must be supported by custom. 232, 233, 256, 257

Customary conditions .. 232, 233

Agreement that adoptive mother should retain the limited estate during her lifetime or absolute right over part of the estate .. 223

Agreement that adoptee shall not call for partition during adoptive father's lifetime .. 232

Agreement void if deprives the adoptee of entire inheritance or deprives him of the means to discharge his spiritual obligations .. 232, 233

He who relies on condition must prove it .. 232

Agreements putting reservations in favour of charities or religious endowments not valid, unless supported by custom .. 232

PAGE.

Adoption—(Contd.)

Other Agreements.

Agreement by a person not to exercise his spiritual right of adoption is invalid .. 261, 262
For consideration invalid .. 262
Agreement not to adopt, adoption in breach of, cannot be restrained by injunction .. 262
Breach of, redressable in pecuniary compensation .. 262
Specific performance of, to marry or to adopt, cannot be specifically enforced .. 262

Ceremonies essential to adoption (S. 52)

Textual ceremonies .. 226
Corporal delivery, giving and taking essential .. 225, 226
Indispensable both in Dwijas and Shudras .. 227
Absence cannot be cured by factum valet .. 227
In Jains not insisted .. 227
Datt Homa essential among dwijas if the parties belong to different gotras .. 226
How performed .. 228
Not essential for Shudras .. 228
May be performed after adoption .. 229
May be delegated .. 229
Wholly unnecessary, where .. 229
If not performed, adoption not vitiated .. 228
Putreshti Yag—not essential.. 228
Other ceremonies, if customary must be performed .. 227
Prevalent in Marwaris .. 227

Effect of adoption on natural family. (S. 60).

All rights and liabilities therein determined .. 250, 251
Estate vested by survivorship, inheritance, gift, devise or otherwise not divested both in Mitakshara and Dayabhaga .. 250, 251
In Bombay, inherited estate is divested .. 252
In Bombay, the rights of ante adoption son, whose connection not severed by his father's adoption .. 220, 252
Cannot inherit to relations in his natural family; they also cannot inherit him .. 252
No liability to pay debts as member of his natural family. 252
Relationship for the purpose of adoption and marriage still remains .. 251, 252

PAGE.

Adoption—(contd.)

Rights in the adopted family. (S.61).

Same status and rights as an auras son .. 253
Right to inherit his adoptive parents .. 253
His lineal and collateral relations .. 253, 254
Right to inherit adopting mother .. 253
Who is an adopting mother. 253, 254, 255
Rights commence with adoption. (S. 62) .. 255, 256
Adopted son becomes a coparcener in the joint family. 256
Cannot question prior alienations of self-acquired property .. 256
But possesses such right if adopted by a widow .. 257, 258
Provided the alienation is unsupported by necessity .. 257, 258 259
Or of joint property in Daya. 256
His rights how far curtailed by ante-adoption agreements.

See ante-adoption agreement.

Cannot avoid widow's surrender made prior to adoption .. 259
Whether can question adoptive father's will, which also contained authority to adopt .. 233, 257
Acquires the rights of his adoptive father in ancestral family partnership. 257, 258, 261
Cannot impeach settlements even out of ancestral property made prior to adoption .. 233
Right of survivorship in coparcenary property relates back to the death of his adoptive father .. 258
Adoption has the effect of divesting estate of survivorship, but not of inheritance. 258
Adopted son bound by the contracts made by his adoptive father like an auras son .. 256, 258
Sons of adopted sons get rights of natural sons .. 259
Adopted son's share reduced if a natural afterborn son.. 259
Adoptees rights limited by auras son. (S. 63) .. 259

PAGE.

Adoption.—(contd.)

Rights in the adopted family. (S. 61) —(contd.).

Adoptee loses all rights to performance of religious ceremonies. .. 259
Adoptee not entitled to succeed to an impartible estate in preference to the auras son. 260
His right of inheritance, is reduced to a fourth share of the natural son .. 260
Text of Vashisth and different interpretations of .. 260, 261
Applies to Dwijas only, Sudra excepted .. 260, 261

Dwamushayana adoption (S. 56)

Text on the subject .. 233
Had its origin in Niyog .. 233
Is Nitya (complete) or Anitya (incomplete): distinction between .. 233, 234
Dattak Chandrika recommends this form for adopting an only son .. 234
Conditions of, agreement express or implied between two persons necessary .. 234, 235
May follow the forms and conditions of Dattak adoption .. 234
Brother's son generally adopted in this form .. 235
Brothers or their widows may adopt in this form .. 234
Local varieties of .. 234
Common among Nambudri and Lingayats and southern districts of Bombay Presidency .. 234
Not unknown in Bengal, U.P. and C.P. .. 235
Unknown in Punjab .. 235
Rights of inheritance both in the natural and adoptive families .. 235
Adoptive and natural parents inherit to him .. 235
Share reduced if fathers have legitimate issue .. 235
His issue no rights in adoptive family .. 235

Customary adoptions.

A Jain adoption. (S. 66).

Right to give not confined to parents only .. 215
Widow can adopt, without husband's authority, or the consent of his kinsmen, irrespective of whether the property she inherited was his self-acquired or ancestral property .. 264

PAGE.

Adoption.—(contd.)

Customary adoption—(contd.)

Power of adoption cannot be delegated except to the widow .. 265
Of two widows, right to adopt belongs to senior .. 265
Who can be adopted .. 264, 265
Orphan, a married man and having children is eligible .. 264, 265
No prohibited relations .. 264, 265
Ceremonies essential—giving and taking, essential. 227, 264, 265
Tying of father's turban, customary .. 227, 265
A jain retains his custom of adoption on his conversion to Vaishnavism .. 265
Same custom equally applies to jains of all sects whether Agarwal, Churiwal, Khandewal or Osewal .. 265
Succeeds to adoptive parents only and no right to collateral succession. (S. 67) .. 265, 266

B. Kritrim adoption. (S. 67).

Meaning of .. 266
Kritrim, Svayamdutt, & Kreet sons, last two now obsolete .. 266, 267
Who may adopt .. 266
Husband or wife may adopt to himself or herself either jointly, or separately .. 266
Wife or widow may adopt in her own right .. 226
Adopter must not have no son, grandson, or great-grandson .. 266
The adoptee may be adult or married .. 266
Both the adoptee and his parents must consent .. 266
Separate sons may be adopted by husband and wife. 266, 267
Any relation, or a stranger may be adopted .. 266
Adoptee inherits only to the adopter .. 267
Relation created only personal 267-269
Kritrim more in vogue in Mithila than Dattak .. 266
In the Punjab and Burma .. 275
Not spiritual but secular .. 267
Simplified Kritrim in vogue in the Punjab .. 267
Mithila variety .. 267
Incidents of (S. 69) .. 269
Widow may adopt to herself .. 269
Text of Vachaspati Misra .. 268

PAGE.

Adoption—(contd.)

Kritrim adoption—(contd.)

Only Kritrim adoption allowed in Mithila .. 179, 268
Adoption completed by contract .. 269
No restriction as to choice of adoptee or his age .. 269
Rights of succession (S. 70). 270

Adoption of a Daughter.

Conflict of views .. 271, 273

C. Illatom adoption.

Customary in South India .. 271, 274
Its incidents .. 274
Local variations of adoption. 271, 274

D. Burmese adoption .. 275
E. Parsi adoption .. 275
E. Punjab adoptions .. 275

Evidence and proof of adoption (S. 58)

He who relies upon an adoption must prove it .. 236, 253
High degree of proof essential. 236
Textual requisite of informing the King now taken by registration .. 237
Evidence in writing if necessary .. 238
Value of adoption-deed, invitations and mutation of names. 238
No presumption in favour of adoption .. 236, 237
Antecedent probabilities .. 238
Adoption by fraud .. 247
Adoption by Pardanashins.. 239
Condition of the adopter, as being issueless, very old or dying .. 238
Publicity .. 239
Admissions and conduct of the parties .. 239, 240
Consistency of such admissions value of .. 240
Conduct of the adopter .. 240
Admission shifts burden of proof .. 241
Adoption by widow, proof of assent by husband .. 242
Adoption by widow, receipt of independent advice .. 242
Ancient adoptions, proof of less strict .. 242, 243
Adoption by estoppel .. 243
Limits of the rule .. 245
Estoppel by representation. 243, 244
Principle of the curative effect of time recognised .. 244
Estoppel by acquiscence .. 244, 245
Burden of proof .. 246
Pleadings regarding adoption. 248
Working rules with reference to .. 247, 248

PAGE.

Adoption—(contd.)

Limitation for suits.

Limitation for challenging adoption .. 246
Limitation for establishing adoption .. 247

Factum valet

Scope of the rule .. 230
Limits to its application .. 229
Adoption of the youngest, oldest, or the only son validated by .. 229
Adoption after investiture .. 229
When adoptee older than adopter .. 229
Adoption during pollution .. 229
Adoption by widow pregnant in concubinage .. 230
Adoption by untonsured widow. 230
Other disqualifications .. 230
Adoption through bribe .. 230

Invalid adoptions.

One adoption by two persons. 117, 215, 219
Simultaneous adoptions .. 167
Cannot be cured by subsequent consent .. 262, 263
Estoppel by conduct .. 262, 263
Mere presence does not amount to estoppel .. 263
Acquiescence cannot validate an invalid adoption .. 262
But estops the party from disputing it .. 263

Void adoptions. (S. 59)

Adoptee acquires no rights.. 248, 249
Bequest to adoptee .. 249
Construction of the bequest.. 249
Whether bequest also fails, question of donor's intention to benefit adoptee as such or otherwise .. 249
Persona designata bequest to. 249
Invalid on account of public policy, plea of estoppel not allowed .. 250

Adultery.

Of wife .. 141
Of husband .. 141, 149
Separate maintenance to wife, if husband lives in adultery. 146
Effect, on restitution of conjugal rights .. 320

Adverse possession.

Manager's possession cannot be adverse against the endowment .. 844
Absolute estate by, by woman. 1032
By heiress, limitation period. 1122, 1124
Heiress acquisition by, her stridhan .. 1138, 1139

PAGE.

Affiliation.
Modes of, early Hindu Law. 159, 160
Modern law, as to .. 160

After-born son.
Right to claim partition .. 603
Rights of son conceived at the time of partition and after distinguished .. 668, 670

Agarwal Bania.
Adoption among .. 265

Agreement.
Marriage agreement .. 111, 113
Marriage, not specifically enforceable .. 111
Marriage, can be broken for valid reasons .. 111
Not to adopt, void .. 261
By widow, not to adopt, illegal and void .. 262
To pay or receive money for adoption, void .. 262
Adoption in breach of, not to adopt, cannot be restrained by injunction .. 262
To give and take in adoption. 214
To adopt, cannot be specifically enforced .. 261
But suit for damages allowed. 262
Limiting or postponing rights of the adopted son, validity of .. 231, 233
To hold property in shares effects partition .. 593
Against partition, how far valid .. 643
Where such agreement is for a specified time or definite purpose .. 643
To hold shares in severalty; proof of partition .. 631
To alter course of inheritance, void .. 900, 901
Not to exercise right of inheritance, void .. 906

Alienation—See also Co-parcener, Joint family, Woman's estate, Religious and charitable endowments, Minority and Guardianship, etc., etc.
Alienation defined (S. 224). 741
Alienation subject to Hindu law. (S. 225) .. 741
Inalienable property .. 741
Equities on setting aside. 135, 461, 462, 1082, 1083

Aliyasantana.
Family, no partition among .. 642

Anand.—See Marriage.

Ancestral worship.
Prevalent in primitive men .. 3
Doctrine of spiritual benefit based on, in Dayabhaga .. 3

PAGE.

Ancestral Property.
Defined (S. 113) .. 360
What is .. 360
Comprises property inherited from the father .. 360, 366
In Sanskrit called Apratibandhdaya .. 361, 365
The term as explained in Mitakshara .. 365
In Mayukh .. 365
In English translated as unobstructed heritage .. 365, 366
Terms, Apratibandh and sapratibandh explained .. 365
Dayabhag does not recognize any such distinction .. 365
Property howsoever acquired becomes ancestral in the hands of the issue of the acquirer .. 361
Immaterial whether issue was born before or after its acquisition provided it vested in him some time .. 361
Accretions and accumulations to, become ancestral .. 362, 366
Purchase with joint or ancestral funds, and repayment, effect of .. 362
No presumption that property in possession of member of joint family is .. 363
Maternal grandfather's property not .. 361
Gift or devise by ancestor .. 372

Ancestral Trade. See Trading Joint Family.
Distinction between, and ordinary partnership .. 468

Angiras.
Author of a minor smriti .. 32

Anityadwamushyayan—See Adoption.

Antecedent debt—See also Debts, Father, Joint family.
Defined, (S. 158) .. 526
Meaning of "Antecedent debt". 532, 534
Four senses of .. 535
Not only anterior but also independent .. 534
Father's power to sell property for .. 531
Antecedence must be proved by the creditor .. 557
Not antecedent .. 536

Anumati patra.—See "Authority to adopt."

Anwadheya—See also Stridhan.
What is .. 1143
Succession to .. 1157

Aparark.
Commentator on Yadnavalkya. 72

PAGE.

Apastamb.
Age and authority of .. 22
Compared with Gautam and Baudhayan. 22, 24, 25

Apostacy—See Conversion.
Effect of .. 84
(i) Persons protected .. 84
(ii) Rights protected .. 85
(iii) Rights lost .. 86

Appointment—See Power.

Aryan Institutions.
Genesis of 1
Common to all sections of the Indo-European race .. 1
Still found in China and Japan .. 1

Arya Samajis.
Governed by Hindu Law .. 60

Ascetic (s).
Who are .. 61, 62
Law governing succession to. 988, 1018

Asur—See Marriage (Different kinds of)

Atri.
Author of minor Smriti. 32, 33, 35

Attachment.
Of undivided share in joint family property .. 419, 420
Before judgment creates a charge .. 498
Not effective to create severance .. 646
Of woman's estate, when allowed .. 1047

Attestation.
Effect of, if estoppel .. 513
Knowledge of contents not imputed for .. 514
By reversioner to sale by widow, if proof of consent .. 1077

Auras—See Legitimate son, Son, etc.

Authority to adopt.
General authority .. 194
Form of (S. 42) .. 193
Construction of authority (S. 43) .. 194, 196
Liberal and reasonable construction of (S. 43). 196, 197, 199, 201
Can be conferred only on wife or widow .. 196, 197
Widow must obey strictly (S. 41) .. 192
Special limitation on, who can make .. 195
May contain provision over consent .. 199

PAGE.

Authority to adopt—(contd.)
When becomes spent .. 198
Effect of death of one widow having joint authority with another .. 199
To adopt a persona designata. 199
Limited authority .. 200
Illegal authority .. 200, 201
Vague authority .. 201
Abuse of .. 202
Revocation of .. 202
Presumption of revocation .. 203
Hindu Wills Act, effect of .. 201
Proof of .. 202

Award.
Directing partition effects partition .. 595, 597

B

Babuana grant.
Reversion to grantor .. 346

Bachelor.
Adoption by, valid .. 173

Balam Bhatta.
Author of Vaijayanti and Balam Bhatta Tika .. 71

Bandhu (s).—See Inheritance and Succession.

Bankruptcy.
Right of receiver in .. 546

Baudhayan.
Relative age of .. 22
Exclusion of women from inheritance .. 23
Texts on the subject of inheritance .. 23

Benami transactions.
Defined (S. 218) .. 726
Practice common in India.. 726
Real owner entitled to benefit. 726
Principal ways of creation of. 727
Origin of the practice .. 727
Effect of Benami transaction. 727
Effect of difference between English and Hindu Law .. 728
Benamidar a trustee for real owner .. 728
Legality of (S. 220) .. 728
When benami transfer is illegal (S. 220) .. 728
Distinct from fraudulent transaction .. 727, 730
In England .. 727
Presumptions in favour of (S. 221) .. 729, 733
Purchase in name of wife presumed to be. 441, 728, 729

PAGE.

Benami transactions—(contd.)
Exception in favour of wife or child under English Law not allowed in India. 441, 728, 729
Possession with real owner.. 732
Evidence of benami .. 730
Source of consideration important. 730, 731, 732
Relationship between the parties .. 732
Purchase for trustee of trust property, void .. 733
Purchase by father in the son's name .. 733
In auction purchase .. 731
Exception where fraud or illegality has been committed.. 731

Benares school.
Authorities in .. 68, 70
Adoption by widow in .. 179, 182

Benefit.
Of two kinds (S. 116) .. 382
Spritual benefit defined (S. 117) .. 383
Secular benefit defined (S. 119) .. 394
Spritual benefit distinguished from spiritual necessity .. 386
Dowry to the daughter .. 386
Gift of land meritorious .. 387
Benefit of minor .. 387
In cases of alienations of female heir .. 387
What is .. 383, 397
Distinguished from necessity. 384, 395
Alienations for, by heiress. 1027, 1050

Beneficiaries.—See Religious and Charitable Endowments (Beneficiary).

Bengal school.—See Hindu Law. Succession, etc.
Dayabhag of Jimut Vahan supreme in .. 37
Authorities in .. 69
Adoption by widow .. 179, 180
Father's right of alienation. 566
Son's right of partition .. 566
Rules of inheritance .. 989, 1019
How it differs from Mitakshara .. 989

Betrothal.
Defined .. 109
A stage in Hindu Marriage but distinguished from marriage .. 109
Is subject to ordinary civil law of contracts .. 112
Marriage may be terminated after, but before marriage.. 113

PAGE.

Bhadrabahu Samhita.
Digest of the laws of the Jains .. 264

Blindness.
Congenital, if a bar to adoption .. 171
When a ground of exclusion from inheritance .. 991, 993
No longer ground of exclusion in Mitakshara .. 909, 992

Bombay school.
Mayukh, authority of .. 38, 70
Authorities in .. 70
Adoption of married man, valid .. 220
Status of the son of such adoptee .. 220
Adoption by widow .. 191, 192
Succession of females as gotraj sapindas .. 980, 981
Stridhan, law as to, more liberal in. 1132, 1144

Brahma—See Marriage.

Brahminism.
Influence of, on the development of Hindu Law .. 19, 20
Later in origin than Hindu Law .. 19
Retarding influence of .. 19

Brahmo (s).
Governed by Hindu Law .. 60

Brihaspati.
Age of .. 29, 30
Smriti of .. 29, 30

Brother—See also Coparcenary. Joint family, Inheritance, Succession, etc.
Right to give in marriage.. 117
Adoption of, where valid and where invalid. 216, 217, 223, 224, 225

See Eligibility for adoption.
Right to give in adoption .. 215
Right of inheritance .. 945
In case of half blood .. 945, 946
Liability for debts of brother. 894
If entitled to maintenance.. 323
Position as heir under Dayabhag .. 1012
Succession to stridhan of maiden sister (S. 368). 1146, 1147
Stridhan of sister, right to inherit .. 1154
Sulka, right to (S. 371) .. 1156

Brother's daughter.
Bandhu in Bombay .. 961, 980
Bandhu in Madras. 961, 982, 984

PAGE.

Brother's daughter's son.
Position as an heir .. 973
Position under Mitakshara .. 973
Position under Dayabhag. 1002, 1016
Adoption of, valid in the Punjab and South India. 224, 225

Brother's son.
Heir to his uncle .. 946, 947
Affected by half blood restriction .. 947
Preferred to grandson of another brother .. 947
Inheritance per capita .. 948
Position of, among heirs, in Mitakshara .. 946, 947
Position of, among heirs, in Mayukh .. 947

Brother's son's son.
Position as an heir .. 948
If half blood distinction applicable .. 948
Position as an heir in Dayabhag .. 1014

Brother's son's widow.
Heir in Bombay .. 980

Brother's widow.
Right of inheritance in Bombay .. 980

Buddhist (s).
Whether they could be classed as Hindus .. 68

Burden of proof.
Custom, of .. 100
Adoption, of .. 236, 253
Ancestral property, of .. 363
Coparcener must prove self-acquisition .. 437
Ancestral property whether, in the hands of coparcener .. 363
In suit by or against mortgagee, from a manager, on manager .. 517
In a suit against a coparcener to recover a debt or to enforce an alienation by the manager, on creditor, to show the binding nature of debt or alienation .. 516, 517
In a suit by a coparcener to recover coparcenary property from a purchaser from the manager, on the coparcener .. 516, 517
In coparcener's suit against auction-purchaser from manager, on coparcener .. 517, 518

C

Caste—See also Custom, Marriage.
Evolution of .. 14, 15

PAGE.

Caste—(contd.)
Origin and history of .. 14
How tribes are transformed into .. 63
Four principal castes .. 14, 55
Caste autonomy .. 52
Leading principles of, with reference to caste autonomy and jurisdiction of Courts .. 52
Shudras, position of .. 56
Determination of, tests for .. 57
Loss of, effect of .. 83
Relief given by statute .. 83, 84
No forfeiture of rights or property and right of inheritance not affected or imparted by loss of .. 83, 86
Loss of caste of husband or wife, effect on marriage .. 140, 143
Inter-sub-caste marriage valid. 137
Identity of caste necessary for adoption. 215, 216, 218
Loss of, of son natural or adopted if removes bar to second adoption .. 86
Loss of, whether bars right to adopt .. 168
Loss of caste of guardian effect of (S. 76) .. 284-287
Loss of, no forfeiture of right to maintenance, (S. 101) .. 336
Exclusion from inheritance on account of being outcaste .. 995

Caste Disabilities Removal Act.
Modification of Hindu Law by. 83-86, 995
Effect of (S. 5) .. 93

Central Provinces.
Authorities in .. 70, 71

Ceremonies for Adoption and Marriage.—See Marriage and Adoption.
Marriage customs. (See Mariage).

Certified guardian.
Who is .. 307, 309

Charge—See Maintenance.

Charitable Endowments—See Charity, Religious and Charitable Endowments.

Charitable and Religious Trusts Act.
Scope of .. 876

Charitable purposes.
What are, in law .. 818, 819
Bequest to poor relation dependants and servants .. 815
Bequest to, when valid .. 818, 819
Subject of charity must be certain .. 813, 817
Bequest to, when void .. 817
Alienation by manager for .. 465
Alienation by widow for .. 1055

PAGE.

Charity.
Father's right on partition to make provision for .. 653, 654
Cy pres, application of .. 814
Gift to, by father or manager. 466
Gift or bequest to, what is .. 814
Gift void for vagueness .. 817
Subject of, must be certain .. 813
Object of, in India .. 815
Object in English Law .. 815

Children.—See Legitimate children.
Defined .. 160
Legitimacy of, presumption of. 161, 162
Maintenance of, whether legitimate or illegitimate .. 163, 164
Amount of maintenance .. 164

Christianity.
Hindu Converts to, Hindu Law how far applicable .. 65
Converts to, and the Succession Act .. 65

"Civil Nature."
Meaning of the term .. 52

Cognates—See Bandhus, Inheritance, Succession.

Codicil.—See Will.
Codicil defined (S. 235) .. 753
What is .. 756

Co-heir (s).
Inheriting a male, take as joint tenants with survivorship inter se .. 891
Inheriting stridhan, take as tenants-in-common .. 1151

Commentaries.
On Manu .. 34
On Yadnavalkya .. 34
Mitakshara .. 34
Sources of Hindu Law .. 48, 49
Authority of, in the Hindu system of law .. 48, 49
Duty of Judge to inquire whether doctrine received by particular school and sanctioned by usage .. 50
Whether they necessarily exclude the Smritis .. 50, 51
In Mithila. 39, 68, 71, 72
Western India .. 68, 70
Bengal school .. 68, 69
Southern India .. 39, 68, 72
United and Central Provinces .. 70
Punjab .. 73
Special treatises on adoption. 73

Committee.
Appointment of, under Religious Endowments Act .. 876
Suit against, for misfeasance etc. .. 876

PAGE.

Compensation.
Right of purchaser from limited owner, when sale set aside .. 442, 461
For improvements by coparceners on partition .. 655

Compromise.
Power of guardian to .. 294
Power of manager of joint family .. 454
Partial partition by .. 612
Made by manager of religious endowment, effect of .. 858
Probate cannot legally be disposed of by .. 801
Absolute estate for woman by. 1032
A compromise decree by heiress, reversioners how far bound by .. 1117
Out of court by heiress, reversioners how far bound by 1117
By heiress, must be bona fide to be valid .. 1117

Concubine.
Concubinage was common in Vedic India .. 324
The general principles of maintenance applicable to widow apply to .. 333
Right to maintenance .. 324
No legal status and so no rights against paramour.. 324
Texts on the subject .. 324
Right to maintenance, after the death of the coparcener .. 324
Her rights against paramour's estate in the hands of his heirs .. 324

Condition.
Adoption, condition limiting rights of adoptee .. 231
Against partition .. 643
Gift subject to, validity of. 750
Invalidity of, when estate illegal .. 749
Invalidity of, when estate unknown to Hindu Law.. 749

Confiscation.
And regrant, effect of .. 697
Property regranted, when coparcenary property .. 697

Consent—See also Acquiescence, Estoppel, Woman's estate.
Of co-parceners, if necessary for alienation by manager. 414, 416, 440, 443
Partial partition by .. 412
Alienation by widow, consent of reversioners to .. 1074

PAGE.

Consent—(contd.)

Historical retrospect .. 1075
Consent binds representatives. 1073, 1076
Meaning of (S. 346). 1076, 1077
Consent and ratification .. 1077
Must be intelligent .. 1078
Value of recitals in proving. 1079
Bona fide, must be .. 1080
Of next reversioner does not validate gift by heiress .. 1080
But acts as estoppel on consenting reversioner .. 1082

Construction.—See also Deed, Gift, Will, etc.

Of authority to adopt .. 194, 196
Of maintenance grants .. 346
Of deeds (S. 244) .. 774, 776
Of gifts and devises where donee is a female (S. 245). 776, 777
Of Wills (S. 250) .. 782, 783

Conversion.

Caste Disabilities Removal Act and its effects (S. 5). 93
Mahomedanism, convert to, how far can retain Hindu Law. 64, 65, 80, 83
Christianity, law applicable to converts to (S. 4) .. 79, 82
Difference in application of Hindu Law between Mohammedan and Christian converts. 80
Reconversion to Hinduism, status on .. 66, 67
If after, to Hinduism, whether family customs could be retained .. 67
To Hinduism, if possible .. 66
Direct conversion by Aryasamajis and other reforming societies .. 66
Of husband .. 143
Marriage not dissolved by. 142, 143
Whether conversion to Christianity or Mahomedanism bars right of adoption .. 172
Right of convert to give son in adoption .. 213
Of Jains to Vaishnavism .. 265
Of father, effect of, on guardianship .. 284, 287
Of minor, right to guardianship .. 286
Of mother, effect of, on guardianship .. 286
How far co-parcenary severed by .. 405, 408
And forfeiture of rights of property. 83, 85, 86, 405, 408
To alien faith, how far effects partition .. 408, 626

Coparcenary (Mitakshara).

Defined (S. 121) .. 398

PAGE.

Co-parcenary (Mitakshara)—(contd.)

Narrower body than the joint family .. 398
Comprises male descendants upto three degrees .. 398, 399
Females excluded .. 401
Right of sons by birth in property .. 361, 565
The principle of, coordinate with the gift of funeral cakes .. 399
Illegitimate son of Shudra is a member of .. 401
Coparcenary of several families .. 400
Limits of .. 402
No coparcenary by contract possible (S. 122) .. 402
Disqualifications for (S. 123). 403
Loss of, when, (S. 124) .. 404, 406
Incidents of coparcenary right (S. 125) .. 409, 412

Coparcenary (Dayabhag)

Similar to Mitakshara with certain exceptions (S. 171) 567
Coparcener can alien his interest. 414, 418, 567
Disqualifications for .. 403
No survivorship between coparceners .. 890
See Joint family (Dayabhag). Mitakshara.

Co-parcenary Property.—See Joint Family. (Joint Family Property.)

Right of sons by birth in Mitakshara. 361, 365
Dayabhag Law different .. 361, 565
Unobstructed heritage .. 365
Gift or devise by father etc. 372
Property thrown into the common stock .. 367
How far impartible estate is. 371, 703
Accretions to .. 366
Management of. See Joint Family—Manager.
Income of, application of .. 448, 449
Alienation of, by father. See Father, Son.
Alienation of, by manager. See Joint Family—Manager.
Alienation of, on other coparceners (S. 126) .. 418, 420
Gifts of, by father or manager (S. 136) .. 463, 467
Not allowed for an illegal purpose .. 464
Only such as are usual or customary .. 464
Even of immoveable property allowed .. 464
Gifts by co-parceners other than manager how far valid .. 465

PAGE.

Co-parcenary Property—(Contd.)

Quantum of gift by manager of .. 466
Where gift set aside .. 467
Limit of his power to make gifts .. 467
Setting aside unauthorised alienation of .. 415, 420
Execution sale of, undivided share of co-parcener .. 418, 420
Transfer with consent of other co-parceners. 414, 415, 440
Cancellation of alienation of, 414, 415, 420
Co-parcener's right of transfer in different provinces compared .. 415, 418
Present law of alienation by a co-parcener of .. 418
Right of co-parceners to partition .. 600, 602
Devolution of, by survivorship. 886, 890, 891
When devolves on heirs .. 890, 891

Co-parcener (s).—See Joint Family; Legal necessity; Maintenance; Partition; Survivorship.
Defined (S. 121) .. 398
A male within three degrees. 398, 399
Females excluded .. 401
Illegitimate son of a shudra can be .. 401
No coparcener .. 402
Who are disqualified .. 403
Disqualification personal only. 403, 404
But affects wife and adopted son .. 403, 404
When loses his right in co-parcenary (S. 124) .. 404
By his adoption. 404, 405, 406
By withdrawal .. 404, 406
By alienation of his property. 404-406
By attachment and sale of his interest in execution of a decree against him personally .. 404
By relinquishment or surrender 404-406
By extinction of his interest by adverse possession .. 404,407
By voluntary retirement from the world .. 404, 407
By doing an inconsistent act. 405, 407
By being an outcast .. 405,408
By marrying under Special Marriage Act .. 405, 408

Rights of, in co-parcenary (S. 125)
Of joint possession and enjoyment .. 409, 410
Building on common land .. 410, 411

PAGE.

Co-parcener (s).—(contd.)

Rights of, in co-parcenary—(contd.)
Of maintenance .. 412
(See Maintenance).
Of restraining improper acts, 409, 413
Of impeaching an alienation .. 413
Of alienation.
(See Alienation).
Of acquiring separate property .. 414
Can receive no share of profits .. 409, 413
His interest variable .. 413

Alienation of Coparcener's share (S. 126) .. 414
Gift by coparcener when allowed .. 465
A sole surviving coparcener may alienate or devise his interest .. 414
Alienation with consent of coparceners including minors. 414, 415, 440, 441
Surrender when .. 414
Right of alienation in different schools .. 415, 418
Coparcener when can arrogate powers of manager 415, 418
Involuntary transfers, valid in all schools .. 415
Who may sue to cancel an alienation .. 415, 420
Who may challenge validity of 440-442

Rights of coparcener's alienee. (S. 127) 421-426
Alienee when becomes entitled to right, title and interest. 421-425
Right of general partition where, 421, 422, 423
Right of specific performance or damages when .. 421
Effect of attachment before or after decree .. 421, 425

Co-parcener's liability for manager's debts and alienations. (S. 133) .. 458, 459
Decree against manager when enforceable against coparcener (S. 156) .. 519

See Joint family (Manager.)

Father's powers to bind son's interest ..
See Father, Son.
Marriage expenses of, a legal necessity .. 388, 391
Rights of account, right to, in what cases .. 444, 448
Parties to suits (S. 157) .. 523
Decree against manager, binding on (S. 156) .. 519

PAGE.

Co-parcener (s).—(contd.)
Partition, right to (S. 180) .. 600, 604
No such right in Malabar .. 409
Take by survivorship in Mitakshara .. 886, 887
No right of survivorship among, under Dayabhag Law .. 886, 890
Dayabhag law, different .. 890
Not liable for the debts of deceased coparcener .. 498
Exception in the case of the son explained .. 498
Exception where the debt binds the estate .. 498
Exception where debt secured by decree followed or preceded by attachment .. 498
Onus of proof in certain suits by or against a coparcener (Ss. 153-154). 516, 517, 518
Sale of coparcenary property not presumed to pass interest of co-parcener (S. 165). 518
Joint gift to, whether creates joint tenancy or tenancy in common. (S. 248) .. 778
And conversion .. 408
Converted, may elect to follow old law .. 408
But rights of unconverted members safeguarded .. 408
In a suit by, to recover property sold in execution of decree against manager, must prove that the date, sale or mortgage was not binding on him .. 517
In a sale of co-parcenary property in execution of a decree against the manager, co-parcener's interest is not presumed to pass .. 517

Cost (s).
Of litigation, a family necessity .. 393
Litigation must be for benefit of estate .. 393
Suits to protect and those to recover an estate, distinction between .. 393
Of defending members, a family necessity .. 393
Partition suit, provision for .. 648
Up to preliminary decree, in suit for partition .. 671

Court (s).
Decisions of, a source of law. 43, 51
Stare Decisis .. 51
Limits of jurisdiction of, about questions of caste .. 52

PAGE.

Court (s).—(contd.)
Disobedience to orders of, in cases of restitution of conjugal rights .. 147
Discretion of, in awarding maintenance .. 336, 339
Duty of , in considering in modifying amount of maintenance .. 339, 341
Inherent right of, to administer special equity in partition .. 655, 656
Obligatory on, to pass final decree in a partition suit without application of parties. 672
Power of, to appoint trustee for religious and charitable endowment .. 838
Rules binding on, in making such appointment .. 838

Court of Wards.
Age of majority for a person under .. 278
Sale by .. 1065
Powers of alienation .. 1065

Co-widow.
Limitations of her estate. 1033, 1034
Right to claim partition against each others. (S. 181). 606, 1033, 1034
Only for separate possession and enjoyment .. 606
Partition does not prejudice reversioners or right of survivorship unless by agreement .. 604, 605
Assignee from co-widow .. 606
How far affected by decrees for or against one widow even though she opposed the suit .. 1115
Right of survivorship inter se in husband's inheritance .. 891

Co-wife.
Heir to Stridhan, Mayukh .. 1133
Heir to Stridhan of issueless co-wife .. 1154

Creditor.
Defined .. 489
Explained .. 491
His title .. 512
Must enquire before lending. 512
Nature and extent of enquiry. 513
Notice to, when presumed .. 513
In a suit against co-parcener bound to prove that the debt or alienation is binding on the co-parcener. (S. 153) .. 516
If a mortgagee, must prove the binding nature of the mortgage .. 517

PAGE.

Creditor.—(contd.)
In a suit to enforce a mortgage, who are proper parties. (S. 157). .. 523
See Debt.

Crown.
Right of, as ultimus hares 985, 986
Right to restrain act of heiress. 986, 1106
Right of, vested in Secretary of State .. 986

Cruelty—See also Restitution of Conjugal Rights.
Defence to suit for restitution of conjugal rights .. 146, 150
By husband .. 148
Criterion of lagal cruelty .. 148, 149
Instances of cruelty from judicial decisions .. 148, 149

Custom.
General.
Recognition of, by legislation. 44
A universal custom soon becomes statute law .. 89
"General custom as distinct from law" explained .. 89
Source of Hindu Law .. 43, 48
Distinguished from law .. 44
Distinguished from usage .. 88, 89
Recognition of, in Hindu Law .. 43, 44
Definition of (S. 7) .. 88
Recognition of, by courts .. 88
Recognition of, in other systems of law .. 88

Nature of (S. 8).
Universal custom .. 89
General custom .. 89
Local custom .. 89
Tribal custom .. 89, 90
Family custom .. 89, 90
Strongest proof necessary for family customs .. 90

Elements of valid custom.
Agreement, custom originating, invalid .. 93
Cannot override statute law. 90
It must be ancient .. 90, 91
Origin within living memory not ancient .. 92
Proof necessary for presumption of antiquity .. 92
Antiquity, proof necessary under English Law .. 92
Must be certain .. 94
As to its nature .. 94
As to locality .. 94
As to the people .. 95
Must be compulsory .. 95
Payment of fees effect of .. 95
Must be consistent .. 92

PAGE.

Custom.—(contd.)
Elements of valid custom.—(contd.)
Must be peaceable .. 95
It must be uniform .. 92, 93
Effect of discontinuance of, whether accidental or intentional .. 93
Difference between interruption of enjoyment .. 93

Invalid custom. (S. 10).
Illegal .. 97
Immoral .. 97
Unreasonable .. 98
Opposed to public policy .. 99

Pleading and proof (S. 11).
General custom .. 99
Plea of custom must be fully proved .. 100
Proof of custom .. 100-102
Question of, mixed question of law and fact .. 101
Degree of proof .. 101
Quantum of evidence .. 101
Difference, slight and wide departure from normal law. 102
Strongest proof necessary for family custom .. 102
Numerous instances if necessary .. 101
If necessary to be proved up to date .. 102
Impartibility of estates .. 694, 697
Entry in Wajib-ul-arz .. 695
Practice of primogeniture for four or five generations .. 695
Onus of proof .. 100

Evidence of custom (S. 12).
Acts and conduct .. 106
Admissions and estoppel .. 105
Entries in public record .. 102, 103
Judgments of Courts .. 103
Opinions .. 102, 105
Published works of repute .. 103
Transaction recognising custom .. 104
Particular instances .. 104
Of general custom .. 106
Of local custom .. 106
Of communal custom .. 106

Customary Rules.
Adoptions .. 264-277
Marriage .. 119-125
Divorce. 128, 140, 141
Re-marriage of widows .. 129
Impartibility .. 693, 698
Inalienability .. 701, 702
Primogeniture .. 715-717
Religious endowments .. 842, 843
Cutchi Memons .. 55
Jains .. 59

PAGE.

Customary Rules.—(contd.)
Khojas .. 64
Sikhs .. 48, 59

Cutchi Memons.
Applicability of Hindu Law of inheritance to .. 65
Rules applicable to Hindu family firms apply to .. 477

Cypres.
Doctorine of (S. 262) .. 813
Principle of the doctrine .. 813
Applicable to religious and charitable bequests only. 814
Rule when applied .. 814
Legacy to be applied to objects akin or to the locality intended by the testator .. 813

D

Daiva.
Ancient form of marriage ... 186

Damdupat.
Rule of (S. 148) ... 503, 504
History of the rule ... 504
Text of Manu ... 504
Extent and scope of the rule ... 505
Not applicable where creditor liable to account ... 505
Only applies to Hindu debtor... 505
Whether affected by the Transfer of Propery Act ... 504

Dancing girls.
Are subject to Hindu law ... 63
Adoption of daughters among. 271, 272
Allowed by Madras High Court only when it is not for immoral purpose ... 273, 274
Succession to stridhan of. 1167, 1168
Rights of children. 1166-1168
Right of other blood relations. 1168

Dasi putra. See Illegitimacy; Illegitimate children; Illegitimate son.
Who is a .. 930
Rights of .. 931
His share in his putative father's inheritance .. 931
Competition with other heirs. 932
No inheritance to collaterals. 933
Competition with an adopted son .. 934
Dasi putra held obsolete in Dayabhaga since the abolition of slavery .. 1009

Dattak.—See Adoption.
Son by adoption ... 160
Datta Homa.—See Adoption—Essential ceremonies.

PAGE.

Dattak Chandrika.
Authorship and age of ... 39
Authority of, on law of adoption ... 39, 73
Authority in Bengal ... 69
Authority in South India ... 73

Dattak Mimamsa.
Authorship and age of ... 39
Authority on adoption ... 39, 73
Authority of, in Bengal ... 69

Daughter.
Marriage expenses of, 391, 392, 652, 654
Adoption of ... 273, 274
Conflict of views ... 271
Right to partition against each other ... 606, 607
Only for separate possession and enjoyment ... 607
Partition does not prejudice reversioners or right of survivorship ... 606, 607
Gift to ... 777
Right of survivorship among, inheriting from father ... 891, 892
Exception in Maharashtra ... 891, 892
Maintenance of ... 322
Illegitimate daughter, if entitled to maintenance ... 322
Rights of inheritance ... 938-941
Her Statutory rights ... 938
Her rights under Mitakshara ... 938, 940
Her rights under Dayabhag. 1010, 1011
Texts on the subject. 1010, 1011
Illegitimate, rights of inheritance ... 940
Competition with illegitimate son of Shudra ... 932
Unchastity how far a bar to inheritance. 940, 1011
Limited estate ... 939
Exception in Bombay ... 939
Exclusion of, by custom ... 940
Stridhan of, right to. 1148, 1149
Limited estate in inherited stridhan ... 1024
Takes as absolute heiress in Bombay ... 1032

Daughter-in-law.
Her Statutory rights of inheritance ... 938

Daughter's daughter.
A Statutory heir ... 949
Bandhu in Madras and Bombay ... 982, 984

Daughter's son.
Adoption of ... 222, 223

PAGE.

Daughter's son.—(contd.)

Position as heir. 941, 943, 1011
Takes as full owner ... 942, 943
Survivorship among ... 941, 943
Two or more, take per capita ... 942

Daughter's son's son.

Bandhu in Mitakshara ... 973

Dayabhag.

Age and authorship of ... 37
Fragment of a larger work "Dharmaratna" of Jimut Vahan ... 37
Principal work of authority in Bengal ... 68, 69

Dayabhag School.

Differences between, and Mitakshara ... 358
Re joint family ... 358
Re Inheritance ... 896, 900

Dayatatwa.

Authorship of ... 69
Extent of its authority in Bengal ... 69

Dayakram Sangraha.

Age and authorship of ... 69
Authority of, in Bengal ... 69

Daya Vibhag.

Age and authorship of ... 39

Deafness.

Ground for exclusion from inheritance ... 991, 993

Debt (s)—

Defined (S. 145) ... 488
Explained ... 490, 491
Liability of personal debts (S. 146) ... 492
Liability of heirs ... 493
Heir not bound to pay debts which were illegal, immoral or otherwise. 492, 495, 496
Son's liability limited by assets ... 492
Universal donee liable to pay all debts of the donor ... 492, 501
Coparcener's debts ... 492, 497
Non-liability of other coparceners ... 498
Father's debts ... 499
Father's illegal and immoral debts ... 499
Position of the assignee from the father ... 500
Limitation for suit against the son ... 501

PAGE.

Debt (s)—(contd.)

Debts of husband and wife (S. 147) ... 503
Widow's pious obligation to pay husband's debts ... 509
Heir of impartible estate liable to pay debts of his predecessor ... 492

Joint family debts and alienations (Ch. X).

Manager's debts binding on the family if for necessity or benefit of the family ... 507, 508
Other member's debts binding on the family if incurred under similar circumstances ... 507, 508
Necessity when deemed to exist (S. 150) ... 510
Joint family debt payable out of joint family property only ... 506, 509
Manager whether can revive barred debt ... 508

Illegal and immoral debts (S. 158).

Texts relating to ... 537
Enumeration of ... 538
Must be wholly void ... 539
Immoral debts ... 542
Son whether liable for father's barred debts ... 543, 544
Imprudent or reckless debts not immoral ... 550
Father's suretyship whether immoral ... 550

Antecedent debt, (S. 158). See Antecedent Debt.

Defined (S. 158) ... 526

(See Joint family, Husband and wife, Damdupat, Co-parcener, Joint family, Father, Son.)

Debutter.

Property, what is ... 804, 806

Decree.—See Father, Son.

Against father ... 561
Pre-emptive, not a debt under Hindu Law ... 491
Partition decree, provisions in ... 951, 952
Preliminary, in partition suit ... 670
Effect of, shares not altered by subsequent events ... 670, 671
Final decree in partition suit ... 672
Restitution of conjugal rights, form of ... 147
Against manager of joint family ... 519-523

PAGE.

Decree.—(contd.)
Against manager, minor when bound ... 456, 457
Against manager of charitable endowment ... 847
Against minor, validity of ... 315, 317
For maintenance, what it should contain ... 352, 353
For maintenance, without charge, on property, nature of ... 353
For maintenance, with charge on property nature of ... 353
Against limited owner or heiress when binds reversion. 1112-1120
Personal, against heiress not binding on reversioners. 1120, 1121

Dedication.
What constitutes ... 805, 806
Partial ... 809
Absolute ... 812

De facto guardian.—See Minority and Guardianship.

Degradation.—See Caste.
Effect of, on right to succession. 83, 86, 955

Degraded women.—See Woman, Prostitute.

Desertion.—See Restitution of Conjugal Rights.

Devanand Bhatt.
Author of Smriti Chandrika ... 39

Devise.—See Will.

Divesting of Estate.
An estate once vested cannot be divested by subsequent events, (S. 299) ... 905
Exception to above rule ... 905, 906

Dharm.
Bequest for, void ... 817

Dharma Shastras.
Sources of Hindu Law ... 48

Digests.
Anglo-Indian ... 41, 42
Colebrooke's Digest ... 41
Of Sir Thomas Strange ... 42
Of Sir W. Macnaughten ... 42

Disqualified heirs—See Exclusion from Inheritance and Partition.

Divorce—See Marriage, (Divorce and Judicial Separation.)

Domicile.
"Domicile of origin" meaning of the phrase ... 75

PAGE.

Domicile.—(contd.)
What is "law of origin" ... 75
Hindu Law, not affected by change of (S. 3) ... 75, 78
On migration option to adopt the law of new domicile ... 75
Migrating family, law applicable to ... 77, 78
Jains no exception to the rule ... 79
Lex Loci how far in Hindu Law ... 75

Donatio mortis causa.
Recognition of, in Hindu law ... 751, 779
Difference between English and Indian Law ... 779

Donee.—See also Gift.
Acceptance by, if essential ... 748
Possession, delivery of, to ... 748
Idol, if can be ... 748
Unborn person, if can be ... 748, 749
Statutory modification of the rule ... 748, 749
Sex of, immaterial in determining quantum of interest ... 749
Of power, if existence of, necessary at the death of testator. 735
Exercise of power discretionary with ... 734
Universal donee ... 492, 501
Liability of, for debts of donor ... 501

Dravid School.—See Adoption.
Authorities in 72
Adoption by widow (S. 39) ... 186-190
Dravid rule of succession to Sulk different ... 1157

Dumbness.
Ground for exclusion from inheritance ... 991, 993

Dwamushyayan Adoption.—See Adoption.

Dwaita Parishisht.
Authorship of ... 72
Mithila authority ... 72

E

Easement.
Form of property ... 740

East India Company.
Law under ... 41

Eldest son.
Adoption of, valid ... 230

PAGE.

Emigration.

Effect of, of Hindus to any place outside India ... 77
Effect of, of Hindus to other provinces in India (S. 3) ... 73, 74
Effect of, in case of Non-Hindus to other provinces in India ... 87
Effect of, in case of Non-Hindu to places outside India ... 87

Equity.

On setting aside of alienation by heiress. 1082, 1083
On setting aside manager's or father's alienation for partial necessity. 135, 461, 462

Escheat.—See Crown.

Right accrues on proof of absence of heirs ... 986
Crown's right ... 985
Right of Crown, to Brahmin's estate ... 985
Crown may set aside alienations ... 986
Estate taken subject to proper charges ... 985

Estoppel.

Adoption by ... 243
Limits of the rule ... 245
Adoption in cases of fraud, misrepresentation ... 247
Plea of, not allowed in cases of adoption being invalid on account of public policy ... 249
Acquiescence when amounts to ... 244, 245
Attestation, effect of, ... 513, 514
Knowledge of contents not imputed for attestation ... 513, 514
Alienation by widow, reversioner's consent to. 1074, 1075
Of reversioners. 1077, 1078, 1080, 1091, 1092

Eunuch.

Competency to marry ...114, 137
Adoption right of ... 176

Exclusion from Inheritance and Partition.

Mitakshara law as to, modified by statute, (S. 304) ... 909, 992
Textual disqualifications removed, (S. 304) ... 909
Congenital lunacy and idiocy, the only grounds for, under Mitakshara ... 909, 992
Textual grounds still applied in the Dayabhaga Law (S. 332) ... 993
Texts on the subject ... 992

PAGE.

Exclusion from Inheritance and Partition.—(contd.)

Variation of rules, by place or custom ... 993
Original object of, non-existent at the present day ... 993

Textual Exclusion.

Lunacy or idiocy. 909, 991, 994
Blindness ... 991, 993
Deafness ... 991, 993
Dumbness ... 991, 993
The above defects must be congenital ... 991, 993
Madness ... 994
Sanious or ulcerous leprosy ... 994
Permanent loss of limb or sense ... 994
Impotency ... 995
The above grounds must exist when the succession opens. 995
Other incurable diseases ... 995
Outcast, disqualification under the texts now remoed by the Caste Disabilities Act ... 995
Disqualification of a person when disqualifies his widow and adopted son ... 996
Disqualification personal only and does not extend to the issue of disqualified person ... 914
Effect of exclusion upon inheritance ... 914
Next heir of the deceased succeeds (S. 307) ... 914
Maintenance of disqualified persons (S. 308) ... 915
Murderous and inimical heir excluded (S. 303) ... 908
Females excluded unless enumerated by special texts (S. 305) ... 911
Barrenness how far a disqualification ... 912
Unchastity of widow a ground for exclusion both under Mitakshara and Dayabhaga.. 912, 913
Unchastity a ground for, in respect of all females in Dayabhag ... 1011
Re-marriage whether unchastity ... 1011
Re-marriage a ground for forfeiture of inheritance ... 936, 937
Ascetics how far excluded. 988, 1018
Illegitimacy is a ground of, when, (S. 302) ... 907
See "Illegitimacy"

Execution Sale.

Decree against father (S.166). 561
Son's interest when passes ... 561
But does not pass when simple money decree ... 522

PAGE.

Execution Sale.—(contd.)
Decree against manager of joint family ... 519, 523
What passes under such sale ... 519-520
Meaning of right, title and interest ... 562
Pleadings to be examined ... 620
Decree against manager of endowment ... 847
Decree against heiress how far binds reversioner's rights ... 1115
Involuntary transfer of coparcenary property ... 419, 420

Executor.
Position of, under a Hindu Will ... 802
His title to property ... 802
Title from will and not from probate ... 802
Property vests, in, under a Hindu will ... 802
English Law ... 802
Powers of, three stand points ... 802
Woman, statutory rights of alienation not limited by personal rights. 1044, 1045

Exogamy.
Practice of and its advantages in primitive society ... 1, 2
Rules as to, in Hindu Law (S. 23). 130, 131, 135

F

Factum valet.
Doctrine of, cures mere irregularities and not substantial ones ... 230, 231
Application of, to marriages ... 126, 127, 137
Children of Mahomedan by marriage with Hindu held legitimate by ... 126, 127
Asur form of marriage treated as valid on the ground of ... 112
Adoption, scope of the rule (S. 54) ... 230
Adoption, limits of its application ... 230
See Adoption (factum valet.)

Family Arrangement (s)—(Ss. 173-176).
Definition of (S. 173) ... 571
What it means ... 570
Based on equity ... 571
Distinguished from partition ... 644
Distinguished from compromise ... 572
Form of (S. 174) ... 575
Registration, if necessary ... 576

PAGE.

Family Arrangement (s).—(contd.)
When may or may not be set aside (S. 175).
Fraud: Misrepensation ... 578
Mistake ... 579
Being illegal ... 579
Whether can be, if without consideration ... 576, 578
Whether can be, if property transferred to a person without any right ... 576, 580
Whether if unfair arrangement ... 576, 581
Whether for unilateral mistake ... 576, 582
Whether for mistake of law ... 582
Arrangement when set aside ... 582
When acted upon ... 583
Persons bound by (S. 176) ... 583
Stranger's rights ... 584

Family dwelling-house.—See Widow, Residence.

Family Trade.—See Trading Joint Family.

Father.
Partition.
Right to partition without consent of his sons ... 598, 599
Right on partition to make provision for charities ... 654
Maintenance.
Right to maintenance ... 322
Benami Purchase.
Benami purchase in favour of son by, effect of ... 733
Insolvency.
Insolvency of, receiver could not be divested by survivorship of the son ... 546
His right of Adoption.
See Adoption (who can adopt).
His Debts.
Debts of, a legal necessity ... 388, 390
Son's liability to pay debts of, See Son ...
Pious duty of sons to pay ... 528, 552
Son's liability formerly absolute ... 528
Son's liability now limited to assets ... 527, 530
Son's separate property not liable ... 551
Antecedent, what are ... 532, 534
Liability of son's interest for antecedent debts of father. 528, 532, 534, 552
Illegal or immoral debts of, sons not liable. 492, 495, 496, 499
Suretyship of ... 545
Promise by, to pay barred debts, if son liable ... 543
Imprudent debts of ... 550
Limitation for suits to enforce debts of father against sons ... 501, 548

PAGE.

Father—(contd.)
His debts—(contd.)
Son's liability for mesne profits and damages awarded against ... 549
Son's liability if for costs decreed against ... 549
Son's liability to indemnity ... 550
Father's powers larger than that of manager ... 531
Right of alienating son's interest in the coparcenary property (S. 159) ... 526
Right of alienating son's interest in coparcenary ... 526
Son's interest liable to be seized in execution of decree against father for debts not illegal or immoral ... 526
Son's liability during lifetime as well as after death ... 527, 553
Son's liability now limited to assets. 527, 531, 552
If more than one son, all liable to the extent of the assets ... 552
Son's liability ceases after partition, unless partition was made to defeat or delay the creditor of the father ... 554
Divided son liable for a debt after father's death ... 554
During lifetime of, if partition was made to defeat or delay creditors ... 554
Son's share after partition cannot be attached or sold, unless attached before partition or partition was made to defeat or delay creditors ... 554
After born son bound by father's alienation, made prior to his birth, (S. 162) ... 555
Son includes, a grandson, and great grandson, who are equally liable (S. 165) ... 555
Son is liable to pay interest on debts ... 556
Onus of proof in certain suits by or against the son (S. 164) ... 554
Son must prove illegality or immorality of a debt, and the creditor had notice of it ... 557
Son must prove in a suit to recover coparcenary property sold in execution of decree against father that the decree does not bind him and that purchaser had notice of it, (S. 165) ... 560
Decree against, when enforceable against son, (S. 166) ... 561
Sale of coparcenary property not presumed to pass the interest of the son, (S. 167). 562
Protection of bona fide purchaser from, (S. 168) ... 563

PAGE.

Father—(contd.)
Guardianship.
Natural guardian of his children ... 279, 280
Right when lost ... 284
Right decided with reference to propriety .. 284, 287
Conversion, effect of ... 284, 287
Testamentary guardian, appointment of, by ... 305
Can appoint even for unborn children ... 305
Right to custody of children ... 313
Maintenance of children ... 315
Can delegate his authority within limits ... 306
Such authority is revocable ... 306

Marriage.
Duty of, to marry daughters ... 112, 118

Joint family.
Position of father under Mitakshara law ... 358, 359
Position of father under Dayabhag law ... 358, 359
Power over joint family property ... 531
Alienation of joint family property by, when valid ... 526, 531
Son's right to set aside improper alienations by ... 531, 547
Gift or devise of joint family property by ... 463, 464
Larger powers than other Managers ... 464
Decree against father, when binds family ... 520, 521
Right of, to acknowledge barred debts as manager of the family ... 456

Inheritance.
Stridhan of daughter, Mitakshara ... 1147
Position of father as heir under Mitakshara ... 944
Different under Mayukh ... 944
Position of father as heir under Dayabhag ... 1012
To illegitimate children, right of ... 907, 908

Father-in-law.
Consent of, to adoption by widow. 185, 187, 191
Liability of, for maintenance of daughter-in-law ... 323, 327
Liability if he has ancestral property but not from his self-acquisitions ... 323, 327

Father's brother (Uncle).
Adoption of ... 224
Inheritance under Mitakshara ... 951
Postponed after Statutory heirs ... 750, 951

PAGE.

Father's brother (Uncle.)—(contd.)
Difference under Mayukh ... 951
Inheritance under Dayabhag ... 1015
Dayabhag Law unaffected by Statute ... 951

Father's Brother's Daughter's son.
Inheritance of in Mitakshara ... 973
Inheritance of in Dayabhag ... 1016

Father's Brother's son.
Adoption of ... 225
Inheritance under Mitakshara 952
Takes after sister in Bombay ... 982
Position of as heir in Dayabhag ... 1015

Father's Brother's son's son.
Inheritance under Mitakshara ... 952
Takes after the sister in Bombay ... 982
Dayabhag ... 1015

Father's Brother's widow.
Heir in Bombay ... 980, 981

Father's mother.—See Paternal Grandmother.

Father's father.—See Paternal Grandfather.

Father's sister.
Heirship in Bombay ... 981
Rights of inheritance ... 984

Father's sister's son.
Heirship under Mitakshara ... 973
Heirship of, in Dayabhag ... 1015

Fatwai Alamgiri.
Age and authorship of ... 41
Its value to the lawyers ... 41

Female heir—See also Woman's estate.
Incapacity to inherit unless especially allowed by texts ... 911, 912
Texts on the subject ... 911
This disqualification does not affect their children ... 911
Not a new stock of descent except in Bombay ... 903
Religious office, succession to, not prohibited ... 833, 834
Performance of duty by paid male substitute ... 834
Special female heir in Bombay, not based on textual authority but on usage only ... 981
System of kinship through, in Mitakshara ... 961
System of kinship in Bombay. 961, 980
System of kinship in Madras ... 961, 982
System of kinship through, in Dayabhag ... 989, 990
Right to offer pinda under Dayabhag Law. 912, 913, 997, 998

PAGE.

Female heir.—(contd.)
Unchastity, effect of in the case of widow. 912, 913, 936
Unchastity in other heirs ... 912, 913
Difference in case of Stridhan. 913

Force or Fraud.
Marriage, Avoidance of by ... 137, 140
Adoption by, voidable, (S. 40) ... 204, 207
Transfer of property in fraud of maintenance ... 343
Effect of, on wills ... 765-768
Partition, re-opening of, for ... 659
Right lost by acquiescence of ... 660
Of manager of joint family, liability of co-parceners ... 448
Of manager, against co-parceners (S. 137) ... 467
Even father cannot defraud son under guise of pious gift ... 467
Of manager of a trading family ... 475

Funeral expenses.
What are ...1051, 1053
Sale of estate for ... 392
Of husband, a necessity. 1051, 1053
Of Members of a coparcenary. 1051, 1053

G

Gaddinashini.
Custom of ... 694
Necessary incidents of ... 694
Primogeniture compared with. 694

Gains of Learning Act, 1930.
Purpose of the Act ... 380, 381
Effect of ... 380, 381

Gains of science.
What are ... 372-374
Texts on ... 373
Meaning of the word science ... 375
When partible ... 375, 376
When self-acquisition ... 375, 376

Gandharva marriage.
Form of marriage ... 119

Garbhari Gosavis.
Adoption among ... 173, 272

Gautam.
Age ... 20
Sutras of, time of ... 20
Smriti of ... 20
His times ... 20-22

Gayawals.
Adoption among ... 275
Partition of office ... 647

PAGE.

Gens.
History of ... 2
Aryan gens, compared with the "totem" groups of Australia and American Islands ... 2, 3

Ghatwali tenure.
Origin of, as frontier police. 687
Variation of conditions of, in different parts ... 687
Succession by primogeniture ... 687
Succession of women ... 687
Right of resumption ... 687
No succession legal or valid unless confirmed by Zemindar and reported to Government ... 687
Generally impartible and inalienable ... 687

Gift.

General.
Allowed by law ... 745
Nature and scope of ... 745
Compared with grant ... 745
Formalities of (S. 230) ... 748
Writing and registration ... 748
If acceptance by donee necessary ... 748
Possession, delivery of ... 748
Provisions of the Transfer of Property Act ... 748
Hindu law, modified by legislation, (S. 227) ... 743
Three classes of, according to quantum of interest under old Hindu Law ... 746
Father's power of ... 746, 747
Of moveable property ... 748
Testamentary, what is ... 748
If subject of, must be in existence at the time ... 748
Religious, dictum of Madras High Court ... 748
Conditional gift or devise (S. 233) ... 749
A gift or devise to unborn persons, (S. 231) ... 748
Revocation of gifts, (S. 233) ... 750
Texts on the subject ... 750
Absolute and conditional ... 749
Distinguished from will ... 755
Powers under gift and will not identical ... 755
Donatio mortis causa, (S. 234) . 751, 779
Difference between Indian and English Law ... 751, 779
Creation of estates unknown to Hindu Law by way of, void ... 900, 901
Religious, of Hindu widow when and how far allowed. 1055, 1057
By heiress, by consent of next reversioner does not convey absolute estate ... 1080 Consent cannot validate estate unknown to law ... 1081

PAGE.

Gift—(contd.)
General—(contd.)
But acts as estoppel on consenting reversioner ... 1081
Quantum of, by manager of coparcenary property ... 466
Where gift set aside ... 467
Limits of manager's power to make gifts ... 467

Who can make a gift.
Adult ... 746
Co-parcener, of separate or self-acquired property ... 746
Gift of ancestral property invalid ... 372, 377
Father or manager power of ... 463-465
Not allowed for an illegal purpose ... 464
Gift of immoveable property even allowed ... 464
Gift for religious purpose or charity ... 465
Gift on marriage of daughter or sister ... 464
Manager, power of ... 463, 464
Power of father under Dayabhag ... 565
By coparcener, when allowed ... 465
Widow, power of. 1055, 1057
Gift on marriage of daughter or sister ... 1063

Who can be donees.
If donee must be in existence ... 748, 749
Gift in favour of unborn person, (S. 231) ... 748
Modification of the rule by statute ... 748, 749
Gift to idol ... 748
Gift passes entire interest of the donor ... 749
Gift to females, presumption as to (S. 232) ... 749
Gift to wife or widow by strangers. 1134, 1135
Gift to daughter or sister ... 1135
Gift to other females ... 1135
Gift to a persona designata ... 249
Gift for maintenance to junior member of impartible estate ... 346, 705

Gift to a Class.
Hindu Law as to ... 781
What is meant by a class ... 781
Gift not void though some cannot take ... 782

Gossains.
Initiation of ... 840
Marriage of, a bar. 114, 834, 839, 840
Right to Mahantship ... 839
Sub-divisions of ... 62
Peculiarity of adoption among ... 62

PAGE.

Gotra.
Meaning and significance of ... 133, 134
Marriages within the same invalid ... 133, 134

Gotrajas.
Who are ... 193, 922

Gotraj Sapindas.
Who are ... 922
Widows of, order of succession among, in Bombay ... 981

Government.
Grants by, construction of ... 371, 691

Government Revenue.
Payment of, a necessity. 390, 1060
Mortgage or charge by manager for payment of ... 451, 452
Mortgage or charge by female heirs, (S. 341). 1047, 1050
Must be bona fide ... 1050

Grandfather.
See Paternal Grandfather.

Grandmother.
See Paternal Grandmother.

Grandson.
Existence of, a bar to adoption ... 167
Included under "issue" ... 359, 360
No right to claim partition against grandfather while father is alive ... 601
Position of, as Sapinda ... 928, 929
Right of succession under Mitakshara ... 929
Right of inheritance under Dayabhag ... 1008

Grant.
Defined, (S. 226) ... 742
Includes gift ... 737, 742
Limited by Hindu Law ... 737
Four kinds of ... 738
How made, (S. 228) ... 744
Allowed by law ... 744
Nature and scope of ... 744
Compared with gift ... 745
Rules for creation and control of, scanty ... 737
Babuana grant ... 346
Reversion to grantor or his heirs ... 346
Right of grantee and his heirs ... 346
Proof of custom final in special cases of devolution ... 705
By Government to member of joint family ... 371
Construction of such grant ... 371, 691
Property when self-acquisition ... 371
By holder of impartible estate ... 371

PAGE.

Greece.
Adoption in ... 6

Guardianship.—See Minority and Guardianship.

H

Half-blood.
Rule that heirs of whole blood exclude those of half-blood recognized both by Mitakshara, and the Dayabhag ... 907
Rule applied to all sapindas of whatever degree, and also to bandhus. 907, 964, 967
In Bombay rule not extended beyond brothers and brother's sons and even to sisters ... 907, 945
Special rules in case of succession of re-unitd members ... 946

Half brother.
Adoption of ... 223
Conflict of views ... 223
Succession of, in Mitakshara ... 945
Through mother, unknown except in the Punjab ... 946
Position of in Dayabhag Law ... 1013
Succession to Stridhan ... 1174

Harit.
Age of ... 20
Smriti of ... 20

Heir.—See also Inheritance Female Heir, and Succession.
Duty of, to maintain those whom the proprietor was morally and legally bound to support ... 325, 326
Liable to pay debts of his predecessor ... 493

Hereditary offices.
Transfer of, to one next in succession ... 868, 870
Transfer of, to stranger ... 868, 870

Hermit.
Who is ... 986, 987
Rules of succession to (S. 328). 986
Rules applicable only to twice-born classes ... 986
Secular property of, vests in his ordinary heirs ... 986, 987
Religious property, descends by custom ... 987, 988

Hinduism.
Essence of ... 55
Unity of the Godhead ... 55
Belief in Maya ... 55
Pantheism ... 55
The doctrine of Karm ... 55

PAGE.

Hinduism—(contd.)

Pessimism ... 55
Outward marks of ... 54, 55
Conversion to ... 66
If after conversion to, whether family customs could be retained ... 66
Whether there could be direct converts to ... 66
Converts to, by Arya Samajis and other reforming societies ... 66
How aboriginal races are absorbed into ... 66

Hindu Law.

General.

Origin of ... 1
Confusion of law and religion. 3
As now administered is far behind the Roman Twelve Tables ... 4
Comparison with early Roman and Greek systems ... 4, 5, 6
The three epochs in the History of ... 11
Sruti and Smriti, primary sources of ... 11
Secularisation of, from what time ... 6, 29
State of Hindu Law since the advent of British rule till the first appearance of this code ... 41-46
Policy of Government with reference to ... 46
Its failure in the past ... 46
Hope for the future ... 46
Necessity for the Hindu Code and what it is ... 45
Essentials of a modern Hindu Code ... 45
Of inheritance, an offshoot of its religion ... 896, 897
Of inheritance, history of ... 896, 897
History of the Hindu Code ... 47
Its extent and operation ... 47
Extended application to Jains and Sikhs ... 48

Non-Hindu followers of

Khojas ... 64
Cutchi Memons ... 65
Sunni Borahas ... 65
Molesalam Girasias ... 65
Christian converts ... 65
Migration, effect of ... 75
Hindu Law personal ... 75
Strictly speaking there can be no lex loci in ... 76
What "lex loci" means in Hindu Law ... 76

Sources of.

The Sruti ... 48
The Smritis ... 48
Commentaries and Digests ... 48, 49

PAGE.

Hindu Law—(contd.)

Sources of—(contd.)

Custom ... 51
Judicial decisions ... 51
Legislative enactments ... 52

Who are governed by.

Hindus ... 54
Who are the Hindus ... 54, 55
Hindu dissenters ... 59
Outcastes ... 57
Offspring of mixed alliances... 57
Illegitimate children of Hindus ... 57
Aboriginal Hindus ... 63
Converts ... 64
Non-Hindu followers of ... 64-65
Christian Converts ... 65
Ascetics ... 61-62
Dancing girls and prostitutes ... 63

Modification of.

As part of religious system could not be modified by Statute ... 42
By Legislature, reasons and causes for ... 42
Procedure of the old Hindu Law now obsolete ... 42
By custom ... 44
By judicial decisions ... 43

Applicability of.

Same for the three twice-born castes ... 57
Law on migration ...66, 75, 76
Law of domicile when applies. 78
How far applicable to Hindus who emigrate outside India and mix with the natives... 87
How far applicable to Kalais. 87

Rules of Interpretation.

Jaimini's rules ... 44, 45
Other canons of interpretation ...44, 45, 53

Hindu(s).

Meaning of ... 47
Who are ... 54-55
Tests to find out ... 54
Essence of Hinduism ... 55
The four castes ... 57
Present day Hindus ... 55
Orthodox Hindus ... 55
Samskaras for ... 55, 56
Outward marks of ... 54, 55
Tests for determining status. 56, 57
Shudras, position of ... 56
Outcaste Hindus ... 57
Illegitimate children of Hindus ... 57
Offspring of mixed alliances. 57
Sikhs ... 59
Jats ... 64
Lingayats ... 61
Jains ... 59

PAGE.

Hindu(s).—(contd.)

Arya Samajis ... 60
Parthana Samajis ... 60
Brahmos ... 60
Kabir Panthis ... 60
Kayasths ... 58
Prabhus ... 59
Marathas ... 58
Shaivites and Vaishnavites ... 60
Minor sects ... 61
Gosavis, Bairagis, Brahmacharis, Sadhus ... 62
Aboriginal races ... 63
Dancing girls and prostitutes. 63
Converts to Hinduism ... 66
Manipuris, how they were converted into Hindus wholesale ... 66
Whether Buddhists could be classed as ... 68
Primarily governed by the law of their origin ... 68, 75
Cannot have two inconsistet personal laws ... 68
Law applicable to, when they migrate to other provinces in India ...69, 75, 76
Law applicable to, when they migrate to places outside India ... 77
Law at the time of migration applicable ... 76

Husband and Wife.—See also Marriage, Restitution of conjugal rights, Gifts.

Duty of husband to maintain wife. 144, 319, 320
Guardianship of minor wife... 144
Succession to stridhan of wife. 144, 1152, 1153
Rights of husband to society of wife ... 144
Restitution of conjugal rights. 146-150
Cruelty and adultery, etc. ... 149
Mutual rights and obligations of (S. 27) ... 144-146
How far liable to pay each other's debts (S. 147) ... 503
Texts on the subject ... 503
Depends on agency express or implied ... 503
Husband bound to pay debt of wife for necessaries ... 503
Gifts by husband to wife when stridhan. 1134, 1135
Power of husband over wife's property. 144, 1144, 1145
Husband's right to seize wife's property in case of extreme necessity. 1144, 1145
Right personal ... 151
Cannot be availed of by his creditor ... 151
Insurance by husband for benefit of wife (S. 217) ... 724

PAGE.

I

Idiot.

Marriage of, valid ... 114
When disqualified for inheritance ... 909, 992
Disqualification of, must be congenital in Mitakshara... 991, 993
Need not be congenital in Dayabhag ... 992, 993
Adoption by, when set aside. 160, 161

Idol.

Both a person and property... 739
As a juridical person, a perpetual minor holding property through manager. 739, 874, 875
As property subject to jurisdiction of Civil Court ... 739
Bequests or gift to, valid ... 748, 749
Manager's right to custody of. 841, 844
Offerings to, ownership of ... 845
Partition of right to worship. 647
Permanent image not necessary ... 739

Illatom.

Customary form of adoption. 271, 274
Common in South India ... 271, 274
Existence of natural son no bar ... 274
Rights created by ... 274

Illegal purpose.

Trust for, invalid ... 724
Right to avoid benami transfer for ... 733
No right to recover property transferred benami, if illegal purpose carried out ... 730, 731

Illegitimacy.—See Illegitimate Children; Illegitimate Daughter; Illegitimate Son; Dasi-putra.

Is a bar to inheritance of a male (S. 302) ... 907
No bar to succession to stridhan ... 1164

Illegitimate children.

Of Hindus, law applicable to ... 57
Status of ... 57
Guardianship of ... 281
Maintenance of (S. 33) ... 163
Under the Dayabhag maintenance ceases after attaiming majority ... 163
Maintenance, amount of ... 164
Maintenance of, not a heritable right ... 164
Whether female children have the right to maintenance ... 164
Right to maintenance, even when born in adultery ... 164

PAGE.

Illegitimate children.—(contd.)
- Of Christian and Hindu unions ... 57
- Right to inherit to mother. 1164, 1166

Illegitimate daughter.
- Inherits to mother ... 940
- Not entitled to father's property ... 940

Illegitimate son—See Dasiputra.
- Who is an illegitimate son ... 929
- Of Dwijas, entitled only to maintenance ... 928, 929
- Of Shudras, right of inheritance ... 928, 929
- Of Shudras by adulterous or incestuous intercourse, not entitled to inherit ... 928, 929
- Right of partition ... 601
- Survivorship between legitimate and illegitimates son. 931
- Share of, under Mitakshara ... 931
- Difference between the schools. 932
- Right of parents to inherit to (S. 302) ... 907, 908
- Share of, in competition with widow ... 932, 933
- Share of, in competition with daughter ... 932, 933
- Share of, in competition with daughter's son ... 932
- No right to inherit to collaterals ... 933
- Right to succeed to mother's property. 1164, 1166
- Rights of, compared with those of an adopted son ... 934
- In Bengal, rights of ... 1009
- Difference between Mitakshara and Bengal due to construction of the word "Dasiputra" ... 1009

Immovable property.
- What is ... 738, 739
- Statutory definitions ... 738
- Hindu Law, definition of ... 738, 739
- Annuity payable out of fund ... 739
- Nibandh or Corrody in ... 740
- Malikhana ... 741
- Toda Giras Haq ... 740
- Varshasans ... 741

Impartible estate.

Origin and History
- Definition of (S. 204) ... 681
- Texts on the subject ... 680
- Texts contain only traces of ... 680
- Meaning of Impartibility ... 682
- Rules of, applicable to Hindu as well as to Non-Hindu estates ... 681
- Primogeniture incidental to ... 716
- Grants carved out of ... 682
- Divided part of, cannot have rights possessed by undivided whole ... 682

PAGE.

Impartible estate.—(contd.)

Origin and History—(contd.)
- Right of escheat of the parent estate ... 682
- Inalienable estate defined (S. 205) ... 683
- Cannot be transferred beyond lifetime of the holder ... 683
- Limits of the above rule ... 683, 684
- Origin of ... 684
- History of Impartible estate ... 685
- Feudal tenures created by Hindu and Mohamedan rulers of old ... 685
- Regrant of such estates by British Government and status quo ante maintained ... 685
- Titles and incidents of, not clear at the time when British assumed control ... 689
- Policy followed by Government to preserve large estates from dis-integration ... 689
- Authority of Government to create anomalous estates ... 685, 689
- Oudh Estates Act and Madras Impartible Estates Act ... 689-690
- Permanent settlement, effect of ... 685
- Grant by State for duties or office, prima facie impartible ... 683
- Effect of regrant by Government ... 687
- Service tenure resumable when service refused ... 683, 684
- Service tenure cannot be transferred beyond lifetime of the holder ... 683, 684
- Partibility dependent on conditions of regrant and terms of the sanad ... 687
- Impartibility may be incidental to family, (i.e., kulachar) and not to property ... 682
- Limits of the rule ... 698
- Impartibility due to nature of tenure ... 684, 692
- General process of evolution of ... 700
- Public and private property of owners of ... 685

Different names of.
- Raj ... 692
- Raj impartible ... 692
- Jagirs ... 685, 686
- Ghatwals ... 687
- Vatans ... 688
- Saranjams ... 688
- Pollians ... 688, 689
- Impartible by custom ... 693
- Zemindaris of Southern India. 701
- Ghatwali tenures of Bengal ... 687
- Incidents of ... 687, 688
- Auras son preferred to adoped son ... 716

PAGE.

Impartible estate.—(contd.)

Accretions and acquisitions, (S. 211).
Presumption regarding ... 710, 711
Devolution of such, when unincorporated by the holder whether express or implied ... 711
Difference between Mohamedan and Hindu Law ... 711
How far self acquisition ... 707, 708

Succession. (S. 214).
Principles governing. 706, 714, 715
Personal law varied by custom applied ... 713, 714
Generally by primogeniture ... 706
Succession by selection ... 715, 720
Rule of selection applies also to Dayabhag ... 715
Primogeniture, meaning of ... 716
Primogeniture, custom of ... 715
General and lineal primogeniture ... 716
Primogeniture necessary incident of ... 716
Lineal primogeniture ... 716
Lineal primogeniture illustrated ... 717
Difference between ordinary and lineal primogeniture ... 717
Rules of, and Mitakshara law ... 718
No survivorship under Dayabhag law ... 718

Creation of.
How created, (S. 206) ... 684
By law ... 684, 689
By grant of sovereign ... 684, 691
By nature ... 684, 691
Maintenance grants ... 693
By custom 684, 693
Custom of Gaddinashin ... 694
Proof of custom ... 694, 695
Family custom ... 696
No custom ... 697
By accretion ... 684, 698
How cannot be created ...
By adverse possession not ... 698
By contract not ... 699

Incidents of—(S. 209).
Relation of impartibility and inalienability of estates ... (S. 208). 700, 701, 702
The two are things apart, existence of one no proof of the other. 700, 701, 702
Estate held by a single person either as a coparcener or separate property ... 703, 704
Coparcenary how far in ... 703, 704
Holder's absolute rights ... 703, 704
Relation's right to maintenance ... 703, 704
Maintenance grants ... 704
Heir's chance spes successionis, if ... 706
Succession by primogeniture ... 706

PAGE.

Impartible estate—(concld.)

Incidents of—(contd.)
Successor pays debts,, (S. 219). 707, 708, 709
Discontinuance of service does not put an end to ... 707
Proof of custom ... 694-697
Half and full blood, preference between ... 718
Seniority by birth and not by seniority of mother ... 718
Rights of females ... 721
Dayabhag Succession ... 721

Proof of custom.
Review of cases where evidence was held sufficient or not sufficient ... 694-697
Entry in wajib-ul-arz ... 695
Practice for four or five generations of descent by primogeniture ... 695
Absence of alienation, no proof of inalienability ... 702

Impotency.—See Eunuch.
No bar to adoption ... 171
Marriage, no disqualification for ... 114
Marriage may be avoided on the ground of ... 137
Inheritance, exclusion from ... 995
Restitution of conjugal rights, whether defence to ... 149

Improvement (s).
Partition suit, allotment of, in ... 654, 655
Compensation for ... 655
Meaning of improvements ... 655
Religious and charitable endowments ... 846

Inam(s).
Origin and incidents of ... 685
Permanency incidental to ... 685
Generally intended to support temples, mosques, tanks, schools, bridges, etc. ... 685
Characteristics of ... 686

Infant.
Marriage of ... 114
Adoption by ... 116
Re-opening of partition by ... 655, 666
Recognised as person, even while in the womb ... 665

Infanticide.
Female, practice of ... 2, 3
Female, grounds for the practice of ... 2, 3
Female, evidence in the forms of marriage ... 3

Inheritance.
General.
Texts of Baudhayan on ... 23
Survivorship and inheritance, distinction between ... 896
Fundamental principles of the two principal systems ... 896, 899

PAGE.

Inheritance.—(contd.)

General,—(contd.)

Both systems of, centre round the word 'Sapinda' ... 897
Hindu Law of, offshoot of its religion ... 897
Law of, binding on subject ... 900
Alteration of, by individuals by way of will or gift, void (S. 295) ... 900
Agreement to alter course of, void ... 900, 901
Creation of estate tail, void, Tagore case ... 901
Customary variation ... 902
Rights of, can be waived by the heir ... 902
Heir, succeeds to last owner ... 903
Heir's rights personal (S. 296). 902, 903
Heir, if male takes absolutely and becomes a fresh stock of descent, (S. 296) ... 902, 903
Heir, if female, takes only a limited estate, and on her death her husband's heirs succeed (S. 296) ...902, 903
Bombay females an exception ... 902, 903
Other exceptions ... 904
Inheritance never in abeyance (S. 297) ... 904
Exception in the case of heir in the womb (S. 297) ... 904
Time of vesting cannot be postponed (S. 297) ... 904
Exception by way of will and that within limits allowed by law ... 904
Effect of vesting of, in heir (S. 298) ... 904
No difference between widow and other heirs ...904, 905
Not devested by subsequent events (S. 299) ... 905
Exception in case of adoption (S. 299) ... 905, 906
Exception in case of birth of posthumous son (S. 299) ... 905, 906
Exception in case widow remarries under Widow Remarriage Act, (S. 299) ... 905, 906
Right of, mere spes successionis (S. 300) ... 906
Right of, not transferable ... 906
Agreement against, void ... 906

Who are disqualified to inherit.

Illegitimate children (S. 302) ... 907
Parents when can inherit their illegitimate children, (S. 302) 907, 908
Murderous and inimical heir cannot (S. 303) ... 908
Lunatic and idiot (S. 304) ... 909
These two disqualifications only remain in Mitakshara (S. 304) ... 909
Other textual disqualifications removed by Statute (S. 304). 909

PAGE.

Inheritance.—(contd.)

Who are disqualified to inherit.—(contd.)

Ascetics how far debarred ... 910
Rules of pleading in cases of. 910, 911
Females excluded, unless enumerated by special texts, (S. 305) ... 911
Barrenness how far a disqualification ... 912
Woman's limited estate ... 912
Unchastity of widow, a disqualification ... 912, 913
Unchastity a disqualification in respect of all females under Dayabhag (S. 306)... 912
Effect of exclusion upon Inheritance ... 914
Next heir of the deceased succeeds (S. 307) ... 914
Maintenance of excluded heir. 915
Outcastes not disqualified (S. 308) ... 915
Heirs of the deceased, who was married under the Special Marriage Act, determined by Succession Act, (S. 309) ... 916

What property is subject of inheritance (S. 310) ... 918

Definitions.

"Propositus" and "last full owner" defined (S. 311) ... 918
Sapinda defined (S. 312) ... 919
Samanodaka defined (S. 312)... 919
Bandhu defined (S. 312) ... 919
Bandus may be, Atma, Pitri, or Matri bandhus, (S. 312). 919
Illustrative chart ... 921

Order of Succession.

Sapindas inherit first, then Samanodaks and then come Bandhus, (S. 313) ... 924, 925

I. Sapindas.

Compact series of heirs, who are, (S. 313) ... 924, 925
(1-3) Right of issue (S. 314)... 928-929
Illegitimate issue, his rights (S. 314) ... 929-934
(4) Widow (Ss. 315-316) ... 935, 938
Her statutory right (S. 315). 935
Her rights under the Mitakshara (S. 316) ... 935-938
(5) Daughter (S. 317) ... 938-941
Her statutory rights, ... 938
Her rights under the Mitakshara ... 938, 940
Illegitimate daughter ... 940
Unchaste and prostitute ... 940
(6) Daughter's son (S. 318) ... 941-943
(7) Mother (S. 319) ... 943-944
Step-mother, ... 944
(8) Father (S. 320) ... 944
(9) Brother (S. 321) ... 945
(10) Brother's son (S. 322) ... 946, 947
(11) Brother's son's son ... 948

PAGE.

Inheritance.—(contd.)

Order of Succession.—(contd.)

If half-blood distinction applicable ... 948
(12) Paternal grandmother ... 948
Texts supporting ... 948
(12-A) Sister in Bombay ... 949
(13) Paternal grandfather ... 949
Statutory heirs ... 949
(14) Son's daughter ... 949
(15) Daughter's daughter ... 949
(16) Sister ... 949
(17) Sister's son ... 949
Half Sister whether included . 950
(18) Paternal uncle ... 951
Of full blood ... 951
Of half blood ... 951
(19) Paternal uncle's son ... 952
(20) Paternal uncle's son's son. 952
Other Sapinda heirs from 21 to 61 ... 952-955

II. Samanodaks.

Samonodaks, who are ... 956
Rules of succession among ... 956
Samanodaks enumerated ... 957
The order of succession among ... 958

III. Bandhus.

Principles of succession among Bandhus 958, 959
Texts on the subject ... 959
Bandhus ... 960
Enumeration in Mitakshara illustrative not exhaustive... 959
Division into three classes ... 960, 961
Bandhus other than textual, in Bombay ... 961
Bandhus other than textual, in Madras ... 962
Difference between Mitakshara and southern India regarding female Bandhus... 962
Who are heritable bandhus, (S. 324) ... 959, 962
Rule of degrees ... 959, 962
Mutual Sapindaship ... 959, 962
Illustrations of mutuality ... 963
Order of Succession among bandhus (S. 325).
Atma bandhus take first, Pitri bandhus next, and matri bandhus last, (S. 325) ... 965
In each class, descendants of the propositus take first, his father's descendants take next, his grandfather's descendants take last ... 965
Preference of bandhus mentioned in the Mitakhsara is determined according to Mitakshara ... 966
Preference when two or more females intervene ... 966
Whole blood and half blood ... 967
Spiritual efficacy ... 967

PAGE.

Inheritance.—(contd.)

Order of Succession among bandhus.—(contd.)

Preference of male over female ... 968
Other local rules ... 969
Bombay rules, ... 969
Madras rules, ... 970
Classified order of heritable Bandhus ... 971
I Atma Bandhus who are ... 971
Sister's son ... 972
Came before the sister before statute ... 972
Includes a step-sister's son ... 972
Daughter's daughter's sons ... 972
Mother's sister's son's son ... 975
II Pitri Bandhus ... 976-978
III Matri Bandhus ... 978-980
Other Bandhus ... 979
Relations who are not heirs ... 979

Other heirs.

Preceptor ... 985
Pupil ... 985
Fellow-student ... 985
Brahmin ... 985
Tests on the subject ... 985
Crown ... 985
Heirs of hermit or sanyasi ... 986, 987
Texts on the subject ... 986
Heirs of Mahant ... 986
Heirs of Yati ... 986
Heirs of Brahmachari ... 986

Special female heirs.

In Bombay and Madras (S. 326) ... 982
Sister, difference in Bombay from Mitakshara before Inheritance Amendment Act ... 980, 983
Her position now in Bombay ... 983, 984
Half-sister ... 984
Father's sister ... 984
Father's half-sister ... 984
Widows of predeceased sapindas ... 981
Son's widow ... 980
Step-mother ... 980
Brother's widow ... 980
Brother's son's widow ... 980
Paternal uncle's widow ... 980
Daughters of descendants ... 980

Madras female heirs (S. 327.) ...

Daughter's daughter ... 982, 984
Son's daughter ... 982, 984
Brother's daughter ... 982, 984
Sister's daughter ... 984

Inheritance (Dayabhag Law).

Compared with Mitakshara ... 989
Principles governing ... 989
Spiritual benefit ... 989, 990
Texts regarding ... 990
Sapinda defined (S. 329) ... 990
Who are sapindas. 1001-1004
Enumeration of Sapindas. 1001-1004

PAGE.

Inheritance (Dayabhag Law).—(contd.)
Female Sapindas ... 1004
Sakulya defined (S. 330). 990, 1004
Samanodaks ... 1004
Test of preference among heirs (S. 334) ... 1004
Heirs fixed by number of pindas. 998, 999, 1008
Spiritual benefit ... 997
Parvan Shradh ... 998
Relations competent to perform Shradh ... 999
Exception to the rule ... 999
Pindas to the deceased preferred ... 1005
Paternal sapindas preferred to maternal ... 1007
Preference of agnates ... 1006
To stridhan ...
(1) Son ... 1008
(2) Son's son ... 1008
(3) Son's son's son ... 1008
(4) Widow ... 1009
Texts supporting widow's rights ... 1009
Right to partition and possession ... 1009
Limited estate of widow ... 1009
(5) Daughters ... 1010
Preference among daughters ... 1011
Unchastity, a disqualification ... 1011
(6) Daughter's son ... 1011
(7) Father ... 1012
(8) Mother ... 1012
(9) Brothers ... 1012
Half brother ... 1013
Position of sister ... 1013
(10) Brother's son ... 1014
(11) Brother's son's son ... 1014
(12) Sister's son ... 1015
Other Sapindas. 1015, 1017
Sakulyas ... 1017
Samanodaks ... 1018
Other heirs ... 1018
Hermit's heirs ... 1018
No heir ... 1019

Inheritance (Re-united families).
Inheritance in ... 677
Texts on the subject ... 677
Competition between separate and re-united families ... 677, 678
Competition between whole and half blood ... 677, 678
Order of inheritance in Dayabhag law ... 1018

Insolvency.
Of father, receiver could not be devested by son's survivorship ... 546
But son's share exempted if debts illegal or immoral ... 546

Issue.
Meaning of, in Hindu Law... 359

PAGE.

Issue.—(contd.)
Includes, grandson and great-grandson ... 359, 360
Includes persons by adoption. 360
Right of, recognized from the moment of conception ... 360
Such recognition only for his benefit and not for the benefit of others ... 360

J

Jagannath.
Author of Vivad Bhangarnav Colebrooke's Digest ... 42
Its legal value ... 42

Jagir.
Origin and incidents of ... 685
Conditions of tenure ... 685
Estate for life only at first... 685
Generally right to collect revenue only and not right over the soil ... 686
Jagirs still granted by Government as reward without any condition ... 686
How differs from Inam ... 686

Jaimini.
Author of Purva Mimamsa ... 44
Rules of interpretation of ... 44, 45

Jain(s).
Application of Hindu Law to. 59
Held to be Vaishya caste ... 59, 60
Adoption of (see Adoption).
Bhadrababu Samhita a digest of their law ... 264
Widow, absolute rights of Inheritance ... 902
Widows acquire absolute estate by inheritance ... 1032

Jat(s).
Governed by Hindu Law ... 64
Peculiarity of adoption among. 90
Karao marriage prevalent among ... 119

Jimut Vahan.
Dayabhag of, prevails in Bengal ... 37
Author of work named "Dharma Ratna" ... 37

Joint family (Dayabhag).
Compared with Mitakshara ... 564
Where father is the head, father absolute right in ancestral or self-acquired property (S. 170) ... 566
Sons have no right to enforce partition when father alive. 566
Father not bound to maintain his adult sons ... 566
But bound to maintain minor sons, unmarried daughters, wife and parents ... 566

PAGE.

Joint-family (Dayabhag).—(contd.)

Daughter-in-law's claim against father-in-law merely moral ... 567
Disqualified members entitled to maintenance ... 567
No estoppel by the son against the father ... 567
A coparcener may alien his share by sale, mortgage, gift or devise ... 567, 568
Woman can be coparcener ... 568
No presumption of joint property including acquisitions. 438, 569
Presumption of joint acquisition arises only if nucleus found ... 568, 569
Property obtained without joint family fund, separate property ... 569
Property obtained with little aid is joint in which acquirer gets double share ... 569
Quantum of aid if great acquirer's preference lost ... 569

Joint family (Mitakshara).

Origin and development of Primitive state of society ... 4

Organisation of familial groups ... 355
Patriarchal system ... 355
The Patria potestas ... 355
Its development in Rome ... 335, 356
Position of the Patriarch ... 356
Plays a necessary part in the growth of civilization ... 2
How it differs from joint family of ancient days ... 2

Its constitution and incidents.

Jointness, no meaning without joint family property ... 356
Notion of joint family and survivorship borrowed from English Law ... 356
Manager of, how far a trustee. 358
Incidents of joint family in England and India ... 357
Joint Hindu family how far a corporation ... 357, 358

Constitution of Hindu family.

Its members ... 397, 398
Membership only by birth and not by agreement ... 402
Co-parcenary a less extensive body than joint family ... 398

Joint family property.

Comprises (a) ancestral property ... 363, 366
(See Ancestral Property).
(b) joint acquisitions of the members ... 366
(c) property acquired with the nucleus of joint property ... 364, 367
(d) property blended and thrown into common stock... 364, 367

PAGE.

Joint-family (Mitakshara).—(contd.)

Joint-family property.—(contd.)

(e) Government grants, provided it is express or can be reasonably construed ... 371

Manager.

Who can be a manager (S. 131) ... 442, 443
Right of juniors ... 443
Legal position of a manager. 445
Remuneration for managing. 446
Position generally honorary. 446
His Powers (S. 132) ... 443, 458
Right to possession ... 443, 447
No liability to account for income ... 444, 448
Exception in case of fraud ... 448
Accountable by agreement ... 449
Liability to account for admitted assets ... 449
Power to contract debts ... 444, 449
Alienation of joint family property for necessity or benefit of family ... 444, 451
Working rules deduced from decisions ... 451
Consent of other coparceners if necessary, earlier and later decisions ... 452, 453
Power to make contracts ... 444, 453
Power to pass receipts ... 454
Power to compromise or refer to arbitration ... 454
Power limited by C. P. Code O. 32, R. 7, when manager is guardian ad-litem ... 455
Cannot start new business ... 455
Power to give discharge ... 456
Power to acknowledge debts not barred ... 455
Cannot acknowledge barred debts except as against himself ... 456
Exception where father is manager ... 456
Rights of manager to sue and be sued ... 444, 456
Decrees against, binding on family ... 456, 457
Execution sale against ... 415
Guardianship of minor coparcener ... 457
Powers of, under Mitakshara and Dayabhag Law compared ... 515
Power to make customary gifts (S. 136) ... 463-467
Texts on the subject ... 463
Manager's gifts ... 464
Parent's gifts, when manager. 464
Gift for maintenance of a female relation ... 465
Gift by other co-parceners how far valid ... 465
Quantum of gift by ... 466
Where gift set aside ... 467

PAGE.

Joint family (Mitakshara).—(contd.)

Manager.—(contd.)

Coparcener's liability for manager's debts and alienations (S. 133) ... 458, 459
Binding when, if for necessity or benefit ... 458
If alienee makes bona fide enquiry ... 459
Personal liability when, ... 459
Decree against father or Manager ... 459
Manager's alienation, voidable only (S. 134) ... 460
Equity arising on partial necessity (S. 135) ... 461, 462
Case for terms ... 463
No mesne profits ... 463
Effect on alienor's interest where the alienation of the manager found void (S. 151). 514
Alienation where wholly void. 514
Alienee where entitled to obtain alienor's interest ... 514
Powers of other managers (S. 152) ... 515, 516
Sale in execution of decree against manager, of coparcenary property not presumed to pass interest of coparcener ... 518
Decree against the manager when enforceable against coparcener (S. 156) ... 519
A decree against manager in respect of liability incurred within scope binds other coparceners (S. 156) ... 519
His own or entire interest passes is a question of construction ... 519
What facts to be considered ... 519
Father as manager, additional powers of—See Father, Son.
Manager's fraud (S. 137) ... 467
Creditor or alienee's title when dealing with ... 512
Necessity for enquiry by creditor or alienee ... 512
Suit on mortgage by, joinder of parties (S. 157) ... 523, 524
Alienee in possession, suit to set aside, burden of proof. 517, 518
When such alienee is an auction purchaser and a stranger to the suit ... 517, 518

Legal necessity for alienation.

See "Legal necessity" and "Benefit".
Proof of legal necessity ... 510, 511
Partial, equities arising from (S. 135) ... 461, 462

Self-acquisition.—See Self-acquisition.
Gains of Learning Act ... 380, 381

PAGE.

Joint family (Mitakshara).—(contd.)

Suits and transactions.

Consent of junior members if necessary for alienation by manager. 416, 417, 440, 442
Manager, power to represent family ... 444, 456
Trading family, additional powers of manager (S. 138). 468

Trading firm—See Trading Joint Family.

Presumptions and proof, re (S. 128).

Normal state of Hindu family being joint, if once joint, presumed to remain joint until contrary proved. 426, 428, 429, 432
No presumption that a joint family possesses joint property ... 426, 428
Property once shown to be joint presumed to remain joint (S. 128) ... 426, 432
Property acquired with the aid of nucleus presumed joint (S. 128). 326, 428, 434
No such presumption, where separation admitted (S. 128). 426, 433
Possession of females presumed to be on account of males. ... 435
Acquisition by a coparcener presumed joint. (S. 129) ... 435, 437
Purchase made by a non-coparcener presumed separate property ... 438
Purchase made by husband in the name of his wife or daughter, presumed benami. 438, 439
Self-acquired property blended with joint property presumed joint ... 372
Sale of coparcenary property not presumed to pass interest of coparcener (S. 155)... 518, 519

Re: Partition.

Presumption of complete partition (S. 195) ... 662, 663
Limits of the presumption ... 662, 665
Mutation and purchase in separate names ... 430, 431
Property treated as joint, onus of proof as to ... 368
Government grants, when joint family property ... 371

Joint property.

Distinction between joint property and joint family property ... 364
Defined ... 359, 363

Joint family property.—See Joint family; Joint family property.

Joint tenancy.

Recognition of in case of heiresses (S. 337) ... 1033
Limits to. 1033, 1034

PAGE.

Judicial decisions.—See Court.
- As a source of Hindu law ... 48
- Rules of interpretation from. 54
- Stare decisis ... 51, 53

Jurisdiction.
- Limits of, of courts about questions of caste ... 52

K

Kabir Panthis.
- Origin of ... 60
- Are governed by Hindu Law. 60

Kalais.
- Their origin ... 87
- Hindu Law how far applicable to ... 87

Karao.
- Customary form of marriage. 119

Karm.
- The doctrine of ... 55

Karta.
- See Joint Family (Manager).

Kayastha (s)
- Of Bengal, held to be Shudras. 58
- Of United Provinces ... 58

Khoja (s).
- Applicability of Hindu Law to ... 64, 65
- Extent of application of Hindu Law ... 64, 65
- Differences in custom between Khojas of Bombay and Kathiawar ... 64, 65

Kritrim—See Adoption.

Kshatriya (s).
- One of the four castes ... 57, 58
- Existence of, denied by orthodox Brahmins ... 57, 58
- Recognition of, by Courts ... 57, 58
- Status of offspring, by Shudra woman ... 57, 58

L

Lameness.
- Exclusion from inheritance in Dayabhag ... 994
- Must be congenital ... 994
- Disqualification removed in Mitakshara by Statute ... 909

Land acquisition.
- Of property of endowment ... 858

Last full owner.
- Meaning of ... 918, 919

Law.
- Laws of Solon ... 4
- Early Roman Law ... 4
- Family Law in ... 5

PAGE.

Law.—(contd.)
- Greek Law ... 6
- Adoption in ... 6
- Early, Roman and Hindu Law systems compared ... 6
- Secularization of, early, in other laws than Hindu Law, leading to far reaching results ... 6
- Of marriage, early law ... 8
- Definition of ... 9
- Under the East India Company, early history of ... 41
- Principle of, each community to be governed by its own laws ... 41
- Principle of, not to be affected by change of rulers ... 41
- Principle of, followed by Hindu and Mahomedan rulers ... 41

Lease (s).
- Power of guardian to lease 287, 288
- Manager of endowment ... 852, 853
- Permanent lease when valid ... 852-853
- By female owner. 1046, 1047
- By manager of a religious endowment ... 856, 857

Legacy.
- To member of joint family when a self-acquisition ... 372
- Given without specifying the time when it is to be paid ... 785
- Rights of representatives of legatee ... 785
- To two persons jointly, effect of ... 785
- Death of legatee, effect of ... 785

Legal necessity—See also Woman's estate and benefit.
- What is ... 389, 854
- Is of two kinds; Spiritual and Legal, (S. 116) ... 382
- Spiritual, defined (S. 117) ... 383
- Secular, defined (S. 118) ... 388-394
- Distinguished from benefit ... 382
- Spiritual and secular, compared. 383, 384, 385
- Texts bearing on ... 384
- Spiritual necessity, what is ... 385
- Father's and Manager's alienations for ... 387
- What constitutes secular (S. 118) ... 388
- Father's debts when. 388, 389, 390
- Government revenue, when ... 388, 390
- Premium or rent, when ... 388, 390
- Expenses for defending and asserting title ... 388, 391
- Expenses for management ... 388, 391
- Maintenance of coparceners, their wives and issue ... 388, 391
- Marriage expenses of members of family ... 388, 391

PAGE.

Legal Necessity.—(contd.)

Performance of indispensable religious or customary duties ... 392
Cost of litigation re family property ... 393
Cost of defending members ... 393
Proof of ... 510, 511
Alienation by manager of joint family for ... 444, 451
Alienation by manager of endowment for ... 516, 850
Alienation by guardian ... 288, 516
Alienation by manager of a lunatic's estate ... 516
Alienation by heiress ... 516
Alienation by widow ... 516
What is, in the case of widow. 1049-1051
Spiritual necessity, what is. 1051-1052
Spiritual necessity distinguished from spiritual welfare ... 1052
Deemed to exist if reasonable enquiry by alienee ... 510
Proof of ... 510
Partial, equities arising from ... 461, 462
Value of recitals ... 513
Value of attestation ... 514
Quantum of evidence ... 514
Excessive alienation ... 514
Necessity implies pressure ... 517
Proof of ... 517

Legitimacy.

Law of, ... 908
Presumption of, (S. 32) ... 161-162
Time of conception, of no importance ... 161, 162
Different in Mohamedan law ... 161
Presumption of, conclusive except by proof of non-access ... 162
Proof of non-access ... 162
Non-access, meaning of ... 162
Importance, age or illness in rebuttal of presumption of ... 162
Inference of, from repute ... 162

Lepa.

What is ... 999
Its significance compared with pinda ... 999

Leprosy.

If a bar to adoption ... 171
No longer a disqualification for inheritance in Mitakshara ... 909
What, disqualifies under Dayabhag ... 994, 995
Restitution of conjugal rights ... 146, 149

PAGE.

Levirate.—See Niyog.

Lex Loci.

What it means in Hindu Law. 68, 75, 76
Strictly speaking, no lex loci in Hindu Law. 68, 75, 76

License.

What is ... 737
Difference between, and grant one of degree ... 737

Life-estate—See Woman's Estate.

Limitation.

Suits by minor to set aside alienations by guardian ... 292-293
Suits to set aside alienation by manager ... 420, 421
Suits for maintenance ... 348
Adoption, for challenging ... 245, 246
Adoption, for declaration of the validity of. 245, 1096, 1097
Suit by reversioners for declaration as to alienation by widow. 1096, 1121
Suits for possession (S. 362). 1121-1124
For suits to set aside improper alienation or for possession of endowed property (S. 278) 861-866
Sex of reversioner immaterial for. ... 1123
Suit by reversioner when begins. 1122, 1123
Suits when estate is vested in two or more limited owners. 1123, 1124
When heiress alienates through a collusive suit, against alienee ... 1106
Time for, for suit by reversioner starts with remarriage or renunciation of heiress. 1122, 1123
Suit by reversioner, limits of the rule ... 1124
Suit by reversioner, for moveables ... 1124
For suit against heiress in case of adverse possession. 1121, 1122
Suits to avoid or enforce debt or alienation of father against sons ... 548
Existence of reversioner, effect of on unborn reversioners ... 1106
Power of widow to alienate estate for barred debts. 1059, 1060
Power of father to alienate estate for barred debts ... 543, 544

Lingayats.

Religion of ... 61
Held to be Shudras in Bombay ... 61

Litigation.

Costs of, when a legal necessity ... 393
Costs of unsuccessful, whether illegal debt of father ... 549, 550

PAGE.

Lost property.

Recovery of, ancestral to family ceases to be ancestral ... 362

Lunatic.

Marriage of, validity of ... 114
Adoption by, when set aside ... 160, 161
Wife of, right to adopt ... 161
Guardian of, powers of ... 516
Exclusion from inheritance ... 909, 910
Lunacy must be present at succession under Dayabhag. 994
Must be congenital under Mitakshara ... 991, 993

M

Madan Parijat.

Authorship of ... 71, 72
Extent of its authority ... 72

Mahant—See also Religious and Charitable Endowment.

Marriage of, a disqualification ... 835
Position of, as head of the muth. 807, 808, 809, 859, 860, 861
Succession to office of ... 839-840
Power of nomination ... 839-840
Governed by usage of the particular muth or institution. 839, 840
Misconduct and immorality a disqualification ... 870, 872

Maharashtra school.

Works of authority in ... 68, 70
Adoption by widow in ... 191, 192

Maiden.

Succession to stridhan of (S. 368). 1146, 1147

Maintenance.

General.

Development of the law ... 318, 319
Solatium for exclusion from inheritance ... 318
Also out of jural relationship ... 318
Nature of the right ... 318
Of coparceners, a legal necessity ... 388, 391
Right not lost by change of religion or loss of caste (S. 101) ... 336
Statutory provision for awarding ... 321

Persons entitled to Parents ... 322

Wife ... 319
Widow ... 326
Concubine ... 320
Adopted son ... 321
Sister ... 322
Stepmother if entitled ... 323
Son-in-law if entitled ... 323
Brother if entitled ... 323

PAGE.

Maintenance—(contd.)

Persons entitled to—(contd.)

Coparcener and his family. 325
Disqualified heir and his family ... 327
Daughter-in-law ... 323, 327
Grand-parents ... 327
Rights of junior members of impartible estates for ... 327
Daughter, married and unmarried ... 322
Sister-in-law ... 327
Legitimate and illegitimate children ... 320, 321
Grandchildren ... 323

Personal Obligation (S. 93).

Wife ... 319
Concubine (S. 95) ... 323-325
Legitimate son ... 319, 320
Illegitimate son ... 321
Even though of adulterous intercourse ... 321
Son by a Non-Hindu woman ... 321
Adopted son ... 321
Parents, ... 322
Daughter ... 322
Chela ... 322
Sister ... 322
Son's widow and grandchildren. 323
Stepson ... 323
Stepmother ... 323
Son-in-law ... 323
Brother ... 323

Liability to maintain.

Of donees ... 343
Of heir-at-law ... 325, 326
Of transferees for value without notice ... 343
Of holder of impartible estate ... 327
Of manager of joint family ... 325

Liability of Joint family proprety.

Duty of manager to provide for maintenance (S. 96)... 325
Right of coparceners and their family for (S. 96) ... 325
Right of concubine after the death of the coparcener ... 324, 325
Separate, right to, member of a tarwad in Malabar ... 412
Principle, moral binding of proprietor converted to legal binding in the heir ... 325, 326
Maintenance of widow of coparcener ... 326-328
Maintenance of minor member of impartible estate ... 327
Maintenance of daughter-in-law ... 327
Maintenance of sister-in-law... 327
Maintenance of disqualified heir (S. 97) ... 328

PAGE.

Maintenance.—(contd.)

Right of wife.

Texts on the subject ... 319, 320
Rights to pledge husband's credit for ... 503
Separate maintenance, when entitled to ... 319, 320
Unchastity effect of ... 320
Right of wife, if a charge on property ... 332
Of disqualified husband (S. 97) 328
Of disqualified coparcener out of her husband's separate property or of which he was coparcener ... 329
Such right is absolute and does not depend on her other income ... 329
Right not forfeited by living apart from her husband for a just cause ... 319, 320
Continued chastity necessary for. 329, 330, 332, 333
Amount of (S. 95) ... 323, 324

Right of Widow.

Entitled to maintenance out of her husband's separate property or out of property in which he was a coparcener (S. 98) ... 328, 329
Right not lost if lived apart from the husband in his life time or his relations (S. 98) ... 329
Not lost by her husband's conversion (S. 94) ... 323
Chastity a condition precedent. 329, 330, 332, 333
Unchaste widow may be given starving maintenance ... 331
Pleading of unchastity ... 332
When disentitled to maintenance (S. 99) ... 332
If has sufficient stridhan ... 332
If once received sufficient allotment which she dissipated ... 332
If she is remarried ... 332, 333
Forfeiture whether, if remarriage allowed by custom. 333
If lives apart from her husband's relations for immoral purpose. 332 333, 339
Debts due to the family takes precedence over a widow's claim (S. 104) ... 341
If widow cannot release her claim for maintenance ... 349
Waiver of past arrears how proved ... 349
Separate maintenance ... 330
Maintenance of a widow how far a charge ... 332
Her claim against transferee. 344

Right of concubine.

Texts supporting her right ... 324

PAGE.

Maintenance.—(contd.)

Right of concubine.—(contd.)

No right against paramour during his lifetime ... 324
Her right springs after her paramour's death, against his estate in the hands of his heirs ... 324
Occasional concubine has no right if discarded by the husband ... 324
Continuous chastity essential. 324
Principles which apply to widow apply to ... 333

Amount of maintenance.

Amount of maintenance (S. 102) ... 336
Texts on the subject ... 336
Principles of assessing the amount ... 336, 337
Limits of her right ... 338
Conditional maintenance ... 338
Husband's right to limit her rights by will ... 339
Case for increase ... 340
Case for reduction ... 340
Case for suspension ... 341
Amount liable to variation (S. 103) ... 339
Starving maintenance when widow unchaste ... 341

Nature and incidents of the right.

Nature of the right to maintenance ... 318, 319
No forfeiture of right to, on loss of caste ... 323
Maintenance, a personal right (S. 105) ... 342

Charge for maintenance (S. 107). 344-346
Meaning of the word charge... 342
Property on which maintenance may be charged (S. 107) ... 345-346
Hindu law recognizes the creation of charge, called nibandh or corrody ... 351
Being a personal right is not a charge unless formally created ... 351
Even as debt it has no priority over other debts (S. 104) ... 341
When charged takes precedence ... 341
Widow cannot release her right of future maintenance ... 349
The meaning of the term with reference to T. P. Act ... 342
Maintenance right, not transferable ... 342
But arrears of, can be attached and sold ... 342
Right cannot be defeated by a person disposing of his property by gift or devise (S. 106) ... 343

PAGE.

Maintenance.—(contd.)

Charge for maintenance.—(contd.)
Right can be enforced against the donee or devisee with or without notice (S. 106) ... 343
But the right cannot be enforced against bona fide transferee without notice of the claim (S. 106) ... 343
Right cannot be enforced against transferee with or without notice for consideration supported by legal necessity or for a purpose binding on the family (S. 106) ... 343
Transfer in fraud of maintenance ... 343
Widow's claim against transferee ... 344
Transfer pending litigation for maintenance ... 344

Grants for maintenance.
Construction of, what it depends upon ... 346
Babuana grant ... 346
To females, if carries with it any limitations ... 346
Junior members of impartible estate ... 346
Grants carved out of impartible estate ... 693
Nature and incidents of such grant how determined ... 693
Quantum of interest of donee. 346
Rights of donors and his heirs ... 346

Suits relating to maintenance.
Scope of (S. 108) ... 346
Cause of action ... 346
Right may arise under common law, contract or will... 348
If proof of demand and refusal necessary for ... 348
Rate of arrears and discretion of Court ... 350
Arrears when decreed ... 348, 349
Arrears for twelve years may be recovered ... 348, 349
Rate of arrears ... 350
Defences in suit for ... 350
Disobedience to wishes of deceased husband ... 350
Possession of assets ... 350
Parties to the suit (S. 109) ... 351
Decree for, what it should contain (S. 110) ... 352
Principle that it should provide for every contingency... 352
Form of decree ... 352
Decree without charge ... 353

PAGE.

Maintenance.—(contd).

Suits retaling to Maintenance.—(contd.)
Charge decree, compared with mortgage decree ... 353
Limitation for (S. 111) ... 348, 354
Limitation starts from the date of refusal ... 348, 354
Mere non-payment is not refusal ... 348, 354
If proof of denial of right necessary for limitation ... 348, 354
Claim for arrears ... 354
Suit on contract ... 354

Malabar Law.
Adoption ... 234
Marriage customs ... 120
No partition ... 409
Right of a member of tarwad to claim separate maintenance when ... 412
The same rule applies to a member of Tavazi ... 412

Malik.
Meaning of ... 794
Absolute estate conferred by the use of the term. 790, 791, 792
Life estate only when qualified by other circumstances ... 791, 792

Manager.
Of Joint family.—See Joint family.
Of partnership.—See Partnership.
Of Religious Endowment.—See Religious and Charitable Endowments.

Manager of Infant's estate.—See Minority and guardianship.
Position and power of ... 516

Manager of lunatic's estate.
Position and power of ... 516

Manu.
Age and authority of ... 17
Hindu society at the time of... 17-20

Manipuris.
How they were converted into Hindus wholesale ... 66

Marriage.

General.
Definition of ... 9
Institution unknown to primitive society ... 7, 108
A sacrament under Roman law. 8
Marriage a sacrament under Hindu Law ... 8
In Greece and Rome ... 9
Polygamy prohibited in Greece and Rome ... 10
Prohibited marriages in ancient law ... 10

PAGE.

Marriage.—(contd.)

General.—(contd.)

In Manu's time ... 7
Different kinds of ... 18
Meaning of ... 9
Marriage defined (S. 14) what is marriage ... 109
Brahma ... 109
Asur ... 109
Betrothal ... 109
Hindu, compared with Christian ... 8, 9
Approved and disapproved forms of ... 7
History of the Hindu Law of marriage ... 108
Ideas of marriage different in different countries ... 8, 9
Legal in one country is recognised legal in all countries . 8, 9
Marriage under English Law... 8, 9
How Hindu marriage differs from the English ... 8

Statutory civil marriage. (S. 29).

Marriage between different castes permitted under the Special Marriage Act by declaring to belong to no caste. 155, 156, 157
Marriage of a Christian with a non-Christian, permitted by the Indian Christian Marriages Act ... 155
Marriages between Hindus, Buddhists, Sikhs, and Jains irrespective of caste legalized by the Special Marriage (Amendment) Act ... 155
A Hindu married under the Act, remains a Hindu ... 155
He can also contract a purely civil marriage outside the territorial waters of India. 156
Rights and disabilities under... 156
Declaration under the Special Marriage (Amendment) Act, paradox created thereby ... 156
Object of the amendment ... 156
Civil marriage laws in Baroda and Indore ... 157

Different forms of.

Eight forms of marriage in early Hindu Law ... 109
Brahma and Asur forms only existing in the present day... 109
Brahma form and its features. 109
Asur form of marriage ... 109
Bride price ... 109, 110
Asur, treated as valid on ground of factum valet ... 112
Characteristics of Asur form... 109
Payment of money does not necessarily convert Brahma into Asur form ... 109, 110

PAGE.

Marriage.—(contd.)

Different forms of.—(contd.)

Form not determined by caste but how the community view it ... 110
Factum valet ... 126
Of widows under customary law. 122, 123, 129

Who can marry (S. 16).

Infant can marry under Hindu law, but infant marriages prohibited by Child Marriage Restraint Act ... 113, 114
Age for marriage ... 110
Impotent person can ... 114
Leper can ... 114
Idiot can ... 114
Lunatic, provided he understands the Acts and accepts. 114
Illegitimate children ... 115
Gossains and Bairagis ... 114
Widows under customary law. 122, 129, 130
Widows under statute ... 129, 130

Prohibited degrees in Marriage. (S. 23).

(a) The parties to marriage must not be within prohibited degrees of relationship... 131
(b) The parties if Dwijas, must be of the same caste... 131
(c) The parties must not be sapindas, or sagotrajas, or samapravaras ... 131
What sapinda relationship prohibited ... 132
What gotrajas prohibited ... 133
What pravarajas prohibited ... 134
Other prohibitions ... 134, 135
General result of the Shastric rules ... 135
Marriageable sapinda relations ... 135, 136
Prohibitions by adoption ... 134

Sub-caste, Intercaste religious marriages, (S. 19).

History of intercaste marriages ... 124
Inter-caste customary marriages ... 124, 125
Intermarriages between sub-castes ... 125, 126
Inter religious marriages not valid under Hindu law but valid under statute law ... 126, 156
Marriage of converts to Hinduism, being considered as Shudras valid ... 124, 126

Anuloma Marriages (S. 19).

Valid under Hindu law ... 123

Pratiloma Marriages.

Void under Hindu law ... 123

PAGE.

Marriage.—(contd.)

Pratiloma Marriages.—(contd.)

Marriages between Hindus and Mahomedans customary in Hyderabad ... 156

Noncaste Marriage permitted under Special Marriage Act. 155, 156, 157

Who can give in marriage.

Persons entitled to give in marriages ... 117

Texts on the subject ... 117

Necessity for a giver ... 117

Right of father ... 112, 118

Can delegate his right to another person ... 118

Right of mother ... 118

Stepmother has no right ... 118, 119

Right of paternal relations ... 118

Other relations ... 118, 119

After parents, courts are entitled to intervene ... 119

Ceremonies in Marriage (S. 18).

Prescribed ceremonies unnecessary (S. 18) ... 116, 117

Saptapadi and Vivah Homa, necessary for orthodox marriage ... 116, 117

Consummation not necessary, 116, 117

No ceremonies in Buddhist Marriage ... 120

Customary Marriage ceremonies ... 121-123

Ceremonies in Punjab. 116, 121, 122

Ceremonies in C. P., U. P. and Behar ... 122

Invalid marriages. (S. 24).

If within prohibited relationship ... 136

If difference in caste being a pratiloma marriage ... 137

See Subcaste, Intercaste, Religious Marriages.

If non-observance of ceremonies ... 137

Texts on the subject ... 136

Avoidance of marriage. (S. 25).

Can be avoided for force or fraud, or impotency or either party's imbecility ... 137-140

Cannot be avoided for infancy or incapacity to understand marital obligations. 137, 139, 140

Husband's rights and duties. (S. 27).

Duty to maintain wife ... 144

Guardianship of minor wife... 144

Divorce not permissible except by statute ... 144

PAGE.

Marriage.—(contd.)

Husband's Rights and duties.—(contd.)

Right to conjugal society of wife ... 144

Right to inherit stridhan of wife. 144, 145, 151

Right to use stridhan of wife for necessity ... 144, 145

Right to sue for damages ... 148

Wife's rights and duties. (S. 27).

Duty to reside with husband... 144

Right to pledge credit of husband for necessaries ... 144

Right to remarry when husband unheard of ... 144

Right to sue and be sued ... 144

Right to inherit separate property of husband ... 144

Right to maintenance and residence in family house ... 144, 150

Divorce not permissible except by custom ... 144

Restitution of conjugal rights.

Defences to suit for. 146, 148, 149

Adultery ... 146

Procedure ... 150

Nature of the suit ... 150

Limitation for suits to enforce restitution ... 150

Proof and presumptions.

Presumption of valid marriage. 151, 152, 153

Presumption of marriage when made. 151, 152, 153

Presumption of continuance of marriage ... 154

Presumption as to Brahma form ... 152

Presumption of due performance of ceremonies ... 154

Presumption of marriage warrants presumption of legitimacy of children ... 152, 159

Proof of marriage, in what cases necessary ... 152

Presumption of death of husband ... 127, 128

Customary marriage.

Gandharva ... 119

Dagger Marriage form of Gandharva ... 119, 120

Karewa, in Punjab ... 119

Karao Dhureecha, among Jats, Lodhis ... 119

Anand Marriage, among Shikhs ... 120

Kanthibadal, among Vaishnavas ... 120

Chadar Andazi, in Punjab ... 120

Sambhandham, in Malabar ... 120

Podumuri a kind of ... 120

PAGE.

Marriage.—(contd.)

Judicial separation or Divorce (S. 26).

Texts on divorce ... 140
Divorce as such unknown to Hindu Law ... 140, 141
Divorce Act inapplicable to Hindu marriage ... 143
No dissolution by apostacy, degradation or loss of caste. 143
Effect of unchastity ... 142
Effect of conversion ... 141, 143
Divorce or judicial separation not allowed by Hindu Law. 141-143
Adultery, cruelty or misconduct no ground for divorce. 141
Divorce allowed by custom ... 142
Statutory divorce ... 143

Re-marriage of wife (S. 20).

Narad permits remarriage of wife under certain circumstances e.g., when the husband is lost, or is impotent or has become a religious ascetic or expelled from caste ... 127, 128
Customary remarriages ... 128
Consent of husband necessary, for ... 127
Death of husband presumed from absence of seven years. 127

Re-marriage of widow (S. 21).

Common among Shudras ... 129
Customary among Dwijas ... 129
Among Dwijas sanctioned by Statute—Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act ... 129, 130
Where customary amongst Dwijas ... 123, 129
In Punjab ... 122
Abolition of Sati ... 129

Suits relating to marriage.

For restitution of conjugal right ... 113
For jactitation of marriage... 113
For damages ... 148
For marriage expenses ... 148
For recovery of promised bride price ... 111

Marriage Brocage.

Contract void for immorality. 111

Marriage contracts.

A contract to marry cannot be specifically enforced (S. 15) ... 111
No injunction to prevent Marriage ... 111
Damages for breach of contract recoverable ... 111
Effect of death before marriage ... 112
Agreement can be broken for valid reasons ... 111
Jurisdiction of Court in suits relating to marriage and marriage contracts ... 113

PAGE.

Marriage expenses.

Of females. 130, 391, 392
Of males, when necessary. 130, 391, 392
Re-marriage of males. 130, 391, 392
Provision for, on partition... 652, 653
Texts on the subject ... 652, 653
Alienation for, when justified. 130, 391, 392
A charge on family estate ... 130

Maternal Grandfather.

Right of inheritance as an Atma bandhu ... 975
Sapinda in Dayabhag ... 1016

Maternal uncle.

Atma bandhu in Mitakshara... 975
Sapinda in Dayabhag. 1003, 1016

Matri Bandhu (s).

Order of succession among ... 978-979

Maya.

Belief in, of the Hindus ... 16

Mayukh.

Age and authority of ... 38
Compared with Mitakshara ... 38
Authority in Bombay ...38, 68, 70
What prevails on a conflict with Mitakshara ... 70
Prevails on conflict with Mitakshara in Sindh ... 70

Mayukh Law.

Position of father different from Mitakshara in the table of heirs ... 943, 944
Sister, favoured position of, under. 949, 950, 980
Gotraj Sapindas, widows of, as heirs ... 980, 981

Mesne Profits.

Son's liability for, awarded against the father ... 549
Not allowed on setting aside of alienation by manager... 463

Migrating family.—See Emigration; Hindu Law.

Law governing, where there is no dispute as to nationality ... 74, 75
Law governing, in case of persons of mixed descent ... 76
Presumption of applicability of law of origin ... 75-78
Adoption of law of domicile. 76, 77
Development of law in land of origin after migration, if applicable ... 76

Minority and Guardianship.

General.

Majority under old Hindu Law ... 277
Texts on the subject ... 277

PAGE.

Minority and Guardianship—(contd.)

General—(contd.)

Old Hindu Law superseded by the Indian Majority Act ... 278
Saving of the Act when relating to marriage, dower, adoption, etc. ... 278
Extension of period of minority in some cases ... 278
Mode of calculation ... 278
Guardian, who is ... 278
Definition of guardian (S. 73). 278
Guardian and Trustee compared ... 279
Four classes of guardians (S. 74) ... 279
Natural Guardian (S. 75) ... 279
Guardian must act as such ... 303
Guardian's tort ... 304

Natural Guardians.

Defined (S. 74) ... 279
Order of (S. 75) ... 279
Father's preferential right ... 279, 280
Mother comes next ... 282
Paternal relations ... 283
Maternal relations ... 284
Conversion or loss of caste, no disqualification to act as guardian, (S. 76) ... 284-287
Father's conversion ... 285
Mother's re-marriage and conversion ... 286
Conversion of the minor ... 286
Re-marriage of father ... 285
Adoptive father v. Natural father ... 281
Illegitimate children ... 281
English and Hindu Laws how far identical ... 281
Step-mother whether can be a guardian ... 283
Brother, whether can be a guardian ... 284
Preference determined by the test of welfare of the minor ... 284
Rights and powers of natural guardian, (S. 77) ... 287
What is legal necessity and benefit ... 288
Liability of a trading firm ... 289
Transfer by guardian when voidable ... 290
Restitution ... 291
Limitation to sue to set aside guardian's transfers ... 292
Natural guardian may contract or compromise, (S. 79) ... 294
Promissory note: acknowledgement ... 294, 296
Minor's necessaries ... 295
Meaning of necessaries ... 296

PAGE.

Minority and Guardianship.—(contd.)

Natural Guardians.—(contd.)

Personal contract by guardian (S. 80) ... 296
Limits of the rule ... 297
Guardian of minor in a Mitakshara joint family is generally the Karta (S. 81) ... 299
Husband his wife's guardian (S. 82). ... 299

De facto guardians.

Defined (S. 74) ... 279
Powers of (S. 83) ... 300, 303
Hindu law compared with Mahomedan law ... 301
Personal rights ... 302
Acknowledgement by ... 302
Officious intermeddler excepted ... 302

Testamentary guardians.

Father's power to appoint guardian by will (S. 85) ... 305
Delegation of authority ... 306

Certificated guardians.

Appointment or declaration of a guardian by Court (S. 86). 307, 308, 309
Parent's claim ... 308
Removal of ... 309
Parent or husband, wife's guardian ... 310
Father's unfitness how judged. 310
Choice of guardian ... 311
Minor when consulted ... 311
Finality of Court's order ... 311

Joint and other guardians.

Joint guardians of person and property may be appointed (S. 87) ... 311
Court's jurisdiction when Limited (S. 88) ... 311
Minor coparcener ... 312
No separate possession allowed to a minor ... 313
Other disqualification stand on par with minority ... 313
Guardian of minor's person (S. 89) ... 313
His right of custody of ward (S. 89) ... 313
Suit for custody ... 313
Appointed guardian supersedes others (S. 90) ... 314
Effect of transaction entered into with a minor (S. 90) ... 314
Minor's fraud ... 315
Minor's liability under a decree (S. 92) ... 315
Effect of decree ... 316
Guardian ad litem ... 315, 316

Misrepresentation.

Effect of, on adoption ... 206

PAGE.

Misrepresentation.—(contd.)
By minor as to his age, if an estoppel ... 315
Equities on setting aside ... 315

Mistake.
Partition, re-opening of ... 657, 659
In the name or description in will, effect of ... 784

Mitakshara.
Commentary on Yadnavalkya. 34
Age and authorship of ... 34
Commentaries on, by Visweshwar and Lakshmi Devi. 35
Foundation of the modern Hindu law of partition and inheritance ... 36
Scheme of ... 35
Extent of its authority ... 35
Mayukh and, compared ... 38

Mitakshara School.
Difference re joint family from the Bengal school ... 358
Co-parcener's right by birth... 358, 359
Difference between, and Dayabhag school, re inheritance. 896-900
Definition of stridhan different from the Dayabhag ... 1128

Mithila law.
Authoritative works in ...68, 71, 72
Only Kritrim adoption allowed in ... 266, 267
Mother's right of guardianship superior to father's in some cases ... 280
Power of widow over moveable property ... 1030
Succession to Sulk ... 1155
Rules of re-union different from other schools ... 673, 674

Molesalam Girasis.
How far governed by Hindu Law ... 65

Mortgage.
By manager of joint family property when binding on other coparceners. 444, 451, 458, 459
Mortgagee's duty to make bona fide enquiry as to necessity ... 459
By coparcener of his undivided share in joint family when valid. 414, 417, 418
By father, whether an antecedent debt ... 534, 535
With consent of coparceners. 417, 418
By guardian when binding on the minor ... 287, 288
By heiress. 1047-1064
Effect of reversioner's consent to, by heiress. 1072, 1082
Certain females entitled to claim under Right of Women to Property Act (S. 182) ... 607

PAGE.

Mother.
Right to give daughter in marriage ... 118
Her right to give in adoption, 214
Limits of her rights ... 213, 214
Remarriage and conversion of mother, effect of ... 214, 286
Partition, allotment of share to ... 608
Usage in Southern India different ... 608
Share so allotted not her stridhan. 1025, 1026
Effect of conversion or loss of caste ... 214
Guardianship of minor children ... 282
Guardianship of illegitimate children ... 281
Conversion, or re-marriage right to guardianship ... 286
Maintenance, right to ... 322
Unchastity of, effect of, on inheritance ... 912-914
Heir under Bengal school ... 1012
Inhertance, right of, under Mitakshara ... 943
Inherits to her illegitimate children and to Dwamushyayan son ... 944
Texts on the subject ... 943
Comes before the father except under Mayukh ... 943
Includes both natural and adoptive ... 943
Inherits only a limited estate. 943
Succession to stridhan of maiden daughter ... 1147

Mother's brother—See Maternal uncle.

Mother's relations.
Status of, as Bandhus under Mitakshara ... 964, 965
Status of, as Bandhus under Dayabhag ... 1003

Mother's sister's son.
Adoption of ... 222

Moveable Property.
Gift of, how made .. 748
Powers of female owner over ... 748, 929
Power of Mithila widow to disposal of ... 1030
Suit for moveables ... 1124

Murder.
Party to, not entitled to inherit ... 908, 909

Muth(s).—See Religious Endowment.
Origin and history of ... 840
Constitution of .. 840

PAGE.

N

Nairs.
Institution of marriage among 120

Nambudri Brahmins.
Dwamushyayan adoption in.. 234

Nand Pandit
Age of .. 40
Author of Dattak Mimamsa. 40
Authority of his work on adoption .. 40, 168

Narad.
Age of .. 28, 29
Smriti of .. 28, 29

Native Christian (s).
Laws applicable to (S. 4) .. 79-82
May be governed by Hindu Law .. 80
Must not be wholly repugnant to Christian ideas.. 81, 82

Necessity—See Alienation, Legal Necessity, Joint family, Guardian, Woman's estate.

New business.
Manager of joint family cannot start .. 455, 470

Nibandh.
What is .. 740
What is, under Hindu Law.. 740
In English called corrody.. 351
Maintenance charge is a .. 351

Nilkanth.
Author of Mayuk .. 38

Niyog.—See Adoption .. 471
Underlies the rule of Saunaka, as explained by Nand Pandit .. 216
Prohibited relations for adoption based on the theory of .. 216, 217
Principle of Niyog explained .. 217
Obsolete in modern times .. 217
Custom overrides the rule.. 217, 225

Notice.
What is, in transfer of property in fraud of maintenance .. 490, 491

Nucleus.
No presumption as to existence of .. 428
Proof of, onus as to .. 428, 429
Property acquired with the aid of. 352, 375, 376

PAGE.

O

Obstructed heritage.
What is, in Mitakshara law. 361, 365, 376
Different from unobstructed heritage .. 361, 365
Distinction unknown to Bengal law .. 365, 886
Succession to, by inheritance. 886

Offerings.—See Votive Offerings.
Right to, when made at a temple .. 845

Oraons.
An aboriginal tribe in Chota Nagpur .. 1
Institutions of .. 1

Orphan.
Adoption of, invalid .. 215, 219

Owelty.
What is .. 657

P

Paishach.
Obsolete form of marriage.. 18

Parashar Madhaviya.
Authority of, in Dravida .. 72
Authority of, especially in Canara .. 72

Pardah.
Origin of .. 7

Pardanashin.
Transfer by .. 1105

Parties.
To suit for maintenance from joint family (S. 109) .. 351
To suit on mortgage by manager of joint family (S. 157) .. 523, 524
Joinder of, in suit by mortgagee of joint family property .. 450, 451
Suit against widow. 1115, 1118
Necessary for a suit for partition .. 637
Unnecessary parties .. 638

Partition.
General.
Right unknown to archaic Hindu law .. 585
Evolution of the law of .. 585, 586
Difference between Mitakshara and Dayabhag law. 595, 596
Son has no right, in Bengal.. 605

PAGE.

Partition.—(contd.)

General—(contd.)

What is partition (S. 177). 587
Living together after partition does not, apart from reunion, restore jointness .. 595, 596

What effects partition.

Definition of partition .. 587
Texts on the subject .. 587
Of revenue-paying estate .. 588
Intention (unequivocal) essential .. 589
Severance in interest .. 587, 588
Unilateral declaration of intention .. 590
Division of rights by mutual agreement .. 593
Grandson cannot claim, if his father alive, under Bombay school .. 601
Actual division by metes and bounds not necessary .. 593, 594
Form of (S. 178) .. 596
Writing not necessary .. 596, 597
If in writing registration necessary .. 596, 597
May be in the form of a will. 597
Effect of non-registration .. 598

Who can claim partition.

Father's right to effect partition at his pleasure (S. 179) .. 598, 599
Father's partition effects partition of father from sons and of sons inter se. 598, 599
Father's right of, cannot be effected by will .. 598, 599
Persons entitled to claim partition (S. 180) .. 600
Adult coparceners .. 609
Minor coparcener, allowed only under special circumstances .. 600, 602
Absent coparcener .. 602
Widows .. 600, 604
Adopted son .. 601
After-born son .. 603
Illegitimate son .. 601
No right in Aliyasantana law. 642
Disqualified heir and his issue .. 601
Transferee of share .. 604
Under Dayabhag law sons cannot .. 604, 605
Co-widows, against each other (S. 181) .. 604
Not so as to prejudice reversioners or right of survivorship unless by agreement. 604, 605
Assignee from co-widow .. 606
Daughters, against each other. 606, 607

PAGE.

Partition—(contd.)

Who cannot claim.

Grandson and great-grandson during their father's lifetime .. 601
Illegitimate sons as against father .. 601

Female Sharers on Partition (S. 182).

Mother .. 608
No share to females in Southern India .. 608, 611
Grandmother .. 610
Step-mother .. 609
Step-grandmother .. 609
Unmarried daughter .. 610
Unmarried sister .. 610
Quantum of share .. 608

Sharers on partition (S. 184)

Distribution of shares .. 620, 621
Principles of .. 620
Texts on the subject .. 621
Partition per stirpes .. 622
Equality of, general rule .. 622
Division per stirpes and per capita .. 621, 625
Brothers, inter se .. 623
Great great-grandson no share being fifth in generation .. 623
After-born son .. 624
Adopted son's share, with Auras son 621, 622
Illegitimate son's share .. 621
Difference between the schools. 621
Shares of certain women and descendants now governed by Hindu Women's Right to Property Act .. 621

Partial partition. (S. 183)

Not sanctioned by texts .. 612
Recognised in practice .. 612
When allowed .. 613
When refused .. 613
By consent or compromise .. 612
Between coparceners, effect of .. 614
Destroys presumption of the members being joint .. 615, 616
Legal effect of, right of survivorship kept alive .. 620
Case for .. 616
Allowed where items omitted. 620
Where portion of joint property left undivided .. 620
Between stranger alienees .. 619
Where coparcener affirms alienation .. 618
Where indispensible .. 617
Allowed by other law .. 616
Where some portion of property is without the jurisdiction of the Court .. 616, 617
Modification of rule against, by statute .. 617, 618

PAGE.

Partition—(contd.)

Partial partition—(contd.)

Dismissal of suit for, does not bar another suit for general partition .. 642

Proof of partition (S. 186).

May be proved by declaration, act or conduct, inconsistent with jointness (S. 186) .. 626, 628

Presumption of.

From cessor commensality and joint worship. 626, 628, 629
From separate enjoyment.. 626, 629
From appropriation of profits, 626, 630
From agreement to divide the income in definite shares .. 626, 631
From separate definement of shares .. 626, 631
Purchases in individual names .. 633
From separate transactions of coparceners between themselves and others .. 626, 634
Stranger's seizure ineffectual .. 626, 634
No separation .. 634

Acts occasioning separation. (S. 185). 626

Conversion ..
Marriage under Special Marriage Act .. 626
Limitation .. 635
Exclusion of co-parcener .. 635
Evidence of exclusion .. 635
Possession by co-owner not adverse to other co-owner unless there is ouster or denial .. 635, 636

Suit for.

(A) Parties.

All sharers to be impleaded. 637
Who are unnecessary parties. 638
Who are necessary parties .. 637
Purchasers of undivided shares and mortgagee .. 637
Lessee .. 639
Maintenance holder, when a party .. 637

(B) Property.

Suit must be exhaustive of all property. 636, 639, 640
Exceptions where property not available .. 640
Property outside jurisdiction of Court .. 640
All joint property to be brought into hotchpot.. 640
Exceptions to the rule .. 646-648
Partition in specie as far as practicable .. 646

PAGE.

Partition—(contd.)

Suit for—(contd.)

All joint property to be brought into the hotchpot (S. 194) .. 661
Property improperly alienated to be taken into account. 649
Partition decreed only with reference to existing assets. 648, 649
Right to mesne profits .. 650
Past profits from time of exclusion or demand .. 650
Accounts of private dealings between the coparceners adjusted in partition .. 651
Manager's share liable in case of fraud by him .. 650
Maintenance of status quo ante 654
Special equity against partition in specie .. 654-657
Choice of property .. 655
Compensation for improvements .. 655
Meaning of improvements .. 655
Compact and convenient shares. 655
Transferee protected on allotment of property in .. 657
Owelty .. 657
Nature of a cross-suit, defendant liable for Court-fees on his claims .. 657
Partition of service inam.. 648
Costs of suit .. 648
In case of muth or religious head .. 647
Partition of religious office.. 647
Enjoyment in rotation if allowed by custom .. 647

(C) Procedure in partition-suits. 640-642

(D) Defences to a partition suit (S. 188) .. 642-645
Property not partible .. 642
Agreement against partition. 643
Family arrangement .. 644
Right barred by time .. 643
Disqualified coparcener .. 643
Release or relinquishment.. 645

Partition Act (See Appendix).

(E) Mode of (S. 190) .. 646-648
Equities on distribution of shares on partition (S. 192). 654, 657

(F) Provisions to be made on partition. (S. 191).

Payment of family charges. 651, 652
Payment of family debts. 651, 652
For maintenance and residence of female members. 652
Upanayan and marriage of co-parceners .. 652

PAGE.

Partition—(contd.)

Suit for—(contd.)

Ceremonial expenses .. 653
Father's right to make provision for charities .. 654
(G) Implied covenants on Partition (S. 193.) .. 657, 661
Covenant of title .. 657, 658
Absence of fraud or error in the allotment of shares. 657, 659
Party may waive his right to get relief .. 657, 660
Relief whether by repartition or by compensation .. 660

Partition under decree of Court. (S. 198).

Decree for partition .. 670
Preliminary decree .. 670
Commissioner, appointment of .. 670
Partition by Collector .. 670
Costs up to preliminary decree .. 670
Effects of preliminary decree... 671
Variation of shares by subsequent events .. 670, 671
Exception in the case of mother .. 671
Final decree .. 672

Re-opening of partition (Ss. 196, 197).

Partition may be re-opened by whom .. 665-667
A co-parcener, conceived at the date of partition is born after partition (S. 197). 665, 666, 669
After-born son, if father has not reserved share for himself. (S. 197) 665 666, 669
Absent co-parcener .. 665, 667
Disqualified co-parcener after removal of disqualification. 665, 667
Son of disqualified co-parcener if born after partition 665, 667
Position of heirs of the excluded co-parcener .. 669
Fraudulent suppression of property is a ground for .. 657, 659

Presumption. (S. 195).

Completeness, both of person and property .. 662, 663
Limits of the above rule .. 662, 664

Partnership.

Joint family trading firm .. 468
Distinction between it and ordinary partnership .. 468, 469
Business, old and new .. 470, 471
Manager, position of .. 472, 473

PAGE.

Partnership.—(contd.)

Liability of members major and minors .. 475
Fraud of manager .. 475
Cannot start new business .. 476

Paternal grandfather.

Right of, to give in marriage ... 118
Paternal, no right to give in adoption .. 215
Debts of, grandson's obligation to pay. (S. 165) ... 555
Right of succession under Mitakshara .. 949
Right of succession under Mayukh .. 949
Right of succession under Dayabhag .. 1015

Paternal grandmother.

Right of inheritance under Mitakshara .. 948
Right of inheritance under Mayukh .. 949, 980
Right of partition .. 608
Texts supporting .. 948
Special rights in Gujerat .. 948
Inherits in her own right .. 948
Right of inheritance under Dayabhag .. 1015

Paternal relations.

Right of agnates to inherit. 952, 955
Special differences in Bombay .. 953
Preference of, to maternal relations .. 964

Patriarchal Society.

Genesis of .. 1, 5

Patriarchal family.

Its origin and development 2
Basis of Vedic Society .. 12
Its origin and development. 355
Authority of the father .. 355, 356
Rights of members in .. 356
Development of joint family. 356

Perpetuities.

Rule against in Hindu law. 744
Endowments are free from the rule of .. 804

Persona Designata.

Gift to, when valid. (S. 247). 780

Pinda.

Double meaning of .. 132, 897
Interpretation of, in mitakshara .. 132, 897
Interpretation of, under Dayabhag .. 897

Pitri Bandhus.

Who are .. 976, 978
Order of succession among. 976, 978

PAGE.

Polygamy.

In Rome, and Greece and in India .. 10
Permitted by Hinud law (S. 17.) .. 115
A Hindu may marry any number of wives .. 115
Agreement not to marry during wife's life-time invalid .. 115
Disallowed by the Special Marriage Act .. 115

Polliam.

Impartibility of .. 688, 689
Incidents of .. 688, 689

Polyandry.

Evolution of .. 10
Still customary in some parts of India .. 10
Practice of, now decadent .. 10
As practised in the Punjab .. 10, 115
Unlawful under Hindu Law except to the extent permitted by custom (S. 17) .. 115
Places where exists .. 10, 115

Power (s).

Recognition of, in Hindu Law. 734
Definition of (S. 222) .. 734
Exercise of power discretionary with donee .. 734
English law on powers .. 734
Distinguished from trust .. 734
How particular words constitute trust or power .. 734
Creation and exercise of powers .. 734, 735
Of appointing an heir, if valid .. 735
Existence of donee of, at the death of testator if necessary .. 735
The conferral of, must be legal .. 736
Conferring two or more separate, upon separate individuals, valid .. 736
Joint power, nature and incidents of .. 736

Prarthana Samajis.

Governed by Hindu Law .. 60

Pravan shradh.

What is .. 998
Importance of, in inheritance in Bengal .. 998, 999
Who partake of the offerings in, and their importance .. 999
Relations competent to perform, and their order. 999, 1000

Pravara.

Meaning of .. 132
Marriage, restrictions on account of .. 132

PAGE.

Presumptions.

Re Trading family.

Of jointness, ancestral business if continued or resumed by the manager in a trading firm .. 480
No, of jointness, if business started by some members. 480
No, of jointness, where business carried on by person whose learning is at family expense .. 480

Re: Migration.

Migrating family, law applicable. (S. 3). 73, 75, 76

Re: Joint acquisitions.

Presumed joint .. 366

Re: Self-acquisitions.

Presumed joint if blended with joint property .. 372

Re: Marriage.

Of death of a person from absence .. 127, 128
Of marriage. (S. 28) .. 151, 154
Of Brahma form. (S. 28) .. 151, 153
Of due performance of ceremonies .. 151, 154

Re: Legitimacy and adoption.

Of legitimacy. (S. 32) .. 161, 162
No, in favour of adoption .. 237, 238
Of authority to adopt to a widow, opposite views of eastern and western schools. 179, 180
Of revocation of authority to adopt .. 202

Re: Joint family.

Of jointness. 426, 428, 429, 432
Of joint family property .. 426, 432
No presumption that joint family possesses any property .. 426, 428
Presumption of ancient usage when .. 91, 92
About acquisitions by co-parceners .. 435, 437
No, that property in possession of member of joint family is ancestral .. 363
Of legality of debt by manager joint family unless proved to be illegal. (S. 150) .. 510

Re: Partition and Reunion.

Of partition, completeness of, both person and property. (S. 195) .. 662, 663
Limits of the above rule .. 664
Of all property being partible and alienable unless otherwise proved. (S. 212) .. 711
Re-union, presumption against. 679

PAGE.

Presumptions.—(contd.)

Re: Partition and Reunion—(contd.)
No presumption in favour of benami transactions. (S. 221) 729, 730

Re: wills.
Of revocations of will by non-discovery of will .. 765

Re: Woman's Estate.
Of limited estate of women generally. (S. 335). 1022, 1023
Regarding accretions by heiress. 1041, 1043
Regarding unappropriated profits of heiress .. 1037
Of necessity from consent of reversioners (S. 345). 1071, 1074

Primitive society.
State of .. 2
Female infanticide common. 2
Woman stealing practice of. 2
Exogamy and indogamy, notions of .. 2
Aryan gens compared with Greek and Roman type and totem .. 3
Ancester worship prevalent. 3
Law and religion, blending of, found in .. 3
Status of women in .. 7
Practice of niyog .. 8
Law of marriage and adoption .. 8

Primogeniture.
See Impartible Estates.

Probate.
"Obtaining probate" what it means .. 800, 801
Effect of, grant of .. 801
Cannot be legally disposed of by compromise .. 801
Position of executor .. 802
Widow's application for, opposition to by reversioner .. 1097

Promissory note.
By manager, liability of members on .. 450
By manager, of endowment. 847

Proof.
Of custom .. 99, 102
Of marriage, in what cases necessary .. 152, 153
Of legitimacy .. 161, 162
Of adoption (S. 58). 235, 236, 242, 247, 248
Of authority to adopt .. 202
Of self-acquisition .. 372
Of necessity for alienation by manager of joint family .. 788, 789
Of necessity for alienation by guardian .. 293

PAGE.

Proof.—(contd.)
Of partition .. 626, 623
Of re-nuion .. 679
Of Will .. 761
Of necessity for alienation by manager of endowment .. 860
Of necessity for application by widow .. 1074

Property.
Definition of (S. 223) .. 738
Subdivision of into land and goods .. 740
Incorporeal rights held property .. 740
Nibandh (corrody) is property. 740, 741
Is a creature of law .. 738
Hindu law of, abrogated except in the case of gifts.. 743
Partibility and alienability of all, unless specially proved otherwise .. 711
Impartibility and inalienability of several estates by special act of legislature.. 711
Legal methods how, of the deceased passes to the living .. 899
In possession of women, how treated .. 436
Forfeiture of, on conversion, not allowed (S. 5) .. 83
Public and private, of owners of impartible estates .. 685
Ancestral property .. 360, 363
Joint property .. 363, 367
Accretions to joint property thrown into the common stock .. 367
Obstructed and unobstructed property. 361, 365, 376
Debutter, what is .. 804, 806
Malikana and manker .. 741
Idol .. 739
Stridhan .. 1127
Woman's property .. 1022

Propinquity.
Test of succession under Mitakshara .. 896

Propositus.
Meaning of .. 918

Prostitutes.
Adoption by .. 271
Gains by, whether stridhan. 1140
Succession to .. 1166

Public Policy.
Custom, opposed to 99
Endowment opposed to, void. 831, 832

Punjab.
Customary law, prevalence of .. 68
Application of Hindu Law in, extent of .. 78

PAGE.

Punjab.—(contd.)
Customary law of marriage (S. 2) .. 68, 73
Marriages in .. 121
Infant marriages in .. 121
Anand form now legalized by statute .. 121, 122
Marriage ceremonies in .. 121
Widow marriages in .. 122
Mock marriages .. 122
Customary law of re-marriage. 129
Customary law of adoption. 272, 273, 275
Adoption of daughter's son valid by custom .. 217, 223
Special custom about accretions to ancestral property .. 362

Pupil.
Right of inheritance .. 985

Purchaser.
Duty of, from limited owner to make enquiries. 512, 513, 886, 1079
Cannot take advantage of his own wrong .. 451
In sale in execution of decree against manager .. 517
Notice of the nature of the debt of father .. 560, 561
Of undivided share, right of. (S. 127) .. 421-426
Right of, to partition .. 426
Bona fide, rights of on partition 657
Right of, to refund of binding consideration if sale set aside. 424, 425, 462, 463
When not entitled to equities on setting aside of alienation .. 462, 463
Of widow's estate, right of. 1119, 1120.

Putra. See son—Issue.

Putresthi yag.
Its non-performance does not invalidate adoption .. 228

R

Raghunandan.
Author of Dayatatwa .. 69
Authority of, in Bengal .. 69

Rakshas.
Obsolete form of marriage .. 18

Ratification.
Of adoption .. 205
Of alienation by heiress. 1100, 1101
Post facto, sufficient to validate alienation .. 1077

PAGE

Recitals.
Not sufficient to prove necessity .. 513
Evidentiary value of .. 513
Evidence of representation. 513, 1079

Registration.
Of authority to adopt .. 193, 194
Of gifts .. 444, 445
Of Wills .. 758, 759
Of dedication to idol .. 823, 824
Of re-union. (S. 201) .. 676

Relationship.
Prohibited degrees of, for marriage .. 131, 136
Prohibited degrees of, for adoption. 215-217, 221-225
Distant or near, of parties, proof of partition .. 629

Religion (See Conversion)
Blending of, and law in archaic society .. 3, 4

Religious and Charitable Endowment.
Definitions. (S. 260) .. 804, 805
Beneficiary. 804, 805, 873
Debutter property .. 804, 806
Dedication .. 805, 806
Endowment .. 805, 807
Pujari .. 805, 807
Manager .. 805
Religious trustee .. 807
Mahant, position of .. 808

Dedication—Partial or complete. (S. 261)
Partial .. 809
Absolute .. 812

Certainty of subject and object. (S. 262) .. 813
Subject certain and uncertain. .. 813

Doctrine of Cypres (S. 262.)
Doctrine of .. 813
Applies to religious and charitable objects .. 814
Charitable bequest, what it means .. 815
Bequests void for uncertainty .. 817

Kinds of Endowments. (S. 262.)
Religious, charitable, public and private—each defined (S. 262.) .. 818
Charitable purpose defined .. 819
History of English Endowments .. 819
Endowments, Public and Private .. 819, 820
Public endowments .. 820

PAGE

Religious and Charitable Endowment —(contd.)

Kinds of Endowments—(contd.)
Proof of private endowment. 821
Mixed endowments .. 823

Form (S. 263.)
How endowment may be created .. 824
Registration when necessary. 824
Express words when unnecessary .. 825
Trust unnecessary .. 825
No dedication .. 827

Subject of endowment. (S. 264)
What property may be .. 827
Endowment in favour of non-existing object .. 828
Idol, when the subject of endowment, is treated as a juridical person in perpetual minority .. 874

Operation of
Vesting of endowment (S. 266) .. 828
Operation of endowment. (S. 267) .. 829
Illusory and void endowments. (S. 268) .. 829
Invalid endowment. (S. 269). 831
Invalid, if object illegal .. 831
Endowment is both irrevocable and unalterable. (S. 270) .. 832
When revocable .. 832

Management of.
Who may be appointed manager, (S. 271). .. 833
A male or female may be appointed .. 833, 834
Manager may belong to any caste .. 833
Qualification of a manager.. 834

Who may appoint the manager (S. 272) 835
Founder's primary right .. 835
Right of heirs of the founder to appoint when .. 835, 837
Court when may appoint .. 835, 838
Who are founders .. 836

Succession of the manager (S. 273)
Succession regulated by custom and usage of the endowments (S. 273). .. 838
Founder's right to nominate, consistent with the law of inheritance .. 839
Succession to shebaitship 839
Succession to Mahantship .. 839

PAGE.

Religious and Charitable Endowments —(contd.)

Rights and duties of manager. (S. 274).
Must carry out founder's directions .. 841, 842
Must observe customary usages of the institution .. 841, 842
Entitled to possession of all endowed property, custody of the idol, and all its paraphernalia 841, 844
Authority over servants .. 844
Manager's possession cannot be adverse .. 844, 848
Must keep accounts .. 845
Entitled to be indemnified for any thing of his own spent on the endowment 841, 848
When entitled to votive offerings .. 845
Right to spend portion of the income on himself .. 845
Surplus when retained by the manager .. 841
Manager's improvements .. 846
His accountability to the founder .. 846
His right of suit .. 846
Decree against manager binds the trust .. 847
Manager's personal liability. 847
Manager's remuneration .. 847

Shebaits rights. (S. 275).
Shebaits have proprietary rights in the endowment .. 848
Shebaitship may be enjoyed or alienated .. 848
Shebait is a trustee within the meaning of S. 10 of the Lim. Act .. 848
Shebait cannot implement his rights by prescription or adverse possession .. 844, 848

Rights and duties of joint managers. (S. 276) .. 849, 850
Manager's power of alienation. (S. 277) .. 850
Power akin to the guardian of a minor's estate .. 850, 851
Alienation valid only if for legal necessity or benefit.. 850
If without legal necessity or benefit, valid for manager's life .. 850
Legal necessity, what is .. 854
Benefit, what is .. 855
Partition of endowment 856
Exchange of endowment .. 856
Lease of .. 856, 857

PAGE.

Religious and Charitable Endowment.—(contd.)

Rights and duties of joint managers.—(contd.)

Adverse possession against the manager when adverse against the endowment.. 858
Setting aside improper alienation .. 859
Effect of a compromise .. 858
Acquisition of endowed land. 858
De facto manager .. 859
Mahant, Shebait, Dharmakarta .. 859
Burden of proof lies on him who sues to enforce an alienation .. 860
Limitation for possession or to set aside improper alienation (S. 278) .. 861
Limitation (amendment) Act, 1929 .. 861
Articles added by .. 862, 863
Questions arising before and after the amendment discussed .. 863, 866
Summary of the law before the amendment .. 867
Manager's office how far transferable. (S. 279) .. 867
Inalienability the general rule .. 867, 868
Transfer, when the endowment is private .. 867, 868
Transfer, when the endowment to public .. 867, 869
Limits of custom allowing such transfers .. 870
Res judicata .. 870
Removal of manager (S. 280). 870
May be removed for misconduct incompatible with the interest of the endowment (S. 280) .. 870
Procedure for removal 872

Beneficiary.

Defined .. 804, 805
Who may be .. 873
Any religious or charitable object may be beneficiary. 873
Who may take steps to insure that the endowment is maintained and its legitimate functions preserved.. 873
Rights and duties of beneficiaries .. 873

Worshipper's rights.

Right to resort, singly or jointly in procession .. 873
Private enowdments excepted. 873, 874

PAGE.

Religious and Charitable Endowment.—(contd.)

Suits and proceedings.

Grounds for removal of trustee (S. 280) .. 870
Fraud and misappropriation. 870
Immorality .. 870
Assertion of private right .. 870, 871
Acts regulating .. 875
Statutory control. (S. 283) .. 875
Religious Endowments Act of 1863, scope of .. 876
Charitable and religious Trusts Act of 1920, scope of .. 876
C. P. Code, S. 92, scope of.. 877
Right to sue. (S. 284) .. 878, 880
Sanction under S. 92, C. P. C. when not required. (S. 284) 879, 883
"Having interest in the trust" meaning of .. 880, 881
Charitable endowments .. 884

Religious ceremonies—See "Marriage", "Adoption", "Legal necessity", "Benefit".

Release.

Given under family arrangement, validity of .. 645
Of inheritance. 1065, 1072
No release by widow of her right of future maintenance .. 349

Relinquishment.

By widow, effect of. 1068, 1069
Effect of, on partition .. 645
Effect of on copareenary rights. 404, 405, 406

Re-marriage.—See Marriage.

Renunciation.

Of widow's estate. 1065-1072
Of the world, what constitutes .. 910
Of co-parcenery .. 645

Repugnant conditions.

Wills .. 779, 780

Residence.

Of wife .. 319, 320
Of widow, nature of right of (S. 100) .. 333, 334
Liability of purchaser without notice .. 333, 334
Liability of purchaser with notice .. 333, 334
Husband's bona fide transfer excepted .. 335
Rule applicable to widow apply to unmarried daughters and sisters .. 335

PAGE.

Residence.—(contd.)
Sale of property for debts of husband or for necessity, effect of .. 335
Separate, for a long time.. 335

Res judicata.
Hindu Law rule of .. 1175
Decision in suits by guardian. 315, 317
Decision in suits by manager of joint family .. 456, 457
Decision in suits by manager of endowment .. 870
Decision in suits by reversioner. 1103, 1104
Decision in suits by widow. 1112, 1114, 1115
Compromise decree. 1116, 1117
Ex parte decree, effect of. 1115, 1116

Restitution of conjugal rights.
Hindu law does not prescribe for such a suit, but such suit maintainable .. 146
Possession of recalcitrant wife whether given .. 146
No restitution where wife has not attained puberty .. 146
Minority of husband no ground for refusal of, to him .. 147
Restitution when may be refused .. 148, 149
Cases of cruelty .. 148
Husband's misconduct .. 149
Mala fide suit .. 149
Limitation for suit for .. 150

Re-union.
Who may re-unite (S. 199). 673, 674
Texts on the subject .. 673, 674
Parties must have been in union at one time .. 674, 675
Intention to re-unite essential. 674
Parties to, limited, father, brothers and uncle (paternal) .. 673, 674
What constitutes .. 674
Rules about, same in all schools except Mithila.. 674
Who cannot re-unite .. 675
Partition after, (S. 200) .. 676
How effected, (S. 201) .. 676
No writing necessary .. 676
If writing, must be registered .. 676
Effects of, with reference to inheritance .. 1324
Succession after .. 677, 679
Texts on the subject .. 677, 678
Son's and brothers' right of. 673, 674
Competition between separate and re-united families .. 677
Competition between whole and half blood .. 677
Minor's incapacity for .. 675

PAGE.

Re-union.—(contd.)
Effect of .. 677
Burden of proof of (S. 203). 679
Presumption against .. 679

Revenue sale.
Against limited owner, what passes .. 1111

Reversioner (s).
Unknown to Hindu Law .. 1085
Definition of under English Law .. 1085
Nature of their right .. 1085
Right of, entitled to protective equity. 1085, 1086
Presumptive and remote .. 1086
Right of, mere spes successionis (S. 349) .. 1086
Right of, cannot be subject of contract, surrender or disposal (S. 349). 1086, 1092
Cannot by surrender block out later reversioner .. 1088
Guardian of minor reversioners, powers of .. 1087
Do not claim through one another .. 1089
Derives his title from the last full owner .. 1189
Limits of his rights .. 1090
Estoppel of .. 1091

His rights and liabilities.
Right to avoid excessive alienation by limited owner. 1106
Take per capita .. 1106
His rights on succession (S. 356) .. 1107
Right to possession of the estate together with all its accumulation, accretions and incidents as on the death of the heiress .. 1107
Entitled to dispute all unauthorized acts. 1107, 1108
Entitled to represent the estate and as such may continue the suits by or against the heiress. 1107, 1108
Entitled to execute decrees obtained by the heiress. 1107, 1108, 1109
Right to prevent waste by heiress. 1093, 1094, 1095
Right to sue for administration .. 1097
Right to oppose probate .. 1097
Right to sue for invalidity of alienation .. 1096
Right to avoid unauthorised alienation of heiress. 1096, 1106
Mode of avoidance .. 1106
Right to sue for invalidity of adoption .. 1096

PAGE.

Reversioner (s)—(Contd.)

His rights and Liabilities—(contd.)

Right of suit against widow belongs to presumptive reversioner .. 1098
Right of remote, to sue when allowed. 1098, 1099
Exception in case of fraud, collusion, unwillingness, etc. 1100, 1101
Collusion, unwillingness, etc., of nearer, how proved .. 1101
Right of suit, existence of nearer female reversioner no bar. 1099, 1100
Surrender by heiress in favour of. 1065-1072
Right to succeed heiress. 1106, 1107
When succeed heiress .. 1107
Take per capita .. 1107
Bound to take succession certificate .. 1108
Right to accretions and accumulations .. 1108

Liabilities (S. 357).

Bound by all valid alienations of and by the heiress. 1109
Liable to pay expenses of shradhs .. 1109
Liable to pay all valid debts of the heiress (Ss. 357, 358). 1109, 1110
Liability of, for personal claims against the heiress. 1110
Liable to pay for the tortious acts of the heiress committed for the benefit of the estate (Ss. 357, 359). 1109, 1111
Bound by decrees against the heiress (S. 360). 1107, 1109, 1112, 1116
When not bound. 1112, 1116
Whether bound by a compromise decree .. 1117
Liability to pay compensations .. 1108

Suits, limitation, etc.

Limitation to avoid alienation (S. 362) .. 1121
Limitation for possession .. 1122
Sex of, immaterial for limitation. 1122, 1123
For suit by, limitation begins with re-marriage or renunciation of heiress .. 1123

Revocation.

Of authority to adopt .. 192, 202
Presumption of, authority to adopt .. 192, 202
Of will, formalities .. 762, 763
Of written will, orally .. 763
Of will by adoption .. 765

PAGE.

Revocation.—(contd.)

Of will by marriage .. 765
Difference between Indian and English law .. 765
Of will from loss, destruction, etc. .. 764
Of endowment .. 832

Riwaj-i-am.

Origin of .. 73
Extent of its authority in Punjab .. 103
Evidentiary value of .. 73

Right, title and interest.

Meaning of .. 562

Roman Law.

Early Roman law of the Twelve Tables .. 4, 5
Joint family under .. 5
Adoption in .. 5

Rules of Interpretation.

Jaimini's rules .. 44, 45
Rules of .. 44, 45, 53

S

Sagotra.

Meaning of .. 132, 133
How far a bar to connubial relationship .. 132, 133
Among dwijas other than Brahmins .. 131, 133

Sakulyas.

"Sakulya" defined. (S. 330). 990
Who are under Dayabhag law .. 990, 991
Texts on the subject .. 990, 991
Succession according to Dayabhag .. 1077

Samanapravara.

Who are .. 134
Bar to marriage between .. 131

Samanodak (s).

Definition of .. 919
Who are .. 956
Rules of succession among .. 956
Order of succession among enumerated .. 957
Dayabhag law as to .. 1004
Order of succession .. 1018

Sambandham.

Customary form of marriage in Malabar .. 120

Sanyasi.

Who is .. 61, 987
Devolution of property of .. 61, 987
Succession to .. 987, 988

PAGE.

Sapinda (s).
Defined (S. 312) .. 919
Texts on, who are .. 920
History of the word .. 918
Mitakshara definition of .. 920
Who are heritable sapindas under Mitakshara .. 921
Illustrative chart .. 921
Effect of Gains of Learning Act .. 380, 381
Relationship, method of computation .. 923
Consent of, to adoption .. 186, 187
The basis of the two systems of inheritance .. 897
The two meanings of .. 897
Female sapindas .. 923
Gotraj and Bhinnagotra Sapindas .. 922
Order of succession in Mitakshara .. 955, 956
Widows of Gotraj, in Bombay, heirship of (S. 326). 980-982
Their place in the order of succession .. 980-982
Dayabhag law as to .. 1001
Texts on the subject .. 1001
Who are. 1001-1003
Three classes of. 1001, 1003
Females as under Dayabhag law .. 1004
Order of succession among, under Dayabhag law. (S. 334) .. 1004

Saprathibandh.—See Obstructed Heritage.

Saptapadi.—See Marriage (Ceremonies Essential to).

Saranjams.
What are .. 688
Ordinary share of revenue or of soil .. 688
Found only in Maratha country .. 688
Commuted to money payment with grant of titles .. 688

Saraswati Vilas.
Authorship and age of .. 39
Authority in Southern India. .. 39, 72

Saudayik.—See also Stridhan.
What is .. 1135
Rights of women over. 1144, 1145

Self-acquisition (s).
Not known to archaic law .. 355
Origin and growth of .. 355, 356
What is .. 375, 376
Texts on the subject .. 373, 374
Early cases and the present rule .. 375
Distinct from ancestral property .. 366

PAGE.

Self-acquisition (s).—(contd.)
Distinct from separate property .. 378
Recovery of ancestral property .. 362
A co-parcener may have separate .. 414
Obstructed heritage. 361, 365, 376
Inheritance from maternal grandfather .. 376
Inheritance from other persons .. 376
Gift or devise by father .. 372
Importance of the construction of the gift or devise. 376, 377
Gift or devise by other relations .. 376
Personal gifts .. 373
Acquisition without detriment to family estate .. 378, 379
Education or maintenance from joint funds .. 378, 379.
Gains of science .. 379
Blended property .. 367
Accretion to self-acquired property .. 379
Grants by Government .. 371
If saving from impartible estate is .. 707, 708
Of impartible estate .. 707, 708
In impartible estate, incidents regarding .. 707, 708
In impartible estate, presumption regarding .. 708
In impartible estate, devolution of such .. 708
In impartible estate, difference between Mahomedan and Hindu Law .. 708
Powers over .. 414, 416
Liability of, for maintenance of certain persons only .. 319

Separation.—See also Partition.
Of joint family, what constitutes. 626, 629, 634
How effected. 629, 634, 646-648
Previous, bar to partition .. 642, 645
Proof of .. 629, 634
Acts occasioning. 626, 629, 634

Service tenures.
Resumable when service refused .. 683
Cannot be transferred beyond lifetime of the holder .. 683
Impartibility .. 683
Enfranchisement from service, effect of 683, 684
Inalienability .. 683, 688

Shebait.—See Religious and Charitable Endowments.
Qualification for .. 834
Position and powers of .. 841-848

PAGE.

Shradh.
What is .. 898, 899

Shudra (s).
Who are .. 56
Tests for the recognition of. 56
Marriage ceremonies .. 117
Inter-marriage between sub-divisions of .. 123, 125
No gotra for .. 182
Adoption of married man invalid except in Bombay .. 219, 220
Rights of adopted and auras son different from those of dwijas .. 361
Adopted son gets equal share with auras son .. 361
Adoption ceremonies for .. 227
Datt Hom, if necessary .. 227
Marriage expense, a legal necessity .. 392
Illegitimate sons, rights of .. 929-934

Sikh (s).
Application of Hindu Law to .. 59

Sindh.
Mitakshara and Mayukh when not in conflict, authorities of. 70

Sister.
Right to maintenance, in what cases .. 322
Right on partition .. 610, 611
Texts on the subject .. 610, 611
Rights of inheritance of .. 949
Difference in Bombay from other provinces prior to Inheritance Act .. 949
Comes after paternal grandmother in Bombay subject to Mayukh .. 949, 950
Right how affected by Inheritance Act .. 949, 982
Her place in the order of succession .. 955
Rights of half-sister .. 950
Excluded by full sister .. 950
Takes absolute estate in Bombay .. 980, 982
Rights of heirship in Madras. 982, 983
Position of as heir in Dayabhag .. 1013
Succession to stridhan of maiden .. 1147

Sister's son.
Position as heir under Mitakshara .. 949
Heir recognized by Statute. 949
Takes before paternal uncle. 949
Rights as a Bandhu recognised by decisions .. 972
Do. superior to sister's, in Madras .. 972

PAGE.

Sister's Son.—(contd.)
Includes step-sister's son.. 972
His place in the order of succession .. 955
Position of as heir under Dayabhag .. 1015
Adoption of 216, 222, 223

Sister's son's son.
Adoption of, valid .. 230

Slave.
Son of, illegitimate .. 928, 934
Abolition of, by statute. 928, 934, 1009
Dasi, in Bengal .. 1009

Smritis.
Distinction between Sruti and Smiriti .. 11, 12
Nature and origin of .. 12
Authority of .. 12
Social polity assumed and commended in the .. 15, 16
Source of Hindu Law .. 48
Legal value of .. 44, 49
Compared with the laws of Solon and Justinian .. 44
Status of women when Smritis were written .. 7
Main division between Dwijas and Shudras referred throughout .. 15
Minor Smritis .. 32, 34
Whether the digests and commentaries necessarily exclude 50

Smriti Chandrika.
Age and authority of .. 39
Authority in Southern India. 39, 72

Solon.
Laws of .. 4
Laws of, compared with those of Apastamb and Baudhayan .. 4

Son (s).
Recognition of twelve kinds of, in early law .. 18, 160
All but two now obsolete .. 160
Necessity for, in primitive society for self protection. 159, 160
Necessity for, insisted on by Hindu Religion .. 165
Defined with reference to Hindu (S. 112) .. 359
Illegitimate sons, position of. See, Illegitimate son. Maintenance of. See Maintenance.
Right in ancestral property by birth .. 358
Liability of, for debts of father both antecedent and those not tainted with illegality or immorality. 528, 532, 534, 552

PAGE.

Son (s).—(contd.)

Originally independent of assets .. 528
Now limited to assets .. 527, 530
If liable to pay barred debts promised by father .. 543
No liability to pay immoral or illegal debts .. 449, 450
Not liable for debts of father after separation .. 552
Could not divest receiver by survivorship on insolvency of father .. 546
Payment in due administration of estate of father.. 552, 553
Becomes personally liable for debts if guilty of fraud in such administation .. 553
Right of, to contest decree against father as manager. 520, 521
Right to partition .. 600
Right to claim partition against father .. 600
No such righht under Dayabhag law .. 604
Exception in Bombay .. 601
Benami purchase in favour of by father, effect of .. 729
Right of inheritance under Dhayabhag law .. 1008
Illegitimate son, position of in Bengal. 1008, 1009
Inheritance to paternal estate. 728, 929
Succession to stridhan of mother. 1150, 1151
If such son includes adopted or illegitimate son. 1150, 1151

Sources of Hindu Law.

Shrutis .. 48
Smritis .. 48
Commentaries .. 48, 49
Digests .. 48, 49
Custom and usage .. 51
Legislation .. 52
Judicial decisions .. 51

Southern India.—See Dravid School.

Spes successionis.

Transfer of, invalid. 1086, 1087, 1092
Not partible. 1086, 1087
Impartible estate, rights of junior members in .. 703, 706
Reversioner's rights in Hindu Law. 1085, 1089, 1090

Spiritual benefit.

Historical origin of .. 997, 998

Sri Krishna Tarkalankar.

Author of Dayakram sangrah .. 69

PAGE.

Sruti.

Age and authorship of .. 11, 12
Primary source of Hindu Law. 48
Legal value of .. 12

State of Nature.

Quite different from the ideal state it is supposed to be .. 1
A permanent state of insecurity .. 1

Step brother.—See Adoption (Eligibility for adoption).

Adoption of where valid and where invalid. 216, 217, 223, 224, 225

Step mother.

Relations of, bar to marriage. 134
No right to give in adoption. 214
Guardianship, right to .. 283
Right to maintenance .. 323
Maintenance, only if Son inherited assets from his father .. 323
Rights on partition .. 609
No right of inheritance .. 944

Stridhan.

General.

Historical introduction. 1127-1128
Definition of (S. 363) .. 1127
Texts on the subject. 1127-1128
Evolution of the law of .. 1129
What is, and what is not, according to ancient texts and judicial decisions .. 1129
Property inherited is not .. 1130

What property is stridhan (S. 364)

Property inherited by female heirs born in the family and subject to the Bombay school (S. 364). 1130, 1132
Grant and gifts .. 1134
Property given for maintenance .. 1137
Accretions and Purchases .. 1137
Property acquired by adverse possession .. 1138
Acquisition by self exertion.. 1139
Gains of prostitution whether. 1140
Wedding gifts including Adhyagni .. 1141
Adyavahanik .. 1142
Yautuk .. 1140
Adhyavedanik .. 1142
Anvadheyak .. 1143
Sulk .. 1142

Stridhan in Bombay (S. 365)

Property not inherited from husband is. 1143, 1144

PAGE.

Stridhan.—(contd.)

Stridhan in Bombay—(contd.)
Division of, for succession into (1) Technical and (2) non-technical .. 1143
What is technical .. 1143
What is non-technical .. 1143
Succession to (Ss. 370, 380 (2)). 1151-1156, 1170-1171

Her powers.
Husband's control over his wife's (S. 366) .. 1144
Woman's claim over her own (S. 367) .. 1146
Husband's right to seize .. 1145

Succession to stridhan (Mitakshara).
Heirs take, in severalty (S. 381) .. 1173
To maiden's property (S. 368) 1146, 1147
Her heirs .. 1147
To woman with children (S. 369) .. 1148
To woman without children (S. 370). 1151, 1152
Succession differs according as the form of marriage.. 1152
On Brahma form. 1152-1154
On Asur form. 1155-1156
Devolution of Sulk (S. 371). 1156
Devolution of certain other stridhan (S. 372) .. 1157
Succession to Yautak (S. 377). 1157, 1162, 1163
Succession to Anwadheyak .. 1157
Succession to Adhivedanik .. 1157
Succession to Priti-datta. 1157, 1159
Ayantak. 1158, 1159, 1161

Dhayabhag (Ss. 373, 374).
Dayabhag Succession to Sulk. 1158
Anwadheyak .. 1158
Pritidatta .. 1158
Ayautak. 1158, 1159, 1161
To other than the above (S. 374). 1159, 1160
Heirs to property given by the father (S. 376) .. 1162
Heirs to Yautak (S. 377).. 1162

Disqualifications to (S. 378)
Disqualifications same as to succession to male's property (S. 378) .. 1163
Unchasity is not a. 1163, 1164
Illegitimacy is no bar to (S. 379) .. 1164
Succession by illegitimate and legitimate (S. 378) .. 1164
Prostitutes' children .. 1166
Degraded married woman's heirs .. 1167
Who are not heirs .. 1170
Right of adopted children .. 1170

PAGE.

Subodhini.
Authorship of .. 71
Authority in United and Central Provinces .. 71

Succession.—See also Inheritance; Stridhan.
Meaning of the term .. 899
Is a generic term of which inheritance and survivorship are two species .. 896
Inheritance recognized both by Mitakshara and Dayabhag .. 896
Survivorship only by the Mitakshara .. 885, 886
Distinction between inheritance and survivorship .. 896
Mitakshara based on consanguinity .. 897, 918
Dayabhag based on religious efficacy .. 897, 918

Successive Adoptions.
When valid .. 196-197
When invalid. 196, 197, 201

Suit.
Adoption, suit regarding .. 246, 247
To set aside transfer by guardian .. 290, 292
Guardian, suits by or against, when binding on minor .. 315-317
Manager, suit by or against. 456-457
Alienation by manager of joint family, suit to set aside .. 418, 420
If separate, necessary for executing against son, the decree against father .. 459
Alienation by father, suit to set aside .. 510-514
By mortgagee against co-parceners, burden of proof on mortgagee .. 517-518
No difference even when the co-parceners are sons .. 518
To set aside alienation by manager, burden of proof, when alienee is in possession .. 518
Institution of, for partition effects severance. 593, 594, 595, 672
Exception in the case of mother .. 672
Regarding alienation by manager of endowment .. 850, 858
Religious endowment, suit in respect of .. 846, 847
About Religious and Charitable endowments, three classes of .. 875
Charity, suit for scheme in respect of .. 875

PAGE.

Suit.—(contd.)
For a mere declaration of reversionary heirship, not allowed .. 1092
By reversioners is a representative suit. 1097-1098, 1103
Do. reasons why such suit is allowed. .. 1098, 1099
Alienation by heiress, suit to set aside. 1096, 1104
Reversioner, disputing acts of heiress 1096-1104, 1106
Right of, against widow belongs to presumptive reversioner only .. 1097, 1098
Heiress, suit by or against reversioner bound by. 1111-1114

Sulk.—See also Stridhan.
What is .. 1142
Inheritance to. 1156, 1157
Mithila Law .. 1157
Dravid law .. 1157

Sunni Borahs.
Law applicable to .. 65

Superstitious uses.
Trusts for, under English law validity of .. 819
Do. under Indian Law .. 89

Surety.
Debts of father, liability of son .. 545, 546

Surrender.—See Woman's estate.

Survivorship.
Notion of, borrowed from English law .. 885
Recognised by Mitakshara .. 885, 886
Not recognised by Dayabhag (S. 285) .. 886, 890
Succession by, limited to what descriptions of property .. 886
Division per stirpes and per capita when .. 886, 889
When defeated .. 889
Heirs of the ancestral or self-acquired property of their paternal ancestors take by (S. 288) .. 890
Sole surviving copercener's property goes to his heirs (S. 289) .. 891
Amongst sons, daughters and co-widows .. 891
These take as joint tenants. 891
Devolution of undivided property (S. 291) .. 892
Non-liability of survivors, for debts (S. 292) .. 894
Exception in Maharashtra who take as tenants-in-common .. 891
Impartible estates (S. 286) . 886

PAGE.

Survivorship.—(contd.)
Survivor's right of suit for realizing all debts (S. 293). 894
Determined by Contract or conduct (S. 294) .. 895

T

Temple.—See Shebait; Religious Endowment.
Right of public worship .. 873
Possession and management of .. 841
Customary usages in, cannot be altered by manager .. 842
Offerings at .. 845

Tenancy in Common.
And joint tenants, compared with joint family .. 356, 357
Members of joint family in Bengal. 565, 567, 568
Joint heirs .. 568
Heiresses .. 1033
Avoidance of illegal transfer .. 547

Testamentary guardian.—See minority and Guardianship.

Tort.
Of heiress for benefit of estate reversioners bound to pay for. 1111, 1112

Trading joint family.
Ancestral trading family (S. 138) .. 468
Governed by rules of coparcenary, as modified by incidents of trade .. 468
Ancestral and new trade distinguished .. 470
Family trade devolves upon members of the family .. 468
Manager, who can be .. 468
Female when .. 471
Minor whether can be .. 472
Manager's powers .. 472
May pledge family credit .. 474
Not accountable for past profits .. 475
Cannot start new business when a family business .. 476
Major and minor members equally liable .. 475
Bound by manager's fraud .. 475
Exceptional cases .. 477
Rules applicable to Cutchi memons .. 477
Father's alienation binds son, if for family business, new or old (S. 139) .. 477
Effect of alienation by other manager (S. 139) .. 478

PAGE.

Trading joint family—(contd.)
Manager's partnership with strangers (S. 140) .. 478
No privity of members with an outsider .. 478
Relation of members inter se. 478
Effect of death of the manager. 478
No presumption that business carried on by manager is on behalf of other members (S. 141) .. 480
Family partnership, matter of evidence .. 480

Presumptions (S. 142).
Ancestral business, if continued or resumed, by the manager presumed to be joint.. 480
No presumption of jointness if business started by some members .. 480
No presumption of jointness where business carried by a person whose learning is at the family expense .. 480

Trade debts.
Liability of coparceners for family business debts (S. 144) .. 481
If business not ancestral only adult coparceners who consent to the business bound (S. 144) .. 482
No enquiry by the alienee essential (S. 144) .. 482
New trade .. 486

Transfer of Property Act.
Definition of gift in, compared with that in Hindu law. 745
S. 2, saving of Hindu Law..
S. 3, definition of immovable property .. 739
Ss. 13, 14 and 20 and gifts settlement or devise to person not in existence .. 743
S. 14 and rule against perpetuity .. 744
S. 18 and rule against accumulations .. 743
Ss. 25-27 and gifts conditional. 750
S. 38 and alienation by manager .. 453
S. 38 and transferee under Hindu Law .. 510
S. 85 and mortgagee under Hindu law .. 523
S. 123 and Hindu Law of gifts .. 467
Ss. 123 and 129 and gifts under Hindu Law .. 737, 748

PAGE.

Trusts.
Law of fiduciary relations how developed .. 722
Definition of trust under the Trusts Act .. 722
Express and constructive .. 722
Implied, under Hindu Law .. 722
Form of trusts (S. 215) .. 723
Public and private trusts .. 723
Religious and secular trusts.. 723
No form necessary for religious trust .. 723
Secular trust can be created only under Ss. 5 and 6 of Trusts Act .. 723
Condition necessary for the creation of a trust .. 723
Transfer of property not necessary when in a will or where the author is to be trustee .. 723
No trust where gift imperfect. 723
What a person cannot do himself he cannot do by a trust. 724
Valid only if object lawful .. 724
English development of equity system .. 724
English Law, how far applicable .. 724
Statutory control of secular.. 724
Beneficial interest in the residue .. 724
Holding property for another, deemed in trust .. 726, 728
Benami purchase for trustee of trust property, void .. 733
Distinguished from power .. 734
How particular words constitute trust or power .. 734, 735
Absolute estate in trusteeship valid .. 813
Positions of, trustee and widow compared. 1026, 1027
Insurance for benefit of wife (S. 217) .. 724, 725
Effect of insurance .. 725
Fradulent policy .. 725, 726
Trust of the legal estate results to the man who pays the purchase-money .. 729
Trust created by will .. 756

U

Unborn person.
Gift to, how far valid .. 733, 744

Unchastity.
A disqualification for a widow to inherit her husband if existed when the succession opened. 912, 913, 935, 936
Does not disqualify other female heirs in Mitakshara. 912, 913

PAGE.

Unchastity.—(contd.)
Is a disqualification in the case of all females under the Dayabhag .. 912, 913
Inheritance not divested by subsequent .. 936
No bar to succession to stridhan .. 912, 913

Uncle (Paternal or Maternal).
Adoption of, not valid .. 224

Uncle's son or son's son.
Adoption of, valid .. 225

Undivided share.
Alienation of, validity of, views of different Courts.. 415
Present Law .. 414-415
Alienation, consent of co-parceners, effect of .. 414-417
Rights of purchaser of .. 421-426
Execution sale of .. 419

Undue influence.
Effect of, on adoption .. 204-207
Effect of, on wills .. 765-768
Limited meaning of, in relation to wills than in case of contracts and gifts .. 768
Extremely difficult to state what constitutes .. 767
Distinguished from incapacity. 768

Unobstructed heritage.
What is .. 361, 365
Apratibandhadaya .. 361, 365

Upanayan.
Necessary samskara for Dwijas .. 56
Expenses of, common to family. 392, 652, 653
Provision for expenses of, on partition .. 652, 653

Usage.
Defined (S. 13) .. 107
confused with custom .. 107
Distinguishing characteristics of .. 107
Distinguished from custom. 88, 89
Proof of .. 107

V

Vachaspati Misra.
Author of Vivad and Vyavahar Chintamani .. 39

Varadaraja.
Author of Vyavahar Nirnay. 39

Vaijayanti.
Authorship of .. 40, 71

PAGE.

Vaijayanti.—(contd.)
Authority in United and Central Provinces .. 71

Vashisth.
Relative age of .. 25
Texts of, an authority to adopt. 26, 178, 179
Its interpretation in different schools .. 178, 179

Vatans.
What are, their origin and incidents .. 688

Vedas.
Age and authorship .. 12
Society when the Vedas were written .. 12, 13
Vedic religion .. 13

Vesting and Divesting.
On adoption (S. 49). 212, 253-255, 905, 906
Of inheritance .. 904-906

Vidnyaneshwar.
Age of .. 34
Author of Mitakshara .. 34
Authority of, supreme except in Bengal and Bombay .. 34, 71

Viramitroday.
Age and authorship of .. 70
Authority in United and Central Provinces .. 70
Authority in Benares .. 68, 70

Vishnu.
Age and authority of .. 27-28

Vivad Bhangarnav.
Age and composition of .. 41
Translation of, Colebrook's Digest .. 41

Vivad Chandra.
Authority of .. 39

Vivad Ratnakar.
Age and authorship of .. 39, 71
Authority in Mithila .. 39, 71
Extent of its authority .. 71

Vyavahar Chintamani.
Age and authorship of .. 39
Authority in Mithila .. 39

Vivad Chintamani.
Age and authorship of .. 39
Authority in Mithila .. 39, 71

Votive offerings.
Right of manager to .. 845

Vyavahar Mayuk.—See Mayukh.

PAGE.

Vyas.
Age and smriti of .. 33

Vyavahar Nirnay.
Age and authorship of .. 39
Special authority in Madras. 39, 72

W

Wajib-ul-urz.
Evidentiary value of .. 103
Evidentiary value of entry in. 965

Ward—See Minority and Guardianship.

Waste.
By heiress in possession. 1093, 1094
What constitutes. 1094, 1095
Remedies of reversioners. 1093-1097, 1104

Whole blood.—See Half Blood.

Widow.—See also Marriage, Adoption, Alienation, Guardianship, Maintenance, Inheritance, etc., etc.
Re-marriage of. 122, 123, 129
See Marriage.
Adoption, powers of (S. 38). 178, 183
See adoption.
Guardianship of minor children .. 282, 283
Right of, if lost by remarriage or unchastity .. 284-287
Residence, right of .. 333, 334
Priority of debts to claim of widow for maintenance .. 333, 334
Maintenance of, when a charge .. 329, 330
Claim of, against transferee for maintenance .. 335
If she can release her future claim to maintenance .. 349
Right of survivorship among, inheriting from husband .. 891
Unchastity, effect of on inheritance. 912, 914, 935
Remarriage, forfeiture of estate on .. 936-937
Inheritance, right to .. 935-936
Of Gotraj Sapindas, in Bombay right of heirship .. 980-982
Order of succession of such widows .. 981-982
Such widows take absolute estate .. 981
Position of, and manager compared. 1026, 1027
Positions of, and trustee compared. 1026, 1027
Represents estate completely. 1115
Surrender of estate when valid. 1065, 1072
Consent of reversioner effect of. 1072, 1076

PAGE.

Widow—(contd.)
Waste by, suit to prevent. 1093, 1097
Improper alienation of, voidable and not void. 1104, 1105, 1106
Decree against, when binds reversioner. 1112, 1113
Binds reversioner by bona fide litigation .. 1113
Consent decree against, when binding on reversion .. 1117
Legal position of, as heir, explained. 1026, 1027
Under a pious duty to pay debts of her husband .. 509

Wife.
Restitution of conjugal rights. 146
Guardianship of, in husband. 282, 283
Maintenance of, by husband. 319, 320
Gift or bequest to .. 776-777
Necessaries, power to borrow for .. 503
Stridhan, powers over. 1027-1029
Texts on the subject. 1027-1029

Wife's brother.
Adoption of, valid .. 224, 225

Wife' brother's son or grandson.
Adoption of, valid .. 225

Wife's sister's daughter's son.
Adoption of, valid in Madras. 225

Will (s).
General.
Originally unknown to Hindu Law .. 752
Recognition of by decision .. 752
Definition of will (S. 236) .. 753
Codicil, what is .. 753
Definition of under Succession and other Acts .. 753
Pre-requisites of a will .. 753
Distinguished from gift .. 755
Deed includes will .. 774
What property can be devised by .. 755
Will revocable .. 763
Who may make a will or codicil, (S. 236) .. 756
Power of bequest .. 756
Formalities necessary for (S. 237) .. 758
Mere expression of intention in any form is enough .. 758
Under Succession Act to be in writing attested .. 758
Executed before the Act may be oral .. 769
Of immovable property in Bengal or within ordinary original jurisdiction of Madras and Bombay High Courts .. 758

PAGE.

Will (s).—(contd.)

General.—(contd.)

Privileged will .. 758
True test .. 759
Different forms held valid by decisions .. 759

Execution and proof of will. (S. 238) .. 760-762
Proof of execution .. 760
Proof of will .. 761
Nuncupative will .. 762

Correction, alienation, revocation (S. 239). .. 762
Correction .. 763
Alteration .. 763
Revocation .. 763
Of joint will .. 763
Revocation by destruction .. 764
Revocation by other writing in conformity with the provisions of S. 70 of the Succession Act .. 762
Effect of marriage and birth or adoption of a son .. 765
Non-discovery of a will .. 765

Valid and void wills. (Ss. 240, 241) .. 765
Validity of will upon what depends .. 765
When void. (S. 241) .. 765
Free will necessary .. 766

Evidence and proof.

Burden of proof on propounder .. 768, 772
Ordinary proof of due execution not sufficient .. 769
Proof of sound disposing mind essential .. 769
Sound disposing mind, what is .. 769
Effect of pressure .. 771, 772
Strict proof of nuncupative will .. 762
What proof necessary .. 770, 771
Character of dispositions in such will .. 760, 761
Difference between officious and un-officious will .. 760, 761
Attestation and signature if necessary for .. 758, 759
Loss of will .. 762, 764

Rules of construction common to gift and wills. (ch. XIX).
Construction of Indian wills. (S. 244) .. 774
Construction of Indian deeds. (S. 244) .. 774
Two modes of construction. 774
Literal, applied in England. 774
Benignant, applied in India. 774, 775
Intention of testator to be ascertained .. 775, 778

PAGE.

Will (s).—(contd.)

Rules of construction common to gift and wills.—(contd.)

Grant or bequest conveys grantor's entire interest. (S. 245) .. 776
Grantee or devisee a female makes no difference .. 776
Gift to joint co-parceners .. 778, 781
Donatio Mortis causa .. 779
A gift or devise creating inheritance inconsistent with general law, void. (S. 246) .. 779
Gift or devise to a persona designata. (S. 247) .. 780
Gift to joint donees and devises. (S. 247-A) .. 781
When they take as joint tenants .. 781
When they take as tenants-in-common .. 781
Gift to a class. (S. 249) .. 781
Succession Act to apply to construction of wills. (S. 250) .. 782, 783
When will or bequest fails .. 784

Bequest to charity—See Charity; Cypres doctrine; Construction, etc.

Liberal construction permitted in case of .. 815
What is .. 814
Cypres doctrine .. 814
The subject also of charity must be certain .. 813, 817
Bequest to charity when void .. 817

Woman.—See also Prostitute.

Status of, in Greek and Roman systems .. 8, 11
Status of, at the time of the Smritis .. 7
Perpetual tutelage of, in Roman and Hindu Law .. 7, 11
Cannot be co-parcener under Mitakshara .. 888
Could be co-parcener under Dayabhag law .. 567, 568
Law applicable to degraded, if different .. 1166
Heirs of degraded .. 1166

Woman's estate.

General.

Evolution of the property rights of women. 1020-1022
Right of inheritance and the practice of Niyog. 1020-1021
When women's rights sprang up .. 1122
Two sorts of property held by woman. 1122, 1123

PAGE.

Woman's estate.—(contd.)

General.—(contd.)

Quality of a woman's estate. (S. 335) .. 1022
Women presumed to acquire only a limited estate. (S. 335) . 1022, 1024, 1025
Woman has limited estate in property inherited. 1024, 1025
Obtained as a share on partition .. 1025
Daughters in the family acquire absolute estate .. 1032
Jain widow has absolute rights in her husband's estate .. 1032
Estate of joint heirs. (S. 337) .. 1023
Two or more female heirs take as joint-tenants with right of survivorship inter se .. 1023
In Dayabhag and Bombay, take as tenants-in-common. 1023

Incidents of Woman's Estate. (S. 340). 1044-1047
Right to possession .. 1045
Right to beneficial enjoyment. 1045
Right to appropriate full income .. 1045
Right to grant leases .. 1046
Not a trustee but owner .. 1045
Represents the estate .. 1115
Statutory rights of alienation as executor not limited by personal rights .. 1044
Limited power of alienation. 1023, 1027-1032
Restriction on. (S. 336) .. 1023
Estate liable to be devested on birth or adoption of a son. 1023, 1027
Restrictions on alienations. 1023, 1027, 1032
Estate forfeited on re-marriage conversion, or retirement from the world. 1023, 1027
No power to make a will of the limited estate. (S. 339). 1043

Accretions to.

Interest of heiress in .. 1034
What constitutes. 1034-1035
Intention of heiress. 1035, 1036
Presumptions as to .. 1041
Evidence in favour of. 1037, 1038
Evidence against .. 1039
Where heiress is not in possession .. 1039
Where purchase was made benami .. 1039
Presumptions as to, arise when her conduct is equivocal .. 1041

PAGE.

Woman's estate.—(contd.)

Accretions to—(contd.)

Conduct and declarations .. 1041
Presumption, review of cases. 1041, 1043

Alienation of widow's estate.

Powers of widow to alienate inter vivos. 1027, 1029
Her powers over moveables. 1029, 1030
Mithila widow has larger customary rights .. 1031
By will, not allowed. (S. 339). 1043, 1044
When allowed. (S. 341). 1047-1048
Valid only for legal necessity or benefit .. 1047
Widow's legal necessity, what is .. 1049
Benefit, what is .. 1051
Widow's spiritual needs .. 1051
Shradh a spiritual necessity. 1051-1053
Spiritual benefit, what is. 1053-1054
Religious and pious gifts. 1055
Pious acts authorized by the widow .. 1057
What gifts disallowed .. 1057
Payment of debts a justifiable necessity when .. 1058
Payment of barred debts, whether legal necessity .. 1059
Payment of public charges, a legal necessity .. 1059
Cost of litigation, a legal necessity .. 1061
Preservation and repairs of the estate a legal necessity .. 1061
Maintenance of widow and other relatives when a legal necessity. 1061, 1063
Marriage gifts when allowed .. 1063
Other valid ceremonial gifts .. 1064
Powers of a woman in trading family business .. 1064
Alienation by one of the co-widows whether allowed. 1033, 1034, 1035
One of the co-widows can alienate her own share. 1033, 1034
Court's power of alienation when in possession of widow's estate. (S. 342). 1060
Transfer, when not justified, still valid during life of the limited owner .. 1047
Alienation not void but voidable only at the instance of reversioner. (S. 344) .. 1072

PAGE.

Woman's estate.—(contd.)

Alienation of widow's estate—(contd.)

Alienation of whole estate with consent of all reversioners conclusive against next reversioner. (S. 345). 1072-1075

Alienation with presumptive reversioner's consent presumed to be for necessity. (S. 345). 1072, 1076

Gift not supported by legal necessity not validated by consent .. 1080

Consent of female reversioner immaterial . 1081

When next reversioner a minor, guardian's consent may be obtained .. 1081

Alienations otherwise valid. 1081

Alienations when upheld or set aside, if for partial necessity. (S. 347) .. 1083

Reversioner may restrain improper alienation .. 1096

Limitation to avoid an alienation. (S. 361) .. 1121

Surrender of widow's estate.

What is. (S. 343). 1065, 1066

Essentials of. 1065, 1072.

Must comprise the entire estate. 1065, 1066, 1067

It must be in favour of the next reversioner. 1065, 1071, 1072

Form immaterial .. 1071

Must be bona fide and not a device to divide the estate with the reversioner .. 1070

Is not an alienation .. 1066

Surrender effective from the moment it is made and is not retrospective .. 1068

Position of the heiress after surrender .. 1068

Worshipper.

Has a right to resort to a public temple, singly or jointly in procession in a public temple .. 873

PAGE

Worshipper.—(contd.)

No rights in a private temple .. 873, 874

Worship.

Joint, how far an index of jointness of family .. 629

Right of public to attend .. 873

Writing.

Not necessary for authority to adopt .. 193

Adoption, evidence in writing .. 238

Not necessary for partition .. 596

If in writing registration necessary .. 596

Gifts, if necessary .. 744

Not necessary for wills .. 758

Y

Yadnavalkya.

Age and authority of .. 30, 31

Yama.

Author of smriti 35

Yautak.—See also Stridhan.

What is .. 1140

Succession to. 1157, 1162, 1163

Yati.

who is .. 987

Succession to .. 888

Z

Zamindar (s).

Origin of .. 685

Zamindari distinguished from Polliam .. 688

Zamindaris of Southern India, characteristics of. 701

Legislation regarding. 689-690

Incidents of the tenure .. 711

Impartibility, no presumption as to. (S. 212) 711, 712

Alienation of, when valid .. 701

PRINTED AT THE MADRAS LAW JOURNAL PRESS, MYLAPORE, MADRAS.